Prin. I haue procured thee Iacke, a Charge of Foot.

Fal. I would it had beene of Horse Where shal I finde one that can steale well? O, for a fine theefe, of two and twentise, of thereabout. I am heynously vnprouded. Wel God be thanked for these Rebels, they offend none but the Vertuous. I laud them, I praise them.

Prin. Bardolph.

Bar. My Lord.

Prin. Go beare this Letter to Lord John of Lancaster To my Brother John This to my Lord of Westmerland, Go Peto, to horse for thou, and I,

Haue thirtie miles to ride yet ere dinner time.

Iacke, meet me to morrow in the Temple Hall

At two a clocke in the afternoone,

There shalt thou know thy Charge, and there receiue Money and Order for their Furniture

The Land is burning, Percie stands on hye,

And either they, or we must lower lye.

Fal. Rare words! braue world.

Hostesse, my breakfast, come:

Oh, I could wish this Tauerne were my drumme.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Harris Hotspurre, Worcester, and Douglas.

Hot. Well said, my Noble Scot, if speaking truth In this fine Age, were not thought flatteries, Such attribution should the Douglas haue, As not a Souldiour of this seasons stampe, Should go so generall currant through the world. By heauen I cannot flatter. I desie The Tongues of Soothers. But a Brauer place In my hearts loue, hath no man then your Selfe. Nay, raske me to my word. approue me Lord.

Dow. Thou art the King of Honor. No man so potent breathes vpon the ground, But I wilt Beard him.

Enter a Messenger.

Hot. Do so, and 'tis well. What Letters hast there? I can but thanke you.

Mess. These Letters come from your Father.

Hot. Letters from him?

Why comes he not himselfe?

Mess. He cannot come, my Lord, He is greuous sick.

Hot. How? haz he the lye sure to be sicke now, In such a iustling time? Who leades his power? Vnder whose Gouerment come they along?

Mess

Mess. His Letters beares his minde, not I his minde.

Wor. I prethee tell me, doth he keepe his Bed?

Mess. He did, my Lord, foure dayes ere I set forth:
And at the time of my departure thence,
He was much fear'd by his Physician.

Wor. I would the state of time had first beene whole,
Ere he by sicknesse had beene visited
His health was neuer better worth then now.

Hotsp. Sicke now? droope now? this sicknes doth infect
The very Life-blood of our Enterprize,
'Tis catching hither, euen to our Campe
He writes me here, that inward sicknesse,
And that his friends by deputation
Could not so soone be diawne nor did he thinke it meet,
To lay so dangerous and deare a trust
On any Soule remou'd, but on his owne
Yec doth he giue vs bold aduertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To see how Fortune is dispos'd to vs.
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the King is certainly possesse
Of all our purposes. What say you to it?

Wor. Your Fathers sicknesse is a mayne to vs.

Hotsp. A perillous Gash, a very Limme lopt off.
And yet, in faith, it is not his present want
Seemes more then we shall finde it.
Were it good, to set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one Cast? To set so rich a mayne
On the nice hazard of one doubtfull houre,
It were not good: for therein should we reade
The very Bottom, and the Soule of Hope,
The very List, the very vtmost Bound
Of all our fortunes.

Dowg. Faith, and so wee should,
Where now remaines a sweet reuerision.
We may boldly spend, vpon the hope
Of what is to come in
A comfort of retyrement liues in this.

Hotsp. A Randeuous, a Home to flye vnto,
If that the Deuill and Mischance looke bigge
Vpon the Maidenhead of our Affaires.

Wor. But yet I would your Father had beene here—
The Qualitie and Heire of our Attempt
Brookes no diuision. It will be thought
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty, and meere dislike
Of our proceedings, kept the Earle from hence
And thinke, how such an apprehension
May turne the tyde of fearefull Faction,
And breede a kinde of question in our cause:
For well you know, wee of the offring side,
Must keepe aloofe from strict arbitrement,
And stop all light-holes, every loope, from whence
The eye of reason may prye in vpon vs
This absence of your Father drawes a Curtaine,
That shewes the ignorant a kinde of feare,
Before not dreame of

Hotsp. You strayne too farre.
I rather of his absence make this vse:
It lends a lustre, and more great Opinion,
A larger Dare to your great Enterprize,
Then if the Earle were here: for men must thinke,
If we without his helpe, can make a Head
To push against the Kingdome; with his helpe,
We shall o're-turne it topsie-turvy downe.
Yet all goes well, yet all our ioynts are whole.

Dowg. As heart can thinke:

There is not such a word spoke of in Scotland,
At this Dreame of Feare.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hotsp. My Cousin Vernon, welcome by my Soule.
Vern. Pray God my newes be worth a welcome, Lord,
The Earle of Westmerland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hither-wards, with Prince John.

Hotsp. No harme what more?

Vern. And further, I haue learn'd,
The King himselfe in person hath set forth,
Or hither-wards intended speedily,
With strong and mightie preparation.

Hotsp. He shall be welcome too
Where is his Sonne,
The nimble-footed Mad-Cap, Prince of Wales,
And his Cumrades, that dash the World aside,
And bid it passe?

Vern. All furrish't, all in Armes,
All plum'd like Estridges, that with the Winde
Bayted like Eagles, hauing lately bath'd,
Glittering in Golden Coates, like Images,
As full of spirit as the Moneth of May,
And gorgeous as the Sunne at Mid-summer,
Wanton as youthfull Goates, wilde as young Bulls.
I saw young Harry with his Beuer on,
His Cushes on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feathered Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his Seat,
As if an Angell dropt downe from the Clouds,
To turne and winde a fierie Pegasus,
And witch the World with Noble Horsemanship.

Hotsp. No more, no more,
Worte then the Sunne in March.
This prayse doth no Irish Agues let them come.
They come like Sacrifices in their trimme,
And to the fire-ey'd Maid of smoakie Warre,
All hot, and bleeding, will wee offer them
The mayled Mars shall on his Altar sit
Vp to the eares in blood. I am on fire,
To heare this rich reprizall is so nigh,
And yet not ours. Come, let me take my Horse,
Who is to beare me like a Thunder-bolt,
Against the bosome of the Prince of Wales
Harry to Harry, shall not Horse to Horse
Meete, and ne're part, till one drop downe a Coarse:
Oh, that Glendower were come.

Vern. There is more newes.
I learned in Worcester, as I rode along,
He cannot draw his Power this foureteene dayes.
Dowg. That's the worst Tidings that I heare of yet.

Wor. I by my faith, that beares a frosty sound

Hotsp. What may the Kings whole Battaile reach vnto?

Vern. To thurty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be,
My Father and Glendower being both away,
The powres of vs, may seme so great a day.
Come, let vs take a muster speedily.

Doomesday's neere, dye all, dye merrily.

Dowg. Talk not of dying, I am out of feare
Of death, or deaths hand, for this one halfe yeare.

Scene 4

Scena Secunda.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolph.

Falst. Bardolph, get thee before to Couentry, till me a Bottle of Sack, our Souldiers shall march through wee'le to Sutton-cop-hill to Night.

Bard. Will you giue me Money, Capitaine?

Falst. Lay out, lay out.

Bard. This Bottle makes an Angell.

Falst. And if it doe, take it for thy labour: and if it make twentie, take them all. Ile answere the Coynage. Bid my Lieutenant Peto meete me at the Townes end.

Bard. I will Capitaine farewell. Exit.

Falst. If I be not asham'd of my Souldiers, I am a fowle-Gurnet. I haue mis-v'd the Kings Presse damnable. I haue got, in exchange of a hundred and fiftie Souldiers, three hundred and odde Pounds. I presse me none but good House-holders, Yeomen, Sonnes enquire me out contracted Batchelers, such as had beene ask'd twice on the Banes such a Commoditie of warme slaues, as had as lieue heare the Deuill, as a Drumme: such as feare the report of a Caluer, worse then a struck-Foole, ora hurt wilde-Ducke. I prest me none but such Tostes and Butter, with Hearts in their Bellies no bigger then Pinnes heads, and they haue bought out their seruices. And now, my whole Charge consists of Ancients, Corporals, Lieutenants, Gentlemen of Companies, Slaues as ragged as Lazarus in the painted Cloth, where the Gluttons Dogges licked his Sores; and such, as indeed were neuer Souldiers, but dis-carded vniust Seruingmen, younger Sonnes to younger Brothers, reuoluted Tapsters and Officers, Trade-falne, the Cankers of a calme World, and long Peace, tenne times more dis-honorable ragged, then an old-fac'd Ancient; and such haue I to fill vp the roomes of them that haue bought out their seruices: that you would thinke, that I had a hundred and fiftie totter'd Prodigalls, lately come from Swine-keeping, from eating Draffe and Huskes. A mad fellow met me on the way, and told me, I had vnloaded all the Gibbets, and prest the dead bodyes. No eye hath seene such skar-Crowes. Ile not march through Couentry with them, that's flat. Nay, and the Villaines march wide betwixt the Legges, as if they had Gyues on; for indeede, I had the most of them out of Prison. There's not a Shirt and a halfe in all my Company: and the halfe Shirt is two Napkins tackt together, and throwne ouer the shoulders like a Heralds Coat, without sleeves: and the Shirt, to say the truth, stolne from my Host of S. Albones, or the Red-Nose Inne-keeper of Dauntrey. But that's all one, they'le finde Linnen enough on euery Hedge.

Enter the Prince, and the Lord of Westmerland.

Prince. How now blowne Lack? how now Quilt?

Falst. What Hal? How now mad Wag, what a Deuill do'st thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmerland, I cry you mercy, I thought your Honour had already beene at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir Iohn, 'tis more then time that I were there, and you too. but my Powers are there already. The King, I can tell you, lookes for vs all. we must away all to Night.

Falst. Tut, neuer feare me, I am as vigilant as a Cat, to steale Creame.

Prince. I thinke to steale Creame indeed, for thy theft hath already made thee Butter. but tell me, Lack, whose fellowes are these that come after?

Falst. Mine, Hal, mine.

Prince. I did neuer see such pittifull Rascals.

Falst. Tut, tut, good enough to tosse: foode for Powder, foode for Powder they'le fill a Pit, as well as better tush man, mortall men, mortall men.

Westm. I, but Sir Iohn, me thinkes they are exceeding poore and bare, too beggarly.

Falst. Faith, for their pouertie, I know not where they had that; and for their batenesse, I am sure they neuer learn'd that of me.

Prince. No, Ile be sworne, vnlesse you call three fingers on the Ribbes bare. But sitra, make haste, Percy is already in the field.

Falst. What, is the King encamp'd?

Westm. Hee is, Sir Iohn, I feare wee shall stay too long.

Falst. Well, to the latter end of a Fray, and the beginning of a Feast, fits a dull fighter, and a keene Gueft.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Hotspur, Worcester, Dowglas, and Vernon.

Hotsp. Wee'le fight with him to Night.

Worc. It may not be.

Dowg. You giue him then aduantage.

Vern. Not a whit.

Hotsp. Why say you so? looks he not for supply?

Vern. So doe wee.

Hotsp. His is certaine, ours is doubtfull.

Worc. Good Cousin be aduis'd, stirre not to night.

Vern. Doe not, my Lord,

Dowg. You doe not counsaile well: You speake it out of feare, and cold heart.

Vern. Doe me no slander, Dowglas: by my Life, And I dare well maintaine it with my Life, If well-respected Honor bid me on, I hold as little counsaile with weake feare, As you, my Lord, or any Scot that this day liues, Let it be seene to morrow in the Battell, Which of vs feares.

Dowg. Yea, or to night.

Vern. Content.

Hotsp. To night, say I.

Vern. Come, come, it may not be.

I wonder much, being w<sup>e</sup> of such great leading as you are That you fore-see not what impediments Drag backe our expedition: certaine Horse Of my Cousin Vernons are not yet come vp, Your Vnckle Worcesters Horse came but to day, And now their pride and mettall is asleepe, Their courage with hard labour tame and dull, That not a Horse is halfe the halfe of himselfe. Hotsp. So are the Horses of the Enemie In generall iourney bated, and brought low: The better part of ours are full of rest.

Worc. The number of the King exceedeth ours.
For Gods sake, Cousin, stay till all come in.

The Trumpet sounds & Pailey. Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the King;
If you would please me hearing, and respect.

Hosff. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt
And would to God you were of our determination
Some of vs love you well: and even those some Envie your great desertings, and good name,
Because you are not of our qualitie,
But stand against vs like an Enemye.

Blunt. And Heaven defend, but still I should stand so,
So long as out of Limit, and true Rule,
You stand against anyointed Maiestie.
But to my Charge.

The King hath sent to know
The nature of your Griefes, and whereupon
You censure from the Brest of Ciuill Peace,
Such bold Hostilitie, teaching his dutious Land
Audacious Crueltie. If that the King
Haue any way your good Deserts forgot,
Which he confesseth to be manifold,
He bids you name your Griefes, and with all speed
You shall haue your desires, with interest,
And Pardon absolute for your selfe, and these,
Herein mis-led, by your suggestion.

Hosff. The King is kinde:
And well wee know, the King
Knowes at what time to promise, when to pay.
My Father, my Vnckle, and my selfe,
Did giue him that same Royaltie he weares:
And when he was not sixe and twentie strong,
Sicke in the Worlds regard, wretched, and low,
A poore vnminde Out-law, sneaking home,
My Father gaue him welcome to the shore:
And when he heard him sweare, and vow to God,
He came but to be Duke of Lancaster,
To sue his Liuerie, and begge his Peace,
With teares of Innocencie, and tearmes of Zeale;
My Father, in kinde heart and pittie mou'd,
Swore him assistance, and perform'd it too
Now, when the Lords and Barons of the Realme
Perceiu'd Northumberland did leane to him,
The more and lesse came in with Cap and Knee,
Met him in Borroughs, Cities, Villages,
Attended him on Bridges, stood in Lanes,
Layd Gifts before him, proffer'd him their Oathes,
Gaue him their Heires, as Pages followed him,
Euen at the heeles, in golden multitudes.
He presently, as Greatnesse knowes it selfe,
Steps me a little higher then his Vow
Made to my Father, while his blood was poore,
Vpon the naked shore at Rauenstpurgh:
And now (forsooth) takes on him to reforme
Some certaine Edicts, and some strait Decrees,
That lay too heauie on the Common-wealth;
Cries out vpon abuses, seemes to weepe
Ouer his Countries Wrongs. and by this Face,
This seeming Brow of Iustice, did he winne
The hearts of all that hee did angle for,
Proceeded further, cut me off the Heads
Of all the Fauorites, that the absent King
In deputation left behinde him heere,

When hee was personall in the Irish Warre.

Blunt. Tut, I came not to heare that.

Hosff. Then to the point.

In short time after, hee depos'd the King.
Soone after that, depriu'd him of his Life;
And in the neck of that, rack't the whose State.
To make that worse, suffer'd his Kinsman March,
Who is, if euerly Owner were plac'd,
Indeede his King, to be engag'd in Wales,
There, without Ransome, to lye forfeited:
Disgrac'd me in my happie Victories,
Sought to intrap me by intelligence,
Rated my Vnckle from the Councell-Boord,
In rage dismiss'd my Father from the Court,
Broke Oath on Oath, committed Wrong on Wrong,
And in conclusion, droue vs to seeke out
This Head of safetie; and withall, to prie
Into his Title: the which wee finde
Too indirect, for long continuance.

Blunt. Shall I returne this answer to the King?

Hosff. Not so, Sir Walter.

Wee'lle with-draw a while:
Goe to the King, and let there be impawn'd
Some suretie for a safe returne againe,
And in the Morning early shall my Vnckle
Bring him our purpose: and so farewell.

Blunt. I would you would accept of Grace and Loue.

Hosff. And't may be, so wee shall.

Blunt. Pray Heaven you doe. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter the Arch-Bishop of Torke, and Sir Michell.

Arch. Hie, good Sir Michell, beare this sealed Briefe
With winged haste to the Lord Marshall,
This to my Cousin Scroope, and all the rest
To whom they are directed.
If you knew how much they doe import,
You would make haste.

Sir Mich. My good Lord, I guesse their tenor.

Arch. Like enough you doe.

To morrow, good Sir Michell, is a day,
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must bide the touch. For Sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly giuen to vnderstand,
The King, with mightie and quick-rayfed Power,
Meetes with Lord Harry - and I feare, Sir Michell,
What with the sicknesse of Northumberland,
Whose Power was in the first proportion;
And what with Owen Glendowers absence thence,
Who with them was rated firmly too,
And comes not in, ouer-rul'd by Prophecies,
I feare the Power of Percy is too weake,
To wage an instant tryall with the King.

Sir Mich. Why, my good Lord, you need not feare,
There is Douglas, and Lord Mortimer.

Arch. No, Mortimer is not there.

Sir Mich. But there is Mordake, Fernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester,
And a Head of gallant Warriors,
Noble Gentlemen.

Arch. And

Arch. And so there is, but yet the King hath drawne
The speciall head of all the Land together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The Noble Westmerland, and warlike Blunt,
And many more Courtials, and deare men
Of estimation, and command in Armes.

Sir M. Doubt not my Lord, he shall be well oppos'd

Arch. I hope no lesse? Yet needfull 'tis to feare,
And to preuent the worst, Sir Michell speed;
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the King
Dismiss his power, he meanes to visit vs.
For he hath heard of our Confederacie,
And, 'tis but Wisedome to make strong against him:
Therefore make hast, I must go write againe
To other Friends: and so farewell, Sir Michell. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaffe

King. How bloodily the Sunne begins to peere
Above yon busky hill the day lookes pale
At his distemperature.

Prin. The Southerne winde
Doth play the Trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the Leaves,
Foretels a Tempest, and a blust'ring day

King. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seeme soule to those that win
The Trumpet sounds.

Enter Worcester.

King. How now my Lord of Worcester? 'Tis not well
That you and I should meet vpon such tearmes,
As now we meet. You haue decci'd our trust,
And made vs doffe our easie Robes of Peace,
To crush our old limbes in vngentle Steele.
This is not well, my Lord, this is not well.
What fay you to it? Will you againe vnknit
This churlish knot of all-abhorred Warre?
And moue in that obedient Orbe againe,
Where you did giue a faire and naturall light,
And be no more an exhalld Meteor,
A prodigie of Feare, and a Portent
Of broached Mischeefe, to the vnborne Times?

Wor. Heare me, my Liege.
For mine owne part, I could be well content
To entertame the Lagge-end of my life
With quiet houres. For I do protest,
I haue not sought the day of this dislike.

King. You haue not sought it: how comes it then?

Fal. Rebellion lay in his way, and he found it

Prin. Peace, Chewet, peace.

Wor. It pleas'd your Maiesty, to turne your lookes
Of Favour, from my Selfe, and all our House;
And yet I must remember you my Lord,
We were the first, and dearest of your Friends:
For you, my Staffe of Office did I breake.
In Richards time, and posted day and night
To meete you on the way, and kisse your hand,

When yet you were in playe, and in account.
Nothing so strong, and fortunate, as I:
It was my Selfe, my Brother, and his Sonne,
That brought you home, and boldly did out-dare
The danger of the time. You swore to vs,
And you did sweare that Oath at Doncaster,
That you did nothing of purpose 'gainst the State,
Nor claime no further, then your new-falne right,
The seate of Gaunt, Dukedome of Lancaster,
To this, we swore our aide: But in short space,
It rain'd downe Fortune shewing on your head,
And such a flood of Greauesse fell on you,
What with our helpe, what with the absent King,
What with the iniuries of wanton time,
The seeming sufferances that you had borne,
And the contrarious Windes that held the King
So long in the vnlucky Irish Warres,
That all in England did repute him dead,
And from this swarme of faire aduantages,
You tooke occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the generall sway into your hand;
Forgot your Oath to vs at Doncaster,
And being sed by vs, you vs'd vs so,
As that vngentle gull the Cuckowes Bird,
Vnth the Sparrow, did appresse our Nest,
Grew by our Feeding, to so great a bulke,
That euen our Loue durst not come neere your sight
For feare of swallowing: But with nimble wing
We were inforc'd for safety sake, to flye
Out of your sight, and raise this present Head,
Whereby we stand opposed by such meanes
As you your selfe, haue forg'd against your selfe,
By vnkinde vsage, dangerous countenance,
And violation of all faith and troth
Sworne to vs in yonger enterprize.

King. These things indeede you haue articulated, Proclaim'd at Market Crosse, read in Churches,
To face the Garment of Rebellion
With some fine colour, that may please the eye
Of fickle Changelings, and poore Discontents,
Which gape, and rub the Elbow at the newes
Of hurly burly Inuocation.
And neuer yet did Insurrection want
Such water-colours, to impaint his cause:
Nor moody Beggars, staruing for a time
Of pell-mell hauocke, and confusion.

Prin. In both our Armies, there is many a soule
Shall pay full dearely for this encounter,
If once they ioyne in trall. Tell your Nephew,
The Prince of Wales doth ioyne with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy. By my Hopes,
This present enterprize set off his head,
I do not thinke a brauer Gentleman,
More actiue, valiant, or more valiant yong,
More daring, or more bold, is now aliue,
To grace this latter Age with Noble deeds.
For my part, I may speake it to my shame,
I haue a Truant beene to Chualry,
And so I heare, he doth account me too:
Yet this before my Fathers Maiesty,
I am content that he shall take the oddes
Of his great name and estimation,
And will, to saue the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him, in a Single Fight.

King. And Prince of Wales, so dare we venter thee,
Albeit, considerations infinite

Do

Do make against vs. My good Westmerland,
 We loue our people well, yett those whoe will
 That are mislik'd vpon your Cousins part
 And will they take the offer of our Grace -
 Both he, and they, and you, yea, every man
 Shall be my Friend againe, and he be him
 So tell your Cousins, and bid them the word,
 What he will do. But if he will not yeeld,
 Rebuke and threat, correction waite on vs,
 And they shall do their Office. So bee gone,
 We will not now be troubled with reply,
 We offer faire, take it aduisedly.

Exit Westmer.

Prin. It will not be accepted, on my life,
 The Douglas and the Hastings both together;
 Are confident against the world in Armes.

King. Hence therefore; every Leader to his charge,
 For on their answer will we set on them,
 And God beseech'd vs, as our cause is iust. Exeunt.

Alaric Prince and Falstaffe.

Fal. Hal, if thou see me downe in the battell,
 And bestride me, so; 'tis a point of friendship.

Prin. Nothing but a Colossus can do thee that friendship
 Say thy prayers, and farewell.

Fal. I would it were bed time Hal, and all well.

Prin. Why, thou ow'st heaven a death

Falst. 'Tis not due yet: I would bee loath to pay him before his day. What neede I bee so forward with him, that call's not on me? Well, tis no matter, Honour prickes me on. But how if Honour prick me off when I come on? How then? Can Honour set too a legge? No: or an arme? No. Or take away the greene of a wound? No Honour hath no skill in Surgerie, then? No. What is Honour? A word. What is that word Honour? Ayre - A trim reckoning. Who hath it? He that dy'd a Wednesday. Doth he feele it? No. Doth hee heare it? No. Is it insensible then? yea, to the dead. But will it not liue with the liuing? No. Why? Detraction will not suffer it, therefore Ile none of it. Honour is a meere Scutcheon, and so ends my Catechisme. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Westmer, and Sir Richard Vernon.

West. O no, my Nephew must not know, Sir Richard,
 The liberall kinde offer of the King.

Vern. 'Twere best he did.

West. Then we are all vndone.

It is not possible, it cannot be,
 The King would keepe his word in louing vs,
 He will suspect vs still, and finde a time
 To punish this offence in others fautes:
 Supposition, all our liues, shall be stucke full of eyes;
 For Treason is but trulled like the Foxe,
 Who ne're so tame, so cherisht, and lock'd vp,
 Will haue a wilde trick of his Ancestors:
 Looke how he can, or sad or merrily,
 Interpretation will misquere our lookes,
 And we shall see like Oxen at a stall,
 The better cherisht, still the nearer death.
 My Nephewes trespass may be well forgot,
 It hath the excuse of youth, and heate of blood,

And an adopted name of Pindaridge,
 A haire-brain'd Hastings, gduen'd by a Spleene:
 All his offences lue vpon my head,
 And on his Fathers. We did traine him on,
 And his corruption being tane from vs,
 We as the Spring of all, shall pay for all:
 Therefore good Cousin, let not Harry know
 In any case, the offer of the King.

Vern. Deliaer what you will, let say 'tis so.
 Heere comes your Cousin

Enter Hastings.

Hst. My Vnkle is retu'n'd,
 Deliaer vp my Lord of Westmerland.
 Vnkle, what newe - ?

West. The King will bid you battell presently.
Dow. Desie him by the Lord of Westmerland.

Hst. Lord Douglas. Go you and tell him so
Dow. Marry and shall, and verie willingly.

Exit Douglas

West. There is no seeming mercy in the King.

Hst. Did you begge any? God forbid.

West. I told him gently of our greeuances,
 Of his Oath-breaking: which he amended thus,
 By now forswearing that he is forsworne,
 He calls vs Rebels, Traitors, and will scourge
 With haughty armes, this hateful name in vs.

Enter Douglas.

Dow. Arme Gentlemen, to Armes, for I haue thron
 A braue defiance in King Henrys teeth.

And Westmerland that was engag'd did beare it,
 Which cannot choose but bring him quickly on.

West. The Prince of Wales slept forth before the King,
 And Nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Hst. O, would the quarrell lay vpon our heads,
 And that no man might draw short breath to day,
 But I and Harry Armes. Tell me, tell mee,
 How shew'd his Talking? Seem'd it in contempt?

West. No, by my Soule: I neuer in my life
 Did heare a Challenge vrg'd more modestly,
 Vnlesse a Brother should a Brother dare
 To gentle exercise, and prooue of Armes.
 He gaue you all the Duties of a Man,
 Trim'd vp your praises with a Princely tongue,
 Spoke your desertings like a Chronicle,
 Making you euer better then his praise,
 By still dispraising praise, valew'd with you:
 And which became him like a Prince indeed,
 He made a blushing citall of himselfe,
 And chid his Trewant youth with such a Grace,
 As if he mastred there a double spirit
 Of teaching, and of learning instantly:
 There did he pause. But let me tell the World,
 If he out-lue the enuie of this day,
 England did neuer owe so sweet a hope,
 So much misconstituted in his Wantonnesse.

Hst. Cousin, I thinke thou art enamored
 On his Follies: neuer did I heare
 Of any Prince so wilde at Liberty.
 But be he as he will, yet once ere night,
 I will imbrace him with a Souldiers arme,
 That he shall shrinke vnder my curtesie.
 Arme, arme with speed. And Fellow's, Soldiers, Friends,
 Better consider what you haue to do,
 That I that haue not well the gift of Tongue,

Can

Can lift your blood vp with perswasion.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord, heere are Letters for you.

Hot. I cannot reade them now.

O Gentlemen, the time of life is short;
To spend that shortnesse basely, were too long.
If life did ride vpon a Dial's point,
Still ending at the arrivall of an houre,
And if we live, we live to treade on Kings
If dye, braue death, when Princes dye with vs
Now for our Consciences, the Armes is faire,
When the intent for bearing them is iust.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. My Lord prepare, the King comes on apace.

Hot. I thanke him, that he cures me from my tale
For I professe not talking Onely this,
Let each man do his best. And heere I draw a Sword,
Whose worthy temper I intend to staine
With the best blood that I can meete withall,
In the aduventure of this perillous day.
Now Esperance Percy, and set on.
Sound all the lofty Instruments of Warre,
And by that Musicke, let vs all imbrace:
For heaven to earth, some of vs neuer shall,
A second time do such a curtesie.

They embrace, the Trumpets sound, the King entereth with his power, alarum vnto the battell. Then enter Dowglas, and Sir Walter Blunt.

Blu. What is thy name, that in battel thus y crossest me?
What honor dost thou seeke vpon my head?

Dow. Know then my name is Dowglas,
And I do haunt thee in the battell thus,
Because some tell me, that thou art a King.

Blunt. They tell thee true

Dow. The Lord of Stafford deere to day hath bought Thy likenesse for instid of thee King Harry,
This Sword hath ended him, so shall it thee,
Vnlesse thou yeeld thee as a Prisoner.

Blu. I was not borne to yeeld, thou haughty Scor,
And thou shalt finde a King that will reuenge
Lords Staffords death.

Fight, Blunt is slaine, then enters Hotspur.

Hot. O Dowglas, hadst thou fought at Holmedon thus
I neuer had triumphed o're a Scor.

Dow. All's done, all's won, here breathles lies the king

Hot. Where?

Dow. Heere.

Hot. This Dowglas? No, I know this face full well:
A gallant Knight he was, his name was Blunt,
Semblyably furnisht like the King himselfe.

Dow. Ah foole. go with thy soule whether it goes,
A borrowed Title hast thou bought too deere.
Why didst thou tell me, that thou wert a King?

Hot. The King hath many marching in his Coats.

Dow. Now by my Sword, I will kill all his Coates,
Ile murder all his Wardrobe peece by peece,
Vntill I meet the King.

Hot. Vp, and away.

Our Souldiers stand full fairely for the day. Exeunt

Alarum, and enter Eal'ssaffo solus

Fal. Though I could scape shot-free at London, I fear the shot heere here's no scoring, but vpon the pate Soft who are you? Sir Walter Blunt, there's Honour for you:
here's no vanity, I am as hot as molten Lead, and as heauy too; heauen keepe Lead out of mee, I neede no more weight then mine owne Bowelles. I haue led my rag of Muffins where they are pepper'd: there's not three of my 150. left alive, and they for the Townes end, to beg during life. But who comes heere?

Enter the Prince.

Pr. What, stand'st thou idle heere? Lend me thy sword,
Many a Nobleman likes starke and stiffe
Vnder the hooues of vaunting enemies,
Whose deaths are vnreung'd. Prethy lend me thy sword

Fal. O Hal, I prethee giue me leaue to breath awhile Turke Gregory neuer did such deeds in Armes, as I haue done this day. I haue paid Percy, I haue made him sure.

Pr. He is indeed, and liuing to kill thee:
I prethee lend me thy sword.

Falst. Nay Hal, if Percy bee alive, thou getst not my Sword, but take my Pistoll if thou wilt.

Pr. Giue it me. What, is it in the Case?

Fal. I Hal, 'tis hot. There's that will Sacke a City.

The Prince drawes out a Bottle of Sacke.

Pr. What, is it a time to iest and dally now. Exit.
Thromes it at him.

Fal. If Percy be alive, Ile pierce him: if he do come in my way, so. if he do not, if I come in his (willingly) let him make a Carbonado of me. I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: Giue mee life, which if I can saue, so if not, honour comes vnlook'd for, and ther's an end. Exit

Scena Tertia.

*Alarum, excursions, enter the King, the Prince,
Lord Iohn of Lancaster, and Earle of Westmerland.*

King. I prethee Harry withdraw thy selfe, thou bleed-dest too much. Lord Iohn of Lancaster go you with him.

P. Ioh. Not I, my Lord, vnlesse I did bleed too.

Pr. I beseech your Maiesty make vp,
Least you retirement do amaze your friends.

King. I will do so.

My Lord of Westmerland leade him to his Tent
West. Come my Lord, Ile leade you to your Tent.

Pr. Lead me my Lord? I do not need your helpe;
And heauen forbid a shallow scratch should driue
The Prince of Wales from such a field as this,
Where stain'd Nobility lyes troden on,
And Rebels Armes triumph in massacres.

Ioh. We breath too long. Come cosin Westmerland,
Our duty this way lies, for heauens sake come

Pr. By heauen thou hast decei'd me Lancaster,
I did not thinke thee Lord of such a spirit.
Before, I lou'd thee as a Brother, Iohn;
But now, I do respect thee as my Soule.

King. I saw him hold Lord Percy at the point.
With lustier maintenance then I did looke for
Of such an vngrowne Warriour.

Pr. O this Boy, lends mettall to vs all. Exit

Enter Dowglas.

Dow. Another King? They grow like Hydra's heads:
I am the Dowglas, fatal to all those
That weare those colours on them. What art thou
That counterfeits the person of a King?

King. The King himselfe. who Dowglas grieues at hart

So

So many of his shadowes thou hast met,
And not the very King. I haue two Boyes
Seeke Percy and thy selfe about the Field:
But seeing thou fall'st on me so luckily,
I will assaie thee: so defend thy selfe.

Dom. I feare thou art another counterfeite:
And yett infa th thou bear it thee like a King:
But mine I am sure thou art, whoere thou be,
And thus I win thee. They fight, the King being in danger,
Enter Prince.

Prim. Hold vp they head vile Scot, or thou art like Newer to hold it vp againe the Spirits
Of valiant Sherly, Stafford, Blunt, are in my Armes;
It is the Prince of Wales that threatens thee,
Who neuer promisseth, but he meanes to pay.

They fight, Douglas flyeth.
Cheerely My Lord how fare's your Grace?

Sir Nicholas Gaussey hath for succour sent,
And so hath Clifton Ile to Clifton straight.

King Stay, and breach awhile,
Thou hast redeem'd thy lost opinion,
And shew'd thou mak'st some tender of my life
In this faire rescue thou hast brought to mee.

Prim. O heauen, they did me too much iniury,
That euer said I hearkned to your death.
If it were so, I might haue let alone
The insulting hand of Douglas ouer you,
Which would haue bene as speedy in your end,
As all the poysonous Potions in the world,
And sau'd the Treacherous labour of your Sonne.

K. Make vp to Clifton, Ile to Sir Nicholas Gaussey. Exit
Enter Hostiur.

Hot. If I mistake not, thou art Harry Monmouth.

Prim. Thou speak'st as if I would deny my name.

Hot. My name is Harry Percie.

Prim. Why then I see a very valiant rebel of that name.
I am the Prince of Wales, and thinke not Percy,
To share with me in glory any more:

Two Starres keepe not their motion in one Sphere,
Nor can one England brooke a double reigne,
Of Harry Percie, and the Prince of Wales.

Hot. Nor shall it Harry, for the houre is come
To end the one of vs; and would to heauen,
Thy name in Armes, were now as great as mine.

Prim. Ile make it greater, ere I part from thee,
And all the budding Honors on thy Crest,
Ile crop, to make a Garland for my head.

Hot. I can no longer brooke thy Vanities. Fight.

Enter Falstaffe

Fal. Well said Hil, to it Hil. Nay you shall finde no
Boyes play heere, I can tell you

Enter Douglas he fights with Falstaffe, who falls downe
as if he were dead The Prince killeth Percie.

Hot. Oh Harry, thou hast rob'd me of my youth:
I better brooke the losse of brittle life,
Then those proud Titles thou hast wonne of me,
They will end my thoughts worse, then the sword my flesh.
But thought's the slaue of Life, and Life, Times foole;
And Time, that takes suruey of all the world,
Must haue a stop. O, I could Prophecie,
But that the Earth, and the cold hand of death,
Lyes on my Tongue. No Percy, thou art dust
And food for _____

Prim. For Wormes, braue Percy Farewell great heart:
Ill-weau'd Ambition, how much art thou shrunked?
When that this bodie did containe a spirit,

A Kingdome for it was too small a bound:
But now two paces of the vilest Earth
Is roome enough. This Earth that beares the dead,
Beares not aloue so stout a Gentleman.
If thou wer't sensible of curtesie,
I should not make so greata shew of Zeale.
But let my fauours hide thy mangled face,
And euen in thy behalfe, Ile thanke my selfe
For doing these fayre Rites of Tenderneesse.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heauen,
Thy ignomy sleepe with thee in the graue,
But not remembered in thy Epitaph.
What? Old Acquaintance? Could not all this flesh
Keepe in a little life? Poore Iacke, farewell:
I could haue better spar'd a better man.
O, I should haue a heauy misse of thee,
If I were much in loue with Vanity.
Death hath not strucke so far a Deere to day,
Though many dearer in this bloody Fray:
Imbowell'd will I see thee by and by,
Till then, in blood, by Noble Percie lye. Exit.

Falstaffe riseth vp.

Falst. Imbowell'd? If thou imbowell mee to day, Ile give you leaue to powder me, and eat me too to morow, Twas time to counterfeite, or that hottie Termagant Scot, had paid me scot and lot too. Counterfeite? I am no counterfeite; to dye, is to be a counterfeite, for hee is but the counterfeite of a man, who hath not the life of a man; But to counterfeite dying, when a man thereby liueth, is to be no counterfeite, but the true and perfect image of life in-decide. The better part of Valour, is Discretion; in the which better part, I haue saued my life. I am affraide of this Gun-powder Percy though he be dead. How if hee should counterfeite too, and rise? I am afraid hee would proue the better counterfeite therefore Ile make him sure yea, and Ile sweare I kill'd him. Wl y may not hee rise as well as I: Nothing confutes me but eyes, and no-bodie sees me. Therefore sitte, with a new wound in your thigh come you along me Takes Hostiur from his backe.

Enter Prince and Iohn of Lancaster.

Prim. Come Brother Iohn, full brauely hast thou sleight thy Maiden sword.

Iohn. But soft, v ho haue we heere?
Did you not tell me this Fat me was dead?

Prim. I did, I saw him deat,
Breathlesse and bleeding on the ground 'Art thou aloue?
Or is it fantasie that playes vpon our eye-sight?
I prethee speake, we will not trust our eyes
Withour our eares. Thou art not what thou seem'st.

Fal. No, that's certaine I am not a double man: but if I be not Iacke Falstaffe, then am I a Iacke There is Percy, if your Father will do me any Honor, so if not, let him kill the next Percie himselfe. I looke to be either Earle or Duke, I can assure you.

Prim. Why, Percy I kill'd my selfe, and saw thee dead.

Fal. Did'st thou? Lord, Lord, how the world is giuen to Lying? I graunt you I was downe, and out of Breath, and so was he, but we rose both at an instant, and fought a long houre by Shrewsburie clocke. If I may bee beleued, so: if not, let them that should reward Valour, beare
the sinne vpon their owne heads. Ile take't on my death
I gaue him this wound in the Thigh: if the man were aliue, and would deny it, I would make him eate a peece of my sword.

Iohn. This is the strangest Tale that e're I heard.

Prim. This is the strangest Fellow, Brother Iohn.

Come

Come bring your luggage Nobly on your backe :
For my part, if a lye may do thee grace,
Ile gi'd it with the happiest tearmes I haue.

A Retreat is sounded.

The Trumpets sound Retreat, the day is ours
Come Brother, let's to the highest of the field,
To see what Friends are liuing, who are dead Exeunt
Fal. Ile follow as they say, for Reward Hee that rewards me, leauen reward him If I do grow great again, Ile grow lesse : For Ile purge, and leaue Sacke, and liue cleanly, as a Nobleman should do Exit

Scena Quarta.

The Trumpets sound.

*Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord Iohn of Lancaster, Earle of Westmerland, with Worcester &
Vernon Prisoners*

King Thus euer did Rebellion finde Rebuke.
Ill-spirited Worcester, did we not send Grace,
Pardon, and tearmes of Loue to all of you ?
And would'st thou turne our offers contrary ?
Misuse the tenor of thy Kinsmans trust ?
Three Knights vpon our party slaine to day,
A Noble Earle, and many a creature else,
Had bene aliuie this houre,
If like a Christian thou had'st truly borne
Betwixt our Armies, true Intelligence
Wor. What I haue done, my safety vrg'd me to,

And I embrace this fortune patiently,
Since not to be auoyded, it falls on mee.

King. Beare Worcester to death, and Vernon too :
Other Offenders we will pause vpon.

Exit Worcester and Vernon.

How goes the Field ?

Prin The Noble Scot Lord Douglas, when hee saw
The fortune of the day quite turn'd from him,
The Noble Percy slaine, and all his men,
Vpon the foot of feare, fled with the rest ;
And falling from a hill, he was so bruiz'd
That the perliuers tooke him. At my Tent
The Douglas is, and I beseech your Grace,
I may dispose of him.

King. With all my heart.

Prin Then Brother Iohn of Lancaster,
To you this honourable bounty shall belong :
Go to the Douglas, and deliuer him
Vp to his pleasure, ransomlesse and free :
His Valour shewne vpon our Crests to day,
Hath taught vs how to cherish such high deeds,
Euen in the bolome of our Aduersaries.

King. Then this remains that we diuide our Power.
You Sonne Iohn, and my Cousin Westmerland
Towards Yorke shall bend you, with your deereft speed
To meet Northumberland, and the Pielate Scroope,
Who (as we heare) are busily in Armes.
My Selfe, and you Sonne Harry will towards Wales,
To fight with Glendower, and the Earle of March.
Rebellion in this Land shall lose his way,
Meeting the Checke of such another day :
And since this Businesse so faire is done,
Let vs not leaue till all our owne be wonne. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Second Part of Henry the Fourth,

Containing his Death : and the Coronation of King Henry the Fifth.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

INDUCTION.

Enter Rumour

Open your Eares For which of you will stop
The vent of Hearing, when loud Rumour speaks?
I, from the Orient, to the drooping West
(Making the winde my Post-horse) still vnfold
The Acts commenced on this Ball of Earth.
Vpon my Tongue, continuall Slanders ride,
The which, in euery Language, I pronounce,
Stuffing the Eares of them with false Reports :
I speake of Peace, while couert Enmitie
(Vnder the smile of Safety) wounds the World :
And who but Rumour, who but only I
Make fearfull Musters, and prepar'd Defence,
Whil'st the bigge yeare, swolne with some other griefes,
Is thought with childe, by the sterne Tyrant, Warre,
And no such matter? Rumour, is a Pipe
Blowne by Surmises, Ielousies, Coniectures;
And of so easie, and so plaine a stop,
That the blunt Monster, with vncounted heads,
The still discordant, wauering Multitude,
Can play vpon it. But what needs I thus
My well-knowne Body to Anathomize
Among my household? Why is Rumour heere?
I run before King Harries victory,
Who in a bloodie field by Shrewsburie
Hath beaten downe yong Hosspurre, and his Troopes,
Qvenching the flame of bold Rebellion,
Euen with the Rebels blood. But what meane I
To speake so true at first? My Office is
To noyse abroad, that Harry Monmouth fell
Vnder the Wrath of Noble Hosspurres Sword :
And thar the King, before the Douglas Rage
Stoop'd his Anointed head, as low as death.
This haue I Rumour'd through the peasant-Townes,
Betweene the Royall Field of Shrewsburie,
And this Worme-eaten-Hole of ragged Stone,
Where Hosspurres Father, old Northumberland, Lyes crafty lickie. The Postes come tying on,
And not a man of them brings other newes
Then they haue learn'd of Me. From Rumours Tongues,
They bring smooth-Comforts-false, worse then True-wrongs.

Exit.

Scœna Secunda,

Enter Lord Bardolfe, and the Porter.

L. Bar. Who keeps the Gate heere now?
Where is the Earle?

Por. What shall I say you are?

Bar. Tell thou the Earle

That the Lord Bardolfe doth attend him heere.

Por. His Lordship is walk'd forth into the Orchard,
Please it your Honor, knocke but at the Gate,
And he himselfe will answer.

Enter Northumberland.

L. Bar. Heere comes the Earle

Nor. What newes Lord Bardolfe? Eu'ry minute now
Should be the Father of some Stratagem,
The Times are wilde : Contention (like a Horse
Full of high Feeding) madly hath broke loose,
And beares downe all before him.

L. Bar. Noble Earle,

I bring you certaine newes from Shrewsbury.

Nor. Good, and heauen will.

L. Bar. As good as heart can wish :
The King is almost wounded to the death :
And in the Forture of my Lord your Sonne,
Prince Harry slaine out-right; and both the Blunts
Kill'd by the hand of Douglas. Yong Prince John,
And Westmerland, and Stafford, fled the Field,
And Harrie Monmouth's Brawne (the Walke Sir John)
Is prisoner to your Sonne. O, such a Day,
(So fought, so follow'd, and so fairely wonne)
Came not, till now to dignifie the Times
Since Cæsars Fortunes.

Nor. How is this derfu'd?

Saw you the Field? Came you from Shrewsbury?

L. Bar. I spake with one (my L.) that came frō thence,
A Gentleman well bred, and of good name,
That freely render'd me these newes for true.

Nor. Heere comes my Seruant Traners, whom I sent
On Tuesday last, to listen after Newes.

Enter Traners.

L. Bar. My Lord, I ouer-rod him on the way,
And he is furnish'd with no certainties,
More then he (haply) may retails from me.

Nor. Now Traners, what good tidings comes frō you?

Trā.

Tra. My Lord, Sir Iohn Umfreuill turn'd me backe
With ioyfull tydings; and (being better hors'd)
Out-rod me. After him, came spurring head
A Gentleman (almost fore-spent with speed)
That stopp'd by me, to breath his bloodied horse.
He ask'd the way to Chester: And of him
I did demand what Newes from Shrewsbury:
He told me, that Rebellion had ill lucke,
And that yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold.
With that he gaue his able Horse the head,
And bending forwards strooke his able heele
Against the panting sides of his pooze Iade
Vp to the Rowell head, and starting so,
He seem'd in running, to deuoure the way,
Staying no longer question.

North. Ha? Again:
Said he yong Harry Percies Spurre was cold?
(Of Hot-Spurre, cold-Spurre?) that Rebellion,
Had met ill lucke?

L. Bar. My Lord: Ile tell you what,
If yong Lord your Sonne, haue not the day,
Vpon mine Honor, for a silken point
Ile giue my Barony. Neuer talke of it.
Nor. Why should the Gentleman that rode by Trantrs
Giue then such instances of L. sic?

L. Bar. Who, he?
He was some holding Fellow, that had stolne
The Horse he rode-on and vpon my life
Speake at aduenturè. Looke, here comes more Newes.

Enter Morton

Nor. Yea, this mans brow, like to a Title-leaf,
Fore-tels the Nature of a Tragick Volume:
So lookes the Strond, when the Imperious Flood
Hath left a witnes Vfurpation.
Say Morton, did'st thou come from Shrewsbury?

Mor. I ran from Shrewsbury (my Noble Lord)
Where hatefull death put on his vglyst Maske
To fright our party.

North. How doth my Sonne, and Brother?
Thou trembl'st, and the whitenesse in thy Cheeke
Is apter then thy Tongue, to tell thy Errand.
Euen such a man, so faint, so spiritlesse,
So dull, so dead in looke, so woe-be-gone,
Drew Prisms Curraine, in the dead of night,
And would haue told him, Halfe his Troy was burn'd
But Prism found the Fire, ere he his Tongue
And I, my Percies death, ere thou report'st it.
This, thou would'st say - Your Sonne did thus, and thus
Your Brother, thus So fought the Noble Douglas,
Stopping my greedy eare, with their bold deeds
But in the end (to stop mine Eare indeed)
Thou hast a Sigh, to blow away this Praise,
Ending with Brother, Sonne, and all are dead.

Mor. Douglas is liuing, and your Brother, yet:
But for my Lord, your Sonne,

North. Why he is dead
See what a ready tongue Suspition hath
He that but feares the thing, he would not know,
Hath by Instinct, knowledge from others Eyes,
That what he feard, is chanc'd. Yet speake (Morton)
Tell thou thy Earle, his Damnation Lies,
And I will take it, as a Sweet Disgrace,
And make thee rich, for doing me such wrong.

Mor. You are too great, to be (by me) gainfard.

Your Spirit is too true, your Feares too certaine.

North. Yet for all this, say not that Percies dead.
I see a strange Confession in thine Eye:
Thou shak'st thy head, and hold'st it in Feare, or Sinne,
To speake a truth. If he be slaine, say so.
The Tongue offends not, that reports his death:
And he doth sinne that doth belye the dead.
Not he, which sayes the dead is not aliu:
Yet the first bringer of vnwelcome Newes
Hath but a loosing Office - and his Tongue,
Sounds euer after as a fullen Bell
Remembred, knolling a departing Friend

L. Bar. I cannot thinke (my Lord) your son is dead.

Mor. I am sorry, I should force you to beleue
That, which I would to heauen, I had not seene.
But these mine eyes, saw him in bloody state,
Rend'ring faint quittance (wearied, and out-breath'd)
To Henrie Mountbath, whose swift wrath beate downe
The neuer-daunted Percie to the earth,
From whence (with life) he neuer more sprung vp.
In few; his death (whose spirit lent a fire,
Euen to the dullest Peazant in his Campe)
Being bruited once, tooke fire and heate away
From the best temper'd Courage in his Troopes.
For from his Mettle, was his Party steel'd;
Which once, in him abated, all the rest
Turn'd on themselves, like dull and heauy Lead:
And as the Thing, that's heauy in it selfe,
Vpon enforcement, flies with greatest speede,
So did our Men, heauy in Hot-spurres losse,
Lend to this weight, such lightnesse with their Feare,
That Arrowes fled not swifter toward their ayme,
Then did our Soldiers (ayming at their safety)
Fly from the field. Then was that Noble Worcester
Too soone a'tne prisoner: and that furious Scor,
(The bloody Douglas) whose well-labouring sword
Had three times slaine th' appearance of the King,
Gan vaile his stomacke, and did grace the shame
Of those that turn'd their backs - and in his flight,
Stumbling in Feare, was tooke The summe of all,
Is, that the King hath wonne and hath sent out
A speedy power, to encounter you my Lord,
Vnder the Condukt of yong Lancaster
And Westmerland. This is the Newes at full.

North. For this, I shall haue time enough to mourne.
In Poyson, there is Physicke: and this newes
(Hauing beene well) that would haue made me sicke,
Being sicke, haue in some measure, made me well
And as the Wretch, whose Feauer-weaken'd ioynts,
Like strengthlesse Hindges, buckle vnder life,
Impatient of his Fit, breakes like a fire
Out of his keepers armes. Euen so, my Limbes (Weak'n'd with greefe) being now inrag'd with greefe,
Are thrice themselves Hence therefore thou nice crutch,
A scalle Gauntlet now, with ioynts of Steele
Must gloue this hand. And hence thou sickly Quoise,
Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
Which Princes, flesh'd with Conquest, ayme to hit.
Now binde my Browes with Iron, and approach
The ragged'st houre, that Time and Spight dare bring
To frowne vpon th'enrag'd Northumberland.
Let Heauen kisse Earth: now let not Natures hand
Keepe the wilde Flood confin'd - Let Order dye,
And let the world no longer be a stage
To feede Contentioun in a ling'ring Act.
But let one spirit of the First-borne Come

Reigne

Reigne in all holmes, that each heart being set
On bloody Courtes, the rude Scene may end;
And darknesse be the burier of the dead. (Honor.

L. Bar. Sweet Earle, diuorce not wisdom from your Mor. The lues of all your louing Complices
Leane on your health, the which if you giue o're
To stormy Passion, must perforce decay.
You cast th'euent of Warre (my Noble Lord).
And summ'd the accompt of Chance, before you said
Let vs make head. It was your presumize,
That in the dole of blowes, your Son might drop.
You knew he walk'd o're perils, on an edge
More likely, to fall in, then to get o're:
You were aduis'd his flesh was capeable
Of Wounds, and Scarres; and that his forward Spirit
Would lift him, where most trade of danger rang'd,
Yet did you say go forth. and none of this (Though strongly apprehended) could restraine
The stiffe-borne Action. What hath then befallne?
Or what hath this bold enterprize bring forth,
More then that Being, which was like to be?

L. Bar. We all that are engaged to this losse,
Knew that we ventur'd on such dangerous Seas,
That if we wrought our life, was ten to one:
And yet we ventur'd for the gaine propos'd,
Choak'd the respect of likely perill fear'd,
And since we are o're-set, venture againe.

Come, we will all put forth, Body, and Goods,
Mor. 'Tis more then time: And (my most Noble Lord)
I heare for certaine, and do speake the truth.
The gentle Arch-bishop of Yorke is vp
With well appointed Powres. he is a man
Who with a double Surety bindes his Followers.
My Lord (your Sonne) had onely but the Corpses,
But shadowes, and the shewes of men to fight.
For that same word (Rebellion) did diuide
The action of their bodies, from their soules,
And they did fight with queasinesse, constrain'd
As men drinke Potions, that their Weapons only
Seem'd on our side. but for their Spirits and Soules,
This word (Rebellion) it had froze them vp,
As Fish are in a Pond. But now the Bishop
Turnes Insurrection to Religion,
Suppos'd sincere, and holy in his Thoughts:
He's follow'd both with Body, and with Munde:
And doth enlarge his Rising, with the blood
Of faire King Richard, scap'd from Pomfret Stones,
Deriues from heauen, his Quarrell, and his Cause:
Tels them, he doth bestride a bleeding Land,
Gasping for life, vnder great Bolingbrooke,
And more, and lesse, do florke to follow him.

North. I knew of this before. But to speake truth,
This present greefe had wip'd it from my munde.
Go in with me, and counsell euery man
The aptest way for safety, and reuenge.
Get Posts, and Letters, and make Friends with speed,
Neuer so few, nor neuer yet more need.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, and Page.

Fal. Sirra, you, giunt, what saies the Doct to my water?

Page. He said sir, the water it selfe was a good healthy water, but for the party that ow'd it, he might haue more diseases then he knew for.

Fal. Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at mee: the braine of this foolish compounded Clay-man, is not able to inuent any thing that tends to laughter, more then inuent, or is inuented on me. I am not onely witty in my selfe, but the cause that wit is in other men. I doe heere walke before thee, like a Sow, that hath o'rewhelm'd all her Litter, but one. If the Prince put thee into my Seruice for any other reason, then to set mee off, why then I haue no iudgement. Thou horson Mandrake, thou art fitter to be worne in my cap, then to wait at my heeles. I was neuer mapn'd with an Agot till now: but I will sette you neyther in Gold, nor Silver, but in wilde apparell, and send you backe againe to your Master, for a Jewell. The Iuuenell (the Prince your Master) whose Chin is not yet fledg'd, I will sooner haue a beard growne the Palme of my hand, then he shall get one on his cheek: yet he will not sticke to say, his Face is a Face-Royall. Heauen may finish it when he will, it is not a haire amisse yet: he may keepe it still at a Face-Royall, for a Barber shall neuer earne six pence out of it; and yet he will be crowing, as if he had writ man euer since his Father was a Barchellour.

He may keepe his owne Grace, but he is almost out of mine, I can assure him. What said M. Dombledon, about the Satten for my short Cloake, and Slops?

Page. He said sir, you should procure him better Assurance, then Bardolfe he wold not take his Bond & yours,
he lik'd not the Security.

Fal. Let him bee damn'd like the Glutton, may his Tongue be hotter, a horson Achitophel; a Rascally-yea-forsooth-knaue; to beare a Gentleman in hand, and then stand vpon Security? The horson smooth-pates doe now weare nothing but high shoes, and bunches of Keyes at their girdles. and if a man is through with them in honest Taking-vp, then they must stand vpon Securitie: I had as liefe they would put Rats-bane in my mouth, as offer to stoppe it with Security. I look'd hee should haue sent me two and twenty yards of Satten (as I am true Knight) and he sends me Security. Well, he may sleep in Security, for he hath the horne of Abundance: and the lightnesse of his Wife shines through it, and yet cannot he see, though he haue his owne Lanthorne to light him.
Where's Bardolfe?

Page. He's gone into Smithfield to buy your worship
a horse.

Fal. I bought him in Paules, and hee'l buy mee a horse in Smithfield. If I could get mee a wife in the Stewes, I were Mann'd, Hors'd, and Wou'd.

Enter Chiefe Iustice, and Seruant.

Page. Sir, heere comes the Nobleman that committed the Prince for striking him, about Bardolfe.

Fal. Wait close, I will not see him.

Ch. Iust. What's he that goes there?

Ser. Falstaffe, and't please your Lordship.

Iust. He that was in question for the Robbery?

Ser. He my Lord, but he hath since done good seruice at Shrewsbury (and as I heare) is now going with some Charge, to the Lord John of Lancaster.

Iust. What to Yorke? Call him backe againe.

Ser. Sir John Falstaffe.

Fal. Boy, tell him, I am deafe.

Page. You must speake louder, my Master is deafe.

Iust. I am sure he is, to the hearing of any thing good.
Go plucke him by the Elbow, I must speake with him.

Ser. Sir John.

Fal. What a yong knaue and beg? Is there not wars? Is there not employment? Doth not the King lack subiects? Do nor the Rebels want Soldiers? Though it be a shame to be an

on any side but one, it is worse shame to begge, then to be on the worst side, were it worse then the name of Rebellion can tell how to make it.

Ser. You mistake me Sir

Fal. Why sir? Did I say you were an honest man? Setting my Knight-hood, and my Souldier-ship aside, I had lyed in my throat, if I had said so

Ser. I pray you (Sir) then set your Knighthood and your Souldier-ship aside, and giue mee leaue to tell you, you lye in your throat, if you say I am any other then an honest man.

Fal. I giue thee leaue to tell me so. I lay a-side that which growes to me? If thou get'st any leaue of me, hang me. If thou tak'st leaue, thou wert better be hang'd you Hunt-counter, hence Auant.

Ser. Sir, my Lord would speake with you.

Just. Sir John Falstaffe, a word with you.

Fal. My good Lord giue your Lordship good time of the day I am glad to see your Lordship abroad. I heard say your Lordship was sicke. I hope your Lordship goes abroad by aduise. Your Lordship (though not clean past your youth) hath yet some smack of age in you. some relish of the saltnesse of Time, and I most humbly beseech your Lordship, to haue a reuerend care of your health.

Just. Sir John, I sent you before your Expedition, to Shrewsburie

Fal. If it please your Lordship, I heare his Maiesie is return'd with some discomfort from Wales

Just. I talke not of his Maiesie. you would not come when I sent for you?

Fal. And I heare moreover, his Highnesse is falne into this same whorson Apoplexie.

Just. Well, heauen mend him. I pray let me speake with

Fal. This Apoplexie is (as I take it) a kind of Lethargie, a sleeping of the blood, a horson Tingling.

Just. What tell you me of it? be it as it is.

Fal. It hath it originall from much greefe, from study and perturbation of the braine. I haue read the cause of his effects in Galen. It is a kinde of deafnesse

Just. I thinke you are falne into the discaise. For you heare not what I say to you.

Fal. Very well (my Lord) very well. rather an't please you it is the discaise of not Listning, the malady of not Marking, that I am troubled withall.

Just. To punish you by the heeles, would amend the attention of your eares, & I care not if I be your Physician

Fal. I am as poore as Job, my Lord, but not so Patient your Lordship may minister the Potion of imprisonment to me, in respect of Pouertie. but how I should bee your Patient, to follow your prescriptions, the wise may make some dram of a scruple, or indeede, a scruple it selfe.

Just. I sent for you (when there were matters against you for your life) to come speake with me.

Fal. As I was then aduised by my learned Councel, in the lawes of this Land-seruice, I did not come.

Just. Well, the truth is (sir John) you liue in great infamy

Fal. He that buckles him in my belt, canot liue in lesse

Just. Your Meanes is very slender, and your wast great.

Fal. I would it were otherwise: I would my Meanes were greater, and my waste slenderer.

Just. You haue missted the youthful Prince.

Fal. The yong Prince hath missted mee. I am the Fellow with the great belly, and he my Dogge.

Just. Well, I am loth to gall a new-heal'd wound: your daies seruice at Shrewsbury, hath a little gilded over your Nights exploit on Gads-hill. You may thanke the vnquiet time, for your quiet o're-posting that Action

Fal. My Lord? (Wolfe.)

Just. But since all is wel, keep it so: wake not a sleeping

Fal. To wake a Wolfe, is as bad as to smell a Fox.

Just. What? you are as a candle, the better part burnt out

Fal. A Wallell-Candle, my Lord, all Tallow: if I did say of wax, my growth would approue the truth.

Just. There is not a white haire on your face, but shold haue his effect of grauity.

Fal. His effect of grauy, grauy, grauy.

Just. You follow the yong Prince vp and downe, like his euill Angell.

Fal. Not so (my Lord) your ill Angell is light: but I hope, he that lookes vpon mee, will take mee without, weighing. and yet, in some respects I grant, I cannot go. I cannot tell Vertue is of so little regard in these Costomongers, that true valor is turn'd Beare-heard. Pregnancie is made a Tapster, and hath his quickewit wasted in giuing Reckmings. all the other gifts appertinent to man (as the malice of this Age shapes them) are not woorth a Gooseberry. You that are old, consider not the capacities of vs that are yong. you measure the heat of our Livers, with the bitterness of your galls & we that are in the vaward of our youth, I must confesse, are waggies too.

Just. Do you set downe your name in the scrowle of youth, that are written downe old, with all the Characters of age? Haue you not a moist eye? a dry hand? a yellow cheeke? a white bead? a decreasing leg? an increasing belly? Is not your voice broken? your winde short? your wit fingle? and euery part about you blasted with Antiquity? and wil you cal your selfe yong? Fy, fy, fy, sir John

Fal. My Lord, I was borne with a white head, & something a round belly. For my voice, I haue lost it with halowing and singing of Anthemes. To approue my youth farther, I will not the truth is, I am onely olde in iudgement and vnderstanding and he that will caper with mee for a thousand Markes, let him lend me the mony, & haue at him. For the boxe of the eare that the Prince gaue you, he gaue it like a rude Prince, and you tooke it like a sensible Lord. I haue checkt him for it, and the yong Lion repents. Marry not in shes and sacke-cloth, but in new Silke, and old Sacke.

Just. Well, heauen send the Prince a better companion

Fal. Heauen send the Companion a better Prince: I cannot rid my hands of him

Just. Well, the King hath seuer'd you and Prince Harry, I heare you are going with Lord John of Lancaster, against the Archbishop, and the Earle of Northumberland

Fal. Yes, I thanke your pretty sweet wit for it. but looke you pray, (all you that kisse my Ladie Peace, at home) that our Armes ioyn not in a hot day. for if I take but two shirrs out with me, and I meane not to sweat extraordinarily. if it bee a hot day, if I brandish any thing but my Bottle, would I might neuer spit white againe: There is not a dangerous Action can peepe out his head, but I am thrust vpon it. Well, I cannot last euer.

Just. Well, be honest, be honest, and heauen blesse your Expedition.

Fal. Will your Lordship lend mee a thousand pound, to furnish me forth?

Just. Not a peny, not a penny. you are too impatient to beare crosses. Fare you well. Commend mee to my Cousin Westmerland

Fal. If I do, fillopme with a three-man-Beetle. A man can no more separate Age and Couetousnesse, then he can part yong limbes and lechery. but the Gowt galles the one, and the pox pinches the other; and so both the Degrees preuent my curses. Boy?

Page Sir.

Fal. What money is in my purse?

Page. Seuen groats, and two pence.

Fal. I can get no remedy against this Consumption of the purse. Borrowing onely lingers, and lingers it out, but the disease is incurable. Go beare this letter to my Lord of Lancaster, this to the Prince, this to the Earle of Westmerland, and this to old Mistress Ursula, whome I haue weekly sworne to marry, since I perceu'd the first white haire on my chin. About it, you know where to finde me. A pox of this Gowt, or a Gowt of this Poxe. for the one or th' other playes the rogue with my great toe: It is no matter, if I do halt, I haue the warres for my colour, and my Pension shall seeme the more reasonable. A good wit will make vse of any thing. I will turne diseases to commodity.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Archbishop, Hastings, Mowbray, and Lord Bardolfe.

Ar. Thus haue you heard our causes, & kno our Means. And my most noble Friends, I pray you all Speake plainly your opinions of our hopes, And first (Lord Marshall) what say you to it?

Mow. I well allow the occasion of our Armes, But gladly would be better satisfied, How (in our Meanes) we should aduance our selues To looke with forehead bold and big enough Vpon the Power and puissance of the King.

Hast. Our present Musters grow vpon the File To five and twenty thousand men of choice: And our Supplies, liue largely in the hope Of great Northumberland, whose bosome burnes With an incensed Fire of Injuries.

L Bar. The question then (Lord Hastings) standeth thus Whether our present five and twenty thousand May hold vp head, without Northumberland:

Hast. With him, we may.

L Bar. I marry, there's the point. But if without him we be thought to feeble, My iudgement is, we should not step too farre Till we had his Assistance by the hand For in a Theame so bloody fac'd, as this, Coniecture, Expectation, and Surmise Of Aydes incertaine, should not be admitted.

Arch. 'Tis very true Lord Bardolfe, for indeed It was yong Hotspurres case, at Shrewsbury.

L Bar. It was (my Lord) who lin'd himself with hope, Eating the ayre, on promise of Supply, Flattering himselfe with Project of a power, Much smaller, then the smallest of his Thoughts, And so with great imagination (Proper to madmen) led his Powers to death, And (winking) leap'd into destruction.

Hast. But (by your leave) it neuer yet did hurt, To lay downe likely hoods, and formes of hope.

L Bar. Yes, if this present quality of warre, Indeede the present quality of warre, Likely to hope. As in an early Spring, We see the appearing buds, which to proue fruite, Hope giues not so much warrant, as Dispaite That Frosts will bite them. When we meane to build, We first suruey the Plot, then draw the Modell,

And when we see the figure of the house, Then must we rate the cost of the Ereccion, Which if we finde out-weighes Ability, What do we then, but draw a-new the Modell In fewer offices? Or at least, desist To builde at all? Much more, in this great worke, (Which is (almost) to plucke a Kingdome downe, And set another vp) should we suruey The plot of Situation, and the Modell; Consent vpon a sure Foundation: Question Surueyours, know our owne estate, How able such a Worke to vndergo, To weigh against his Opposite? Or else, We fortifie in Paper, and in Figures, Vsing the Names of men, instead of men. Like one, that drawes the Modell of a house Beyond his power to builde it; who (halfe through) Giues o're, and leaues his part-created Cost A naked subiect to the Weeping Clouds, And waste, for churlish Winters tyranny.

Hast. Grant that our hopes (yet likely of faire byrth) Should be (ill-bozne. and that we now possesse The utmost man of expectation:

I thinke we are a Body strong enough (Euen as we are) to equall with the King.

L Bar. What is the King but five & twenty thousand?

Hast. To vs no more. nay not so much Lord Bardolfe, For his diuisions (as the Times do braul) Are in three Heads. one Power against the French, And one against Glendower. Perforce a third Must take vp vs. So is the vnsure King In three diuided: and his Coffers found With hollow Pouerty, and Emptinesse.

Ar. That he should draw his feuerall strengths together And come against vs in full puissance Need not be dreaded.

Hast. If he should do so, He leaues his backe vnarm'd, the French, and Welch Baying him at the heeles. neuer feare that.

L Bar. Who is it like should lead his Forces hither?

Hast. The Duke of Lancaster, and Westmerland. Against the Welsh himselfe, and Harrie Monmouth. But who is substituted against the French, I haue no certaine notice.

Arch. Let vs on:

And publish the occasion of our Armes. The Common-wealth is sicke of their owne Choice, Their ouer-greedy loue hath surferred: An habitation giddy, and vnure Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart. O thou fond Many, with what loud applause Did'st thou beare heauen with blessing Bullingbrooke, Before he was, what thou would'st haue him be? And being now trimm'd in thine owne desires, Thou (beastly Feeder) art so full of him, That thou prouok'st thy selfe to cast him vp. So, so, (thou common Dogge) did'st thou disgorge Thy glutton-bosome of the Royall Richard, And now thou would'st eate thy dead vomit vp, And howl'st to finde it. What trust is in these Times? They, that when Richard liu'd, would haue him dye, Are now become enamour'd on his graue Thou that threw'st dust vpon his goodly head When through proud London he came sighing on, After th'admired heeles of Bullingbrooke, Can'st now, O Earth, yeeld vs that King againe,

And

And take thou this (O thoughts of men accurs'd) !
"Past, and to Come, seemes best; things Present, worst."
Mow. Shall we go draw our numbers, and set on ?
Hast. We are Times subiects, and Time bids, be gon.

Actus Secundus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Hostesse, with two Officers, Fang, and Snare.
Hostesse. Mr. Fang, haue you entred the Action ?
Fang. It is enter'd.
Hostesse. Wher's your Yeoman ? Is it a lusty yeoman ?
 Will he stand to it ?
Fang. Surrah, wher's Snare ?
Hostesse. I, I, good M Snare.
Snare. Heere, heere
Fang. Snare, we must Arrest Sir Iohn Falstaffe
Host. I good M. Snare, I haue enter'd him, and all.
Sn. It may chance cost some of vs our lues he wil stab
Hostesse. Alas the day. take heed of him - he stabd me in mine owne house, and that most beastly : he cares not what mischeefe he doth, if his weapon be out. Hee will soyne like any diuell, he will spare neither man, woman, nor childe.
Fang. If I can close with him, I care not for his thrust.
Hostesse. No, nor I neither Ile be at your elbow
Fang. If I but fist him once if he come but within my Vice.

Host. I am vndone, with his going I wantant he is an infinitue thing vpon my score. Good M Fang hold him sure good M. Snare let him not scape, he comes continuantly to Py-Corner (sauing your manhoods) to buy a saddle, and hee is indited to dinner to the Lubbars head in Lombardstreet, to M. Smoothes the Silkman I pra'ye, since my Exion is enter'd, and my Cafe so openly known to the world, let him be brought in to his answer. A too. Marke is a long one, for a poore lone woman to beare & I haue borne, and borne, and borne, and haue bin sub'd off, and sub'd off, from this day to that day, that it is a shame to be thought on There is no honesty in such dealing, vnles a woman should be made an Ass and a Beast, to beare eu-ery Knaues wrong.

Enter Falstaffe and Bardolfe.
 Yonder he comes, and that arrant Malnesey-Nole Bardolfe with him. Do your Offices, do your Offices. M. Fang,
 & M Snare, do me, do me, do me your Offices

Fal. How now ? whose Mare's dead ? what's the matter ?
Fang. Sir Iohn, I arrest you, at the suit of Mist Quickly
Falst. Away Varlets, draw Bardolfe Cut me off the Villaines head, throw the Queane in the Channel.

Host. Throw me in the channell ? Ile throw thee there Wilt thou ? wilt thou ? thou bastardy rogue. Murder, murder, O thou Hony-suckle villaine, wilt thou kill Gods officers, and the Kings ? O thou hony-seed Rogue, thou art a honyseed, a Man-queller, and a woman-queller.

Falst. Keep them off, Bardolfe Fang A rescue, a rescue.
Host. Good people bring a rescue. Thou wilt not ? thou wilt not ? Do, do thou Rogue Do thou Hempseed
Page Away you Scullion, you Rappallian, you Fusili-larian Ile tucke your Catastrophe. Enter. Ch Injustice
Inst. What's the matter ? Keepe the Peace here, ho.
Host. Good my Lord be good to mee. I beseech you stand to me.

Ch. Inst. How now Sir Iohn ? What are you brauling here ?
 Doth this become your place, your time, and businesse ?
 You should haue bene well on your way to Yorke.
 Stand from him Fellow, wherefore hang'st vpon him ?

Host. Oh my most worshipfull Lord, and please your Grace, I am a poote widdow of Eastcheap, and he is arrested at my suit.

Ch. Inst. For what summe ?
Host. It is more then for some (my Lord) it is for all. all
 I haue, he hath eaten me out of house and homes hee hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his : but I will haue some of it out againe, or I will ride thee o' Nights, like the Mare.

Falst. I thinke I am as like to ride the Mare, if I haue any vantage of ground, to get vp.

Ch. Inst. How comes this, Sir Iohn ? Fy, what a man of good temper would endure this tempest of exclamation ?
 Are you not asham'd to inforce a poore Widdowe to so rough a course, to come by her owne ?

Falst. What is the grosse summe that I owe thee ?

Host. Marry (if thou wer't an honest man) thy selfe, &
 the mony too. Thou didst sweare to mee vpon a parcell gilt Goblet, sitting in my Dolphin-chamber at the round table, by a sea-cole fire, on Wednesday in Whitson week, when the Prince broke thy head for lik'ning him to a singing man of Windsor ; Thou didst sweare to me then (as I was washing thy wound) to marry me, and make mee my Lady thy wife. Canst thou deny it ? Did not goodwife Keetch the Butchers wife come in then, and cal me gossip Quickly ?
 comming in to borrow a messe of Vinegar, telling vs, she had a good distill of Prawnes whereby thou didst desire to eat some : whereby I told thee they were ill for a greene wound ? And didst not thou (when she was gone downe staires) desire me to be no more familiar with such poore people, saying, that ere long they should call me Madam ?
 And didst thou not kisse me, and bid mee fetch thee 20 s ? I put thee now to thy Book-oath, deny it if thou canst ?

Fal. My Lord, this is a poore mad soule and she sayes vp & downe the town, that her eldest son is like you she hath bin in good case, & the truth is, pouerty hath distracted her : but for these foolish Officers, I beseech you, I may haue redresse against them.

Inst. Sir Iohn, Sir Iohn I am well acquainted with your maner of wrenching the true cause, the false way. It is not a confident brow, nor the throng of wordes, that come with such (more then impudent) sawcines from you, can thrust me from a leuell consideration, I know you ha' practis'd vpon the easie-yielding spirit of this woman.

Host. Yes in trooth my Lord.

Inst. Prethee peace pay her the debt you owe her, and vnpay the villany you haue done her the one you may do with sterling mony, & the other with currant repentance

Fal. My Lord, I will not vndergo this sneape without reply You call honorable Boldnes, impudent Sawcinesse
 If a man wil curre sic, and say nothing, he is veruous : No, my Lord (your humble duty remebred) I will not be your tutor. I say to you, I desire deliur'ance from these Officers being vpon hasty employment in the Kings Affaires.

Inst. You speake, as hauing power to do wrong. But answer in the effect of your Reputation, and satisfie the poore woman.

Falst. Come hither Hostesse. Enter M Gover

Ch. Inst. Now Master Gover, What newes ?

Gow. The King (my Lord) and Henrie Prince of Wales
 Are neere at hand. The rest the Paper telles.

Falst. As I am a Gentleman.

Host. Nay, you said so before.

Fal. As I am a Gentleman. Come, no more wordes of it

Host. By this Heauenly ground I tread on, I must be faine to pawne both my Plate, and the Tapistry of my dy-ning Chambers.

Fal. Glasses, glasses, is the onely drinking : and for thy walles a pretty slight Drollery, or the storie of the Prodigall, or the Germane hunting in Waterworke, is worth a thousand of these Bed-hangings, and these Fly-bitten Tapestries. Let it be tenne pound (if thou canst.) Come, if it were not for thy humors, there is not a better Wench in England. Go, wash thy face, and draw thy Action: Come, thou must not bee in this humour with me, come, I know thou wast set on to this.

Hof. Prethee (Sir Iohn) let it be but twenty Nobles, I loath to pawne my Plate, in good earnest la.

Fal. Let it alone, Ile make other shift: you'll be a fool still

Hof. Well, you shall haue it although I pawne my Gowne. I hope you'll come to Supper. You'll pay me al-together?

Fal. Will I lue? Go with her, with her: hooke-on, hooke-on

Hof. Will you haue Doll Teara sheets meet you at supper?

Fal. No more words. Let's haue her.

Ch. Inst. I haue heard bitter newes.

Fal. What's the newes (my good Lord?)

Ch. In. Where lay the King last night?

Mef. At Basingstoke my Lord.

Fal. I hope (my Lord) all's well. What is the newes my Lord?

Ch. Inst. Come all his Forces backe?

Mef. No Fifteene hundred Foot, five hundred Horse Are march'd vp to my Lord of Lancaster, Against Northumberland, and the Archbishop.

Fal. Comes the King backe from Wales, my noble L?

Ch. Inst. You shall haue Letters of me presently. Come, go along with me, good M. Gower

Fal. My Lord.

Ch. Inst. What's the matter?

Fal. Master Gower, shall I entreate you with mee to dinner?

Gow. I must waite vpon my good Lord heere. I thanke you, good Sir Iohn.

Ch. Inst. Sir Iohn, you loyter heere too long being you are to take Souldiers vp, in Countries as you go.

Fal. Will you sup with me, Master Gower?

Ch. Inst. What foolish Master taught you these manners, Sir Iohn?

Fal. Master Gower, if they become mee nor, hee was a Foole that taught them mee. This is the right Fencing grace (my Lord) rap for rap, and so part faire.

Ch. Inst. Now the Lord lighten thee, thou art a great Foole. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Prince Henry, Pointz, Bardolfe, and Page.

Prim. Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

Poin. Is it come to that? I had thought wearines durst not haue reach'd one of so high blood.

Prim. It doth me, though it discolours the complexion of my Greatnesse to acknowledge it. Doth it not shew vildely in me, to desire small Beere?

Poin. Why, a Prince should not be so loosely studied,

as to remember so weak a Composition.

Prince. Belike then, my Appetite was not Princely got. for (in troth) I do now remember the poore Creature, Small Beere. But indeede these humble considerations make me out of loue with my Cuisse. What a disgrace is it to me, to remember thy name? Or to know thy face to morrow? Or to take note how many paire of Silk stockings thou hast? (Viz. these, and those that were thy peach-colour'd ones.) Or to beare the Inuentorie of thy shirts, as one for superfluity, and one other, for vse. But that the Tennis-Court-keeper knowes better then I, for it is a low ebbe of Linnen with thee, when thou kept'st not Racket there, as thou hast not done a great while, because the rest of thy Low Countries, haue made a shift to eate vp thy Holland.

Poin. How ill it followes, after you haue labour'd so hard, you should talke so idly? Tell me how many good yong Princes would do so, their Fathers lying so sicke, as yours is?

Prim. Shall I tell thee one thing, Pointz?

Poin. Yes: and let it be an excellent good thing.

Prim. It shall serue among wittes of no higher breeding then thine.

Poin. Go to. I stand the push of your one thing, that you'll tell.

Prim. Why, I tell thee, it is not meet, that I should be sad now my Father is sicke: albeit I could tell to thee (as to one it pleases me, for fault of a better, to call my friend) I could be sad, and sad indeede too.

Poin. Very hardly, vpon such a subiect.

Prim. Thou think'st me as farre in the Duels Booke, as thou, and Falstaffe, for obduracie and persistence. Let the end try the man. But I tell thee, my hart bleeds inwardly, that my Father is so sicke: and keeping such vild company as thou art, hath in reason taken from me, all ostentation of sorrow.

Poin. The reason?

Prim. What would'st thou think of me, if I should weep?

Poin. I would thinke thee a most Princely hypocrite.

Prim. It would be euery mans thought: and thou art a blessed Fellow, to thinke as euery man thinkes: neuer a mans thought in the world, keeps the Rode-way better then thine: euery man would thinke me an Hypocrite indeede. And what accites your most worshipful thought to thinke so?

Poin. Why because you haue beene so lewde, and so much ingrass'd to Falstaffe.

Prim. And to thee.

Pointz. Nay, I am well spoken of, I can heare it with mine owne eares the worst that they can say of me is, that I am a second Brother, and that I am a proper Fellow of my hands: and those two things I confesse I canoe helpe. Look, look, here comes Bardolfe.

Prince. And the Boy that I gave Falstaffe, he had him from me Christian, and see if the fat villain haue not transform'd him Ape.

Enter Bardolfe

Bar. Saue your Grace.

Prim. And yours, most Noble Bardolfe.

Poin. Come you pernicious Affe, you bashfull Foole, must you be blushing? Wherefore blush you now? what a Maidenly man at Armes are you become? Is it such a matter to get a Pottle-pots Maiden-head?

Page. He call'd me euen now (my Lord) through a red Lattice, and I could discern no part of his face from the window window at last I spy'd his eyes, and methought he had made two holes in the Ale-wines new Petticoat, & peeped through.

Prin. Hath not the boy profited?

Bar. Away, you horseon vpright Rabbet, away.

Page. Away, you rascally Althea dreame, away.

Prin. Instru& vs Boy. what dreame, Boy?

Page. Marry (my Lord) Althea dream'd, she was deluer'd of a Firebrand, and therefore I call him hir dream.

Prince. A Crowne-worth of good Interpretation. There it is, Boy

Pom. O that this good Blossome could bee kept from Cankers: Well, there is six pence to preferue thee.

Bard. If you do not make him be hang'd among you, the gallows shall be wrong'd.

Prince. And how doth thy Master, Bardolph?

Bar. Well, my good Lord. he heard of your Graces comming to Towne. There's a Letter for you.

Pom. Deluer'd with good respect. And how doth the Martlemas, your Master?

Bard. In bodily health Sir.

Pom. Marry, the immortal part needes a Physitian. but that moues not him. though that bee sicke, it dyes not.

Prince. I do allow this Wen to bee as familiar with me, as my dogge: and he holds his place, for looke you he writes.

Pom. Letter. John Falstaffe Knight: (Euery man must know that, as oft as hee hath occasion to name himselfe) Euen like those that are kinne to the King, for they neuer pricke their finger, but they say, there is som of the kings blood spilt. How comes that (sayes he) that takes vpon him not to conceine? the answer is as ready as a borrowed cap. I am the Kings poore Cousin, Sir.

Prince. Nay, they will be kin to vs, but they wil fetch it from Iaphet. But to the Letter — Sir John Falstaffe, Knight, to the Sonne of the King, neereft his Father, Harris Prince of Wales, greeting.

Pom. Why this is a Certificate.

Prin. Peace.

I wil imitate the honourable Romaines in breuitie

Pom. Sure he meane breuitie in breath short-winded. I commend me to thee, I commend thee, and I leaue thee. Bee not too familiar with Pointz, for hee misuses thy Fawours so much, that he sweares thou art to marrie his Sister Nell. Repent at idle times as thou mayst, and so farewell

Thine, by yea and no which is as much as to say, as thou vseth him. Iacke Falstaffe with my Familiars

John with my Brothers and Sister & Sir John, with all Europe

My Lord, I will steepe this Letter in Sack, and make him eate it.

Prin. That's to make him eate twenty of his Words. But do you vse me thus Ned? Must I marry your Sister?

Pom. May the Wench haue no worse Fortune. But I neuer said so.

Prin. Well, thus we play the Fooles with the time & the spirits of the wise, sit in the clouds, and mocke vs. Is your Master heere in London?

Bard. Yes my Lord.

Prin. Where suppes he? Doth the old Sore, feede in the old Franke?

Bard. At the old place my Lord, in East-cheape.

Prin. What Company?

Prin. Sup any women with him?

Page. None my Lord, but old Mistris Quickly, and M. Doll Teare-sheet.

Prin. What Pagan may that be?

Page. A proper Gentlewoman, Sir, and a Kinswoman of my Masters.

Prin. Euen such Kin, as the Parish Heyfors are to the Towne-Bull?

Shall we steale vpon them (Ned) at Supper?

Pom. I am your shadow, my Lord, Ile follow you.

Prin. Sirrah, you boy, and Bardolph, no word to your Master that I am yet in Towne.

There's for your silence.

Bar. I haue no tongue, sir

Page. And for mine Sir, I will gouerne it.

Prin. Fare ye well go.

This Doll Teare-sheet should be some Rode.

Pom. I warrant you, as common as the way betweene S Albans, and London.

Prin. How might we see Falstaffe bestow himselfe to night, in his true colours, and not our euies be seene?

Pom. Put on two Leather Ierkins, and Aprons, and waite vpon him at his Table, like Drawers

Prin. From a God, to a Bull? A heauie declension: It was Ioues case. From a Prince, to a Prentice, a low transformation, that shall be mine for in euery thing, the purpose must weigh with the folly. Follow me Ned. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Northumberland, his Ladie, and Harris Percies Ladie.

North. I prethee louing Wife, and gentle Daughter, Giue an euen way vnto my rough Affaires Put not you on the visage of the Times, And be like them to Percie, troublesome.

Wife. I haue giuer ouer, I will speak no more, Do what you will. your Wisedome, be your guide.

North. Alas (sweet Wife) my Honor is at pawne, And but my going, nothing can redeeme it.

La. Oh yet, for heauens sake, go not to these Warrs; The Time was (Father) when you broke your word,

When you were more endeer'd to it, then now, When your owne Percy, when my heart-deere Harry,

Threw many a Northward looke, to see his Father Bring vp his Powres but he did long in vaine.

Who then perswaded you to stay at home? There were two Honors lost; Yours, and your Sonnes.

For Yours, may heauenly glory brighten it: For His, it sticke vpon him, as the Sunne

In the gray vault of Heauen: and by his Light Did all the Cheualrie of England moue

To do brave Acts He was (indeed) the Glasse Wherein the Noble-Youth did dresse themselves.

He had no Legges, that practise'd not his Gate: And speaking thicke (which Nature made his blemish)

Became the Accents of the Valiant.

For those that could speake low, and tardily, Would turne their owne Perfection, to Abuse,

To seeme like him So that in Speech, in Gate, In Diet, in Affections of delight,

In Militarie Rules, Humors of Blood,

He

He was the Marke, and Glasse, Coppy, and Booke,
That fashion'd others. And him, O wondrous! him,
O Miracle of Men! Him did you leaue
(Second to none) vn-seconded by you,
To looke vpon the hideous God of Warre,
In disadvantage, to abide a field,
Where nothing but the sound of Hotsprurs Name
Did seeme defensible. so you left him.
Neuer, O neuer doe his Ghost the wrong,
To hold your Honor more precise and nice
With others, then with him. Let them alone:
The Marshall and the Arch-bishop are strong.
Had my sweet Harry had but halfe their Numbers,
To day might I (hanging on Hotsprurs Necke)
Haue talk'd of Monmouths Graue.

North. Beshrew your heart,
(Faile Daughter) you doe draw my Spirits from me,
With new lamenting ancient Ouer-sights.
But I must goe, and meet with Danger there,
Or it will secke me in another place,
And finde me worse prouided.

Wife. O flye to Scotland,
Till that the Nobles, and the armed Commons,
Haue of their Puissance made a little taste.

Lady. If they get ground, and vantage of the King,
Then ioyne you with them, like a Ribbe of Steele,
To make Strength stronger. But, for all our loues,
First let them trye themselves. So did your Sonne,
He was so suffer'd; so came I a Widow
And neuer shall haue length of Life enough,
To raine vpon Remembrance with mine Eyes,
That it may grow and sprowe, as high as Heauen,
For Recordation to my Noble Husband.

North. Come, come, go in with me: tis with my Minde
As with the Tyde, I well'd vp vnto his height,
That makes a still-stand, running neyther way.
Faine would I goe to meet the Arch-bishop,
But many thousand Reasons hold me backe.
I will resolue for Scotland. there am I,
Till Time and Vantage craue my company. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter two Drawers.

1. Drawer. What hast thou brought there? Apple-Iohns? Thou know'st Sir Iohn cannot endure an Apple-Iohn.

2. Draw. Thou say'st true: the Prince once set a Dish of Apple-Iohns before him, and told him there were five more Sir Iohns and, putting off his Hat, said, I will now take my leaue of these five drie, round, old-wither'd Knights. It anger'd him to the heart: but hee hath forgot that.

1. Draw. Why then couer, and set them downe and see if thou canst finde out Sneakes Noyse; Mistris Teare-sheet would faine haue some Musique.

2. Draw. Sirrha, heere will be the Prince, and Master Poynts, anon and they will put on two of our Jerkins, and Aprons, and Sir Iohn must not know of it. Bardolph hath brought word.

1. Draw. Then here will be old Vins: it will be an excellent stratagem.

2. Draw. Ile see if I can finde out Sneake. Exit.

Enter Hostesse, and Dol.

Host. Sweet-heart, me thinkes now you are in an excellent good temperalitie: your Pullidge beates as extraordinarily, as heart would desire; and your Colour (I warrant you) is as red as any Rose: But you haue drunke too much Canaries, and that's a maruellous sear-ching Wine; and it perfumes the blood, ere wee can say what's this How doe you now?

Dol. Better then I was: Hem.

Host. Why that was well said: A good heart's worth Gold. Looke, here comes Sir Iohn.

Enter Falstaffe.

Falst. When Arthur first in Court--(emptie the Jordan) and was a worthy King How now Mistris Dol?

Host. Sick of a Calme: yea, good-sooth.

Falst. So is all her Sect: if they be once in a Calme, they are sick.

Dol. You muddie Rascall, is that all the comfort you giue me?

Falst. You make fat Rascalls, Mistris Dol

Dol. I make them? Gluttonie and Diseases make them, I make them not.

Falst. If the Cooke make the Gluttonie, you helpe to make the Diseases (Dol) we catch of you (Dol) we catch of you: Grant that, my poore Vertue, grant that.

Dol. I marry, our Chaynes, and our Jewels.

Falst. Your Brooches, Pearles, and Owches: For to serue brauely, is to come halting off: you know, to come off the Breach, with his Pike bent brauely, and to Surgerie brauely; to venture vpon the charg'd-Chambers brauely.

Host. Why this is the olde fashion: you two neuer meete, but you fall to some discord: you are both (in good troth) as Rheumatike as two drie Tostes, you cannot one beare with anothers Confirmities. What the good-yere? One must beare, and that must bee you. you are the weaker Vessell; as they say, the emptier Vessell.

Dol. Can a weake emptie Vessell beare such a huge full Hogs-head? There's a whole Marchants Venture of Burdeaux-Stuffe in him: you haue not scene a Hulke better stuffe in the Hold. Come, Ile be friends with thee Jicke: Thou art going to the Wartes, and whether I shall euer see thee againe, or no, there is no body cares.

Enter Drawer.

Drawer. Sir, Ancient Pistol is below, and would speake with you.

Dol. Hang him, swaggering Rascall, let him not come hither. it is the foule-mouth'dst Rogue in England.

Host. If hee swagger, let him not come here: I must lue amongst my Neighbors, Ile no Swaggers: I am in good name, and fame, with the very best: shut the doore, there comes no Swaggers heere. I haue not luid all this while, to haue swaggering now: shut the doore, I pray you.

Falst. Do'st thou heare, Hostesse?

Host. Pray you pacifie your selfe (Sir Iohn) there comes no Swaggers heere.

Falst. Do'st

Falst. Do'st thou heare? it is mine Ancient.

Hoff Tilly-fally (Sir John) neuer tell me, your ancient Swaggerer comes not in my doores. I was before Master Tisick, the Deputie, the other day: and as hee said to me, it was no longer agoe then Wednesday last. Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee,) Master Dambe, our Minister, was by then. Neighbour Quickly (sayes hee) receiue those that are Ciuill; for (sayth hee) you are in an ill Name. now hee said so, I can tell whereupon. for (sayes hee) you are an honest Woman, and well thought on; therefore take heede what Guests you receiue. Receiue (sayes hee) no swaggering Companions There comes none heere. You would blesse you to heare what hee said. No, Ile no Swaggerers.

Falst Hee's no Swaggerer (Hoffesse) a tame Cheater, hee you may stroake him as gently, as a Puppie Greyhound hee will not swagger with a Barbarie Henne, if her feathers turne backe in any shew of resistance. Call him vp (Drawer)

Hoff Cheater, call you him? I will barre no honest man my house, nor no Cheater. but I doe not loue swaggering, I am the worfe when one sayes, swagger. Feele Masters, how I shake. looke you, I warrant you

Dol So you doe, Hoffesse

Hoff. Doe I? yea, in very truth doe I, if it were an Aspen Lease: I cannot abide Swaggerers

Enter Pistol, and Bardolph and his Boy

Pist 'Saue you, Sir John.

Falst. Welcome Ancient Pistol. Here (Pistol) I charge you with a Cup of Sacke: doe you discharge vpon mine Hoffesse.

Pist. I will discharge vpon her (Sir John) with two Bullets.

Falst She is Pistoll-prooffe (Sir) you shall hardly offend her

Hoff Come, Ile drinke no Prooffes, nor no Bullets. I will drinke no more then will doe me good, for no mans pleasure, I.

Pist. Then to you (Mistis Dorothea) I will charge you

Dol Charge me? I scorn you (scurue Companion) what? you poore, base, fassally, cheating, lacke-Linnen-Mate: away you mouldie Rogue, away; I am meat for your Master.

Pist. I know you, Mistis Dorothea.

Dol Away you Cut-purse Rascall, you filthy Bung, away. By this Wine, Ile thrust my Knife in your mouldie Chappes, if you play the sawcie Cuttle with me. Away you Bottle-Ale Rascall, you Basket-hilt stale Iugler, you. Since when, I pray you, Sir? what, with two Points on your shoulder? much.

Pist I will murder your Ruffe, for this.

Hoff. No, good Captaine Pistol not heere, sweete Captaine.

Dol Captaine? thou abhominable damnd Cheater, art thou not ashamed to be call'd Captaine? If Captaines were of my munde, they would trunchion you out, for taking their Names vpon you, before you haue earn'd them. You a Captaine? you slaue, for what? for tearing a poore Whores Ruffe in a Bawdy-house? Hee a Captaine? hang him Rogue, hee lyes vpon mouldie stew'd-Pruines, and dry'd Cakes. A Captaine? These Villaines will make the word Captaine odious. Therefore Captaines had neede looke to it,

Bard Pray thee goe downe, good Ancient.

Falst. Hearke thee hither, Mistis Dol

Pist Not I. I tell thee what, Corporall Bardolph, I could teare her. Ile be reueng'd on her.

Pist. Ile see her damn'd first: to Pluto's damn'd Lake, to the Infernall Deepe, where Erebus and Tortures wilde also Hold Hooke and Line, say I. Downe: downe Dogges, downe Fates haue wee not Heren here?

Hoff. Good Captaine Pesol be quiet, it is very late I beseeke you now, aggrauate your Choler.

Pist. These be good Humors indeede Shall Pack-Horses, and hollow-pamper'd Iades of Asia, which cannot goe but thirtie miles a day, compare with Cesar, and with Caniballs, and Trojan Greekes? nay, rather damne them with King Cerberus, and let the Welkin roare shall wee fall foule for Toyes?

Hoff By my troth Captaine, these are very bitter words.

Bard. Be gone, good Ancient: this will grow to a Brawle anon.

Pist. Die men, like Dogges, giue Crownes like Pinnes Hau we not Heren here?

Hoff On my word (Captaine) there's none such here. What the good-yere, doe you thinke I would denye her? I pray be quiet.

Pist. Then feed, and be fat (my faire Calpurnia) Come, giue me some Sack, Si fortune me tormenta, sperato me contente Feare wee broad-sides? No, let the fiend giue fire Giue me some Sack and Sweet-heart lye thou there: Come wee to full Points here, and are et eterna's nothing?

Fal. Pistol, I would be quiet.

Pist. Sweet Knight, I kisse thy Neaffe. what? wee haue seene the seuen Starres.

Dol Thrust him downe stayres, I cannot enquire such a Fustian Rascall.

Pist. Thrust him downe stayres? know we not Gallo-way Nagges?

Fal Quoit him downe (Bardolph) like a shoue-groat shilling nay, if hee doe nothing but speake nothing, hee shall be nothing here

Bard Come, get you downe stayres

Pist What? shall wee haue Incision? shall wee embrew? then Death rocke me asleepe, abridge my dolefull dayes: why then let grieuous, gasly, gaping Wounds, vntwind the Sisters three. Come Atropos, I say.

Hoff. Here's good stiffe toward.

Fal Giue me my Rapier, Boy.

Dol. I prethee Iack, I prethee doe not draw.

Fal. Get you downe stayres.

Hoff. Here's a goodly tumult Ile forswear keeping house, before Ile be in these trrits, and frights. So Murder I warrant now. Alas, alas, put vp your naked Weapons, put vp your naked Weapons.

Dol. I prethee Iack be quiet, the Rascall is gone. ah, you whorson little valiant Villaine, you,

Hoff Are you not hurt i'th' Groyne? methought hee made a throwd Thrust at your Belly.

Fal Haue you turn'd him out of doores?

Bard Yes Sir the Rascall's drunke: you haue hurt him (Sir) in the shoulder.

Fal A Rascall to braue me.

Dol Ah, you sweet little Rogue, you. alas, poore Ape, how thou sweats? Come, let me wipe thy Face: Come on, you whorson Chops: Ah Rogue, I loue thee. Thou art as valorous as Hector of Troy, worth five of Agamemnon, and tenne times better then the nine Worthies: ah Villaine.

Fal. A rascally Slave, I will cosse the Rogue in a Blanker.

Dol. Doe, if thou dar'st for thy heart: if thou doo'st, Ile canuas thee betweene a paire of Sheetes.

Enter Musique.

Page. The Musique is come, Sir.

Fal. Let them play: play Sirs. Sit on my Knee, Dol. A Rascall, bragging Slave. the Rogue fled from me like Quick-silver.

Dol. And thou followd'st him like a Church: thou whorson little tydie Satholmew Bore-pigge, when wilt thou leaue fighting on dayes, and foyning on nights, and begin to patch vp thine old Body for Heauen?

Enter the Prince and Pomes duguis'd.

Fal. Peace (good Dol) doe not speake like a Deaths-head: doe not bid me remember mine end.

Dol. Sirrha, what humor is the Prince of?

Fal. A good shallow young fellow: hee would haue made a good Pantler, hee would haue chipp'd Bread well.

Dol. They say Pomes hath a good Wit.

Fal. Hee a good Wit? hang him Baboone his Wit is as thicke as Tewksburie Mustard. there is no more conceit in him, then is in a Mallet.

Dol. Why doth the Prince loue him so then?

Fal. Because their Legges are both of a bignesse and hee playes at Quots well, and eates Conger and Kennell, and drinks off Candles ends for Flap-dragons, and rides the wilde-Mare with the Boycs, and iumpes vpon Ioynd-stooles, and sweares with a good grace, and wears his Bopt very smooth, like vnto the Signe of the Legge, and breeds no bare with telling of discrete stories, and such other Gamboll Faculties hee hath, that shew a weake Minde, and an able Body, for the which the Prince admits him; for the Prince himselfe is such another the weight of an hayre will turne the Scale betweene their Haber-de-pous.

Prince. Would not this Naue of a Wheele haue his Eares cut off?

Pom. Let vs beat him before his Whore.

Prince. Look, if the wither'd Elder hath not his Poll claw'd like a Parrot.

Pom. Is it not strange, that Desire should so many yeeres out-loue performance?

Fal. Kisse me Dol

Prince. Saturne and Venus this yeere in Coniunction? What sayes the Almanack to that?

Pom. And looke whether the fiere Trigon, his Man, be not lipping to his Masters old Tables, his Note-Booke, his Councell-keeper?

Fal. Thou do'st giue most flatter'ing Buffes.

Dol. Nay truly, I kisse thee with a most constant heart.

Fal. I am olde, I am olde.

Dol. I loue thee better, then I loue ere a scurue young Boy of them all.

Fal. What Stuffe wilt thou haue a Kirtle of? I shall receiue Money on Thursday. thou shalt haue a Cappe to morrow. A merrie Song, come: it growes late, wee will to Bed. Thou wilt forget me, when I am gone.

Dol. Thou wilt set me a weeping, if thou say'st so: proue that euer I dresse my selfe handsume, till thy returne: well, hearken the end.

Fal. Some Sack, Francis.

Prin. Pom. Anon, anon, Sir.

Fal. Ha? a Bastard Sonne of the Kings? And art not thou Pomes, his Brother?

Prince. Why thou Globe of sinfull Continents, what a Life do'st thou lead?

Fal. A better then thou: I am a Gentleman, thou art a Drawer.

Prince. Very true, Sir: and I come to draw you out by the Eares.

Hof. Oh, the Lord preserue thy good Grace Welcome to London. Now Heauen blesse that sweete Face of thine. what, are you come from Wales?

Fal. Thou whorson mad Compound of Majestie: by this light Flesh, and corrupt Blood, thou art welcome.

Dol. How? you fat Foole, I scorne you.

Pom. My Lord, hee will driue you out of your reuenge, and turne all to a merrymment, if you take not the heat.

Prince. You whorson Candle-myne you, how wildly did you speake of me euen now, before this honest, vertuous, ciuill Gentlewoman?

Hof. Blessing on your good heart, and so shee is by my troth.

Fal. Didst thou heare me?

Prince. Yes: and you knew me, as you did when you ranne away by Gads-hill: you knew I was at your back, and spoke it on purpose, to trie my patience.

Fal. No, no, no. not so: I did not thinke, thou wast within hearing.

Prince. I shall driue you then to confesse the wilfull abuse, and then I know how to handle you.

Fal. No abuse (Hall) on mine Honor, no abuse.

Prince. Not to dispraise me? and call me Pantler, and Bread-chopper, and I know not what?

Fal. No abuse (Hall)

Pom. No abuse?

Fal. No abuse (Ned) in the World. honest Ned none, I disprays'd him before the Wicked, that the Wicked might not fall in loue with him: In which doing, I haue done the part of a carefull Friend, and a true Subject, and thy Father is to giue me thanks for it. No abuse (Hall): none (Ned) none; no Boyes, none.

Prince. See now whether pure Feare, and entire Cowardise, doth not make thee wrong this vertuous Gentlewoman, to close with vs? Is shee of the Wicked? Is thine Hostesse heere, of the Wicked? Or is the Boy of the Wicked? Or honest Bardolph (whose Zeale burnes in his Nose) of the Wicked?

Pom. Answer thou dead Elme, answer.

Fal. The Fiend hath prickt downe Bardolph irreconcilable, and his Face is Lewfers Priuy-Kitchin, where hee doth nothing but roast Mault-Wormes: for the Boy, there is a good Angell about him, but the Deuill outbids him too.

Prince. For the Women?

Fal. For one of them, shee is in Hell already, and burnes poore Soules: for the other, I owe her Money: and whether shee bee damn'd for that, I know not.

Hof. No, I warrant you.

Fal. No,

Fal. No, I thinke thou art not. I thinke thou art quit for that. Marry, there is another Indictment vpon thee, for suffering flesh to bee eaten in thy house, contrary to the Law, for the which I thinke thou wilt howle

Hof. All Viſtuallers doe ſo: What is a Ioynt of Mutton, or two, in a whole Lent?

Prince You, Gentlewoman.

Dol. What ſayes your Grace?

Falſt. His Grace ſayes that, which his fleſh rebels againſt.

Hof. Who knocks ſo lowd at doore? Look to the doore there, Francis?

Enter Pet.

Prince. Peto, how now? what newes?

Peto The King, your Father, is at Weſtmiſter, And there are twentie weake and wearied Poſtes, Come from the North. and as I came along, I met, and ouer-tooke a dozen Captaines, Bare-headed, ſweating, knocking at the Tauernes, And aſking every one for Sir Iohn Falſſe.

Prince By Heauen (Pomes) I feele me much to blame, So idly to prophane the precious time, When Tempeſt of Commotion, like the South, Borne with black Vapour, doth begin to melt, And drop vpon our bare vnarmed heads. Giue me my Sword, and Cloake:

Falſſe, good night.

Exit.

Falſt. Now comes in the ſweeteſt Morſell of the night, and wee muſt hence, and leaue it vnpickt. Mote knocking at the doore? How now? what's the matter?

Bard. You muſt away to Court, Sir, preſently, A dozen Captaines ſtay at doore for you

Falſt. Pay the Muſtians, Sirra. farewell Hoſteſſe, farewell Dol You ſee (my good Wenches) how men of Merit are toght after the vnderferuer may ſleepe, when the man of Action is call'd on. Farewell good Wenches if I be not ſent away poſte, I will ſee you againe, ere I goe.

Dol I cannot ſpeake if my heart bee not readie to burſt-- Well (Sweete Jacke) haue a care of thy ſelfe

Falſt. Farewell, farewell

Exit.

Hof. Well, fare thee well. I haue knowne thee theſe twentie nine yeeres, come Peſcod-time. but an honeſter, and truer-hearted man-- Well, fare thee well.

Bard. Miſtris Teare-sheet.

Hof. What's the matter?

Bard. Bid Miſtris Teare-sheet come to my Maſter.

Hof. Oh runne Dol, runne: runne, good Dol.

Exeunt.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

King Goe, call the Earles of Surrey, and of Warwick: But ere they come, bid them ore-reade theſe Letters, And well conſider of them: make good ſpeed. Exit.

How many thouſand of my pooreſt Subiects Are at this howre aſleepe? O Sleepe, O gentle Sleepe, Natures loſt Nurſe, how haue I frighted thee, That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids downe, And ſleepe my Sences in Forgetfulneſſe? Why rather (Sleepe) lyeſt thou in ſmoakie Cribes, Vpon vneſie Pallads ſtretching thee, And huiſht with buſſing Night, flyes to thy ſlumber, Then in the perſum'd Chambers of the Great? Vnder the Canopies of coſtly State, And lull'd with ſounds of ſweeteſt Melodie? O thou dull God, why lyeſt thou with the vilde, In loathſome Beds, and leau'ſt the Kingly Couch, A Watch-caſe, or a common Larum-Bell? Wilt thou, vpon the high and giddie Maſt, Seale vp the Ship-bayes Eyes, and rock his Braines, In Cradle of the rude imperious Surge, And in the viſitation of the Windes, Who take the Ruſſian Billowes by the top, Curling their monſtrous heads, and hanging them With deaf'ning Clamors in the ſlippery Clouds, That with the hurley, Death it ſelfe awakes? Canſt thou (O partiall Sleepe) giue thy Repoſe To the wet Sea-Boy, in an hour ſo rude? And in the calmest, and moſt ſtill'ſt Night, With all appliancés, and meanes to boote, Deny it to a King? Then happy Lowe, lye downe, Vneſie lyes the Head, that wearas a Crowne.

Enter Warwick and Surrey.

War. Many good-morrowes to your Maieſtic.

King. Is it good-morrow, Lords?

War. 'Tis One a Clock, and paſt.

King. Why then good-morrow to you all (my Lords) Haue you read o're the Letters that I ſent you?

War. We haue (my Liege)

King. Then you perceiue the Body of our Kingdome, How ſoule it is what ranke Diſeaſes grow, And with what danger, neere the Heart of it?

War. It is but as a Body, yet diſtemper'd, Which to his former ſtrength may be reſtor'd, With good aduice, and little Medicine. My Lord Northumberland will ſoone be cool'd.

King. Oh Heauen, that one might read the Book of Fate, And ſee the reuolution of the Times Make Mountaines leuell, and the Continent (Wear.e of ſolide firmeneſſe) melt it ſelfe Into the Sea: and other Times, to ſee The beachie Girdle of the Ocean

Too wide for Neptunes hipps; how Chances mocks And Changes fill the Cuppe of Alteration With diuers Liquors. 'Tis not tenne yeeres gone, Since Richard, and Northumberland, great friends, Did feaſt together, and in two yeeres after, Were they at Warres. It is but eight yeeres ſince, This Percie was the man, neereſt my Soule, Who, like a Brother, toyld in my Affaires, And layd his Loue and Life vnder my foot: Yea, for my ſake, euen to the eyes of Richard Gauchim defiance. But which of you was by (You Couſin Nenil, as I may remember) When Richard, with his Eye, brim-full of Teares, (Then check'd, and rated by Northumberland) Did ſpeake theſe words (now prou'd a Prophecie) Northumberland, thou Ladder, by the which

My

My Cousin Bullingbrook ascends my Throne:
(Though then, Heaven knowes, I had no such intent,
But that necessitie so bound the State,
That I and Greatnesse were compell'd to kisse)
The Time shall come (thus did hee follow it)
The Time will come, that foule Sinne gathering head,
Shall breake into Corruption: so went on,
Fore-telling this same Times Condition,
And the diuision of our Amitie.

War. There is a Historie in all mens Liues,
Figuring the nature of the Times decess'd:
The which obseru'd, a man may propheticke
With a neere ayne, of the maine chance of things,
As yet not come to Life, which in their Seedes
And weake beginnings lye entresafured:
Such things become the Hatch and Brood of Time;
And by the necessarie forme of this,
King Kiel or I might create a perfect guesse,
That great Northumberland I, then false to him,
Would of that Seed, grow to a greater fallenesse,
Which should not finde a ground to roote vpon,
Vnlesse on you.

King. Are these things then Necessities?
Then let vs meete them like Necessities;
And that same word, euen now cryes out on vs:
They say, the Bishop and Northumberland
Are fiftie thousand strong.

War. It cannot be (my Lord)
Rumor doth double, like the Voice, and Echo,
The numbers of the feared. Please it your Grace
To goe to bed, vpon my Life (my Lord)
The Pow'rs that you already haue sent forth,
Shall bring this Prize in very easily.
To comfort you the more, I haue recein'd
A certaine instance, that Girard is dead.
Your Maiestie hath bene thus fort-night ill,
And these vnseason'd howres perforce must adde
Vnto your Sicknesse.

King. I will take your counsaile:
And were these inward Warres once out of hand,
Wee would (deare Lords) vnto the Holy-Land.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Shallow and Silence with Mouldie, Shallow, War, Feeble, and Calfe.

Shal. Come-on, come-on, come-on: giue mee your Hand, Sir; giue mee your Hand, Sir: an early stirrer, by the Rood. And how doth my good Cousin Silence?

Sil. Good-morrow, good Cousin Shallow.

Shal. And how doth my Cousin, your Bed-fellow? and your fairest Daughter, and mine, my God-Daughter
Ellen?

Sil. Alas, a blacke Ouzell (Cousin Shallow.)

Shal. By yes and nay, Sir, I dare say my Cousin Will is become a good Scholler? hee is at Oxford still, is hee not?

Sil. Indeepe Sir, to my cost.

Shal. Hee must then to the Innes of Court shortly: I was once of Clements Inne; where (I thinke) they will talke of mad Shallow yet.

Sil. You were call'd lustie Shallow then (Cousin.)

Shal. I was call'd any thing; and I woul'd I haue done any thing, indeede too and roundly too. There was I, and little Isham of Staffordshire, and blacke Orange Bart, and Francis Pickering, and Will Squire a Cot-sal-own, you had not soueraine such swindage-bucklers in all the Innes of Court againe: And I may say to you, wee knew where the Brum-Pals were, and had the best of them all recommandement. Then was Isham Falstaff (now Sir Isham) a Boy, and a Page to Thomas Murray, Duke of Norfolke.

Sil. This Sir Isham (Cousin) that comes hither now about Souldiers?

Shal. The same Sir Isham, the very same: I saw him breake Scroggs's Head at the Court-Gate, when hee was a Crack, not thus high; and the very same day did I fight with one Sampson Sticks, a Fruiterer, behind Gregg's Inne. Oh the mad dayes that I haue spent! and to see how many of mine olde Acquaintance are dead?

Sil. Wee shall all follow (Cousin.)

Shal. Consider 'tis certayne: very sure, very sure:
Death is certayne to all, all shall dye. How a good Yell of Jallocks at Stamford Fayre?

Sil. Truly Cousin, I was not there.

Shal. Death is certayne. Is old Douglas of your Towne living yet?

Sil. Dead, Sir.

Shal. Dead? See, see: hee drew a good Bow: and died? hee shot a fine shooote. Isham of Grant loved him well, and beere much Money on his head. Dead?
hee would haue clapt in the Clowt at Twelue-score, and carried you a fore-hand Shale at foureteene, and foure-teene and a halfe, that is woul'd I haue done a mans head good to see. How a score of Ewes now?

Sil. Thereafter as they be. a score of good Ewes may be worth tenne pounds.

Shal. And is old Douglas dead?

Enter Dardolph and his Boy.

Sil. Heere come two of Sir Isham Falstaff's Men (as I thinke)

Shal. Good-morrow, honest Gentlemen.

Bard. I beseech you, which is Iustice Shallow?

Shal. I am Robert Shallow (Sir) a poore Esquire of the Countie, and one of the Kings Iustices of the Peace:
What is your good pleasure with me?

Bard. My Captaine (Sir) commends him to you:
my Captaine, Sir Isham Falstaff: a tall Gentleman, and a most gallant Leader.

Shal. Hee greetes me well: (Sir) I knew him a good Back-Sword-man. How doth the good Knight?
may I aske, how my Lady his Wife doth?

Bard. Sir, pardon: a Souldier is better accommodated, then with a Wife.

Shal. It is well said, Sir; and it is well said, indeede, too: Better accommodated? it is good, yea indeede it is: good phrases are surely, and euerie where very commendable. Accommodated, it comes of Accommodate:
very good, a good Phrase.

Bard. Pardon, Sir, I haue heard the word Phrase call you it? by this Day, I know not the Phrase: but I will maintaine the Word with my Sword, to bee a Souldier-like Word, and a Word of exceeding good Command. Accommodated: that is, when a man is (as they say) accommodated: or, when a man is, being whereby

whereby he thought to be accommodated, which is an excellent thing.

Enter Falstaffe

Shal. It is very iust: Looke, heere comes good Sir John. Giue me your hand, giue me your Worships good hand. Trust me, you looke well. and beare your yeares very well. Welcome, good Sir John.

Fal. I am glad to see you well, good M. Rybert Shallow: Master Sure-card as I thinke?

Shal. No sir, John, it is my Cousin Silence. in Commission with mee,

Fal. Good M. Silence, it well befits you should be of the peace.

Sil. Your good Worship is welcome.

Fal. Eye, this is hot weather. (Gentlemen) haue you prouided me heere halfe a dozen of sufficient tenn?

Shal. Marry haue we sir: Will you sir?

Fal. Let me see them, I beseech you.

Shal. Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Where's the Roll? Let me see, let me see, let me see: so, so, so, so, yea marry sir, Ralph Mouldie: let them appeare as I call: let them do so, let them do so: Let mee see, Where is Mouldie?

Shal. What thinke you (Sir John) a good limbe'd fellow, yong, strong, and of good friends.

Fal. Is thy name Mouldie?

Moul. Yea, if it please you.

Fal. Tis the more time thou wert vs'd.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, most excellent. Things that are mouldie, lacke vice: very singular good. Well saide Sir John, yety well said.

Fal. Pricke him

Moul. I was prickt well enough before, if you could haue let me alone. my old Dame will be vndone now, for one to doe her Husbandry, and her Drudgery; you need not to haue prickt me, there are other men fitter to goe out, then I.

Fal. Go too. peace Mouldie, you shall goe. Mouldie, it is time you were spent

Moul. Spent?

Shallow. Peace, fellow, peace; stand aside: Know you where you are? For the other sir John Let me see Simon Shallow.

Fal. I marry, let me haue him to sit vnder: he's like to be a cold souldier.

Shal. Where's Shadow?

Shad. Heere sir.

Fal. Shadow, whose sonne art thou?

Shad. My Mothers sonne, Sir.

Falst. Thy Mothers sonne like enough, and thy Fathers shadow, so the sonne of the Female, is the shadow of the Male: it is often so indecdé, but not of the Fathers substance.

Shal. Do you like him, sir John?

Falst. Shadow will serue for Summer: prick him For wee haue a timber of shadowes to fill vpp the Muster-Booke.

Shal. Thomas Warr?

Falst. Where's he?

Warr. Heere sir.

Falst. Is thy name Warr?

Warr. Yea sir.

Fal. Thou art a very ragged Warr.

Shal. Shall I prick him dowbe,

Sir John?

Falst. It were superfluous: for his apparrell is built vpon his backe; and the whole frame stands vpon pins prick him no more.

Shal. Ha, ha, ha, you can do it sir. you can doe it: I commend you well.

Francis Feeble.

Feeble. Heere sir.

Shal. What Trade art thou Feeble?

Feeble. A Womans Taylor sir

Shal. Shall I prick him, sir?

Fal. You may:

But if he had bene a mans Taylor, he would haue prick'd you: Wilt thou make as many holes in an enemies Bar-tille, as thou hast done in a Womans petticoate?

Feeble. I will doe my good will sir, you can haue no more.

Falst. Well said, good Womans Tailour: Well sayde Couragious Feeble. thou wilt bee as valiant as the wrathfull Doue, or most magnanimous-Mouse. Pricke the womans Taylour well Master Shallow, deepe Master Shallow.

Feeble. I would Warr might haue gone sir.

Fal. I would thou wert a mans Tailor, that y might mend him, and make him fit to goe. I cannot put him to a priuate souldier, that is the Leader of so many thousands: Let that suffice, most Forcible Feeble.

Feeble. It shall suffice

Falst. I am bound to thee, reuerend Feeble: Who is the next?

Shal. Peter Bulcasse of the Greene.

Falst. Yea marry, let vs see Bulcasse

Bul. Heere sir

Fal. Trust me, a likely Fellow: Come, prick me Bulcasse till he roare againe

Bul. Oh, good my Lord Captaine.

Fal. What? do'st thou roare before thou art prickt.

Bul. Oh sir, I am a diseased man

Fal. What disease hast thou?

Bul. A whorson cold sir, a cough sir, which I caught with Ringing in the Kings affayres, vpon his Coronation day, sir

Fal. Come, thou shalt go to the Warres in a Gowne, we will haue away thy Cold, and I will take such order, that thy friends shall ring for thee. Is heere all?

Shal. There is two more called then your number: you must haue but foure heere sir, and so I pray you go in with me to dinner.

Fal. Come, I will goe drinke with you, but I cannot tarry dinner. I am glad to see you in good troth, Master Shallow

Shal. O sir John, doe you remember since wee lay all night in the Winde mill, in S Georges Field,

Falstaffe. No more of that good Master Shallow: No more of that.

Shal. Ha? it was a merry night And is Lance, Night-work alive?

Fal. She lues M Shallow

Shal. She neuer could away with me.

Fal. Neuer, neuer she would alwayes say, she could not abide M. Shallow.

Shal. I could anger her to the heart: shee was then a Bona Roba Doth she hold her owne well.

Fal. Old, old, M Shallow.

Shal. Nay, she must be old; she cannot choose but be old.

old: certaine shée's old: and had Robin, Night-work, by old Night-work, before I came to Clements Inne.

Sil. That's five yeres agoe.

Shal. Hah, Cousin Silence, that thou hadst seene that, that this Knight and I haue seene. Hah, Sir John, said I well?

Falst. Wee haue heard the Chymes at mid-night, Master Shallow.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Mouldie. And good Master Corporall Captaine, for my old Dames sake, stand my friend: shée hath no body to doe any thing about her, when I am gone. And she is old, and cannot helpe her selfe: you shall haue fortie, sir.

Bard. Go-too: stand aside.

Feeble. I care not, a man can die but once: wee owe a death. I will neuer beate a base minde: if it be my destiny, so if it be not, so: no man is too good to serue his Prince. And let it goe which way it will, he that dies this yere, is quit for the next.

Bard. Well said, thou art a good fellow.

Feeble. Nay, I will beare no base minde.

Falst. Come sir, which men shall I haue?

Shal. Foure of which you please.

Bard. Sir, a word with you. I haue three pound, to free Mouldie and Bull-calse.

Falst. Go-too: well.

Falst. Mouldie, and Bull-calse for you Mouldie, stay at home, till you are past seruice. And for your part, Bull-calse, growtill you come vnto it: I will none of you.

Shal. Sir John, Sir John, doe not your selfe wrong, they are your likeliest men; and I would haue you seru'd with the best.

Falst. Will you tell me (Master Shallow) how to chuse a man? Care I for the Limbe, the Thewes, the stature, botke, and bigge assemblance of a man? giue mee the spirit (Master Shallow.) Where's Wart? you see what a ragged appearance it is. hee shall charge you, and discharge you, with the motion of a Pewcerers Hammer: come off, and on, swifter then hee that gibbers on the Brewers Bucket. And this same halfe-fac'd fellow, Shadow, giue me this man hee presents no marke to the Enemy, the she-man may with as great ayme leuell at the edge of a Pen-knife: and for a Retrait, how swiftly will this Feeble, the Womans Taylor, runne off. O, giue me the spare men, and spare me the great ones: Put me a Calyuer into Warts hand, Bardolph.

Bard. Hold Wart, Trauerse. thus, thus, thus

Falst. Couine, manage me your Calyuer: so very well, go-too, very good, exceeding good. O, giue me alwayes a little, leane, old, chopt, bald Shot. Well said Wart, thou art a good Serb: hold, there is a Teller for thee.

Shal. Hee is not his Crafts-master, hee doth not doe it right. I remember at Mile-end-Greene, when I lay at Clements Inne, I was then Sir Dagonet in Arthurs Show: there was a little quiver fellow, and hee would manage you his Peece thus: and hee would about, and about, and come you in, and come you in: Hah, tah, tah, would hee say, Bownce would hee say, and away againe would hee goe, and againe would he come: I shall neuer see such a fellow.

Falst. These fellowes will doe well, Master Shallow, Farewell Master Silence, I will not vse many wordes with you: fare you well, Gentlemen both. I thank you. I must a dozen mile to night, Bardolph giue the Souldiers Coates.

Shal. Sir John, Heauen blesse you, and prosper your Affaires, and send vs Peace. As you returne, visit my house. Let our old acquaintance be renewed: per aduenture I will with you to the Court.

Falst. I would you would, Master Shallow.

Shal. Go-too: I haue spoke at a word. Fare you well.

Exit.

Falst. Fare you well, gentle Gentlemen. On Bardolph, leade the men away. As I returne, I will fetch off these Iustices: I doe see the bottome of Iustice Shallow. How subiect wee old men are to this vice of Lying? This same staru'd Iustice hath done nothing but prate to me of the wildenesse of his Youth, and the Feates hee hath done about Turnball-street, and every third word a Lye, duer pay'd to the hearer, then the Turkes Tribute. I doe remember him at Clements Inne, like a man made after Supper, of a Cheefe-paring. When hee was naked, hee was, for all the world, like a forked Radish, with a Head fantastically caru'd vpon it with a Knife. Hee was so forlorne, that his Dimensions (to any thicke sight) were inuincible. Hee was the very Genius of Famine: hee came euer in the reere-ward of the Fashion: And now is this Vices Dagger become a Squire, and talkes as familiarly of John of Gaunt, as if hee had beene sworne Brother to him: and Ile be sworn hee neuer saw him but once in the Tilt-yard, and then hee butt his Head, for crowding among the Marshalls men. I saw it, and told John of Gaunt, hee beat his owne Name, for you might haue trust'd him and all his Apparell into an Ele-skinne. the Case of a Treble Hoebay was a Mansion for him: a Court: and now hath hee Land, and Beecues. Well, I will be acquainted with him, if I returne. And it shall goe hard, but I will make him a Philosophers two Stones to me. If the young Dace be a Bayt for the old Pike, I see no reason, in the Law of Nature, but I may snap at him. Let time shape, and there an end.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter the Arch bishop, Monke, Hastings, Westmerland, Colcule.

Bish. What is this Forrest call'd?

Hast. 'Tis Gualtree Forrest, and't shall please your Grace.

Bish. Here stand (my Lords) and lend discoverers forth, To know the numbers of our Enemies.

Falst. Wee

Hast. Wee haue sent forth alreadye.

Bish. 'Tis well done.

My Friends, and Brethren (in these great Affaires)
I must acquaint you, that I haue receiu'd
New-dated Letters from Northumbreland.
Their cold intent, tenure, and substance thus.
Here doth hee with his Person, with such Powers
As might hold fortance with his Qualitie,
The which hee could not leaue: whereupon
Hee is retr'y'd, to ripe his growing Fortunes,
To Scotland; and concludes in heartie prayers,
That your Attempts may ouer-lie the hazard,
And fearefull meeting of their Opposite.

Mow. Thus do the hopes we haue in him, touch ground,
And dash themselves to peeces.

Enter a Messenger.

Hast. Now? what newes?

Mess. West of this Forrest, scarcely off a mile,
In goodly forme, comes on the Enemy:
And by the ground they hide, I iudge their number
Vpon, or neere, the rate of thirtie thousand.

Mow. The iust proportion that ye gaue them out.
Let vs sway-on, and face them in the field.

Enter Westmerland.

Bish. What well-appointed Leader fronts vs here?

Mow. I thinke it is my Lord of Westmerland.

West. Health, and faire greeting from our Generall,
The Prince, Lord Iohn, and Duke of Lancaster.

Bish. Say on (my Lord of Westmerland) in peace:
What doth concerne your coming?

West. Then (my Lord)

Vnto your Grace doe I in chiefe addresse
The substance of my Speech. If that Rebellion
Came like it selfe, in bafe and abiect Routs,
Led on by bloodie Youth, guarded with Rage,
And countenanc'd by Boyes, and Beggerie:
I say, if damn'd Commotion so appeare,
In his true, natue, and most proper shape,
You (Reuerend Father, and these Noble Lords)
Had not bene here, to dresse the ougly forme
Of bafe, and bloodie Insurrection,
With your faire Honors. You, Lord Arch-bishop,
Whose Sea is by a Ciuill Peace maintain'd,
Whose Beard, the Siluer Hand of Peace hath touch'd,
Whose Learning, and good Letters, Peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white Inuestments figure Innocence,
The Dowe, and very blessed Spirit of Peace
Wherefore doe you so ill translate your selfe,
Out of the Speech of Peace, that beares such grace,
Into the harsh and boystrous Tongue of Warre?
Turning your Bookes to Graues, your Inke to Blood,
Your Penne to Launces, and your Tongue diuine
To a lowd Trumpet, and a Point of Warre.

Bish. Wherefore doe I this? so the Question stands.
Briefely to this end Wee are all diseas'd,
And with our sursetting, and wanton howres,
Haue brought our selues into a burning Feuer,
And wee must bleede for it of which Disease,
Our late King Richard (being infected) dy'd.
But (my most Noble Lord of Westmerland)
I take not on me here as a Physician,
Nor doe I, as an Enemy to Peace,

Troope in the Throngs of Militarie men:
But rather shew a while like fearefull Warre,
To dyet ranke Mindes, sicke of happinesse,
And purge th'obstructions, which begin to stop
Our very Veines of Life: heare me more plainly
I haue in equall ballance iustly weigh'd,
What wrongs our Arms may do, what wrongs we suffer,
And finde our Griefes heauier then our Offences
Wee see which way the streame of Time doth runne,
And are enforc'd from our most quiet there,
By the rough Torrent of Occasion,
And haue the summarie of all our Griefes
(When time shall serue) to shew in Articles;
Which long ere this, wee offer'd to the King,
And might, by no Suit, gayne our Audience:
When wee are wrong'd, and would vnfold our Griefes,
Wee are deny'd access vnto his Person,
Euen by those men, that most haue done vs wrong.
The dangers of the dayes but newly goné,
Whose memorie is written on the Earth
With yet appearing blood, and the examples
Of every Minut's instance (presen' now)
Hath put vs in these ill-beseeming Armes:
Not to breake Peace, or any Branch of it,
But to establish here a Peace indeede,
Concurring both in Name and Qualitie.

West. When euer yet was your Appeale deny'd?
Wherein haue you bene galled by the King?

What Peere hath bene suborn'd, to grate on you,
That you should seale this lawlesse bloody Booke
Of forg'd Rebellion, with a Seale diuine?

Bish. My Brother generall, the Common-wealsh,
I make my Quarrell, ir particular.

West. There is no neede of any such redresse:
Or if there were, it not belongs to you.

Mow. Why not to him in part, and to vs all,
That feele the bruises of the dayes before,
And suffer the Condition of these Times
To lay a heauie and vnequall Hand vpon our Honors?

West. O my good Lord Aslowbray,
Construe the Times to their Necessities,
And you shall say (indeede) it is the Time,
And not the King, that doth you injuries
Yet for your part, it not appeares to me,
Either from the King, or in the present Time,
That you should haue an ynch of any ground
To build a Griefe on: were you not restor'd
To all the Duke of Norfolkes Seignories,
Your Noble, and right well-remembered Fathers?

Mow. What thing, in Honor, had my Father lost,
That neede to be reuiu'd, and breath'd in me?
The King that lou'd him, as the State stood then,
Was forc'd, perforce compell'd to banish him:
And then, that Henry Bullingbrooke and hee
Being mounted, and both rowled in their Seates,
Their neighing Coursers daring of the Spurre,
Their armed Staues in charge, their Beaufets downe,
Their eyes of fire, sparkling through sights of Steele,
And the lowd Trumpet blowing them together:
Then, then, when there was nothing could haue stay'd
My Father from the Breast of Bullingbrooke;
O, when the King did throw his Warder downe,
(His owne Life hung vpon the Staffe hee threw)
Then threw hee downe himselfe, and all their Liues,
That by Indictment, and by dint of Sword,
Haue since mis-carried vnder Bullingbrooke.

EE 2

West You

West. You speake (Lord Mowbray) now you know not what. he Earle of Hereford was reputed then
 In England the most valiant Gentleman.
 Who knowes, on whom Fortune would then haue smil'd?
 But if your Father had bene Vict'or there,
 Hee ne're had borne it out of Countrey.
 For all the Countrey, in a generall voyce,
 Cry'd hate vpon him: and all their prayers, and loue,
 Were set on Herford, whom they doted on,
 And blest'd, and grac'd, and did more then the King.
 But this is meere digression from my purpose.
 Here come I from our Princely Generall,
 To know your Griefes; to tell you, from his Grace,
 That hee will giue you Audience: and wherein
 It shall appeare, that your demands are iust,
 You shall enioy them, euery thing set off,
 That might so much as thinke you Enemies.

Mow. But hee hath forc'd vs to compell this Offer,
 And it proceedes from Pollicy, not Loue.

West. Mowbray, you ouer-weene to take it so:
 This Offer comes from Mercy, not from Feare.
 For loe, within a Ken our Army lyes,
 Vpon mine Honor, all too confident
 To giue admittance to a thought of feare.
 Our Battaille is more full of Names then yours,
 Our Men more perfect in the vse of Armes,
 Our Armor all as strong, our Cause the best;
 Then Reason will, our hearts should be as good.
 Say you not then, our Offer is compell'd.

Mow. Well, by my will, wee shall admit no Parley.

West. That argues but the shame of your offence:
 A rotten Case abides no handling.

Hast. Hath the Prince John a full Commission,
 In very ample vertue of his Father,
 To heare, and absolutely to determine
 Of what Conditions wee shall stand vpon?

West. That is intended in the Generals Name:
 I mule you make so slight a Question,

Bish. Then take (my Lord of Westmerland) this Schedule,
 For this contains our generall Grievances.

Each seuerall Article herein redress'd,
 All members of our Cause, both here, and hence,
 That are inshew'd to this Action,
 Acquitted by a true substantiall forme,
 And present execution of our wills,
 To vs, and to our purposes confin'd,
 Wee come within our awfull Banks againe,
 And knit our Powers to the Arme of Peace.

West. This will I shew the Generall. Please you Lords,
 In sight of both our Battayles, wee may meete
 At either end in peace which Heauen so frame,
 Or to the place of difference call the Swords,
 Which must decide it.

Bish. My Lord, wee will doe so.

Mow. There is a thing within my Bosome tells me,
 That no Conditions of our Peace can stand.

Hast. Feare you not, that if wee can make our Peace
 Vpon such large termes and so absolute,
 As our Conditions shall consist vpon,
 Our Peace shall stand as firme as Rockie Mountaines.

Mow. I, but our valuation shall be such,
 That euery slight, and false-deriu'd Cause,
 Yea, euery idle, nice, and wanton Reason,
 Shall, to the King, taste of this Action:
 That were our Royall faiths, Martyrs in Loue,
 Wee shall be winnowed with so rough a winde,

That euen our Corne shall seeme as light as Chaffe,
 And good from bad finde no partition.

Bish. No, no (my Lord) note this: the King is wearie
 Of daintie, and such picking Grievances.
 For hee hath found, to end one doubt by Death;
 Reniues two greater in the Heires of Life.
 And therefore will hee wipe his Tables cleane,
 And keepe no Tell-tale to his Memorie,
 That may repeat, and Historie his losse,
 To new remembrance. For full well hee knowes,
 Hee cannot so precisely weede this Land,
 As his mis-doubts present occasion:
 His foes are so en-rooted with his friends,
 That plucking to vnfixe an Enemy,
 Hee doth vnfasten so, and shake a friend.
 So that this Land, like an offensive wife,
 That hath enrag'd him on, to offer strokes,
 As he is striking, holds his Infant vp,
 And hangs resolu'd Correction in the Arme,
 That was vprear'd to execution.

Hast. Besides, the King hath wasted all his Rods,
 On late Offenders, that he now doth lacke
 The very Instruments of Chastisement:
 So that his power, like to a Fangleffe Lion
 May offer, but not hold.

Bish. 'Tis very true:
 And therefore be assur'd (my good Lord Marshal)
 If we do now make our attonement well,
 Our Peace, will (like a broken Limbe vnited)
 Grow stronger, for the breaking.

Mow. Be it so:
 Heere is return'd my Lord of Westmerland.

Enter Westmerland.

West. The Prince is here at hand pleaseth your Lordship
 To meet his Grace, iust distance 'twene our Armies?

Mow. Your Grace of Yorke, in heauen's name then forward.

Bish. Before, and greet his Grace (my Lord) we come.

Enter Prince John.

John. You are wel encountred here (my cosin Mowbray)
 Good day to you, gentle Lord Archbishop,
 And so to you Lord Hastings, and to all.
 My Lord of Yorke, it better shew'd with you,
 When that your Flocke (assembled by the Bell)
 Encircled you, to heare with reuerence
 Your exposition on the holy Text,
 Then now to see you heere an Iron man
 Chearing a rowt of Rebels with your Drumme,
 Turning the Word, to Sword, and Life to death:
 That man that sits within a Monarches heart,
 And ripens in the Sunne-shine of his fauor,
 Would hee abuse the Countenance of the King,
 Alack, what Mischiefs might hee set abroad,
 In shadow of such Greatnesse? With you, Lord Bishop,
 It is euen so Who hath not heard it spoken,
 How deepe you were within the Bookes of Heauen?
 To vs, the Speaker in his Parliament;
 To vs, th' imagine Voyce of Heauen it selfe:
 The very Opener, and Intelligencer,
 Betwene the Grace, the Sanctities of Heauen,
 And our dull workings. O, who shall beleue,
 But you mis-vse the reuerence of your Place,
 Employ the Countenance, and Grace of Heauen,
 As a false Favourite doth his Princes Name,
 In deedes dis-honorable? You haue taken vp,

Vnder

Vnder the counterfeited Zeale of Heauen,
The Subjects of Heavens Substitute, my Father,
And both against the Peace of Heauen, and him,
Hauē here vp-swarmed them.

Bish. Good my Lord of Lancaster,
I am not here against your Fathers Peace:
But (as I told my Lord of Westmerland)
The Time (mis-order'd) doth in common sence
Crowd vs, and crush vs, to this monstrous Forme,
To hold our safetie vp. I sent your Grace
The parcels, and particulars of our Griefe,
The which hath been with scorne shou'd from the Court-
Whereon this Hydra-Sonne of Warre is borne,
Whose dangerous eyes may well be charm'd asleepe,
With graunt of our most iust and right desires;
And true Obedience, of this Madnesse cur'd,
Stoope tamely to the foot of Maiestie.

Mow. If not, wee readie are to trye our fortunes,
To the last man

Hast. And though wee here fall downe,
Wee haue Supplies, to second our Attempt:
If they mis-carry, theirs shall second them
And so, successe of Mischiefe shall be borne,
And Heire from Heire shall hold this Quarrell vp,
Whiles England shall haue generation

John. You are too shallow (Hastings)
Much too shallow,

To found the bottome of the after-Times.

West. Pleaseth your Grace, to answer them directly,
How farre-forth you doe like their Articles.

John. I like them all, and doe allow them well:
And swear here, by the honor of my blood,
My Fathers purposes haue bene mistooke,
And some, about him, haue too lawisly
Wrested his meaning, and Authoritie.
My Lord, these Griefes shall be with speed redrest.
Vpon my Life, they shall. If this may please you,
Discharge your Powers vnto their seuerall Counties,
As wee will ours: and here, betwene the Armies,
Let's drinke together friendly, and embrace,
That all their eyes may beare those Tokens home,
Of our restored Loue and Amitie

Bish. I take your Princely word, for these redresses.

John. I giue it you, and will maintaine my word.
And thereupon I drinke vnto your Grace

Hast. Goe Captaine, and deliuer to the Armie
This newes of Peace: let them haue pay, and part:
I know, it will well please them
High thee Captaine Exit.

Bish. To you, my Noble Lord of Westmerland.

West. I pledge your Grace
And if you knew what paines I haue bestow'd,
To breede this present Peace,
You would drinke freely: but my loue to ye,
Shall shew it selfe more openly hereafter

Bish. I doe not doubt you.

West. I am glad of it.

Health to my Lord, and gentle Cousin Mowbray.

Mow. You wish me health in very happy season,
For I am, on the sodaine, something ill.

Bish. Against ill Chances, men are euer merry,
But heavynesse fore-runnes the good cūent

West. Therefore be merry (Cooze) since sodaine sorrow
Serues to fay thus some good thing comes to morrow.

Bish. Beleeue me, I am passing light in spirit.

Mow. So much the worse, if your owne Rule be true.

John. The word of Peace is render'd: hearke how they shew't.

Mow. This had been chearefull, after Victorie.

Bish. A Peace is of the nature of a Conquest:

For then both parties nobly are subdu'd,

And neither partie looser.

John. Goe (my Lord)

And let our Army be discharged too

And good my Lord (so please you) let our Traines

March by vs, that wee may peruse the men, Exit.

Wee should haue coap'd withall.

Bish. Goe, good Lord Hastings:

And ere they be dismiss'd, let them march by. Exit.

John. I trust (Lords) wee shall lye to night together.

Enter Westmerland

Now Cousin, wherefore stands our Army still?

West. The Leaders hauing charge from you to stand,

Will not goe off, vntill they heare you speake.

John. They know their duties. Enter Hastings.

Hast. Our Army is dispers'd.

Like youthfull Siceres, vn-yoak'd, they tooke their course
East, West, North, South, or like a Schoole, broke vp,
Each hurries towards his home, and sporting place.

West. Good tidings (my Lord Hastings) for the which,
I doe arrest thee (Traytor) of high Treason.

And you Lord Arch-bishop, and you Lord Mowbray,
Of Capitall Treason, I attach you both.

Mow. Is this proceeding iust, and honorable?

West. Is your Assembly lo?

Bish. Will you thus breake your faith?

John. I pawn'd thee none:

I promis'd you redresse of these same Grievances
Whereof you did complaine; which, by mine Honor,
I will performe, with a most Christian care.

But for you (Rebels) looke to taste the due
Meet for Rebellion, and such Acts as yours.

Most shallowly did you these Armes commence,

Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence.

Strike vp our Drummes, pursue the scatter'd stray,

Heauen, and not wee, haue safely fought to day.

Some guard these Traytors to the Block of Death,

Treasons true Bed, and yelder vp of breath Exeunt

Enter Falstaffe and Colenile.

Falst. What's your Name, Sir? of what Condition are you? and of what place, I pray?

Col. I am a Knight, Sir

And my Name is Colenile of the Dale.

Falst. Well then, Colenile is your Name, a Knight is your Degree, and your Place, the Dale. Colenile shall still be your Name, a Traytor your Degree, and the Dungeon your Place, a place deepe enough: so shall you be still Colenile of the Dale.

Col. Are not you Sir John Falstaffe?

Falst. As good a man as he sir, who ere I am: doe yee yeelde sir, or shall I sweate for you? if I doe sweate, they are the drops of thy Louers, and they weep for thy death, therefore rowze vp Feare and Trembling, and do obseruance to my mercy

Col. I thinke you are Sir John Falstaffe, & in that thought yeeld me

Fal. I haue a whole Schoole of tongues in this belly of mine, and not a Tongue of them all, speakes anie other word but my name and I had but a belly of any indifference, I were simply the most actiue fellow in Europe:
my wombe, my wombe, my wombe vndoes mee. Heere comes our Generall

Enter Prince John, and Westmerland.

John The heart is past, follow no further now:
Call in the Powers, good Cousin Westmerland.
Now Falstaffe, where haue you bene all this while?
When euery thing is ended, then you come.
These tardie Tricks of yours will (on my life)
One time, or other, breake some Gallowes back.

Falst. I would bee sorry (my Lord) but it should bee thus: I neuer knew yet, but rebuke and checke was the reward of Valour. Doe you thinke me a Swallow, an Arrow, or a Bullet? Haue I, in my poore and olde Motion, the expedition of Thought? I haue speeded hither with the very extremest ynnch of possibilitie. I haue fowndred nine score and odde Postes: and heere (trauell-tainted as I am) haue, in my pure and immaculate Valour, taken Sir John Colleside of the Dale, a most furious Knight, and valorous Enemy: But what of that? hee saw mee, and yeelded: that I may iustly say with the hooke-nor'd fellow of Rome, I came, saw, and ouer-came.

John. It was more of his Courtisie, then your deseruing.

Falst. I know not: heere hee is, and heere I yeeld him: and I beseech your Grace, let it be book'd, with the rest of this dayes deedes; or I sweare, I will haue it in a particular Ballad, with mine owne Picture on the top of it (Colleside kissing my foot) To the which course, if I be enforc'd, if you do not all shew like gilt two-pences to me; and I, in the cleare Skie of Fame, o're-shine you as much as the Full Moone doth the Cynders of the Element (which shew like Pinnes-heads to her) beleeue not the Word of the Noble. therefore let mee haue right, and let desert mount.

John. Thine's too heauie to mount.

Falst. Let it shine then.

John. Thine's too thick to shine.

Falst. Let it doe something (my good Lord) that may doe me good, and call it what you will.

John. Is thy Name Colleside?

Col. It is (my Lord.)

John. A famous Rebell art thou, Colleside.

Falst. And a famous true Subiect tooke him

Col. I am (my Lord) but as my Betters are,
That led me hither: had they bene rul'd by me,
You should haue wonne them dearer then you haue.

Falst. I know not how they sold themselves, but thou like a knide fellow, gau'st thy selfe away; and I thanke thee, for thee.

Enter Westmerland.

John. Haue you left pursuit?

West. Retreat is made, and Execution stay'd.

John. Send Colleside, with his Confederates,
To Yorke, to present Execution.

Blunt, leade him hence, and see you guard him sure.

Exit with Colleside.

And now dispatch we toward the Court (my Lords)
I heare the King, my Father, is sore sicke
Our Newes shall goe before vs, to his Maiestie,
Which (Cousin) you shall beare, to comfort him:
And wee with sober speede will follow you.

Falst. My Lord, I beseech you, giue me leaue to goe through Gloucestershire: and when you come to Court, stand my good Lord, pray, in your good report.

John. Fare you well, Falstaffe. I, in my condition,
Shall better speake of you, then you deserue. Exit.

Falst. I would you had but the wit: 'twere better then your Dukedom. Good faith, this same young sober-blooded Boy doth nor loue me, nor a man cannot make him laugh: but that's no maruaile, hee drinks no Wine. There's neuer any of these demure Boyes come to any prooffe: for thinne Drinke doth so ouer-coole their blood, and making many Fish-Meales, that they fall into a kinde of Male Greene-sicknesse. and then, when they marry, they get Wenches. They are generally Foolles, and Cowards; which some of vs should be too, but for inflammation. A good Sherris-Sack hath a twofold operation in it: it ascends me into the Braine, dryes me there all the foolish, and dull, and cruddie Vapours, which enuiron it: makes it apprehensue, quicke, forgetiue, full of nimble, fierie, and delectable shapes; which deliuer'd o're to the Voyce, the Tongue, which is the Birth, becomes excellent Wit. The second propertie of your excellent Sherris, is, the warming of the Blood-which before (cold, and settled) left the Liuer white, and pale; which is the Badge of Pusillanimitie, and Cowar-dize: but the Sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards, to the parts extremes: it illuminateth the Face, which (as a Beacon) giues warning to all the rest of this little Kingdome (Man) to Arme: and then the Vitall Commoners, and in-land pettie Spirits, muster me all to their Captaine, the Heart; who great, and puffe vp with his Retinue, doth any Deed of Courage: and thus Valour comes of Sherris. So, that skill in the Weapon is nothing, without Sack (for that sets it a worke) and Learning, a meere Hoord of Gold, kept by a Deuill, till Sack commences it, and sets it in act, and vse. Hereof comes it, that Prince Harry is valiant: for the cold blood hee did naturally inherite of his Father, hee hath, like leane, sturrill, and bare Land, manured, husbanded, and tyll'd, with excellent endeaour of drinking good, and good store of fertile Sherris, that hee is become very hot, and valiant. If I had a thousand Sonnes, the first Principle
I would teach them, should be to fust weare thinne Pot-tions, and to addict themselves to Sack. Enter Bardolph.
How now Bardolph?

Bard. The Armie is discharged all, and gone.

Falst. Let them goe. He through Gloucestershire, and there will I visit Master Robert Shallow, Esquire. I haue him already tempering betweene my finger and my thombe, and shortly will I scale with him. Come away
Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Warwicke, Clarence, Gloucester.

King. Now Lords, if Heauen doth giue successefull end
To this Debate, that bleedeth at our doores,
Wee will our Youth lead on to higher Fields,
And draw no Swords, but what are sanctify'd
Our Name is address'd, our Power collected,
Our Substitutes, in absence, well inuested,
And euery thing lyes leuell to our wish;
Onely wee want a little personall Strength:
And pause vs, till these Rebels, now a-foot,
Come vnderneath the yoke of Government.

War. Both which we doubt not, but your Maiestie
Shall soone enioy.

King Hum-

King. Humphrey (my Sonne of Gloucester) where is the Prince, your Brother?

Glo. I thinke hee's gone to hunt (my Lord) at Windsor.

King. And how accompanied?

Glo. I doe not know (my Lord.)

King. Is not his Brother, Thomas of Clarence, with him?

Glo. No (my good Lord) hee is in presence heere.

Clar. What would my Lord, and Father?

King. Nothing but well to thee, Thomas of Clarence. How chance thou art not with the Prince, thy Brother?

Hee loues thee, and thou do'st neglect him (Thomas.)

Thou hast a better place in his Affection,

Then all thy Brothers: cherish it (my Boy)

And Noble Offices thou may'st effect

Of Mediation (after I am dead)

Betweene his Greatnesse, and thy other Brethrer.

Therefore omit him not: blunt not his Loue,

Nor loose the good aduantage of his Grace,

By seeming cold, or carelesse of his will.

For hee is gracious, if hee be obseru'd:

Hee hath a Teare for Pite, and a Hand

Open (as Day) for melting Charitie:

Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, hee's Flint,

As humorous as Winter, and as sudden,

As Flawes congealed in the Spring of day.

His temper therefore must be well obseru'd:

Chide him for faults, and doe it reuerently,

When you perceiue his blood enclin'd to mirth:

But being moodie, giue him Line, and scope,

Till that his passions (like a Whale on ground)

Confund themselves with working. Learne this Thomas,

And thou shalt proue a shelter to thy friends,

A Hoop of Gold, to binde thy Brothers in.

That the united Vessell of their Blood

(Mingled with Venome of Suggestion,

As force, perforce, the Age will powre it in)

Shall neuer leake, though it doe worke as strong

As Aconitum, or rash Gun-powder

Clar. I shall obserue him with all care, and loue.

King. Why art thou not at Windsor with him (Thomas)?

Clar. Hee is not there to day: hee dines in London.

King. And how accompanied? Canst thou tell that?

Clar. With Pointz, and other his continuall followers.

King. Most subiect is the fattest Soyle to Weedes:

And hee (the Noble Image of my Youth)

Is ouer-spread with them: therefore my griefe

Stretches it selfe beyond the howre of death

The blood weepes from my heart, when I doe shape

(In formes imaginarie) th'vnguided Dayes,

And rotten Times, that you shall looke vpon,

When last sleeping with my Ancestors

For when his head-strong Riot hath no Curbe,

When Rage and hot-Blood are his Counsaillers,

When Meanes and lauish Manners meete together;

Oh, with what Widses shrill his Affections flye

Towards fronting Perill, and oppos'd Decay?

War. My gracious Lord, you looke beyond him quite:

The Prince but studies his Companions,

Like a strange Tongue: wherein, to gaine the Language,

Is needfull, that the most immodest word

Be look'd vpon, and learn'd: which once attayn'd,
Your Highnesse knowes, comes to no farther vse,
But to be knowne, and hated. So, like grosse termes,
The Prince will, in the perfectnesse of time,
Cast off his followers: and their memorie
Shall as a Patterne, or a Measure, liue,
By which his Grace must mete the liues of others,
Turning past-euils to aduantages

King. 'Tis seldome, when the Bee doth leaue her Combe
In the dead Carrion.

Enter Westmerland.

Who's heere? Westmerland?

West. Health to my Soueraigne, and new happinesse
Added to that, that I am to deliuer.

Prince Isbr, your Sonne, doth kisse your Graces Hand:

Mowbray, the Bishop, Scrope, Hastings, and all,

Are brought to the Correction of your Law.

There is not now a Rebels Sword vnneath'd,

But Peace purs forth her Oliue euery where.

The manner how this Action hath bene borne,

Here (at more leysure) may your Highnesse reade,

With euery course, in his particular.

King. O Westmerland, thou art a Summer Bird,

Which euer in the haunch of Winter sings

The lising vp of day.

Enter Harcourt.

Looke, heere: more newes.

Harc. From Enemies, Heauen keepe your Maestie:

And when they stand against you, may they fall,

As those that I am come to tell you of.

The Earle Northumberland, and the Lord Bardolfe,

With a great Power of English, and of Scots,

Are by the Sherife of Yorke shire ouerthrowne:

The manner, and true order of the fight,

This Packet (please it you) contains at large.

King. And wherefore should these good newes

Make me sicke?

Will Fortune neuer come with both hands full,

But write her faire words still in foulest Letters?

Shee eyther giues a Stomack, and no Foode,

(Such are the poore, in health) or else a Feast,

And takes away the Stomack (such are the Rich,

That haue abundance, and enioy it not.)

I should reioyce now, at this happy newes,

And now my Sight fayles, and my Braine is gliddie.

O me, come neere me, now I am much ill

Glo. Comfort your Maestie.

Cl. Oh, my Royall Father.

West. My Soueraigne Lord, cheare vp your selfe, looke

vp.

War. Be patient (Princes) you doe know, these Fits

Are with his Highnesse very ordinarie,

Stand from him, giue him ayre.

Hee'll straight be well.

Clar. No, no, hee cannot long hold out. these pangs,

Th'incessant care, and labour of his Minde,

Hath wrought the Mure, that should confine it in,

So thinne, that Life lookes through, and will breake out.

Glo. The people feare me: for they doe obserue

Vnfather'd Heires, and loathly Births of Nature:

The Seasons change their manners, as the Yeere

Had found some Moneths asleepe, and leap'd them ouer.

Clar. The Rauer hath thrice slow'd, no ebbe betwene:

And the old folke (Times dotting Chronicles)

Say it did so, a little time before

That our great Grand-fire Edward sick'd, and dy'de.

EE 4

War. Speake

Where is my Lord of Warwicke?

Prin. My Lord of Warwicke.

King. Doth any name particular, belong
Vnto the Lodging, where I first did swoon'd?

War. 'Tis call'd Ierusalem, my Noble Lord.

King. Laud be to heauen :

Euen there my life must end.

It hath beene prophes'de to me many yeares,

I should not dye, but in Ierusalem :

Which (vainly) I suppos'd the Holy-Land.

But beare me to that Chamber, there Ile lye :

In that Ierusalem, shall Harry dye.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Shallow, Silence, Falstaffe, Bardolfe, Page, and Dany.

Shal. By Cocke and Pye, you shall not away to night.
What Dany, I say.

Fal. You must excuse me, M. Robert Shallow.

Shal. I will not excuse you : you shall not be excused.
Excuses shall not be admitted : there is no excuse shall serue : you shall not be excus'd.

Why Danie

Danie. Heere sir.

Shal. Dany, Dany, Dany, let me see (Dany) let me see :
William Cooke, bid him come hither. Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Dany. Martyr sir, thus : those Precepts cannot bee seru'd, and againe sir, shall we sowe the head-land with Wheate ?

Shal. With red Wheate Dany. But for William Cook : are there no yong Pigeons ?

Dany. Yes Sir.

Heere is now the Smith's note, for Shooing,
And Plough-Irons.

Shal. Let it be cast, and payde : Sir John, you shall not be excus'd.

Dany. Sir, a new linke to the Bucket must needs bee had : And Sir, doe you meane to stoppe any of Williams
Wages, about the Sacke he lost the other day, at Huckley Fayre ?

Shal. He shall answer it

Some Pigeons Dany, a couple of short-legg'd Hennes : a ioynt of Mutton, and any pretty little tunc Kickshawes ; tell William Cooke.

Dany. Doth the man of Warre, stay all night sir ?

Shal. Yes. Dany

I will vse him well. A Friend i'th Court, is better then a penny in purse. Vse his stee well Dany, for they are arrant Knaues, and will backe-bite.

Dany. No worse then they are bitten. sir : For they haue maruellous fowle linnen.

Shallow. Well conceit'd Dany about thy Businesse, Dany.

Dany. I beseech you sir,
To countenance Williams Visor of Wancot, against Cle- mentis Parker of the hill.

Shal. There are many Complaints Dany, against that Visor, that Visor is an arrant Knaue, on my knowledge.

Dany. I graunt your Worship, that he is a knaue Sir :
But yet heauen forbid Sir, but a Knaue should haue some Countenance, at his Friends request. An honest man sir, is able to speake for himselfe, when a Knaue is not. I haue seru'd your Worshipp truely sir, these eight yeares : and if I cannot once or twice in a Quarter beare out a knaue, against an honest man, I haue but a very litle credite with your Worshipp. The Knaue is mine honest Friend Sir, therefore I beseech your Worship, let him bee Countenanc'd.

Shal. Go thou,

I say he shall haue no wrong : Looke about Dany.

Where are you Sir John ? Come, off with your Boots.

Giue me your hand M. Bardolfe.

Bard. I am glad to see your Worship.

Shal. I thanke thee, with all my heart, kinde Master
Bardolfe. and welcome my tall Fellow :

Come Sir John.

Falstaffe. Ile follow you, good Master Robert Shallow.
Bardolfe, looke to our Horses. If I were law'de into Quantities, I should make foure dozen of such bearded Hermites staues, as Master Shallow. It is a wonderfull thing to see the semblable Coherence of his mens Spirits, and his : They, by obseruing of him, do beare themselves like foolish Iustices : Hee, by conuersing with them, is turn'd into a Iustice-like Seruingman. Their spirits are so married in Coniunction, with the participation of Society, that they flocke together in consent, like so many Wilde-Geese. If I had a suite to Master Shallow, I would humour his men, with the imputation of beeing neere their Master. If to his Men, I would currie with Master Shallow, that no man could better command his Seruants. It is certaine, that either wise bearing, or ignorant Carriage is caught, as men take diseases, one of another : therefore, let men take heede of their Companie
I will deuise matter enough out of this Shallow, to keepe Prince Harry in continuall Laughter, the wearing out of five Fashions (which is foure Tearmes) or two Actions, and he shall laugh with Intervallums. O it is much that a Lye (with a slight Oath) and a iest (with a sadde brow) will doe, with a Fellow, that neuer had the Ache in his shoulders. O you shall see him laugh, till his Face be like a wet Cloake, ill laid vp.

Shal. Sir John.

Falst. I come Master Shallow, I come Master Shallow
Exeunt

Scœna Secunda.

Enter the Earle of Warwicke, and the Lord Chiefe Iustice.

Warwicke. How now, my Lord Chiefe Iustice, whether away ?

Ch. Iust. How doth the King ?

Warw. Exceeding well : his Cares
Are now, all ended.

Ch. Iust. I hope, not dead.

Warw. Hee's walk'd the way of Nature,
And to our purposes, he liues no more.

Ch. Iust. I would his Majesty had call'd me with him,
The seruice, that I truly did his life,
Hath left me open to all injuries.

War.

War. Indeed I thinke the yong King loues you not.
Ch. Inst. I know he doth not, and do arme my selfe
 To welcome the condition of the Time,
 Which cannot looke more hideously vpon me,
 Then I haue drawne it in my fantastic.

Enter Iohn of Lancaster, Gloucester, and Clarence.

War. Heere come the heavy Issue of dead Harry
 O, that the liuing Harry had the temper
 Of him, the worst of these three Gentlemen:
 How many Nobles then, should hold their places,
 That must strike faile, to Spirits of wilde fort?

Ch. Inst. Alas, I feare, all will be ouer-turn'd.

Iohn. Good morrow Cofin Warwick, good morrow.

Glow. Cla. Good morrow, Cofin.

Iohn. We meet, like men, that had forgot to speake.

War. We do remember. but our Argument
 Is all too heauy, to admit much talke.

Ioh. Well. Peace be with him, that hath made vs heauy

Ch. Inst. Peace be with vs, least we be heauier.

Glow. O, good my Lord, you haue lost a friend indeed.
 And I dare sweare, you borrow not that face
 Of seeming sorrow, it is sure your owne

Iohn. Though no man be assur'd what grace to finde,
 You stand in coldest expectation
 I am the sorrier, would 'twere otherwise

Cla. Wel, you must now speake Sir Iohn Falstaffe faire,
 Which swimmes against your streame of Quality.

Ch. Inst. Sweet Princes what I did, I did in Honor,
 Led by th' Imperiall Condu& of my Soule,
 And neuer shall you see, that I will begge
 A ragged, and fore-stall'd Remission.

If Troth, and vpright Innocency fayle me,
 Ile to the King (my Master) that is dead,
 And tell him, who hath sent me after him.

War. Heere comes the Prince.

Enter Prince Henrie.

Ch. Inst. Good morrow and heauen saue your Maiesty

Prince. This new, and gorgeous Garment, Maiesty,
 Sits not so easie on me, as you thinke.

Brothers, you mixe your Sadnesse with some Feare:

This is the English, not the Turkish Court..

Not Amurrah, an Amurrah succeeds,

But Harry, Harry. Yet be sad (good Brothers)

For (to speake truth) it very well becomes you.

Sorrow, so Royally in you appeares,

That I will deeply put the Fashion on,

And weare it in my heart. Why then be sad,

But entertaine no more of it (good Brothers)

Then a ioynt burthen, laid vpon vs all

For me, by Heauen (I bid you be assur'd)

Ile be your Father, and your Brother too:

Let me but beare your Loue, Ile beare your Cares;

But weepe that Harry's dead, and so will I

But Harry liues, that shall conuert those Teares

By number, into houres of Happinesse.

Iohn, &c. We hope to other from your Maiesty.

Prin. You all looke strangely on me: and you most,

You are (I thinke) assur'd, I loue you not.

Ch. Inst. I am assur'd (if I be measur'd rightly)

Your Maiesty hath no iust cause to hate mee

Pr. No? How might a Prince of my great hopes forget
 So great Indignities you laid vpon me?

What? Rate? Rebuke? and roughly send to Prison
 Th'immediate Heire of England? Was this easie?
 May this be wash'd in Leiber, and forgotten?

Ch. Inst. I then did vte the Person of your Father:

The Image of his power, lay then in me,
 And in th' administration of his Law,
 Whiles I was busie for the Commonwealth,
 Your Highnesse pleased to forget my place,
 The Maiesty, and power of Law, and Iustice,
 The Image of the King, whom I presented,
 And strooke me in my very Seate of Iudgement:

Whereon (as an Offender to your Father),

I gaue bold way to my Authority,

And did commit you. If the deed were ill,

Be you contented, wearing now the Garland,

To haue a Sonne, set your Decrees at naught?

To plucke downe Iustice from your awefull Bench?

To trip the course of Law, and blunt the Sword

That guards the peace, and safety of your Person?

Nay more, to spurne at your most Royall Image,

And mocke your workings, in a Second body?

Question your Royall Thoughts, make the case yours:

Be now the Father, and propose a Sonne:

Heare your owne dignity so much prophan'd,

See your most dreadfull Lawes, so loosely slighted;

Behold your selfe, so by a Sonne disdain'd:

And then imagine me, taking you part,

And in your power, soft silencing your Sonne:

After this cold considerance, sentence me;

And, as you are a King, speake in your State,

What I haue done, that misbecame my place,

My person, or my Lieges Soueraigntie.

Prin. You are right Iustice, and you weigh this well:

Therefore still beare the Ballance, and the Sword:

And I do wish your Honors may encrease

Till you do lue, to see a Sonne of mine

Offend you, and obey you, as I did,

So shall I lue, to speake my Fathers words:

Happy am I, that haue a man so bold,

That dares do Iustice, on my proper Sonne;

And no lesse happy, hauing such a Sonne,

That would deliuer vp his Greatnesse so,

Into the hands of Iustice. You did commit me:

For which, I do commit into your hand,

Th' vnstained Sword that you haue vs'd to beare:

With this Remembrance, That you vse the same

With the like bold, iust, and impartiall spirit

As you haue done 'gainst me. There is my hand,

You shall be as a Father, to my Youth:

My voice shall sound, as you do prompt mine eare,

And I will stoope, and humble my Intents,

To your well-practis'd, wise Directions

And Princes all, belecue me, I beseech you:

My Father is gone wilde into his Graue,

(For in his Tombe, lye my Affections)

And with his Spirits, sadly I suruiue,

To mocke the expectation of the World;

To frustrate Prophecies, and to race out

Rotten Opinion, who hath writ me downe

After my seeming. The Tide of Blood in me,

Hath proudly flow'd in Vanity, till now.

Now doth it turne, and ebbe backe to the Sea,

Where it shall mingle with the state of Floods,

And flow henceforth in formall Maiesty

Now call we our High Court of Parliament,

And let vs choose such Limbes of Noble Counsaile,

That

That the great Body of our State may go
In equall ranke, with the best govern'd Nation,
That Warre, or Peace, or both at once may be
As things acquainted and familiar to vs;
In which you (Father) shall haue formost hand,
Our Coronation done, we will accite
(As I before remembred) all our State,
And heauen (consigning to my good intents)
No Prince, nor Peere, shall haue iust cause to say,
Heauen shorten Harries happy life, one day. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Silence, Bardolfe, Page, and Pistoll.

Shal. Nay, you shall see mine Orchard: where, in an Acher we will eate a last yeares Pippin of my owne graffing, with a dish of Carrawayes, and so forth (Come Cessin Silence, and then to bed.

Fal. You haue heere a goodly dwelling, and a rich.

Shal. Barren, barren, barren: Beggers all, beggers all
Sir Iohn: Marry, good ayre. Spread Dany, spread Danie: Well said Danie.

Falst. This Danie serues you for good vses: he is your Seruingman, and your Husband.

Shal. A good Varlet, a good Varlet, a very good Var-let, Sir Iohn: I haue drunke too much Sacke at Supper. A good Varlet. Now sit downe, now sit downe: Come Cofin.

Sil. Ah sirra (quoth-a) we shall doe nothing but eate,
and make good cheere; and praise heauen for the merrie
yeere. when flesh is cheape, and Females decre, and lustie Lads come heere, and there: so merrily, and euer among so merrily.

Fal. There's a merry heart, good M. Silence, Ile giue you a health for that anon.

Shal. Good M. Bardolfe: some wine, Danie.

Da. Sweet sir, sit: Ile be with you anon: most sweete sir, sit. Master Page, good M. Page, sit: Proface. What you want in meate, wee'l haue in drinke: but you heare, the heart's all.

Shal. Be merry M. Bardolfe, and my little Souldiour
there, be merry.

Sil. Be merry, be merry, my wife ha's all.
For women are Shrewes, both short, and tall:

'Tis merry in Hall, when Beards wagge all;
And welcome merry Shroueride. Be merry, be merry.

Fal. I did not thinke M. Silence had bin a man of this Mettle.

Sil. Who? If I haue beene merry twice and once, ere now.

Dany. There is a dish of Leather-coats for you.

Shal. Danie.

Da. Your Worship: Ile be with you straight. A cup of Wine, sir?

Sil. A Cup of Wine, that's briske and fine, & drinke vnto the Leman mine: and a merry heart lues long-a.

Fal. Well said, M. Silence.

Sil. If we shall be merry, now comes in the sweete of the night.

Fal. Health, and long life to you, M. Silence.

Sil. Fill the Cuppe, and let it come. Ile pledge you a mile to the bottome.

Shal. Honest Bardolfe, welcome: If thou want'st any thing, and wilt not call, bestrew thy heart. Welcome my little tyne theese, and welcome indeede too: Ile drinke to
M. Bardolfe, and to all the Causeroes about London.

Da. I hope to see Losidon, once ere I die.

Bar. If I might see you there, Danie.

Shal. You'l cracke a quart together? Ha, will you not
M. Bardolfe?

Bar. Yes Sir, in a pottle pot.

Shal. I thanke thee: the knaue will sticke by thee, I can assure thee that. He will not out, he is true bred.

Bar. And Ile sticke by him, sir.

Shal. Why there spoke a King: lack nothing, be merry.
Looke, who's at doore there, ho: who knockes?

Fal. Why now you haue done me right.

Sil. Doe me right, and dub me Knight, Samingo. Is't not so?

Fal. 'Tis so.

Sil. Is't so? Why then say an old man can do somewhat.

Da. If it please your Worshipp, there's one Pistoll
come from the Court with newes.

Fal. From the Court? Let him come in.

Enter Pistoll.

How now Pistoll?

Pist. Sir Iohn, saue you sir.

Fal. What winde blew you hither, Pistoll?

Pist. Not the ill winde which blowes none to good, sweet Knight: Thou art now one of the greatest men in the Realme.

Sil. Indeed, I thinke he bee, but Goodman Paffe of Barfon.

Pist. Puffed? puffed in thy teeth, most recreant Coward base. Sir Iohn, I am thy Pistoll, and thy Friend: helter skelter haue I rode to thee, and tydings do I bring, and luckie ioyes, and golden Times, and happie Newes of price.

Fal. I prethee now deliuer them, like a man of this World.

Pist. A footra for the World, and Worldlings base,
I speake of Affrica, and Golden ioyes.

Fal. O base Assyrian Knight, what is thy newes?
Let King Countha know the truth thereof.

Sil. And Robin-hood, Scarlet, and Iohn.

Pist. Shall dunghill Curres confront the Hellicons?
And shall good newes be baffel'd?

Then Pistoll lay thy head in Furies lappe.

Shal. Honest Gentleman,
I know not your breeding.

Pist. Why then Lament therefore

Shal. Giue me pardon, Sir.

If sir, you come with newes from the Court, I take it, there is but two wayes, either to vtter them, or to conceale them. I am Sir, vnder the King, in some Authority

Pist. Vnder which King?

Bezonian, speake, or dye.

Shal. Vnder King Harry.

Pist. Harry the Fourth? or Fift?

Shal. Harry the Fourth.

Pist. A footra for thine Office.

The bragging Spaniard.

Master Robert Shallow, choose what Office thou wilt
In the Land, 'tis thine. Pistol, I will double charge thee
With Dignities.

Bard. O ioyfull day:

I would not take a Knighthood for my Fortune.

Pist. What? I do bring good newes.

Fal. Carry Master Silence to bed: Master Shallow, my Lord Shallow, be what thou wilt, I am Fortunes Steward.
Get on thy Boots, wee l ride all night. Oh sweet Pistol land are at my commandment. Happie are they, which haue beene my Friendes. and woe vnto my Lord Chiefe Iustice.

Pist. Let Vultures vil'de seize on his Lungs also:

Where is the life that late I led, say they?

Why heere it is, welcome those pleasant dayes. Exeunt

and Beadles.*

Hostesse No, thou arrant knaue: I would I might dy, that I might haue thee hang'd: Thou hast drawne my shoulder out of ioynt.

Off. The Constables haue deliuer'd her ouer to mee:

her. There hath beene a man or two (lately) kill'd about her.

Dol Nut-hooke, nut-hooke, you Lye. Come on, Ile tell thee what, thou damnd Tripe-visag'd Rascall, if the Childe I now go with, do miscarrie, thou had'st better thou had'st strooke thy Mother, thou Paper-fac'd Villaine.

Host. O that Sir John were come, hee would make this a bloody day to some body But I would the Fruite of her Wombe might miscarry.

Officer. If it do, you shall haue a dozen of Cushions again, you haue but eleuen now Come, I charge you both go with me: for the man is dead, that you and Pis-toll beate among you

Dol. Ile tell thee what, thou thin man in a Censor; I will haue you as soundly swindg'd for this, you blew-Bottel'd Rogue: you filthy famish'd Correctioner, if you be not swing'd, Ile forswear halfe Kirtles

Off. Come, come, you shee-Knight-arrant, come.

Host. O, that right should thus o recome might Wel of sufferance, comes ease.

Dol. Come you Rogue, come:
Bring me to a Iustice.

Host. Yes, come you staru'd Blood-hound,?

Dol. Goodman death, Goodman Bones.

Host. Thou Anatomy, thou.

Dol. Come you thinne Thing.

Come you Rascall

Off. Very well.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter two Groomes.

1. Groo. More Rushes, more Rushes.

2. Groo. The Trumpets haue sounded twice.

1. Groo. It will be two of the Clocke, ere they come from the Coronation. Exit Groo.

Enter Falstaffe, Shallow, Pistol, Bardolfe, and Page.

Falstaffe. Stand heere by me, M. Robert Shallow, I will make the King do you Grace. I will leere vpon him, as he comes by. and do but marke the countenance that hee will giue me.

Pistol. Blesse thy Lungs, good Knight.

Falst. Come heere Pistol, stand behind me O if I had had time to haue made new Liueries, I would haue bestowed the thousand pound I borrowed of you. But it is bo matter, this poore shew doth better this doth inferre
the zeale I had to see him.

Shal. It doth so.

Falst. It shewes my earnestnesse in affection,

Pist. It doth so.

Fal. My deuotion.

Pist. It doth, it doth, it doth,

Fal. As it were, to ride day and night,
And not to deliberate, not to remember,
Not to haue patience to shifte me.

Shal. It is most certaine.

Fal. But to stand stained with Trauaile, and sweating with desire to see him, thinking of nothing else, putting all assayres in obliuion, as if there were nothing els to bee done, but to see him

Pist. 'Tis semper idem for obscure hoc nihil est. 'Tis all in euery part.

Shal. 'Tis so indeed.

Pist. My Knight, I will enflame thy Noble Liuer, and make thee rage. Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts is in base Durance, and contagious prison: Hall'd thither by most Mechanicall and durty hand. Rowze vppe Reuenge from Ebon den, with fell Aleco's Snake, for Dol is in. Pistol, speakes nought but troth.

Fal. I will deliuer her.

Pistol. There roar'd the Sea: and Trumpet Clangour sounds.

*The Trumpets sound. Enter King Henrie the Fifth, Brothers, Lord Chiefe
Iustice.*

Falst. Saue thy Grace, King Hall, my Royall Hall.

Pist. The heauens thee guard, and keepe, most royall Impe of Fame.

Fal. 'Saue thee my sweet Boy.

King. My Lord Chiefe Iustice, speake to that vaine
man.

Ch. Iust. Haue you your wits?
Know you what 'tis you speake?

Falst. My King, my loue; I speake to thee, imy heart.

King. I know thee not, old man Fall to thy Prayers:
How ill white haire become a Foole, and Iester?

I haue

I haue long dream'd of such a kinde of man,
 So surfeit-swell'd, so old, and so prophane :
 But being awake, I do despise my dreame
 Make lesse thy body (hence) and more thy Grace,
 Leauē gourmandizing ; Know the Graue doth gape
 For thee, thrice wider then for other men.
 Reply not to me, with a Foole-borne Iest,
 Presume not, that I am the thing I was,
 For heauen doth know (so shall the world perceiue)
 That I haue turn'd away my former Selfe,
 So will I those that kept me Companie.
 When thou dost heare I am, as I haue bin,
 Approach me, and thou shalt be as thou was't
 The Tutor and the Feeder of my Riots :
 Till then, I banish thee, on paine of death,
 As I haue done the rest of my Misleaders,
 Not to come neere our Person, by ten mile.
 For competence of life, I will allow you,
 That lacke of meanes enforce you not to euill :
 And as we heare you do reforme your selues,
 We will according to your strength, and qualities,
 Giue you aduancement. Be it your charge (my Lord)
 To see perform'd the tenure of our word. Set on.

Exit King

Fal. Master Shallow, I owe you a thousand pound

Shal. I marry Sir Iohn, which I beseech you to let me haue home with me.

Fal. That can hardly be, M Shallow, do not you grieue at this. I shall be sent for in priuate to him : Looke you, he must seeme thus to the world: feare not your aduancement. I will be the man yet, that shall make you great.

Shal. I cannot well perceiue how, vnlesse you should giue me your Doublet, and stuffe me out with Straw. I beseech you, good Sir Iohn, let mee haue siue hundred of my thousand.

Fal. Sir, I will be as good as my word This that you heard, was but a colour.

Shall. A colour I feare, that you will dye, in Sir Iohn.

Fal. Feare no colours, go with me to dinner : Come Lieutenant Pistol, come Bardolfe, I shall be sent for soone at night.

Ch. Inst. Go carry Sir Iohn Falstaffe to the Fleete, Take all his Company along with him.

Fal. My Lord, my Lord.

Ch. Inst. I cannot now speake, I will heare you soone: Take them away.

Pist. Sis fortuna me tormenta, spera me contenta.

Exit. Manet Lancaster and Chiefe Iustice.

Iohn. I like this faire proceeding of the Kings : He hath intent his wonted Followers Shall all be very well provided for :
 But all are banisht, till their conuersations
 Appaere more wise, and modest to the world.

Ch. Inst. And so they are.

Iohn. The King hath call'd his Parliamēt,
 My Lord.

Ch. Inst. He hath.

Iohn. I will lay oddes, that ere this yeere expire,
 We beare our Ciuill Swords, and Native fire
 As farre as France. I heare a Bird so sing,
 Whose Musicke (to my thinking) pleas'd the King.
 Come, will you hence ?

Exeunt

FINIS.

EPILOGVE.

FIRST, my Feare : then, my Curtsie : last, my Speech.
My Feare, is your Displeasure : My Curtsie, my Dutie :
And my speech, to Begge your Pardons. If you looke for a good speech now, you vndoe me. For what I haue to say, is of mine owne making : and what (indeed) I should say, will (I doubt) prooue mine owne mar ring. But to the Purpose, and so to the Venture. Be it knowne to you (as it is very well) I was lately heere in the end of a displeasing Play, to pray your Patience for it, and to promise you a Better : I did meane (indeede) to pay you with this, which if (like an ill Venture) it come vnluckily home, I breake; and you, my gentle Creditors lose. Heere I promist you I would be, and heere I commit my Bodie to your Mercies : Bate me some, and I will pay you some, and (as most Debtors do) promise you infinitely.

If my Tongue cannot entreate you to acquit me : will you command me to vse my Legges ? And yet that were but light payment, to Dance out of your debt. But a good Conscience, will make any possible satisfaction, and so will I. All the Gentlewomen heere, haue forgiuen me, if the Gentlemen will not, then the Gentlemen do not agree with the Gentlewomen, which was neuer seene before, in such an Assembly

One word more, I beseech you : if you be not too much cloyed with Fat Meate, our humble Author will continue the Story (with Sir Iohn in it) and make you merry, with faire Katherine of France : where (for any thing I know) Fal-staffe shall dye of a sweat, vntlesse already he be killd with your hard Opinions :
For Old-Castle dyed a Martyr, and this is not the man. My Tongue is wearie, when my Legs are too, I will bid you good night, and so kneele downe before you :
But (indeed) to pray for the Queene.

The Life of Henry the Fift.

Enter Prologue.

O For a Muse of Fire, that would ascend
The brightest Heauen of Invention
A Kingdome for a Stage, Princes to Act,
And Monarchs to behold the swelling Scene.
Then should the Warlike Harry, like himselfe,
Assume the Port of Mars, and at his beeles
(Least in, like Hounds) should Famine, Sword, and Fire
Crouch for employment. But pardon, Gentles all
The flat unraysed Spirits, that haue dar'd,
On this unworthy Scaffold, to bring forth
So great an Obiect. Can this Cock-Pit hold
The vastie fields of France? Or may we cramme
Within this Woodden O, the very Cakes
That did affright the Ayre at Agincourt?
O pardon since a crooked Figure may
Attest in little place a Million,
And let vs, Cyphers to this great Accompt,

On your imaginarie Forces worke.
Suppose within the Girdle of these Walls
Are now confin'd two mightie Monarchies,
Whose high, up-reared, and abutting Fronts,
The perillous narrow Ocean parts asunder
Peerce out our imperfections with your thoughts
Into a thousand parts diuide one Man,
And make imaginarie Puissance
Thinke when we talke of Horses, that you see them
Printing their proud Hoofes i'th' receiuing Earth.
For 'tis your thoughts that now must deck our Kings,
Carry them here and there. Jumping o're Times;
Turning th' accomplishment of many yeeres
Into an Howre-glasse: for the which supplie,
Admit me Chorus to this Historie;
Who Prologue-like, your humble patience pray,
Gently to heare, kindly to iudge our Play

Exit.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter the two Bishops of Canterbury and Ely.

Bish. Cant.

MY Lord, I tell you, that selfe Bill is vrg'd,
Which in th' eleueth yere of y<sup>e</sup> last Kings reign
Was like, and had indeed against vs past,
But that the scrambling and vnquiet time
Did push it out of farther question.

Bish. Ely. But how my Lord shall we resist it now?

Bish. Cant. It must be thought on, if it passe against vs,
We loose the better halfe of our Possession.

For all the Temporall Lands, which men deuout
By Testament haue giuen to the Church,
Would they strip from vs, being valu'd thus,
As much as would maintaine, to the Kings honor,
Full fiftene Earles, and fiftene hundred Knights,
Six thousand and two hundred good Esquires.

And to reliefe of Lazars, and weak age
Of indigent faint Soules, past corporall toyle,
A hundred Almes-houses, right well supply'd
And to the Coffers of the King beside,
A thousand pounds by th' yeere This runs the Bill.

Bish. Ely. This would drinke deepe

Bish. Cant. I would drinke the Cup and all.

Bish. Ely. But what preuention?

Bish. Cant. The King is full of grace, and faire regard.

Bish. Ely. And a true louer of the holy Church.

Bish. Cant. The courses of his youth promis'd it not.
The breath no sooner left his Fathers body,
But that his wildnesse, mortify'd in him,
Seem'd to dye too yea, at that very moment,
Consideration like an Angell came,
And whipt th'offending Adam out of him;
Leauing his body as a Paradise,
T'inclopes and containe Celestiall Spirits
Neuer was such a sodaine Scholler made:
Neuer came Reformation in a Flood,
With such a heady currance scowering faults:
Nor neuer Hydra-headed Wilfulnesse
So soone did loose his Seat; and all at once;
As in this King.

Bish. Ely. We are blessed in the Change.

Bish. Cant. Heare him but reason in Diuinitie;
And all-admiring, with an inward with
You would desire the King were made a Prelate.
Heare him debate of Common-wealth Affaires;
You would say, it hath been all in all his study:
List his discourse of Warre; and you shall heare
A fearefull Battaille rendred you in Musique.

h

Turne

Turn him to any Cause of Pollicy,
The Gordian Knot of it he will vnloose,
Familiar as his Garter: that when he speaks,
The Ayre, a Charter'd Libertine, is still,
And the mute Wonder lurkes in mens eares,
To steale his sweet and hoppy'd Sentences:
So that the Art and Practique part of Life,
Must be the Mistresse to this Theorique.
Which is a wonder how his Grace should gleane it,
Since his addition was to Courtes vaine,
His Companies vnletter'd, rude, and shallow,
His Houres fill'd vp with Ryots, Banquets, Sports:
And neuer noted in him any studie,
Any retyrement, any sequestration,
From open Haunts and Popularitie.

B. Ely. The Strawberry growes vnderneath the Nettle,
And wholesome Berryes thriue and ripen best,
Neighbour'd by Fruite of baser qualitie:
And so the Prince obscur'd his Contemplation
Vnder the Veyle of Wildnesse, which (no doubt)
Grew like the Summer Grasse, fastest by Night,
Vnseene, yet cressie in his facultie.

B. Cant. It must be so; for Miracles are ceast:
And therefore we must needs admit the meanes,
How things are perfected.

B. Ely. But my good Lord:
How now for mitigation of this Bill,
Vrg'd by the Commons? doth his Maieslie
Incline to it, or no?

B. Cant. He seemes indifferent:
Or rather swaying more vpon our part,
Then cherishing th'exhibitors against vs:
For I haue made an offer to his Maieslie,
Vpon our Spirituall Conuocation,
And in regard of Causes now in hand,
Which I haue open'd to his Grace at large,
As touching France, to giue a greater Summe,
Then euer at one time the Clergie yet
Did to his Predecessors part withall.

B. Ely. How did this offer seeme receiu'd, my Lord?
B. Cant. With good acceptance of his Maieslie:
Saue that there was not time enough to heare,
As I perceiu'd his Grace would faine haue done,
The feueralls and vnhidden passages
Of his true Tides to some certaine Dukedomes,
And generally, to the Crowne and Seat of France,
Deriu'd from Edward, his great Grandfather.

B. Ely. What was th'impediment that broke this off?

B. Cant. The French Ambassador vpon that instant
Craw'd audience; and the howre I thinke is come,
To giue him hearing: Is it foure a Clock?

B. Ely. It is.

B. Cant. Then goe we in, to know his Embassie:
Which I could with a ready guesse declare,
Before the Frenchman speake a word of it.

B. Ely. Ile wait vpon you, and I long to heare it.
Exeunt.

Enter the King, Humfrey, Bedford, Clarence, Warwick, Westmerland, and Exeter.

King. Where is my gracious Lord of Canterbury?
Exeter. Not here in presence.

King. Send for him, good Vnckle.
Westm. Shall we call in th'Ambassador, my Liege?

King. Not yet, my Cousin: we would be resolu'd,
Before we heare him, of some things of weight,
That taske our thoughts, concerning vs and France.

Enter the Bishops.

B. Cant. God and his Angels guard your sacred Throne,
And make you long become it.

King. Sure we thanke you
My learned Lord, we pray you to proceed,
And iustly and religiously vnfold,
Why the Law Salike, that they haue in France,
Or should or should not barre vs in our Clayme:
And God forbid, my deare and faithfull Lord,
That you should fashion, wrest, or bow your reading,
Or nicely charge your vnderstanding Soule,
With opening Titles miscreate, whose right
Sures not in native colours with the truth:
For God doth know, how many now in health,
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reuerence shall incite vs to.

Therefore take heed how you impawne our Person,
How you awake our sleeping Sword of Warre;
We charge you in the Name of God take heed:
For neuer two such Kingdomes did contend,
Without much fall of blood, whose guiltlesse drops
Are euery one, a Woe, a sore Complaint,
Gainst him, whose wrongs giues edge vnto the Swords,
That makes such waste in briefe mortalitie.
Vnder this Coniuration, speake my Lord:
For we will heare, note, and beleue in heart,
That what you speake, is in your Conscience washt,
As pure as sinne with Baptisme.

B. Cant. Then beare me gracious Soueraign, & you Peers,
That owe your selues, your liues, and seruices,
To this Imperiaall Throne. There is no barre
To make against your Highnesse Clayme to France,
But this which they produce from Pharamond,
In terram Salicam Mulieres ne succedant,

No Woman shall succeed in Salike Land:
Which Salike Land, the French vnjustly gloze
To be the Realme of France, and Pharamond
The founder of this Law, and Female Barre.
Yet their owne Authors faithfully affirme,
That the Land Salike is in Germanie,
Betwene the Flouds of Sala and of Elue
Where Charles the Great hauing subdu'd the Saxons,
There left behind and settled certaine French:
Who holding in disdaine the German Women,
For some dishonest manners of their life,
Establisht then this Law; to wit, No Female
Should be Inheritrix in Salike Land.

Which Salike (as I said) twixt Elue and Sala,
Is at this day in Germanie, call'd Meisen.
Then doth it well appeare, the Salike Law
Was not deuised for the Realme of France:
Nor did the French possesse the Salike Land,
Vntill foure hundred one and twentie yeeres

After defunction of King Pharamond,
Idly suppos'd the founder of this Law,
Who died within the yeere of our Redemption,
Foure hundred twentie six. and Charles the Great
Subdu'd the Saxons, and did seat the French
Beyond the Riuer Sala, in the yeere
Eight hundred five. Besides, their Writers say,
King Pepin, which depose'd Childerike,
Did as Heire Generall, being defended
Of Blithild, which was Daughter to King Clothair,
Make Clayme and Title to the Crowne of France.
Hugh Capet also, who vsurpt the Crowne

Of Charles the Duke of Lorraine, sole Heire male
Of the true Line and Stock of Charles the Great:
To find his Title with some shewes of truth,
Though in pure truth it was corrupt and naught,
Concey'd himselfe as th'Heire to th' Lady Langars,
Daughter to Charlemaine, who was the Sonne
To Lewes the Emperour, and Lewes the Sonne
Of Charles the Great: also King Lewes the Tenth,
Who was sole Heire to the Visurper Capet,
Could not keepe quiet in his conscience,
Wearing the Crowne of France, till satisfied,
That faire Queene Isabel, his Grandmother,
Was Lineall of the Lady Ermengare,
Daughter to Charles the foresaid Duke of Lorraine:
By the which Marriage, the Lyne of Charles the Great
Was re-ynited to the Crowne of France
So, that as cleare as is the Summers Sunne,
King Pepins Title, and Hugh Capets Clayme,
King Lewes his satisfaction, all appeare
To hold in Right and Title of the Female
So doe the Kings of France vnto this day.
Howbeit, they would hold vp this Salique Law,
To barre your Highnesse claying from the Female,
And rather chuse to hide them in a Net,
Then amply to imbarre their crooked Titles,
Visurpt from you and your Progenitors.

King May I with right and conscience make this claim?

Bish. Cant. The sinne vpon my head, dread Soueraigne

For in the Booke of Numbers is it writ,

When the man dyes, let the Inheritance

Descend vnto the Daughter. Gracious Lord,

Stand for your owne, vnwind your bloody Flagge,

Looke back into your mightie Ancestors:

Goe my dread Lord, to your great Grandfathers Tombe,

From whom you clayme, inuoke his Warlike Spirit,

And your Great Vnckles, Edward the Black Prince,

Who on the French ground play'd a Tragedie,

Making defeat on the full Power of France.

Whiles his most mightie Father on a Hill

Stood smiling, to behold his Lyons Whelp

Forrage in blood of French Nobilitie.

O Noble English, that could entertaine

With halfe their Forces, the full pride of France,

And let another halfe stand laughing by,

All out of worke, and cold for action.

Bish. Awake remembrance of these valiant dead,

And with your puissant Arme renew their Feats;

You are their Heire, you sit vpon their Throne.

The Blood and Courage that renowned them,

Runs in your Vaines and my thrice-puissant Liege

Is in the very May-Morne of his Youth,

Ripe for Exploits and mightie Enterprises.

Exe. Your Brother Kings and Monarchs of the Earth

Doe all expect, that you should rowle your selfe,

As did the former Lyons of your Blood. (might,

West. They know your Grace hath cause, and means, and

So hath your Highnesse neuer King of England

Had Nobles richer, and more loyall Subiects,

Whose hearts haue left their bodies here in England,

And lye pauillion'd in the fields of France.

Bish. Cant. O let their bodies follow my deare Liege

With Bloods, and Sword and Fire, to win your Right:

In ayde whereof, we of the Spiritualltie

Will raise your Highnesse such a mightie Summe,

As neuer did the Clergie at one time

Bring in to any of your Ancestors.

King. We must not onely arme t'inuade the French,
But lay downe our proportions, to defend
Against the Scot, who will make roade vpon vs,
With all aduantages.

Bish. Cant. They of those Marches, gracious Soueraigne, Shall be a Wall sufficient to defend
Our in-land from the pilsering Borderers.

King. We do not meane the courting snatchers onely,
But feare the maine intendment of the Scot,
Who hath been still a giddy neighbour to vs.
For you shall reade, that my great Grandfather
Neuer went with his forces into France,
But that the Scot, on his vnfurnisht Kingdome,
Came pouring like the Tyde into a breach,
With ample and brim fulnesse of his force,
Galling the gleaned Land with hot Assayes,
Girding with grievous siege, Castles and Townes:
That England being emptie of defence,
Hath shooke and trembled at th'ill neighbourhood.

B. Cant. She hath bin the more fear'd the harm'd, my Liege.

For heare her but exampl'd by her selfe,

When all her Cheualrie hath been in France,

And shee a mourning Widdow of her Nobles,

Shee hath her selfe not onely well defended,

But taken and impounded as a Stray,

The King of Scots whom shee did send to France,

To kill King Edwards fame with prisoner Kings,

And make their Chronicle as rich with prayse,

As is the Owle and bottom of the Sea

With sunken Wrack, and sun-lesse Treasures.

Bish. Ely. But there's a saying very old and true,

If that you will France win, then with Scotland first begine.

For once the Eagle (England) being in prey,

To her vnguarded Nest, the Weazell (Scot)

Comes sneaking, and so sucks her Princely Egges,

Playing the Mouse in absence of the Cat,

To tame and hauocke more then she can eate

Exet. It follows then, the Cat must stay at home,

Yet that is but a crush'd necessity,

Since we haue lockes to safe-gard necessities,

And pretty traps to catch the petty theeues.

While that the Armed hand doth fight abroad,

Th'aduised head defends it selfe at home.

For Gouvernaient, though high, and low, and lower,

Put into parts, doth keepe in one consent,

Congreeing in a full and natural close,

Like Musicke

Cant. Therefore doth heauen diuide

The state of man in diuers functions,

Setting endeavour in continual motion:

To which is fixed as an ayne or butt,

Obedience. for so worke the Hony Bees,

Creatures that by a rule in Nature teach

The Act of Order to a peopled Kingdome.

They haue a King, and Officers of sorts,

Where some like Magistrates correct at home:

Others, like Merchants venter Trade abroad:

Others, like Souldiers armed in their stings,

Make boote vpon the Summers Veluer budde:

Which pillage, they with merry march bring home:

To the Tent-royal of their Emperour:

Who busied in his Maiesties surueyes

The singing Masons building roofes of Gold,

The ciuil Citizens kneading vp the hony;

The poore Mechanicke Porters, crowding in

Their heauy burthens at his narrow gate:

The Life of Henry the Fifth.

The sad-ey'd Iustice with his forty hamme,
Delivering ore to Executors pale
The lazie yawning Drone: I his inferre,
That many things hauing full reference
To one consent, may worke contrariouly,
As many Arrows loosed severall wayes.
Come to one marke: as many wayes meet in one towne,
As many fresh streames meet in one salt sea;
As many Lynes close in the Dial's center:
So may a thousand actions once a foote,
And in one purpose, and be all well borne
Without defeat. Therefore to France, my Liege,
Diuide your happy England into foure,
Whereof, take you one quarter into France,
And you withall shall make all Gallia shake.
If we with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our owne doores from the dogge,
Let vs be worried, and our Nation lose
The name of hardinesse and policie.

King. Call in the Messengers sent from the Dolphin.
Now are we well resolu'd, and by Gods helpe
And yours, the noble finewes of our power,
France being ours, wee'l bend it to our Awe,
Or breake it all to peeces. Or there wee'l sit, (Ruling in large and ample Emperie,
Ore France, and all her (almost) Kingly Dukedomes)
Or lay these bones in an vnworthy Vrne,
Tombleffe, with no remembrance ouer them
Either our History shall with full mouth
Speake freely of our Acts, or else our graue
Like Turkish mute, shall haue a tonguelesse mouth,
Not worshipt with a waxen Epitaph.

Enter Ambassadors of France.
Now are we well prepar'd to know the pleasure
Of our faire Cousin Dolphin. for we heare,
Your greeting is from him, not from the King.
Amb. May't please your Maiestie to giue vs leaue
Freely to render what we haue in charge.

Or shall we sparingly shew you farre off
The Dolphins meaning, and our Embasie.
King. We are no Tyrant, but a Christian King,
Vnto whose grace our passion is as subiect
As is our wretches settred in our prisons,
Therefore with franke and with vncurbed plainnesse,
Tell vs the Dolphins minde.

Amb. Thus than in few:
Your Highnesse lately sending into France,
Did claime some certaine Dukedomes, in the right
Of your great Predecessor, King Edward the third.
In answer of which claime, the Prince our Master
Sayes, that you fauour too much of your youth,
And bids you be aduis'd: There's nought in France,
That can be with a numble Galliard wonne.
You cannot reuell into Dukedomes there.
He therefore sends you meeter for your spirit
This Tun of Treasure; and in lieu of this,
Desires you let the dukedomes that you claime
Heare no more of you. Thus the Dolphin speakes

King. What Treasure Vncle?

Exe. Tennis balles, my Liege.
King. We are glad the Dolphin is so pleasant with vs,
His Present, and your paines we thanke you for:
When we haue matcht our Rackets to these Balles,
We will in France (by Gods grace) play a set,
Shall strike his fathers Crowne into the hazard.
Tell him, he hath made a match with such a Wrangler,

That all the Courts of France, will be disturb'd
With Chaces. And we vnderstand him well,
How he comes o' vs with our wilder dayes,
Not measuring what vs, we made of them.
We neuer valet d this poore seate of England,
And therefore lining hence, did giue our selfe
To barbarous license: As 'tis euer common,
That men are merriest, when they are from home.
But tell the Dolphin, I will keepe my State,
Belike a King, and shew my sayle of Greatnesse,
When I do rowse me in my Throne of France,
For that I haue layd by my Maiestie,
And plodded like a man for working dayes:
But I will rise there with so full a glorie,
That I will dazle all the eyes of France,
Yes strike the Dolphin blinde to looke on vs,
And tell the pleasant Prince, this Mocke of his Hath turn'd his balles to Gun-stones, and his soule
Shall stand fore charged; for the wastefull vengeance
That shall flye with them: for many a thousand widow
Shall this his Mocke, mocke out of their dear husbands
Mocke mothers from their sonnes, mock Castles downe
And some are yet yngotten and vnborne,
That shal haue cause to curse the Dolphins score,
But this lyes all within the wil of God,
To whom I do appeale, and in whose name
Tel you the Dolphin, I am camming on,
To venge me as I may, and to put forth
My rightfull hand in a wel-hallow'd cause.
So get you hence in peace: And tell the Dolphin,
His Iest will fauour but of shallow wit,
When thousands weepe more then did laugh at it.
Conuey them with safe conduct. Fare you well,
Exeunt Ambassadors.

Exe. This was a merry Message.
King. We hope to make the Sender blush at it:
Therefore, my Lords, omit no happy howre,
That may giue furth'rance to our Expedition:
For we haue now no thought in vs but France,
Saue those to God, that runne before our warres
Therefore let our proportions for these warres
Be soone collected, and all things thought vpon,
That may with reasonable swiftnesse adde
More Feathers to our Wings. for God before,
Wee'l chide this Dolphin at his fathers doore.
Therefore let every man now taske his thought,
That this faire Action may on foot be brought. Exeunt

Flourish. Enter Chorus.
Now all the Youth of England are on fire,
And silken Dalliance in the Wardrobe lyes.
Now thriue the Armors, and Honors thought
Reignes solely in the breast of every man
They sell the Pasture now, to buy the Horse;
Following the Mirror of all Christian Kings,
With winged heeles, as English Merchants,
For now sits Expectation in the Ayre,
And hides a Sword, from Hilts vnto the Point,
With Crowns Imperiall, Crownes and Coronets,
Promis'd to Harry, and his followers.
The French aduis'd by good intelligence
Of this most dreadfull preparation,
Shake in their feare, and with pale Pollicy
Secke to diuert the English purposes.
O England. Modell to thy inward Greatnesse,
Like little Body with a mightie Heart:

What

What mightst thou do, that honour would thee do,
Were all thy children kinde and naturall:
But see, thy fault France hath in thee found out,
A nest of hollow bosomes, which he fills
With treacherous Crownes, and three corrupted men
One, Richard Earle of Cambridge, and the second
Henry Lord Scroope of Malham, and the third
Sir Thomas Grey Knight of Northumberland,
Have for the Gilt of France (O guilt indeed)
Confirm'd Conspiracy with fearefull France,
And by their hands, this grace of Kings must dye.
If Hell and Treason hold their promises,
Ere he take ship for France; and in Southampton
Linger your patience on, and wee'll digest
Th'abuse of distance, force a play.
The summe is payde, the Traitors are agreed,
The King is set from London, and the Scene
Is now transported (Gentles) to Southampton,
There is the Play-house now, there must you sit,
And thence to France shall we convey you safe,
And bring you backe. Charming the narrow seas
To give you gentle Passage for it we may,
Wee'll not offend one stomacke with our Play
But till the King come forth, and not till then,
Vnto Southampton do we shift our Scene.

Exit

Enter Corporall Nym, and Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. Well met Corporall Nym

Nym. Good morrow Lieutenant Bardolfe.

Bar. What, are Ancient Pistoll and you friends yet?

Nym. For my part, I care not. I say little, but when time shall serue, there shall be smiles, but that shall be as it may. I dare not fight, but I will winke and holde out mine yron: it is a simple one, but what though? It will toffe Cheefe, and it will endure cold, as another mans sword will: and there's an end.

Bar. I will bestow a breakfast to make you friends, and wee'll bee all three sworne brothers to France. Let's be so good Corporall Nym.

Nym. Faith, I will lue so long as I may, that's the certaine of it: and when I cannot lue any longer, I will doe as I may. That is my rest, that is the rendezous of it.

Bar. It is certaine Corporall, that he is married to Nell Quickly, and certainly she did you wrong, for you were troth-plight to her.

Nym. I cannot tell, Things must be as they may men may sleepe, and they may haue their throats about them at that time, and some say, kniues haue edges. It must be as it may, though patience be a tyred name, yet shee will plodde, there must be Conclusions, well, I cannot tell.

Enter Pistoll, & Quickly

Bar. Heere comes Ancient Pistoll and his wife good Corporall be patient heere. How now mine Hoste Pistoll?

Pist. Bafe Tyke, cal'st thou mee Hoste, now by this hand I sweare I scorne the terme. nor shall my Nel keep Lodgers.

Host. No by my troth, nor long. For we cannot lodge and board a dozen or fourtene Gentlewomen that lue honestly by the pricke of their Needles, but it will bee thought we keepe a Bawdy-house straight. O welladay Lady, if he be not heerne now, we shall see wilful adultery and murder committed.

Bar. Good Lieutenant, good Corporall offet nothing
heere

Nym. Pist.

Pist. Pist for thee, Island dogge: thou prickeard cur of Island.

Host. Good Corporall Nym shew thy valor, and put vp your sword.

Nym. Will you shogge off? I would haue you solus

Pist. Solus, egregious dog? O Viper vile; The solus in thy most meruailous face, the solus in thy teeth, and in thy throate, and in thy hatefull Lungs, yea in thy Maw perdy, and which is worse, within thy nastie mouth. I do retort the solus in thy bowels, for I can take, and Pistols cocke is vp, and flashing fire will follow

Nym. I am not Barbason, you cannot coniure mee: I haue an humor to knocke you indifferently well. If you grow fowle with me Pistoll, I will scoure you with my Rapier, as I may, in fayre tearmes. If you would walke off, I would pricke your guts a little in good tearmes, as I may, and that's the humor of it

Pist. O Braggard vile, and damned furious wight,
The Graue doth gape, and doting death is neere,
Therefore exhale

Bar. Heare me, heare me what I say. Hee that strikes the first stroake, Ile run him vp to the hilt, as I am a soldier.

Pist. An oath of mickle might, and fury shall abate.
Giue me thy fist, thy fore-foote to me giue. Thy spiritres are most tall

Nym. I will cut thy throate one time or other in faire termes, that is the humor of it.

Pistoll. Couple a gorge, that is the word. I defiethee again. O hound of Crete, think'st thou my spouse to get?
No, to the spittle goe, and from the Poudring tub of infamy, fetch forth the Lazar Kite of Cressids kinde, Doll
Tear-sheeete, she by rance, and her espouite I haue, and i will hold the Quondam Quenchly for the onely shee: and Panca, there's enough to go to.

Enter the Boy.

Boy. Mine Host Pistoll, you must come to my Mayster, and your Hostesse. He is very sicke, & would to bed.
Good Bardolfe, put thy face betwene his sheets, and do the Office of a Warming-pan. Faith, he's very ill.

Bard. Away you Rogue.

Host. By my troth he'll yeeld the Crow a pudding one of these dayes the King has kild his heart. Good Husband come home presently.

Exit

Bar. Come, shall I make you two friends. Wee must to France together why the duel should we keep kniues to cut one anothers throats?

Pist. Let floods ore-swell, and fiends for food howle on.

Nym. You'll pay me the eight shillings I won of you at Betting?

Pist. Bafe is the Slaue that payes.

Nym. That now I will haue that's the humor of it.

Pist. As manhood shal compound with home. Drum

Bard. By this sword. hee that makes the first thrust, Ile kill him. By this sword, I wil.

Pist. Sword is an Oath, & Oaths must haue their course

Bar. Corporall Nym, & thou wilt be friends be friends, and thou wilt not, why then be enemies with me to pre-thee put vp.

Pist. A Noble shalt thou haue, and present pay, and Liquor likewise will I giue to thee, and friendshippe shall combyne, and brotherhood. Ile lue by Nymme, &
Nymme shall lue by me, is not this iust? For I shal Sur-ler be vnto the Campe, and profits will accrue. Giue mee thy hand.

h 3

Nym.

Nym. I shall haue my Noble?

Pist. In cash, most iustly payd.

Nym. Well, then that the humor of't.

Enter Hostesse.

Host. As euer you come of women, come in quickly to sir John. A poore heart, hee is so shak'd of a burning quotidian Tertian, that it is most lamentable to behold. Sweet men, come to him

Nym. The King hath run bad humors on the Knight, that's the euen of it.

Pist. Nym, thou hast spok't the right, his heart is fractured and corroborate.

Nym. The King is a good King, but it must bee as it may: he passes some humors, and carceres.

Pist. Let vs condole the Knight, for (Lambekins) we will lue.

Enter Exeter, Bedford, & Westmerland.

Bed. Fore God his Grace is bold to trust these traitors

Exe. They shall be apprehended by and by.

West. How smooth and euen they do beare themselves, As if allegiance in their bosomes face Crowned with faith, and constant loyalty.

Bed. The King hath none of all that they intend, By interception, which they dreame not of.

Exe. Nay, but the man that was his bedfellow, Whom he hath dull'd and cloy'd with gracious fauours; That he should for a forraigne purse, so sell His Soueraignes life to death and treachery.

Sound Trumpets.

Enter the King, Scroope, Cambridge, and Gray.

King. Now sits the winde faire, and we will aboard. My Lord of Cambridge, and my kinde I ord of Masham, And you my gentle Knight, giue me your thoughts: Think you not that the powres we beare with vs Will cut their passage through the force of France? Doing the execution, and the acte, For which we haue in head assembled them.

Scro. No doubt my Liege, if each man do his best

King. I doubt not that, since we are well perswaded We carry not a heart with vs from hence, That growes not in a faire consent with ours Nor leaue not one behinde, that doth not wish Successe and Conquest to attend on vs.

Cam. Neuer was Monarch better seru'd and lou'd, Then is your Maiesty; there's not I thinke a subiect That sits in heart greefe and vneasinesse Vnder the sweet shade of your government.

Kni. True: those that were your Fathers enemies, Haue sleep'd their gauls in hony, and do serue you With hearts create of duty, and of zeale.

King. We therefore haue great cause of thankfulnes, And shall forget the office of our hand Sooner then quittance of desert and merit, According to the weight and worthinesse

Scro. So seruice shall with steeld sinewes toyle, And labour shall refresh it selfe with hope To do your Grace incessant seruices.

King. We Iudge no lesse. Vnkle of Exeter, Inlarge the man committed yesterday, That rayl'd against our person. We consider It was excessse of Wine that set him on, And on his more aduice, We pardon him.

Scro. That's mercy, but too much security. Let him be punish'd Soueraigne, least example Breed (by his sufferance) more of such a kind.

King. O let vs yet be mercifull

Cam. So may your Highnesse, and yet punish too.

Gray. Sir, you shew great mercy if you giue him life, After the taste of much correction.

King. Alas, your too much loue and care of me, Are heavy Orisons 'gainst this poore wretch: If little faults proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye When capitall crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appeare before vs? Wee'l yet inlarge that man, Though Cambridge, Scroope, and Gray, in their deere care And tender preservation of our person Would haue him punish'd. And now to our French cause, Who are the late Commissioners?

Cam. I one my Lord, Your Highnesse bad me aske for it to day.

Scro. So did you me my Liege.

Gray. And I my Royall Soueraigne.

King. Then Richard Earle of Cambridge, there is yours: There yours Lord Scroope of Masham, and Sir Knight: Gray of Northumberland, this same is yours. Reade them, and know I know your worthinesse. My Lord of Westmerland, and Vnkle Exeter, We will aboard to night. Why how now Gentlemen? What see you in those papers, that you loofe So much complexion? Looke ye how they change: Their cheekes are paper. Why, what reade you there, That haue so cowarded and chac'd your blood Out of appurance.

Cam. I do confesse my fault, And do submit me to your Highnesse mercy.

Gray. Scro. To which we all appeale.

King. The mercy that was quicken in vs but late, By your owne counsaile is suppress and kill'd. You must not dare (for shame) to talke of mercy, For your owne reasons turne into your bosomes, As dogs vpon their maisters, worrying you. See you my Princes, and my Noble Peeres, These English monsters. My Lord of Cambridge heere You know how apt our loue was, to accord To furnish with all appertinents Belonging to his Honour; and this man, Hath for a few light Crownes, lightly conspir'd And sworne vnto the practises of France To kill vs heere in Hampton. To the which, This Knight no lesse for bounty bound to Vs Then Cambridge is, hath likewise sworne. But O, What shall I say to thee Lord Scroope, thou cruell, Ingratefull, sauage, and inhumane Creature? Thou that didst beare the key of all my counsailes, That knew'st the very bottome of my soule, That (almost) might'st haue coyn'd me into Golde, Would'st thou haue practis'd on me, for thy vse? May it be possible, that forraigne hyer Could out of thee extract one sparke of euill That might annoy my finger? 'Tis so strange, That though the truth of it stands off as grosse As blacke and white, my eye will scarcely see it. Treason, and murder, euer kept together, As two yoke duels sworne to eyners purpose, Working so grossely in an naturall cause, That admiration did not hoope at them. But thou (gainst all proportion) didst bring in Wonder to waite on treason, and on murder: And what's euer cunning fiend it was That wrought vpon thee so preposterously, Hath got the voyce in hell for excellence.

And

And other duels that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle vp damnation,
With patches, colours, and with formes being fetcht
From glistering semblances of piety.
But he that temper'd thee, bad thee stand vp,
Gaue thee no instance why thou shouldst do treason,
Vnlesse to dub thee with the name of Traitor.
If that same Dæmon that hath gull'd thee thus,
Should with his Lyon-gate walke the whole world,
He might returne to vassal Tartar backe,
And tell the Legions, I can neuer win
A soule so easie as that Englishmans
Oh, how hast thou with ieaousie infected
The sweetnesse of affiance? Shew men dutifull,
Why so didst thou seeme they graue and learned?
Why so didst thou. Come they of Noble Family?
Why so didst thou. Seeme they religious?
Why so didst thou. Or are they spare in diet,
Free from grosse prison, or of mirth, or anger,
Constant in spirit, not swearing with the blood,
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest complement,
Not working with the eye, without the eare,
And but in purged iudgement trusting neither,
Such and so finely bouled didst thou seeme.
And thus thy fall hath left a kinde of blot,
To make thee full fraught man, and best indued
With some suspicion, I will weepe for thee.
For this revolt of thine, me thinkes is like
Another fall of Man. Their faults are open,
Arrest them to the answer of the Law,
And God acquit them of their practises.

Eae I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Richard Earle of Cambridge.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas
Lord Scroope of Marston.

I arrest thee of High Treason, by the name of Thomas
Grey, Knight of Northumberland.

Scio Our purposes, God iustly hath discover'd,
And I repent my fault more then my death,
Which I beseech your Highnesse to forgive,
Although my body pay the price of it.

Cam For me, the Gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive,
The sooner to effect what I intended.
But God be thanked for prevention,
Which in sufferance heartily will reioyce,
Beseeching God, and you, to pardon mee.

Gray Neuer did faithfull subiect more reioyce
At the discovery of most dangerous Treason,
Then I do at this houre joy ore myselfe,
Prevented from a damned enterprize;
My fault, but not my body, pardon Soueraigne

King God quit you in his mercy: Hear your sentence
You haue conspir'd against Our Royall person,
Joynd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his Coffers,
Receyvd the Golden Earnest of Our death.
Wherein you would haue sold your King to slaughter,
His Princes, and his Peeres to seruitude,
His Subiects to oppression, and contempt,
And his whole Kingdome into desolation:
Touching our person, seeke we no reuenge,
But we our Kingdomes safety wilst so tender,
Whose ruine you sought, that to her Lawes
We do deliuer you. Get you therefore hence,
(Poore miserable wretches) to your death.
The taste whereof, God of his mercy giue

You patience to indure, and true Repentance
Of all your deare offences. Beare them hence. Exit.
Now Lords for France the enterprize whereof
Shall be to you as vs, like glorious
We doubt not of a faire and luckie Warre,
Since God so graciously hath brought to light
This dangerous Treason, lurking in our way,
To hinder our beginnings. We doubt not now,
But every Rubbe is smoothened on our way.
Then forth, deare Countrey men: Let vs deliuer
Our Puissance into the hand of God,
Putting it straight in expedition
Chearely to Sea, the signes of Warre aduance,
No King of England, if not King of France. Flourish.

Enter Pistoll, Nim, Bardolph, Boy, and Hostesse.

Hostesse Pry thee honey sweet Husband, let me bring thee to Staines.

Pistoll No for my manly heart dotherne. Bardolph, be blythe Nim, rowle thy vaunting Veines Boy, bristle thy Courage vp for Falstaffe hee is dead, and wee must erne therefore.

Bard Would I were with him, wheresomere hee is, eyther in Heaven, or in Hell

Hostesse Nay sure, hee's not in Hell hee's in Arthurs Bosome, if euer man went to Arthurs Bosome. a made a finer end, and went away and it had beene any Christome
Child: a parted eu'n iust betwene Twelve and One, eu'n at the turning o'th' Tyde for after I saw him fumble with the Sheets, and play with Flowers, and smile vpon his fingers end, I knew there was but one way for his Nose was as sharpe as a Pen, and a Table of greene fields. How now
Sir Iohn (quoth I?) what man? be a good cheare. so a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him, a should not thinke of God; I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughts yet so a bad me lay more Clothes on his feet I put my hand into the Bed, and felt them, and they were as cold as any stone then I felt to his knees, and so vp-pee'd, and vpward, and all was as cold as any stone.

Nim. They say he cryed out of Sack.

Hostesse. I, that a did

Bard And of Women

Hostesse. Nay, that a did not.

Boy Yes that a did, and said they were Deules incarnate.

Woman A could neuer abide Carnation, 'twas a Colour he neuer lik'd.

Boy. A said once, the Deule would haue him about Women

Hostesse A did in some sort (indeed) handle Women:
but ther hee was rumatique, and talk'd of the Whore of Babylon.

Boy Doe you not remember a saw a Flea sticke vpon
Bardolphs Nose, and a said it was a blacke Soule burning in Hell.

Bard Well, the fuell is gone that maintain'd that fire:
that's all the Riches I got in his seruice

Nim. Shall wee shogg? the King will be gone from Southampton.

Pist Come, let's away. My Loue, giue me thy Lippes.
Iooke to my Chatrels, and my Moucables. Let Sences rule: The world is, Pitch and pay trust none for Oathes are Strawes, mens Faiths are Waser-Cakes, and hold-fast is the onely Dogge. My Ducke, therefore Caretto bee thy Counsaillor. Goe, cleare thy Chrystalls. Yokefellowes in Aimes, let vs to France, like Horseleeches

leeches my Boyes, to sucke, to sucke, the very blood to sucke.

Boy. And that's but vnwholesome food, they say.

Pist. Touch her soft mouth and march.

Hard. Farwell Hostesse.

Nim. I cannot kisse, that is the humor of it: but adieu.

Pist. Let Huswiferie appeare: keepe close, I thee command.

Hostesse. Farwell adieu.

Exeunt

Flourish

Enter the French King, the Dolphin, the Duke of Berry, and the Constable.

King. Thus comes the English with full power vpon vs, And more then carefully it vs concernes, To answer Royally in our defences. Therefore the Dukes of Berry and of Britaine, Of Brabant and of Orleans, shall make forth, And you Prince Dolphin, with all swift dispatch To lyne and new repayre our Townes of Warre With men of courage, and with meanes defendant. For England his approaches makes as sence, As Waters to the sucking of a Gulfe. It fits vs then to be as prouident, As feare may teach vs, out of late examples Left by the fall and neglected English, Vpon our fields.

Dolphin. My most redoubred Father, It is most meet we arme vs 'gainst the foe: For Peace it selfe should not to dull a Kingdome, (Though War nor no knowne Quarrel were in question) But that Defences, Musters, Preparations, Should be maintain'd, assembled, and collected, As were a Warre in expectation. Therefore I say, 'tis meet we all goe forth, To view the sick and feeble parts of France: And let vs doe it with no shew of feare, No, with no more, then if we heard that England Were busied with a Whitsun Morris dance. For, my good Liege, shee is so idly King'd, Her Scepter so phantasically borne, By a vaine giddie shallow humorous Youth, That feare attends her noe.

Const. O peace, Prince Dolphin, You are too much mistaken in this King: Question your Grace the late Embassadors, With what great State he heard their Embassie, How well supply'd with Noble Councillors, How modest in exception, and withall, How terrible in constant resolution: And you shall find, his Vanities fore-spent, Were but the out-side of the Roman Brytus, Couering Discretion with a Coat of Folly; As Gardeners doe with Ordure hide those Roots That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Dolphin. Well, 'tis not so, my Lord High Constable. But though we thinke it so, it is no matter: In cases of defence, 'tis best to weigh The Enemy more mightie then he seemes, So the proportions of defence are fill'd. Which of a weake and niggardly protection, Doth like a Miser spoyle his Coat, with scanting A little Cloth.

King. Thinke we King Harry strong: And Princes, looke you strongly arme to meet him. The Kindred of him hath bene flesht vpon vs:

And he is bred out of that bloodie strainé, That haunted vs in our familiar Pathes: Witness our too much memorable shame, When Cressy Battell fatally was strucke, And all our Princes captiu'd, by the hand Of that black Name, Edward, black Prince of Wales: Whiles that his Mountaine Sirr, on Mountaine standing Vp in the Ayre, crown'd with the Golden Sunne, Saw his Heroicall Seed, and smil'd to see him Mangle the Worke of Nature, and deface The Patternes, that by God and by French Fathers Had twentie yeeres been made. This is a Stem Of that Victorious Stock: and let vs feare The Nature mightinesse and fate of him,

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Embassadors from Harry King of England, Doe craue admittance to your Maestie.

King. Weele giue them present audience. Goe, and bring them.

You see this Chase is hotly followed, friends.

Dolphin. Tut, hee, and stop pursuit for coward Dogs Most spend their mouths, whē what they seem to threaten Runs faire before them. Good my Soueraigne Take vp the English short, and let them know Of what a Monarchie you are the Head: Selfe loue, my Liege, is not so vile a sinne, As selfe-neglecting.

Enter Exeter

King. From our Brother of England?

Exe. From him, and thus he greets your Maestie: He wills you in the Name of God Almighty, That you deuelt your selfe, and lay apart The borrowed Glories, that by gift of Heauen, By Law of Nature, and of Nations, longes To him and to his Heires, namely, the Crowne, And all wide-stretched Honors, that pertaine By Custome, and the Ord'rine of Times, Vnto the Crowne of France: that you may know 'Tis no sinister, nor no backward Clayme, Pickt from the worme holes of long-vanish'd dayes, Nor from the dust of old Oblivion rake, He sends you this most memorable Lyne, In every Branch truly demonstrative; Willing you ouer-looke this Pedigree: And when you find him evenly deriv'd From his most sacred, or famous Ancestors, Edward the third; he bids you then resigne Your Crowne and Kingdome, indirectly held From him, the Native and true Challenger.

King. Or else, what follows?

Exe. Bloody constraint: for if you hide the Crowne Euen in your hearts, there will he rake for it. Therefore in fierce Tempest is he coming, In Thunder and in Earth-quake, like a tsue: That if requiring faile he will compell. And bids you, in the Bowels of the Lord, Deliu'r vp the Crowne, and to take merite On the poore Soules, for whom this hungry Warre Opens his vast faues, and on your head Turning the Widlowes Teares, the Orphans Cryes, The dead-mens Blood, the priuy Maidens Groanes, For Husbands, Fathers, and betrothed Louers, That shall be swallowed in this Controversie. This is his Clayme, his Threatning, and my Message. Vnlesse the Dolphin be in presence here; To whom expressly I bring greeting to.

King For

King. For vs, we will consider of this further:
To-morrow shall you beare our full intent
Back to our Brother of England.

Dolph. For the Dolphin,
I stand here for him what to him from England?

Exe. Scorne and defiance, sleight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not mis-become
The mightie Sender, doth he prize you at.
Thus sayes my King, and if your Fathers Highnesse
Doe not, in-graunt of all demands at large,
Sweeten the bitter Mock you sent his Maiestie,
Hee'll call you to so hot an Answer of it.
That Causes and Wombie Vaultages of France
Shall chide your Trespas, and returne your Mock
In second Accent of his Ordinance.

Dolph. Say if my Father render faire returne,
It is against my will for I desire
Nothing but Oddes with England.
To that end, as matching to his Youth and Vanitie,
I did present him with the Paris-Balls.

Exe. Hee'll make your Paris Louer shake for it,
Were it the Mistresse Court of mightie Europe
And be assur'd, you'll find a diff'rence,
As we his Subiects haue in wonder found,
Betweene the promise of his greener dayes,
And these he masters now: now he weighs Time
Euen to the vtmost Graine that you shall reade
In your owne Losses, if he stay in France.

King. To-morrow shall you know our mind at full.
Flourish.

Exe. Dispatch vs with all speed, least that our King
Come here himselfe to question our delay,
For he is footed in this Land already.

King. You shall be soone dispatcht, with faire conditions.
A Night is but small breathe, and little pawse,
To answer matters of this consequence Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Flourish. Enter Chorus.

Thus with imagin'd wing our swift Scene flies,
In motion of no lesse celeritie then that of Thought.
Suppose, that you haue scene
The well-appointed King at Douer Peere,
Embarke his Royaltie and his braue Fleet,
With silken Streamers, the young Phebus sayning;
Play with your Fancies. and in them behold,
Vpon the Hempen Tackle, Ship-boyes climbing,
Heare the shrill Whistle, which doth order giue
To sounds confus'd. behold the threaten'd Sailer,
Borne with th'inuisible and creeping Wind,
Draw the huge Bottomes through the furrowed Sea,
Bresting the loose Surge. O, doe but thinke
You stand vpon the Riuaige, and behold
A Citie on th'inconstant Billowes dauncing.
For so appeares this Fleet Maiesticall,
Holding due course to Harflew. Follow, follow:
Grapple your minds to sterneage of this Naime,
And leaue your England as dead Mid-night, still,
Guarded with Grandfires, Babyes, and old Women,
Eyther past, or not arriv'd to pyth and puissance.
For who is he, whose Chin is but enricht

With one appearing Hayre, that will not follow
These cull'd and choyse-drawne Caualliers to France?
Worke, worke your Thoughts, and therein see a Siege:
Behold the Ordenance on their Carriages,
With farall mouthes gaping on girded Harflew.
Suppose th'Embassador from the French comes back:
Tells Harry, That the King doth offer him
Katherine his Daughter, and with her to Dowrie,
Some petty and vnprofitable Dukedomes.
The offer likes not and the nimble Gunner
With Lynstock now the duellish Cannon touches
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.
And downe goes all before them Still be kind,
And eech out our performance with your mind. Exit.

Enter the King, Exeter, Bedford, and Gloucester.
Alarum Scaling Ladders at Harflew.

King. Once more vnto the Breach,
Deare friends, once more,
Or close the Wall vp with our English dead:
In Peace, there's nothing so becomes a man,
As modest stillnesse, and humilitie.
But when the blast of Warre blowes in our eares,
Then imitate the action of the Tyger
Stiffen the sinewes, commune vp the blood,
Disguise faire Nature with hard-fauour'd Rage
Then lend the Eye a terrible aspect.
Let it pry through the portage of the Head,
Like the Brasse Cannon: let the Brow o'rewhelme it,
As fearefully, as doth a galled Rocke
O're-hang and iutty his confounded Base,
Swill'd with the wild and wastfull Ocean.
Now set the Teeth, and stretch the Nostrill wide,
Hold hard the Breath, and bend vp euery Sprit
To his full height. On, on, you Noblish English,
Whose blood is set from Fathers of Warre-prooffe:
Fathers, that like so many Alexanders,
Haue in these parts from Morne till Euen fought,
And sheath'd their Swords, for lack of argument.
Dishonour not your Mothers now attest,
That those whom you call'd Fathers, did beget you.
Be Coppy now to me of grosser blood,
And teach them how to Warre. And you good Yeomen,
Whose Lymes were made in England; shew vs here
The mettell of your Pasture let vs sweare,
That you are worth your breeding which I doubt not:
For there is none of you so meane and base,
That hath not Noble luster in your eyes.
I see you stand like Grey-hounds in the slips,
Straying vpon the Start The Game's afoot:
Follow your Spirit, and vpon this Charge;
Cry, God for Harry, England, and S. George.
Alarum, and Chambers goe off.

Enter Nim, Bardolph, Pistoll, and Boy.

Bard. On, on, on, on, on, to the breach, to the breach
Nim. Pray thee Corporall stay, the Knocks are too hot and for mine owne part, I haue not a Cafe of Lues:
the humor of it is too hot, that is the very plaine-Song
of it.

Pist. The plaine-Song is most iust. for humors doe abound. Knocks goe and come Gods Vassals drop and dye and Sword and Shield, in bloody Field, doth winne immortall fame.

Boy. Would I were in an Ale-house in London, I would giue all my fame for a Pot of Ale, and safetie.

Pist. And

Pist. And I: If wishes would prevaile with me, my purpose should not faile with me; but thither would I high.

Boy. As duly, but not as truly, as Bird doth sing on bough.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Vp to the breach, you Dogges; asauant you Cullions.

Pist. Be mercifull great Duke to men of Mould: abate thy Rage, abate thy manly Rage; abate thy Rage, great Duke. Good Bawcock bate thy Rage: vse lenitie sweet Chuck.

Nim. These be good humors: your Honor wins bad humors.

Exit.

Boy. As young as I am, I haue obseru'd these three Swathers: I am Boy to them all three, but all they three, though they would serue me, could not be Man to me; for indeed three such Antiques doe not amount to a man. for Bardolph, hee is white-liver'd, and red-face'd; by the meanes whereof, a faces is out, but fights not: for Pistol, hee hath a killing Tongue, and a quiet Sword; by the meanes whereof, a breakes Words, and keeps whole Weapons: for Nim, hee hath heard, that men of few Words are the best men, and therefore hee leornes to say his Prayers, lest a should be thought a Coward; but his few bad Words are matcht with as few good Deeds; for a neuer broke any mans Head but his owne, and that was against a Post, when he was drunke. They will steale any thing, and call it Purchase. Bardolph stole a Lute-case, bore it twelue Leagues, and sold it for three halpence. Nim and Bardolph are sworne Brothers in filching: and in Callice they stole a fire-shouell. I knew by that peece of Service, the men would carry Coales. They would haue me as familiar with mens Pockets, as their Gloves or their Hand-kerchers: which makes much against my Manhood, if I should take from anothers Pocket, to put into mine; for it is plaine pocketting vp of Wrongs. I must leaue them, and seeke some better Service: the Villany goes against my weake stomacke, and therefore I must cast it vp.

Exit.

Enter Gower.

Gower. Capitaine Fluellen, you must come presently to the Mynes; the Duke of Gloucester would speake with you.

Flu. To the Mynes? Tell you the Duke, it is not so good to come to the Mynes: for looke you, the Mynes is not according to the disciplines of the Warre, the consequences of it is not sufficient: for looke you, th'athuer-sarie, you may discusse vnto the Duke, looke you, is digt himselfe foure yard vnder the Countermine. by Cheshu, I thinke a will plowe vp all, if there is not better directions.

Gower. The Duke of Gloucester, to whom the Order of the Siege is giuen, is altogether directed by an Irish man, a very valiant Gentleman yfaith.

Welch. It is Capitaine Blackmorrice, is it not?

Gower. I thinke it be.

Welch. By Cheshu he is an Ass, as in the World, I will verifie as much in his Beard: he ha's no more directions in the true disciplines of the Warres, looke you, of the Roman disciplines, then is a Puppy-dog.

Enter Blackmorrice, and Capitaine Iamy.

Gower. Here a comes, and the Scots Capitaine, Capitaine Iamy, with him.

Welch. Capitaine Iamy is a maruellous valorous Gentleman, that is certain, and of great expedition and knowledge in th'aunciant Warres, vpon my particlar knowledge of his directions: by Cheshu he will maintaine his Argument as well as any Militarie man in the World, in the disciplines of the Pristine Warres of the Romans.

Scot. I say gudday, Capitaine Fluellen.

Welch. Godden to your Worship, good Capitaine Iamy.

Gower. How now Capitaine Blackmorrice, haue you quitt the Mynes? haue the Pioners giuen o're?

Irish. By Chrish Law tish ill done. the Worke ish giue ouer, the Trompet sound the Retreat. By my Hand I sweare, and my fathers Soule, the Worke ish ill done: it ish giue ouer: I would haue blowed vp the Towne, so Chrish saue me law, in an houre. O tish ill done, tish ill done: by my Hand tish ill done.

Welch. Capitaine Blackmorrice, I beseech you now, will you voutsafe me, looke you, a few disputations with you, as partly touching or concerning the disciplines of the Warre, the Roman Warres, in the way of Argument, looke you, and friendly communication. partly to satisfie my Opinion, and partly for the satisfaction, looke you, of my Mind. as touching the direction of the Militarie discipline, that is the Point.

Scot. It shall be very gud, gud feth, gud Captens bath, and I shall quit you with gud leue, as I may pick occasion that shall I may.

Irish. It is no time to discourse, so Chrish saue me: the day is hot, and the Weather, and the Warres, and the King, and the Dukes: it is no time to discourse, the Town is beleech'd: and the Trompet call vs to the breach, and we talke, and be Chrish do nothing, tis shame for vs all. so God saue tis shame to stand still, it is shame by my hand: and there is Throats to be cut, and Workes to be done, and there ish nothing done, so Chrish saue me law.

Scot. By the Mes, ere theise eyes of mine take themselves to slomber, ayle de gud seruire, or Ile ligge tish grund for it: ay, or goe to death: and Ile pay as valourously as I may, that sal I suerly do, that is the breff and the long: may, I had full faime heard some question tween you tway.

Welch. Capitaine Blackmorrice, I thinke, looke you, vnder your correction, there is not many of your Nation.

Irish. Of my Nation? What ish my Nation? Ish a Villaine, and a Bastard, and a Knaue, and a Rascaill. What ish my Nation? Who talkes of my Nation?

Welch. Looke you, if you take the matter otherwife then is meant, Capitaine Blackmorrice, peradventure I shall thinke you doe not vse me with that affabilitie, as in discretion you ought to vse me, looke you, being as good a man as your selfe, both in the disciplines of Warre, and in the deriuation of my Birth, and in other particularities.

Irish. I doe not know you so good a man as my selfe. so Chrish saue me, I will cut off your Head.

Gower. Gentlemen both, you will mistake each other.

Scot. A, that's a foule fault.

A Parly.

Gower. The Towne sounds a Parley.

Welch. Capitaine Blackmorrice, when there is more better oportunitie to be required, looke you, I will be so bold as to tell you, I know the disciplines of Warre and there is an end.

Exit.

Enter the King and all his Train before the Gates.

King. How yet resolues the Gouvernour of the Towne? This is the latest Parle we will admit:

There-

Therefore to our best mercy giue your selues,
Or like to men proud of destruction,
Defie vs to our worst for as I am a Souldier,
A Name that in my thoughts becomes me best,
If I begin the batt'rie once againe,
I will not leaue the halfe-atchieued Harflew,
Till in her ashes she lye buried.
The Gates of Mercy shall be all shut vp,
And the flesh'd Souldier, rough and hard of heart,
In libertie of bloody hand, shall raunge
With Conscience wide as Hell, mowing like Grassie
Your fresh faire Virgins, and your flowing Infants.
What is it then to me, if impious Warre,
Arrayed in flames like to the Prince of Fiends,
Doe with his myght complexion all fell feats,
Enlynck't to wast and desolation?
What is't to me, when you your selues are cause,
If your pure Maydens fall into the hand
Of hot and forcing Violation?
What Reyne can hold licentious Wickednesse,
When downe the Hill he holds his fierce Carriere?
We may as bootlesse spend our vaine Command
Vpon th'enrag'd Souldiers in their spoyle,
As send Precepts to the Leuiathan, to come ashore.
Therefore, you men of Harflew,
Take pittie of your Towne and of your People,
Whiles yet my Souldiers are in my Command,
Whiles yet the coole and temperate Wind of Grace
O're-blowes the filthy and contagious Clouds
Of headly Murther, Spoyle, and Villany.
If not . why in a moment looke to see
The blind and bloody Souldier, with foule hand
Desire the Locks of your shrill-shrinking Daughters.
Your Fathers taken by the siluer Beards,
And their most reuerend Heads dash't to the Walls:
Your naked Infants spitted vpon Pykes,
Whiles the mad Mothers, with their howles confus'd,
Doe breake the Clouds, as d'd the Wiues of Iewry,
At Herods bloody-hunting slaughter-men
What say you? Will you yeeld, and this auoyd?
Or guiltie in defence, be thus destroy'd.

Enter Gouernour.

Gouer. Our expectation hath this day an end:
The Dolphin, whom of Succours we entreated,
Returnes vs, that his Powers are yet not ready,
To rayse so great a Siege. Therefore great King,
We yeeld our Towne and Liues to thy soft Mercy:
Enter our Gates, dispose of vs and ours,
For we no longer are defensible.

King. Open your Gates Come Vnckle Exeter,
Goe you and enter Harflew, there remaine,
And fortifie it strongly gainst the French.
Vse mercy to them all for vs, deare Vnckle.
The Winter comming on, and Sicknesse growing
Vpon our Souldiers, we will retire to Calis.
To night in Harflew will we be your Guest,
To morrow for the March are we adrest.

Flourish, and enter the Towne.

Enter Katherine and an old Gentlewoman.

Alice Excellent, Madame.

Kath. C'est assez pour vne foyes, alons nous a diner.

Exit.

Enter the King of France, the Dolphin, the Constable of France, and others.

King Tis certaine he hath past the Riuer Some.

Const. And if he be not fought withall, my Lord,
Let vs not lue in France . let vs quit all,
And giue our Vineyards to a barbarous People.

Dolph. O Dieu vivant Shall a few Sprays of vs,
The emptying of our Fathers Luxurie,
Our Syeids, put in wilde and sauage Stock,
Spirt vp so suddenly into the Clouds,
And ouer-looke their Grafters?

Brit. Normans, but bastard Normans, Norman bastards;
Mort du mauie, if they march along
Vnfought withall, but I will sell my Dukedome,

To

To buy a slobbry and a durtie Farme
In that nooke-shotten Ile of Albion.

Const. Dien de Battailer, where haue they this mettell?
Is not their Clymate foggy, raw, and dull?
On whom, as in despite, the Sunne lookes pale,
Killing their Fruit with frownes. Can sodden Water,
A Drench for sur-reyn'd Iades, their Barly broth,
Decoekt their cold blood to such valiant heat?
And shall our quick blood, spirited with Wine,
Seeme frostie? O, for honor of our Land,
Let vs not hing like roping Ittyckles
Vpon our Houses Thatch, whiles a more frostie People
Sweat drops of gallant Youth in our rich fields:
Poore we call them, in their Native Lords.

Dolphin. By Faith and Honor,
Our Madames mock at vs, and plunely say,
Our Mettell is bred out and they will giue
Their bodies to the Lust of English Youth,
To new-store France with Eastard Warriors.

Brit. They bid vs to the English Dancing-Schooles,
And teach La isla's high, and switt Carraro's,
Saying, our Grace is onely in our Heeles,
And that we are most loslie Run-awayes.

King. Where is Morty the Herald? speed him hence,
Let him greet England with our sharpe defiance.
Vp Princes, and with spirit of Honor edged,
More sharper then your Swords, high to the field:
Charles Delabreth, High Constable of France,
You Dukes of Orleance, Burbar, and of Berry,
Alanson, Brabant, Bir, and Burgene,
Jaques Chattillon, Rambures, Vandemont,
Reumant, Grand Free Kouss and Fancorbridge,
Loyz, Lestrale, Beneiquay, and Charcloys,
High Dukes, great Princes, Barons, Lords, and Kings;
For your great Seats, now quit you of great shames.
Barre Harry England, that sweepes through our Land.
With Penons painted in the blood of Harlew:
Rush on his Host, as doth the melted snow
Vpon the Valleys, whose low Vallall Sear,
The Alpes doth spit, and void his shewme vpon
Goe downe vpon him you haue Power enough,
And in a Captiue Chariot, into Roan
Bring him our Prisoner.

Const. This becomes the Great.
Sorry am I his numbers are so few,
His Souldiers sick, and famisht in their March:
For I am sure, when he shall see our Army,
Hee'll drop his heart into the sinck of feare,
And for atchieuement, offer vs his Ransome.

King. Therefore Lord Constable, hast on Morty,
And let him say to England, that we send,
To know what willing Ransome he will giue.
Prince Dolphin, you shall stay with vs in Roan.

Dolph. Not so, I doe beseech your Maiestie.

King. Be patient, for you shall remaine with vs.
Now forth Lord Constable, and Princes all,
And quickly bring vs word of Englands fall. Exeunt.

Enter Captaines, English and Welch, Gower and Fluellen.

Gower. How now Captaine Fluellen, come you from the Bridge?

Flu. I assure you, there is very excellent Seruices committed at the Bridge.

Gower. Is the Duke of Exeter safe?

Flu. The Duke of Exeter is as magnanimous as Agamemnon.

and a man that I loue and honour with my soule,
and my heart, and my dutie, and my lue, and my liuing, and my vttermost power. He is not, God be prayd and blessed, any hurt in the World, but keeps the Bridge most valiantly, with excellent discipline. There is an aunchient Lieutenant there at the Pridge, I thinke in my very conscience hee is as valiant a man as Marke Anibeny, and hee is a man of no estimation in the World, but I did see him doe as gallant seruice.

Gower. What doe you call him?

Flu. Hee is call'd aunchient Pistol.

Gower. I know him not.

Enter Pistol.

Flu. Here is the man.

Pist. Captaine, I thee beseech to doe me fauours: the Duke of Exeter doth loue thee well.

Flu. I, I prayse God, and I haue mented some loue at his hands.

Pist. Herdolph, a Souldier firme and sound of heart, and of buxome valour, hath by cruell Fate, and giddie Fortunes furious fickle Wheel, that God desse blind, that stands vpon the rolling restlesse Store.

Flu. By your patience, aunchient Pistol. Fortune is painted blinde, with a Missett afore his eyes, to signifie to you, that Fortune is blinde; and shee is painted also with a Wheel, to signifie to you, which is the Morall of it, that shee is turning and inconstant, and mutabill;
and variation: and her foot, looke you, is fixed vpon a Spherickall Stone, which rowles, and rowles, and rowles:
in good truth, the Poet makes a most excellent description of it. Fortune is an excellent Morall.

Pist. Fortune is Herdolph's foe, and frownes on him:
for he hath stolne a Pax, and hanged must a be: a damred death: let Gallowes gape for Dogge, let Man goe free, and let not Hempe his Wind-pipe suffocate. but Exeter
hath giuen the doome of death, for Pax of little price.
Therefore goe speake, the Duke will heare thy voyces;
and let not Bartholmeus vitall thred bee cut with edge of Penny-Cord, and vile reproach. Speake Captaine for his Life, and I will thee requite.

Flu. Aunchient Pistol, I doe partly vnderstand your meaning.

Pist. Why then reioyce therefore.

Flu. Certainly Aunchient, it is not a thing to reioyce at: for if, looke you, he were my Brother, I would desire the Duke to vse his good pleasure, and put him to execution; for discipline ought to be vsed.

Pist. Dye, and be dam'd, and Figs for thy friendship.

Flu. It is well.

Pist. The Figge of Spaine.

Exit.

Flu. Very good.

Gower. Why, this is an arrant counterfeite Rascall, I remember him now: a Bawd, a Cut-purse.

Flu. Ile assure you, a vttered as prauise words at the Pridge, as you shall see in a Summers day: but it is very well what he ha's spoke to me, that is well I warrant you, when time is serue.

Gower. Why 'tis a Gull, a Foole, a Rogue, that now and then goes to the Warres, to grace himselfe at his returne into London, vnder the forme of a Souldier: and such fellowes are perfit in the Great Commanders Names; and they will learne you by rote where Seruices were done;
at such and such a Sconce, at such a Breach, at such a Con-
uoy: who came off brauely, who was shot, who disgrac'd, what termes the Enemy stood on. and this they conne perfectly in the phraze of Warre; which they tricke
vp

vp with new-tuned Oathes: and what a Beard of the Generalls Cut, and a horride Sure of the Campe, will doe among foming Bottles, and Ale-washt Wits, is wonderfull to be thought on: but you must learne to know such flanders of the age, or else you may be maruellously misstooke,

Flu. I tell you what, Capitaine Gower: I doe perceiue hee is not the man that hee would gladly make shew to the World hee is. if I finde a hole in his Coat, I will tell him my minde: hearken you, the King is coming, and I must speake with him from the Pridge.

Drum and Colours Enter the King and his poore Souldiers.

Flu. God plesse your Maiestie.

King How now Fluellen, cam'st thou from the Bridge?

Flu. I so please your Maiestie. The Duke of Exeter ha's very gallantly maintain'd the Pridge; the French is gone off, looke you, and there is gallant and most prauie passages marry, th'athuerfariie was haue possession of the Pridge, but he is enforced to retyre, and the Duke of Exeter is Master of the Pridge. I can tell your Maiestie, the Duke is a prauie man.

King What men haue you lost, Fluellen?

Flu. The perdition of th'athuerfariie hath beene very great, reasonnable great marry for my part, I thinke the Duke hath lost neuer a man, but one that is like to be executed for robbing a Church, one Bardolph, if your Maiestie know the man his face is all bubukles and wheelkes, and knobs, and flames a fire, and his lippes blowes at his nose, and it is like a coale of fire, sometimes plew, and sometimes red, but his nose is executed, and his fire's out.

King. Wee would haue all such offenders so cut off and we gree expresse charge, that in our Marches through the Countrey, there be nothing compell'd from the Villages, nothing taken, but pay'd for none of the French vpbayded or abused in disdainfull Language, for when Lewtie and Crueltie play for a Kingdome, the gentler Gamester is the soonest winner.

Tucket. Enter Mountjoy.

Mountjoy You know me by my habit.

King Well then, I know thee what shall I know of thee?

Mountjoy My Masters mind.

King. Vnfold it.

Mountjoy Thus sayes my King Say thou to Harry of England, Though we seem'd dead, we did but sleepe Advantage is a better Souldier then rashnesse Tell him, wee could haue rebuk'd him at Harflew, but that wee thought not good to bruise an iniurie, till it were full ripe. Now wee speake vpon our Q and our voyce is imperiall England shall repent his folly, see his weaknesse, and admire our sufferance. Bid him therefore consider of his ransom, which must proportion the losses we haue borne, the subiects we haue lost, the disgrace we haue digested; which in weight to re-answer, his pettynesse would bow vnder For our losses, his Exchequer is too poore; for the effusion of our bloud, the Muster of his Kingdome too faint a number, and for our disgrace, his owne person knesling at our feet, but a weak and worthless satisfaction. To this adde defiance and tell him for conclusion, he hath betrayed his followers, whose condemnation is pronounc't: So farre my King and Master; so much my Office.

King. What is thy name? I know thy qualitie.

Mount. Mountjoy.

King. Thou doo'st thy Office fairely. Turne thee back, And tell thy King, I doe not seeke him now, But could be willing to march on to Callice, Without impeachment. for to say the sooth, Though 'tis no wisdom to confesse so much Vnto an enemie of Craft and Vantage, My people are with sicknesse much enfeebled, My numbers lessen'd: and those few I haue, Almost no better then so many French; Who when they were in health, I tell thee Herald, I thought, vpon one payre of English Legges Did march three Frenchmen. Yet forgiue me God, That I doe bragge thus; this your ayre of France Hath blowne that vice in me. I must repent: Goe therefore tell thy Master, heere I am; My Ransome, is this fraile and worthless Trunke; My Army, but a weake and sickly Guard: Yet God before, tell him we will come on, Though France himselfe, and such another Neighbor Stand in our way. There's for thy labour Mountjoy. Goe bid thy Master well aduise himselfe. If we may passe, we will. if we be hindred, We shall your tawnie ground with your red blood Discolour and so Mountjoy, fare you well. The summe of all our Answer is but this. We would not seeke a Battaille as we are, Nor as we are, we say we will not shun it: So tell your Master

Mount. I shall deliuer so: Thanks to your Highnesse.

Glouc. I hope they will not come vpon vs now.

King We are in Gods hand, Brother, not in theirs. March to the Bridge, it now drawes toward night, Beyond the Riuer wee'll encampe our selues, And on to morrow bid them march away. Exeunt.

Enter the Constable of France, the Lord Ramburs, Orleans, Dolphin, with others.

Const. Tut, I haue the best Armour of the World: would it were day.

Orleans. You haue an excellent Armour: but let my Horse haue his due.

Const. It is the best Horse of Europe.

Orleans. Will it neuer be Moming?

Dolph My Lord of Orleans, and my Lord High Constable, you talke of Horse and Armour?

Orleans. You are as well provided of both, as any Prince in the World.

Dolph What a long Night is this? I will not change my Horse with any that treads but on foure postures: ch'ha he bounds from the Earth, as if his entrayles were hayres: le Cheual volante, the Pegasus, ches les nardres de fen When I bestryde him, I soare, I am a Hawke. he trots the ayre the Earth sings, when he touches it: the basest horse of his hoofe, is more Musically then the Pipe of Hermes

Orleans. Hee's of the colour of the Nutmeg.

Dolph. And of the heat of the Ginger. It is a Beast for Persus hee is pure Ayre and Fire; and the dull Elements of Earth and Water neuer appeare in him, but only in patient stillnesse while his Rider mounts him: hee is indeede a Horse, and all other Iades you may call Beasts.

Const. Indeed my Lord, it is a most absolute and excellent Horse.

Dolph. It is the Prince of Palfrayes, his Neigh is like the bidding of a Monarch, and his countenance enforces Homage

Orleanse. No more Cousin

Dolph. Nay, the man hath no wit, that cannot from the rising of the Lark to the lodging of the Lambe, varie deserved prayse on my Palfray: it is a Theame as fluent as the Sea. Turne the Sands into eloquent tongues, and my Horse is argument for them all 'tis a subiect for a Soueraigne to reason on, and for a Soueraignes Soueraigne to ride on. And for the World, familiar to vs, and vnknowne, to lay apart their particular Functions, and wonder at him, I once writ a Sonnet in his prayse, and began thus, Wonder of Nature.

Orleanse. I haue heard a Sonnet begin so to ones Mistresse.

Dolph. Then did they imitate that which I compos'd to my Courser, for my Horse is my Mistresse.

Orleanse. Your Mistresse beares well

Dolph. Me well, which is the prescript prayse and perfection of a good and particular Mistresse.

Const. Nay, for me thought yesterday your Mistresse shrewdly shooke your back

Dolph. So perhaps did yours.

Const. Mine was not bridled.

Dolph. O then belike she was old and gentle, and you rode like a Kerne of Ireland, your French Horse off, and in your strait Stroffers.

Const. You haue good iudgement in Horsemanship.

Dolph. Be warn'd by me then: they that ride so, and ride not wanly, fall into foule Boggis: I had rather haue my Horse to my Mistresse.

Const. I had as lue haue my Mistresse a Jade.

Dolph. I tell thee Constable, my Mistresse weares his owne hayre

Const. I could make as true a boast as that, if I had a Sow to my Mistresse

Dolph. Le chien est retourne a son propre vomissement est la lenge lancee au bouvier thou mak'st vse of any thing

Const. Yet doe I not vse my Horse for my Mistresse, or any such Prouerbe, so little kin to the purpote.

Ramb. My Lord Constable, the Armour that I saw in your Tent to night, are those Starres or Sunnes vpon it?

Const. Starres my Lord.

Dolph. Some of them will fall to morrow, I hope

Const. And yet my Sky shall not want.

Dolph. That may be, for you beare a many superfluously, and 'twere more honor some were away

Const. Eu'n as your Horse beares your prayses, who would trot as well, were some of your bragges dismounted.

Dolph. Would I were able to loade him with his desert. Will it neuer be day? I will trot to morrow a mile, and my way shall be paved with English Faces.

Const. I will not say so, for feare I should be fact out of my way: but I would it were morning, for I would faine be about the eares of the English.

Ramb. Who will goe to Hazard with me for twentie Prisoners?

Const. You must first goe your selfe to hazard, ere you haue them

Dolph. 'Tis Mid-night, Ile goe arme my selfe. Exit.

Orleanse. The Dolphin longs for morning.

Ramb. He longs to eate the English.

Const. I thinke he will eate all he kills.

Orleanse. By the white Hand of my Lady, hee's a gallant Prince.

Const. Swear by her Foot, that she may tread out the Oath.

Orleanse. He is simply the most actiue Gentleman of France.

Const. Doing is actiutie, and he will still be doing.

Orleanse. He neuer did harme, that I heard of

Const. Nor will doe none to morrow hee will keepe that good name still.

Orleanse. I know him to be valiant.

Const. I was told that, by one that knowes him better then you.

Orleanse. What's hee?

Const. Marry hee told me so himselfe, and hee sayd hee car'd not who knew it.

Orleanse. Hee needes not, it is no hidden vertue in him.

Const. By my faith Sir, but it is: neuer any body saw it, but his Lacquey: 'tis a hooded valour, and when it appeares, it will bate.

Orleanse. Ill will neuer sayd well.

Const. I will cap that Prouerbe with, There is flattene in friendship.

Orleanse. And I will take vp that with, Give the Deuill his due.

Const. Well plac't: there stands your friend for the Deuill: haue at the very eye of that Prouerbe with, A Pox of the Deuill.

Orleanse. You are the better at Prouerbs, by how much a Fooles Bolt is soone shot.

Const. You haue shot ouer.

Orleanse. 'Tis not the first time you were ouer-shot.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord high Constable, the English lye within fiftene hundred paces of your Tents.

Const. Who hath measur'd the ground?

Mess. The Lord Grandpree.

Const. A valiant and most expert Gentleman. Would it were day? Alas poore Harry of England hee longt not for the Dawning, as wee doe.

Orleanse. What a wretched and peeuish fellow is this King of England, to mope with his far-brain'd followers so farre out of his knowledge.

Const. If the English had any apprehension, they would runne away.

Orleanse. That they lack. for if their heads had any intellectuall Armour, they could neuer weare such heauie Head-pieces.

Ramb. That Island of England breeds very valiant Creatures; their Mastiffes are of vnmatchable courage.

Orleanse. Foolish Curres, that runne winking into the mouth of a Russian Beare, and haue their heads crust like rotten Apples: you may as well say, that's a valiant Flea, that dare eate his breakefast on the Lippe of a Lyon.

Const. Iust, iust: and the men doe sympathize with the Mastiffes, in robustious and rough comming on, leauing their Wits with their Wiues: and then giue them great Meales of Beefe, and Iron and Steele, they will eate like Wolves, and fight like Deuils.

Orleanse. I,

Orleance. I, but these English are shrowdly out of Beefe.

Const. Then shall we finde to morrow, they haue only stomackes to eate, and none to fight. Now is it time to arme: come, shall we about it?

Orleance. It is now two a Clock. but let me see, by ten Wee shall haue each a hundred English men. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Chorus

Now entertaine coniecture of a time,
When creeping Murmure and the poring Darke
Fills the wide Vessell of the Vniuerse,
From Camp to Camp, through the foule Womb of Night
The Humme of cyther Army stilly sounds;
That the fixt Centinels almost receiue
The secret Whispers of each others Watch.
Fire answers fire, and through their paly flames
Each Battaile sees the others vंबर'd face
Steed threatens Steed, in high and boastfull Neighs
Piercing the Nights dull Eare and from the Tents,
The Armourers accomplishing the Knights,
With busie Hammers closing Riuetts vp,
Giue dreadfull note of preparation.
The Country Cocks doe crow, the Clocks doe towle.
And the third howre of drowisie Morning nam'd,
Prowd of their Numbers, and secure in Soule,
The confident and ouer-lustie French,
Doe the low-rated English play at Dice;
And chide the creeple-tardy-gated Night,
Who like a foule and ougly Witch doth limpe
So tediouslly away The poore condemned English,
Like Sacrifices, by their watchfull Fires
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The Mornings danger and their gesture sad,
Inuesting lanke-lean Cheekes, and Warre-worne Coats,
Presented them vnto the gazing Moone
So many horride Ghosts. O now, who will behold
The Royall Captaine of this ruin'd Band
Walking from Watch to Watch, from Tent to Tent;
Let him cry, Praise and Glory on his head:
For forth he goes, and visits all his Host,
Bids them good morrow with a modest Smyle,
And calls them Brothers, Friends, and Countrey-men.
Vpon his Royall Face there is no note,
How dread an Army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one ior of Colour
Vnto the wearie and all-watched Night:
But freshly lookes, and over-bears Attaine,
With chearefull semblance, and sweet Maestie:
That euery Wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his Lookes.
A Largeesse vniuersall, like the Sunne,
His liberall Eye doth giue to euery one,
Thawing cold feare, that meane and gentle all
Behold, as may vnworthinesse define.
A little touch of Harry in the Night,
And so our Scene must to the Battaile flye:
Where, O for pittie, we shall much disgrace,
With foure or fife most vile and ragged toyles,
(Right ill dispos'd, in brawle ridiculous)

The Name of Agincourt: Yet sit and see,
Minding true things, by what their Mock ries bee.

Exit.

Enter the King, Bedford, and Gloucester.

King. Gloster, 'tis true that we are in great danger,
The greater therefore should our Courage be.
God morrow Brother Bedford. God Almighty,
There is some soule of goodnesse in things euill,
Would men obseruingly distill it out.
For our bad Neighbour makes vs early stirrers,
Which is both healthfull, and good husbandry.
Besides, they are our outward Consciences,
And Preachers to vs all; admonishing,
That we should dresse vs fairly for our end.
Thus may we gather Honey from the Weed.
And make a Morall of the Duell himselfe.

Enter Erpingham

Good morrow old Sir Thomas Erpingham:
A good soft Pillow for that good white Head,
Were better then a churlish curse of France.

Erping. Not so my Liege, this Lodging likes me better,
Since I may say, now lye I like a King.

King. 'Tis good for men to loue their present paines,
Vpon example, so the Spirit is eased:
And when the Mind is quickned, out of doubt
The Organs, though defunct and dead before,
Breake vp their drowisie Graue, and newly moue
With calid slough, and fresh legeritie.
Lend me thy Cloake Sir Thomas. Brothers both,
Commend me to the Princes in our Campe;
Doe my good morrow to them, and anon
Desire them all to my Pavilion

Gloster. We shall, my Liege.

Erping. Shall I attend your Grace?

King. No, my good Knight.

Goe with my Brothers to my Lords of England:
I and my Bosome must debate a while,
And then I would no other company.

Erping. The Lord in Heauen bleesse thee, Noble
Harry. Exeunt

King. God a mercy old Heart, thou speak'st cheare-fully. Enter Pistol

Pist. Che vous la?

King. A friend.

Pist. Discusse vnto me, art thou Officer, or art thou base, common, and popular?

King. I am a Gentleman of a Company.

Pist. Trayl'st thou the puissant Pyke?

King. Euen so: what are you?

Pist. As good a Gentleman as the Emperour.

King. Then you are a better then the King.

Pist. The King's a Bawcock, and a Heart of Gold, a Lad of Life, an Impe of Fame, of Parents good, of Fift most valiant: I kisse his durty shooe, and from heart-string I loue the lovely Bully. What is thy Name?

King. Harry le Roy

Pist. Le Roy? a Cornish Name: art thou of Cornish Crew?

King. No, I am a Welchman.

Pist. Know'st thou Fluellen?

King. Yes.

Pist. Tell him Ile knock his Lecke about his Pate vpon
S. Dauies day.

King. Doe not you weare your Dagger in your Cappe that day, least he knock that about yours.

Pist. Art thou his friend?

King. And his Kinsman too.

Pist. The Figo for thee then.

King. I thanke you: God be with you.

Pist. My name is Pistol call'd. Exit

King. It sorts well with your fiercenesse.

Manet King

Enter Fluellen and Gower.

Gower. Captaine Fluellen

Flu. 'So, in the Name of Iesu Christ, speake fewer: it is the greatest admiration in the vniuersall World, when the true and aunchient Prerogatives and Lawes of the Warres is not kept: if you would take the paines but to examine the Warres of Pompey the Great, you shall finde, I warrant you, that there is no riddle tadle nor pibble bable in Pompeys Campe. I warrant you, you shall finde the Ceremonies of the Warres, and the Cares of it, and the Formes of it, and the Sobrietie of it, and the Modestie of it, to be otherwise.

Gower. Why the Enemie is lowd, you heare him all Night.

Flu. If the Enemie is an Assle and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe; is it meet, thinke you, that wee should also, looke you, be an Assle and a Foole, and a prating Coxcombe, in your owne conscience now?

Gow. I will speake lower.

Flu. I pray you, and beseech you, that you will Exit

King. Though it appeare a litle out of fashion, There is much care and valour in this Welchman.

Enter three Souldiers, John Bates, Alexander Court, and Michael Williams

Court. Brother John Bates, is not that the Morning which breakes yonder?

Bates. I thinke it be. but wee haue no great cause to desire the approach of day.

Williams. Wee see yonder the beginning of the day, but I thinke wee shall neuer see the end of it. Who goes there?

King. A friend.

Williams. Vnder what Captaine serue you?

King. Vnder Sir John Erpingham.

Williams. A good old Commander, and a most kinde Gentleman: I pray you, what thinke he of our estate?

King. Euen as men wrackt vpon a Sand, that looke to be washt off the next Tyde.

Bates. He hath not told his thought to the King?

King. No. nor it is not meet he should. for though I speake it to you, I thinke the King is but a man, as I am: the Violet smells to him, as it doth to me; the Element shewes to him, as it doth to me; all his Sences haue but humane Conditions his Ceremonies layd by, in his Nakednesse he appeares but a man; and though his affections are higher mounted then ours, yet when they stoupe, they stoupe with the like wing. therefore, when he sees reason of feares, as we doe; his feares, out of doubt, be of the same relish as ours are: yet in reason, no man should possesse him with any appearance of feare; least hee, by shewing it, should dis-hearten his Army.

Bates. He may shew what outward courage he will: but I beleene, as cold a Night as 'tis, hee could with himselfe in Thames vp to the Neck; and so I would he were, and I by him, at all aduentures, so we were quit here.

King. By my troth, I will speake my conscience of the King: I thinke hee would not wish himselfe any where, but where hee is.

Bates. Then I would he were here alone; so should he be sure to be ransomed, and a many poore mens liues saued.

King. I dare say, you loue him not so ill, to wish him here alone. howsoever you speake this to feele other mens minds, me thinke I could not dye any where so contented, as in the Kings company; his Cause being iust, and his Quarrell honorable.

Williams. That's more then we know.

Bates. I, or more then wee should seeke after; for wee know enough, if wee know wee are the Kings Subiects; if his Cause be wrong, our obedience to the King wipes the Cryme of it out of vs.

Williams. But if the Cause be not good, the King himselfe hath a heauie Reckoning to make, when all those Legges, and Armes, and Heads, chopt off in a Battaille, shall ioyn together at the latter day, and cry all, Wee dyed at such a place, some swearing, some crying for a Surgeon; some vpon their Wiues, left poore behind them; some vpon the Debts they owe, some vpon their Children rawly left. I am asfeard, there are few dye well, that dye in a Battaille. for how can they charitably dispose of any thing, when Blood is their argument? Now, if these men doe not dye well, it will be a black matter for the King, that led them to it; who to disobey, were against all proportion of subiection.

King. So, if a Sonne that is by his Father sent about Merchandize, doe sinfully miscarry vpon the Sea, the imputation of his wickednesse, by your rule, should be imposed vpon his Father that sent him. or if a Sersuant, vnder his Masters command, transporting a summe of Money, be assailed by Robbers, and dye in many irreconcil'd Iniquities; you may call the businesse of the Master the author of the Seruants damnation. but this is not so. The King is not bound to answer the particular endings of his Souldiers, the Father of his Sonne, nor the Master of his Seruant; for they purpose not their death, when they purpose their seruices. Besides, there is no King, be his Cause neuer so spotlesse, if it come to the arbitrement of Swords, can trye it out with all vnspotted Souldiers. some (peradventure) haue on them the guilt of premeditated and contriued Murther; some, of beguiling Virgins with the broken Scales of Periurie, some, making the Warres their Sulwarke, that haue before gone the gentle Bosome of Peace with Pillage and Robberie. Now, if these men haue defeated the Law, and outrunne Nature punishment; though they can out-strip men, they haue no wings to flye from God. Warre is his Beadie, Warre is his Vengeance. so that here men are punished, for before breach of the Kirgs Lawes, in now the Kings Quarrell where they feared the death, they haue borne life away; and where they would bee safe, they perish. Then if they dye vnprouided, no more is the King guiltie of their damnation, then hee was before guiltie of those Impieties, for the which they are now visited. Every Subiects Dutie is the Kings, but every Subiects Soule is his owne. Therefore should every Souldier in the Warres doe as every sicke man in his Bed, with every Moth out of his Conscience. and dying so, Death is to him aduantage; or not dying, the time was blessedly lost, wherein such preparation was gayned: and in him that escapes, it were not sinne to thinke, that making God so free an offer, he let him out-lie that day, to see his Greatnesse, and to teach others how they should prepare.

Will. 'Tis certaine, euery man that dyes ill, the ill vpon his owne head, the King is not to answer it.

Bates. I doe not desire hee should answer for me, and yet I determine to fight lustily for him.

King. I my selfe heard the King say he would not be ransom'd.

Will. I, hee said so, to make vs fight chearefully. but when our throats are cut, hee may be ransom'd. and wee ne're the wiser.

King. If I liue to see it, I will neuer trust his word after.

Will. You pay him then: that's a perillous shot out of an Elder Gunne, that a poore and a priuate displeasure can dde against a Monarch you may as well goe about to turne the Sunne to yce, with fanning in his face with a Peacocks feather You'le neuer trust his word after; come, 'tis a foolish saying.

King. Your reproofe is something too round, I should be angry with you, if the time were conuenient.

Will. Let it bee a Quarrell betwene vs, if you liue.

King. I embrace it

Will. How shall I know thee againe?

King. Giue me any Gage of thine, and I will weare it in my Bonnet. Then if euer thou dar'st acknowledge it, I will make it my Quarrell

Will. Heere's my Gloue: Giue mee another of thine.

King. There.

Will. This will I also weare in my Cap. if euer thou come to me, and say, after to morrow, This is my Gloue, by this Hand I will take thee a box on the eare.

King. If euer I liue to see it, I will challenge it.

Will. Thou dar'st as well be hang'd.

King. Well, I will doe it, though I take thee in the Kings companie.

Will. Keepe thy word fare thee well.

Bates. Befriends you English fooles, be friends, wee haue French Quarrels enow, if you could tell how to reckon.

Exit Souldiers

King. Indeepe the French may lay twentie French Crownes to one, they will beat vs, for they beare them on their shoulders but it is no English Treason to cut French Crownes, and to morrow the King himselfe will be a Clipper.

Vpon the King, let vs our Liues, our Soules,
Our Debts, our carefull Wiues,
Our Children, and our Sinnes, lay on the King.
We must beare all.

O hard Condition, Twin-borne with Greatnesse,
Subiect to the breath of euery foole, whose sence
No more can feelee, but his owne wringing.
What infinite hearts-ease must Kings neglect,
That priuate men enioy?

And what haue Kings, that Priuates haue not too.
Saue Ceremonie, saue generall Ceremonie?
And what art thou, thou Idoll Ceremonie?
What kind of God art thou? that suffer'st more
Of mortall griefes, then doe thy worshippers.

What are thy Rents? what are thy Commings in?
O Ceremonie, shew me but thy worth,
What? is thy Soule of Odoration?
Art thou ought else but Place, Degree, and Forme,
Creating awe and feare in other men?
Wherein thou art lesse happy, being fear'd,
Then they in fearing

What drink'st thou off, in stead of Homage sweet,
But poyson'd flatterie? O, be sick, great Greatnesse,
And bid thy Ceremonie giue thee cure.
Thinks thou the fierie Feuer will goe out
With Titles blowne from Adulation?
Will it giue place to flexure and low bending?
Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggers kneet,
Command the heath of it? No, thou prou'd Dreame,
That play'st so subtilly with a Kings Repose.
I am a King that find thee: and I know,
'Tis not the Balme, the Scepter, and the Ball,
The Sword, the Mace, the Crowne Imperiall,
The enter-tissued Robe of Gold and Pearle,
The farst Title running fore the King,
The Throne he sits on nor the Tyde of Pompe,
That beates vpon the high shore of this World:
No, not all these, thrice-gorgeous Ceremonie;
Nor all these, lay'd in Bed Maiesticall,
Can sleepe so soundly, as the wretched Slaue.
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cram'd with distressefull bread,
Neuer sees horrid Night, the Child of Hell
But like a Lacquey, from the Rise to Set,
Sweates in the eye of Phobus; and all Night
Sleepes in Elizium. next day after dawne,
Doth rise and helpe Hesperio to his Horse,
And followes so the euer-running yeere
With profitable labour to his Graue
And but for Ceremonie, such a Wretch,
Winding vp Dayes with coyle, and Nights with sleepe,
Had the fore-hand and vantage of a King
The Slaue, a Member of the Countreyes peace,
Enioyes it; but in grosse braine little wots,
What watch the King keepes, to maintaine the peace;
Whose howres, the Peasant best aduantages.

Enter Erpingham

Erp. My Lord, your Nobles zealous of your absence,
Seeke through your Campe to find you.

King. Good old Knight, collect them all together
At my Tent. He be before thee.

Erp. I shall doe't, my Lord. Exit.

King. O God of Battailles, Steele my Souldiers hearts, Possesse them not with feare. Take from them now
The sence of reckning of th'oppos'd numbers:
Pluck their hearts from them, Not to day, O Lord,
O not to day, thinke not vpon the fault
My Father made, in compassing the Crowne.
I Richards body haue interred new,
And on it haue bestowed more contrite teares,
Then from it issued forced drops of blood.
Five hundred poore I haue in yeerely pay,
Who twice a day their wither'd hands hold vp
Toward Heaven, to pardon blood:
And I haue built two Chauntries,
Where the sad and solemne Priests sing still
For Richards Soule. More will I doe:
Though all that I can doe, is nothing worth;
Since that my Penitence comes after all,
Imploring pardon.

Enter Gloucester.

Glouc. My Liege

King. My Brother Gloucester, voyce? I:
I know thy errand, I will goe with thee.
The day, my friend, and all things stay for me.

Exeunt

Enter the Dolphin, Orleance, Ramburs, and Beaumont.

Orleance. The Sunne doth gild our Armour vp, my Lords.

Dolph. Monte Chenal: My Horſe, Verlot Lacquay: Ha.

Orleance. Oh braue Spirit.

Dolph. Vra les eyes & terre.

Orleance. Rien plus le air & feu

Dolph. Cem, Cousin Orleance. Enter Conſtable.

Now my Lord Conſtable?

Conſt. Hearke how our Steedes, for preſent Seruice neigh.

Dolph. Mount them, and make incision in their Hides, That their hot blood may ſpin in Engliſh eyes, And doubt them with ſuperſuous courage: ha.

Ram What, wil you haue them weep our Horſes blood? How ſhall we then behold their naturall teares?

Enter Meſſenger.

Meſſeng. The Engliſh are embattail'd, you French Peeres.

Conſt. To Horſe you gallans Princes, ſtraight to Horſe. Doe but behold yond poore and ſtarued Band,

And your faire ſhew ſhall ſuck away their Soules, Leauing them but the ſhales and huſkes of men.

There is not worke enough for all our hands,

Scarce blood enough in all their ſickly Veines,

To giue each naked Curtlex a ſtayne,

That our French Gallants ſhall to day draw out,

And ſheath for lack of ſport. Let vs but blow on them,

The vapour of our Valour will o're-riume them.

'Tis poſſitue againſt all exceptions, Lords,

That our ſuperſuous Lacquies, and our Peſants,

Who in vnneceſſarie action ſwarme

About our Squares of Battaile, were enow

To purge this field of ſuch a biding Foe,

Though we vpon this Mountaines Baſis by,

Tooke ſtand for idle ſpeculation.

But that our Honours muſt not. What's to ſay?

A very little little let vs doe,

And all is done: then let the Trumpets ſound

The Tucker ſonance, and the Note to mount:

For our approach ſhall ſo much dare the field,

That England ſhall couch downe in feare, and yeeld.

Enter Grandpre.

Grandpre. Why do you ſtay ſo long, my Lords of France?

Yond Iland Carrions, deſperate of their bones,

Ill-fauouredly become the Morning field.

Their ragged Curtaines poorely are let looſe,

And our Ayce ſhakes them paſſing ſcornfully.

Bigge Mars ſeemes banqu'rout in their begger'd Hoſt.

And faintly through a ruſtie Beuer peepes.

The Horſemen ſit like fixed Candleſticks,

With Torch-ſtaues in their hand and their poore Iades

Lob downe their heads, dropping the hides and hips:

The gumme downe roping from their pale-dead eyes,

And in their pale dull mouthes the Iymold Bitt

Lyes ſoule with chaw'd-graſſe, ſtill and motionleſſe,

And their exccutors, the knauiſh Crowes,

Flye o're them all, impatient for their howre.

Deſcription cannot ſure it ſelfe in words,

To demonſtrate the Life of ſuch a Battaile,

In life ſo lueleſſe, as it ſhewes it ſelfe.

Conſt. They haue ſaid their prayers,

And they ſtay for death.

Dolph. Shall we goe ſend them Dinners, and freſh Sutes,

And giue their faſting Horſes Prouender,
And after fight with them?

Conſt. I ſtay but for my Guard: on
To the field, I will the Banner from a Trumpet take,
And vſe it for my haſte. Come, come away,
The Sunne is high, and we out-weare the day. Exeunt.

Enter Glouceſter, Bedford, Exeter, Erpingham with all his Hoſt Salisbury, and Westmerland.

Glouc. Where is the King?

Bedf. The King himſelfe is rode to view their Battaile.

West. Of fighting men they haue full threſcore thouſand.

Exe. There's ſiue to one, beſides they all are freſh.

Salub. Gods Arme ſtrike with vs, 'tis a fearefull oddes.
God buy' you Princes all; Ile to my Charge:

If we no more meet, till we meet in Heauen;

Then ioiſfully, my Noble Lord of Bedford,

My deare Lord Glouceſter, and my good Lord Exeter,

And my kind Kiſman, Warriors all, adieu

Bedf. Farwell good Salisbury, & good luck go with thee.

And yet I doe thee wrong, to mind thee of it,

For thou art fram'd of the firme truth of valour.

Exe. Farwell kind Lord fight valiantly to day.

Bedf. He is as full of Valour as of Kindneſſe,

Princely in both.

Enter the King.

West. O that we now had here

But one ten thouſand of thoſe men in England,

That doe no worke to day.

King. What's he that wiſhes ſo?

My Couſin Westmerland No, my faire Couſin:

If we are mark't to dye, we are enow

To doe our Countrey loſſe: and if to liue,

The fewer men, the greater ſhare of honour.

God's will, I pray thee wiſh not one man more.

By Ioue, I am not couetous for Gold,

Nor care I who doth feed vpon my coſt:

It yemies me not, if men my Garniments weare;

Such outward things dwell not in my deſires.

But if it be a ſinne to couet Honor,

I am the moſt offending Soule aliu.

No faith, my Couze, wiſh not a man from England.

Gods peace, I would not looſe ſo great an Honor,

As one man more me thinks would ſhare from me,

For the beſt hope I haue. O, doe not wiſh one more:

Rather proclaime it (Westmerland) through my Hoſt,

That he which hath no ſtomack to this fight,

Let him depart, his Paſport ſhall be made,

And Crownes for Conuoy put into his Purſe:

We would not dye in that mans companie,

That feares his fellowſhip, to dye with vs

This day is call'd the Feaſt of Criſpian.

He that out-lives this day, and comes ſafe home,

Will ſtand a tip-roe when this day is named,

And rowle him at the Name of Criſpian.

He that ſhall ſee this day, and liue old age,

Will yeerely on the Vigil feaſt his neighbours,

And ſay, to morrow is Saint Criſpian.

Then will he ſtrip his ſleeue, and ſhew his ſkarres:

Old men forget; yet all ſhall be forgot:

But hee'll remember, with aduantage,

What feats he did that day. Then ſhall our Names,

Familiar in his mouth as houſehold words,

Harry

Harry the King, Bedford and Exeter,
Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Gloucester,
Be in their flowing Cups freshly remembered.

This story shall the good man teach his sonne:
And Crispine Crispian shall ne're goe by,
From this day to the ending of the World,
But we in it shall be remembered,
We few, we happy few, we band of brothers.
For he to day that sheds his blood with me,
Shall be my brother. be he ne're so vile,
This day shall gentle his Condition.
And Gentlemen in England, now a bed,
Shall thinke the selues accurst they were not here,
And hold their Manhoods cheape, whiles any speakes,
That fought with vs vpon Saint Crispines day.

Enter Salisbury.

Sal My Soueraign Lord, bestow your selfe with speed
The French are brauely in their battailes set,
And will with all expedience charge on vs

King. All things are ready, if our minds be so

West. Perish the man, whose mind is backward now.

King. Thou do'st not wish more helpe from England, Couze?

West. Gods will, my Liege, would you and I alone,
Without more helpe, could fight this Royall battaile.

King. Why now thou hast vnwisht fise thousand men
Which likes me better, then to wish vs one.
You know your places God be with you all.

Tucket Enter Montjoy

Mont. Once more I come to know of thee King Harry,
If for thy Ransome thou wilt now compound,
Before thy most assured Ouerthru.:
For certainly, thou art so neere the Gulfe,
Thou needs must be englutted. Besides, in mercy
The Constable desires thee, thou wilt mind
Thy followers of Repentance; that their Soules
May make a peacefull and a sweet retyre
From off these fields where(wretches) their poore bodies
Must lye and fester.

King. Who hath sent thee now?

Mont. The Constable of France.

King. I pray thee beare my former Answer back.
Bid them atchieue me, and then sell my bones
Good God, why should they mock poore fellowes thus?
The man that once did sell the Lyons skin
While the beast liu'd, was kill'd with hunting him.
A many of our bodies shall no doubt
Find Native Graues vpon the which, I trust
Shall witnesse liue in Brasse of this dayes worke.
And those that leaue their valiant bones in France,
Dying like men, though buried in our Dunghills,
They shall be fam'd - for there the Sun shall greet them,
And draw their honors reeking vp to Heauen,
Leauing their earthly parts to choake your Clyme,
The smell whereof shall breed a Plague in France.
Marke then abounding valour in our English.
That being dead, like to the bullets crafing,
Breake out into a second course of mischeife,
Killing in relapse of Mortalitie.
Let me speake proudly. Tell the Constable,
We are but Warriors for the working day.
Our Gaynesse and our Gilt are all besmyrcht
With raynie Marching in the painefull field.
There's not a piece of feather in our Hoast
Good argument(I hope) we will not flye.

And time hath worne vs into slouennie.
But by the Masse, our hearts are in the trim:
And my poore Souldiers tell me, yet ere Night,
They'le be in fresher Robes, or they will pluck
The gay new Coats o're the French Souldiers heads,
And turne them out of seruice. If they doe this,
As if God please, they shall, my Ransome then
Will soone be leuyed.

Herauld, saue thou thy labour
Come thou no more for Ransome, gentle Herauld,
They shall haue none, I sweare, but these my ioyns.
Which if they haue, as I will, leaue vm them,
Shall yeeld them little, tell the Constable.

Mont. I shall, King Harry. And so fare thee well:
Thou neuer shalt heare Herauld any more. Exit.

King. I feare thou wilt once more come againe for a Ransome.

Enter Torke

Torke. My Lord, most humbly on my knee I begge
The leading of the Vaward.

King. Take it, braue Torke.

Now Souldiers march away,
And how thou pleasest God, dispose the day. Exeunt

Alarum. Excursions.

Enter Pistol, French Souldier, Boy.

Pist. Yeeld Curte.

French. Je pense que vous estes le Gentilhomme de bon qua-litee

Pist. Qualitie calme cuture me Art thou a Gentleman? What is thy Name? discusse.

French. O Seigneur Dieu

Pist. O Signieur Dewe should be a Gentleman: per-pend my words O Signieur Dewe, and marke: O Signieur Dewe, thou dyest on point of Fox, except O Signieur thou doe giue to me egregious Ransome.

French. O prennies misericordie aye pitez de moy.

Pist. Moy shall not serue, I will haue fortie Moyes for
I will fetch thy rymme out at thy Throat, in dropes of Crimson blood.

French. Est il impossible d'eschapper le force de ton bras.

Pist. Brasse, Curte: thou damned and luxurious Moun-taine Goat, offer'tt me Brasse?

French. O perdonne moy.

Pist. Say'tt thou me so? is that a Tonne of Moyes?
Come hither boy, aske me this slaue in French what is his Name

Boy. Esconte comment estes vous appelle?

French. Monsieur le Fer

Boy. He sayes his Name is M. Fer.

Pist. M. Fer: Ile fer him, and firke him, and ferret him:
discusse the same in French vnto him,

Boy. I doe not know the French for fer, and ferret, and firke.

Pist. Bid him prepare, for I will cut his throat.

French. Que dit il Monsieur?

Boy. Il me commande a vous dire que vous faite vous prest, car ce soldat icy est disposee tout assure de compes vostre gorge.

Pist. Owy, cuppele gorge permafoy pesant, vnlesse thou giue me Crownes, braue Crownes, or mangled shalt thou be by this my Sword.

French. O le vous supplie pour l'amour de Dieu: ma par-donner, le suis le Gentilhomme de bon maison, garde ma vie, et le vous donneray deux cent escus.

Pist. What are his words?

Boy. He

Boy. He prayes you to saue his life, he is a Gentleman of a good house, and for his ransom he will giue you two hundred Crownes.

Pist. Tell him my fury shall abate, and I the Crownes will take.

From Petre Monsieur que dit il?

Roy. Encore qu'il et contra son Surement, de pardonner aucune prisonner: reant-mons pour les esclues que vous layt a promets, il est content a vous donner le liberte le franchisement.

Fre. Sur mes genoux se vous donnez milles remerciours, et le me estime beureux que Je, tombe, entre les main. d'un Chastelier Je pense le plus brave valiant et tres distinte signeur d'Angleterre.

Pist. Expound vnto me boy.

Boy. He giues you vpon his knees a thousand thanks, and he esteemes himselfe happy, that he hath salne into the hands of one (as he thinkes) the most braue, valorous and thrice-worthy signeur of England.

Pist. As I sucke blood, I will some mercy shew. Follow mee.

Boy. Saue vous le grand Capitaine?

I did neuer know so full a voyce issue from so emptie a heart. but the saying is true, The empty vessel makes the greatest sound, Bardolfe and Nym had tenne times more valour, then this roaring diuell in this olde play, that euery one may payre his nayles with a wooden dagger, and they are both hang'd, and so would this be, if hee durst Reale any thing aduenturously. I must stay with the Lackies with the luggage of our camp, the French might haue a good pray at vs, if he knew of it, for there is none to guard it but boyes. Exit.

Enter Constable, Orleans, Bourbon, Dolphin, and Ramburs.

Con. O Diable

Orl. O signeur le iour et perdis, toute et perdis.

Dal. Mor Dieu ma vie, all is confounded all,

Reproach, and euermolting shame
Sits mocking in our Plumes. A short Alarm.

O meschante Fortune, do not runne away.

Con. Why all our ranks are broke

Dal. O perdurable shame, let's stab our selues:

Bethese the wretches that we plaid at dice for?

Orl. Is this the King we sent too, for his ransom?

Bur. Shame, and eternall shame, nothing but shame,
Let vs dye in once more backe againe,

And he that will not follow Burbon now,

Let him go hence, and with his cap in hand

Like a base Pander hold the Chamber doore,

Whilst a base slaue, no gentler then my dogge,

His fairest daughter is contaminated

Con. Disorder that hath spoild vs, friend vs now,
Let vs on heapes go offer vp our liues.

Orl. We are enow yet huing in the Field,

To smother vp the English in our throngs,

If any order might be thought vpon.

Bur. The diuell take Order now, Ile to the throng;
Let life be short, else shame will be too long. Exit.

Alarm. Enter the King and his trayne, with Prisoners.

King. Well haue we done: thrice-valiant Countermen,
But all's not done, yet keepe the French the field

Exc. The D. of York commends him to your Maiesty

King. *Liues he good Vnckle: thrice within this houre
I saw him downe; thrice vp againe, and fighting,
From Helmet to the spurre, all blood he was.*

Exc. In which array (braue Soldier) doth he lye,
Larding the plaine: and by his bloody side,

(Yoake-fellow to his honour-owing-wounds)
The Noble Earle of Suffolke also lyes.

Suffolke first dyed, and Yorke all haged ouer
Comes to him, where in gore he lay insleept,

And takes him by the Beard, kisses the gashes
That bloodily did yawne vpon his face.

He cryes aloud; Tarry my Cousin Suffolke,
My soule shall thine keepe company to heauen:

Tarry (sweet soule) for mine, then flye a-breast;
As in this glorious and well-foughten field

We kept together in our Chiuallrie.

Vpon these words I came, and cheer'd him vp,

He smil'd me in the face, raight me his hand,

And with a feeble gripe, sayes. Deere my Lord,

Commend my seruice to my Soueraigne,

So did he turne, and ouer Suffolkes necke

He threw his wounded arme, and kist his lippes,

And so espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd
A Testament of Noble-ending-love.

The prettie and sweet manner of it forc'd
Those waters from me, which I would haue stop'd,

But I had not so much of man in mee,
And all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gaue me vp to teares

King. I blame you not,
For hearing this, I must perforce compound

With mixtfull eyes, or they will issue to

But hearken, what new alarm is this same?

The French haue re-enforc'd their scatter'd men

Then euery souldiour kill his Prisoners,

Giue the word through. Exit

Actus Quartus.

Enter Fluellen and Gower

Flu. Kill the poyes and the luggage, 'Tis expressly against the Law of Armes, tis as arrant a peece of knauery marke you now, as can bee offert in your Conscience now, is it not?

Gow. 'Tis certaine, there's not a boy left aliue, and the Cowardly Rascalls that ranne from the battaile ha' done this slaughter besides they haue burned and carried away all that was in the Kings Tent, wherefore the King most worthily hath caus'd euery soldiour to cut his prisoners throat. O 'tis a gallant King.

Flu. I, hee was porne at Monmouth Captaine Gower.
What call you the Townes name where Alexander the pig was borne?

Gow. Alexander the Great.

Flu. Why I pray you, is not pig, great? The pig, or the gear, or the mighty, or the huge, or the magnanimous, are all one reckouings, saue the phraze is a litle variations.

Gow. I thinke Alexander the Great was borne in Macedon, his Father was called Phillip of Macedon, as I take it.

Flu. I thinke it is in Macedon where Alexander is

porne: I tell you Captaine, if you looke in the Maps of the Orld, I warrant you shall finde in the comparisons betwene Macedon & Monmouth, that the situations looke you, is both alike. There is a Riuer in Macedon, & there is also moreouer a Riuer at Monmouth, it is call'd Wye at Monmouth, but it is out of my praifes, what is the name of the other Riuer but 'tis all one, 'tis alike as my fingers is to my fingers, and there is Salmones in both. If you marke Alexanders life well, Harry of Monmouth his life is come after it indifferent well, for there is figures in all things. Alexander God knowes, and you know, in his rages, and his furies, and his wraths, and his chollers, and his moodes, and his pleasures, and his indignations, and also being a little intoxicated in his praifes, did in his Ales and his angers (looke you) kill his best friend Clytus.

Gow Our King is not like him in that, he neuer kill'd any of his friends.

Fla It is not well done (marke you now) to take the tales out of my mouth, ere it is made and finished I speak but in the figures, and comparisons of it - as Alexander kild his friend Clytus, being in his Ales and his Cuppes, so also Harry Monmouth being in his right wittes, and his good iudgements, turn'd away the fat Knight with the great belly doublet he was full of icells, and gypes, and knaueries, and mockes, I haue forgot his name.

Gow Sir Iohn Falstaffe.

Fla That is he Ile tell you, there is good men porne at Monmouth

Gow Heere comes his Maiesty

Alarum. Enter King Harry and Burbon with prisoners Flourish.

King. I was not angry since I came to France, Vntill this instant Take a Trumpet Herald, Ride thou vnto the Horsemen on yond hill: If they will fight with vs, bid them come downe, Or voyde the field they do offend our sight. If they'l do neither, we will come to them, And make them sker away, as swift as stones Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Besides, wee'l cut the throats of those we haue, And not a man of them that we shall take, - Shall taste our mercy. Go and tell them so.

Enter Montjoy

Exc. Here comes the Herald of the French, my Liege

Glou His eyes are humbler then they vs'd to be.

King. How now, what meanes this Herald? Knowst thou not,

That I haue sin'd these bones of mine for ransom? Com'st thou againe for ransom?

Her. No great King.

I come to thee for charitable License, That we may wander ore this bloody field, To booke our dead, and then to bury them, To sort our Nobles from our common men For many of our Princes (woe the while) Lye drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood. So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbes In blood of Princes, and with wounded steeds Fret fet-locke deepe in gore, and with wilde rage Yerke out their armed heeles at their dead masters, Killing them twice. O giue vs leaue great King, To view the field in safety, and dispose Of their dead bodies.

Kin I tell thee truly Herald, I know not if the day be ours or no, For yet a many of your horiemen peere, And gallop ore the field.

Her. The day is yours.

Kin. Praised be God, and not our strength for it: What is this Castle call'd that stands hard by.

Her. They call it Agencourt.

King Then call we this the field of Agencourt, Fought on the day of Crispin (Crispiannus).

Fla. Your Grandfather of famous memory (an't please your Maiesty) and your great Vncle Edward the Placke Prince of Wales, as I haue read in the Chronicles, fought a most prauce battell here in France.

Kin They did Fluellen.

Fla. Your Maiesty sayes very true: If your Maiesties is remembered of it, the Welchmen did good seruice in a Garden where Leekes did grow, wearing Leekes in their Monmouth caps, which your Maiesty know to this houre is an honourable badge of the seruice: And I do beleue your Maiesty takes no scorn to weare the Lecke vppon S. Taues day.

King. I weare it for a memorable honor: For I am Welch you know good Countryman.

Fla. All the water in Wye, cannot wash your Maiesties Welsh blood out of your pody, I can tell you that: God plesse it, and preferue it, as long as it pleases his Grace, and his Maiesty too.

Kin Thankes good my Countrymen.

Fla By Iellu, I am your Maiesties Countreyman, I care not who know it: I will confesse it to all the Orld, I need not to be ashamed of your Maiesty, praised be God so long as your Maiesty is an honest man.

King. Good keepe me so

Enter Williams

Our Heralds go with him, Bring me iust notice of the numbers dead On both our parts Call yonder fellow hither.

Exc. Souldier, you must come to the King.

Kin Souldier, why wear'st thou that Gloue in thy Cappe?

Will And't please your Maiesty, 'tis the gage of one that I shuld fight withall, if he be aliu.

Kin An Englishman?

Will. And't please your Maiesty, a Rascall that swagger'd with me last night: who if aliu, and euer dare to challenge this Gloue, I haue iworne to take him a boxe a'th ere - or if I can see my Gloue in his cappe, which he swore as he was a Souldier he would weare (if aliu) I wil strike it out soundly.

Kin What thinke you Captaine Fluellen, is it fit this souldier keepe his oath

Fla Hee is a Crauen and a Villaine else, and't please your Maiesty, in my conscience.

King. It may bee, his enemy is a Gentleman of great sort quite from the answer of his degree.

Fla Though he be as good a Gentleman as the diuel is, as Lucifer and Belzebub himselfe, it is necessary (looke your Grace) that he keepe his vow and his oath: If hee bee perur'd (see you now) his reputation is as arrant a villaine and a lacke sawce, as euer his blacke shoo trodd vpon Gods ground, and his earth, in my conscience law

King Then keepe thy vow sirrah, when thou meet'st the fellow.

Will. So, I wil my Liege, as I liue.

King Who seru'st thou vnder?

Will

Will. Vnder Capitaine Gower, my Liege.

Flu. Gower is a good Capitaine, and is good knowledge and literatured in the Warres.

King. Call him hither to me, Souldier.

Will. I will my Liege. Exit.

King. Here Fluellen, weare thou this fauour for me, and sticke it in thy Cappe. when Alanson and my selfe were downe together, I pluckt this Gloue from his Helme: If any man challenge this, hee is a friend to Alanson, and an enemy to our Person; if thou encounter any such, apprehend him, and thou do'st me loue.

Flu. Your Grace doo's me as great Honors as can be desir'd in the hearts of his Subiects. I would faine see the man, that ha's but two legges, that shall find himselfe agree'd at this Gloue; that is all but I would faine see it once, and please God of his grace that I might see.

King. Know'st thou Gower?

Flu. He is my deare friend, and please you.

King. Pray thee goe seeke him; and bring him to my Tent.

Flu. I will fetch him. Exit.

King. My Lord of Warwick, and my Brother Gloster, Follow Fluellen closely at the heeles.

The Gloue which I haue giuen him for a fauour, May haply purchase him a box a'th'care, It is the Souldiers. I by bargaine should Weare it my selfe. Follow good Cousin Warwick: If that the Souldier strike him, as I iudge By his blunt bearing, he will keepe his word; Some sodaine mischief may arise of it. For I doe know Fluellen valiant, And toucht with Choler, hot as Gunpowder, And quickly will returne an iniurie. Follow, and see there be no harme betwene them. Goe you with me, Vnckle of Exeter. Exeunt

Enter Gower and Williams.

Will. I warrant it is to Knight you, Capitaine.

Enter Fluellen.

Flu. Gods will, and his pleasure, Capitaine, I beseech you now, come apace to the King: there is more good toward you peraduenture, then is in your knowledge to dreame of.

Will. Sir, know you this Gloue?

Flu. Know the Gloue? I know the Gloue is a Gloue.

Will. I know this, and thus I challenge it.

Strikes him.

Flu. 'Sblud, an arrant Traytor as anyes in the Vniuersall World, or in France, or in England.

Gower. How now Sir? you Villaine

Will. Doe you thinke I be forsworne?

Flu. Stand away Capitaine Gower, I will giue Treason his payement into plowes, I warrant you.

Will. I am no Traytor.

Flu. That's a Lye in thy Throat. I charge you in his Maiesties Name apprehend him, he's a friend of the Duke Alanson.

Enter Warwick and Gloucester

Warw. How now, how now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Lord of Warwick, heere is, pray'd be God for it, a most contagious Treason come to light, looke you, as you shall desire in a Summers day. Heere is his Maiestie.

Enter King and Exeter.

King. How now, what's the matter?

Flu. My Liege, heere is a Villaine, and a Traytor, that looke your Grace, ha's strooke the Gloue which your Maiestie is take out of the Helmet of Alanson.

Will. My Liege, this was my Gloue, here is the fellow of it: and he that I gaue it to in change, promis'd to weare it in his Cappe: I promis'd to strike him, if he did: I met this man with my Gloue in his Cappe, and I haue been as good as my word.

Flu. Your Maiestie heare now, sauing your Maiesties Manhood, what an arrant rascally, beggerly, lowlie Knaue it is: I hope your Maiestie is peare me testimonie and witnesse, and will auouchment, that this is the Gloue of Alanson, that your Maiestie is giue me, in your Conscience now.

King. Giue me thy Gloue Souldier; Looke, heere is the fellow of it.

'Twas I indeed thou promis'd'st to strike, And thou hast giuen me most bitter termes.

Flu. And please your Maiestie, let his Neck answere for it, if there is any Marshall Law in the World.

King. How canst thou make me satisfaction?

Will. All offences, my Lord, come from the heart: neuer came any from mine, that might offend your Maiestie.

King. It was our selfe thou didst abuse.

Will. Your Maiestie came not like your selfe: you appear'd to me but as a common man; witnesse the Night, your Garments, your Lowlinesse. and what your Highnesse suffer'd vnder that shape, I beseech you take it for your owne fault, and not mine: for had you beene as I tooke you for, I made no offence, therefore I beseech your Highnesse pardon me.

King. Here Vnckle Exeter, fill this Gloue with Crownes, And giue it to this fellow. Keepe it fellow, And weare it for an Honor in thy Cappe, Till I doe challenge it. Giue him the Crownes: And Capitaine, you must needs be friends with him.

Flu. By this Day and this Light, the fellow ha's meritt enough in his belly. Hold, there is twelue-pence for you, and I pray you to serue God, and keepe you out of prawles and prabblers and quarrels and dissensions, and I warrant you it is the better for you.

Will. I will none of your Money.

Flu. It is with a good will. I can tell you it will serue you to mend your shoes. come, wherefore should you be so pashfull, your shoes is not so good: 'tis a good filling I warrant you, or I will change it.

Enter Herald.

King. Now Herald, are the dead numbred?

Herald. Heere is the number of the slaught'ed French.

King. What Prisoners of good sort are taken, Vnckle?

Exe. Charles Duke of Orleance, Nephew to the King, John Duke of Bourbon, and Lord Bouchignard Of other Lords and Barons, Knights and Squires, Full fifteene hundred, besides common men.

King. This Note doth tell me of ten thousand French That in the field lye slaine: of Princes in this number, And Nobles bearing Banquers, there lye dead One hundred twentie six: added to these, Of Knights, Esquires, and gallant Gentlemen, Eight thousand and foure hundred. of the which, Five hundred were but yesterday dubb'd Knights So that in these ten thousand they haue lost, There are but sixteene hundred Mercenaries, The rest are Princes, Barons, Lords, Knights, Squires, And

And Gentlemen of bloud and qualitie.
The Names of those their Nobles that lye dead :
Charles Delabresh, High Constable of France,
Jagues of Chatilion, Admirall of France,
The Master of the Crosse-bowes, Lord Rambures,
Great Master of France, the braue Sir Guchard Dolphin,

The Brother to the Duke of Burgundie,
And Edward Duke of Barr : of lustie Earles,
Grandpree and Roussie, Fauconbridge and Foyes,
Beaumont and Murle, Vandemont and Lestrale
Here was a Royall fellowship of death.
Where is the number of our English dead ?
Edward the Duke of Yorke, the Earle of Suffolke,
Sir Richard Ketly, Dauy Gam Esquire ;
None else of name : and of all other men,
But fise and twentie.

O God, thy Arme was heere :
And not to vs, but to thy Arme alone,
Ascribe we all : when, without stratagem,
But in plaine shock, and euen play of Battaile,
Was euer knowne so great and little losse ?
On one part and on th'other, take it God,
For it is none but thine.

Exet. 'Tis wonderfull.

King Come goe me in procession to the Village :
And be it death proclaymed through our Hoast,
To boast of this, or take that prayse from God,
Which is his onely.

Flu. Is it not lawfull and please your Maiestie, to tell how many is kill'd ?

King Yes Capitaine but with this acknowledgement,
That God fought for vs.

Flu. Yes, my conscience, he did vs great good.

King. Doe we all holy Rights :

Let there be sung Non nobis, and Te Deum,
The dead with charitie enclos'd in Clay :
And then to Callice, and to England then,
Where ne're from France arriv'd more happy mer.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus.

Enter Chorus

Vouchsafe to those that haue not read the Story,
That I may prompt them : and of such as haue,
I humbly pray them to admit th'excuse
Of time, of numbers, and due course of things,
Which cannot in their huge and proper life,
Be here presented. Now we beare the King
Toward Callice Graunt him there, there scene,
Heaue him away vpon your winged thoughts,
Athwart the Sea : Behold the English beaen
Pales in the flood ; with Men, Wiues, and Boyes,
Whose shouts & claps out-voyce the deep-mouth'd Sea,
Which like a nightie Whiffer 'fore the King,
Seemes to prepare his way. So let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London.
So swift a pace hath Thought, that euen now
You may imagine him vpon Black-Heath.
Where, that his Lords desire him, to haue borne
His bruis'd Helmet, and his bended Sword
Before him, through the Citie he forbids it,

Being free from vain-nesse, and selfe-glorious pride ;
Giuing full Trophee, Signall, and Oftent,
Quite from himselfe, to God. But now behold,
In the quick Forge and working-houise of Thought,
How London doth powre out her Citizens,
The Maior and all his Brethren in best fort,
Like to the Senatours of th'antique Rome,
With the Plebeians swarming at their heeles,
Goe forth and fetch their Conqu'ring Cæsar in :
As by a lower, but by louing likelinoode,
Were now the Generall of our gracious Empreffe,
As in good time he may, from Ireland comming,
Bringing Rebellion broached on his Sword ;
How many would the peacefull Citie quit,
To welcome him? much more, and much more cause,
Did they this Harry. Now in London place him.
As yet the lamentation of the French
Inuities the King of Englands stay at home :
The Emperours comming in behalfe of France,
To order peace betweene them : and omit
All the occurrences, what euer chanc'e,
Till Harryes backe returne againe to France.
There must we bring him ; and my selfe haue play'd
The interim, by remembring you 'tis past
Then brooke abridgement, and your eyes aduance,
After your thoughts, straight backe againe to France.

Exit.

Enter Elvelan and Gower

Gower Nay, that's right : but why weare you your Leeke to day? S. Dauies day is past.

Flu. There is occasions and causes why and wherefore in all things : I will tell you asse my friend, Capitaine
Gower, the rascally, scauld, beggerly, lowsie, pragg
Knaue Pistol, which you and your selfe, and all the World, know to be no better then a fellow, looke you now, of no merits. hee is come to me, and prings me pread and fault yesterday, looke you, and bid me eate my Leeke.
it was in a place where I could not breed no contention with him ; but I will be so bold as to weare it in my Cap till I see him once againe, and then I will tell him a little piece of my desires.

Enter Pistol

Gower Why heere hee comes, swelling like a Turkey-cock.

Flu. 'T's no matter for his swellings, nor his Turkeycocks. God plesse you aunchent Pistol you scurue low-sie Knaue, God plesse you.

Pist. Ha, art thou bedlam? doest thou thirst, base
Troian, to haue me sold vp Parcas fatall Web? Hence ;
I am qualmish at the smell of Leeke.

Flu. I pefeech you heartily, scurue lowsie Knaue, at my desires, and my requests, and my petitions, to eate, looke you, this Leeke, because, looke you, you doe not loue it, nor your affections, and your appetites and your disfections doo's not agree with it, I would desire you to eate it

Pist. Not for Cadwallader and all his Goats

Flu. There is one Goat for you. Strikes him.

Will you be so good, scauld Knaue, as eate it?

Pist. Bafe Troian, thou shalt dye.

Flu. You say very true, scauld Knaue, when Gods will is. I will desire you to lue in the meane time, and eate your Viduals. come, there is sawce for it. You call'd me yesterday Mountaine-Squier, but I will make you

The Life of Henry the Fifth.

you to day a squire of low degree. I pray you fall too, if you can mocke a Lecke, you can eate a Lecke.

Gow. Enough Capraine, you haue astonisht him.
Flu. I say, I will make him eate some part of my lecke, or I will peate his pate foure dayes: bite I pray you, it is good for your greene wound, and youi ploddie Coxcomb.

Pist. Must I bite.

Flu. Yes certainly, and out of doubt and out of question too, and ambiguities.
Pist. By this Lecke, I will most horribly reuenge I eate and eate I swear.

Flu. Eate I pray you, will you haue some more sauce to your Lecke: there is not enough Lecke to swear by.
Pist. Quiet thy Cudgell, thou dost see I eate.

Flu. Much good do you scald knaue, heartily. Nay, pray you throw none away, the skinne is good for your broken Coxcombe; when you take occasions to see Leekes heereafter, I pray you mocke at 'em, that is all.

Pist. Good.

Flu. I, Leekes is good: hold you, there is a groat to heale your pate.

Pist. Mea groat?

Flu. Yes verily, and in truth you shall take it, or I haue another Lecke in my pocket, which you shall eate.

Pist. I take thy groat in earnest of reuenge.

Flu. If I owe you any thing, I will pay you in Cudgels, you shall be a Woodmonger, and buy nothing of me but cudgels: God buy you, and keepe you, & heale your pate.

Pist. All hell shall stirre for this

Gow. Go, go, you are a counterfeit cowardly Knaue, will you mocke at an ancient Tradition: began vpon an honourable respect, and worne as a memorable Trophée of predeceased valor, and dare not auouch in your deeds any of your words. I haue scene you gleeking & galling at this Gentleman twice or thrice. You thought, because he could not speake English in the native garb, he could not therefore handle an English Cudgell: you finde it otherwise, and henceforth let a Welsh correction, teach you a good English condition, fare ye well.

Pist. Doe the fortune play the huswife with me now? News haue I that my Doll is dead i'th Spittle of a maldy of France, and there my rendezvous is quite cut off. Old I do waxe, and from my wearie limbes honour is Cut-purse of quicke hand. To England will I steale, and there Ile steale. And patches will I get, vnto these cudgell scarres, And swore I got them in the Gallia warres.

Exit

Enter at one doore, King Henry, Exeter, Bedford, Warwick, and other Lords. At another, Queene Isabel, the King, the Duke of Burgonne, and other French.

King. Peace to this meeting, wherefore we are met; Vnto our brother France, and to our Sister Health and faire time of day. Joy and good wishes To our most faire and Princely Cousine Katherine: And as a branch and member of this Royalty, By whom this great assembly is contri'd, We do salute you Duke of Burgonne, And Princes French and Peeres health to you all.
Fra. Right ioyous are we to behold your face, Most worthy brother England, fairely met, So are you Princes (English) euery one,

Quee. So happy be the Issue brother Ireland Of this good day, and of this gracious meeting, As we are now glad to behold your eyes, Your eyes which hitherto haue borne In them against the French that met them in their bent, The fatal Balls of murdering Basiliskes: The venome of such Lookes we fairely hope Haue lost their qualitie, and that this day Shall change all griefes and quarrels into loue.

Eng. To cry Amen to that, thus we appeare.
Quee. You English Princes all, I doe salute you.

Burg. My dutie to you both, on equall loue. Great Kings of France and England: that I haue labour'd With all my wits, my paines, and strong endeuors, To bring your most Imperiall Maiesties Vnto this Barre, and Royall enterview;

Your Mightinesse on both parts best can witness. Since then my Office hath so farre preuayl'd, That Face to Face, and Royall Eye to Eye,

You haue congreected: let it not disgrace me, If I demand before this Royall view,

What Rub, or what Impediment there is, Why that the naked, poore, and mangled Peace, Deare Nourse of Arts, Plenties, and ioyfull Births, Should not in this best Garden of the World, Our fertile France, put vp her louely Visage?

And all her Husbandry doth lye on heapes, Corrupting in it owne fertilitie.

Her Vine, the merry chearer of the heart, Vnpruned, dyes: her Hedges euen pleach'd, Like Prisoners wildly ouer-growne with hayre,

Put forth disorder'd Twigs: her fallow Leas, The Darnell, Hemlock, and ranke Fennel, Doth root vpon; while that the Culter ruffs,

That should deracinate such Sauagery, The euen Meade, that erst brought sweetly forth The freckled Cowslip, Burnet, and Greene Clover,

Wanting the Sythe, withall vncorrected, ranke; Conceales by idlenesse, and nothing reemes, But hatefull Docks, rough Thistles, Keksyes, Burres, Loosing both beautie and vtilitie; And all our Vineyards fallowes, Meades, and Hedges, Detectiue in their natur'es, grow to wildnesse.

Even so our Houses, and our selues, and Children, Hue lost, or doe not learne, for want of time, The Sciences that should becom e our Country,

But grow like Sauages, & Souldiers will, That nothing doe, but reedite on Blood,

To Swearing, and sterne Lookes, defus'd Attire, And euery thing that seemes vnnaturall.

Which to reduce into our former fauour, You are assembled: and my speech entreats,

That I may know the Let, why gentle Peace Should not expell these inconueniences,

And blesse vs with her former qualities, Eng. If Duke of Burgonne, you would the Peace,

Whole want giues growth to th'imperfections Which you haue cited; you must buy that Peace With full accord to all our iust demands,

Whose Tenures and particula effects You haue enshedul'd briefly in your hands

Burg. The King hath heard them. to the which, as yet There is no Answer made.

Eng. Well then the Peace which you before so urg'd, Lyes in his Answer.

France. I haue but with a curfellarie eye
O're-glanc't the Articles. Pleaseth your Grace
To appoint some of your Councell presently
To sit with vs once more, with better heed
To re-survey them; we will suddenly
Passe our accept and peremptorie Answer.

England Brother we shall Goe Vnckle Exeter,
And Brother Clarence, and your Brother Gloucester,
Warwick, and Huntington, goe with the King,
And take with you free power, to ratifie,
Augment, or alter, as your Wisdomes best
Shall see aduantageable for our Dignitie,
Any thing in or out of our Demands,
And wee'll conigne thereto. Will you, faire Sister,
Goe with the Princes or stay here with vs?

Quee. Our gracious Brother, I will goe with them:
Happily a Womans Voyce may doe some good,
When Articles too nicely vrg'd, be stood on

England. Yet leaue our Cousin Katherine here with vs,
She is our capitall Demand, compris'd
Within the fore-ranke of our Articles

Quee. She hath good leaue Exeunt omnes

Manet King and Katherine

King. Faire Katherine, and most faire,
Will you vouchsafe to teach a Souldier tearmes,
Such as will enter at a Ladyes eare,
And pleade his Loue-suit to her gentle heart.

Kath. Your Maiestie shall mock at me, I cannot speake your English.

King. O faire Katherine, if you will loue me soundly with your French heart, I will be glad to heare you con-fesse it brokenly with your English Tongue. Doe you like me, Kate?

Kath. Pardonne moy, I cannot tell wat is like me.

King. An Angell is like you Kate, and you are like an Angell.

Kath. Que dit il que Je suis semblable a les Anges?

Lady. Ouy verayment (sans vostre Grace) ainsi dit il

King. I said so, deare Katherine, and I must not blush to affirme it

Kath. O bon Dieu, les langues des hommes sont pleines de tromperies.

King. What sayes she, faire one? that the tongues of men are full of deceits?

Lady. Ouy, dat de tongeus of de mans is be full of de-ceits: dat is de Princesse.

King. The Princesse is the better English-woman - yfaith Kate, my wooing is fit for thy vnderstanding, I am glad thou canst speake no better English, for if thou couldst, thou wouldst finde me such a plaine King, that thou wouldst thinke, I had sold my Farme to buy my Crowne. I know no wayes to mince it in loue, but directly to say, I loue you, then if you vrge me farther, then to say, Doe you in faith? I weare out my suite. Giue me your answer, yfaith doe, and so clap hands, and a bargaine - how say you, Lady?

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, me vnderstand well.

King. Mistris, if you would put me to Verses, or to Dance for your lake, Kate, why you vndid me for the one
I haue neither words nor measure; and for the other, I haue no strength in measure, yet a reasonable measure in strength. If I could winne a Lady at Leape, frogge, or by vawting into my Saddle, with my Armour on my backe;
vnder the correction of bragging be it spoken, I should quickly leape into a Wife. Or if I might buffet for my Loue, or bound my Horse for her fauours, I could lay on like a Butcher, and sit like a Iack an Apes, neuer off. But before God Kate, I cannot looke greenely, nor gaspe out my eloquence, nor I haue no cunning in protestation;

onely downe-right Oathes, which I neuer vse till vrg'd, nor neuer breake for vrging. If thou canst loue a fellow of this temper, Kate, whose face is not worth Sunne-burning: that neuer looks in his Glasse, for loue of any thing he sees there? let thine Eye be thy Cooke. I speake to thee plaine Souldier. If thou canst loue me for this, take me? if not? to say to thee that I shall dye, is true; but for thy loue, by the L. No. yet I loue thee too. And while thou liu'st, deare Kate, take a fellow of plaine and vncoynd Constancie, for he perforce must do thee right, because he hath not the gift to wooe in other places: for these fellowes of infinit tongue, that can ryme themselues into Ladyes fauours, they doe alwayes reason themselues out againe. What? a speaker is but a prater, a Ryme is but a Ballad, a good Legge will fall, a strait Backe will stoope, a blacke Beard will turne white, a curl'd Pate will grow bald, a faire Face will wither, a full Eye will wax hollow: but a good Heart, Kate, is the Sunne and the Moone, or rather the Sunne, and not the Moone; for it shines bright, and neuer changes, but keepes his course truly. If thou would haue such a one, take me? and take me, take a Souldier: take a Souldier; take a King.
And what say'st thou then to my Loue? speake my faire,
and fairely, I pray thee.

Kath. Is it possible dat I should loue de ennemie of France?

King. No, it is not possible you should loue the Enemie of France, Kate, but in louing me, you should loue the Friend of France for I loue France so well, that I will not part with a Village of it; I will haue it all mine.
and Kate, when France is mine, and I am yours, then yours is France, and you are mine.

Kath. I cannot tell wat is dat.

King. No, Kate? I will tell thee in French, which I am sure will hang vpon my tongue, like a new married Wife about her Husbands Neck, hardly to be shooke off, Je quand sur le possession de France, & quand vous auez le pos- session de moy. Let mee see, what then? Saint Dennis bee my speede! Donc vostre est France, & vous estes mienne
It is as easie for me, Kate, to conquer the Kingdome, as to speake so much more French. I shall neuer moue thee in French, vnlesse it be to laugh at me.

Kath. Sans vostre honneur, le Francois quer vous parlez, il
& melieus que l'Anglois le quel Je parle.

King. No faith it's not, Kate: but thy speaking of my Tongue, and I thinke, most truly falsely, must needes be graunted to be much at one. But Kate, doo'st thou vnderstand thus much English? Canst thou loue mee?

Kath. I cannot tell

King. Can any of your Neighbours tell, Kate? Ile aske them. Come, I know thou louest me: and at night, when you come into your Closer, you'll question this Gentlewoman about me, and I know, Kate, you will to her dispraise those parts in me, that you loue with your heart: but good Kate, mocke me mercifully, the rather gentle Princesse, because I loue thee cruelly. If euer thou best mine, Kate, as I haue a sauing Faith within me tells me thou shalt; I get thee with skambling, and thou must therefore needes proue a good Souldier-breeder:
Shall not thou and I, betwene Saint Dennis and Saint George, compound a Boy, halfe French halfe English, k

that

that shall goe to Constantinople, and take the Turke by the Beard. Shall wee not? what say'st thou, my faire Flower-de-Luce.

Kate. I doe not know dat.

King. No, 'tis hereafter to know, but now to promise: doe but now promise Kate, you will endeavour for your French part of such a Boy; and for my English moytie, take the Word of a King, and a Bachelor. How answer you, La plus belle Katherine du monde mon trescher & deuin deesse.

Kath. Your Maiessee aue faulse Frenche enough to deceiue de most sage Damoiseil d'it's en Fraunce.

King. Now syc vpon my false French by mine Honor in true English, I loue thee Kate, by which Honor, I dare not sweare thou louest me, yet my blood begins to flatter me, that thou doo'st; notwithstanding the poore and vntempering effect of my Visage. Now bestrew my Fathers Ambition, hee was thinking of Ciuill Warres when hee got me, therefore was I created with a stubborn out-side, with an aspect of Iron, that when I come to wooe Ladies, I fright them: but in faith Kate, the elder I wax, the better I shall appeare. My comfort is, that Old Age, that ill layer vp of Beautie, can doe no more spoyle vpon my Face. Thou hast me, if thou hast me, at the worst; and thou shalt weare me, if thou weare me, better and better: and therefore tell me, most faire Katherine, will you haue me? Put off your Maiden Blushes, auouch the Thoughts of your Heart with the Iookes of an Empresse, take me by the Hand, and say, Harry of England, I am thine: which Word thou shalt no sooner blesse mine Eare withall, but I will tell thee alowd, England is thine, Ireland is thine, France is thine, and Henry Plantaguet is thine; who, though I speake it before his Face, if he be not Fellow with the best King, thou shalt finde the best King of Good-fellowes. Come your Answer in broken Musick, for thy Voyce is Musick, and thy English broken. Therefore Queene of all, Katherine, breake thy minde to me in broken English, wilt thou haue me?

Kath. Dat is as it shall please de Roy mon pere.

King. Nay, it will please him well, Kate, it shall please him, Kate.

Kath. Den it fall also content me.

King. Vpon that I kisse your Hand, and I call you my Queene.

Kath. Laisse mon Seigneur, laisse, laisse, may foy Je ne veu point que vous abbaïsse vostre granaeus, en baisant le main d'une nostre Seigneur indigne seruiterr excuse moy, Je vous supplie mon tres-puissant Seigneur.

King. Then I will kisse your Lippes, Kate.

Kath. Les Dames & Damoisels pour estre baisees deuant leur nopcese il net pas le costume de Fraunce.

King. Madame, my Interpreter, what sayes shee?

Lady. Dat it is not be de fashon pour le Ladies of Fraunce; I cannot tell wat is buisse en English.

King. To kisse.

Lady. Your Maiessee entendre better que moy.

King. It is not a fashion for the Maids in Fraunce to kisse before they are married, would she say?

Lady. Ouy verayment.

King. O Kate, nice Customes curke to great Kings. Deare Kate, you and I cannot bee confin'd within the weake Lyft of a Countreyes fashion. wee are the makers of Manners, Kate; and the libertie that followes our Places, stoppes the mouth of all finde-faults, as I will doe yours, for vpholding the nice fashion of your Countrey, in denyng me a Kisse: therefore patiently, and yeelding. You haue Witch-craft in your Lippes, Kate: there is more eloquence in a Sugar touch of them, then in the Tongues of the French Councill; and they should sooner perswade Harry of England, then a generall Petition of Monarchs. Heere comes your Father.

Enter the French Power, and the English Lords.

Burg. God saue your Maiessee, my Royall Cousin, teach you our Princessse English?

King. I would haue her learne, my faire Cousin, how perfectly I loue her, and that is good English.

Burg. Is shee not apt?

King. Our Tongue is rough, Coze, and my Condition is not smooth. so that hauing neyther the Voyce nor the Heart of Flatterie about me, I cannot so coniure vp the Spirit of Loue in her, that hee will appeare in his true likeness.

Burg. Pardon the franknesse of my mirth, if I answer you for that. If you would coniure in her, you must make a Circle: if coniure vp Loue in her in his true likeness, hee must appeare naked, and blinde. Can you blame her then, being a Maid, yet ros'd ouer with the Virgin Crimson of Modestie, if shee deny the apparance of a naked blinde Boy in her naked seeing selfe? It were (my Lord) a hard Condition for a Maid to conigne to.

King. Yet they doe winke and yeeld, as Loue is blind and entorces

Burg. They are then excus'd, my Lord, when they see not what they doe.

King. Then good my Lord, teach your Cousin to consent winking.

Burg. I will winke on her to consent, my Lord, if you will teach her to know my meaning: for Maides well Summer'd, and warme kept, are like Flies at Bartholomew-tyde, blinde, though they haue their eyes, and then they will endure handling, which before would not abide looking on.

King. This Morall eyes me ouer to Time, and a hot Summer; and so I shall catch the Flye, your Cousin, in the latter end, and shee must be blinde to.

Burg. As Loue is my Lord, before it loues.

King. It is so: and you may, some of you, thanke Loue for my blindness, who cannot see many a faire French Citie for one faire French Maid that stands in my way.

French King. Yes my Lord, you see them perspectiue the Cities turn'd into a Maid; for they are all gyrdled with Maiden Walls, that Warre hath entred

England. Shall Kate be my Wife?

France. So please you.

England. I am content, so the Maiden Cities you talke of, may wait on her. so the Maid that stood in the way for my With, shall shew me the way to my Will.

France. Wee haue consented to all tearmes of reason.

England. Is't so, my Lords of England?

West. The King hath graunted euery Article. His Daughter first; and in sequele, all, According to their firme propos'd natures.

Exit. Onely

Exet. Onely he hath not yet subscribed this :
Where your Maieslie demands, That the King of France having any occasion to write for matter of Graunt, shall name your Highnesse in this forme, and with this addition, in French · Nostre trescher filz Henry Roy d Angleterre
Heretere de France : and thus in Laune ; Præclarissimus
Filius noster Henricus Rex Anglia & Heres Francie.

France Nor thus I have not Brother so deny'd,
But your request shall make me let it passe

England I pray you then, in loue and deare allyance,
Let that one Article ranke with the rest,
And thereupon giue me your Daughter.

France. Take her faire Sonne, and from her blood rayse vp Issue to me, that the contending Kingdomes
Of France and England, whose very shoares looke pale,
With enuy of each others happinesse,
May cease their hatred ; and this deare Coniunction
Plant Neighbour-hood and Christian-like accord
In their sweet Bosomes : that neuer Warre aduance
His bleeding Sword 'twixt England and faire France.

Lords Amen,

King Now welcome Kate and beare me witnesse all,
That here I kisse her as my Soueraigne Queene,

Flourish

Quee God, the best maker of all Marriages,
Combine your hearts in one, your Realmes in one :
As Man and Wife being two, are one in loue,
So be there 'twixt your Kingdomes such a Spoufall,
That neuer may ill Office, or fell Icaloufie,

Which troubles oft the Bed of blessed Marriage,
Thrust in betweene the Patior of these Kingdomes,
To make diuorce of their incorporate League :
That English may as French, French Englishmen,
Receiue each other. God speake thus Amen.

All. Amen.

King. Prepare we for our Marriage : on which day,
My Lord of Burgundy wee'le take your Oath
And all the Peeres, for suretie of our Leagues,
Then shall I sweare to Kate, and you to me,
And may our Oathes well kept and prosp'rous be.

Senet

Exeunt.

Enter Chorms

Thus farre with rough, and all-vnable Pen,
Our bending Author hath pursu'd the Story,
In little roome confining mightie men,
Mangling by starts the full course of their glory.
Small time but in that small, most greatly liued
This Starre of England, Fortune made his Sword ;
By which, the Worlds best Garden he atchieued.
And of it left his Sonne Imperiall Lord
Henry the Sixt, in Infant Bands crown'd King
Of France and England, did this King succede:
Whose State so many had the managing,
That they lost France, and made his England bleed :
Which oft our Stage hath showne ; and for their sake,
In your faire minds let this acceptance take,

FINIS.

The

The first Part of Henry the Sixt.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Dead March.

Enter the Funerall of King Henry the First, attended on by the Duke of Bedford, Regent of France, the Duke of Gloster, Protector, the Duke of Exeter War-wicke, the Bishop of Winchester, and the Duke of Somerset.

Bedford

Having bey heuens with black, yield day to night,
Comets importing change of Times and States,
Brandish your crystall Tresses in the Skie,
And with them scourge the bad reuolting Stars,
That haue contented vnto Henries death.

King Henry the First, too famous to liue long,
England ne're lost a King of so much worth

Gloster England ne're had a King vntill his time
Vertue he had, deseruing to command,
His brandish't Sword did blinde men vith his beames,
His Armes spred wider then a Dragons Wings.
His sparkling Eyes, repleat with wrathfull fire,
More dazled and droue back his Enemies,
Then mid-day Sunne, fierce bent ag'inst their faces.
What should I say? his Deeds exceed all speech.
He ne're lift vp his Hand, but conquered.

Eve We mourne in black, why mourne we not in blood?
Henry is dead, and neuer shall reuiue
Vpon a Woodden Coffin we attend,
And Deaths dishonourable Victorie,
We with our stately pretence glorifie,
Like Captiues bound to a Triumphant Carre.
What? shall we curse the Planets of Mishap,
That plotted thus our Glories overthrow?
Or shall we thinke the subtile-witted French,
Coniurers and Sorcerers, that afraid of him,
By Magick Verses h'ue contriud his end.

Winch He was a King, blest of the King of Kings.
Vnto the French, the dreadfull Iudgement-Day
So dreadfull will not be, as was his fight.
The Battailles of the Lord of Hosts he fought.
The Churches Prayers made him so prosperous

Gloster The Church? where is it?
Had not Church-men pray'd,
His thred of Life had not so soone decay'd.
None doe you like, but an effeminate Prince,
Whom like a Schoole-boy you may ouer-awe.

Winch Gloster, what are we like, thou art Protector,
And lookest to command the Prince and Realme.
Thy Wife is proud, she holderh thee in awe,
More then God or Religious Church-men may.

Gloster Name not Religion, for thou lou'st the Flesh,
And ne're throughout the yeere to Church thou go'st,
Except it be to pray against thy foes.

Bed Cease, cease these farres, & rest your minds in peace
Let's to the Altar Heralds wayt ou' vs;
In stead of Gold, wee le offer vp our Armes,
Since Armes away le not, now that Henry is dead,
Posteritie await for wretched yeeres,
When at their Mothers moistened eyes, Babes shall suck,
Our Ile be made a Nourish ot salt Terres,
And none but Women left to wayle the dead,
Henry the First, thy Ghost I inuocate
Prosper this Realme, keepe it from Ciuill Broyles,
Combat with aduerse Planets in the Heauens;
A true more glorious Starre thy Soule will make,
Then Lulus Caesar, or bright----

Enter a Messenger

Mess. My honourable Lords, health to you all.
Sad tidings bring I to you out of France,
Of losse of slaughter, and disconfiture:
Guyen, Champagne, Lheines, Orleans,
Paris Guviers, Poitiers, are all quite lost.

Bed. What sayst thou man, before dead Henry's Corse?
Speake softly, or the losse of those great Townes
Will make him burst his Lead, and rise from death.

Gloster. Is Paris lost? is Roan yeilded up?
If Henry were recall'd to life againe,
These news would cause him once more yeeld the Ghost.

Eve How were they lost? what trecherie was vs'd?

Mess No trecherie, but want of Men and Money
Amongst the Souliers this is muttered,
That here you maintaine feuerall Factions
And whilst a Field should be dispatcht and fought,
You are disputing of your Generals,
One would h'ue lingering Warres, with little cost,
Another would flye swift, but wanteth Wings
A third thinks, without expence at all,
By guilefull faire words, Peace may be obtayn'd.
Awake, awake, English Nobilitie,
Let not slouth dimme your Honors, new begot;
Crope are the Flower-de-Luces in your Armes
Of Englands Coat, one halfe is cut away.

Eve Were our Teares wanting to this Funerall,
These Tidings would call forth her flowing Tides.

Bed. Me they concerne, Regent I am of France.
Giue me my steeld Coat, Ile fight for France.
Away with these disgracefull wayling Robes,
Wounds will I lend the French, in stead of Eyes,
To weepe their intermissiue Mileries.

Exit

Enter to them another Messenger.

Mess. Lords view these Letters, full of bad mischance
France is reuolted from the English quite,
Except some petty Townes, of no import.
The Dolphin Charles is crowned King in Rheimes:
The Bastard of Orleans with him is ioyn'd.

Reynold, Duke of Amou, doth take his part,
The Duke of Alanson flyeth to his side. Exit.

Eve. The Dolphin crown'd King? all flye to him?
O whither shall we flye from this reproach?

Gloster. We will not flye, but to our enemies throats.
Bedford, it thou be slacke, Ile fight it out

Bed. Gloster, why doubtst thou of my fory ardenesse?
An Army haue I muster'd in my thoughts,
Wherewith already France is ouer-run.

Enter another Messenger

Mess. My gracious Lords, to add to your laments,
Wherewith you now bew Jew King Henries hearse,
I must informe you of a dismall fight,
Betwixt the stout Lord Talbot, and the French.

Win. What? wherein Talbot ouercame, is't so?

3. Mess. O no: wherein Lord Talbot was o rethrown
The circumstance Ile tell you more at large.

The tenth of August last, this dreadfull Lord,
Retyring from the Siege of Orleans,
Hauing full scarce six thousand in his troupe,
By three and twentie thousand of the French
Was round compassed, and set vpon
No leysure had he to enranke his men.
He wanted Pikes to set before his Archers.

In stead whereof, sharpe Stakes pluckt out of Hedges
They pitched in the ground confusedly,
To keepe the Horsemen off, from breaking in.

More then three houres the fight continued
Where valiant Talbot, about humane thought,
Enacted wonders with his Sword and Lance.

Hundreds he sent to Hell, and none durst stand him
Here, there, and euery where enrag'd, he slew
The French exclaim'd, the Demill was in Armes,

All the whole Army stood agaz'd on him.
His Souldiers spying his vndaunted Spirit,
A Talbot, a Talbot, cry'd out amaine,

And rusht into the Bowels of the Battaille.
Here had the Conquest fully been seal'd vp,

If Sir John Falstaffe had not play'd the Coward.
He being in the Vauward, plac't behinde,

With purpose to relieue and follow them,
Cowardly fled, not hauing struck one stroake.

Hence grew the generall wrack and massacre:
Enclosed were they with their Enemies.

A bafe Wallon, to win the Dolphins grace,
Thrust Talbot with a Speare into the Back,

Whom all France, with their chiefe assembled strength,
Durst not presume to looke once in the face

Bedf. Is Talbot slaine then? I will slay my selfe,
For liuing idly here, in pompe and ease,

Whil st such a worthy Leader, wanting ayd,
Vnto his dastard foe-men is betray'd.

3. Mess. O no, he liues, but is tooke Prisoner,
And Lord Scates with him, and Lord Hungerford.

Most of the rest slaughter'd, or tooke likewise.
Bedf. His Ransome there is none but I shall pay.

Ile hale the Dolphin headlong from his Throne,
His Crowne shall be the Ransome of my friend.

Four of their Lords Ile change for one of ours.

Farwell my Masters, to my Taskt will I,
Bonfires in France forthwith I am to make.

To keepe our great Saint Georges Feast withall.
Ten thousand Souldiers with me I will take,

Whose bloody deeds shall make all Europe quake.

3. Mess. So you had need, for Orleans is besieg'd,
The English Army is growne weake and faint:

The Earle of Salisbury craueth supply,
And hardly keeps his men from mutinie,

Since they so few, watch such a multitude.

Exit. Remember Lords your Oathes to Henry sworne:
Eytter to quell the Dolphin vterly,

Or bring him in obedience to your yoa ke.

Bedf. I doe remember it, and here take my leave,
To goe about my preparation. Exit Bedford.

Gloster. Ile to the Tower with all the hast I can,
To view th' Artillerie and Munition,

And then I will proclayne young Henry King.
Exit Gloster

Eve. To Eltam will I, where the young King is,
Being ordain'd his speciall Gouernor,

And for his safetie there Ile best deuise. Exit.

Winch. Each hath his Place and Function to attend
I am left out, for me nothing remains:

But long I will not be lack out of Office.
The King from Eltam I intend to send,

And sit at chiefeest Sterne of publike Weale.
Exit.

Sound a Flo trish

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reigneir, marching with Drum and Souldiers.

Charles. Mars his true mourning, euen as in the Heauens,
So in the Earth, to this day is not knowne.

Late did he shine vpon the English side.

Now we are Victors, vpon vs he smiles.

What Townes of any moment, but we haue?

At pleasure here we lye, neere Orleans:

Otherwhiles, the famisht English, like pale Ghosts,

Faintly besiege vs one houre in a moneth.

Alon. They want their Porridge, & their fat Bul Becues

Eytter they must be dyeted like Mules,

And haue their Prouender ty'd to their mouthes,

Or pitteous they will looke, like drowned Mice.

Reigneir. Let's rayse the Siege why liue we idly here?

Talbot is taken, whom we wont to feare

Remayneth none but mad-brayn'd Salisbury,

And he may well in fretting spend his gall,

Nor men nor Money hath he to make Warre.

Charles. Sound, sound Alarum, we will rush on them.

Now for the honour of the forlorne French:

Him I forgieue my death, that killeth me,

When he sees me goe back one foot, or flye. Exeunt.

Here Alarum, they are beaten back by the English, with great losse.

Enter Charles, Alanson, and Reigneir.

Charles. Who euer saw the like? what men haue I?

Dogges, Cowards, Dastards: I would ne're haue fled,

But that they left me 'midst my Enemies.

Reigneir. Salisbury is a desperate Homicide,

He fighteth as one weary of his life.

The other Lords, like Lyons wanting foode,

Doe rush vpon vs as their hungry prey.

Alanson. Froyard, a Countreyman of ours, records,
England all Oliners and Rowlands breed,
During the time Edward the third did raigoe:
More truly now may this be verified;
For none but Samsons and Goliasses

It sendeth forth to skirmish: one to tenne?
Leane raw-bon'd Rascals, who would e're suppose,
They had such courage and audacitie?

Charles. Let's leaue this Towne,
For they are hayre-brayn'd Slaues,
And hunger will enforce them to be more eager:
Of old I know them, rather with their Teeth
The Walls they le teare downe, then forsake the Siege.

Reignier. I thinke by some odde Gimmors or Deuice
Their Armes are set, like Clocks, still to strike on;
Else ne're could they hold out so as they doe:
By my consent, wee'le euen let them alone.

Alanson. Be it so.

Enter the Bastard of Orleance.

Bastard. Where's the Prince Dolphin? I haue newes for him.

Dolph. Bastard of Orleance, thrice welcome to vs.

Bast. Me thinks your looks are sad, your chear appall'd.
Hath the late ouerthrow wrought this offence?
Be not dismay'd, for succour is at hand.

A holy Maid hither with me I bring,
Which by a Vision sent to her from Heauen,
Ordain'd is to rayse this tedious Siege,
And drive the English forth the bounds of France:
The spirit of deepe Prophecie she hath,
Exceeding the nine Sibyls of old Rome.
What's past, and what's to come, she can descry.
Speake, shall I call her in? beleue my words,
For they are certaine, and vsfallible.

Dolph. Goe call her in, but first, to try her skill,
Reignier stand thou as Dolphin in my place;
Question her proudly, let thy Lookes be sterne,
By this meanes shall we found what skill she hath.

Enter some Puzel.

Reignier. Faire Maid, is't thou wilt doe these wondrous deeds?

Puzel. Reignier, is't thou that thinkest to beguile me?
Where is the Dolphin? Come, come from behinde,
I know thee well, though neuer seene before.
Be not amaz'd, there's nothing hid from me;
In priuate will I talke with thee apart:
Stand back you Lords, and giue vs leaue a while.

Reignier. She takes vpon her brauely at first dash.

Puzel. Dolphin, I am by birth a Shepheards Daughteer,
My wit vntrayn'd in any kind of Art:
Heauen and our Lady gracious hath it pleas'd
To shine on my contemptible estate.
Loe, whilst I wayted on my tender Lambes,
And to Sunnes parching hear display'd my cheekes,
Gods Mother deigned to appeare to me,
And in a Vision full of Maiesie,
Will'd me to leaue my base Vocation,
And free my Countrey from Calamitie,
And free my Countrey from Calamitie:
Her ayde she promis'd, and assur'd successe.
In compleat Glory shee reueal'd her selfe:
And whereas I was black and swart before,
With those cleare Rayes, which shee infus'd on me,
That beautie am I blest with, which you may see.

Aske me what question thou canst possible,
And I will answer vnpremeditated:
My Courage trie by Combat, if thou dar'st,
And thou shalt finde that I exceed my Sex,
Resolue on this, thou shalt be fortunate,
If thou receiue me for thy Warlike Mate.

Dolph. Thou hast astonish'd me with thy high termes, Onely this prooffe Ile of thy Valour make,
In single Combat thou shalt buckle with me;
And if thou vanquishest, thy words are true,
Otherwise I renounce all confidence.

Puzel. I am prepar'd: here is my keene-edg'd Sword,
Deckt with fine Flower-de-Luces on each side,
The which at Touraine, in S. Katherines Church yard,
Out of a great deale of old Iron, I chose forth.

Dolph. Then come a Gods name, I feare no woman.

Puzel. And while I liue, Ile ne're flye from a man.

Here they fight, and some say Puzel ouercomes

Dolph. Stay, stay thy hands, thou art an Amazon,
And fightest with the Sword of Debera.

Puzel. Christs Mother helps me, else I were too weake.

Dolph. Who e're helps thee, 'tis thou that must helpe me.
Impatiently I burne with thy desire,
My heart and hands thou hast at once subdu'd.
Excellent Puzel, if thy name be so,
Let me thy seruant, and not Soueraigne be,
'Tis the French Dolphin sueth to thee thus.

Puzel. I must not yeeld to any rights of Loue,
For my Profession's sacred from above.
When I haue chased all thy Foes from hence,
Then will I thinke vpon a recompence

Dolph. Meane time looke gracious on thy prostrate Thrall.

Reignier. My Lord me thinke is very long in talke.

Alus. Doubtelesse he strues this woman to her smock,
Else ne're could he so long protract his speech.

Reignier. Shall wee disturbe him, since hee keeps no meare?

Alus. He may meane more then we poor men do know.
These women are shrewd tempters with their tongues.

Reignier. My Lord, where are you? what deuise you on?
Shall we que o're Orleance, or no?

Puzel. Why no, I say: distrustfull Recreants,
Fight till the last gaspe. Ile be your guard.

Dolph. What shee sayes, lie confirme wee'le fight it out.

Puzel. Assign'd am I to be the English Scourge.
This night the Siege assuredly Ile rayle:
Expect Saint Alarins Summer, Halcyons dayes,
Since I haue entred into these Warres.
Glory is like a Circle in the Water,
Which neuer ceaseth to enlarge it selfe,
Till by broad spreading, it disperse to naught.
With Henries death, the English Circle ends,
Dispersed are the glories it included:
Now am I like that proud insulting Ship,
Which Casir and his fortune bare at once.

Dolph. Was Mahomet inspired with a Doue?
Thou with an Eagle art inspired then.

Helen, the Mother of Great Constantine,
Nor yet S. Philips daughters were like thee.
Bright Starre of Penns, false downe on the Earth,
How may I reuerently worship thee enough?

Alanson. Leau off delays, and let vs rayse the Siege.

Reignier. Wo-

Reignier. Woman, do what thou canst to saue our honors,
Drive them from Orleance, and be immortaliz'd.
Dolph. Presently wee'll try. come, let's away about it,
No Prophet will I trust, if shee proude false. Exeunt.

Enter Gloster, with his Serving-men

Gloster. I am come to suruey the Tower this day;
Since Henries death, I feare there is Conueyance:
Where be these Warders, that they wait not here?
Open the Gates, tis Gloster that calls.

1 Warder. Who's there, that knocks so imperiously?

Gloster. 1. Man. It is the Noble Duke of Gloster.

2. Warder. Who ere he be, you may not be let in.

1. Man. Villaines, answer you so the Lord Protector?

1. Warder. The Lord protect him, so we answer him,
We doe no otherwise then wee are will d.

Gloster. Who will'd you? or whose will stands but mine?
There's none Protector of the Realme, but I
Breake vp the Gates, Ile be your warrantize,
Shall I be flowted thus by dunghill Groomes?

*Glosters men rush at the Tower Gates, and Woodville
the Lieutenant speaks within*

Woodville. What noyse is this? what Traytors haue wee here?

Gloster. Lieutenant, is it you whose voyce I heare?

Open the Gates, here's Gloster that would enter.

Woodville. Haue patience Noble Duke, I may not open,
The Cardinall of Winchester forbids.

From him I haue expresse commandement,
That thou nor none of thine shall be let in.

Gloster. Faint-hearted Woodville, prizest him 'fore me?

Arrogant Winchester that haughtie Prelate,
Whom Henry our late Soueraigne ne're could brooke?
Thou art no friend to God, or to the King.

Open the Gates, or Ile shut thee out shortly.

Serving-men. Open the Gates vnto the Lord Protector,
Or wee'll burst them open, if that you come not quickly.

Enter to the Protector at the Tower Gates Winchester and his men in Tawney Coates.

Wincheſt. How now ambitious Vmpher, what meanes
this?

Gloster. Piel'd Priest, doo'st thou command me to be shut out?

Winch. I doe, thou most vsurping Proditor,
And not Protector of the King or Realme.

Gloster. Stand back thou manifest Conspirator,
Thou that contriued'st to murder our dead Lord,
Thou that giu'st Whores Indulgences to sinne,
Ile canuas thee in thy broad Cardinalls Hat,
If thou proceed in this thy insolence.

Winch. Nay, stand thou back, I will not budge a foot:
This be Damascus, be thou curst Cain,
To slay thy Brother Abel, if thou wilt.

Gloster. I will not slay thee, but Ile drive thee back:
Thy Scarlet Robes, as a Childs bearing Cloth,
Ile vse, to carry thee out of this place.

Winch. Doe what thou dar'st, I heard thee to thy face.

Gloster. What? am I dar'd, and bearded to my face?
Draw men, for all this prisedged place,
Blew Coats to Tawny Coats, Priest, beware your Beard,
I meane to tugge it, and to cusse you soundly.
Vnder my feet I stampe thy Cardinalls Hat

In sight of Pope, or dignities of Church,
Here by the Cheekes Ile drag thee vp and downe.

Winch. Gloster, thou wilt answer this before the Pope.

Gloster. Winchester Goose, I cry, a Rope, a Rope.
Now beat them hence, why doe you let them stay?
Thee Ile chafe hence, thou Wolle in Sheepes array.
Out Tawney-Coates, out Scarlet Hypocrite.

*Here Glosters men beat out the Cardinalls men, and enter in the hurly-burly the Maior
of London, and his Officers.*

Maior. Fye Lords, that you being supreme Magistrates,
Thus contumeliously should breake the Peace.

Gloster. Peace Maior, thou know'st little of my wrongs.
Here's Beauford, that regards nor God nor King,
Hath here distrayn'd the Tower to his vse.

Winch. Here's Gloster, a Foe to Citizens,
One that still motions Warre, and neuer Peace,
O're-charging your free Purfes with large Fines;
That seekes to overthrow Religion,
Because he is Protector of the Realme;
And would haue Armour here out of the Tower,
To Crowne himselfe King, and suppress the Prince.

Gloster. I will not answer thee with words, but blowes.
Here they skirmish againe.

Maior. Naught rests for me, in this tumultuous strife,
But to make open Proclamation.

Come Officer, as lowd as e're thou canst, cry.

All manner of men, assembled here in Armes this day, against Gods Peace and the Kings, wee charge and command you, in his Highnesse Name, to repaire to your severall dwelling places, and not to weare, handle, or vse any Sword, Weapon, or Dagger herce-forward, vpon paine of death.

Gloster. Cardinall, Ile be no breaker of the Law.
But we shall meer, and breake our minds at large.

Winch. Gloster, wee'll meet to thy cost, be sure:
Thy heart-blood I will haue for this dayes worke.

Maior. Ile call for Clubs, if you will not away.

This Cardinall's more haughtie then the Deuill.
Gloster. Maior farewell. thou doo'st but what thou may'st.

Winch. Abhominable Gloster, guard thy Head,
For I intend to haue it ere long. Exeunt.

Maior. See the Coast clear'd, and then we will depart.
Good God, these Nobles should such stomacks beare,
I my selfe fight not once in fortie yeere. Exeunt.

Enter the Master Gunner of Orleant, and his Boy.

M. Gunner. Sirrha, thou know'st how Orleance is besieg'd,
And how the English haue the Suburbs worne.

Boy. Father I know, and oft haue shot at them,
How e're vnfortunate, I mis'd my ayme.

M. Gunner. But now thou shalt not Be thou rul'd by me
Chiefe Master Gunner am I of this Towne,
Something I must doe to procure me grace:
The Princes espials haue informed me,
How the English, in the Suburbs close entrencht,
Went through a secret Grate of Iron Barres,
In yonder Tower, to ouer-peere the Citie,
And thence discouer, how with most aduantage
They may vex vs with Shot or with Assault.
To intercept this inconueniencie,
A Peece of Ordnance gainst it I haue plac'd,

And

And euen these three dayes haue I watcht,
If I could see them. Now doe thou watch,
For I can stay no longer.

If thou spy'st any, runne and bring me word,
And thou shalt finde me at the Gouvernors Exit.

Boy Father, I warrant you, take you no care,
He neuer trouble you, if I may spye them Exit.

Enter Salisbury and Talbot on the Turrets, with others

Salub. Talbot, my life, my toy, againe return'd?
How wert thou handled, being Prisoner?
Or by what meanes got'st thou to be releas'd?
Discombe I prethee on this Turrets top

Talbot. The Earle of Bedford had a Prisoner,
Call'd the braue Lord Ponton de Saustrayle,
For him was I exchang'd, and ransom'd.
But with a baser man of Armes by farre,
Once in contempt they would haue barter'd me:
Which I disdain'd, scorn'd, and crau'd death,
Rather then I would be so pil'd esteem'd:

In fine, redeem'd I was as I desir'd.
But O, the trecherous Falstaffe wounds my heart,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him brought into my power.

Salub. Yet tell'st thou not, how thou wert entertain'd.

Tal. With scoffes and scornes, and contumelious taunts,
In open Market-place produc't they me,
To be a publique spectacle to all.

Here, sayd they, is the Terror of the French,
The Scar-Crow that affrights our Children so
Then broke I from the Officers that led me,
And with my nayles digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurle at the beholders of my shame
My grisly countenance made others flye,
None durst come neere, for feare of suddaine death.

In Iron Walls they deem'd me not secure:
So great feare of my Name 'mongst them were spread,
That they suppos'd I could rend Barres of Steele,
And spurne in pieces Posts of Adamant.
Wherefore a guard of chosen Shot I had,
That walkt about me euery Minute while.
And if I did but stirre out of my Bed,
Ready they were to ihoote me to the heart.

Enter the Boy with a Limbeck.

Salub. I grieve to heare what torments you endur'd,
But we will be reueng'd sufficiently.

Now it is Supper time in Orleance:
Here, through this Grate, I count each one,
And view the Frenchmen how they fortifie:
Let vs looke in, the fight will much delight thee.

Sir Thomas Gargraue, and Sir William Glansdale,
Let me haue your expresse opinions,
Where is best place to make our Batt'ry next?

Gargraue I thinke at the North Gate, for there stands Lords

Glansdale And I heere, at the Buiwarke of the Bridge.

Talb. For ought I see, this Citie must be famisht,
Or with light Skirmishes enfeebled. Here they shot, and Salisbury falls downe.

Salub. O Lord haue mercy on vs, wretched sinners.

Gargraue O Lord haue mercy on me, wofull man.

Talb. What chance is this, that suddenly hath crost vs?
Speake Salisbury; at least, if thou canst, speake:

How far'st thou, Mirror of all Martiall men?
One of thy Eyes, and thy Cheekes side struck off?
Accursed Tower, accursed fatall Hand,
That hath contriu'd this wofull Tragedie.
In thirteene Battailes, Salisbury o'recame:
Henry the Fifth he first trayn'd to the Warres.
Whil'st any Trumpe did found, or Drum struck vp,
His Sword did ne're leaue striking in the field.
Yet ha'st thou Salisbury? though thy speech doth sayle
One Eye thou hast to looke to Heauen for grace.
The Sunne with one Eye vieweth all the World,
Heauen be thou gracious to none aliue,
If Salisbury wants mercy at thy hands
Beare hence his Body, I will helpe to bury it.
Sir Thomas Gargraue, hast thou any life?
Speake vnto Talbot, nay, looke vp to him.
Salisbury cheare thy Spirit with this comfort,
Thou shalt not dye whiles——

He beckens with his hand, and smiles on me.
As who should say, When I am dead and gone,
Remember to auenge me on the French.

Plantagenet I will, and like thee,
Play on the Lute, beholding the Townes burne:
Wretched shall France be onely in my Name.

Here an Alarm, and it Thunders and Lightens.
What stirre is this? what tumult's in the Heauens?
Whence cometh this Alarm, and the noyse?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My Lord, my Lord, the French haue gather'd heards
The Dolphin, with one Joane de Puzel ioyn'd,
A holy Prophetesse, new risen vp,
Is come with a great Power, to rayse the Siege.

Here Salisbury lesteeth himselfe up, and groanes.

Talb. Heare, heare, how dying Salisbury doth groane,
It irkes his heart he cannot be reueng'd.
Frenchmen, be a Salisbury to you.

Puzel or Pussel, Dolphin or Dog-fish,
Your hearts be stampe out with my Horses heeles,
And make a Quagmire of your mingled braines.
Conuey me Salisbury into his Tent,
And then wee le try what these dastard Frenchmen dare.

Alarm. Exit.

Here an Alarm againe, and Talbot pursueth the Dolphin, and drineth him. Then enter Joane de Puzel, drawing Englishmen before her.

Then enter Talbot.

Talb. Where is my strength, my valour, and my force?
Our English Troupes retyre, I cannot stay them,
A Woman clad in Armour chafeth them.

Enter Puzel.

Here, here shee comes. He haue a bowt with thee:
Deuill, or Devils Dam, He comure thee:
Blood will I draw on thee, thou art a Witch,
And straightway giue thy Soule to him thou seru'st.

Puzel Come, come, 'tis onely I that must disgrace thee.

Here they fight

Talb. Heauens, can you suffer Hell so to preuaile?
My brest He burst with straining of my courage,
And from my shoulders crack my Armes asunder,
But I will chastise this high-minded Strumpet.

They fight againe.

Puzel. Talbot farwell, thy houre is not yet come,
I must goe Visuall Orleance forthwith.

A short Alarm: then enter the Towne with Souldiers.

O're-

O're-take me if thou canst, I scorn thy strength.
Goe, goe, cheare vp thy hungry-starued men,
Helpe Salisbury to make his Testament,
This Day is ours, as many more shall be. Exit

Talb. My thoughts are whirled like a Potters Wheele,
I know not where I am, nor what I doe
A Witch by feare, not force, like Hannibal,
Drives back our troupes, and conquers us she lists
So Bees with smoake, and Doves with noysome stench,
Are from their Hyues and Houses driven awy.
They call'd vs, for our fiercenesse, English Dogges,
Now like to Whelpes, we crying runne awy.

A short Alarum.

Hearke Countreymen, eyther renew the fight,
Or teare the Lyons out of Englands Coate;
Renounce your Soyle giue Sheepe in Lyons stead.
Sheepe run not halfe so trecherous from the Wolfe,
Or Horse or Oxen from the Leopard,
As you flye from your oft-subdued Slaves

Alarum Here another Short.

It will not be, retyre into your Trenches
You all consented vnto Salisbury's death,
For none would strike a stroke in his reuenge.
Puzel is entred into Orleance,
In spite of vs, or ought that we could doe
O would I were to dye with Salisbury,
The shame hereof, will make me hide my head.

Exit Talbot

Alarum, Retreat, Tromps

Enter on the Walls, Puzel, Dolphin, Reignier, Alanfon, and Souldiers

Puzel. Advance our waving Colours on the Walls,
Rescu'd is Orleance from the English

Thus Joane de Puzel hath perform'd her word

Dolph. Diuine Creature, Asprea's Daughter,
How shall I honour thee for this successe?

Thy promises are like Adonis Garden,
That one day bloom'd, and fruitfull were the next
France, triumph in thy glorious Prophetsie,
Recouer'd is the Towne of Orleance,
More blessed hap did ne're befall our State

Reignier. Why ring not out the Bells alowd,
Throughout the Towne?

Dolphin command the Citizens make Bonfires,
And feast and banquet in the open streets,
To celebrate the ioy that God hath giuen vs.

Alanfon. All France will be repleat with mirth and ioy,
When they shall heare how we haue play'd the men.

Dolph. 'Tis to me, not we, by whom the day is wonne

For which, I will diuide my Crowne with her,
And all the Priests and Fryers in my Realme,
Shall in procession sing her endless prayse

A stately Pyramis to her Ile reare,
Then Rhadophis or Memphus euer was
In memorie of her, when she is dead,
Her Ashes, in an Urne more precious
Then the rich-iewel'd Coffer of Darius,
Transported, shall be at high Festiuals
Before the Kings and Queenes of France.

No longer on Saint Demis will we cry,
But Joane de Puzel shall be France's Saint.

Come in, and let vs Banquet Royally,
After this Golden Day of Victorie

Fierishe

Exeunt

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Sergeant of a Band, with two Seruants

Ser. Sirs, take your places, and be vigilant.
If an, noyse or Souldier you perceiue
Neere to the walls, by some apparant signe
Let vs haue knowledge at the Court of Guard.

Ser. Sergeant you shall. Thus are poore Seruitors
(When others sleepe vpon their quiet beds)
Constrain'd to watch in darknesse, raine, and cold.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, and Burgundy, with several Ladders. Their Drummes beating a Dead March.

Tal. Lord Regent, and redoubted Burgundy,
By whose approach, the Regions of Artoys,
Millon, and Picardy, are friends to vs

This happy night, the Frenchmen are secure,
Hauing all day carow'd and banquetted,
Embrace we then this opportunitie,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit,

Contriu'd by Art, and balefull Surrey
Bed. Coward of France, how much he wrongs his fame,
Dispaire of his ownearmes fortitude,
To ioyne with Witches, and the helpe of Hell,

Bur. Traitors haue neuer other company
But what's that Puzel whom they tearme so pure?

Tal. A Maid, they say

Bed. A Maid? And be so martiall?

Bur. Pray God she proue not so sculline ere long
If vnderneath the Standard of the French
She carry Armour, as she hath begun.

Tal. Well, let them practise and conuerse with spirits.
God is our forresse, in whose conquering name
Let vs resolute scale their stinty bulwarkes.

Bed. Ascend braue Talbot, we will follow thee.

Tal. Not altogether. Better fare I guesse,
That we do make our entrance severall wayes
That if it chance the one of vs do faile,
The other yet may rise against their force.

Bed. Agreed, Ile to yond corner.

Bur. And I to this

Tal. And heere will Talbot mount, or make his graue
Now Salisbury, for thee and for the right
Of English Henry, shall this night appeare
How much in duty, I am bound to both

Ser. Arme, arme, the enemy doth make assault.

Cry, S. George, A Talbot.

The French leape ore the walls in their shirts. Enter seuen drummes, Bastard, Alanfon, Reignier, halfeready, and halfe weedy.

Alar. How now my Lords? what all vnready so?

Bast. Vnready? I and glad we scap'd so well

Reig. 'Twas time (I trow) to wake and leaue our beds,
Hearing Alarums at our Chamber doores

Alar. Of all exploits since first I follow'd Armes, Nere heard I of a warlike enterprize

More

More venturous, or desperate then this.

Bedf. I thinke this Talbot be a Friend of Hell.

Reig. If not of Hell, the Heauens sure fauour him.

Alansf. Here commeth Charles, I maruell how he sped?

Enter Charles and Ioane.

Bedf. Tut, holy Ioane was his defensiu Guard.

Charl. Is this thy cunning, thou deceitfull Dame?

Didst thou at first, to flatter vs withall,

Make vs partakers of a little gayne,

That now our losse might be ten times so much?

Ioane. Wherefore is Charles impatient with his friend?

At all times will you haue my Power alike?

Sleeping or waking, must I still preuayle,

Or will you blame and lay the fault on me?

Improuident Souldiours, had your Watch been good,

This sudden Mischiefe neuer could haue falne.

Charl. Duke of Alanfon, this was your default,
That being Captaine of the Watch to Night,
Did looke no better to that weightie Charge.

Alansf. Had all your Quarters been as safely kept,
As that whereof I had the gouernment,
We had not bene thus shamefully surpr.z'd.

Bedf. Mine was secure.

Reig. And so was mine, my Lord.

Charl. And for my selfe, most part of all this Night
Within her Quarter, and mine owne Precinct,
I was imploy'd in passing to and fro,
About relieuing of the Centinels.

Then how, or which way, should they first breake in?

Ioane. Question (my Lords) no further of the case,
How or which way; 'tis sure they found some place,
But weakely guarded, where the breach was made:
And now there rests no other shift but this,
To gather our Souldiours, scatter'd and disperc't,
And lay new Plat-formes to endamage them.

Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter a Souldier, crying, a Talbot, a Talbot:
they flye, leauing their Clothes behind.

Sould. He be so bold to take what they haue left:
The Cry of Talbot serues me for a Sword,
For I haue loaden me with many Spoyles,
Vsing no other Weapon but his Name. Exit.

Enter Talbot, Bedford, Burgundie.

Bedf. The Day begins to breake, and Night is fled,
Whose pitchy Mantle ouer-vayl'd the Earth.
Here sound Retreat, and cease our hot pursuit. Retreat.

Talb. Bring forth the Body of old Salisbury,
And here aduance it in the Market-Place,
The middle Centure of this cursed Towne.
Now haue I pay'd my Vow vnto his Soule:
For euery drop of blood was drawne from him,
There hath at least five Frenchmen dyed to night.
And that hereafter Ages may behold
What ruine happened in reuenge of him,
Within their chiefeest Temple he erect
A Tombe, wherein his Corps shall be interr'd:
Vpon the which, that euery one may reade,
Shall be engrau'd the sacke of Orleans,
The trecherous manner of his mournfull death,
And what a terror he had bene to France.
But Lords, in all our bloody Massacre,
I muse we met not with the Dolphins Grace,

His new-come Champion, vertuous Ioane of Acre,
Nor any of his false Confederates.

Bedf. 'Tis thought Lord Talbot, when the fight began,
Row'd on the sudden from their drowlie Beds,
They did amongst the troupes of armed men,
Lespe o're the Walls for refuge in the field.

Burg. My selfe, as farre as I could well discerne,
For smoake, and duskie vapours of the night,
Am sure I scar'd the Dolphin and his Trull,
When Arme in Arme they both came swiftly running,
Like to a payre of louing Turtle-Doues,
That could not liue asunder day or night.
After that things are set in order here,
Wee'll follow them with all the power we haue.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. All hayle, my Lords which of this Princely trayne
Call ye the Warlike Talbot, for his Acts

So much applauded through the Realme of France?

Talb. Here is the Talbot, who would speak with him?

Mess. The vertuous Lady, Countesse of Ouergoe,
With modestie admiring thy Renowne,
By me entreats (great Lord) thou would'st vouchsafe
To visit her poore Castle where she lyes,
That she may boast she hath beheld the man,
Whose glory fills the World with lowd report.

Burg. Is it euen so? Nay, then I see our Wartres
Will turne vnto a peacefull Comick sport,
When Ladyes craue to be encountred with.
You may not (my Lord) despise her gentle suit.

Talb. Ne're trust me then: for when a World of men
Could not preuayle with all their Oratorie,
Yet hath a Womans kindnesse ouer-rul'd:
And therefore tell her, I resume great thanks,
And in submission will attend on her.
Will not your Honors beare me company?

Bedf. No, truly, 'tis more then manners will.
And I haue heard it sayd, Vnbidden Guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone.

Talb. Well then, alone (since there's no remedie)
I meane to proue this Ladyes courtesie.
Come hither Captaine, you perceue my minde

Whispers.

Capt. I doe my Lord, and meane accordingly. Exeunt.

Enter Countesse.

Count. Porter, remember what I gaue in charge,
And when you haue done so, bring the Keyes to me.

Port. Madame, I will. Exit.
Count. The Plot is layd, if all things fall out right,
I shall as famous be by this exploit,
As Scythian Tomrys by Cyrus death.
Great is the rumour of this dreadfull Knight,
And his achievements of no lesse account:
Faine would mine eyes be witnessse with mine eares,
To giue their censure of these rare reports.

Enter Messenger and Talbot.

Mess. Madame, according as your Ladyship desir'd,
By Message crau'd, so is Lord Talbot come.

Count. And he is welcome. what? is this the man?

Mess. Madame, it is.
Count. Is this the Scourge of France?
Is this the Talbot, so much fear'd abroad?
That with his Name the Mothers still their Babes?
I see Report is fabulous and false.

I thought I should haue seene some Hercules,
A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong knit Limbes,
Alas, this is a Child, a silly Dwarfie:
It cannot be, this weake and writhled Shrimpe
Should strike such terror to his Enemies.

Talb. Madame, I haue beene bold to trouble you:
But since your Ladyship is not at leysure,
Ile sort some other time to visit you.

Count. What meanes he now?
Goe aske him, whither he goes?

Mess. Stay my Lord Talbot, for my Lady craues,
To know the cause of your abrupt departure?

Talb. Marry, for that shes in a wrong beleefe,
I goe to certifie her Talbot's here.

Enter Porter with Keyes

Count. If thou be he, then art thou Prisoner.

Talb. Prisoner? to whom?

Count. To me, blood-thirstie Lord
And for that cause I trayn'd thee to my House.
Long time thy shadow hath been thrall to me,
For in my Gallery thy Picture hangs:
But now the substance shall endure the like,
And I will chayne these Legges and Armes of thine,
That hast by Tyrannie these many yeeres
Wasted our Countrey, slaine our Citizens,
And sent our Sonnes and Husbands captiuate.

Talb. Ha, ha, ha

Count. Laughst thou Wretch?

Thy mirth shall turne to moane.

Talb. I laugh to see your Ladyship so fond,
To thinke, that you haue ought but Talbot's shadow,
Whereon to practise your seueritie

Count. Why? art not thou the man?

Talb. I am indeede.

Count. Then haue I substance too

Talb. No, no, I am but shadow of my selfe.
You are deceiu'd, my substance is not here;
For what you see, is but the smallest part,
And least proportion of Humanitie.
I tell you Madame, were the whole Frame here,
It is of such a spacious losie pitch,
Your Roofe were not sufficient to contain't.

Count. This is a Riddling Merchant for the nonce,
He will be here, and yet he is not here:
How can these contrarieties agree?

Talb. That will I shew you presently.

Winds his Horne, Drummes strike up, a Peale of Ordenance Enter Souldiors

How say you Madame? are you now perswaded,
That Talbot is but shadow of himselfe?
These are his substance, sinewes, armes, and strength,
With which he yoaiketh your rebellious Neckes,
Razeth your Cities, and subuerbs your Townes,
And in a moment makes them desolate

Count. Victorious Talbot, pardon my abuse,
I finde thou art no lesse then Fame hath bruted,
And more then may be gathered by thy shape.
Let my presumption not prouoke thy wrath,
For I am sorry, that with reuerence
I did not entertaine thee as thou art.

Talb. Be not dismay'd, faire Lady, nor misconfer
The munde of Talbot, as you did mistake
The outward composition of his body.
What you haue done, hath not offended me:
Nor other satisfaction doe I craue,

But onely with your patience, that we may
Taste of your Wine, and see what Cates you haue,
For Souldiers stomachs alwayes serue them well
Count. With all my heart, and thinke me honored,
To feast so great a Warrior in my House. Exeunt.

Enter Richard Plantagenet, Warwick, Somerset, Poole, and others.

Torke. Great Lords and Gentlemen,
What meanes this silence?

Dare no man answer in a Case of Truth?

Suff. Within the Temple Hall we were too lowd,
The Garden here is more conuenient.

Torke. Then say at once, if I maintain'd the Truth:
Or else was wrangling Somerset in th' error?

Suff. Faith I haue beene a Truant in the Law,
And neuer yet could frame my will to it,
And therefore frame the Law vnto my will.

Som. Iudge you, my Lord of Warwicke, then be-twene vs.

W. r. Between two Hawks, which flies the higher pitch,
Between two Dogs, which hath the deeper mouth,
Between two Blades, which beares the better temper,
Between two Horses, which doth beare him best,
Between two Girdles, which hath the merriest eye,
I haue perhaps some shallow spirit of Iudgement:
But in these nice sharpe Quillets of the Law,
Good faith I am no wiser then a Daw.

Torke. Tut, tut, here is a mannerly forbearance:
The truth appeares so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.

Som. And on my side it is so well apparrell'd,
So cleare, so shining, and so euident,
That it will glimmer through a blind-mans eye.

Torke. Since you are tongue-ty'd, and so loth to speake,
In dumbe significants proclayme your thoughts.
Let him that is a true-borne Gentleman,
And stands vpon the honor of his birth,
If he suppose that I haue pleaded truth,
From off this Bryer pluck a white Rose with me.

Som. Let him that is no Coward, nor no Flatterer,
But dare maintaine the partie of the truth,
Pluck a red Rose from off this Thorne with me.

War. I loue no Colours, and without all colour
Of base insinuating flatterie,
I pluck this white Rose with Plantagenet

Suff. I pluck this red Rose, with young Somerset,
And say wi. hall, I thinke he held the right.

Vernon. Stay Lords and Gentlemen, and pluck no more
Till you conclude, that he vpon whose side
The fewest Roses are cropt from the Tree,
Shall yeeld the other in the right opinion.

Som. Good Master Vernon, it is well objected.
If I haue fewest, I subscribe in silence.

Torke. And I.

Vernon. Then for the truth, and plainnesse of the Case,
I pluck this pale and Maiden Blossome here,
Giuing my Verdict on the white Rose side.

Som. Prick not your finger as you pluck it off,
Least bleeding, you doe paint the white Rose red,
And fall on my side so against your will.

Vernon. If I, my Lord, for my opinion bleed,
Opinion shall be Surgeon to my hurt,
And keepe me on the side where full I am.

Som. Well, well, come on, who else?

Larger. Vn-

Lamper. Vnlesse my Studie and my Bookes be false,
The argument you held, was wrong in you;
In signe whereof, I pluck a white Rose too

Torke. Now Somerſet, where is your argument?

Som. Here in my Scabbard, meditating, that Shall use your white Rose in a bloody red.

Torke. Meane time your cheekes do counterſeit our Roses:
For pale they looke with ſcare, as witnessing
The truth on our ſide.

Som. No Plantagenet

'Tis not for ſcare, but anger, that thy cheekes
Blush for pure ſhame, to counterſeit our Roses,
And yet thy tongue will not confeſſe thy error.

Torke. Haſt not thy Rose a Canker, Somerſet?

Som. Haſt not thy Rose a Thorne, Plantagenet?

Torke. I, ſharpe and piercing to maintaine his truth,
Whiles thy conſuming Canker eates his falſhood.

Som. Well, Ile find friends to weare my bleeding Roses,
That ſhall maintaine what I haue ſaid is true,
Where falſe Plantagenet dare not be ſcene.

Torke. Now by this Maiden Bloſſome in my hand,
I ſcorne thee and thy faſhion, peeuish Boy.

Suff. Turne not thy ſcornes this way, Plantagenet

Torke. Proud Poole, I will, and ſcorne both him and thee.

Suff. Ile turne my part thereof into thy throat.

Som. Away, away, good William de la Poole,
We grace the Yeoman, by conuerſing with him
Warre. Now by Gods will thou wrong'ſt him, Somerſet
His Grandfather was Lionel Duke of Clarence,
Third Sonne to the third Edward King of Eng'land.
Spring Cretleſſe Yeomen from ſo deepe a Ront?

Torke. He beares him on the place's Priu ledge,
Or duſt not for his craven heart ſay thus.

Som. By him that made me, Ile maintaine my words
On any Place of Ground in Chriſtendome.
Was not thy Father, Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
For Treason executed in our late Kings dayes?
And by his Treason, ſtand'ſt not thou ſtain'd,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient Centry?
His Treſpas yet liues guiltie in thy blood,
And till thou be reſtor'd, thou art a Yeoman.

Torke. My Father was attached, not attainted,
Condemn'd to dye for Treason, but no Traytor;
And that Ile proue on better men then Somerſet,
Were growing ſome once ripend to my will.
For your partaker Poole, and you your ſelfe,
Ile note you in my Booke of Memorie,
To ſcourge you for this apprehenſion:
Looke to it well, and ſay you are well warn'd

Som. Ah, thou ſhalt finde vs ready for thee ſtill -
And know vs by theſe Colours for thy Foes,
For theſe, my friends in ſight of thee ſhall weare.

Torke. And by my ſoule, this pale and angry Rose,
As Cognizance of my blood-drinking hate,
Will I for euer, and my Faſhion weare,
Vntill it wither with me to my Graue,
Or flouriſh to the height of my Degree.

Suff. Goe forward, and be cheak'd with thy ambition -
And ſo farwell, vntill I meet thee next

Exit.

Som. Haue with thee Poole - For well ambitious Richard.

Exit.

Torke. How I am brau'd, and muſt perforce endure
it?

Warre. This blot that they obiect againſt your Houſe,
Shall be whipt out in the next Parliament,

Call'd for the Truce of Wincheſter and Glouceſter:

And if thou be not then created Torke,
I will not lue to be accounted Warwicke.
Meane time, in ſignall of my lue to thee,
Againſt prouid Somerſet, and William Poole,
Will I vpon thy partie weare this Rose.
And here I propheticke: this brawle to day,
Growne to this faction in the Temple Garden,
Shall ſend betweene the Red-Rose and the White,
A thouſand Soules to Death and deadly Night

Torke. Good Maſter Uerron, I am bound to you,
That you on my behalfe would pluck a Flower.

Ver. In your behalfe ſtill will I weare the ſame.

Lamper. And ſo will I.

Torke. Thankes gentle.

Come, let vs ſoure to Dinner: I dare ſay.

This Quarrell will drinke Blood another day.

Exeunt.

Enter Mortimer, brought in a Chayre, and Taylors.

Mort. Kind Keepers of my weake decaying Age,
Let dying Mortimer here reſt himſelfe

Fuen like a man new haled from the Wrack,
So ſare my Lin beſ with long Imprisonment:
And theſe gray Locks, the Purſuants of death,
Nether-like aged, in an Age of Care,
Argue the end of Edmund Mortimer.

Theſe Eyes, like Lampes, whole waſting Oyle is ſpent,
Waxe dimme, as drawing to their Exigent.
Weake Shoulders, ouer-borne with burthening Griefe,
And pytn-leſſe Armes, like to a withered Vine,
That droupes his ſappe-leſſe Branches to the ground,
Yet are theſe Feet, whoſe ſtrength-leſſe ſtay is numme,
(Vnable to ſupport this Lumpe of Clay)
Swift-winged with deſire to get a Graue,
As witting I no other comfort haue.

B. a tell me, Keeper, will my Nephew come?

Keeper. Richard Plantagenet, my Lord, will come.
We ſent vnto the Temple, vnto his Chamber,
And anſwer was return'd, that he will come.

Mort. Enough my Soule ſhall then be ſatiſfied.
Poore Gentleman, his wrong doth equall mine.
Since Henry Monmouth firſt began to reigne,
Before whoſe Glory I was great in Armes,
This loathſome ſequeſtration haue I had;
And euen ſince then, hath Richard beene obſcur'd,
Depriu'd of Honor and Inheritance.
But now, the Arbitrator of Deſpaires,
Juſt Death, kinde Vmpire of mens miſeries,
With ſweet enlargement doth diſmiſſe me hence
I would his troubles likewiſe were expir'd,
That ſo he might recouer what was loſt.

Enter Richard

Keeper. My Lord, your louing Nephew now is come.

Mort. Richard Plantagenet, my friend, is he come?

Rich. I, Noble Vnckle, thus ignobly vs'd,
Your Nephew, late deſpis'd Richard, comes

Mort. Direct mine Armes, I may embrace his Neck,
And in his Boſome ſpend my latter gaspe.
Oh tell me when my Lippes doe touch his Cheekes,
That I may kindly giue one fainting Kiſſe.
And now declare ſweet Stem from Torke's great Stock,
Why diſt thou ſay of late thou wert deſpis'd?

Rich. Firſt

Rich First, leane thine aged Back against mine Arme,
And in that case, Ile tell thee my Disease.
This day in argument vpon a Case,
Some words there grew twixt Somerſet and me:
Among which tearmes, he vs'd his laush tongue,
And did vpbraid me with my Fathers death;
Which oblique ſet barres before my tongue,
Elſe with the like I had requited him.
Therefore good Vnckle, for my Fathers ſake,
In honor of a true Plantagenet,
And for Alliance ſake, declare the cauſe
My Father, Earle of Cambridge, loſt his Head.

Mort. That cauſe (faire Nephew) that imprifon'd me,
And hath detain'd me all my ſlowring Youth,
Within a loathſome Dungeon, there to pyne,
Was curſed Inſtrument of his deſeaſe.

Rich Diſcover more at large what cauſe that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot gueſſe

Mort. I will, if that my fading breath permit,
And Death approach not, ere my Tale be done.
Henry the Fourth, Grandfather to this King,
Depoſ'd his Nephew Richard, Edward Sonne,
The firſt begotten, and the lawfull Heire
Of Edward King, the third of that Deſcent
During whoſe Reigne, the Percies of the North,
Finding his Vſurpation moſt vniuſt,
Endeuour'd my aduancement to the Throne.
The reaſon mou'd theſe Warlike Lords to this,
Was, for that (young Richard thus remou'd, Leauing no Heire begotten of his Body)
I was the next by Birth and Parentage:
For by my Mother, I deriued am
From Lionel Duke of Clarence, third Sonne
To King Edward the Third, whereas hee,
From John of Gaunt doth bring his Pedigree,
Seeing but fourth of that Heroick Lyre.
But marke: as in this haughtie great attempt,
They laboured, to plant the rightfull Heire,
I loſt my Libertie, and they their Liues.
Long after this, when Herry the Firſt
(Succeeding his Father Billingbrooke) did reigne,
Thy Father, Earle of Cambridge, then deri'd
From famous Edmund Langley, Duke of Yorke, Marrying my Siſter, that thy Mother was,
Againe, in pittie of my hard diſtreſſe,
Leuied an Army, weening to redeeme,
And haue inſtall'd me in the Diademe.
But as the reſt, ſo fell that Noble Earle,
And was beheaded. Thus the Mortimers,
In whom the Title reſted, were ſuppreſt.

Rich Of which, my Lord, your Honor is the laſt.

Mort. True, and thou ſeeſt, that I no Iſſue haue,
And that my fainting words doe warrant death.
Thou art my Heire; the reſt, I wiſh thee gather:
But yet be wary in thy ſtudious care.

Rich Thy graue admoniſhments preuaile with me:
But yet me thinkes, my Fathers execution
Was nothing leſſe then bloody Tyranny.

Mort. With ſilence Nephew, be thou poliſtrick,
Strong fix'd is the Houſe of Lancaster,
And like a Mountaine not to be remou'd
But now thy Vnckle is remouing hence,
As Princes doe their Courts, when they are cloy'd
With long continuance in a ſeſed place.

Rich O Vnckle, would ſome part of my young yeeres
Might but redeeme the paſſage of your Age.

Mort Thou do'ſt then wrong me, as ſlaughterer doth,
Which giueth many Wounds, when one will kill.
Mourne not, except thou ſorrow for my good,
Onely giue order for my Funerall.

And ſo farewell, and fare be all thy hopes,
And proſperous be thy Life in Peace and Warre. Dyer.

Rich And Peace, no Warre, befall thy parting Soule.
In Priſon haſt thou ſpent a Pilgrimage,
And like a Hermite ouer-paſt thy dayes.
Well, I will locke his Councell in my Breſt,
And what I doe imagine, let that reſt.
Keepers conuey him hence, and I my ſelfe
Will ſee his Buryall better then his Life. Exit.
Here dyes the duſkie Torch of Mortimer,
Choakt with Ambition of the meaner ſort.
And for thoſe Wrongs, thoſe bitter Injuries,
Which Somerſet hath offer'd to my Houſe,
I doubt not, but with Honor to redreſſe.
And therefore haſte I to the Parliament,
Eyther to be reſtored to my Blood,
Or make my will th'aduantage of my good Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Flouriſh Enter King, Exeter, Gloſter, Wincheſter, Warwick,
Somerſet, Suffolk, Richard Plantagenet Gloſter offers to put up a Bill Wincheſter ſnatches it, teares it.

Winch Com'ſt thou wiſh deepe premeditated Lines?

With written Pamphlets, ſtudiouſly deuiz'd?

Humfrey of Gloſter, if thou canſt accuſe,

Or ought intend'ſt to lay vnto my charge,

Doe it without inuention, ſuddenly,

As I with ſudden, and extemporall ſpeech,

Purpoſe to answer what thou canſt obieſt.

Glo Preſumptuous Prielt, this place commands my patience,
Or thou ſhould'ſt finde thou haſt diſ-honor'd me.

Thinke not, although in Writing I prefer'd

The manner of thy vile outrageous Crymes,

That therefore I haue forg'd, or am not able

Verbatim to rehearſe the Methode of my Penne.

No Prelate, ſuch is thy audacious wickedneſſe,

Thy lewd, peſtiferous, and diſſentionous pranks,

As very Infants prattle of thy pride.

Thou art a moſt pernitiouſ Vſurer,

Froward by nature, Enemy to Peace,

Laciuous, wanton, more then well beſeemes

A man of thy Profeſſion, and Degree.

And for thy Treacherie, what's more manifeſt?

In that thou layd'ſt a Trap to take my Life,

As well at London Bridge, as at the Tower,

Beſide, I feare me, if thy thoughts were ſifted,

The King, thy Sovereigne, is not quite exempt

From enuiouſ mallice of thy ſwelling heart.

Winch. Gloſter, I doe deſire thee, Lords vouchſafe

To giue me hearing what I ſhall reply.

If I were couetous, ambitious, or peruerſe,

As he will haue me. how am I ſo poore?

Or how haps it, I ſeake not to aduance

Or rayſe my ſelfe? but keepe my wonted Calling.

And for Diſſention, who preferreth Peace

More then I doe? except I be prouok'd.

No, my good Lords, it is not that offends,

It is not that, that hath incens'd the Duke:

It is becauſe no one ſhould ſway but hee,

No one, but hee, ſhould be about the King;

And that engenders Thunder in his breſt,

And makes him rethese Accufations forth.
But he shall know I am as good,

Gloft. As good?

Thou Bastard of my Grandfather.

Winch. I, Lordly Sir for what are you, I pray.

But one imperious in anothers Throne?

Gloft. Am I not Protector, sawie Priest?

Winch. And am not I a Prelate of the Church?

Gloft. Yes, as an Out-law in a Castle keepes,

And weth it, to patronage his Theft.

Winch. Vnreuerent Glocester.

Gloft. Thou art reuerent,

Touching thy Spirituall Function, not thy Life.

Winch. Rome shall remedie this.

Warw. Roame thither then.

My Lord, it were your dutie to forbear.

Som. I, see the Bishop be not ouer-borne:

Me thinkes my Lord should be Religious,

And know the Office that belongs to such.

Warw. Me thinkes his Lordship should be humbler,
It sitteth not a Prelate so to plead.

Som. Yes, when his holy State is toucht so neere.

Warw. State holy, or vnholow'd, what of that?

Is not his Grace Protector to the King?

Rich. Plantagenet I see must hold his tongue,
Least it be said, Speake Sirra when you should.
Must your bold Verdict enter talke with Lords?
Else would I haue a sling at Winch.

King. Vnckles of Gloster, and of Winch.
The speciall Watch-men of our English Weale,
I would preuayle, if Prayers might preuayle,
To ioyne your hearts in loue and amitie.
Oh, what a Scandill is it to our Crowne,
That two such Noble Peeres as ye should iarre?
Beleeue me, Lords, my tender yeeres can tell,
Ciuill dissention is a viperous Worme,
That gnawes the Bowels of the Common-wealth.

A noyse within, Downe with the Tawny-Coats.

King. What tumult's this?

Warw. An Vpore, I dare warrant,
Begun through malice of the Bishops men.

A noyse againe, Stones, Stones

Enter Maior

Maior. Oh my good Lords, and vertuous Henry,
Pitty the Citie of London, pittie vs:
The Bishop, and the Duke of Glosters men,
Forbidden late to carry any Weapon,
Haue fill'd their Pockets full of peeble stones;
And banding themselues in contrary parts,
Doe pelt so fast at one anothers Pate,
That many haue their giddy braynes knockt out:
Our Windows are broke downe in euery Street,
And we, for feare, compell'd to shut our Shops.

Enter in skirmish with bloody Pates.

King. We charge you, on allegiance to our selfe,
To hold your slaughtering hands, and keepe the Peace:
Pray Vnckle Gloster mitigate this strife.

1. Seruing. Nay, if we be forbidden Stones, wee'll fall to it with our Teeth.

2. Seruing. Doe what ye dare, we are as resolute.

Skirmish againe.

Gloft. You of my household, leaue this peeuish broyle,
And let this vnaccustom'd fight aside.

3. Serue. My Lord, we know your Grace to be a man
Iust, and vpright; and for your Royall Birth,
Inferior to none, but to his Maiestie:

And ere that we will suffer such a Prince,
So kinde a Father of the Common-weale,
To be disgraced by an Inke-horne Mare,
Wee and our Wiues and Children all will fight,
And haue our bodies slaughtered by thy foes.

1. Serue. I, and the very prings of our Nayles
Shall pitch a Field when we are dead.

Begun againe.

Gloft. Stay, stay, I say:

And if you loue me, as you say you doe,
Let me perswade you to forbear a while.

King. Oh, how thus discord doth afflict my Soule.
Can you, my Lord of Winchester, behold
My sighes and teares, and will not once relent?
Who should be pittifull, if you be not?
Or who should study to preterre a Peace,
If holy Church-men take delight in broyles?

Warw. Yeeld my Lord Protector, yeeld Winchester,
Except you meane with obstinate repulse
To slay your Soueraigne, and destroy the Realme.
You see what Mischiefe, and what Murther too,
Hath beene enacted through your enmitie:
Then be at peace, except ye thirst for blood.

Winch. He shall submit, or I will neuer yeeld.

Gloft. Compassion on the King commands me stoupe,
Or I would see his heart out, ere the Priest
Should euer get that priuledge of me.

Warw. Behold my Lord of Winchester, the Duke
Hath banisht moodie discontented fury,
As by his smoothed Browes it doth appeare:
Why looke you still so sterne, and tragicall?

Gloft. Here Winchester, I offer thee my Hand.

King. Fie Vnckle Beauford, I haue heard you preach,
That Mallice was a great and grieuous sinne
And will not you maintaine the thing you teach?
But proue a chiefe offendor in the same.

Warw. Sweet King the Bishop hath a kindly gyrd.
For shame my Lord of Winchester relent;

What, shall a Child instruct you what to doe?

Winch. Well, Duke of Gloster, I will yeeld to thee
Loue for thy Loue, and Hand for Hand I giue.

Gloft. I, but I feare me with a hollow Heart.
See here my Friends and louing Countrey-men,
This token serueth for a Flagge of Truce,
Betwixt our selues, and all our followers:
So helpe me God, as I dissemble not.

Winch. So helpe me God, as I intend it not.

King. Oh louing Vnckle, kinde Duke of Gloster,
How ioyfull am I made by this Contract.
Away my Masters, trouble vs no more,
But ioyne in friendship, as your Lords haue done.

1. Serue. Content, Ile to the Surgeons.

2. Serue. And so will I.

3. Serue. And I will see what Physick the Tauerne fords. Exeunt.

Warw. Accept this Scrowle, most gracious Soueraigne,
Which in the Right of Richard Plantagenet,
We doe exhibite to your Maiestie.

Glo. Well vrg'd, my Lord of Warwick for sweet Prince,
And if your Grace marke euery circumstance,
You haue great reason to doe Richard right,
Especially for those occasions
At Elram Place I told your Maiestie.

King. And

King. And those occasions, Vnckle, were of force.
Therefore my louing Lords, our pleasure is,
That Richard be restored to his Blood.

Warw. Let Richard be restored to his Blood,
So shall his Fathers wrongs be recompenc'd.

Winch. As will the rest, so willet Worcester.

King. If Richard will be true, not that all alone,

But all the whole Inheritance I giue,
That doth belong vnto the House of Torke,
From whence you spring, by Lineall Descent.

Rich. Thy humble seruant vows obedience,
And humble seruice, till the point of death

King. Stoope then, and set your Knee against my Foot,
And in requerdon of that dutie done,

I gyrt thee with the valiant Sword of Torke:

Rise Richard, like a true Plantagenet,

And rise created Princely Duke of Torke

Rich. And so thrive Richard, as thy foes may fall,
And as my dutie springs, so perish they,

That grudge one thought against your Maiesty.

All. Welcome high Prince, the mighty Duke of Torke

Som. Perish base Prince, ignoble Duke of Torke

Gloster. Now will it best auale your Maieslie,

To crosse the Seas, and to be Crown'd in France -

The presence of a King engenders loue

Amongst his Subiects, and his loyall Friends,

As it dis-animates his Enemies.

King. When Gloster sayes the word, King Henry goes,
For friendly counsaile cuts off many Foes.

Gloster. Your Ships alreadye are in readinesse,

Senet Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Exeter.

Exet. I, we may march in England, or in France,
Not seeing what is likely to ensue.

This late dissention growne betwixt the Peeres,

Burnes vnder fained ashes of forg'd loue,

And will at last breake out into a flame,

As festered members rot but by degree,

Till bones and flesh and sinewes fall away,

So will this base and enuious discord breed

And now I feare that fatall Prophecie,

Which in the time of Henry, nam'd the Fifth,

Was in the mouth of euery sucking Babe,

That Henry borne at Monmouth should winne all,

And Henry borne at Windsor, loose all:

Which is so plaine, that Exeter doth wish,
His dayes may finish, ere that haplesse time

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pucell disguis'd, with foure Souldiers with Sacks upon their backs.

Pucell. These are the Citie Gates, the Gates of Roan,
Through which our Pollicy must make a breach.

Take heed, be wary how you place your words,

Talk like the vulgar sort of Market men,

That come to gather Money for their Corne.

If we haue entrance, as I hope we shall,

And that we finde the slouthfull Watch but weake,

Be by a signe giue notice to our friends,

That Charles the Dolphin may encounter them.

Souldier. Our Sacks shall be a meane to sack the City.
And we be Lords and Rulers ouer Roan,
Therefore wee'le knock.

Knock.

Watch. Obe la.

Pucell. Peasants la pourre gens de France,
Poore Market folkes that come to sell their Corne.

Watch. Enter, goe in, the Market Bell is rung.

Pucell. Now Roan, Ile shake thy Bulwarkes to the ground. Exeunt.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson.

Charles. Saint Dennis bleesse this happy Stratageme,
And once againe wee'le sleepe secure in Roan.

Bastard. Here entred Pucell, and her Practisants:
Now she is there, how will she specifie?

Here is the best and safest passage in.

Reig. By thrusting out a Torch from yonder Tower,
Which once discern'd, shewes that her meaning is,
No way to that (for weaknesse) which she entred.

Enter Pucell on the top, thrusting out a Torch burning

Pucell. Behold, this is the happy Wedding Torch,
That ioyneth Roan vnto her Countrey men,
But burning fatal to the Talbotes

Bastard. See Noble Charles, the Beacon of our friend,
The burning Torch in yonder Turret stands.

Charles. Now shine it like a Commer of Reuenge,
A Prophet to the fall of all our Foes

Reig. Deferre no time, delays haue dangerous ends,
Enter and cry, the Dolphin, presently,
And then doe execution on the Watch Alarm.

An Alarm Talbot in an Excursion

Talb. France, thou shalt rue this Treason with thy teares,
If Talbot but suruiue thy Trecherie.

Pucell that Witch, that damned Sorceresse,
Hath wrought this Hellish Mischiefe vniawares,
That hardly we escap'd the Pride of France. Exit.

An Alarm: Excursions. Bedford brought in sicke in a Chayre

Enter Talbot and Burgonie without. within, Pucell,

Charles, Bastard, and Reigner on the Walls.

Pucell. God morrow Gallants, want ye Corn for Bread?
I thinke the Duke of Burgonie will fast,
Before hee'le buy againe at such a rate.

'Twas full of Darnell doe you like the taste?

Burg. Scoffe on vile Fiend, and shamelesse Curtizan,
I trust ere long to choake thee with thine owne,
And make thee curse the Haruest of that Corne.

Charles. Your Grace may statue (perhaps) before that time.

Bedf. Oh let no words but deedes, reuenge this Treason

Pucell. What will you doe, good gray-beard?
Breake a Launce, and runne a Tilt at Death,
Within a Chayre.

Talb. Foule Fiend of France, and Hag of all despight, Incompas'd with thy lustfull Paramours,
Becomes it thee to taunt his valiant Age,
And twit with Cowardise a man halfe dead?
Damsell, Ile haue a bowe with you againe,
Or else let Talbot perish with this shame

Pucell. Are ye so hot, Sir: yet Pucell hold thy peace,
If Talbot doe but Thunder, Raine will follow.

They whisper together in counsell.
God speed the Parliament: who shall be the Speaker?

Talb Dare

Talb. Dare yee come forth, and meet vs in the field?

Pucell. Belike your Lordship takes vs then for fooles,
To try if that our owne be ours, or no.

Talb. I speake not to that rayling Heeste,
But vnto thee Alanson, and the rest.
Will ye, like Souldiors, come and fight it out?

Alans Seignior no.

Talb. Seignior hang: base Mulsters of France,
Like Pefant foot-Boyes doe they keepe the Walls,
And dare not take vp Armes, like Gentlemen.

Pucell Awy Captaines, let's get vs from the Walls,
For Talbot meanes no goodnesse by his Lookes.
God b'uy my Lord, we came but to tell you
That wee are here. Exeunt from the walls.

Talb. And there will we be too, ere it be long,
Or else reproach be Talbots greatest fame.
Vow Burgonie, by honor of thy House,
Prickt on by publike Wrongs sustain'd in France,
Eith' to get the Towne againe, or dye.
And I, as sure as English Henry liues,
And as his Father here was Conqueror;
As sure as in this late betrayed Towne,
Great Cordeleys Heart was buried;
So sure I sweare, to get the Towne, or dye.

Burg. My Vowes are equal partners with thy Vowes.

Talb. But ere we goe, regard this dying Prince,
The valiant Duke of Bedford: Come my Lord,
We will bestow you in some better place,
Fitter for sicknesse, and for crasie age.

Bedf. Lord Talbot, doe not so dishonour me:
Here will I sit, before the Walls of Roan,
And will be partner of your weale or woe.

Burg. Courageous Bedford, let vs now perswade you.

Bedf. Not to be gone from hence for once I read,
That stout Pendragon, in his latter sick,
Came to the field, and vanquished his foes.
Me thinks I should reuiue the Souldiors hearts,
Because I euer found them as my selfe.

Talb. Vndaunted spirit in a dying breast,
Then be it so. Heauens keepe old Bedford safe.
And now no more adoe, braue Burgonie,
But gather we our Forces out of hand,
And set vpon our boasting Enemie Exit.

*An Alarum. Excursions. Enter Sir Iohn
Falstaffe, and a Captaine.*

Capt. Whither away Sir Iohn Falstaffe, in such hast?

Falstf. Whither away? to saue my selfe by flight,
We are like to haue the ouerthrow againe.

Capt. What? wilt thou flye, and leaue Lord Talbot?

Falstf. I all the Talbots in the World, to saue my life.

Exit.

Capt. Cowardly Knight, ill fortune follow thee.

Exit.

Retreat. Excursions. Pucell, Alanson, and Charles flye.

Bedf. Now quiet Soule, depart when Heauen please,
For I haue seene our Enemies ouerthrow.
What is the trust or strength of foolish man?
They that of late were daring with their scoffes,
Are glad and faine by flight to saue themselues.

Bedford dyes, and is carryed in by two in his Chaire

An Alarum. Enter Talbot, Burgonie, and the rest.

Talb. Lost, and recovered in a day againe,
This is a double Honor, Burgonie.
Yet Heauens haue glory for this Victorie.

Burg. Watlike and Martiall Talbot, Burgonie
Inshines thee in his heart, and there ereas
Thy noble Deeds, as Valors Monuments.

Talb. Thanks gentle Duke. but where is Pucell now?
I thinke her old Familiar is asleepe.
Now where's the Bastards braues, and Charles his glibes?
What all amorst? Roan hangs her head for grieve,
That such a valiant Company are fled.
Now will we take some order in the Towne,
Placing therein some expert Officers,
And then depart to Paris, to the King,
For there young Henry with his Nobles lye.

Burg. What wills Lord Talbot, pleaseth Burgonie

Talb. But yet before we goe, let's not forget
The Noble Duke of Bedford, late deas'd,
But see his Exequies fulfill'd in Roan.
A brauer Souldier neuer couched Launce,
A gentler Heart did neuer sway in Court.
But Kings and mightiest Potentates must die,
For that's the end of humane miserie. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Charles, Bastard, Alanson, Pucell

Pucell. Dismay not (Princes) at this accident,
Nor grieue that Roan is so recovered:
Cate is no cure, but rather corrosiue,
For things that are not to be remedy'd.

Let frantike Talbot triumph for a while,
And like a Peacock sweepe along his ryle,
Wee'll pull his Plumes, and take away his Trayne,
If Dolphin and the rest will be but rul'd.

Charles. We haue been guided by tree hitherto,
And of thy Cunning had no diffidence,
One sudden Foyle shall neuer breed distrust.

Bastard. Search out thy wit for secret policies,
And we will make thee famous through the World.

Alans. Wee'll set thy Statue in some holy place,
And haue thee reuerenc'd like a blessed Saint.
Employ thee then, sweet Virgin, for our good.

Pucell. Then thus it must be, this doth Joane devise.
By faire perswasions, mixt with sugred words,
We will entice the Duke of Burgonie
To leaue the Talbot, and to follow vs.

Charles. I marry Sweeting, if we could doe that,
France were no place for Herryer Warriors,
Nor should that Nation boast it so with vs,
But be extirped from our Prouinces.

Alans. For euer should they be expuls'd from France,
And not haue Title of an Earledome here.

Pucell. Your Honors shall perceiue how I will worke,
To bring this matter to the wished end.

Drumme sounds as farre off.

Hearke, by the sound of Drumme you may perceiue
Their Powers are marching vnto Paris ward.

Here sound an English March.

There goes the Talbot with his Colours spred,
And all the Troupes of English after him. French

French March.

Now in the Rereward comes the Duke and his :
Fortune in fauor makes him lagge behinde.
Summon a Parley, we will talke with him.

Trumpets sound a Parley.

Charles. A Parley with the Duke of Burgonie.

Burg. Who craues a Parley with the Burgonie?

Pucell. The Princely Charles of France, thy Countrey-
man

Burg. What say'st thou Charles? for I am marching hence.

Charles. Speake Pucell, and enchaunt him with thy words.

Pucell. Braue Burgonie, vndoubted hope of France,
Stay, let thy humble Hand-maid speake to thee.

Burg. Speake on, but be not ouer-redious.

Pucell. Looke on thy Countrey, look on fertile France,
And see the Cities and the Townes desact,
By wasting Ruine of the cruell Foe,
As lookes the Mother on her lowly Babe,
When Death doth close his tender-dying Eyes,
See, see the pining Maladie of France
Behold the Wounds, the most vnnaturall Wounds,
Which thou thy selfe hast giuen her wofull Brest.

Oh turne thy edged Sword another way,
Strike those that hurt, and hurt not those that helpe :
One drop of Blood drawne from thy Countreys Bosome,
Should grieve thee more then streames of forraigne gore.
Returne thee therefore with a shoud of Teares,
And wash away thy Countreys stayned Spots.

Burg. Either she hath bewitcht me with her words,
Or Nature makes me suddenly relent.

Pucell Besides, all French and France exclames on thee,
Doubting thy Birth and lawfull Progenie.

Who ioyns't thou with, but with a Lordly Nation,
That will not trust thee, but for profits sake?

When Talbot hath set footing once in France,
And fashion'd thee that Instrument of Ill,
Who then, but English Henry, will be Lord,
And thou be thrust out, like a Fugitive?

Call we to minde, and make but this for prooffe.
Was not the Duke of Orleance thy Foe?

And was he not in England Prisoner?
But when they heard he was thine Enemy,

They set him free, without his Ransome payd,
In spite of Burgonie and all his friends.
See then, thou fight'st against thy Countreymen,
And ioyn'st with them will be thy slaughter-men.
Come, come, returne; returne thou wandering Lord,
Charles and the rest will take thee in their armes.

Burg. I am vanquished.
These haughtie wordes of hers
Haue battred me like roaring Cannon-shot,
And made me almost yeeld vpon my knees
Forgiue me Countrey, and sweet Countreymen:
And Lords accept this heartie kind embrace.
My Forces and my Power of Men are yours.
So farewell Talbot, Ile no longer trust thee.

Pucell. Done like a Frenchman: turne and turne againe.

Charles. Welcome braue Duke, thy friendship makes vs fresh.

Bassford. And doth beget new Courage in our Breasts.

Alar. Pucell hath brauely play'd her part in this,
And doth deserue a Coronet of Gold.

Charles. Now let vs on, my Lords,
And ioyn our Powers,
And seeke how we may preiudice the Foe. Exeunt.

Scæna Quarta.

Enter the King, Gloucester, Warwicke, York, Suffolke, Somerset, Warwick, Exeter Toilers, with his Souldiers, Talbot.

Talbot. My gracious Prince, and honorable Peeres,
Hearing of your arrivall in this Realme,
I haue a while giuen Truce vnto my Warres,
To doe my dutie to my Soueraigne.
In signe whereof, this Arme, that hath reclaym'd
To your obedience, fiftie Fortresses,
Twelue Cities, and seven walled Townes of strength,
Beside fiftie hundred Prisoners of esteeme;
Lets fall his Sword before your Highnesse feet:
And with submissiue loyaltie of heart
Ascribes the Glory of his Conquest got,
First to my God, and next vnto your Grace.

King. Is this the Lord Talbot, Vnclle Gloucester,
That hath so long bene resident in France?

Gloster. Yes, if it please your Maieslie, my Liege.

King. Welcome braue Captaine, and victorious Lord.
When I was young (as yet I am not old)
I doe remember how my Father said,
A stouter Champion neuer handled Sword.
Long since we were resolu'd of your truth,
Your faithfull seruice, and your toyle in Warre:
Yet neuer haue you tasted our Reward,
Or bene reguerdon'd with so much as Thanks,
Because till now, we neuer saw your face
Therefore stand vp, and for these good deserts,
We here create you Earle of Shrewsbury,
And in our Coronation take your place,

Senec. Flourish. Exeunt.

Manet Vernon and Bassford.

Vern. Now Sir, to you that were so hot at Sea,
Disgracing of these Colours that I weare,
In honor of my Noble Lord of Yorke,
Dar'st thou maintaine the former words thou spak'st?

Bassford. Yes Sir, as well as you dare patronage
The enuious barking of your sawcie Tongue,
Against my Lord the Duke of Somerset.

Vern. Sirha, thy Lord I honour as he is Bassford. Why, what is he? as good a man as Yorke.

Vern. Heartie not so; in witness take ye that.
Strikes him.

Bassford. Villaine, thou knowest
The Law of Armes is such,
That who so drawes a Sword, 'tis present death,
Or else this Blow should broach thy dearest Bloud.
But Ile vnto his Maieslie, and craue,
I may haue libertie to venge this Wrong,
When thou shalt see, Ile meet thee to thy cost.

Vern. Well miscreant, Ile be there as soone as you,
And afterrecte you, sooner then you would.

Exeunt.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter King, Gloucester, Winchester, Yorke, Suffolke, Somerset, Warwicke, Talbot, and Governor Exeter.

Glo. Lord Bishop set the Crowne vpon his head.

Win. God saue King Henry of that name the sixt.

Glo. Now Gouvernour of Paris take your oath,

That you elect no other King but him;
Esteeme none Friends, but such as are his Friends,
And none your Foes, but such as shall pretend
Malicious practises against his State:
This shall ye do, so helpe you righteous God.

Enter Falstaffe.

Fal. My gracious Soueraigne, as I rode from Calice,
To haste vnto your Coronation:

A Letter was deliuer'd to my hands,
Writ to your Grace, from th' Duke of Burgundy.

Tal. Shame to the Duke of Burgundy, and thee:
I vow'd (base Knight) when I did meete the next,

To teare the Garter from thy Crauens legges,
Which I haue done, because (vnworthily)

Thou wast install'd in that High Degree.

Pardon me Princely Henry, and the rest:

This Daftard, at the battell of Poitiers,

When (but in all) I was fixe thousand strong,

And that the French were almost ten to one,

Before we met, or that a stroke was giuen,

Like to a trustie Squire, did run away.

In which assault, we lost twelue hundred men.

My selfe, and diuers Gentlemen beside,

Were there surpriz'd, and taken prisoners.

Then iudge (great Lords) if I haue done amisse:

Or whether that such Cowards ought to weare

This Ornament of Knighthood, yea or no?

Glo. To say the truth, this fact was infamous,

And ill becoming any common man;

Much more a Knight, a Captaine, and a Leader.

Tal. When first this Order was ordain'd my Lords,

Knights of the Garter were of Noble birth;

Valiant, and Vertuous, full of haughtie Courage,

Such as were growne to credit by the warres:

Not fearing Death, nor shrinking for Distresse,

But alwayes resolute, in most extreames.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this sort,

Doth but vsurpe the Sacred name of Knight,

Prophaning this most Honourable Order,

And should (if I were worthy to be Iudge)

Be quite degraded, like a Hedge-borne Swaine,

That doth presume to boast of Gentle blood.

K. Staine to thy Countrymen, thou hear'st thy doom:

Be packing therefore, thou that wast a knight:

Henceforth we banish thee on paine of death.

And now Lord Protector, view the Letter

Sent from our Vnckle Duke of Burgundy.

Glo. What meanes his Grace, that he hath chaung'd his Stile?

No more but plaine and bluntly? (To the King.)

Hath he forgot he is his Soueraigne?

Or doth this churlish Superscription

Pretend some alteration in good will?

What's heere? I haue upon especiall cause,

Mould with compassion of my Countries wracks,

Together with the pittifull complaints

Of such as your oppression feedes upon,

Forsooken your pernicious Faction,
And sign'd with Charles, the rightfull King of France,
O monstrous Treachery. Can this be so?

That in alliance, amity, and oathes,

There should be found such false dissembling guile?

King. What? doth my Vnckle Burgundy reuolt?

Glo. He doth my Lord, and is become your foe.

King. Is that the worst this Letter doth containe?

Glo. It is the worst, and all (my Lord) he writes.

King. Why then Lord Talbot there shal talk with him,
And giue him chastisement for this abuse.

How say you (my Lord) are you not content?

Tal. Content, my Liege? Yes But y I am preuented,
I should haue begg'd I might haue bene employd.

King. Then gather strength, and march vnto him straight:

Let him perceiue how ill we brooke his Treason,
And what offence it is to flout his Friends.

Tal. I go my Lord, in heart desiring still
You may behold confusion of your foes.

Enter Vernon and Bassi.

Ver. Grant me the Combate, gracious Soueraigne,

Bas. And me (my Lord) grant me the Combate too.

Yorke. This is my Seruant, heare him Noble Prince,

Som. And this is mine (sweet Henry) fauour him.

King. Be patient Lords, and giue them leaue to speak.
Say Gentlemen, what makes you thus exclaime,

And wherefore craue you Combate? Or with whom?

Ver. With him (my Lord) for he hath done me wrong.

Bas. And I with him, for he hath done me wrong.

King. What is that wrong, wherof you both complaine
First let me know, and then Ile answer you.

Bas. Crossing the Sea, from England into France,

This Fellow heere with enuious carping tongue,

Vpbraided me about the Rose I weare,

Saying, the sanguine colour of the Leaues

Did represent my Masters blushing cheekes:

When (stubbornly he did repugne the truth,

About a certaine question in the Law,

Argu'd betwixt the Duke of Yorke, and him:

With other vile and ignominious rearmes.

In contutation of which rude reproach,

And in defence of my Lords worthinesse,

I craue the benefite of Law of Armes

Ver. And that is my petition (Noble Lord)

For though he seeme with forged queint conceits

To set a glosse vpon his bold iatent,

Yet know (my Lord) I was prouok'd by him,

And he first tooke exceptions at this badge,

Pronouncing that the palenesse of this Flower,

Bewray'd the faintnesse of my Masters heart!

Yorke. Will not this malice Somerset be left?

Som. Your priuate grudge my Lord of York, wil out,

Though ne're so cunningly you smother it.

King. Good Lord, what madnesse rules in brainesicke men,

When for so slight and friuolous a cause,

Such factious emulationes shall arise?

Good Cosins both of Yorke and Somerset,

Quiet your selues (I pray) and be at peace.

Yorke. Let this dissention first be tried by fight,

And then your Highnesse shall command a Peace.

Som. The quarrell toucheth none but vs alone,

Betwixt our selues let vs decide it then.

Yorke. There is my pledge, accept it Somerset,

Ver. Nay, let it rest where it began at first.

Bas.

Bass. Confirme it so, mine honourable Lord :
Glo. Confirme it so ? Confounded be your strife,
 And perish ye with your audacious prate,
 Presumptuous vassals, are you not ashamed
 With this immodest clamorous outrage,
 To trouble and disturbe the King, and Vs :
 And you my Lords, me thinks you do not well
 To beare with their peruerse Obiections
 Much lesse to take occasion from their mouthes,
 To raise a mutiny betwixt your selues.
 Let me perswade you take a better course.

Exet. It greues his Highnesse,
 Good my Lords, be Friends

King. Come hither you that would be Combatants .

Henceforth I charge you, as you loue our fauour,
 Quite to forget this Quarrell, and the cause.
 And you my Lords : Remember where we are,
 In France, amongst a fickle waucering Nation
 If they perceiue dissention in our lookes,
 And that within our selues we disagree ;
 How will their grudging stomackes be prouok'd
 To wilfull Disobedience, and Rebell ?
 Beside, What infamy will there arise,
 When Forraigne Princes shall be certified,
 That for a toy, a thing of no regard,
 King Henries Peeres, and cheete Nobility,
 Destroy'd themselves, and lost the Realme of France ?
 Oh thinke vpon the Conquest of my Father,
 My tender yeares, and let vs not forget.
 That for a trifle, that was bought with blood,
 Let me be Viper in this doubtfull strife .

I see no reason if I weare this Rose,
 That any one should therefore be suspicious
 I more incline to Somerset, than Yorke :
 Both are my kinsmen, and I loue them both
 As well they may vpray'd me with my Crowne,
 Because (forsooth) the King of Scots is Crown'd.
 But your discretions better can perswade,
 Then I am able to instruct or teach .
 And therefore, as we hither came in peace,
 So let vs still continue peace, and loue.
 Cousin of Yorke, we institute your Grace
 To be our Regent in these parts of France .
 And good my Lord of Somerset, vnto
 Your Troopes of horsemen, with his Bands of foote,
 And like true Subiects, sonnes of your Progenitors,
 Go cheerefully together, and digest
 Your angry Choller on your Enemies.
 Our Selfe, my Lord Protector, and the rest,
 After some respite, will returne to Calice ,
 From thence to England, where I hope ere long
 To be presented by your Victories,
 With Charles, Alanfon, and that Traiterous rout

Exeunt. Malet Yorke, Warwick, Exeter, Vernon

War. My Lord of Yorke, I promise you the King Prettily (me thought) did play the Orator )

Yorke And so he did, but yet I like it not,
 In that he weares the badge of Somerset.

War. Tush, that was but his fancie, blame him not,
 I dare presume (sweet Prince) he thought no harme.

Yorke And if I wish he did ! But let it rest,
 Other sayres must now be managed

Exeunt.

Flourish. Malet Exeter.

Exet. Well didst thou Richard to suppress the voice .
 For had the passions of thy heart burst out
 I feare we should haue seene deciphr'd there

More rancorous spight, more furious raging broyles,
 Then yet can be imagin'd or suppos'd
 But how soere, no simple man that sees
 This iarring discord of Nobilitie,
 This shouldering of each other in the Court,
 This factious bandying of their Fauourites
 But that it doth presage some ill event.
 'Tis much, when Scepters are in Childrens hands :
 But more, when Envy breeds vnkinde deuision,
 There comes the ruine, there begins confusion. Exit

Enter Talbot with Trumpe and Drumme, before Burdeaux.

Talb. Go to the Gates of Burdeaux Trumpeter, Summon their Generall vnto the Wall. Sounds.

Enter Generall aloft.

English John Talbot (Captaines) call you forth,
 Seruant in Armes to Harry King of England,
 And thus he would. Open your Citie Gates,
 Be humble to vs, call my Soueraigne yours,
 And do him homage as obedient Subiects,
 And Ile withdraw me, and my bloody power.
 But if you frowne vpon this proffer'd Peace,
 You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
 Leane Famine, quartering Steele, and climbing Fire,
 Who in a moment, euen with the earth,
 Shall lay your stately, and ayre-brauing Towers,
 If you forsake the offer of their loue.

Cap. Thou ominous and fearefull Owle of death,
 Our Nations terror, and their bloody scourge,
 The period of thy Tyranny approacheth,
 On vs thou canst not enter but by death .
 For I protest we are well fortified,
 And strong enough to issue out and fight.
 If thou retire, the Dolphin well appointed,
 Stands with the snares of Warre to tangle thee.
 On either hand thee, there are squadrons pitcht,
 To wall thee from the liberty of Flight ;
 And no way canst thou turne thee for redresse,
 But death doth front thee with apparant spoyle,
 And pale destruction meets thee in the face :
 Ten thousand French haue tane the Sacrament,
 To ryue their dangerous Artillerie
 Vpon no Christian soule but English Talbot.
 Loc, there thou stand'st a breathing valiant man
 Of an inuincible vnconquer'd spirit :
 This is the latest Glorie of thy praise,
 That I thy enemy dew thee withall .
 For ere the Glasse that now begins to runne,
 Finish the proesse of his sandy houre,
 These eyes that see thee now well coloured,
 Shall see thee withered, bloody, pale, and dead.

Drum a farre off.

Harke, harke, the Dolphins drumme, a warning bell,
 Sings heauy Musick to thy timorous soule,
 And mine shall ring thy due departure out. Exit

Tal. He Fables not, I heare the enemy .
 Out some light Horsemen, and peruse their Wings .
 O negligent and heedlesse Discipline,
 How are we park'd and bounded in a pale ?
 A little Heard of Englands timorous Deere,
 Maz'd with a yelping kennell of French Curres.
 If we be English Deere, be then in blood,
 Not Rascall-like to fall downe with a pinch,
 But rather moodie mad : And desperate Stagges,

Tenne

Turne on the bloody Hounds with heads of Steele,
And make the Cowards stand aloofe at bay -
Sell euery man his life as deere as mine,
And they shall finde deere Deere of vs my Friends
God, and S. George, Talbot and Englands right,
Prosper our Colours in this dangerous fight.

Enter a Messenger that meets Yorke. Enter Yorke with Trumpet, and many Soldiers.

Yorke. Are not the speedy scouts return'd againe,
That dog'd the mighty Army of the Dolphin?

Mess. They are return'd my Lord, and giue it out,
That he is march'd to Burdeaux with his power
To fight with Talbot as he march'd along.
By your espials were discovered

Two mightier Troopes then that the Dolphin led,
Which ioynd with him, and made their march for (Burdeaux)

Yorke. A plague vpon that Villaine Somerset,
That thus delays my promised supply
Of horsemen, that were leuied for this siege
Renowned Talbot doth expect my ayde,
And I am loued by a Traitor Villaine,
And cannot helpe the noble Cheualier:
God comfort him in this necessity -
If he miscarry, farewell Warres in France.

Enter another Messenger.

2. Mess. Thou Princely Leader of our English strength,
Neuer so needfull on the earth of France,
Spurre to the rescue of the Noble Talbot,
Who now is girdled with a waste of Iron,
And hem'd about with grim destruction -
To Burdeaux warlike Duke, to Burdeaux Yorke,
Else farewell Talbot, France, and Englands honor.

Yorke. O God, that Somerset who in proud heart
Doth stop my Cornets, were in Talbots place,
So should wee saue a valiant Gentleman,
By fortifying a Traitor, and a Coward:
Mad ire, and wrathfull fury makes me weepe,
That thus we dye, while remisse Traitors sleepe.

Mess. O send some succour to the distressed Lord.

Yorke. He dies, we loose I breake my warlike word.
We mourne, France smiles: We loose, they dayly get,
All long of this vile Traitor Somerset

Mess. Then God take mercy on braue Talbots soule,
And on his Sonne yong John, who two houres since,
I met in trauaile toward his warlike Father;
This seuen yeeres did not Talbot see his sonne,
And now they meete where both their liues are done.

Yorke. Alas, what ioy shall noble Talbot haue,
To bid his yong sonne welcome to his Graue:

Away, vexation almost stoppes my breath,
That sundred friends greete in the house of death.

Lucie farewell, no more my fortune can,
But curse the cause I cannot ayde the man.

Maine, Bloys, Poitiers, and Touray, are wonne away,
Longall of Somerset, and his delay.

Exit

Mess. Thus while the Vulture of sedition,
Feedes in the bosome of such great Commanders,
Sleeping neglection doth betray to losse:
The Conquest of our scarce-cold Conqueror,
That euer-living man of Memorie,
Henrie the first: Whiles they each other crosse,
Luys, Honours, Lands, and all, hurrie to losse.

Enter Somerset with his Armes.

Som. It is too late, I cannot send them now:
This expedition was by Yorke and Talbot,
Too rashly plotted. All our generall force,
Might with a fall of the very Towne
Be buckled with: the ouer-daring Talbot
Hath sullied all his glosse of former Honor,
By this vnheedfull, desperate, wilde aduerture:
Yorke set him on to fight, and dye in shame,
That Talbot dead, great Yorke might beare the name.

Cap. Heere is Sir William Lucie, who with me
Set from our ore-marcht forces forth for ayde

Som. How now Sir William, whether were you sent?

Lu. Whether my Lord, from bought & sold L. Talbot,
Who ring'd about with bold aduerstie,
Cries out for noble Yorke and Somerset,
To beate assaying death from his weake Regions,
And whiles the honourable Captaine there
Drops bloody sweate from his warre-wearied limbes,
And in aduantage lingering lookes for rescue,
You his false hopes, the trust of Englands honor,
Keepe off aloofe with worthlesse emulation -
Let not your priuate discord keepe away
The leuied succours that should lend him ayde,
While he renowned Noble Gentleman
Yield vp his life vnto a world of oddes
Orleance the Bastard, Charles, Burgundie,
Alanson, Reignard, compass him about,
And Talbot perisheth by your default.

Som. Yorke set him on, Yorke should haue sent him ayde.

Luc. And Yorke as fast vpon your Grace exclaims,
Swearing that you with-hold his leuied host,
Collected for this expedition

Som. York lyes: He might haue sent, & had the Horse!
I owe him little Dutie, and lesse Loue,
And take soule scorne to fawne on him by sending.

Lu. The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now intrapt the Noble-minded Talbot -
Neuer to England shall he beare his life
But dies betraid to fortune by your strife.

Som. Come go, I will dispatch the Horsemen straight:
Within fixe houres, they will be at his ayde.

Lu. Too late comes rescue, he is tane or slaine,
For flye he could not, if he would haue fled:

And flye would Talbot neuer though he might

Som. If he be dead, braue Talbot then adieu.

Lu. His Fame liues in the world. His Shame in you
Exeunt.

Enter Talbot and his Sonns.

Tal. O yong John Talbot, I did send for thee
To tutor thee in stratagems of Warre,
That Talbots name might be in thee reuiu'd,
When saplesse Age, and weake vnable limbes
Should bring thy Father to his drooping Chaire.
But O malignant and ill-boarding Starres,
Now thou art come vnto a Feast of death,
A terrible and vnauoyded danger:
Therefore deere Boy, mount on my swiftest horse,
And Ile direct thee how thou shalt escape
By sodaine flight. Come, dally not, be gone.

John. Is my name Talbot? and am I your Sonne?
Shall

And shall I flye? O, if you loue my Mother,
Dishonor not her Honorable Name,
To make a Bastard, and a Slaue of me:
The World will say, he is not Talbot blood,
That basely fled, when Noble Talbot stood.

Talb Flye, to reuenge my death, if I be slaine.

John He that flies so, will ne're returne againe.

Talb If we both stay, we both are sure to dye.

John Then let me stay, and Father doe you flye:

Your losse is great, so your regard should be;
My worth vnknowne, no losse is knowne in me,
Vpon my death, the French can little boast;
In yours they will, in you all hopes are lost.
Flight cannot stayne the Honor you haue wonne,
But mine it will, that no Exploit haue done
You fled for Vantage, euery one will sweare.
But if I bow, they'll say it was for feare.
There is no hope that euer I will stay,
If the first howre I shrinke and run away
Here on my knee I begge Mortalitie,
Rather then Life, prefer'd w th Infamie

Talb Shall all thy Mothers hopes lye in one Tombe?

John I rather then lile shame my Mothers Wombe.

Talb Vpon my Blessing I command thee goe

John To fight I will, but not to flye the Foe.

Talb Part of thy Father may be sau'd in thee

John No part of him, but will be shame in mee

Talb Thou neuer hadst Renowne, nor canst not lose it.

John Yes, your renowned Name shall flight abuse it?

Talb Thy Fathers charge thal cleare thee from y shame.

John You cannot witness for me, being slaine.

If Death be so apparant, then both flye.

Talb And leaue my followers here to fight and dye?

My Age was neuer tainted with such shame.

John And shall my Youth be guiltie of such blame?

No more can I be seuered from your side,

Then can your selfe, your selfe in twaine diuide:

Stay, goe, doe what you will, the like doe I,

For lue I will not, if my Father dye.

Talb Then here I take my leaue of thee, faire Sonne,
Borne to eclipse thy Life this afternoone
Come, side by side, together lue and dye,
And Soule with Soule from France to Heauen flye. Exit.

Alarm Excursions, wherein Talbots Sonne is hemm'd about, and Talbot rescues him.

Talb Saint George, and Victory, fight Souldiers, fight.
The Regent hath with Talbot broke his word,
And left vs to the rage of France his Sword.

Where is John Talbot? pawle, and take thy breath,
I gaue thee Life, and rescu'd thee from Death.

John O twice my Father, twice am I thy Sonne
The Life thou gau'st me first, was lost and done,
Till with thy Warlike Sword, despiight of Fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date.

Talb When frō the Dolphin Crest thy Sword struck fire,
It warm'd thy Fathers heart with proud desire
Of bold-fact Victory. Then Leaden Age,
Quicken'd with Youthfull Spirene, and Warlike Rage,
Beat downe Alanson, Orleanse, Burgundie.
And from the Pride of Gallia rescued thee.
The irefull Bastard Orleanse, that drew blood
From thee my Boy, and had the Maidenhood
Of thy first fight, I soone encountred,
And interchanging blowes, I quickly shed

Some of his Bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: Contaminated, base,
And mis-begotten blood, I spill of thine,
Meane and tight poore, for that pure blood of mine,
Which thou didst force from Talbot, my braue Boy.

Here purposing the Bastard to destroy,
Came in strong rescue Speake thy Fathers care:
Art thou not wearie, John? How do'st thou fare?
Wilt thou yet leaue the Battaille Boy, and flie,
Now thou art seal'd the Sorne of Chualric?
Flye, to reuenge my death when I am dead,
The helpe of one stands me in little stead.
Oh, too much folly is it, well I wot,
To hazard all our liues in one small Boat.
If I to day dye not with Frenchmen's Rage,
To morrow I shall dye with mickle Age.
By me they nothing gaine, and if I stay,
'Tis but the shortning of my Life one day.
In thee thy Mother dyes, our Households Name,
My Deaths Reuenge, thy Youth, and Englands Fame:
All these, and more, we hazard by thy stay,
All these are sau'd, if thou wilt flye away

John The Sword of Orleanse hath not made me smart,
These words of yours draw Life-blood from my Heart.
On that aduantage, bought with such a shame,
To saue a paltry Life, and slay bright Fame,
Before young Talbot from old Talbot flye,
The Coward Horse that beares me, fall and dye:
And like me to the peasant Boyes of France,
To be Shames scorne, and subiect of Mischance.
Surely, by all the Glorie you haue wonne,
And if I flye, I am not Talbots Sonne.
Then talke no more of flight, it is no boot,
If Sonne to Talbot, dye at Talbots foot.

Talb Then follow thou thy desp'rate Syre of Creet,
Thou Icarus, thy Life to me is sweet
If thou wilt fight, fight by thy Fathers side,
And commendable prou'd, let's dye in pride. Exit.

Alarm. Excursions. Enter old
Talbot led.

Talb Where is my other Life? mine owne is gone.
O, where is young Talbot? where is valiant John?
Triumphant Death, smear'd with Captiuitie,
Young Talbots Valour makes me smile at thee.
When he perceiu'd me shrinke, and on my Knee,
His bloodie Sword he brandisht ouer mee,
And like a hungry Lyon did commence
Rough deeds of Rage, and sterne Impatience:
But when my angry Guardant stood alone,
Tending my ruine, and assayl'd of none,
Dizzie-ey'd Furie, and great rage of Heart,
Suddenly made him from my side to start
Into the clustring Battaille of the French.
And in that Sea of Blood, my Boy did drench
His ouer-mounting Spirit; and there di'de
My Icarus, my Blossome, in his pride.

Enter with John Talbot, borne.

Seru O my deare Lord, loe where your Sonne is borne,
Tal Thou antique Death, which laugh'st vs here to scorn,
Anon from thy insulting Tyrannie,
Coupled in bonds of perpetuities,
Two Talbots winged through the lither Skie,
In thy despiight shall scape Mortalitie.

O thou whose wounds become hard fauoured death,
 Speake to thy father, ere thou yeeld thy breath,
 Braue death by speaking, whither he will or no:
 Imagine him a Frenchman, and thy Foe.
 Poore Boy, he smiles, me thinkes, as who should say,
 Had Death bene French, then Death had dyed to day.
 Come, come, and lay him in his Fathers armes,
 My spirit can no longer beare these harmes.
 Souldiers adieu: I haue what I would haue,
 Now my old armes are yong John Talbots graue. Dyes

Enter Charles, Alanfon, Burgundie, Bastard, and Pucell.

Char. Had Yorke and Somerset brought rescue in,
 We should haue found a bloody day of this.

Bast. How the yong whelpes of Talbots raging wood,
 Did flesh his punie-sword in Frenchmens blood.

Puc. Once I encountered him, and thus I said:
 Thou Maiden youth, be vanquish't by a Maide.
 But with a proud Maiesticall high scorene
 He answer'd thus. Yong Talbot was not borne
 To be the pillage of a Giglot Wench:
 So rushing in the bowels of the French,
 He left me proudly, as vnworthy fight.

Bur. Doubtlesse he would haue made a noble Knight:
 See where he lyes inhered in the armes
 Of the most bloody Nurser of his harmes.

Bast. Hew them to peeces, hack their bones assunder,
 Whose life was Englands glory, Gallias wonder.

Char. Oh no forbear. For that which we haue fled
 During the life, let vs not wrong it dead.

Enter Lucie.

Ln. Herald, conduct me to the Dolphins Tent,
 To know who hath obtain'd the glory of the day.

Char. On what submissiue message art thou sent?

Lucy. Submission Dolphin? Tis a meere French word:
 We English Warriours wot not what it meanes.
 I come to know what Prisoners thou hast tane,
 And to suruey the bodies of the dead.

Char. For prisoners askst thou? Hell our prison is.
 But tell me whom thou seek'st?

Luc. But where's the great Alcides of the field,
 Valiant Lord Talbot Earle of Shrewsbury?
 Created for his rare successe in Armes,
 Great Earle of Washford, Waterford, and Valence,
 Lord Talbot of Goodring and Frechinfield,
 Lord Strange of Blackmere, Lord Verdon of Alton,
 Lord Cromwell of Wingsfield, Lord Furnuall of Sheffield,
 The thrice victorious Lord of Falconbridge,
 Knight of the Noble Order of S. George,
 Worthy S. Michael, and the Golden Fleece,
 Great Marshall to Henry the sixt,
 Of all his Warres within the Realme of France.

Puc. Heere's a silly stately stile indeede:
 The Turke that two and fiftie Kingdomes hath,
 Writes not so tedious a stile as this.

Him that thou magnify'st with all these Titles,
 Stinking and fly-blowne lyes heere at our feete.

Lucy. Is Talbot slaine, the Frenchmens only Scourge,
 Your Kingdomes terror, and blacke Nemesis?
 Oh were mine eye-balles into Bullets turn'd,
 That I in rage might shoot them at your faces.
 Oh, that I could but call these dead to life,
 It were enough to fright the Realme of France.
 Were but his Picture left amongst you here,

It would amaze the proudest of you all.
 Giue me their Bodies, that I may beare them hence,
 And giue them Buriall, as becomes their worth.

Pucel. I thinke this vpstart is old Talbots Ghost,
 He speaks with such a proud commanding spirit:
 For Gods sake let him haue him, to keepe them here,
 They would but stinke, and putrifie the ayre.

Char. Go take their bodies hence.

Lucy. He beare them hence: but from their ashes shall bereard

A Phoenix that shall make all France appear'd.

Char. So we be rid of them, do with him what thou wilt.
 And now to Paris in this conquering vaine,
 All will be ours, now bloody Talbots slaine. Exit.

Scena secunda.

SENNET.

Enter King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Haue you perus'd the Letters from the Pope,
 The Emperor, and the Earle of Arminack?

Glo. I haue my Lord, and their intent is this,
 They humbly sue vnto your Excellence,
 To haue a godly peace concluded of,
 Betweene the Realmes of England, and of France.

King. How doth your Grace affect their motion?

Glo. Well (my good Lord) and as the only meanes
 To stop effusion of our Christian blood,
 And stablish quietnesse on euery side.

King. I marry Vnckle, for I alwayes thought
 It was both impious and vnaturall,
 That such inmanity and bloody strife
 Should reigne among Professors of one Faith.

Glo. Beside my Lord, the sooner to effect,
 And surer binde this knot of amitie,
 The Earle of Arminacke neere knyt to Charles,
 A man of great Authoritie in France,
 Proffers his onely daughter to your Grace,
 In marriage, with a large and sumptuous Dowrie.

King. Marriage Vnckle? Alas my yeares are yong:
 And fitter is my studie, and my Bookes,
 Than wanton dalliance with a Paramour.
 Yet call th' Embassadors, and as you please,
 So let them haue their answers euery one:
 I shall be well content with any choyce
 Tends to Gods glory, and my Countries weale.

Enter Winchester, and three Ambassadors.

Exet. What, is my Lord of Winchester install'd,
 And call'd vnto a Cardinalls degree?
 Then I perceiue, that will be verified
Henry the Fift did sometime prophesie.

If once he come to be a Cardinall,
 Hee'll make his cap coequall with the Crowne.

King. My Lords Ambassadors, your feuerall sures
 Haue bin consider'd and debated on,
 Your purpose is both good and reasonable:
 And therefore are we certainly resolu'd,
 To draw condicions of a friendly peace,

Which

Which by my Lord of Winchester we meane
Shall be transported presently to France.

Glo. And for the proffer of my Lord your Master,
I haue inform'd his Highnesse so at large,
As liking of the Ladies vertuous gifts,
Her Beauty, and the valew of her Dower,
He doth intend she shall be Englands Queene.

King. In argument and prooffe of which contract,
Beare her this lewell, pledge of my affection,
And so my Lord Protector see them guarded,
And safely brought to Douer, wherein ship'd
Commit them to the fortune of the sea

Exeunt.

Win. Stay my Lord Legate, you shall first receiue
The summe of money which I promised
Should be deliuered to his Holinesse,
For cloathing me in these graue Ornaments.

Legat. I will attend vpon your Lordships leysure.
Win. Now Winchester will not submit, I trow,
Or be inferiour to the proudest Peere;
Humfrey of Gloster, thou shalt well perceiue,
That neither in birth, or for authoritie,
The Bishop will be ouer-borne by thee.
He either make thee stoope, and bend thy knee,
Or sacke this Country with a mutiny

Exeunt

Scæna Tertia.

Enter Charles, Burgundy, Alanfon, Bastard, Reignier, and Ione,

Char. These newes (my Lords) may cheere our drooping spirits

'Tis said, the stout Parisians do reuolt,
And turne againe vnto the warlike French

Alan. Then march to Paris Royall Charles of France,
And keepe not backe your powers in dalliance.

Pucel. Peace be amongst them if they turne to vs,
Else ruine combat with their Pallaces.

Enter Scort

Scort. Successe vnto our valiant Generall,
And happinesse to his accomplices

Char. What tidings send our Scourge? I prethee speak.

Scort. The English Army that diuided was Into two parties, is now conioyn'd in one,
And meanes to giue you battell presently

Char. Somewhat too sodaine Sirs, the warning is,
But we will presently provide for them

Bur. I trust the Ghost of Talbot is not there.
Now he is gone my Lord, you neede not feare.

Pucel. Of all base passions, Feare is most accurst.
Command the Conquest Charles, it shall be thine.

Let Henry fret, and all the world repine.

Char. Then on my Lords, and France be fortunate.

Exeunt. Alarm. Excursions.

Enter Ione de Pucell.

Puc. The Regent conquers, and the Frenchmen flye.
Now helpe ye charming Spelles and Periapts,
And ye choisie spirits that admonish me,
And giue messignes of future accidents
You speedy helpers, that are substitutes,

Thunder.

Vnder the Lordly Monarch of the North,
Appeare, and ayde me in this enterprize.

Enter Irends.

This speedy and quicke appearance argues prooffe
Of your accustom'd diligence to me.
Now ye Familiar Spirits, that are cull'd
Out of the powerfull Regions vnder earth,
Helpe me this oace, that France may get the field.

They walke, and speake not.

Oh hold me not with silence ouer-long:
Where I was wont to feed you with my blood,
He lop a member off, and giue it you,
In earnest of a further benefite
So you do condescend to helpe me now.

They hang their heads.

No hope to haue redresse? My body shall Pay recompence, if you will graunt my suite.

They shake their heads.

Cannot my body, nor blood-sacrifice,
Intreate you to your wonted furtherance?
Then take my soule; my body, soule, and all,
Before that England giue tne French the foyle

They depart.

See, they forsake me Now the time is come,
That France must vale her lofty plumed Crest,
And let her head fall into Englands lappe.
My ancient Incantations are too weake,
And hell too strong for me to buck'e with:
Now France, thy glory droopeth to the dust.

Exit

Excursions Burgundie and Torke fight hard to hand. French flye.

Torke. Damsell of France, I thinke I haue you fast,
Vnchaine your spirits now with spelling Charmes,
And try if they can gaine your liberty.

A goodly prize, fit for the duels grace,
See how the vgly Witch doth bend her browes,
As if with Circe, she would changemy shape

Puc. Chang'd to a worsef shape thou canst not be:

Tor. Oh, Charles the Dolphin is a proper man,
No shape but his can please your dainty eye.

Puc. A plaguing mischeefe light on Charles, and thee,
And may ye both be sodainly surpriz'd
By bloody hands, in sleeping on your beds.

Torke. Fell banning Hagge, Inchantresse hold thy tongue.

Puc. I prethee giue me leaue to curse awhile

Torke. Curse Miscreant, when thou comst to the stake

Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter Suffolke with Margaret in his hand.

Suff. Be what thou wilt, thou art my prisoner.

Gazes on her.

Oh Fairest Beautie, do not feare, nor flye:
For I will touch thee but with reuerend hands,
I kisse these fingers for eternall peace,
And lay them gently on thy tender side
Who art thou, say? that I may honor thee.

Mar. Margaret my name, and daughter to a King,
The King of Naples, who so ere thou art.

Suff. An Earle I am, and Suffolke am I call'd.
Be not offended Natures myracle,
Thou art alotted to be tane by me:
So doth the Swan her downie Signets saue,

Oh stay.

Keeping them prisoner vnderneath his wings :

Yet if this seruile vsage once offend,
Go, and be free againe, as Suffolkes friend. She is going

Oh stay : I haue no power to let her passe,
My hand would freee her, but my heart sayes no.
As playes the Sunne vpon the glassie streames,
Twinkling another counterfett beame,
So seemes this gorgeous beauty to mine eyes,
Faine would I wooe her, yet I dare not speake :
He call for Pen and Inke, and write my minde :

Eye De la Pole, disable not thy selfe.

Hast not a Tongue ? Is she not heere ?

Wilt thou be daunted at a Womans sight ?

I : Beauties Princely Maesty is such,

'Confounds the tongue, and makes the senses rough.

Mar. Say Earle of Suffolke, if thy name be so,

What ranfome must I pay before I passe ?

For I perceiue I am thy prisoner.

Suf. How canst thou tell she will deny thy suite,

Before thou make a triall of her loue ?

M. Why speak'st thou not ? What ranfome must I pay ?

Suf. She's beautifull, and therefore to be Wooded :

She is a Woman ; therefore to be Wonne.

Mar. Wilt thou accept of ranfome, yea or no ?

Suf. Fond man, remember that thou hast a wife,

Then how can Margaret be thy Paramour ?

Mar. I were best to leaue him, for he will not heare.

Suf. There all is marr'd there lies a cooling card.

Mar. He talkes at randon sure the man is mad.

Suf. And yet a dispensation may bee had.

Mar. And yet I would that you would answer me :

Suf. He win this Lady Margaret. For whom ?

Why for my King : Tush, that's a woodden thing.

Mar. He talkes of wood : It is some Carpenter.

Suf. Yet to my fancy may be satisfied,

And peace established betweene these Realmes

But there remaines a scruple in that too :

For though her Father be the King of Naples,

Duke of Anjou and Mayne, yet is he poore,

And our Nobility will scorne the match.

Mar. Heare ye Captaine ? Are you not at leysure ?

Suf. It shall be so, disdaine they ne're so much :

Henry is youthfull, and will quickly yeeld.

Madam, I haue a secret to reueale.

Mar. What though I be intral'd, he seems a knight

And will not any way dishonor me.

Suf. Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

Mar. Perhaps I shall be rescu'd by the French,

And then I need not craue his curtesie.

Suf. Sweet Madam, giue me hearing in a cause.

Mar. Tush, women haue bene captiuat ere now.

Suf. Lady, wherefore talke you so ?

Mar. I cry you mercy, 'tis but Quid for Quo.

Suf. Say gentle Princeesse, would you not suppose

Your bondage happy, to be made a Queene ?

Mar. To be a Queene in bondage, is more vile,

Than is a slaue, in brisfe seruility :

For Princes should be free.

Suf. And lo shall you,

If happy England's Royall King be free.

Mar. Why what concernes his freedome vnto mee ?

Suf. He vndertake to make thee Henries Queene,

To put a Golden Scepter in thy hand,

And set a precious Crowne vpon thy head,

If thou wilt condescend to be my—

Mar. What ?

Suf. His loue.

Mar. I am vnworthy to be Henries wife.

Suf. No gentle Madam, I vnworthy am

To wooe so faire a Dame to be his wife,

And haue no portion in the choice my selfe.

How say you Madam, are ye so content ?

Mar. And if my Father please, I am content.

Suf. Then call our Capitaines and our Colours forth,

And Madam, at your Fathers Castle walles,

Wee'l craue a parley, to conferre with him.

Sonnd. Enter Reignier on the Walles.

See Reignier see, thy daughter prisoner.

Reig. To whom ?

Suf. To me.

Reig. Suffolke, what remedy ?

I am a Souldier, and vnapt to weepe,

Or to exclaime on Fortunes sicklenesse.

Suf. Yes, there is remedy enough my Lord,

Consent, and for thy Honor giue consent,

Thy daughter shall be wedded to my King,

Whom I with paine haue wooed and wonne thereto :

And this her easie held imprisonment,

Hath gain'd thy daughter Princely libertie

Reig. Speakes Suffolke as he thinks ?

Suf. Faire Margaret knowes,

That Suffolke doth not flatter, face, oraine.

Reig. Vpon thy Princely warrant, I descend,

To giue thee answer of thy iust demand.

Suf. And heere I will expect thy comming.

Trumpets sound. Enter Reignier.

Reig. Welcome braue Earle into our Territories,

Command in Anjou what your Honor pleases.

Suf. Thankes Reignier, happy for so sweet a Childe,

Fit to be made companion with a King :

What answer makes your Grace vnto my suite ?

Reig. Since thou dost daigne to wipe her little worth,

To be the Princely Bride of such a Lord :

Vpon condition I may quietly

Enioy mine owne, the Country Maine and Anjou,

Free from oppression, or the stroke of Warre,

My daughter shall be Henries, if he please.

Suf. That is her ranfome, I deliuer her,

And those two Counties I will vndertake

Your Grace shall well and quietly enioy.

Reig. And I againe in Henries Royall name,

As Deputy vnto that gracious King,

Giue thee her hand for signe of plighted faith.

Suf. Reignier of France, I giue thee Kingly thanks,

Because this is in Trafficke of a King.

And yet me thinks I could be well content

To be mine owne Attorney in this case.

He ouer then to England with this newes.

And make this marriage to be solemniz'd :

So farewell Reignier, set this Diamond safe

In Golden Pallaces as it becomes.

Reig. I do embrace thee, as I would embrace

The Christian Prince King Henrie were he heere.

Mar. Farewell my Lord, good wishes, praise, & prayer,

Shall Suffolke euer haue of Margaret. Shee is going.

Suf. Farewell sweet Madam, but hearken you Margaret,

No Princely commendations to my King :

Mar. Such commendations as becomes a Maide,

A Virgin, and his Seruant, say to him.

Suf. Words sweetly plac'd, and modestie directed,

But

But Madame, I must trouble you againe,
No louing Token to his Maestie?

Mar. Yes, my good Lord, a pure vnspotted heart,
Neuer yet taint with loue, I send the King.

Suf. And this withall Kisse her.

Mar. That for thy selfe, I will not so presume,
To send such peeewith tokens to a King.

Suf. Oh wert thou for my selfe but Suffolke stay,
Thou mayest not wander in that Labyrinth,
There Minotaurs and vgly Treasons lurke,
Solicite Henry with her wonderous praise.
Bethinke thee on her Vertues that surmount,
Mad naturall Graces that extinguish Art,
Repeate their semblance often on the Seas,
That when thou com'st to kneele at Herries feete,
Thou mayest bereaue him of his wits with wonder. Exit

Enter Yorke Warwicke, Shepheard, Pucell.

Yor. Bring forth that Sorceresse condemn'd to burne.

Shep. Ah Ione, this kils thy Fathers heart out-right,
Haue I sought every Country farre and neere,
And now it is my chance to finde thee out,
Must I behold thy timelesse cruell death.

Ah Ione, sweet daughter Ione, Ile die with thee
Pucel. Decrepit Miser, base ignoble Wretch,
I am descended of a gentler blood.

Thou art no Father, nor no Friend of mine

Shep. Out, out My Lords, and please you, 'tis not so
I did beget her, all the Parish knowes.

Her Mother lueth yet, can testifie
She was the first fruite of my Bach ler-ship.

War. Gracelesse, wilt thou deny thy Parentage?

Yorke. This argues what her kinde of life hath beene,
Wicked and vile, and so her death concludes

Shep. Fye Ione, that thou wilt be so obstacle.

God knowes, thou art a collop of my flesh,
And for thy sake haue I shed many a teare:

Deny me not, I pryther, gentle Ione.

Pucell. Pezant auant You haue suborn'd this man
Of purpose, to obscure my Noble birth.

Shep. 'Tis true, I gaue a Noble to the Priest,
The morne that I was wedded to her mother.
Kneele downe and take my blessing, good my Gyrle.
Wilt thou not stoope? Now cursed be the time

Of thy natuities. I would the Milke
Thy mother gaue thee when thou suck't her brest,
Had bin a little Rats-bane for thy sake.

Or else, when thou didst keepe my Lambes a-field,
I wish some rauenuous Wolfe had eaten thee.

Doest thou deny thy Father, cursed Drab?

O burne her, burne her, hanging is too good. Exit.

Yorke. Take her away, for she hath liu'd too long,
To fill the world with vicious qualities.

Puc. First let me tell you whom you haue condemn'd,
Not me, begotten of a Shepheard Swaine
But issued from the Progeny of Kings.
Vertuous and Holy, chosen from aboue,
By inspiration of Celestiall Grace,
To worke exceeding myacles on earth.
I neuer had to do with wicked Spirits.

But you that are polluted with your lustes,
Stain'd with the guiltlesse blood of Innocents.
Corrupt and tainted with a thousand Vices:
Because you want the graces that others haue,
You iudge it straight a thing impossible
To compasse Wonders, but by helpe of duels.

No misconceyued, Ione of Arre hath beene

A Virgin from her tender infancie,
Chaste, and immaculate in very thought,
Whose Maiden-blood thus rigorously effus'd,
Will cry for Vengeance, at the Gates of Heauen.

Yorke. I, I away with her to execution.

War. And hearken ye first: because she is a Maide,
Spare for no Faggots, let there be know:
Place barrelles of pitch vpon the fatall stake,
That so her torture may be shortned.

Puc. Will nothing turne your vnrelenting hearts?
Then Ione discover thine infirmity,
That warranteth by Law, to be thy priuiledge.
I am with childe ye bloody Homicides.
Murther not then the Fruite within my Wombe,
Although ye hale me to a violent death.

Yor. Now heauen forfend, the holy Maid with child?

War. The greatest miracle that ere ye wrought
Is all your strict precisenesse come to this?

Yorke. She and the Dolphin haue bin iugling,
I did imagine what would be her refuge.

War. Well go too, we'll haue no Bastards liue,
Especially since Charles must Father it.

Puc. You are decey'd, my childe is none of his,
It was Alanson that inioy'd my loue.

Yorke. Alanson that notorious Macheuile?
It dyes, and if it had a thousand liues.

Puc. Oh giue me leaue, I haue deluded you,
'Twas neyther Charles, nor yet the Duke I nam'd,
But Reignier King of Naples that preuayl'd.

War. A married man, that's most intollerable.

Yor. Why here's a Gyrle I think she knowes not wel
(There were so many) whom she may accuse

War. It's signe she hath beene liberall and free.

Yor. And yet forsooth she is a Virgin pure
Strumpet, thy words condemne thy Brat, and thee.
Vse no intreaty, for it is in vaine

Pu. Then lead me hence with whom I leaue my curse.
May neuer glorious Sunne reflex his beames
Vpon the Countrey where you make abode:
But darknesse, and the gloomy shade of death
Inuiron you, till Mischeefe and Dispaire,
Driue you to break your necks, or hang your selues. Exit

Enter Cardinall.

Yorke. Breake thou in peeces, and consume to ashes,
Thou fowle accursed minister of Hell.

Car. Lord Regent, I do greete your Excellence
With Letters of Commission from the King.
For know my Lords, the States of Christendome,
Mou'd with remorse of these out-ragious broyles,
Haue earnestly implor'd a generall peace,
Betwixt our Nation, and the aspyring French;
And heere at hand, the Dolphin and his Traiue
Approacheth, to conferre about some matter.

Yorke. Is all our traueil turn'd to this effect,
After the slaughter of so many Peeres,
So many Captaines, Gentlemen, and Soldiers,
That in this quarrell haue beene ouerthrowne,
And sold their bodies for their Countryes ben-fit,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace?
Haue we not lost most part of all the Townes,
By Treason, Falshood, and by Treacherie,
Our great Progenitors had conquered?
Oh Warwicke, Warwicke, I foresee with greefe
The vtter losse of all the Realme of France.

War. Be patient Yorke, if we conclude a Peace

m

It

It shall be with such strict and seuerer Couenants,
As little shall the Frenchmen gaine thereby.

Enter Charles, Alançon, Bastard, Reigner.

Char. Since Lords of England, it is thus agreed,
That peacefull truce shall be proclaim'd in France,
We come to be informed by your selues,
What the conditions of that league must be.

Torke. Speake Winchester, for boyling cholier chokes
The hollow passage of my poyson'd voyce,
By sight of these our balefull enemies

Win. Charles, and the rest, it is enacted thus:
That in regard King Henry giues consent,
Of meere compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your Countrey of distressfull Warre,
And suffer you to breath in fruitfull peace,
You shall become true Liegemen to his Crowne.
And Charles, vpon condition thou wilt sweare
To pay him tribute, and submit thy selfe,
Thou shalt be plac'd as Viceroy vnder him,
And still enioy thy Regall dignity.

Alan. Must he be then as shadow of himselfe?
Adorne his Temples with a Coronet,
And yet in substance and authority,
Retaine but priuiledge of a priuate man?
This proffer is absurd, and reasonlesse.

Char. 'Tis knowne already that I am posselt
With more then halfe the Gallian Territories,
And therein reuerenc'd for their lawfull King.
Shall I for lucre of the rest vn-vanquish't,
Detract so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but Viceroy of the whole?
No Lord Ambassador, Ile rather keepe
That which I haue, than coueting for more
Be cast from possibilty of all

Torke. Insulting Charles, hast thou by secret meanes
Vs'd intercession to obtaine a league,
And now the matter growes to compromize,
Stand'st thou aloofe vpon Comparison
Either accept the Title thou vsurp'st,
Of benefit proceeding from our King,
And not of any challenge of Desert,
Or we will plague thee with incessant Warres.

Reig. My Lord, you do not well in obstinacy,
To caull in the course of this Contract.
If once it be neglected, ten to one
We shall not finde like opportunity.

Alan. To say the truth, it is your policie,
To saue your Subjects from such massacre
And ruthlesse slaughters as are dayly scene
By our proceeding in Hostility,
And therefore take this compact of a Truce,
Although you breake it, when your pleasure serues.

Win. How sayst thou Charles?
Shall our Condition stand?

Char. It shall:
Onely reseru'd, you claime no interest
In any of our Townes of Garrison.

Tor. Then sweare Allegiance to his Maiessty,
As thou art Knight, neuer to disobey,
Nor be Rebellious to the Crowne of England,
Thou nor thy Nobles, to that Crowne of England.
So, now dismisle your Army when ye please:
Hang vp your Ensignes, let your Drummes be still,
For heere we entertaine a solemne peace.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Suffolke in conference with the King, Glocester, and Exeter.

King. Your wondrous rare description (noble Earle)
Of beauteous Margaret hath astonish'd me:
Her vertues graced with externall gifts,
Do breed Loues seild passions in my heart,
And like as rigour of tempestuous gustes
Prouokes the mightiest Hulke against the tide,
So am I driuen by breath of her Renowne,
Either to suffer Shipwracke, or arrive
Where I may haue fruition of her Loue.

Suf. Tush my good Lord, this superficial tale,
Is but a preface of her worthy praise:
The cheefe perfections of that louely Dame,
(Had I sufficient skill to vtter them)
Would make a volume of inticing lines,
Able to rauish any dull conceit
And which is more, she is not so Diuine,
So full repleate with choice of all delights,
But with as humble lowlinesse of minde,
She is content to be at your command.
Command I meane, of Vertuous chaste intents,
To Loue, and Honor Henry as her Lord

King. And otherwise, will Henry ne're presume:
Therefore my Lord Protector, giue consent,
That Marg'ret may be Englands Royall Queene.

Glo. So should I giue consent to flatter sinne,
You know (my Lord) your Highnesse is betroath'd
Vnto another Lady of esteeme,
How shall we then dispense with that contract,
And not defice your Honor with reproach?

Suf. As doth a Ruler with vnlawfull Oathes,
Or one that at a Triumph, hauing vow'd
To try his strength, forsaketh yet the lisses
By reason of his Adversaries oddes.
A poore Earles daughter is vnequall oddes,
And therefore may be broke without offence.

Glocester. Why what (I pray) is Margaret more then that?

Her Father is no better than an Earle,
Although in glorious Titles he excell.

Suf. Yes my Lord, her Father is a King,
The King of Naples, and Ierusalem,
And of such great Authoritie in France,
As his alliance will confirme our peace,
And keepe the Frenchmen in Allegiance.

Glo. And so the Earle of Arminacke may doe,
Because he is neerer Kinsman vnto Charles.

Exet. Beside, his wealth doth warrant a liberal dower,
Where Reigner sooner will receyue, than giue.

Suf. A Dower my Lords? Disgrace not so your King,
That he should be so abiect, base, and poore,
To choose for wealth, and not for perfect Loue.
Henry is able to enrich his Queene,
And not to seeke a Queene to make him rich,
So worthlesse Pezants bargain for their Wives,
As Market men for Oxen, Sheepe, or Horse.
Marriage is a matter of more worth,
Then to be dealt in by Atturday-ship:
Not whom we will, but whot his Grace affects,

Must

Must be companion of his Nuptiall bed.
 And therefore Lords, since he affects her most,
 Most of all these reasons bindeth vs,
 In our opinions she should be prefer'd.
 For what is wedlocke forced? but a Hell,
 An Age of discord and continuall strife,
 Whereas the contrarie bringeth blisse,
 And is a patterne of Celestiall peace.
 Whom should we match with Henry being a King,
 But Margaret, that is daughter to a King:
 Her peerlesse feature, ioyned with her birth,
 Approoves her fit for none, but for a King
 Her valiant courage, and vndaunted spirit,
 (More then in women commonly is seene)
 Will answer our hope in issue of a King.
 For Henry, sonne vnto a Conqueror,
 Is likely to beget more Conquerors,
 If with a Lady of so high resolute,
 (As is faire Margaret) he be link'd in loue.
 Then yeeld my Lords, and heere conclude with mee,
 That Margaret shall be Queene, and none but shee.
King. Whether it be through force of your report,
 My Noble Lord of Suffolke: Or for that
 My tender youth was neuer yet attaint
 With any passion of inflaming loue,
 I cannot tell. but this I am assur'd,

I feele such sharpe dissention in my breast,
 Such fierce alarums both of Hope and Feare,
 As I am sicke with working of my thoughts.
 Take therefore shipping, poste my Lord to France,
 Agree to any couenants, and procure
 That Lady Margaret do vouchsafe to come
 To crosse the Seas to England, and be crown'd
 King Henries faithfull and annoiued Queene.
 For your expences and sufficient charge,
 Among the people gather vp a tenth.
 Be gone I say, for till you do returne,
 I rest perplexed with a thousand Cares.
 And you (good Vnckle) banish all offence:
 If you do censure me, by what you were,
 Not what you are, I know it will excuse
 This sodaine execution of my will.
 And so conduct me, where from company,
 I may reuolue and ruinate my griefe.
Glo. I griefe I feare me, both at first and last. Exit.
Suf. Thus Suffolke hath preuail'd, and thus he goes
 As did the youthfull Paris once to Greece,
 With hope to finde the like euert in loue,
 But prosper better than the Trojan did:
Margaret shall now be Queene, and rule the King.
 But I will rule both her, the King, and Realme. Exit.

FINIS.

The second Part of Henry the Sixt,

with the death of the Good Duke

HVMFREY.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Flourish of Trumpets · Then Hoboyes

Enter King, Duke Humfrey, Salisbury, Warwicke, and Beauford on the one side

The Queene, Suffolke, Yorke, Somerset, and Buckingham, on the other.

Suffolke.

AS by your high Imperiall Maiesty,
I had in charge at my depart for France,
As Procurator to your Excellence,
To marry Princes Margaret for your Grace;
So in the Famous Ancient City, Tonnes,
In presence of the Kings of France, and Sicill,
The Dukes of Orleance, Calaber, Britaigne, and Alanfon,
Seuen Earles, twelue Barons, & twenty reuerend Bithops
I haue perform'd my Taske, and was espous'd,
And humbly now vpon my bended knee,
In sight of England, and her Lordly Peeres,
Deliuier vp my Tit'e in the Queene
To your most gracious hands, that are the Substance
Of that great Shadow I did represent:
The happiest Gift, that euer Marqueſſe gaue,
The Faireſt Queene, that euer King receiu'd.

King. Suffolke arise. Welcome Queene Margaret,
I can expresse no kinder signe of Loue
Then this kinde kisse O Lord, that lends me life,
Lend me a heart repleate with thankfulnessse
For thou hast giuen me in this beauteous Face
A world of earthly blessings to my soule,
If Simpathy of Loue vntie our thought.

Queen. Great King of England, & my gracious Lord,
The mutuall conference that my minde hath had,
By day, by night; waking, and in my dreames,
In Courtly company, or at my Beades,
With you mine Alder liefest Soueraigne,
Makes me the bolder to salute my King,
With ruder termes, such as my wit affords,
And ouer ioy of heart doth minister.

King. Her sight did rauish, but her grace in Speech,
Her words yelad with wisdomes Maiesty,
Makes me from Wondring, fall to Weeping ioyes,
Such is the Fulnessse of my hearts content.
Lords, with one cheerefull voice, Welcome my Loue.

All kneel. Long liue Qu. Margaret, Englands happines,
Queene. We thanke you all. Flourish

Suf. My Lord Protector, so it please your Grace,
Heere are the Articles of contracted peace,
Betweene our Soueraigne, and the French King Charles,
For eighteene moneths concluded by consent.

Glo Reads. Inprimis, It is agreed betweene the French K.
Charles, and William de la Pole Marqueſſe of Suffolke, Ambassador for Henry King of England, That the said Henry shal espouse the Lady Margaret, daughtier vnto Reigner King of Naples, Sicillia, and Iernusalem, and Crowne her Queene of England, ere the thirtieth of May next ensuing.

Item, That the Dutchy of Anion, and the Countie of Main, shall be released and deliuered to the King her father.

King. Vnkle, how now?

Glo. Pardon me gracious Lord,
Some sodaine qualme hath stricke me at the heart,
And dim'd mine eyes, that I can reade no further.

King. Vnkle of Winchester, I pray read on.

Win. Item, It is further agreed betweene them, That the Dutcheſſe of Anion and Maine, shall be released and deliuered ouer to the King her Father, and shew sent ouer of the King of Englands owne proper Cost and Charges, without hauing any Dowry.

King. They please vs well. Lord Marques kneel down,
We heere create thee the first Duke of Suffolke,
And girt thee with the Sword. Cofin of Yorke,
We heere discharge your Grace from being Regent
I'th parts of France, till terme of eighteene Moneths
Besull expyr'd Thankes Vnkle Winchester,
Gloster, Yorke, Buckingham, Somerset,
Salisbury, and Warwicke.

We thanke you all for this great fauour done,
In entertainment to my Princely Queene
Come, let vs in, and with all speede prouide
To see her Coronation be perform'd

Exit King, Queene, and Suffolke.

Manet rest.

Glo. Braue Peeres of England, Pillars of the State,
To you Duke Humfrey must vnload his greefe:
Your greefe, the common greefe of all the Land,
What? did my brother Henry spend his youth,
His valour, coine, and people in the warres?
Did he so often lodge in open field.
In Winters cold, and Summers parching heate,
To conquer France, his true inheritance?
And did my brother Bedford toyle his wits,

To

To keepe by policy what Henrie got:
 Haue you your selues, Somerſet, Buckingham,
Braue Yorke, Salisbury, and victorious Warwicke,
 Receiued deepe ſcarres in France and Normand, e
 Or hath mine Vnckle Bea ſford, and my ſelfe,
 With all the Learned Counſell of the Realme,
 Studied ſo long, ſat in the Councell houſe,
 Early and late, debating too and fro
 How France and Frenchmen might be kept in awe,
 And hath his Highneſſe in his infancie,
 Crowned in Paris in deſpight of foes,
 And ſhall theſe Labours, and theſe Honours dye?
 Shall Henries Conqueſt, Bedfords vigilance,
 Your Deeds of Warre, and all our Counſell dye?
 O Pectes of England, ſhamefull is this League,
 Fatale this Marriage, cancelling your Fame,
 Blotting your names from Bookes of memory,
 Racing the Charraeters of your Renowne,
 Deſtroying Monuments of Conquer'd France,
 Vndoing all as all had neuer bin

Car. Nephew, what meanes this passionate diſcourſe?
 This preroration with ſuch circumſtance:

For France, 'tis ours; and we will keepe it ſtill,
Glo. I Vnckle, we will keepe it, if we can.

But now it is impoſſible we ſhould.
Suffolke, the new made Duke that rules the roſt,
 Hath giuen the Dutchy of Anjou and Mayne,
 Vnto the poore King Reignier, whoſe large ſtyle
 Agrees not with the leanneſſe of his purſe.

Sal. Now by the death of him that dyed for all,
 Theſe Counties were the Keyes of Normandie
 But wherefore weepes Warwicke, my valiant ſonne?

War. For greefe that they are paſt recouerie.
 For were there hope to conquer them againe,
 My ſword ſhould ſhed hot blood, mine eyes no teares
Anjou and Mayne? My ſelfe did win them both Thoſe Provinces, theſe Armes of mine did conquer,
 And are the Citties that I got with wounds,
 Deliuer'd vp againe with peacefull words.
Mort. Diem.

Yorke. For Suffolkes Duke, may he be ſuffocate,
 That dims the Honor of this Worlike Iſle
 France ſhould haue torne and rent my very hart,
 Before I would haue yeelded to this League
 I neuer read but Englands Kings haue had Large ſummes of Gold, and Dowries with their wiues,
 And our King Henry giues away his owne,
 To match with her that brings no vantages

Hum. A proper leiſt, and neuer heard before,
 That Suffolke ſhould demand a whole Fifteenth,
 For Coſts and Charges in transporting her.
 She ſhould haue ſtaid in France, and ſteru'd in France
 Before—

Car. My Lord of Gloſter, now ye grow too hot,
 It was the pleaſure of my Lord the King.

Hum. My Lord of Wincheſter I know your minde
 'Tis not my ſpeeches that you do miſlike.
 But 'tis my preſence that doth trouble ye,
 Rancour will out, proud Prelate, in thy face
 I ſee thy furie. If I longer ſtay,
 We ſhall begin our ancient bickerings:
 Lordings farewell, and ſay when I am gone,
 I prophesied, France will be loſtere long. Exit Humfrey.

Car. So, there goes our Protector in a rage.
 'Tis knowne to you he is mine enemy:
 Nay more, an enemy vnto you all,

And no great friend, I feare me to the King;
 Conſider Lords, he is the next of blood.
 And heyre apparant to the Engliſh Crowne.
 Had Henrie got an Empire by his marriage,
 And all the wealthy Kingdomes of the Weſt,
 There's reaſon he ſhould be diſpleas'd at it;
 Looke to it Lords, let not his ſmoothing words
 Bewitch your hearts, be wiſe and circumspect.
 What though the common people fauour him,
 Calling him, Humfrey the good Duke of Gloſter,
 Clapping their hands, and crying with loud voyce,
 Ieſu maintaine your Royall Excellence,
 With God preſerue the good Duke Humfrey
 I feare me Lords, for all this flattering gloſſe,
 He will be found a dangerous Protector.

Buc. Why ſhould he then protect our Soueraigne?
 He being of age to gouerne of himſelfe.
 Coſin of Somerſet, ioyne you with me,
 And altogether with the Duke of Suffolke,
 Wee'l quickly hoyle Duke Humfrey from his ſeat.

Car. This weighty buſineſſe will not brooke delay,
 Ile to the Duke of Suffolke preſently. Exit Cardinall.

Som. Coſin of Buckingham, though Humfries pride
 And greatneſſe of his place be greefe to vs,
 Yet let vs watch the haughtie Cardinall,
 His inſolence is more intollerable
 Then all the Princes in the Land beſide,
 If Gloſter be diſplac'd, hee'l be Protector.

Buc. Or thou, or I Somerſet will be Protectors, Deſpite Duke Humfrey, or the Cardinall

Exit Buckingham, and Somerſet.

Sal. Pride went before, Ambition followes him.
 While theſe dolabour for their owne preferment,
 Behooues it vs to labor for the Realme.

I neuer ſaw but Humfrey Duke of Gloſter.
 Did beare him like a Noble Gentleman:
 Oft haue I ſerne the haughty Cardinall,
 More like a Souldier then a man o'th Church,
 As ſtout and proud as he were Lord of all,
 Swear like a Ruſſian, and demeane himſelfe
 Vnlike the Ruler of a Common-weale.

Warwicke my ſonae, the comfort of my age,
 Thy deeds, thy plainneſſe, and thy houſe-keeping,
 Hath wonne the greateſt fauour of the Commons,
 Excepting none but good Duke Humfrey.
 And Brother Yorke, thy Aſts in Ireland,
 In bringing them to ciuill Diſcipline.

Thy late exploits done in the heart of France,
 When thou wert Regent for our Soueraigne
 Haue made thee fear'd and honor'd of the people,
 Ioyme we together for the publike good,
 In what we can, to bridle and ſuppreſſe
 The pride of Suffolke, and the Cardinall,
 With Somerſets and Buckinghams Ambition,
 And as we may, cheriſh Duke Humfries deeds,
 While they do tend the profit of the Land.

War. So God helpe Warwicke, as he loues the Land,
 And common profit of his Countrey

Tor. And ſo ſayes Yorke,
 For he hath greateſt cauſe.

Salisbury. Then lets make haſt away,
 And looke vnto the maine.

Warwicke. Vnto the maine?
 Oh Father, Mayne is loſt,
 'hat Mayne, which by maine force Warwicke did winne,
 And would haue kept, ſo long as breath did laſt:

Main-chance father you meant, but I meant Maine,
Which I will win from France, or else be slaine.

Exit Warwick, and Salisbury. Marches Yorke.

Yorke. Anion and Maine are giuen to the French,
Paris is lost, the state of Normandie
Stands on a tickle point, now they are gone.
Suffolke concluded on the Articles,
The Peeres agreed, and Henry was well pleas'd,
To change two Dukedomes for a Dukes faire daughter.
I cannot blame them all, what is't to them?

'Tis thine they giue away, and not their owne.
Pirates may make cheape penyworths of their pillage,
And purchase Friends, and giue to Curtizans,
Sell reuelling like Lords till all be gone,
While as the silly Owner of the goods
Weepes ouer them, and wrings his haplesse hands,
And shakes his head, and trembling stands aloofe,
While all is shar'd, and all is borne away,
Ready to sterue, and dare not touch his owne.
So Yorke must sit, and fret, and bite his tongue,
While his owne Lands are bargain'd for, and sold:
He thinks the Realmes of England, France, & Ireland,
Beare that proportion to my flesh and blood,
As did the fatal brand Althea burne,
Vnto the Princes heart of Calidon:

Anion and Maine both giuen vnto the French:
Cold newes for me: for I had hope of France,
Euen as I haue of fertile Englands soile
A day will come, when Yorke shall claime his owne,
And therefore I will take the Neuils parts,
And make a shew of loue to proud Duke Humfrey,
And when I spy aduantage, claime the Crowne,
For that's the Golden marke I seeke to hit:
Nor shall proud Lancaster vsurpe my right,
Nor hold the Scepter in his childish Fist,
Nor weare the Diadem vpon his head,
Whose Church-like humors fits not for a Crowne.
Then Yorke be still a-while, till time do serue
Watch thou, and wake when others be asleepe,
To prie into the secrets of the State,
Till Henrie surfetting in ioyes of loue,
With his new Bride, & Englands deere bought Queen,
And Humfrey with the Peeres be false at iarret:
Then will I raise aloft the Milke-white-Rose,
With whose sweet smell the Ayre shall be perfum'd,
And in my Standard beare the Armes of Yorke,
To grapple with the house of Lancaster,
And force perforce Ile make him yeeld the Crowne,
Whose bookish Rule, hath pull'd faire England downe.

Exit Yorke.

Enter Duke Humfrey and his wife Eleanor.

Elia. Why droopes my Lord like over-npen'd Corn,
Hanging the head at Ceres plementous load?
Why doth the Great Duke Humfrey knit his browes,
As frowning at the Fauours of the world?
Why are thine eyes fixt to the sullen earth,
Gazing on that which seemes to dimme thy sight?
What seest thou there? King Henries Diadem,
Inchac'd with all the Honors of the world?
If so, Gaze on, and grouell on thy face,
Vntill thy head be circled with the same.
Put forth thy hand, reach at the glorious Gold.
What, is't too thort? Ile lengthen it with mine,
And hauing both together heau'd it vp,
Wee'l both together lift our heads to heauen,
And neuer more abase our sight so low,

As to vouchsafe one glance vnto the ground.

Hum. O Nell, sweet Nell, if thou dost loue thy Lord,
Banish the Canker of ambitious thoughts:
And may that thought, when I imagine ill
Against my King and Nephew, vertuous Henry,
Be my last breathing in this mortall world,
My troublous dreames this night, doth make me sad,

Eli. What dream'd my Lord, tell me, and Ile requite it
With sweet rehearsall of my mornings dreame:

Hum. Me thought this stasse mine Office-badge in Court

Was broke in twaine: by whom, I haue forgot,
But as I thinke, it was by'th Cardinall,
And on the peeces of the broken Wand
Were plac'd the heads of Edmond Duke of Somerset,
And William de la Pole first Duke of Suffolke.
This was my dreame, what it doth bode God knowes.

Eli. Tut, this was nothing but an argument,
That he that breakes a stick of Glosters groue,
Shall loose his head for his presumption.
But list to me my Humfrey, my sweete Duke
Me thought I sat in Seate of Maiesty,
In the Cathedrall Church of Westminster,
And in that Chaire where Kings & Queens wer crown'd,
Where Henrie and Dame Margaret kneel'd to me,
And on my head did set the Diadem

Hum. Nay Elior, then must I chide outright:
Presumptuous Dame, ill-nurser'd Elior,
Art thou not second Woman in the Realme?
And the Protector's wife belov'd of him?
Hast thou not worldly pleasure at command,
Abooue the reach or compasse of thy thought?
And wilt thou still be hammering Treachery,
To tumble downe thy husband, and thy selfe,
From top of Honor, to Disgraces seete?
Away from me, and let me heare no more.

Elia. What, what, my Lord? Are you so chollericke
With Elior, for telling b't her dreame?
Next time Ile keepe my dreames vnto my selfe,
And not be check'd.

Hum. Nay be not angry, I am pleas'd againe.

Enter Messenger.

Mess. My Lord Protector, 'tis his Highnes pleasure,
You do prepare to ride vnto S. Albons,

Where as the King and Queene do meane to Hawke.
Hu. I go, Come Nel thou wilt ride with vs? Ex. Hum.

Eli. Yes my good Lord, Ile follow presently.
Follow I must, I cannot go before,
While Gloster beares this base and humble minde.
Were I a Man, a Duke, and next of blood,
I would remoue these tedious stumbling blockes,
And smoothe my way vpon their headlesse neckes.
And being a woman, I will not be slacke
To play my part in Fortunes Pageant.
Where are you there? Sir Iohn; nay feare not man,
We are alone, here's none but thee, & I. Enter Hunt.

Hum. Iesus preserue your Royall Muefty.

Elia. What saist thou? Maicsty: I am but Grace

Hum. But by the grace of God, and Humers aduice,
Your Graces Title shall be multiplied.

Elia. What saist thou man? Hast thou as yet confer'd
With Margerie Iordans the cunning Witch,
With Roger Bollingbrooke the Coniurer?
And will they vndertake to do me good?

Hum. This they haue promised to shew your Highnes
A Spirit rais'd from depth of vnder ground,

That

That shall make answer to such Questions,
As by your Grace shall be propounded him.

Eliano. It is enough, Ile thinke vpon the Questions:
When from Saint Albions we doe make returne,
Wee'le see these things effected to the full.
Here Hume, take this reward, make merry man
With thy Confederates in this weightie cause.

Exit Eliano

Hume Hume must make merry with the Duchesse Gold:
Marry and shall - but how now, Sir John Hume?
Seale vp your Lips, and giue no words but Mum,
The businesse asketh silent secrecie.
Dame Eliano giues Gold, to bring the Witch.
Gold cannot come amisse, were she a Deuill.
Yet haue I Gold flies from another Coast.
I dare not say, from the rich Cardinall,
And from the great and new-made Duke of Suffolke,
Yet I doe finde it so: for to be plaine,
They (knowing Dame Eliano's aspiring humor)
Haue hyred me to vnder-mine the Duchesse,
And buzze these Coniurations in her brayne
They say, A craftie Knaue do's need no Broker,
Yet am I Suffolke and the Cardinalls Broker.
Hume, if you take not heed, you shall goe neere
To call them both a payre of craftie Knaues.
Well, so it stands and thus I feare at last,
Humes Knauerie will be the Duchesse Wracke,
And her Attainture, will be Humphreys fall
Sort how it will, I shall haue Gold for all.

Exit

Enter three or foure Petitioners, the Armours Man being one.

1. Pet. My Masters, let's stand close, my Lord Protector will come this way by and by, and then wee may deliuer our Supplications in the Quill.

2. Pet. Marry the Lord protect him, for hee's a good man, Iesu bleste him.

Enter Suffolke, and Queene

Peter Here a'comes me thinkes, and the Queene with him Ile be the first sure.

2. Pet. Come backe foole, this is the Duke of Suffolk, and not my Lord Protector

Suff. How now fellow, would'st any thing with me?

1. Pet. I pray my Lord pardon me, I tooke ye for my Lord Protector

Queene. To my Lord Protector? Are your Supplications to his Lordship? Let me see them: what is thine?

1. Pet. Mine is, and't please your Grace, against John Goodman, my Lord Cardinalls Man, for keeping my House, and Lands, and Wife and all, from me.

Suff. Thy Wife too? that's some Wrong indeede.
What's yours? What's heere? Against the Duke of Suffolke, for enclosing the Commons of Melforde. How now, Sir Knaue?

2. Pet. Alas Sir, I am but a poore Petitioner of our whole Towneship.

Peter Against my Master Thomas Horner, for saying,
That the Duke of Yorke was rightfull Heire to the Crowne.

Queene What say'st thou? Did the Duke of Yorke say, hee was rightfull Heire to the Crowne?

Peter That my Mistresse was? No forsooth my Master said, That he was, and that the King was an Vsurper.

Suff. Who is there?

Enter Seruant.

Take this fellow in, and send for his Master with a Purse-uant presently: wee'le heare more of your matter before the King.

Exit.

Queene And as for you that loue to be protected
Vnder the Wings of our Protectors Grace,
Begin your Suites anew, and sue to him.

Tear the Supplication.

Away, base Cullions. Suffolke let them goe.

All Come, let's be gone

Exit.

Queene My Lord of Suffolke, say, is this the guise?

Is this the Fashions in the Court of England?

Is this the Government of Brittaines Ile?

And this the Royaltie of Albions King?

What, shall King Henry be a Pupill still,

Vnder the surly Glosters Gouvernance?

Am I a Queene in Title and in Stile,

And must be made a Subject to a Duke?

I tell thee Poole, when in the Citie Tours

Thou ran'st a-tit in honor of my Loue,

And stol'st away the Ladies hearts of France;

I thought King Henry had resembled thee,

In Courage, Courtship, and Proportion.

But all his minde is bent to Holinesse,

To number Aue-Maries on his Beades:

His Champions, are the Prophets and Apostles,

His Weapons, holy Sawes of sacred Writ,

His Studie is his Tilt-yard, and his Loues

Are brazen Images of Canonized Saints.

I would the Colledge of the Cardinalls

Would chuse him Pope, and carry him to Rome,

And set the Triple Crowne vpon his Head;

That were a State fit for his Holinesse.

Suff. Madame be patient: as I was cause

Your Highnesse came to England, so will I

In England worke your Graces full content.

Queene Beside the haughtie Protector, haue we Beauford

The imperious Churchman; Somerset, Buckingham,

And grumbling Yorke. and nor the least of these,

But can doe more in England then the King.

Suff. And he of these, that can doe most of all,

Cannot doe more in England then the Neuils.

Salisbury and Warwick are no simple Peeres

Queene. Not all these Lords do vex me halfe so much,

As that proud Dame, the Lord Protectors Wife:

She sweepes it through the Court with troupes of Ladies,

More like an Empresse, then Duke Humphreys Wife.

Strangers in Court, doe take her for the Queene.

She beares a Dukes Reuenewes on her backe,

And in her heart she scornes our Pouertie:

Shall I not liue to be aueng'd on her?

Contempruous base-borne Callot as she is,

She vaunted 'mongst her Minions t'other day,

The very trayne of her worst wearing Gowne,

Was better worth then all my Fathers Lands,

Till Suffolke gaue two Dukedomes for his Daughter.

Suff. Madame, my selfe haue lym'd a Bush for her,

And plac'd a Quier of such enticing Birds,

That she will light to listen to the Layes,

And neuer mount to trouble you againe.

So let her rest. and Madame list to me,

For I am bold to counsaile you in this,

Although we fancie not the Cardinall,

Yet must we ioyne with him and with the Lords,

Till we haue brought Duke Humphrey in disgrace.

As

As for the Duke of Yorke, this late Complain
Will make but little for his benefit:
So one by one weele weed them all at last,
And you yourselfe shall steere the happy Helme. Exit.

Sounds a Sennet.

Enter the King, Duke Humfrey, Cardinall, Buckingsham, Yorke, Salisbury, Warwicke, and the Duchesse.

King. For my part, Noble Lords, I care not which,
Or Somerſet, or Yorke, all's one to me.

Yorke. If Yorke haue ill demean'd himſelfe in France,
Then let him be deny'd the Regent-ſhip.

Som. If Somerſet be vnworthy of the Place,
Let Yorke be Regent, I will yeeld to him.

Warw. Whether your Grace be worthy, yea or no,
Diſpute not that, Yorke is the worthyer.

Card. Ambitious Warwicke, let thy betters ſpeake.

Warw. The Cardinalls nor my better in the field

Buck. All in this preſence are thy betters, Warwicke.

Warw. Warwicke may liue to be the beſt of all.

Salub. Peace Sonne, and ſhew ſome reaſon Buckingham
Why Somerſet ſhould be preferr'd in this?

Queene. Becauſe the King forſooth will haue it ſo.

Humf. Madame, the King is old enough himſelfe
To giue his Censure. Theſe are no Womens matters.

Queene. If he be old enough, what needs your Grace
To be Protector of his Excellence?

Humf. Madame, I am Protector of the Realme,
And at his pleaſure will reſigne my Place.

Suff. Reſigne it then, and leaue thine inſolence.

Since thou wert King; as who is King, but thou?

The Common-wealth hath dayly run to wrack,

The Dolphin hath preuayl'd beyond the Seas,

And all the Peeres and Nobles of the Realme

Haue beene as Bond-men to thy Soueraignty.

Card. The Commons haſt thou rackt, the Clergies Bags
Are Ianke and leane with thy Extortions.

Som. Thy ſumptuous Buildings, and thy Wiues Attire
Haue coſt a maſſe of publike Treafurie.

Buck. Thy Crueltie in execution

Vpon Offenders, hath exceeded Law,

And left thee to the mercy of the Law.

Queene. Thy ſale of Offices and Townes in France,

If they were knowne, as the ſuſpect is great,

Would make thee quickly hop without thy Head.

Exit Humfrey

Giue me my Fanne. what, Mynion, can ye not?

She giues the Duchesse a box on the eare.

I cry you mercy, Madame: was it you?

Duch. Was I? yea, I it was, proud French-woman:

Could I come neere your Beautie with my Nayles,

I could ſet my ten Commandements in your face.

King. Sweet Aunc be quiet, 'twas againſt her will.

Duch. Againſt her will, good Kinge looke to't in time,

Shee'll hamper thee, and dandle thee like a Baby.

Though in this place moſt Maſter weare no Breeches,
She ſhall not ſtrike Dame Eliſe vnreueng'd.

Exit Eliſe.

Buck. Lord Cardinall, I will follow Eliſe,

And liſten after Humfrey, how he proceeds.

Shee's tickled now, her Fame needs no ſpurres,

Shee'll gallop farre enough to her deſtruction.

Exit Buckingham.

Enter Humfrey.

Humf. Now Lords, my Choller being ouer-blowne,
With walking onco about the Quadrangle,
I come to talke of Common-wealth Affayres.

As for your ſpightfull falſe Obiections,

Proue them, and I lye open to the Law:

But God in mercie ſo deale with my Soule,

As I in dutie loue my King and Countrey.

But to the matter that we haue in hand:

I ſay, my Soueraigne, Yorke is meeſt man

To be your Regent in the Realme of France.

Suff. Before we make election, giue me leaue

To ſhew ſome reaſon, of no little force,

That Yorke is moſt vnmeet of any man.

Yorke. He tell thee, Suffolke, why I am vnmeet,

Fiſt, for I cannot ſtaſter thee in Pride.

Next, if I be appointed for the Place,

My Lord of Somerſet will keepe me here,

Without Diſcharge, Money, or Furniture,

Till France be wonne into the Dolphins hands:

Laſt time I danc't attendance on his will,

Till Paris was beſieg'd, famiſht, and loſt.

Warw. That can I witneſſe, and a fouler fact

Did neuer Traytor in the Land commit.

Suff. Peace head-ſtrong Warwicke.

Warw. Image of Pride, why ſhould I hold my peace?

Enter Armorer and his Man.

Suff. Becauſe here is a man accuſed of Treason,
Pray God the Duke of Yorke excuſe himſelfe.

Yorke. Doth any one accuſe Yorke for a Traytor?

King. What mean'st thou, Suffolke? tell me, what are theſe?

Suff. Pleaſe it your Maieſtie, this is the man

That doth accuſe his Maſter of High Treason;

His words were theſe: That Richard, Duke of Yorke,

Was rightfull Heire vnto the Engliſh Crowne,

And that your Maieſtie was an Vſurper.

King. Say man, were theſe thy words?

Armorer. And't ſhall pleaſe your Maieſtie, I neuer ſayd nor thought any ſuch matter. God is my witneſſe, I am faulſely accuſ'd by the Villaine.

Peter. By theſe tenne bones, my Lord, hee did ſpeake them to me in the Garret one Night, as wee were ſcowting my Lord of Yorke's Armor.

Yorke. Baſe Dunghill Villaine, and Mechanicall,

He haue thy Head for this thy Traytors ſpeech.

I doe beſeech your Royall Maieſtie,

Let him haue all the rigor of the Law.

Armorer. Alas, my Lord, hang me if euer I ſpake the words: my accuſer is my Prentice, and when I did correct him for his fault the other day, he did vow vpon his knees he would be euen with me: I haue good witneſſe of this; therefore I beſeech your Maieſtie, doe not caſt away an honeſt man for a Villaines accuſation.

King. Vnckle, what ſhall we ſay to this in law?

Humf. This doome, my Lord, if I may iudge:

Let Somerſet be Regent o're the French,

Becauſe in Yorke this breeds ſuſpition;

And let theſe haue a day appointed them

For ſingle Combat, in conuenient place,

For he hath witneſſe of his ſeruants malice:

This is the Law, and this Duke Humfrey's doome.

Som. I

Som I humbly thanke your Royall Maiestie.
Armorer. And I accept the Combat willingly.
Peter. Alas, my Lord, I cannot fight; for Gods sake putty my case: the spight of man preuayleth against me.
 O Lord haue mercy vpon me, I shall neuer be able to fight a blow O Lord my heart.

Humf. Sirrha, or you must fight, or else be hang'd.
King. Away with them to Prison: and the day of Combat, shall be the last of the next moneth. Come
Somerfet, wee'll see thee sent away.

Flourish. Exeunt.

Enter the Witch, the two Priests, and Bullingbrooke.

Hume. Come my Masters, the Duchesse I tell you expects performance of your promises.

Bulling. Master Hume, we are therefore provided. will her Ladyship behold and heare our Exorcismes?

Hume. I, what else? feare you not her courage.

Bulling. I haue heard her reported to be a Woman of an inuincible spirit: but it shall be conuenient, Master
Hume, that you be by her aloft, while wee be busie below, and so I pray you goe in Gods Name, and leaue vs.

Exit Hume.

Mother Iordan, be you prostrate, and grouell on the Earth, John Southwell reade you, and let vs to our worke.

Enter Elianor aloft

Elianor Well said my Masters, and welcome all To this geere, the sooner the better.

Bulling Patience, good Lady, Wizards know their times.
 Deepe Night, darke Night, the silent of the Night,
 The time of Night when Troy was set on fire,
 The time when Screech-owles cry, and Bandogs howle,
 And Spirits walke, and Ghosts breake vp their Graues;
 That time best fits the worke we haue in hand
 Madame, sit you, and feare not whom wee rayse,
 Wee will make fast within a hallow'd Verge.

Here doe the Ceremonies belonging, and make the Circle, Bullingbrooke or Southwell reader, Coniuro te, &c It Thunders and Lightens terribly then the Spirit refresh

Spirit. Ad sum

Witch. Asmath, by the eternall God,
 Whose name and power thou tremblest at,
 Answer that I shall aske: for till thou speake,
 Thou shalt not passe from hence.

Spirit. Aske what thou wilt, that I had sayd, and done

Bulling First of the King What shall of him become?

Spirit The Duke yet liues, that Henry shall depose.
 But him out-live, and dye a violent death.

Bulling. What fates await the Duke of Suffolke?

Spirit By Water shall he dye, and take his end

Bulling. What shall befall the Duke of Somersfet?

Spirit. Let him shun Castles,

Safer shall he be vpon the sandie Plaines,
 Then where Castles mounted stand
 Haue done, for more I hardly can endure.

Bulling. Discend to Darknesse, and the burning Lake False Fiend auoide.

Thunder and Lightning. Exit Spirit.

Enter the Duke of Torke and the Duke of Buckingham with their Guard, and breake in.

Torke Lay hands vpon these Traytors, and their trash:
 Beldam I thinke we watcht you at an ynch.
 What Madame, are you there? the King & Commonweale
 Are deeply indebted for this peece of paines,
 My Lord Protector will, I doubt it not,
 See you well guerdon'd for these good deserts.

Elianor. Not halfe so bad as thine to Englands King,
 Inuiours Duke, that threatst where's no cause.

Buck True Madame, none at all what call you this?
 Away with them, let them be clapt vp close,
 And kept asunder you Madame shall with vs.
Stafford take her to thee.

Wee'll see your Trinkets here all forth-comming.
 All away. Exit

Torke, Lord Buckingham, me thinks you watcht her well
 A pretty Plot, well chosen to build vpon.
 Now pray my Lord, let's see the Devils Wit.
 What haue we here? Reades.

*The Duke yet liues, that Henry shall depose
 But him out-live, and dye a violent death.
 Why this is iust As Eacida Romanos vincere posse.
 Well, to the rest.*

Tell me what fate awaits the Duke of Suffolke?

By Water shall he dye, and take his end

What shall betide the Duke of Somersfet?

Let him shunne Castles,

Safer shall he be vpon the sandie Plaines,

Then where Castles mounted stand.

Come, come, my Lords,

These Oracles are hardly attain'd,

And hardly vnderstood

The King is now in progresse towards Saint Albones,

With him, the Husband of this souely Lady:

Thither goes these Newes,

As fast as Horse can carry them

A sorry Breakfast for my Lord Protector.

Buck Your Grace shal giue me leaue, my Lord of York,
 To be the Poste, in hope of his reward.

Torke At your pleasure, my good Lord.
 Who's within there, hoe?

Enter a Servingman.

Inuite my Lords of Salisbury and Warwick
 To suppe with me to morrow Night. Away.

Exeunt.

Enter the King, Queene, Protector, Cardinal, and Suffolke, with Faulknors halloving.

Queene Belecue me Lords, for flying at the Brooke,
 I saw not better sport these seuen yeeres day.
 Yet by your leaue, the Winde was very high,
 And ten to one, old Ioane had not gone out.

King But what a point, my Lord, your Faulcon made,
 And what a pytch she flew about the rest:
 To see how God in all his Creatures workes,
 Yea Man and Birds are fayne of climbing high.

Suff. No maruell, and it like your Maiestie,
 My Lord Protector's Hawkes doe towre so well,
 They know their Master Ioues to be aloft,
 And beares his thoughts about his Faulcons Pitch.

Glo. My Lord, 'tis but a base ignoble minde,
 That mounts no higher then a Bird can force.

Card. I

Card. I thought as much, hee would be about the Clouds.

Gloft. I my Lord Cardinall, how thinke you by that? Were it not good your Grace could flye to Heauen?

King. The Treasurie of euerlasting Ioy.

Card. Thy Heauen is on Earth, thine Eyes & Thoughts Beat on a Crowne, the Treasure of thy Heart, Pernitious Protector, dangerous Peere, That smooth't it so with King and Common-weale.

Gloft. What, Cardinall?

Is your Priest-hood growne peremptorie?

Tantane animus Caelestibus ira, Church-men so hot?

Good Vnckle hide such mallice:

With such Holynesse can you doe it?

Suff. No mallice Sir, no more then well becomes So good a Quarrell, and so bad a Peere.

Gloft. As who, my Lord?

Suff. Why, as you, my Lord, An't like your Lordly Lords Protectorship.

Gloft. Why Suffolke, England knowes thine insolence.

Queene. And thy Ambition, Gloster.

King. I prythee peace, good Queene,

And whet not on these furious Peeres, For blessed are the Peace-makers on Earth.

Card. Let me be blessed for the Peace I make Against this prowd Protector with my Sword.

Gloft. Faith holy Vnckle, would't were come to that

Card. Marry, when thou dar'st.

Gloft. Make vp no factious numbers for the matter, In thine owne person answere thy abuse.

Card. I, where thou dar'st not peepe:

And if thou dar'st, this Euening, On the East side of the Groue.

King. How now, my Lords?

Card. Beleeue me, Cousin Gloster, Had not your man put vp the Fowle so suddenly, We had had more sport.

Come with thy two-hand Sword.

Gloft. True Vnckle, are ye aduised? The East side of the Groue.

Cardinall, I am with you

King. Why how now, Vnckle Gloster?

Gloft. Talking of Hawking, nothing else, my Lord. Now by Gods Mother, Priest, Ile shau your Crowne for this, Or all my Fence shall fayle.

Card. Medice teipsum, Protector see to't well, protect your selfe.

King. The Windes grow high,

So doe your Stomacks, Lords:

How irkesome is this Musick to my heart?

When such Strings iatte, what hope of Harmony?

I pray my Lords let me compound this strife.

Enter one crying a Miracle.

Gloft. What meanes this noyse? Fellow, what Miracle do'st thou proclayme?

One. A Miracle, a Miracle.

Suffolke. Come to the King, and tell him what Miracle.

One. Forsooth, a blinde man at Saint Albones Shrine, Within this halfe houre hath receiud his sight, A man that ne're saw in his life before.

King. Now God be prays'd, that to beleeuing Soules Giveth Light in Darknesse, Comfort in Despaire.

Enter the Maior of Saint Albones, and his Brethren, bearing the man betweene two in a Chaire.

Card. Here comes the Townes-men, on Procession, To present your Highnesse with the man.

King. Great is his comfort in this Earthly Vale, Although by his sight his sinne be multiplied.

Gloft. Stand by, my Masters, bring him neere the King, His Highnesse pleasure is to talke with him.

King. Good-fellow, tell vs here the circumstance, That we for thee may glorifie the Lord.

What, hast thou bene long blinde, and now restor'd?

Simpe. Borne blinde, and't please your Grace.

Wife. I indeede was he.

Suff. What Woman is this?

Wife. His Wife, and't like your Worship.

Gloft. Hadst thou been his Mother, thou could'st haue better told.

King. Where wert thou borne?

Simpe. At Barwick in the North, and't like your Grace.

King. Poore Soule, Gods goodnesse hath bene great to thee: Let neuer Day nor Night vnhalloved passe, But still remember what the Lord hath done.

Queene. Tell me, good-fellow, Cam'st thou here by Chance, or of Deuotion, To this holy Shrine?

Simpe. God knowes of pure Deuotion, Being call'd a hundred times, and oftner, In my sleepe, by good Saint Albon: Who said; Symon, come, come offer at my Shrine, And I will helpe thee.

Wife. Most true, forsooth: And many time and oft my selfe haue heard a Voyce, To cail him so.

Card. What, art thou lame?

Simpe. I, God Almighty helpe me.

Suff. How cam'st thou so?

Simpe. A fall off of a Tree.

Wife. A Plum-tree, Master.

Gloft. How long hast thou bene blinde?

Simpe. O borne so, Master.

Gloft. What, and would'st climbe a Tree?

Simpe. But that in all my life, when I was a youth.

Wife. Too true, and bought his climbing very deare.

Gloft. 'Masse, thou lou'd'st Plummes well, that would'st venture so.

Simpe. Alas, good Master, my Wife desired some Damsons, and made me climbe, with danger of my Life.

Gloft. A subtil Knaue, but yet it shall not serue: Let me see thine Eyes; winck now, now open them, In my opinion, yet thou seest not well.

Simpe. Yes Master, cleare as day, I thanke God and Saint Albones.

Gloft. Say'st thou me so: what Colour is this Cloake of?

Simpe. Red Master, Red as Blood.

Gloft. Why that's well said: What Colour is my Gowne of?

Simpe. Black forsooth, Coale-Black, as Iet.

King. Why then, thou know'st what Colour Iet is of?

Suff. And yet I thinke, Iet did he neuer see.

Gloft. But

Gloſt. But Cloakes and Gownes, before this day, a many.

Wiſe. Neuer before this day, in all his life.

Gloſt. Tell me Sirrha, what's my Name?

Simpce. Alas Maſter, I know not.

Gloſt. What's his Name?

Simpce. I know not.

Gloſt. Nor his?

Simpce. No indeede, Maſter.

Gloſt. What's thine owne Name?

Simpce. Saunder Simpceaxe, and if it pleaſe you, Maſter

Gloſt. Then Saunder, ſit there,
The lying ſt Knaue in Chriſtendome.

If thou haſt bene borne blinde,
Thou might'ſt as well haue knowne all our Names,
As thus to name the ſeueraill Colours we doe weare.

Sight may diſtinguiſh of Colours :

But ſuddenly to nominate them all,

It is impoſſible.

My Lords, ſaint Albore here hath done a Miracle:
And would ye not thinke it, Cunning to be great,
That could reſtore this Cripple to his Legges againe

Simpce. O Maſter, that you could?

Gloſt. My Maſters of ſaint *Albore*s,
Haue you not Beadles in your Towne,
And Things call'd Whippes?

Maſtor. Yes, my Lord, if it pleaſe your Grace.

Gloſt. Then ſend for one preſently.

Maſtor. Sirrha, goe fetch the Beadle hither ſtraight.

Exit.

Gloſt. Now fetch me a Stoole hither by and by.
Now Sirrha, if you meane to ſaue your ſelfe from Whipping, leape me ouer this Stoole, and runne away.

Simpce. Alas Maſter, I am not able to ſtand alone:
You goe about to torture me in vaine

Enter a Beadle with Whippes

Gloſt. Well Sir, we muſt haue you finde your Legges.
Sirrha Beadle, whippe him till he leape ouer that ſame Stoole.

Beadle. I will, my Lord.

Come on Sirrha, off with your Doubler, quickly.

Simpce. Alas Maſter, what ſhall I doe? I am not able to ſtand.

After the Beadle hath hit him once, he leapes ouer the Stoole, and runnes away and they follow, and cry, A Miracle.

King. O God, ſeeſt thou this, and beareſt ſo long?

Queene. It made me laugh, to ſee the Villaine runne.

Gloſt. I follow the Knaue, and take this Drab away.

Wiſe. Alas Sir, we did it for pure need.

Gloſt. Let the be whipt through every Market Towne,
Till they come to Barwick, from whence they came

Exit.

Card. Duke Humphrey ha's done a Miracle to day.

Suff. True. made the Lame to leape and flye away.

Gloſt. But you haue done more Miracles then I
You made in a day, my Lord, whole Townes to flye.

Enter Buckingham.

King. What Tidings with our Couſin Buckingham?

Buck. Such as my heart doth tremble to vnfold:
A fort of naughtie perſons, lewdly bent
Vnder the Countenance and Confederacie

Of Lady Eliſabet, the Proteſtors Wiſe,
The Ring-leader and Head of all this Rout,
Haue practis'd dangerously againſt your State,
Dealing with Witches and with Coniurers,
Whom we haue apprehended in the Faſt,
Rayſing vp wicked Spirits from vnder ground,
Demanding of King Henries Life and Death,
And other of your Highneſſe Priuie Councell,
As more at large your Grace ſhall vnderſtand.

Card. And ſo my Lord Proteſtor, by this meanes
Your Lady is forth-coming, yet at London.
This Newes I thinke hath turn'd your Weapons edge;
'Tis like, my Lord, you will not keepe your houre.

Gloſt. Ambitious Church-man, leaue to afflict my heart:
Sorrow and grieſe haue vanquiſht all my powers;
And vanquiſht as I am, I yeeld to thee,
Or to the meanest Groome.

King. O God, what miſchiefes work the wicked ones?
Heaping conſuſion on their owne heads thereby.

Queene. Gloſter, ſee here the Tainſture of thy Neſt,
And looke thy ſelfe be faultleſſe, thou wert beſt.

Gloſt. Madame, for my ſelfe, to Heauen I doe appeale,
How I haue lou'd my King, and Common-weale.

And for my Wiſe, I know not how it ſtands,

Sorry I am to heare what I haue heard,

Noble ſhee is but if ſhee haue forgot

Honor and Vertue, and conuers't with ſuch,

As like to Pyrch, deſile Nobilitie;

I baniſh her my Bed, and Companie,

And giue her as a Pry to Law and Shame,

That hath diſ-honored Gloſters honeſt Name.

King. Well, for this Night we will repoſe vs here.

To morrow toward London, back againe,

To looke into this Buſineſſe thorowly,

And call theſe ſoule Offenders to their Anſweres;

And poſſe the Cauſe in Iuſtice equall Scales,
Whoſe Beame ſtands iure, whoſe rightfull cauſe preuailes.

Flouriſh.

Exeunt.

Enter Yorke, Salisbury, and Warwick

Yorke. Now my good Lords of Salisbury & Warwick.
Our ſimple Supper ended, giue me leaue,
In this cloſe Walke, to ſatiſſie my ſelfe,
In crauing your opinion of my Title,
Which is infallible, to Englands Crowne.

Salub. My Lord, I long to heare it at full.

Warw. Sweet Yorke begin, and if thy clayme be good,
The Henrills are thy Subiects to command.

Yorke. Then thus

Edward the third, my Lords, had leuen Sonnes:

The firſt, Edward the Black-Prince, Prince of Wales;

The ſecond, William of Hatfield; and the third,

Lionel, Duke of Clarence; next to whom,

Was John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaſter;

The ſiſt, was Edmond Langley, Duke of Yorke;

The ſixt, was Thomas of Woodſtock, Duke of Gloſter;

William of Windſor was the ſeuenth, and laſt.

Edward the Black-Prince dyed before his Father,

And left behinde him Richard, his onely Sonne,

Who after Edward the third's death, raign'd as King,

Till Henry Bulkingbrooke, Duke of Lancaſter,

The eldeſt Sonne and Heire of John of Gaunt,

Crown'd by the Name of Henry the fourth,
Seiz'd on the Realme, depos'd the rightfull King,
Sent his poore Queene to France, from whence ſhe came,

And

And him to Pumfret; where, as all you know,
Harmlesse Richard was murdered traiterously.

Warw. Father, the Duke hath told the truth;
Thus got the House of Lancaster the Crowne.

Torke Which now they hold by force, and not by right:
For Richard, the first Sonnes Heire, being dead,
The Issue of the next Sonne should haue reign'd.

Salub. But William of Hatfield dyed without an Heire.

Torke. The third Sonne, Duke of Clarence,
From whose Line I claime the Crowne,
Had Issue Phillip, a Daughter,
Who married Edmond Mortimer, Earle of March:
Edmond had Issue, Roger, Earle of March;
Roger had Issue, Edmond, Anne, and Eleanor.

Salub. This Edmond, in the Reigne of Bullingbrooke,
As I haue read, layd claime vnto the Crowne,
And but for Owen Glendour, had bene King;
Who kept him in Captiuitie, till he dyed.
But, to the rest.

Torke. His eldest Sister, Anne,
My Mother, being Heire vnto the Crowne;
Marryed Richard, Earle of Cambridge,
Who was to Edmond Langley,
Edward the thirde's fift Sonnes Sonne;
By her I claime the Kingdome:
She was Heire to Roger, Earle of March,
Who was the Sonne of Edmond Mortimer,
Who marryed Phillip, sole Daughter
Vnto Lionel, Duke of Clarence.
So, if the Issue of the elder Sonne
Succeed before the younger, I am King.

Warw. What plaine proceedings is more plain then this?
Henry doth claime the Crowne from John of Gaunt,
The fourth Sonne, Torke claimes it from the third:
Till Lionels Issue fayles, his should not reigne.
It fayles not yet, but flourishes in thee,
And in thy Sonnes, faire slippes of such a Stock.
Then Father Saluberry, kneele we together,
And in this priuate Ploer be we the first,
That shall salute our rightfull Soueraigne
With honor of his Birth-right to the Crowne.
Both. Long lue our Soueraigne Richard, England's King.

Torke. We thanke you Lords:
But I am not your King, till I be Crown'd.
And that my Sword be stayn'd
With heart-blood of the House of Lancaster:
And that's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with aduice and silent secrecie.
Doe you as I doe in these dangerous dayes,
Wrike at the Duke of Suffolkes insolence,
At Beaufords Pride, at Somersets Ambition,
At Buckingham, and all the Crew of them,
Till they haue snar'd the Shepheard of the Flock,
That vertuous Prince, the good Duke Humfrey
Tis that they seeke, and they, in seeking that,
Shall finde their deaths, if Torke can prophetic.

Salub. My Lord, breake we off; we know your minde at full.

Warw. My heart assures me, that the Earle of Warwick
Shall one day make the Duke of Yorke a King.

Torke And Nevill, this I doe assure my selfe,
Richard shall lue to make the Earle of Warwick
The greatest man in England, but the King.

Exeunt.

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King and State, with Guard, to banish the Duchesse.

King. Stand forth Dame Eleanor Cobham,
Glosters Wife:

In sight of God, and vs, your guilt is great,
Receiue the Sentence of the Law for sinne,
Such as by Gods Booke are adjudg'd to death.
You foure from hence to Prison, back againe;
From thence, vnto the place of Execution:
The Witch in Smithfield shall be burnt to ashes,
And you three shall be strangled on the Gallowes.
You Madame, for you are more Nobly borne,
Despoyled of your Honor in your Life,
Shall, after three dayes open Penance done,
Lue in your Countrey here, in Banishment,
With Sir John Stanley, in the Ile of Man.

Eleanor. Welcome is Banishment, welcome were my Death.

Gloster. Eleanor, the Law thou seest hath iudged thee,
I cannot iustifie whom the Law condemnes:
Mine eyes are full of teares, my heart of griefe.
Ah Humfrey, this dishonor in thine age,
Will bring thy head with sorrow to the ground.
I beseech your Maestie giue me leaue to goe;
Sorrow would sollace, and mine Age would ease.

King. Stay Humfrey, Duke of Gloster,
Ere thou goe, giue vp thy Staffe,
Henry will to himselfe Protector be,
And God shall be my hope, my stay, my guide,
And Lanthorne to my feete.

And goe in peace, Humfrey, no lesse belou'd,
Then when thou wert Protector to thy King.

Queene. I see no reason, why a King of yeres
Should be to be protected like a Child,
God and King Henry gouerne England's Realme.
Giue vp your Staffe, Sir, and the King his Realme.

Gloster. My Staffe? Here, Noble Henry, is my Staffe:
As willingly doe I the same resigne,
As ere thy Father Henry made it mine;
And euen as willingly at thy feete I leaue it,
As others would ambitiously receiue it.
Farewell good King, when I am dead, and gone,
May honorable Peace attend thy Throne.

Exit Gloster.

Queene. Why now is Henry King, and Margaret Queen,
And Humfrey, Duke of Gloster, scarce himselfe,
That beares so shrewd a mayme: two Pulls at once;
His Lady banisht, and a Limbe lost off
This Staffe of Honor raught, there let it stand,
Where it best fits to be, in Henries hand.

Suff. Thus droupes this losie Pyne, & hangs his sprayer,
Thus Eleanors Pride dyes in her youngest dayes.

Torke. Lords, let him goe. Please it your Maestie,
This is the day appointed for the Combat,
And ready are the Appellant and Defendant,
The Armorer and his Man, to enter the Lists,
So please your Highnesse to behold the fight.

Queene. I, good my Lord: for purposely therefore Left I the Court, to see this Quarrell try'd.

King. A Gods Name see the Lyfts and all things fit,
Here let them end it, and God defend the right.

Torke. I neuer saw a fellow worse bestead,
Or more afraid to fight, then is the Appellant,
The seruant of this Armorer, my Lords.

Enter

Enter at one Doore the Armorer and his Neighbors, drinking to him so much, that hee is drunke; and he enters with a Drumme before him, and his Staffe, with a Sand-bagge fastened to it - and at the other Doore his Man, with a Drumme and Sand-bagge, and Prentises drinking to him

1 Neighbor Here Neighbour Horner, I drinke to you in a Cup of Sack; and feare not Neighbor, you shall doe well enough.

2 Neighbor. And here Neighbour, here's a Cuppe of Charneco

3. Neighbor And here's a Por of good Double-Beere Neighbor. drinke, and feare not your Man

Armorer Let it come yfaith, and Ile pledge yo. all, and a figge for Peter

1 Prent Here Peter, I drinke to thee, and be not afraid.

2 Prent. Be merry Peter, and feare not thy Master, Fight for credit of the Prentices

Peter. I thanke you all drinke, and pray for me, I pray you, for I thinke I have taken my last Draught in this World. Here Robin, and if I dye, I giue thee my Aporne, and Will, thou shalt haue my Hammer: and nere Tom, take all the Money that I haue O Lord blesse me, I pray God, for I am neuer able to deale with my Master, hee hath learnt so much fence already.

Salub Come, leaue your drinking, and fall to blowes. Sirrha, what's thy Name?

Peter. Peter torfooth.

Salub. Peter? what more?

Peter. Thumpe

Salub Thumpe? Then see thou thumpe thy Master well.

Armorer Masters, I am come hither as it were vpon my Mans instigation, to proue him a Knaue, and my selfe an honest man. and touching the Duke of Yorke, I will take my death, I neuer meant him any ill, nor the King, nor the Queene and therefore Peter haue at thee with a downe-right blow.

Torke. Dispatch, this Knaues tongue begins to double. Sound Trumpets, Alarum to the Combattants.

They fight, and Peter strikes him downe.

Armorer. Hold Peter, hold, I confesse, I confesse Treason.

Torke. Take away his Weapon. Fellow thanke God, and the good Wire in thy Masters way.

Peter. O God, haue I overcome mine Enemies in this presence? O Peter, thou hast preuayl'd in right.

King. Goe, take hence that Traytor from our sight, For by his death we doe perceiue his guilt, And God in Iustice nath reueal'd to vs The truth and innocence of this poore fellow, Which he had thought to haue murder'd wrongfully. Come fellow, follow vs for thy Reward.

Sound a flourish. Exeunt

Enter Duke Humfrey and his Men in Mourning Cloakes.

Gloft Thus sometimes hath the brightest day a Cloud And after Summer, euermore succedes Barren Winter, with his wrathfull nipping Cold; So Cares and Ioyes abound, as Seasons fleet. Sirs, what's a Clock?

Seru. Tenne, my Lord.

Gloft. Tenne is the houre that was appointed me, To watch the comming of my punish't Duchesse: Vnneath may shee endure the Flintie Streets, To treade come with her tender-feeling feet. Sweet Nell, ill can thy Noble Minde abrooke The abiect People, gazing on thy face, With enuious Lookes laughing at thy shame, That erst did follow thy prowd Chariot-Wheeles, When thou didst ride in triumph through the streets. But soft, I thinke she comes, and Ile prepare My tearc-stayn'd eyes, to see her Miseries

Enter the Duchesse in a white Sheet, and a Taper burning in her hand, with the Sherife and Officers

Seru. So please your Grace, wee'll take her from the Sherife.

Gloster. No, stirre not for your liues, let her passe by.

Elsenor Come you, my Lord, to see my open shame? Now thou do'st Penance too. Looke how they gaze, See how the giddy multitude doe point, And nodde their heads, and throw their eyes on thee. Ah Gloster, hide thee from their hatefull lookes, And in thy Closet pent vp, rue my shame, And banne thine Enemies, both mine and thine.

Gloft Be patient, gentle Nell, forget this griefe.

Elsenor. Ah Gloster, teach me to forget my selfe:

For whilest I thinke I am thy married Wife, And thou a Prince, Protector of this I and, Me thinkes I should not thus be led along, May I'd vp in shame, with Papers on my back, And follow'd with a Rabble, that reioyre To see my teares, and heare my deepe-set groanes. The ruthless Flint doth cut my tender feet, And when I start, the enuious people laugh, And bid me be aduis'd how I treade

Ah Humfrey, can I beare this shamefull yoke? Trowest thou, that ere Ile looke vpon the World, Or count them happy, that enioyes the Sunne? No Darke shall be my Light, and Night my Day. To thinke vpon my Pompe, shall be my Hell Sometime Ile say, I am Duke Humfrees Wife, And he a Prince, and Ruler of the Land.

Yet so he rul'd, and such a Prince he was, As he stood by, whilest I, his forlorne Duchesse, Was made a wonder, and a pointing stock To euery idle Rascall follower.

But be thou milde, and blissh not at my shame, Nor stirre at nothing, till the Axe of Death Hang ouer thee, as sure it shortly will.

For Suffolke, he that can doe all in all. With her, that hateth thee and hates vs all, And Torke, and impious Beauford, that false Priest, Haue all lym'd Bushes to betray thy Wings, And flye thou how thou canst, they'll tangle thee. But feare not thou, vntill thy foot be snar'd, Nor neuer seeke preuention of thy foes.

Gloft. Ah Nell, forbear thou aymeest all awry. I must offend, before I be attainted. And had I twentie times so many foes, And each of them had twentie times their power, All these could not procure me any scathe, So long as I am loyall, true, and crimelcless. Would'st haue me rescue thee from this reproach?

n

Why

Why yet thy scandall were not wipt away,
But I in danger for the breach of Law.
Thy greatest helpers quiet, gentle Nell:
I pray thee sort thy heart to patience,
These few dayes wonder will be quickly worne;

Enter a Herald.

Her. I summon your Grace to his Maiesties Parliament,
Holden at Bury, the first of this next Moneth.

Gloſt. And my consens we're ask'd herein before?
This is close dealing. Well, I will be there.
My Nell, I take my leaue: and Master Sherife,
Let not her Penance exceede the Kings Commission.
Sh. And I please your Grace, here my Commission stayes.
And Sir John Stanley is appointed now,
To take her with him to the Ile of Man.

Gloſt. Must you, Sir John, protect my Lady here?

Stanly. So am I giuen in charge, may't please your Grace.

Gloſt. Entreat her not the worse, in that I pray
You vse her well: the World may laugh againe,
And I may lue to doe you kindnesse, if you doe it her.
And to Sir John, farewell.

Elienor. What, gone my Lord, and bid me not farewell?

Gloſt. Witnesse my teares, I cannot stay to speake.

Exit Gloſter.

Elienor. Att thou gone to? all comfort goe with thee,
For none abides with me: my Ioy, is Death;
Death, at whose Name I oft haue beene afear'd,
Because I wisht this Worlds eternitie;
Stanley, I prethee goe, and take me hence,
I care not whither, for I begge no fauor;
Onely conuey me where thou art commanded

Stanley. Why, Madame, that is to the Ile of Man,
There to be vs'd according to your State.

Elienor. That's bad enough, for I am but reproach:
And shall I then be vs'd reproachfully?

Stanley. Like to a Duchesse, and Duke Humphreyes Lady,
According to that State you shall be vs'd.

Elienor. Sherife farewell, and better then I fare,
Although thou hast beene Conduct of my shame.

Sherife. It is my Office, and Madame pardon me.

Elienor. I, I, farewell, thy Office is discharg'd.
Come Stanley, shall we goe?

Stanley. Madame, your Penance done,
Throw off this Sheet,

And goe we to attyre you for our Iourney.

Elienor. My shame will not be shifted with my Sheet:
No, it will hang vpon my richest Robes,
And shew it selfe, attyre me how I can.
Goe, leade the way, I long to see my Prison.

Exeunt

Sound a Sennet. Enter King, Queene, Cardmall, Suffolke, Torke, Buckingham, Salisbury, and Warwicke, to the Parliament.

King. I muse my Lord of Gloſter is not come.
'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
What e're occasion keeps him from vs now.

Queene. Can you not see? or will ye not obserue
The strangenesse of his alter'd Countenance?
With what a Maiestie he beares himselfe,
How insolent of late he is become,
How proud, how peremptorie, and vnlike himselfe.
We know the time since he was milde and affable,
And if we did but glance a farre-off Looke,
Immediately he was vpon his Kneec,

That all the Court admir'd him for submission.
But meet him now, and be it in the Morne,
When euery one will giue the time of day,
He knits his Brow, and shewes an angry Eye,
And passeth by with stiffe vnbow'd Kneec,
Disdaining dutie that to vs belongs.
Small Curses are not regarded when they grynne,
But great mentremble when the Lyon rores,
And Humphrey is no little Man in England.
First note, that he is neere you in descent,
And should you fill, he is the next will moue.
Me seemeth then, it is no Pollicie,
Respecting what a rancorous minde he beares,
And his aduantage following your decease,
That he should come about your Royall Person,
Or be admitted to your Highnesse Councell
By flatterie hath he wonne the Commons hearts:
And when he please to make Commotion,
'Tis to be fear'd they all will follow him.
Now 'tis the Spring, and Weeds are shallow-rooted,
Suffer them now, and they le o're-grow the Garden,
And choake the Herbes for want of Husbandry.
The reuerent care I beare vnto my Lord,
Made me collect these dangers in the Duke.
If it be fond, call it a Womans feare:
Which feare, if better Reasons can supplant,
I will subscribe, and say I wrong'd the Duke.
My Lord, of Suffolke, Buckingham, and Yorke,
Reproue my allegation, if you can,
Or else conclude my words effectuall.

Suff. Well hath your Highnesse scene into this Duke.
And had I first beene put to speake my minde,
I thinke I should haue told your Graces Tale.
The Duchesse, by his subornation,
Vpon my Life began her diuellish practises.
Or if he were not priue to those Faults,
Yet by reputing of his high descent,
As next the King, he was successefulle Heire,
And such high vaunts of his Nobilitie,
Did instigate the Bedlam frame-sick Duchesse,
By wicked meanes to frame our Soueraignes fall.
Smooth runnes the Water, where the Brooke is deepe,
And in his simple shew he harbours Treason.
The Fox barks not, when he would steale the Lambe.
No, no, my Soueraigne, Gloſter is a man
Vnfounded yet, and full of deepe deceit.

Card. Did he not, contrary to forme of Law,
Deuise strange deaths, for small offences done?

Torke. And did he not, in his Protectorship,
Leuie great summes of Money through the Realme,
For Souldiers pay in France, and neuer sent it?
By meanes whereof, the Townes each day reuolted.

Buck. Tut, these are petty faults to faults vnkowne,
Which time will bring to light in smooth Duke Humphrey.

King. My Lords at once, the care you haue of vs,
To mowe downe Thornes that would annoy our Foot,
Is worthy prayse but shall I speake my conscience,
Our Kinsman Gloſter is as innocent,
From meaning Treason to our Royall Person,
As is the sucking Lambe, or harmlesse Dove:
The Duke is vertuous, milde, and too well giuen,
To dreame on euill, or to worke my downefall.

Qu. Ah what's more dangerous, then this fond affiance?
Seemes he a Dove? his feathers are but borrow'd,
For hee's disposed as the hatefull Raven.
Is he a Lambe? his Skinne is surely lent him,

For

For hee's enclin'd as is the ravenous Wolues,
Who cannot steale a shape, that meanes deceit?
Take heed, my Lord, the welfare of vs all,
Hangs on the cutting short that fraudfull man.

Enter Somerset

Som. All health vnto my gracious Soueraigne.

King. Welcome Lord Somerset. What Newes from France?

Som. That all your Interest in those Territories,
Is vnterly bereft you all is lost.

King. Cold Newes, Lord Somerset but Gods will be done

Torke. Cold Newes for me for I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.
Thus are my Blossomes blasted in the Bud,
And Caterpillers eate my Leaves away:
But I will remedie this geare ere long,
Or sell my Title for a glorious Graue.

Enter Gloucester

Gloft. All happinesse vnto my Lord the King
Pardon, my Liege, that I haue stay'd so long.

Suff. Nay Gloster, know that thou art come too soone,
Vnlesse thou wert more loyall then thou art.
I doe arrest thee of High Treason here.

Gloft. Well Suffolke, thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my Countenance for this Arrest
A Heart vnspotted, is not easily daunted
The purest Spring is not so free from mudde,
As I am cleare from Treason to my Soueraigne.
Who can accuse me? where am I guiltie?

Torke. 'Tis thought, my Lord,
That you tooke Bribes of France,
And being Protector, stay'd the Souldiers pay,
By meanes whereof, his Highnesse hath lost France

Gloft. Is it but thought so?
What are they that thinke it?
I neuer rob'd the Souldiers of their pay,
Nor euer had one penny Bribe from France.
So helpe me God, as I haue watcht the Night,
I, Night by Night, in studying good for England.
That Daye that ere I wrestled from the King,
Or any Groat I hoorded to my vse,
Be brought against me at my Tryall day.
No many a Pound of mine owne proper store,
Because I would not taxe the needie Commons,
Haue I dis-pursed to the Garrisones,
And neuer ask'd a for restitution.

Card. It serues you well, my Lord, to say so much

Gloft. I say no more then trutin, so helpe me God.

Torke. In your Protectorship, you did deuile
Strange Tortures for Offendors, neuer heard of,
That England was defam'd by Tyrannie

Gloft. Why 'tis well known, that whiles I was Protector,
Pittie was all the fault that was in me
For I should melt at an Offendors teares,
And lowly words were Ransome for their fault.
Vnlesse it were a bloody Murtherer,
Or foule felonious Theefe, that fleec'd poore passengers,
I neuer gaue them condigne punishment
Murther indeede, that bloodie sinne, I tortur'd
About the Felon, or what Trespas else.

Suff. My Lord, these faults are easie, quickly answer'd:
But mightier Crimes are lay'd vnto your charge,
Whereof you cannot easily purge your selfe.

I doe arrest you in his Highnesse Name,
And here commit you to my Lord Cardinall
To keepe, vntill your further time of Tryall

King. My Lord of Gloster, 'tis my speciall hope,
That you will cleare your selfe from all suspence,
My Conscience tells me you are innocent.

Gloft. Ah gracious Lord, these dayes are dangerous
Vertue is choakt with foule Ambition,
And Charitie chas'd hence by Rancours hand;
Foule Subornation is predominant,
And Equiue exil'd your Highnesse Land,
I know, their Complot is to haue my Life:
And if my death might make this Iland happy,
And proue the Period of their Tyrannie,
I would expend it with all willingnesse,
But mine is made the Prologue to their Play:
For thousands more, that yet suspect no perill,
Will not conclude their plotted Tragedie.

Beauford's red sparkling eyes blab his hearts mallice,
And Suffolke's cloudie Brow his stormie hate;
Sharpe Breckinham vnburthens with his tongue,
The enuious Load that lyes vpon his heart
And dogged Torke, that reaches at the Moone,
Whose ouer-weening Arme I haue pluckt back,
By false accuse doth leuell at my Life.
And you, my Soueraigne Lady, with the rest,
Cruelelesse haue lay'd disgraces on my head,
And with your be't endeavour haue stirr'd vp
My liefest Liege to be mine Enemie
I, all of you haue lay'd your heads together,
My selfe had notice of your Conuenticles,
And all to make away my guiltlesse Life
I shall not want false Witnesse, to condemne me,
Nor store of Treasons, to augment my guilt.
The ancient Prouerbe will be well effected,
A Staffe is quickly found to beat a Dogge.

Card. My Liege, his rayling is intollerable.
If those that care to keepe your Royall Person
From Treasons secret Knife, and Raytors Rage,
Be thus vbrayded, chid, and rated at,
And the Offendor graunted scope of speech,
'Twill make them coole in zeale vnto your Grace.

Suff. Hath he not twit our Soueraigne Lady here
With ignominious words, though Clarkely coucht?
As if she had suborned some to leaue
False allegations, to o'rethrow his state.

Qu. But I can giue the loser leaue to chide.
Gloft. Faire truer spoke then meant I lose indeede,
Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false,
And well such losers may haue leaue to speake.

Buck. Hee'le wrest the fence, and hold vs here all day.
Lord Cardinall, he is your Prisoner.

Card. Sirs, take away the Duke, and guard him sure.

Gloft. Ah, thus King Henry throwes away his Crutch,
Before his Legges be firme to beare his Body.
Thus is the Shepheard beaten from thy side,
And Wolues are gnarling, who shall gnaw thee first.
Ah that my teare were false, ah that it were;
For good King Henry, thy decay I feare.

Exit Gloster.
King. My Lords, what to your wisdomes seemeth best,
Doe, or vndoe, as if our selfe were here.

Queene. What, will your Highnesse leaue the Parliament?

King. I Margaret my heart is drown'd with griefe,
Whole flood begins to flowe within mine eyes;
My Body round engyrt with miserie:

The Second Part of Henry the Sixth.

For what's more miserable then Discontent?
Ah Vnckle Humfrey, in thy face I see
The Map of Honor, Truth, and Loyaltie.

And yet, good Humfrey, is the houre to come,
That ere I prou'd thee false, or fear'd thy faith.
What lowring Scarre now enuies thy estate?
That these great Lords, and Margaret our Queene,
Doe seeke subuersion of thy harmelesse Life.
I thou neuer didst them wrong; nor no man wrong.
And as the Butcher takes away the Calfe,
And binds the Wretch, and beats it when it strays,
Bearing it to the bloody Slaughter-house;
Euen so remorselesse haue they borne him hence:
And as the Damme runnes lowing vp and downe,
Looking the way her harmelesse young one went,
And can doe naught but wayle her Darlings losse;
Euen so my selfe bewayles good Glosters case
With sad vnhelpfull teares, and with dimn'd eyes;
Looke after him, and cannot doe him good:
So mightie are his vowed Enemies.

His fortunes I will weepe, and 'twixt each groane,
Say, who's a Traytor? Gloster he is none.

Queene. Free Lords:

Cold Snow melts with the Sunnes hot Beames.
Henry, my Lord, is cold in great Affaires,
Too full of foolish pittie. and Glosters shew
Beguailes him, as the mournfull Crocodile
With sorrow snares relenting passengers,
Or as the Snake, roll'd in a flowing Banke,
With shining checker'd slough doth sting a Child,
That for the beautie thinks it excellent.
Beleeue me Lords, were none more wise then I,
And yet herein I iudge mine owne Wit good;
This Gloster should be quickly rid the World,
To rid vs from the feare we haue of him.

Card. That he should dye, is worthe pollicie,
But yet we want a Colour for his death:
'Tis meet he be condemn'd by course of Law.

Suff. But in my minde, that were no pollicie:
The King will labour still to saue his Life,
The Commons haply rise, to saue his Life;

And yet we haue but triuall argument,
More then mistrust, that shewes him worthy death.

Torke. So that by this, you would not haue him dye.
Suff. Ah Torke, no man aliu, so faine as I.

Torke. 'Tis Torke that hath more reason for his death.
But my Lord Cardinal, and you my Lord of Suffolke,
Say as you thinke, and speake it from your Soules:

Wer't not all one, an emptie Eagle were set,
To guard the Chicken from a hungry Kite,
As place Duke Humfrey for the Kings Protector?

Queene. So the poore Chicken should be sure of death,
Suff. Madame 'tis true. and wer't not madnesse then,
To make the Fox surueyor of the Fold?

Who being atur'd a craftie Murtherer,
His guilt should be but idly posted ouer,
Because his purpose is not executed.

No; let him dye, in that he is a Fox,
By nature prou'd an Enemy to the Flock,
Before his Chaps be slayn'd with Crimson blood,
As Humfrey prou'd by Reasons to my Liege.

And doe not stand on Quillets how to slay him:
Be it by Gynnes, by Snares, by Subletie,
Sleeping, or Waking, 'tis no matter how,
So he be dead; for that is good deceit,

Which mates him first that first intends deceit.

Queene. Thrice Noble Suffolke, 'tis resolutely spoke
Suff. Not resolute, except so much were done,
For things are often spoke, and seldom done,
But that my heart accordeth with my tongue,
Seeing the deed is meritorious,
And to preserve my Soueraigne from his Foe,
Say but the word, and I will be his Priest.

Card. But I would haue him dead, my Lord of Suffolke,
Ere you can take due Orders for a Priest:
Say you consent, and censure well the deed,
And Ile prouide his Executioner,

I tender to the safetie of my Liege.

Suff. Here is my Hand, the deed is worthy doing.

Queene. And so say I.
Torke. And I: and now we thrae haue spoke it,
It skills not greatly who impugnes our doome.

Enter a Post.

Post. Great Lords, from Ireland am I come atmaine,
To signifie, that Rebels there are vp,
And put the Englishmen vnto the Sword.
Send Succours (Lords) and stop the Rage betime,
Before the Wound doe grow vncurable;

Card. A Breach that craues a quick expedient stoppe.
What counsaile giue you in this weightie cause?
Torke. That Somerset be sent as Regent thither.

'Tis meet that luckie Ruler be employ'd,
Witness the fortune he hath had in France
Som. If Torke, with all his farre-set pollicie,
Had bene the Regent there, in stead of me,

He neuer would haue stay'd in France so long.
Torke. No, not to lose it all, as thou hast done.
I rather would haue lost my Life beimes,

Then bring a burthen of dis-honour home,
By staying there so long, as ill were lost.
Shew me one skarre, ch' it sh'ld on thy Skinnie,

Mens flesh prefer'd so whole, doe seldom winne
Qu. Nay then, this spaike will proue a raging fire,
If Wind and Fuel be brought, to feed it with.

No more, good Torke, sweet Somerset be still.
Thy fortune, Torke, hadst thou bene Regent there,
Might happily haue prou'd farre worse then his.

Torke. What, worse then naught? nay, then a shame take all.
Somerset. And in the number, thee, that wishest shame.

Card. My Lord of Yorke, trie what your fortune is.
Th'vnciuill Kernes of Ireland are in Armes,
And temper Clay with blood of Englishmen.

To Ireland will you leade a Band of men,
Collected choycely, from each Countie some,
And trie your hap against the Irishmen?

Torke. I will, my Lord, so please his Maiestie.
Suff. Why, our Authoritie is his consent,
And what we doe establish, he confirms:

Then, Noble Torke, take thou this Taske in hand.
Torke. I am content: Prouide me Souldiers, Lords
Whiles I take order for mine owne affaires.

Suff. A charge, Lord Torke, that I will see perform'd.
Card. No more of him - for I will deale with him,
But now returne we to the false Duke Humfrey.

That henceforth he shall trouble vs no more:
And so breake off, the day is almost spent,
Lord Suffolke, you and I must talke of that cunct.

Torke. My

Yorke. My Lord of Suffolke, within foureteene dayes
At Bristol I expect my Souldiers,
For there Ile shippe them all for Ireland.

Suff. Ile see it truly done, my Lord of Yorke. Exeunt
Manet Yorke.

Yorke Now Yorke, or neuer, Steele thy fearfull thoughts,
And change misdoubt to resolution;
Be that thou hop'st to be, or what thou art;
Resigne to death, it is not worth th' enioying.
Let pale-fac't feare keepe with the meane-borne man,
And finde no harbor in a Royall heart.
Faster the Spring time shewes, comes thought on thought,
And not a thought, but thinkes on Dignitie.
My Brayne, more busie then the laboring Spider,
Weaues tedious Snares to trap mine Enemies.
Well Nobles, well 'tis politickely done,
To send me packing with an Host of men
I feare me, you but warme the starved Snake,
Who cherisht in your breasts, will sting your hearts.
'Twas men I lackt, and you will giue them me;
I take it kindly yet be well assur'd,
You put sharpe Weapons in a mad-mans hands,
Whiles I in Ireland nourish a mightie Band,
I will stirre vp in England some black Stone,
Shall blowe ten thousand Soules to Heaven, or Hell
And this fell Tempest shall not cease to rage,
Vntill the Golden Circlet on my Head,
Like to the glorious Sunnes transparant Beames,
Doe calme the furie of this mad-bred Flawe
And for a minister of my intent,
I haue seduc'd a head-strong Kentishman,
John Cade of Ashford,
To make Commotion, as full well he can,
Vnder the Title of John Mortimer
In Ireland haue I seene this Stubborne Cade
Oppose himselfe against a Troupe of Kernes,
And fought so long, till that his thighs with Darts
Were almost like a sharpe-quill'd Porpentine:
And in the end being rescued, I haue seene
Him capre vpright, like a wilde Morisco,
Shaking the bloody Darts, as he his Bells.
Full often, like a shag-hay'd crasie Kerne,
Hath he conuersed with the Enemy,
And vndiscouer'd, come to me againe,
And giuen me notice of their Villanies.
This Deuill here shall be my substitute;
For that John Mortimer, which now is dead,
In face, in gate, in speech he doth resemble.
By this, I shall perceiue the Commons minde,
How they affect the House and Clayme of Torke.
Say he be taken, rackt, and tortured;
I know, no paine they can inflict vpon him,
Will make him say, I mou'd him to those Armes.
Say that he thrive, 'tis great like he will,
Why then from Ireland come I with my strength,
And reape the Haruest which that Rascaill sow'd.
For Humphrey, being dead, as he shall be,
And Henry put apart, the next for me. Exit.

Enter two or three running ouer the Stage, from the
Murther of Duke Humphrey

1. Runne to my Lord of Suffolke let him know
We haue dispatcht the Duke, as he commanded.

2. Oh, that it were to doe. what haue we done?
Didst euer heare a man so penitent? Enter Suffolke.

1. Here comes my Lord.

Suff. Now Sirs, haue you dispatcht this thing?

1. I, my good Lord, hee's dead.

Suff. Why that's well said Goe, get you to my House,
I will reward you for this venturous deed
The King and all the Peeres are here at hand.
Haue you layd faire the Bed? Is all things well,
According as I gaue directions?

2. 'Tis, my good Lord

Suff. Away, be gone.

Exeunt

Sound Trumpets. Enter the King, the Queene,
Cardinall, Suffolke, Somerset, with Attendants.

King. Goe call our Vnckle to our presence straight.
Say, we intend to try his Grace to day,
If he be guiltie, as 'tis published.

Suff. Ile call him presently, my Noble Lord. Exit.

King. Lords take your places and I pray you all Proceed no straiter 'gainst our Vnckle Gloster,
Then from true euidence, of good esteeme,
He be approu'd in practise culpable.

Queene. God forbid any Malice should preuiyle,
That faultlesse may condemne a Noble man.
Pray God he may acquit him of suspition.

King. I thanke thee Nell, these wordes content mee much.

Enter Suffolke

How now? why look'st thou pale? why tremblest thou?
Where is our Vnckle? what's the matter, Suffolke?

Suff. Dead in his Bed, my Lord Gloster is dead.

Queene. Marry God forsend.

Card. Gods secret Iudgement: I did dreame to Night,
The Duke was dumbe, and could not speake a word.

King sounds

Gr. How fares my Lord? Helpe Lords, the King is dead.

Som. Rere vp his Body, wring him by the Nose.

Qu. Runne, goe, helpe, helpe Oh Henry ope thine eyes.

Suff. He doth reuiue againe, Madame be patient.

King. On Heavenly God.

Qu. How fares my gracious Lord?

Suff. Comfort my Soueraigne, gracious Henry comfort.

King. What, doth my Lord of Suffolke comfort me?
Came he right now to sing a Rauens Note,
Whose dismall tune bereft my Vitall powres:
And thinkes he, that the chirping of a Wren,
By crying comfort from a hollow breast,
Can chase away the first-conceiued sound?
Hide not thy poyson with such sugred words,
Lay not thy hands on me forbeare I say,
Their touch affrights me as a Serpents sting.
Thou balefull Messenger, out of my sight:
Vpon thy eye-balls, murderous Tyrannie
Sits in grim Maiestie, to fright the World.
Looke not vpon me, for thine eyes are wounding;
Yet doe not goe away: come Basiliske,
And kill the innocent girle with thy sight:
For in the shade of death, I shall finde ioy;
In life, but double death, now Gloster's dead.

Queene. Why do you rate my Lord of Suffolke thus?
Although the Duke was enemy to him,
Yet he most Christian like laments his death
And for my selfe, Foe as he was to me,
Might liquid teares, or heart-offending groanes,
Or blood-consuming sighes recall his Life;

The second Part of Henry the Sixth.

I would be blind with weeping, sick with groans,
 Look pale as Prim-rose with blood-drinking sighes,
 And all to have the Noble Duke shue.
 What know I how the world may deeme of me?
 For it is knowne we were but hollow Friends:
 It may be iudg'd made the Duke away.
 So shall my name with Slanders tongue be wounded,
 And Princes Courts be fill'd with my reproach:
 This get I by his death. Aye me unhappie,
 To be a Queene, and Crown'd with infamie.

King. Ah woe is me for Gloster, wretched man.
Queen. Be woe to me, more wretched then he is.

What, dost thou turne away, and hide thy face?
 I am no loathsome Leaper, looke on me.
 What? Art thou like the Adder waxen deafe?
 Bepoysonous too, and kill thy forlorne Queene.

Is all thy comfort shut in Glosters Tombe?
 Why then Dame Elisabeth was neere thy ioy.
 Erect his Statue, and worship it,
 And make my Image but an Ale-house signe.

Was I for this nyce wrack'd vpon the Sea,
 And twice by aukward winde from Englands banke
 Droue backe againe vnto my Native Clime.
 What boaded this, but well fore-warning winde

Did seeme to say, seeke not a Scorpions Nest,
 Nor set no footing on this vnkinde Shore
 What did I then? But curst the gentle gulls,
 And he that loos'd them forth their Brazen Caues,

Or turne our Sterne vpon a dreadfull Rocke:
 Yet Aeolus would not be a murderer,
 But left that hatefull office vnto thee.
 The pretty vaulting Sea refus'd to drowne me,

Knowing that thou wouldst haue me drown'd on shore
 With teares as salt as Sea, through thy vnkindnesse.
 The splitting Rockes cower'd in the sinking sands,
 And would not dash me with their ragged sides,

Because thy flinty heart more hard then they,
 Might in thy Pallace, perish Elisabeth.
 As farre as I could ken thy Chalky Cliffes,
 When from thy Shore, the Tempest beate vs backe,

I stood vpon the Hatches in the storme:
 And when the duskie sky, began to rob
 My earnest-gaping-sight of thy Lands view,
 I took a costly Iewell from my necke,

A Hart it was bound in with Diamonds,
 And threw it toward thy Land: The Sea receiu'd vs,
 And so I wish'd thy body might my Heart
 And euen with this, I lost faire Englands view,

And bid mine eyes be packing with my Heart,
 And call'd them blinde and duskie Spectacles,
 For loosing ken of Albions wished Coast.
 How often haue I tempted Suffolkes tongue

(The agent of thy soule inconstancie)
 To sit and watch me as Ascanius did,
 When he to madding Dido would vnfold
 His Fathers Acts, commenc'd in burning Troy.

Am I not witcht like her? Or thou not false like him?
 Aye me, I can no more. Dye Elisabeth,
 For Henry weepes, that thou dost liue so long.

Noyses within. Enter Warwicke, and Mary Commons.

War. It is reported, mighty Soueraigne,
 That good Duke Humfrey Traiterously is murdered

By Suffolke, and the Cardinall Beauford meanes:
 The Commons like an angry Hue of Bees
 That want their Leader, scatter vp and downe,
 And care not who they sting in his reuenge.

My selfe haue calm'd their spleenfull mutinie,
 Vntill they heare the order of his death.
King. That he is dead good Warwicke, 'tis too true,
 Bushow he dyed, God knowes, not Henry

Enter his Chamber, vlew his breathlesse Corpes,
 And comment then vpon his sodaine death.
War. That shall I do my Liege; Stay Salisbury
 With the rude multitude, till I returne.

King. O thou that iudgeth all things, stay my thoughts:
 My thoughts, that labour to perswade my soule,
 Some violent hands were laid on Humfries life.
 If my suspect be false, forgieue me God,

For iudgement onely doth belong to thee:
 Faine would I go to chafe his pale lips,
 With twenty thousand kisses, and to draine
 Vpon his face an Ocean of salt teares,

To tell my loue vnto his dumbe deafe trunk,
 And with my fingers feele his hand, vnfeeling:
 But all in vaine ate these meane Obsequies,
Bed put forth.

And to suruey his dead and earthy Image:
 What were it but to make my sorrow greater?
War. Come hither gracious Soueraigne, view this body.

King. That is to see how deepe my grue is made,
 For with his soule fled all my worldly solace:
 For seeing him, I see my life in death.
War. As surely as my soule intends to liue

To see vs from his Fathers wrathfull curse,
 I do beleue that violent hands were laid
 Vpon the life of this three-famed Duke.
Suf. A dreadfull Oath, sworne with a solem tongue

What instance giues Lord Warwicke for his vow.
War. See how the blood is seled in his face
 Of haue I seene a timely-parted Ghost,
 Of ashy semblance, meager, pale, and bloodlesse,

Being all descendd to the labouring heart,
 Who in the Conflict thus it holds with death,
 Attracts the fan e for aydance gainst the enemy,
 Which with the heart there cooles, and ne're returneth,

To blush and beautifie the Cheeke againe.
 But see, his face is blacke, and full of blood:
 His eye-balles further out, than when he liued,
 Staring full gastly, like a strangled man.

His hayre vprear'd, his nostrils stretcht with strugling:
 And tugg'd for Life, and was by strength subdued.
 Looke on the sheets his haire (you see) is sticking,
 His well proportion'd Beard, made ruffe and rugged,

Like to the Summers Come by Tempest lodged.
 It cannot be but he was murdered heere,
 The least of all these signes were probable.
Suf. Why Warwicke, who should do the D. to death?

My selfe and Beauford had him in protection,
 And we I hope sir, are no murderers.
War. But both of you were vowed D. Humfries foes,
 And you (forsooth) had the good Duke to keepe

Tis like you would not feast him like a friend,
 And 'tis well seene, he found an enemy.
Queen. Than you belike suspect these Noblemen,
 As guilty of Duke Humfries timelesse death.

War.

Warw. Who finds the Heyfer dead, and bleeding fresh,
And fees fast-by, a Butcher with an Axe,
But will suspect, 'twas he that made the slaughter?
Who finds the Partridge in the Partricks Nest,
But may imagine how the Bird was dead,
Although the Kyte soare with vnbloudied Beake?
Euen so suspicious is this Tragedie.

Qu. Are you the Butcher, Suffolke? where's your Knife?
Is Beauford tearm'd a Kyte? where are his Talons?

Suff. I weare no Knife, to slaughter sleeping men,
But here's a vengefull Sword, rusted with ease,
That shall be scowred in his rancorous heart,
That slanders me with Murthers Crimson Badge
Say, if thou dar'st, proude Lord of *Warw.*ckshire,
That I am faultie in Duke Humfries death

Warw. What dares not Warwick, if false Suffolke dare him?

Qu. He dares not calme his contumelious Spirit,
Nor cease to be an arrogant Controller,
Though Suffolke dare him twentie thousand times

Warw. Madame be still with reuerence may I say,
For euery word you speake in his behalfe,
Is slander to your Royall Dignitie.

Suff. Blunt-witted Lord, ignoble in demeanor,
If euer Lady wrong'd her Lord so much,
Thy Mother tooke into her blamefull Bea
Some sterne vntutur'd Churle, and Noble Stock
Was graft with Crab-tree slippe, whose Fruit thou art,
And neuer of the Neuls Noble Race

Warw. But that the guilt of Murther bucklers thee,
And I should rob the Deaths-man of his Fee,
Quitting thee thereby of ten thousand shames,
And that my Soueraignes presence makes me milde,
I would, false murd'rous Coward, on thy Knee
Make thee begge pardon for thy passed speech,
And say, it was thy Mother that thou meant'st,
That thou thy selfe wast borne in Bastardie,
And after all this fearefull Homage done,
Giue thee thy hyre, and send thy Soule to Hell,
Pernicious blood-sucker of sleeping men

Suff. Thou shalt be waking, while I shed thy blood,
If from this presence thou dar'st goe with me.

Warw. Away euen now, or I will drag thee hence:
Vnworthy though thou art, Ile cope with thee,
And doe some seruice to Duke Humfries Ghost.

Exeunt

King. What stronger Brest-plate then a heart vntainted:
Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his Quarrell iust,
And he but naked, though lockt vp in Steele,
Whose Conscience with Iniustice is corrupted.

A noyse within.

Queene. What noyse is this?

Enter Suffolke and Warwicke, with their Weapons drawne.

King. Why how now Lords?
Your wrathfull Weapons drawne,
Here in our presence? Dare you be so bold?
Why what tumultuous clamor haue we here?

Suff. The trayt'rous Warwick, with the men of Bury,
Set all vpon me, mightue Soueraigne.

Enter Salisbury.

Salub. Sirs stand apart, the King shall know your minde.

Dread Lord, the Commons send you word by me,
Vnlesse Lord Suffolke straight be done to death,
Or banished faire Englands Territories,
They will by violence teare him from your Pallace,
And torture him with grieuous lingring death.
They say, by him the good Duke Humfrey dy'd:
They say, in him they feare your Highnesse death;
And meere instinct of Love and Loyaltie,
Free from a stubborne opposite intent,
As being thought to contradict your liking,
Makes them thus forward in his Banishment.
They say, in care of your most Royall Person,
That if your Highnesse should intend to sleepe,
And charge, that no man should disturbe your rest,
In paine of your dislike, or paine of death;
Yet notwithstanding such a strait Edict,
Were there a Serpent scene, with forked Tongue,
That slyly glyded towards your Maiestie,
It were but necessarie you were wak't
Least being suffer'd in that harmefull slumber,
The mortall Worme might make the sleepe eternall.
And therefore doe they cry, though you forbid,
That they will guard you, where you will, or no,
From such fell Serpents as false Suffolke is;
With who'e inuenomed and fatall sting,
Your louing Vnckle, twentie times his worth
They say is shamefully bereft of life.

Commons within. An answer from the King, my Lord of Salisbury

Suff. 'Tis like the Commons, rude vnpolisht Hides,
Could send such Message to their Soueraigne
But you, my Lord, were glad to be employ'd,
To shew how quaint an Orator you are.
But all the Honor Salisbury hath wonne,
Is, that he was the Lord Embassador,
Sent from a sort of Tinkers to the King.

Within. An answer from the King, or wee will all breake in.

King. Goe Salisbury, and tell them all from me,
I thanke them for their tender louing care,
And had I not bene cited so by them,
Yet did I purpose as they doe entreat
For sure, my thoughts doe hourly prophesie,
Mischance vnto my State by Suffolkes meanes.
And therefore by his Maiestie I sweare,
Whose farre-vnworthie Deputie I am,
He shall not breathe infection in this ayre,
But three dayes longer, on the paine of death.

Qu. Oh Henry, let me pleade for gentle Suffolke.

King. Vngentle Queene, to call him gentle Suffolke.

No more I say: if thou do'st pleade for him,
Thou wilt but adde encrease vnto my Wrath.

Had I but sayd, I would haue kept my Word;
But when I sweare, it is irreuocable:
If after three dayes space thou here bee'st found,
On any ground that I am Ruler of,
The World shall not be Ransome for thy Life.

Come Warwicke, come good Warwicke, goe with mee,
I haue great matters to impart to thee. Exit

Qu. Mischance and Sorrow goe along with you,
Hearts Discontent, and sowre Affliction,
Be play-fellows to keepe you companie:
There's two of you, the Deuill make a third,
And three-fold Vengeance tend vpon your steps.

Suff. Cease, gentle Queene, these Execrations,
And let thy Suffolke take his heauie leaue.

Queene. Fye

Queen. Fye Coward woman, and soft hearted wretch,
Hast thou not spirit to curse thine enemy.

Suf. A plague vpon them : wherefore should I curse them?

Would curses kill, as doth the Mandrakes grone,
I would inuent as bitter searching termes,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to heare,
Deliu'ed strongly through my fixed teeth.
With full as many signes of deadly hate,
As leane-fac'd enuy in her loathsome caue.
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest words,
Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten Flint,
Mine haire be fixt an end, as one distract :
I, every toynt should seeme to curse and ban,
And euen now my burthen'd heart would breake
Should I not curse them. Poyson be their drinke.
Gall, worse then Gall, the daintiest that they taste :
Their sweetest shade, a groue of Cypresse Trees :
Their cheefest Prospekt, murd'ring Basiliskes :
Their softest Touch, as smart as Lizards stings :
Their Musicke, frightfull as the Serpents hisse,
And boading Screech-Owles, make the Consort full.
All the foule terrors in darke seated hell——

Q. Enough sweet Suffolke, thou torment'st thy selfe,
And these dread curses like the Sunne gainst glasse,
Or like an ouer-charged Gun, recoile,
And turnes the force of them vpon thy selfe.

Suf. You bad me ban, and will you bid me leaue?
Now by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a Winters night,
Though standing naked on a Mountaine top,
Where byting cold would neuer let grasse grow,
And thinke it but a minute spent in sport.

Qu. Oh, let me intreat thee cease, giue me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournfull teares :
Nor let the raine of heauen wet this place,
To wash away my wofull Monuments.
Oh, could this kisse be printed in thy hand,
That thou might'st thinke vpon these by the Seale,
Through whom a thousand sighes are breath'd for thee.
So get thee gone, that I may know my greefe,
'Tis but surmiz'd, whiles thou art standing by,
As one that surfets, thinking on a want.
I will repeale thee, or be well assur'd,
Aduenture to be banished my selfe :
And banished I am, if but from thee.

Go, speake not to me ; euen now be gone.
Oh go not yet. Euen thus, two Friends condemn'd,
Embrace, and kisse, and take ten thousand leaues,
Loather a hundred times to part then dye ;
Yet now farewell, and farewell Life with thee.

Suf. Thus is poore Suffolke ten times banished,
Once by the King, and three times thrice by thee.
'Tis not the Land I care for, we'r't thou thence,
A Wildernesse is populous enough,
So Suffolke had thy heauenly company :
For where thou art, there is the World it selfe,
With every seuerall pleasure in the World :
And where thou art not, Desolation,
I can no more ; Liue thou to ioy thy life ;
My selfe no ioy in nought, but that thou liu'st.

Enter Vaux.

Queene. Whether goes Vaux so fast? What newes I perthce?

Vaux. To signifie vnto his Maiesty,
That Cardinall Beauford is, at point of death :
For sodainly a greuous sicknesse tooke him,
That makes him gaspe, and stare, and catch the aire,
Blaspheming God, and cursing men on earth.
Sometime he talkes, as if Duke Hamfrise Ghost
Were by his side : Sometime, he calles the King,
And whispers to his pillow, as to him,
The secrets of his ouer-charged soule,
And I am sent to tell his Maieslie,
That euen now he cries slowd for him.

Qu. Go tell this heauy Message to the King. Exit
Aye me ! What is this World? What newes are these?
But wherefore greue I at an houres poore losse,
Omitting Suffolkes exile, my soules Treasure?
Why onely Suffolke mourne I not for thee?
And with the Southerne clouds, contend in teares?
Theirs for the earths encrease, mine for my sorrowes.
Now get thee hence, the King thou know'st is comming,
If thou be found by me, thou art but dead.

Suf. If I depart from thee, I cannot lue,
And in thy sight to dye, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap?
Heere could I breath my soule into the ayre,
As milde and gentle as the Cradle-babe,
Dying with mothers dugges betweene it's lips,
Where from thy sight, I should be raging mad,
And cry out for thee to close vp mine eyes :
To haue thee with thy lippes to stop my mouth :
So should'st thou eyther turne my flying soule,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liu'd in sweete Elizium.
To dye by thee, were but to dye in rest,
From thee to dye, were torture more then death :
Oh let me stay, befall what may befall.

Queen. Away? Though parting be a fretfull corosiuie,
It is applyed to a deathfull wound.
To France sweet Suffolke. Let me heare from thee :
For where-soeuer thou art in this worlds Globe,
He haue an Irus that shall finde thee out.

Suf. I go.

Qu. And take my heart with thee.

Suf. A Jewell lockt into the wofull Caske,
That euer did containe a thing of worth,
Euen as a splitted Barke, so sunder we.
This way fall I to death.

Qu. This way for me. Exit

Enter the King, Salisbury, and Warwick, to the Cardinal in bed.

King. How fare's my Lord? Speake Beauford to thy Soueraigne.

Ca. If thou beest death, He giue thee Englands Treasure, Enough to purchase such another Island,
So thou wilt let me lue, and feele no paine.

King. Ah, what a signe it is of euill life,
Where death's approach is scene so terrible.

War. Beauford, it is thy Soueraigne speakes to thee.

Beau. Bring me vnto my Triall when you will.
Dy'de he not in his bed? Where should he dye?
Can I make men lue where they will or no?
Oh torture me no more, I will confesse.
Alue againe? Then shew me where he is,
He giue a thousand pound to looke vpon him.
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.

Comb.

Combe downe his haire; looke, looke, it stands vpright,
Like Lime-twigs set to catch my winged soule:
Giue me some drinke, and bid the Apothecarie
Bring the strong poyson that I bought of him.

King. Oh thou eternall mouer of the heauens,
Looke with a gentle eye vpon this Wretch,
Oh beate away the busie medling Fiend,
That layes strong siege vnto this wretches soule,
And from his bosome purge this blacke dispayre.

War. See how the pangs of death do make him grin.

Sal. Disturbe him not, let him passe perceably.

King. Peace to his soule, if Gods good pleasure be Lord Card'nall, if thou thinke fit on heauens blisse,
Hold vp thy hand, make signall of thy hope.
He dies and makes no signe Oh God forgive him.

War. So bad a death, argues a monstrous life

King. Forbeare to iudge, for we are sinners all.

Clofe vp his eyes, and draw the Curtaine close,

And let vs all to Meditation. Exeunt.

Alarm. Fight at Sea. Ordnance goes off.

Enter Lieutenant, Suffolke, and others.

Lieu. The gaudy blabbing and remorsefull day,
Is crept into the bosome of the Sea
And now loud howling Wolves arouse the Jades
That dragge the Tragique melancholy night
Who with their drowisie, slow, and slugging wings
Cleape dead-mens graues, and from their misty Iawes,
Breath foule contagious darknesse in the ayre
Therefore bring forth the Souldiers of our prize,
For whilst our Pinnace Anchors in the Downes,
Heere shall they make their ranfome on the sand,
Or with their blood staine this discoloured shore.
Maister, this Prisoner freely giue I thee,
And thou that art his Mate, make boote of this.
The other Walter Whitmore is thy share.

1 Gent. What is my ranfome Maister, let me know.

Ma. A thousand Crownes, or else lay down your head

Mate. And so much shall you giue, or off goes yours.

Lieu. What thinke you much to pay 2000 Crownes,
And beate the name and port of Gentlemen?
Cut both the Villaines throats, for dy you shall.
The liues of those which we haue lost in fight,
Be counter-poyts with such a pettie summe.

1 Gent. Ile giue it fir, and therefore spare my life

2 Gent. And so will I, and write home for it straight.

Whit. I lost mine eye in laying the prize aboard,
And therefore to reuenge it, shalt thou dye,
And so should these, if I might haue my will Lieu. Be not so rash, take ranfome, let him liue

Suf. Looke on my George, I am a Gentleman,
Rate me at what thou wilt, thou shalt be payed

Whit. And so am I my name is Walter Whitmore
How now? why starts thou? What doth death affright?

Suf. Thy name affrights me, in whose sound is death:
A cunning man did calculate my birth,
And told me that by Water I should dye:
Yet let not this make thee be bloody-minded,
Thy name is Gualtier, being rightly sounded.

Whit. Gualtier or Walter, which it is I care not,
Neuer yet did base dishonour blurre our name,
But with our sword we wip'd away the blot.
Therefore, when Merchant-like I sell reuenge,
Broke be my sword, my Armes torne and defac'd,
And I proclaim'd a Coward through the world.

Suf. Stay Whitmore, for thy Prisoner is a Prince,
The Duke of Suffolke, William de la Pole.

Whit. The Duke of Suffolke, muffled vp in ragges?

Suf. I, but these ragges are no part of the Duke.

Lieu. But Ioue was neuer slaine as thou shalt be,
Obscure and lowlie Swaine, King Henries blood

Suf. The honourable blood of Lancaster
Must not be shed by such a saded Groomee:
Hast thou not kist thy hand, and held my stirrop?
Bare-headed plodded by my foot-cloth Mule,
And thought thee happy when I shooke my head.
How often hast thou waited at my cup,
Fed from my Trencher, kneel'd downe at the boord,
When I haue feasted with Queene Margaret?
Remember it, and let it make thee Crest-falne,
I, and alay this thy abortiue Pride.

How in our voyding Lobby hast thou stood,
And duly wayted for my coming forth?

This hand of mine hath writ in thy behalfe,
And therefore shall it charme thy riotous tongue.

Whit. Speak Captaine, shall I stab the forlorn Swain.

Lieu. First let my words stab him, as he hath me.

Suf. Base slaue, thy words are blunt, and so art thou

Lieu. Conuey him heere, and on our long boats side,

Strike off his head Suf. Thou dar'st not for thy owne

Lieu. Poole, Sir Poole? Lord,

I kennell, puddle, sinke, whose filth and dirt
Troubles the siluer Spring, where England drinks.

Now will I dam vp this thy yawning mouth,
For swallowing the Treasure of the Realme.

Thy lips that kist the Queene, shall sweepe the ground

And thou that smil'dst at good Duke Humfries death,

Against the senselesse windes shall grin in vaine,

Who in contempt shall bisse at thee againe.

And wedded be thou to the Haggies of hell,

For daring to affye a mighty Lord

Vnto the daughter of a worthlesse King,

Hauing neyther Subiect, Wealth, nor Diadem

By diuellish policy art thou growne great,

And like ambitious syllas ouer-gorg'd,

With gobbers of thy Mother-bleeding heart.

By thee Anjou and Maime were sold to France

The false reuolting Normans thorough thee,

Disdaine to call vs Lord, and Piccardie

Hath slaine their Gouvernors, surpriz'd our Forts,

And sent the ragged Souldiers wounded home.

The Princely Warwicke, and the Nemils all,

Whose dreadfull swords were neuer drawne in vaine,

As hating thee, and rising vp in armes.

And now the House of Yorke thrust from the Crowne,

By shamefull murder of a guiltlesse King,

And lofty proud encroaching tyranny,

Burnes with reuenging fire, whose hopefull colours

Advance our halfe-fac'd Sunne, striving to shine;

Vnder the which is writ, Inmis nubibus

The Commons heere in Kent are vp in armes,

And to conclude, Reproach and Beggerie,

Is crept into the Pallace of our King,

And all by thee away, conuey him hence.

Suf. O that I were a God, to shoot forth Thunder

Vpon these paltry, seruile, abiect Dridges.

Small things make base men proud. This Villaine heere,

Being Captaine of a Pinnace, threatens more

Then Bargulus the strong Illyrian Pyrate.

Drones sucke not Eagles blood, but rob Bee-hiues:

It is impossible that I should dye

By

By such a lowly Vassall as thy selfe.

Thy words moue Rage, and not remorse in me:

I go of Message from the Queene to France

I charge thee wast me safely crosse the Channell.

Lien. Water: W. Come Suffolke, I must wast thee to thy death.

Suf. Pine gelidus timor occupat artus, it is thee I feare.

Wal. Thou shalt haue cause to feare before I leaue thee.

What, are ye danted now? Now will ye stoope.

1. Gent. My gracious Lord intreat him, speak him fair.

Suf. Suffolkes Imperiall tongue is sterne and rough:

Vs'd to command, vntaught to pleade for fauour,

Farre be it, we should honor such as these

With humble suite: no, rather let my head

Stoope to the blocke, then these knees bow to any,

Saue to the God of heauen, and to my King:

And sooner dance vpon a bloody pole,

Then stand vncouer'd to the Vulgar Groome.

True Nobility, is exempt from feare -

More can I beare, then you dare execute.

Lien. Hale him away, and let him talke no more:

Come Souldiers, shew what crueltye can.

Suf. That this my death may neuer be forget.

Great men oft dye by vilde Bezoniens

A Romane Sword, and Bandetto slaue

Murder'd sweet Tully Brutus Bastard hand

Stab'd Julius Caesar. Savage Islanders

Pompey the Great, and Suffolke dyes by Pyrats.

Exit Water with Suffolke.

Lien. And as for these whose ransom we haue let,

It is our pleasure one of them depart:

Therefore come you with vs, and let him go.

Exit Lieutenant, and the rest.

Manet the first Gent. Enter Walter with the body.

Wal. There let his head, and huelesse bodie lye,

Vntill the Queene his Mistris bury it. Exit Walter.

1. Gent. O barbarous and bloudy spectacle,

His body will I beare vnto the King.

If he reuenge it not, yet will his Friends,

So will the Queene, that liuing, held him deere.

Enter Beus, and Iohn Holland.

Beus. Come and get thee a sword, though made of a Lath, they haue bene vp these two dayes

Hol. They haue the more neede to sleepe now then.

Beus. I tell thee, Iacke Cade the Cloathier, meanes to dresse the Common-wealth and turne it, and set a new nap vpon it

Hol. So he had need, for 'tis thred-bare Well, I say, it was neuer merrie world in England, since Gentlemen came vp.

Beus. O miserable Age: Vertue is not regarded in Handy-crafts men.

Hol. The Nobilitie thinke scorne to goe in Leather Aprons.

Beus. Nay more, the Kings Councill are no good Workemen.

Hol. True: and yet it is said, Labour in thy Vocation. which is as much to say, as let the Magistrates belabouring men, and therefore should we be Magistrates.

Beus. Thou hast hit it for there's no better signe of a braue minde, then a hard hand.

Hol. I see them, I see them. There's Bests Sonne, the Tanner of Wingham.

Beus. Hee shall haue the skinnnes of our enemies, to make Dogges Leather of.

Hol. And Dicke the Butcher.

Beus. Then is sin stricke downe like an Oxe, and iniquities throte cut like a Calfe.

Hol. And Smith the Weauer.

Beus. Argo, their thred of life is spun.

Hol. Come, come, let's fall in with them.

Drumme. Enter Cade, Dicke Butcher, Smith the Weauer, and a Sawyer, with infinite numbers.

Cade. Wee Iohn Cade, so team'd of our supposed Father.

But. Or rather of stealing a Cade of Herrings.

Cade. For our enemies shall faile before vs, inspired with the spirit of putting down Kings and Princes. Command silence.

But. Silence.

Cade. My Father was a Mortimer.

But. He was an honest man, and a good Bricklayer.

Cade. My mother a Plantagenet.

Butch. I knew her well, she was a Midwife.

Cade. My wife descended of the Lacies.

But. She was indeed a Pedlers daughter, & sold many Laces

Weauer. But now of late, not able to trauell with her furr'd Packe, she washes buckes here at home

Cade. Therefore am I of an honorable house

But. I by my faith, the field is honourable, and there was he borne, vnder a hedge. for his Father had neuer a house but the Cage.

Cade. Valiant I am.

Weauer. A must needs, for beggery is valiant.

Cade. I am able to endure much.

But. No question of that: for I haue seene him whipt three Market dayes together.

Cade. I feare neither sword, nor fire

Wea. He neede not feare the sword, for his Coate is of proofe.

But. But me thinks he should stand in feare of fire, being burnt wth hand for stealing of Sheepe

Cade. Be braue then, for your Captaine is Braue, and Vowes Reformation. There shall be in England, seuen halfe peny Loques sold for a peny: the three hoop'd pot, shall haue ten hoopes, and I wil make it Fellony to drinke small Beere. All the Realme shall be in Common, and in Cheapside shall my Palfrey go to grasse: and when I am King, as King I will be.

All. God saue your Maiessty.

Cade. I thanke you good people. Theré shall bee no mony, all shall eate and drinke on my score, and I will apparrell them all in one Livery, that they may agree like Brothers, and worship me their Lord.

But. The first thing we do, let's kill all the Lawyera.

Cade. Nay, that I meane to do. Is not this a lamentable thing, that of the skin of an innocent Lambe should be made Parchment; that Parchment being scribeld ore, should vndoe a man. Some say the Bee stings, but I say, 'tis the Bees waxe: for I did but seale once to a thing, and I was neuer mine owne man since. How now? Who's there?

Enter a Clarke.

Weauer. The Clarke of Chartam: hee can write and reade, and cast accompt.

Cade. O monstrous.

Wea. We tooke him setting of boyes Copies.

Cade.

Cade. Here's a Villaine.

Wea. Ha's a Booke in his pocket with red Letters in't

Cade. Nay then he is a Conuener

But. Nay, he can make Obligations, and write Court hand.

Cade. I am sorry for't. The man is a proper man of mine Honour: vnlesse I finde him guilty, he shall not die. Come hither sirrah, I must examine thee: What is thy name?

Clarke Emanuel.

But. They vse to writ it on the top of Letters. 'Twill go hard with you.

Cade. Let me alone: Dost thou vse to write thy name? Or hast thou a marke to thy selfe, like a honett plain dealing man?

Clarke. Sir I thanke God, I haue bin so well brought vp, that I can write my name

All. He hath contentt. away with him: he's a Villaine and a Traitor.

Cade. Away with him I say: Hang him with his Pen and Inke-horne about his necke

Exit one with the Clarke

Enter Michael

Mich. Where's our Generall?

Cade. Heere I am thou particular fellow

Mich. Fly, fly, fly, Sir Humphrey Stafford and his brother are hard by, with the Kings Forces.

Cade. Stand villaine, stand, or Ile sell thee downe. he shall be encountered with a man as good as himselfe. He is but a Knight, is a?

Mich. No.

Cade. To equall him I will make my selfe a knight presently; Rise vp Sir John Mortimer. Now haue at him.

Enter Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brother, with Drum and Soldiers.

Staff. Rebellious Hinds, the filth and scum of Kent, Mark'd for the Gallowes. Lay your Weapons downe, Home to your Cottages: forsake this Groome.

The King is mercifull, if you reuolt.

Bro. But angry wrathfull, and inclm'd to blood, If you go forward. therefore yeeld, or dye.

Cade. As for these silken-coated slaues I passe not.

It is to you good people, that I speake, Ouer whom (in time to come) I hope to raigne For I am rightfull heyre vnto the Crowne

Staff. Villaine, thy Father was a Playsterer, And thou thy selfe a Sheareman, art thou not?

Cade. And Adam was a Gardiner.

Bro. And what of that?

Cade. Marry, this Edmund Mortimer Earle of March, married the Duke of Clarence daughter, did he not?

Staff. I sir.

Cade. By her he had two children at one birth

Bro. That's false.

Cade. I, there's the question, But I say, 'tis true: The elder of them being put to nurse, Was by a begger-woman stolne away, And ignorant of his birth and parentage, Became a Bricklayer, when he came to age. His sonne am I, deny it if you can.

But. Nay, 'tis too true, therefore he shall be King.

Wea. Sir, he made a Chimney in my Fathers house, & the bricke are alieue at this day to testifieat: therefore deny it not

Staff. And will you credit this base Drudges Wordes, that speakes he knowes not whar.

All. I marry will we: therefore get ye gone.

Bro. Lacke Cade, the D. of York hath raught you this.

Cade. He lyes, for I inuented it my selfe. Go too Sirrah, tell the King from me, that for his Fathers sake Henry the fifth, (in whose time, boyes went to Span-counter for French Crownes) I am content he shall raigne but Ile be Protector ouer him.

Butcher. And furthermore, wee haue the Lord Sayer head, for selling the Dukedome of Maine.

Cade. And good reason: for thereby is England man'd And fame to go with a staffe, but that my puissance holds it vp. Fellow-Kings, I tell you, that that Lord Say hath gelded the Commonwealt, and made it an Eunuch: & more then that, he can speake French, and therefore hee is a Traitor.

Staff. O grosse and miserable ignorance.

Cade. Nay answer if you can. The Frenchmen are our enemies: go too then, I ask but this: Can he that speakes with the tongue of an enemy, be a good Councillour, or no?

All. No, no, and therefore wee'l haue his head.

Bro. Well, seeing gentle words will not preuaile, Assaile them with the Army of the King.

Staff. Herald away, and throughout every Towne, Proclaime them Traitors that are vp with Cade, That those which flye before the battell ends May euen in their Wiues and Childrens sight, Be hang'd vp for example at their doores And you that be the Kings Friends follow me.

Cade. And you that loue the Commons, follow me:

Now shew your selues men, 'tis for Liberty. We will not leaue one Lord, one Gentleman: Spare none, but such as go in clouted shooen, For they are thrifty honett men, and such As would (but that they dare not) take our parts.

But. They are all in order, and march toward vs.

Cade. But then are we in order, when we are most out of order. Come, march forward

Alarums to the fight, wherein both the Staffords are slaine
Enter Cade and the rest.

Cade. Where's Dicke, the Butcher of Ashford?

But. Heere sir.

Cade. They fell before thee like Sheepe and Oxen, & thou behaued'st thy selfe, as if thou hadst bene in thine owne Slaughter-house. Therefore thus will I reward thee, the Lent shall bee as long againe as it is, and thou shalt haue a License to kill for a hundred lacking one.

But. I desire no more

Cade. And to speake truth, thou deseru'st no lesse. This Monument of the victory will I beare, and the bodies shall be dragg'd at my horse heeles, till I do come to London, where we will haue the Maiors sword born before vs.

But. If we meane to thrine, and do good, breake open the Gaoles, and let out the Prisoners.

Cade. Feare not that I warrant thee, Come, let's march towards London.

Exeunt.

Enter the King with a Supplication, and the Queene with Suffolkes head, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Say

Queene. Oft haue I heard that greefe softens the mind, And

And makes it fearefull and degenerate.

Thinke therefore on reuenge, and cease to weepe.
But who can cease to weepe, and looke on this.
Heere may his head lye on my throbbing brest:
But where's the body that I should embrace?

Buc. What answer makes your Grace to the Rebels Supplication?

King. Ile send some holy Bishop to intreat:
For God forbid, so many simple soules
Should perish by the Sword. And I my selfe,
Rather then bloody Warre shall cut them short,
Will parley with Iacke Cade their Generall.
But stay, Ile read it ouer once againe.

Qu. Ah barbarous villaines: Hath this louely face,
Rul'd like a wandering Plannet ouer me,
And could it not inforce them to relent,
That were vnworthy to behold the same.

King. Lord Say, Iacke Cade hath sworne to haue thy head.

Say. I, but I hope your Highnesse shall haue his.

King. How now Madam?

Still lamenting and mourning for Suffolkes death?
I feare me (Loue) if that I had beene dead,
Thou would'st not haue mourn'd so much for me.

Qu. No my Loue, I should not mourne, but dye for thee.

Enter a Messenger.

King. How now? What newes? Why com'st thou in such haste?

Mes. The Rebels are in Southwatke Fly my Lord:

Iacke Cade proclaimes himselfe Lord Mortimer,
Descended from the Duke of Clarence house,
And calles your Grace Vsurper, openly,
And vowes to Crowne himselfe in Westminster.

His Army is a ragged multitude
Of Hindes and Pezants, rude and mercilesse:
Sir Humphrey Stafford, and his Brothers death,
Hath giuen them heart and courage to proceede:
All Schollers, Lawyers, Courtiers, Gentlemen,
They call false Caterpillers, and intend their death.

King. Oh gratesse men they know not what they do.

Buck. My gracious Lord, retire to Killingworth,
Vntill a power be rais'd to put them downe.

Qu. Ah were the Duke of Suffolke now aliue,
These Kentish Rebels would be soone appeas'd.

King. Lord Say, the Traitors hate th thee,
Therefore away with vs to Killingworth.

Say. So might your Graces person be in danger.
The fight of me is odious in their eyes:
And therefore in this City will I stay,
And lue alone as secret as I may.

Enter another Messenger.

Mes. Iacke Cade hath gotten London-bridge.
The Citizens flye and forsake their houses:
The Rascaill people, thursting after prey,
Ioyn with the Traitor, and they ioyntly sweare
To spoyle the City, and your Royall Court.

Buc. Then linger not my Lord, away, take horse.

King. Come Margaret, God our hope will succor vs.

Qu. My hope is gone, now Suffolke is deceast.

King. Farewell my Lord, trust not the Kentish Rebels

Buc. Trust no body for feare you betraid.

The trust I haue, is in mine innocence,

And therefore am I bold and resolute.

Exeunt

Enter Lord Scales upon the Tower walking. Then enters two or three Citizens below.

Scales. How now? Is Iacke Cade slaine?

1. Cit. No my Lord, nor likely to be slaine.

For they haue wonne the Bridge,
Killing all those that withstand them:
The L. Maior craues ayd of your Honor from the Tower
To defend the City from the Rebels

Scales. Such ayd as I can spare you shall command,
But I am troubled heere with them my selfe.
The Rebels haue assay'd to win the Tower.
But get you to Smithfield, and gather head,
And thither I will send you Mathew Goffe.
Fight for your King, your Country, and your Liues,
And so farwell, for I must hence againe.

Exeunt

Enter Iacke Cade and the rest, and strikes his staffe on London stone.

Cade. Now is Mortimer Lord of this City,
And heere sitting vpon London Stone,
I charge and command, that of the Cities cost
The pissing Conduit run nothing but Clarret Wine
This first yeare of our raigne
And now henceforward it shall be Treason for any,
That calles me other then Lord Mortimer.

Enter a Soldier running.

Soul. Iacke Cade, Iacke Cade.

Cade. Knecke him downe there. They kill him

But. If this Fellow be wise, hee'l neuer call yee Iacke
Cade more, I thinke he hath a very faire warning.

Dicke. My Lord, there's an Army gathered together in Smithfield

Cade. Come, then let's go fight with them:
But first, go and fet London Bridge on fire,
And if you can, burne downe the Tower too.
Come, let's away.

Exeunt comes.

Alarums. Mathew Goffe is slain, and all the rest.
Then enter Iacke Cade, with his Company

Cade. So sirs. now go some and pull down the Sauoy:
Others to th Innes of Court, downe with them all.

Ent. I haue a suite vnto your Lordship

Cade. Bee it a Lordshippe, thou shalt haue it for that word.

But. Onely that the Lawes of England may come out of your mouth.

Iohn. Masse 'twill be fore Law then, for he was thrust in the mouth with a Speare, and 'tis not whole yet.

Smith. Nay Iohn, it wil be stinking Law, for his breath
stinks with eating roasted cheefe.

Cade. I haue thought vpon it, it shall bee so. Away, burne all the Records of the Realme, my mouth shall be the Parliament of England.

Iohn. Then we are like to haue birng Statutes
Vnlesse his teerh be pull'd out.

Cade. And hence-forward all things shall be in Common

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Lord a prize, a prize, heeres the Lord Say, which sold the Townes in France. He that made vs pay one and twenty Fifteenes, and one shilling to the pound, the last Subsidie.

Enter

Enter George, with the Lord Say.

Cade Well, hee shall be beheaded for it ten times : Ah thou Say, thou Surge, nay thou Buckram Lord, now art thou within point-blanke of our Jurisdiction Regall. What canst thou answer to my Maiesty, for giuing vp of Normandie vnto Mounſieur Basmeur, the Dolphine of France? Be it knowne vnto thee by these presence, euen the presence of Lord Mortimer, that I am the Becsome that must sweepe the Court cleane of such filth as thou art. Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the Realme, in teaching a Grammar Schoole. and whereas before, our Fore-fathers had no other Bookes but the Score and the Tally, thou hast caused printing to be vs'd, and contrary to the King, his Crowne, and Dignity, thou hast built a Paper-Mill. It will be proued to thy Face, that thou hast men about thee, that vsually talke of a Nowne and a Verbe, and such abhominable wordes, as no Christian eare can endure to heare. Thou hast appointed Iustices of Peace, to call poore men before th m, about matters they were not able to answer. Moreover, thou hast put them in prison, and because they could not reade, thou hast hang'd them, when (indeede) onely for that cause they haue bene most worthy to liue. Thou dost ride in a foot-cloth, dost thou not?

Say. What of that?

Cade. Marry, thou ought'st not to let thy horse weare a Cloake, when honest men then thou go in their Hose and Doublets.

Dicke. And worke in their shirt to, as my selfe for example, that am a butcher.

Say. You men of Kent

Dic. What say you of Kent.

Say. Nothing but this: 'Tis bona terra, mala gens.

Cade. Away with him, away with him, he speaks Latine

Say. Heare me but I speake, and beare mee wher'e you will Kent, in the Commentaries Cesar writ, Is term'd the ciuel'st place of all this Isle. Sweet is the Countrey, because full of Riches, The People Liberal, Valiant, Active, Wealthy, Which makes me hope you are not void of pity. I sold not Maine, I lost not Normandie, Yet to recouer them would loose my life. Iustice with fauour haue I alwayes done, Prayres and Teares haue mou'd me, Gifts could neuer. When haue I ought exacted at your hands? Kent to maintaine, the King, the Realme and you, Large gifts haue I bestow'd on learned Clerkes, Because my Booke prefer'd me to the King. And seeing Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the Wing wherewith we flye to heauen. Vnlesse you be possest with diuillish spirits, You cannot but forbear to murder me: This Tongue hath parl'd vnto Forraigne Kings For your behoofe.

Cade. Tit, when struck'st thou one blow in the field?

Say. Great men haue reaching handsto't haue I struck Those that I neuer saw, and strucke them dead.

Geo. O monstrous Coward! What, to come behinde Folkes?

Say. These cheekes are pale for watching for your good

Cade. Giue him a box o'th'eare, and that wil make 'em red againe

Say. Long sitting to determine poore mens causes, Hath made me full of sicknesse and diseases
Cade. Ye shall haue a hempen Candle then, & the help of hatchet.

Dicke. Why dost thou quier man?

Say. The Falsie, and not feare prouokes me.

Cade. Nay, he noddeth vs, as who should say, Ile be euen with you. Ile see if his head will stand steddier on a pole, or no: Take him away, and behead him.

Say. Tell me. wherein haue I offended most?

Haue I affected wealth, or honor? Speake

Are my Chests fill'd vp with extorted Gold?

Is my Apparell sumptuous to behold?

Whom haue I inur'd, that ye seeke my death?

These hands are free from guiltlesse bloodshedding, This breast from harbouring foule deceitfull thoughts. O let me liue.

Cade. I feele remorse in my selfe with his words. but Ile bridle it. he shall dye, and it bee but for pleading so well for his life. Away with him, he ha's a Familiar vnder his Tongue, he speaks not a Gods name. Go, take him away I say, and strike off his head presently, and then breake into his Sonne in Lawes house, Sir James Cromer, and strike off his head, and bring them both vpon two poles hither.

All. It shall be done.

Say. Ah Countymen. If when you make your prair's, God should be so obdurate as your selues How would it fare with your departed soules, And therefore yet relent, and saue my life.

Cade. Away with him, and do as I command ye: the proudest Peere in the Realme, shall not weare a bead on his shoulders, vnlesse he pay me tribute: there shall not a maid be married, but she shall pay to me her Mayden-head ere they haue it: Men shall hold of mee in Capite. And we charge and command, that their wiues be as free as heart can wish, or tongue can tell.

Dicke. My Lord, When shall we go to Cheapſide, and take vp commodities vpon our billes?

Cade. Marry presently

All. O braue.

Enter one with the beads.

Cade. But is not this brauer: Let them kisse one another: For they lou'd well When they were aline. Now part them againe, Least they consult about the giuing vp Of some more Townes in France. Soldiers, Deferre the spoile of the Citie vntill night. For with these borne before vs, in stead of Maces, Will we ride through the streets, & at every Corner Haue them kisse. Away. Exit Alarm, and Retreat. Enter against Cade, and all his rabblement.

Cade. Vp Fish-streete, downe Saint Magnes corner, kill and knocke downe, throw them into Thames:

Sound a parley

What noyse is this I heare? Dare any be so bold to sound Retreat or Parley When I command them kill?

o

Enter

Enter Buckingham, and old Clifford.

Buc. Theere they be, that dare and will disturb thee:
Know Cade, we come Ambassadors from the King
Vnto the Commons, whom thou hast misled,
And heere pronounce free pardon to them all,
That will forsake thee, and go home in peace.

Clif. What say ye Countermen, will ye relent
And yeeld to mercy, whilst 'tis offered you,
Or let a rabble leade you to your deaths.
Who loues the King, and will imbrace his pardon,
Fling vp his cap, and say, God saue his Maiesty.
Who hateth him, and honors not his Father,
Henry the fift, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at vs, and passe by.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Cade. What Buckingham and Clifford are ye so braue?
And you base Pezants, do ye beleue him, will you needs be hang'd with your Pardons about your neckes? Hath my sword therefore broke through London gates, that you should leaue me at the White-heart in Southwarke,
I thought ye would neuer haue giuen out these Armes til you had recovered your ancient Freedome. But you are all Recreants and Dastards, and delight to lue in slauerie to the Nobility. Let them breake your backs with burthens, take your houses ouer your heads, rauish your Wives and Daughters before your faces. For me, I will make shift for one, and so Gods Curse light vpon you all.

All. Wee'l follow Cade,
Wee'l follow Cade.

Clif. Is Cade the sonne of Henry the fift,
That thus you do exclame you'l go with him,
Will he conduct you through the heart of France,
And make the meane of you Earles and Dukes?
Alas, he hath no home, no place to flye too:
Nor knowes he how to lue, but by the spoile,
Vnless by robbing of your Friends, and vs.
Wer't not a shame, that whilst you lue at iarre,
The fearfull French, whom you late vanquished
Should make a start ore-seas, and vanquish you?
Me thinkes alreadie in this ciuill broyle,
I see them Lording it in London streets,
Crying Villago vnto all they meete.
Better ten thousand base-borne Cades miscarry,
Then you should stoope vnto a Frenchmans mercy.
To France, to France, and get what you haue lost:
Spare England, for it is your Natiue Coast.
Henry hath mony, you are strong and manly:
God on our side, doubt not of Victorie.

All. A Clifford, a Clifford,
Wee'l follow the King, and Clifford.

Cade. Was euer Feather so lightly blowne too & fro, as this multitude? The name of Henry the fift, haies them to an hundred mischieses, and makes them leaue mee desolate. I see them lay their heades together to surprize me. My sword make way for me, for heere is no staying:
in despite of the diuels and hell, haue through the verie middest of you, and heauens and honor be witnessse, that no want of resolution in mee; but onely my Followers base and ignominious treasons, makes me betake mee to my heeles Exit

Buck. What, is he fled? Go some and follow him,
And he that brings his head vnto the King,
Shall haue a thousand Crownes for his reward.

Exeunt some of them.

Follow me souldiers, wee'l deuise a meane,
To reconcile you all vnto the King.

Exeunt omnes.

Sound Trumpets. Enter King, Queene, and Somerset on the Tarras.

King. Was euer King that ioy'd an earthly Throne,
And could command no more content then I?
No sooner was I crept out of my Cradle,
But I was made a King, at nine months olde.
Was neuer Subiect long'd to be a King,
As I do long and wish to be a Subiect.

Enter Buckingham and Clifford.

Buc. Health and glad tydings to your Maiesty.

King. Why Buckingham, is the Traitor Cade surpris'd?
Or is he but retir'd to make him strong?

Enter Multitudes with Halsters about their Neckes.

Clif. He is fled my Lord, and all his powers do yeeld,
And humbly thus with halsters on their neckes,
Expect your Highnesse doome of life, or death.

King. Then heauen set ope thy euerlasting gates,
To entertaine my vowes of thankses and praise.
Souldiers, this day haue you redeem'd your hues,
And shew'd how well you loue your Prince & Countrey.
Continue still in this so good a minde,
And Henry though he be infortunate,
Assure your selues will neuer be ynkinde:
And so with thankses, and pardon to you all,
I do dismisse you to your seuerall Countreies.

All. God saue the King, God saue the King.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Please it your Grace to be aduertised,
The Duke of Yorke is newly come from Ireland,
And with a puissant and a mighty power
Of Gallow-glasses and stout Kernes,
Is marching hither ward in proud array,
And still proclaimeth as he comes along,
His Armes are onely to remoue from thee
The Duke of Somerset, whom he tearmes a Traitor.

King. Thus stands my state, 'twixt Cade and Yorke distrest,

Like to a Ship, that hauing scap'd a Tempest,
Is straight way calme, and boorded with a Pyrate.
But now is Cade driuen backe, his men dispiere'd,
And now is Yorke in Armes, to second him.
I pray thee Buckingham go and meete him,
And aske him what's the reason of these Armes;
Tell him, Ile send Duke Edmund to the Tower,
And Somerset we will commit thee thither,
Vntill his Army be dismist from him.

Somerset. My Lord,
Ile yeelde my selfe to prison willingly,
Or vnto death, to do my Countrey good.

King. In any case, be not to rough in termes,
For he is fierce, and cannot brooke hard Language.

Buc. I will my Lord, and doubt not so to deale,
As all things shall redound vnto your good.

King. Come wise, let's in, and learne to gouern better,
For yet may England curse my wretched raigne.

Flourish.

*Exeunt.
Enter*

Enter Cade.

Cade. Eye on Ambitions: sic on my selfe, that haue a sword, and yet am teady to famish. These fiue daies haue I hid me in these Woods, and durst not peepe out, for all the Country is laid for me. but now am I so hungry, that if I might haue a Lease of my life for a thousand yeares, I could stay no longer. Wherefore on a Bricke wall haue I climb'd into this Garden, to see if I can eate Grasse, or picke a Sallet another while, which is not amisse to coole a mans stomacke this hot v'eather: and I think this word Sallet was borne to do me good for many a time but for a Sallet, my braine-pan has bene cleft with a brown Bill; and many a time when I haue bene dry, & brauely marching, it hath seru'd me instead of a quart pot to drinke in: and now the word Sallet must serue me to feed on.

Enter Idon.

Idon. Lord, who would haue turmoyled in the Court, And may enioy such quiet walkes as these? This small inheritance my Father left me, Contenteth me, and worth a Monarchy I seeke not to waxe great by others warning, Or gather wealth I care not with what enuy Sufficeth, that I haue maintaines my state, And sends the poore well pleased from my gate

Cade. Heere's the Lord of the soule come to seize me for a stray, for entering his Fee-simple without leave. A Villaine, thou wilt betray me, and get a 1000 Crownes of the King by carrying my head to him, but He make thee eate Iron like an Ostridge, and swallow my Sword like a great pin ere thou and I part.

Idon. Why rude Companion, whatsoere thou be, I know thee not, why then should I betray thee? Is't not enough to breake into my Garden, And like a Theefe to come to rob my grounds: Climbing my walles inspight of me the Owner, But thou wilt braue me with these sawcie termes?

Cade. Braue thee? I by the best blood that euer was broach'd, and beard thee to. Look on mee well, I haue eate no meate these fiue dayes, yet come thou and thy fiue men, and if I doe not leaue you all as dead as a doore naile, I pray God I may never eate grasse more

Idon. Nay, it shall nere be said, while England stands, That Alexander Idon an Equire of Kent, Tooke oddes to combat a poore famisht man. Oppose thy stedfast gazing eyes to mine, See if thou canst out-face me with thy looks: Set limbe to limbe, and thou art farre the lesfer: Thy hand is but a finger to my fist, Thy legges a sticke compared with this Truncheon, My foote shall fight with all the strength thou hast, And if mine arme be heaued in the Ayre, Thy graue is digg'd already in the earth: As for words, whose greatnesse answer's words, Let this my sword report what speech forbears.

Cade. By my Valour the most compleate Champion that euer I heard Steele, if thou turne the edge, or cut not out the burly bon'd Clowne in chines of Beefe, ere thou sleepe in thy Sheath, I beseech Ioue on my knees thou mayst be turn'd to Hobnails.

Heere they fight.

O I am slaine, Famine and no other hath slaine me, let ten thousand duelles come against me, and giue me but the ten meales I haue lost, and I'de defie them all. Wither Garden, and be henceforth a burying place to all that do dwell in this house, because the vnconquered soule of Cade is fled.

Idon. Is't Cade that I haue slain, that monstrous traitor? Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deede, And hang thee o're my Tombe, when I am dead Ne're shall this blood be wiped from thy point, But thou shalt weare it as a Heralds coate, To emblaze the Honor that thy Master got.

Cade. Idon farewell, and be proud of thy victory: Tell Kent from me, she hath lost her best man; and exhort all the World to be Cowards. For I that neuer feared any, am vanquished by Famine, not by Valour. Dies.

Idon. How much thou wrong'st me, heauen be my iudge; Die damned Wretch, the curse of her that bare thee: And as I thrust thy body in with my sword, So with I, I might thrust thy soule to hell Hence will I dragge thee headlong by the heeles Vnto a dunghill, which shall be thy graue, And there cut off thy most vngacious head, Which I will beare in triumph to the King, Leauing thy trunk for Crows to feed vpon. Exit.

Enter Yorke, and his Army of Irish, with Drum and Colours.

Yor. From Ireland thus comes Yorke to claim his right, And plucke the Crowne from feeble Henries head, Ring Belles alowd, burne Bonfires cleare and bright To entertaine great Englands lawfull King Ah Sancta Maestas! who would not buy thee deere Let them obey, that knowes not how to Rule. This hand was made to handle nought but Gold. I cannot giue due action to my words, Except a Sword or Scepter ballance it. A Scepter shall it haue, haue I a soule, On which I'll toss the Fleure-de-Luce of France.

Enter Buckingham

Whom haue we heere? Buckingham to disturbe me? The king hath sent him sure I must dissemble.

Buc. Yorke, if thou meanest wel, I greet thee well.

Yor. Humphrey of Buckingham I accept thy greeting. Art thou a Messenger, or come of pleasure.

Buc. A Messenger from Henry, our dread Liege. To know the reason of these Armes in peace. Or why, thou being a Subject, as I am, Against thy Oath, and true Allegiance sworne, Should raise so great a power without his leaue? Or dare to bring thy Force so neere the Court?

Yor. Scarce can I speake, my Choller is so great Oh I could hew vp Rockes, and fight with Flint, I am so angry at these abiect rearmes, And now like Ajax Telamonius, On Sheepe or Oxen could I spend my furie, I am farre better borne then is the king: More like a King, more Kingly in my thoughts. But I must make faire weather yet a while, Till Henry be more weake, and I more strong. Buckingham, I prethee pardon me, That I haue giuen no answer all this while My minde was troubled with deepe Melancholly. The cause why I haue brought this Armie hither,

Is to remove proud Somerset from the King,
Seditions to his Grace, and to the State.

Buc. That is too much presumption on thy part:
But if thy Armes be to no other end,
The King hath yielded vnto thy demand:
The Duke of Somerset is in the Tower.

Yorke. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner

Buck. Vpon mine Honor he is Prisoner.

Yorke. Then Buckingham I do dismisse my Powres.
Souldiers, I thanke you all: disperse your selues.
Meet me to morrow in S. Georges Field,
You shall haue pay, and euery thing you wish.
And let my Soueraigne, vertuous Henry,
Command my eldest sonne, nay all my sonnes,
As pledges of my Fealme and Loue,
He send them all as willing as I liue:
Lands, Goods, Horse, Armor, any thing I haue
Is his to vse, to Somerset may die.

Buc. Yorke, I commend this kinde submission,
We twaine will go into his Highnesse Tent.

Enter King and Attendants.

King. Buckingham, doth Yorke intend no harme to vs
Thathus he marcheth with thee arme in arme?

Yorke. In all submission and humility,
Yorke doth present himselfe vnto your Highnesse.

K. Then what intends these Forces thou dost bring?

Yor. To heaue the Traitor Somerset from hence,
And fight against that monstrous Rebelle Cade,
Who since I heard to be discomfited

Enter Iden with Cades head

Iden. If one so rude, and of so meane condition
May passe into the presence of a King:
Loe, I present your Grace a Traitors head,
The head of Cade, whom I in combat slew.

King. The head of Cade? Great God, how iust art thou?
Oh let me view his Visage being dead,
That liuing wrought me such exceeding trouble.
Tell me my Friend, art thou the man that slew him?

Iden. I was, an't like your Maiesty.

King. How art thou call'd? And what is thy degree?

Iden. Alexander Iden, that's my name,
A poore Esquire of Kent, that loyes his King.
Buc. So please you my Lord, 'twere not amisse
He were created Knight for his good seruice.

King. Iden, kneele downe, rise yp a Knight:
We giue thee for reward a thousand Markes,
And will, that thou henceforth attend on vs.

Iden. May Iden liue to merite such a bountie,
And neuer liue but true vnto his Liege.

Enter Queene and Somerset.

K. See Buckingham, Somerset comes with th' Queene,
Go bid her hide him quickly from the Duke.

Qu. For thousand Yorkes he shall not hide his head,
But boldly stand, and front him to his face.

Yor. How now? is Somerset at libertie?
Then Yorke vnlooseth long imprisoned thoughts,
And let thy tongue be equal with thy heart,
Shall I endure the sight of Somerset?
False King, why hast thou broken faith with me,
Knowing how hardly I can brooke abuse?
King did I call thee? No: thou art not King:
Not fit to gouerne and rule multitudes,
Which dar'st not, no nor canst thou rule a Traitor.

That Head of thine doth not become a Crowne:
Thy Hand is made to graspe a Palmers staffe,
And not to grace an awefull Princely Scepter
That Gold, must round engirt these browes of mine,
Whose Smile and Frowne, like to Achilles Speare
Is able with the change, to kill and cure.

Heere is a hand to hold a Scepter vp,
And with the same to acte controlling Lawes:
Giue place: by heauen thou shalt rule no more
O're him, whom heauen created for thy Ruler.

Som. O monstrous Traitor! I arrest thee Yorke
Of Capitall Treason 'gainst the King and Crowne:
Obey audacious Traitor, kneele for Grace.

Yorke. Wold'st thou haue me kneele? First let me ask of thee,
If they can brooke I bow a knee to man:
Sirrah, call in my sonne to be my bale.
I know ere they will haue me go to Ward,
They'll pawne their swords of my infanchisement.

Qu. Call hither Clifford, bid him come amaine,
To lay, if that the Bastard boyes of Yorke
Shall be the Surety for their Traitor Father.

Yorke. O blood-bespotted Neopolitan,
Out-cast of Naples, Englands bloody Scourge,
The sonnes of Yorke, thy betters in their birth,
Shall be their Fathers baile, and bane to those
That for my Surety will refuse the Boyes.

Enter Edward and Richard.

See where they come, Ile warrant they'll make it good.

Enter Clifford.

Qu. And here comes Clifford to deny their baile.

Clif. Health, and all happinesse to my Lord the King.

Yor. I thanke thee Clifford. Say, what newes with thee?
Nay, do not fright vs with an angry looke.
We are thy Soueraigne Clifford, kneele againe,
For thy mistaking so, We pardon thee.

Clif. This is my King Yorke, I do not mistake,
But thou mistakes me much to thinke I do,
To Bedlem with him, is the man growne mad.

King. I Clifford, a Bedlem and ambitious humor
Makes him oppose himselfe against his King.

Clif. He is a Traitor, let him to the Tower,
And chop away that factious pate of his

Qu. He is arrested, but will not obey.

His sonnes (he sayes) shall giue their words for him.

Yor. Will you not Sonnes?

Edw. I Noble Father, if our words will serue.

Rich. And if words will not, then our Weapons shal.

Clif. Why what a brood of Traitors haue we heere?

Yorke. Looke in a Glasse, and call thy Image so.
I am thy King, and thou a false-heart Traitor.

Call hither to the stake my two braue Beares,
That with the very shaking of their Chaines,
They may astonish these fell-lurking Curres,
Bid Salsbury and Warwicke come to me.

Enter the Earles of Warwicke, and Salsbury.

Clif. Are these thy Beares? Wee'l bate thy Beares to death,
And manacle the Berard in their Chaines,
If thou dar'st bring them to the bayting place.

Rich. Oft haue I seene a hot ore-weening Curte,
Run backe and bite, because he was with-held,
Who being suffer'd with the Beares fell paw,
Hath clapt his taile, betweene his legges and cride,
And such a peece of seruice will you do,

if

If you oppose your selues to match Lord Warwicke.

Clif. Hence heape of wrath, foule indigested lumpes,
As crooked in thy mannere, as thy shape.

Tor. Nay we shall heate you thorowly anon.

Clif. Take heede leaft by your heate you burne your selues.

King. Why Warwicke, hath thy knee forgot to bow?
Old Salisbury, shame to thy siluer haire,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sicke sonne,
What wilt thou on thy death-bed play the Ruffian?
And seeke for sorrow with thy Spectacles?
Oh where is Faith? Oh, where is Loyalty?
If it be banisht from the frostie head,
Where shall it finde a harbour in the earth?
Wilt thou go digge a graue to finde out Warre,
And shame thine honourable Age with blood?
Why art thou old, and want'st experience?
Or wherefore dost abuse it, if thou hast it?
For shame in dutie bend thy knee to me,
That bowes vnto the graue with mickle age.

Sal. My Lord, I haue considered with my selfe
The Title of this most renowned Duke,
And in my conscience, do repute his grace
The rightfull heyre to England's Royall seate.

King. Hast thou not sworne Allegiance vnto me?

Sal. I haue.

Kr. Canst thou dispense with heauen for such an oath?

Sal. It is great sinne, to sweare vnto a sinne
But greater sinne to keepe a sinfull oath
Who can be bound by any solemne Vow
To do a murd'rous deede, to rob a man,
To force a spotlesse Virgins Chastitie,
To reauce the Orphan of his Patrimoine,
To wring the Widdow from her custom'd right,
And haue no other reason for this wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemne Oath?

Qu. A subtle Traitor needs no Sophister.

King. Call Buckingham, and bid him arme himselfe.

Yorke. Call Buckingham, and all the friends thou hast,
I am resolu'd for death and dignitie.

Old Clif. The first I warrant thee, it dreames proue true.

War. You were best to go to bed, and dreame againe,
To keepe thee from the Tempest of the field.

Old Clif. I am resolu'd to beare a greater storme,
Then any thou canst coniure vp to day
And that Ile write vpon thy Burgonet,
Might I but know thee by thy housel Badge.

War. Now by my Fathers badge, old Newils Crest,
The rampant Beare chain'd to the ragged Staffe,
This day Ile weare aloft my Burgonet,
As on a Mountaine top, the Cedar shewes,
That keepes his leaues inspight of any storme,
Euen so affright thee with the view thereof.

Old Clif. And from thy Burgonet Ile rend thy Beare,
And tread it vnder foot with all contempt,
Despight the Bearard, that protects the Beare.

To Clif. And so to Armes victorious Father,
To quell the Rebels, and their Complices.

Rich. Fie, Chastie for shame, speake not in spight,
For you shall sup with Iesu. Christ to night.

To Clif. Foule flygmaucke that's more then thou canst tell.

Ric. If not in heauen, you'll surely sup in hell. Exeunt

Enter Warwicke.

War. Clifford of Cumberland, 'tis Warwicke calles.
And if thou dost not hide thee from the Beare,

Now when the angric Trumpet sounds alarm,
And dead mens cries do fill the emptie ayre,
Clifford I say, come forth and fight with me,
Proud Northerne Lord, Clifford of Cumberland,
Warwicke is hoarse with calling thee to armes.

Enter Yorke.

War. How now my Noble Lord? What all a-foot.

Tor. The deadly handed Clifford slew my Steed:
But match to match I haue encountred him,
And made a prey for Carrion Kytes and Crowes
Euen of the bonnie beast heloued so well.

Enter Clifford.

War. Of one or both of vs the time is come.

Tor. Hold Warwicke: seek thee out some other chace
For I my selfe must hunt this Deere to death.

War. Then nobly Yorke, 'tis for a Crown thou fightst.
As I intend Clifford to thrue to day,
It grieues my soule to leaue thee vnassail'd. Exit War.

Clif. What seest thou in me Yorke?

Why dost thou pause?

Yorke. With thy braue bearing should I be in loue,
But that thou art so fast mine enemy.

Clif. Nor should thy prowesse want praise & esteeme,
But that 'tis shewne ignobly, and in Treason.

Yorke. So let it helpe me now against thy sword,

As I in iustice, and true right expresse it.

Clif. My soule and bodie on the action both.

Tor. A dreadfull lay, addresse thee instantly.

Clif. La fin Corrone les eumenes

Tor. Thus Warre hath giuen thee peace, for yart still,
Peace with his soule, heauen if it be thy will.

Enter young Clifford.

Clif. Shame and Confusion all is on the rout,
Feate frames disorder, and disorder wounds
Where it should guard. O Warre, thou sonne of hell,
Whom angry heauens do make their minister,
Throw in the frozen bosomes of our part,
Hot Coales of Vengeance. Let no Souldier flye.
He that is truly dedicate to Warre,
Hath no selfe-loue; nor he that loues himselfe,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance
The name of Valour. O let the vile world end,
And the premised Flames of the Last day,
Knit earth and heauen together.

Now let the generall Trumpet blow his blast,
Particularities, and pettie sounds
To cease. Was't thou ordain'd (deere Father)

To loose thy youth in peace, and to atcheue
The Siluer Liurey of aduised Age,
And in thy Reuerence, and thy Chaire-dayes, thus
To die in Ruffian battell? Euen at this sight,
My heart is turn'd to stone. and while 'tis mine,
It shall be stony. Yorke, not our old men spares:
No more will I their Babes, Teares Virginall,
Shall be to me, euen as the Dew to Fire,
And Beautie, that the Tyrant oft reclaimes,
Shall to my flaming wrath, be Oyle and Flax:
Henceforth, I will not haue to do with pitty.

Meet I an infant of the house of Yorke,
Into as many gobbies will I cut it
As wilde Medea yong Abfirtu did.
In cruelty, will I seek out my Fame,
Come thou new ruine of olde Cliffords house:
As did Aneas old Anchises beare,
So beare I thee vpon my manly shoulders:
But then, Aneas bare a liuing load;

Nothing so heauy as these woes of mine.

Enter Richard, and Somerset to fight.

Rich. So lye thou there :
For vnderneath an Ale-house paltry signe,
The Castle in S. Albons, Somerset
Hath made the Wizard famous in his death -
Sword, hold thy temper; Heart, be wrathfull still :
Priests pray for enemies, but Princes kill.

Fight. Excursions

Enter King, Quere, and others.

Qu. Away my Lord, you are slow, for shame away.

King. Can we outrun the Heauens? Good Margaret stay.

Qu. What are you made of? You'l nor fight nor fly:
Now is it manhood, wisdom, and defence,
To giue the enemy way, and to secure vs
By what we can, which can no more but flye.

Alarum a farre off.

If you be tane, we then should see the bottome
Of all our Fortunes: but if we haply scape,
(As well we may, if not through your neglect)
We shall to London get, where you are lou'd,
And where this breach now in our Fortunes made
May readily be stopp'd.

Enter Clifford.

Clif. But that my heart on future mischeefe set,
I would speake blasphemy ere bid you flye:
But flye you must: Vncurable discomfite
Reignes in the hearts of all our present parts.
Away for your releefe, and we will liue
To see their day, and them our Fortune giue.
Away my Lord, away.

Exeunt

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Yorke, Richard, Warwick, and Soldiers, with Drum & Colours.

Yorke. Of Salisbury, who can report of him,
That Winter Lyon, who in rage forgets
Aged contusions, and all bruse of Time -
And like a Gallant, in the brow of youth,
Repaires him with Occasion. This happy day
Is not it selfe, nor haue we wonne one foot,
If Salisbury be lost.

Rich. My Noble Father:

Three times to day I holpe him to his horse,
Three times bestrid him. Thrice I led him off,
Perswaded him from any further act:
But still where danger was, still there I met him,
And like rich hangings in a homely house,
So was his Will, in his old feeble body,
But Noble as he is, looke where he comes.

Enter Salisbury.

Sil. Now by my Sword, well hast thou fought to day:
By th' Masse so did we all. I thanke you Richard
God knowes how long it is I haue to liue.
And it hath pleas'd him that three times to day
You haue defended me from imminent death.
Well Lords, we haue not got that which we haue,
'Tis not enough our foes are this time fled,
Being opposites of such repaying Nature.

Yorke. I know our safety is to follow them,
For (as I heare) the King is fled to London,
To call a present Court of Parliament.

Let vs pursue him ere the Wints go forth,
What sayes Lord Warwick, shall we after them?

War. After them may before them if we can.
Now by my hand (Lords) 'twas a glorious day,
Saint Albons battell wonne by famous Yorke,
Shall be eterniz'd in all Age to come.

Sound Drumme and Trumpets, and to London all,
And more such dayes as these, to vs befall.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

The third Part of Henry the Sixt, with the death of the Duke of YORKE.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Alarum.

Enter Plantagenet, Edward, Richard, Norfolk, Mount-ague, Warwick, and Souldiers.

Warwicke.

Wonder how the King escap'd our hands?
Pl. While we pursu'd the Horsemen of y North,
He slyly stole away, and left his men
Whereat the great Lord of Northumberland,
Whose Warlike eares could neuer brooke retreat,
Chear'd vp the drouping Army, and himselfe,
Lord Clifford and Lord Stafford all a-breast
Charg'd our maine Battailles Front and breaking in,
Were by the Swords of common Souldiers slaine.

Edw. Lord Staffords Father, Duke of Buckingham,
Is either slaine or wounded dangerous.
I cleft his Beaver with a down-right blow -
That this is true (Father) behold his blood.

Mount. And Brother, here's the Earle of Wiltshires Whom I encountred as the Battels ioyn'd. (blood,
Rich. Speake thou for me, and tell them what I did.

Plant. Richard hath best defend'd of all my sonnes.
But is your Grace dead, my Lord of Somerset?

Nor. Such hope haue all the line of Iohn of Grunt.
Rich. Thus do I hope to shake King Henries head.

Warw. And so doe I, victorious Prince of Yorke.
Before I see thee seated in that Throne,
Which now the House of Lancaster vsurpes,
I vow by Heauen, these eyes shall neuer close.
This is the Pallace of the fearefull King,
And this the Regall Seat. possesse it Yorke,
For this is thine, and not King Henries Heires.

Plant. Assist me then, sweet Warwick, and I will,
For hitler we haue broken in by force.

Nor. Wee'll all assist you he that flies, shall dye.

Plant. Thankes gentle Norfolk, stay by me my Lords,
And Souldiers stay and lodge by me this Night

They goe vp

Warw. And when the King comes, offer him no violence,
Vnlesse he seeke to thrust you out perforce.

Plant. The Queene this day here holds her Parliament,
But little thinks we shall be of her counsaile,
By words or blowes here let vs winne our right.

Rich. Arm'd as we are, let's stay within this House.

Warw. The bloody Parliament shall this be call'd,
Vnlesse Plantagenet, Duke of Yorke, be King,

And bashfull Henry depos'd, whose Cowardize
Hath made vs by-words to our enemies

Plant. Then leaue me not, my Lords be resolute,
I meane to take possession of my Right.

Warw. Neither the King, nor he that loues him best,
The proudest hee that holds vp Lancaster,
Dares stirre a Wing, if Warwick shake his Bells.
He plant Plantagenet, root him vp who dares.
Resolute thee Richard, clayme the English Crowne.

Flourish. Enter King Henry, Clifford, Northumberland, Westmerland, Exeter, and the rest.

Henry. My Lords, looke where the sturdie Rebell sits,
Euen in the Chayre of State. belike he meanes,
Backt hy the power of Warwick, that false Peere,
To aspire vnto the Crowne, and reigne as King.
Earle of Northumberland, he slew my Father,
And thine, Lord Clifford, & you both haue vow'd reuenge
On him, his sonnes, his fauorites, and his friends.

Northumb. If I be not, Heauens be reueng'd on me.

Clifford. The hope thereof, makes Clifford mourne in Steele.

Westm. What shall we suffer this? lets pluck him down,
My heart for anger burnes, I cannot brooke it.

Henry. Be patient, gentle Earle of Westmerland.

Clifford. Patience is for Poultroones, such as he:
He durst not sit there, had your Father liu'd.

My gracious Lord, here in the Parliament
Let vs assayle the Family of Yorke

North. Well hast thou spoken, Cousin be it so.

Henry. Ah, know you not the Citie fauours them,
And they haue troupes of Souldiers at their beck?

Westm. But when the Duke is slaine, they'll quickly flye.

Henry. Farre be the thought of this from Henries heart,
To make a Shambles of the Parliament House.
Cousin of Exeter, frownes, words, and threats,
Shall be the Warre that Henry meanes to vse.
Thou factious Duke of Yorke descend my Throne,
And kneele for grace and mercie at my feet,
I am thy Soueraigne.

Yorke. I am thine.

Exet. For shame come downe, he made thee Duke of Yorke.

Yorke. It was my Inheritance, as the Earldome was.

Exet. Thy

Exet. Thy Father was a Traytor to the Crowne
Warw. Exeter thou art a Traytor to the Crowne,
 In following this vsurping Henry.

Clifford. Whom should hee follow, but his naturall King?

Warw. True Clifford, that's Richard Duke of Yorke.

Henry And shall I stand, and thou sit in my Throne?

Yorke. It must and shall be so, content thy selfe.

Warw. Be Duke of Lancaster, let him be King.

Westm. He is both King, and Duke of Lancaster,
 And that the Lord of Westmerland shall maintaine.

Warw. And Warwick shall disproue it. You forget,
 That we are those which chas'd you from the field,
 And slew your Fathers, and with Colours spread
 Marcht through the Citie to the Pallace Gates.

Northumb. Yes Warwicke, I remember it to my griefe,
 And by his Soule, thou and thy House shall rue it.

Westm. Plantagenet, of thee and these thy Sonnes,
 Thy Kinsmen, and thy Friends, Ile haue more liues
 Then drops of blood were in my Fathers Veines

Cliff. Vrg it no more, lest that in stead of words,
 I send thee, Warwicke, such a Messenger,
 As shall reuenge his death, before I stirre.

Warw. Poore Clifford, how I scorne his worthless Threats.

Plant. Will you we shew our Title to the Crowne?
 If not, our Swords shall pleade it in the field

Henry. What Title hast thou Traytor to the Crowne?

My Father was as thou art, Duke of Yorke,
 Thy Grandfather Roger Mortimer, Earle of March.
 I am the Sonne of Henry the Fift,

Who made the Dolphin and the French to stoupe,
 And seiz'd vpon their Townes and Prouinces.

Warw. Talke not of France, sith thou hast lost it all.

Henry. The Lord Protector lost it, and not I
 When I was crown'd, I was but nine moneths old.

Rich. You are old enough now,
 And yet me thinkes you loose
 Father reare the Crowne from the vsurpers Head.

Edward. Sweet Father doe so, let it on your Head.

Mount. Good Brother,
 As thou lou'st and honorest Armes,
 Let's fight it out, and not stand caulling thus.

Richard. Sound Drummes and Trumpets, and the King will flye.

Plant. Sonnes peace.

Henry. Peace thou, and giue King Henry leaue to speake.

Warw. Plantagenet shal speake first. Heare him Lords,
 And be you silent and attentue too,
 For he that interrupts him, shall not liue.

Hen. Think'st thou, that I will leaue my Kingly Throne,
 Wherein my Grandfire and my Father sat?

No first shall Warre vnpeople this my Realme;
 I, and their Colours often borne in France,
 And now in England, to our hearts great sorrow,
 Shall be my Winding-sheet Why faint you Lords?
 My Title's good, and better farre then his.

Warw. Proue it Henry, and thou shalt be King.

Hen. Henry the Fourth by Conquest got the Crowne.

Plant. 'Twas by Rebellion against his King

Henry. I know not what to say, my Titles weak:
 Tell me, may not a King adopt an Heire?

Plant. What then?

Henry. And if he may, then am I lawfull King:
 For Richard, in the view of many Lords,

Resign'd the Crowne to Henry the Fourth,
 Whose Heire my Father was, and I am his.

Plant. He rose against him, being his Soueraigne,
 And made him to resigne his Crowne perforce.

Warw. Suppose, my Lords, he did it vnconstrayn'd,
 Thinke you 'twere preiudiciall to his Crowne?

Exet. No: for he could not so resigne his Crowne,
 But that the next Heire should succeed and reigne.

Henry. Art thou against vs, Duke of Exeter?

Exet. His is the right, and therefore pardon me

Plant. Why whisper you, my Lords, and answer not?

Exet. My Conscience tells me he is lawfull King.

Henry. All will reuolt from me, and turne to him,
Northumb. Plantagenet, for all the Clayme thou lay'st,
 Thinke not, that Henry shall be so depos'd.

Warw. Depos'd he shall be, in despight of all.

Northumb. Thou art deceiu'd.

'Tis not thy Southerne power
 Of Essex, Norfolke, Suffolke, nor of Kent,
 Which makes thee thus presumptuous and prowd,
 Can set the Duke vp in despight of me.

Clifford. King Henry, be thy Title right or wrong,
 Lord Clifford vowes to fight in thy defence.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,
 Where I shall kneele to him that slew my Father

Henry. Oh Clifford, how thy words reuiue my heart.

Plant. Henry of Lancaster, resigne thy Crowne.
 What mutter you, or what conspire you Lords?

Warw. Doe right vnto this Princely Duke of Yorke,
 Or I will fill the House with armed men,
 And ouer the Chayre of State, where now he sits,
 Write vp his Title with vsurping blood.

He stampes with his foot, and the Souldiers shew themselves.

Henry. My Lord of Warwick, heare but one word,
 Let me for this my life time reigne as King.

Plant. Confirme the Crowne to me and to mine Heires,
 And thou shalt reigne in quiet while thou liu'st.

Henry. I am content Richard Plantagenet
 Enioy the Kingdome after my decesse

Clifford. What wrong is this vnto the Prince, your Sonne?

Warw. What good is this to England, and himselfe?

Westm. Bafe, fearefull, and despayning Henry

Clifford. How hast thou iniur'd both thy selfe and vs?

Westm. I cannot stay to heare these Articles.

Northumb. Nor I.

Clifford. Come Cousin, let vs tell the Queene these Newes.

Westm. Farwell faint-hearted and degenerate King,
 In whose cold blood no sparke of Honor bides.

Northumb. Be thou a prey vnto the House of Yorke,
 And dye in Bands, for this vnmanly deed.

Cliff. In dreadfull Warre may'st thou be ouercome,
 Or liue in peace abandon'd and despis'd.

Warw. Turne this way Henry, and regard them not.

Exeter. They seeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeeld.

Henry. Ah Exeter.

Warw. Why should you sigh, my Lord?

Henry. Not for my selfe Lord Warwick, but my Sonne,
 Whom I vnaturally shall dis-inherite.

But be it as it may: I here entayle
 The Crowne to thee and to thine Heires for euer,
 Conditionally, that heere thou take an Oath,
 To cease this Ciuill Warre. and whil'st I liue,

To honor me as thy King, and Soueraigne:
And neyther by Treason nor Hostilitie,

To seeke to put me downe, and reigne thy selfe.

Plant. This Oath I willingly take, and will performe.

Warw. Long live King Henry · Plantagenet embrace him.

Henry. And long live thou, and these thy forward
Sonnets

Plant. Now Torke and Lancaster are reconcil'd.

Exet. Accurst be he that seekes to make them foes.

Senet. Here they come downe.

Plant. Farewell my gracious Lord, Ile to my Castle

Warw. And Ile keepe London with my Souldiers.

Norfolk. And I to Norfolk with my follower.

Mount. And I vnto the Sea, from whence I came.

Henry. And I with griefe and forrow to the Court.

Enter the Queene

Exeter. Heere comes the Queene,
Whose Lookes bewray ner anger:
Ile steale away.

Henry. Exeter so will I

Queene. Nay, goe not from me, I will follow thee.

Henry. Be patient gentle Queene, and I will stay.

Queene. Who can be patient in such extreames?

Ah wretched man, would I had dy'de a Maid?

And neuer scene thee, neuer borne thee Sonne,

Seeing thou hast prou'd so vnnaturall a Father,

Hath he deferr'd to loofe his Birth-right thus?

Hadst thou but lou'd him halfe so well as I,

Or felt that paine which I did for him once,

Or nourisht him, as I did with my blood,

Thou would'st haue left thy dearest heart-blood there,

Rather then haue made that sauge Duke thine Heire,

And dis-inherited thine onely Sonne

Prince. Father, you cannot dis-inherite me

If you be King, why should not I succede?

Henry. Pardon me Margaret, pardon me sweet Sonne,

The Earle of Warwick and the Duke enforc't me.

Quee. Enforc't thee? Art thou King, and wilt be forc't?

I shame to heare thee speake: ah timorous Wretch,

Thou hast vdone thy selfe, thy Sonne, and me,

And giu'n vnto the House of Torke such head,

As thou shalt reigne but by their sufferance.

To entayle him and his Heires vnto the Crowne,

What is it, but to make thy Sepulcher,

And creepe into it fast before thy time?

Warwick is Chancelor, and the Lord of Callice,

Sterne Falconbridge commands the Narrow Seas,

The Duke is made Protector of the Realme,

And yet shalt thou be safe? Such safetie findes

The trembling Lambe, inuironned with Wolues.

Had I beene there, which am a silly Woman,

The Souldiers should haue tof'd me on their Pikes,

Before I would haue granted to that Act.

But thou prefer'st thy Life, before thine Honor.

And seeing thou do'st, I here diuorce my selfe,

Both from thy Table Henry, and thy Bed,

Vntill that Act of Parliament be repeal'd,

Whereby my Sonne is dis-inherited.

The Northerne Lords, that haue forsworne thy Colours,

Will follow mine, if once they see them spread.

And spread they shall be, to thy soule disgrace,

And vnto ruine of the House of Torke.

Thus doe I leaue thee Come Sonne, let's away,

Our Army is ready; come, wee'll after them.

Henry. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare me speake.

Queene. Thou hast spoke too much already: get thee gone.

Henry. Gentle Sonne Edward, thou wilt stay me?

Queene. I, to be murder'd by his Enemies.

Prince. When I returne with victorie to the field,
Ile see your Grace. till then, Ile follow her.

Queene. Come Sonne away, we may not linger thus;

Henry. Poore Queene,

How loue to me, and to her Sonne,

Hath made her breake out into termes of Rage.

Reueng'd may she be on that hatefull Duke,

Whose haughtie spirit, winged with desire,

Will cost my Crowne, and like an emptie Eagle,

Tyre on the flesh of me, and of my Sonne.

The losse of those three Lords torments my heart

Ile write vnto them, and entreat them faire;

Come Cousin, you shall be the Messenger.

Exet. And I, I hope, shall reconcile them all. Exit.

Flourish. Enter Richard, Edward, and Mountague.

Richard. Brother, though I bee youngest, giue mee leaue.

Edward. No, I can better play the Orator.

Mount. But I haue reasons strong and forceable.

Enter the Duke of Torke.

Torke. Why how now Sonnes, and Brother, at a strife?
What is your Quarrell? how began it first?

Edward. No Quarrell, but a slight Contention.

Torke. About what?

Rich. About that which concerns your Grace and vs.
The Crowne of England, Father, which is yours.

Torke. Mine Boy? not till King Henry be dead.

Richard. Your Right depends not on his life, or death.

Edward. Now you are Heire, therefore enioy it now,

By giuing the House of Lancaster leaue to breathe,

It will out-runne you, Father, in the end.

Torke. I tooke an Oath, that hee should quietly reigne.

Edward. But for a Kingdome any Oath may be broken;
I would breake a thousand Oathes, to reigne one yeere.

Richard. No God forbid your Grace should be forsworne.

Torke. I shall be, if I claime by open Warre.

Richard. Ile proue the contrary, if you'll heare mee speake.

Torke. Thou canst not, Sonne: it is impossible.

Richard. An Oath is of no moment, being not tooke
Before a true and lawfull Magistrate,

That hath authoritie ouer him that swears

Henry had none, but did vsurpe the place.

Then seeing 'twas he that made you to depose,

Your Oath, my Lord, is vaine and frivoulous.

Therefore to Armes and Father doe but thinke,

How sweet a thing it is to weare a Crowne,

Within whose Circuit is Elizabeth,

And all that Poets fame of Blisse and Ioy.

Why doe we linger thus? I cannot rest,

Vntill the White Rose that I weare, be dy'de

Euen in the luke-warme blood of Henries heart.

Torke. Richard ynough: I will be King, or dye.

Brother, thou shalt to London presently,

And whet on Warwick to this Enterprife.

Thou

Thou Richard shalt to the Duke of Norfolk,
And tell him priuily of our intent.
You Edward shall vnto my Lord Cobham,
With whom the Kentishmen will willingly rise,
In them I trust: for they are Souldiors,
Wittie, courteous, liberall, full of spirit.
While you are thus employ'd, what resteth more?
But that I seeke occasion how to rise,
And yet the King not priuie to my Drift,
Nor any of the House of Lancaster.

Enter Gabriel.

But stay, what Newes? Why comm'st thou in such poste?

Gabriel. The Queene,
With all the Northerne Earles and Lords,
Intend here to besiege you in your Castle.
She is hard by, with twentie thousand men;
And therefore fortifie your Hold, my Lord.

Torke. I, with my Sword.
What? think'st thou, that we feare them?
Edward and Richard, you shall stay with me,
My Brother Montague shall poste to London.
Let Noble Warwick, Cobham, and the rest,
Whom we haue left Protectors of the King,
With powrefull Pollicie strengthen themselves,
And trust not simple Henry, nor his Oathes.

Mount. Brother, I goe Ile winne them, feare it not.
And thus most humbly I doe take my leaue

Exit Montague.

Enter Mortimer, and his Brother.

Torke. Sir John, and Sir Hugh Mortimer, mine Vnckles,
You are come to Sandall in a happie houre.
The Armie of the Queene meane to besiege vs.

John. Shee shall not neede, wee le meete her in the field

Torke. What, with fise thousand men?

Richard. I, with fise hundred, Father, for a neede.
A Woman's general! what should we feare?

A March afarre off.

Edward. I heare their Drummes.

Let's set our men in order,
And issue forth, and bid them Battail straight.

Torke. Fise men to twentie: though the oddes be great,
I doubt not, Vnckle, of our Victorie.

Many a Battaille haue I wonne in France,
When as the Enemie hath beene tenne to one:

Why should I not now haue the like successe?

Alarum. Exit.

Enter Rutland, and his Tutor.

Rutland. Ah, whither shall I flye, to scape their hands?
Ah Tutor, looke where bloody Clifford comes.

Enter Clifford.

Clifford. Chapeaine away, thy Priesthood saues thy life.
As for the Brat of this accursed Duke,
Whose Father slew my Father, he shall dye

Tutor. And I, my Lord, will beare him compny.

Clifford. Souldiers, away with him.

Tutor. An Clifford, murder not this innocent Child,
Least thou be hated both of God and Man. Exit

Clifford. How now? is he dead already?
Or is it feare, that makes him close his eyes?
He open them.

Rutland. So looks the pent-up Lyon o're the Wretch,
That trembles vnder his deuouring Pawes:
And so he walkes, insulung o're his Prey,
And so he comes, to rend his Limbes asunder.
Ah gentle Clifford, kill me with thy Sword,
And not with such a cruell threatening Looke.
Sweet Clifford heare me speake, before I dye.
I am too meane a subiect for thy Wrath,
Bethou reueng'd on men, and let me liue.

Clifford. In vaine thou speak'st, poore Boy:
My Fathers blood hath stopp'd the passage
Where thy words should enter.

Rutland. Then let my Fathers blood open it againe,
He is a man, and Clifford cope with him.

Clifford. Had I thy Brethren here, their liues and thine
Were not reuenge sufficient for me.

No, if I digg'd vp thy fore-fathers Graues,
And hung their rotten Coffins vp in Chaynes,
It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

The sight of any of the House of Torke,
Is as a fure to torment my Soule.

And till I root out their accursed Line,
And leaue not one aliue, I liue in Hell.

Therefore---

Rutland. Oh let me pray, before I take my death.
To thee I pray; sweet Clifford pity me

Clifford. Such pity as my Rapiers point affords.

Rutland. I neuer did thee harme. why wilt thou slay me?

Clifford. Thy Father hath.

Rutland. But 'twas ere I was borne.
Thou hast one Sonne, for tis sake pity me,
Least in reuenge thereof, fith God is iust,
He be as miserably slaine as I.

Ah, let me liue in Prison all my dayes,
And when I giue occasi on of offense,
Then let me dye, for now thou hast no cause.

Clifford. No cause? thy Father slew my Father therefore dye.

Rutland. Dysfaciant laudu sumus si ista sua.

Clifford. Plantagenet, I come Plantagenet:
And thus thy Son + blood cleauing to my Blade,
Shall rust vpon my Weapon, till thy blood
Congeal'd with this, doe make me wipe off both Exit

Alarum. Enter Richard, Duke of Torke

Torke. The Army of the Queene hath got the field.
My Vnckles both are slaine, in rescuing me.
And all my followers, to the eager foe
Turne back, and flye, like Ships before the Winde,
Or Lambes pursu'd by hunger-staru'd Wolves.
My Sonnes, God knowes what hath bechanced them.
But this I know, they haue demean'd themselves
Like men borne to Renowne, by Life or Death.
Three times did Richard make a Lane to me,
And thrice cry'de, Courage Father, fight it out:
And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With Purple Faulchion, painted to the Hilt;
In blood of those that had encountred him:
And when the hardyest Warriors did retyre,
Richard cry'de, Charge, and giue no foot of ground,
And cry'de, A Crowne, or else a glorious Tombe,

A Scepter, or an Earthly Sepulchre
With this we charg'd againe: but out alas,
We bodg'd againe, as I haue seene a Swan
With bootlesse labour swimme against the Tyde,
And spend her strength with ouer-matching Waues.

A short Alarm within.

Ah hearken, the farall followers doe pursue,
And I am faint, and cannot flye their furie.
And were I strong, I would not shunne their furie.
The Sands are numbred, that makes vp my Life,
Here must I stay, and here my Life must end.

Enter the Queene, Clifford, Northumberland, the young Prince, and Souldiers

Come bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchlesse furie to more rage.
I am your Suits, and I abide your Shot.

Northumb. Yeeld to our mercy, proud Plantagenet.

Clifford I, to such mercy, as his ruthlesse Arme
With downe-right payment, shew'd vnto my Father.
Now Pheton hath tumbled from his Carre,
And made an Euening at the Noone-ride Prick

Torke My ashes, as the Phcenix, may bring forth
A Bird, that will reuenge vpon you all:
And in that hope, I throw mine eyes to Heauen,
Scorning what ere you can afflict me with.
Why come you not? what, multitudes, and feare?

Cliff So Cowards fight, when they can flye no further,
So Doves doe peck the Faucons piercing Talions,
So desperate Theeues, all hopelesse of their Liues,
Breathe out Inuediues 'gainst the Officers

Torke Oh Clifford, but bethinke thee once againe,
And in thy thought ore-run my former time.
And if thou canst, for blushing, view this face,
And bite thy tongue, that slanders him with Cowardice,
Whose frowne hath made thee faint and flye ere this.

Clifford I will not handle with thee word for word,
But buckler with thee blowes twice two for one.

Queene Hold valiant Clifford, for a thousand causes
I would prolong a while the Traytors Life.

Wrath makes him deafe, speake thou Northumberland

Northumb Hold Clifford, doe not honor him so much,
To prick thy finger, though to wound his heare.
What valour were it, when a Curle doth grinne,
For one to thrust his Hand betweene his Teeth,
When he might spurne him with his Foot away?
It is Warres prize, to take all Vantages,
And tenne to one, is no impeach of Valour.

Clifford I, I, so strues the Woodcocke with the Gynne,

Northumb So doth the Connie struggle in the Net.

Torke So triumph Theeues vpon their conquer'd Booty,
So True men yeeld with Robbers, so o're-matchr.

Northumb What would your Grace haue done vnto him now?

Queene Braue Warriors, Clifford and Northumberland,
Come make him stand vpon this Mole-hill here,
That taught at Mountaines with our stretched Armes,
Yet parted but the shadow with his Hand.
What, was it you that would be Englands King?
Was't you that reuell'd in our Parliament,
And made a Preachment of your high Descent?
Where are your Messe of Sonnetes, to back you now?
The wanton Edward, and the lustie George?

And where's that valiant Crook-back Prodigie,
Dickie, your Boy, that with his grumbling voyce
Was wont to cheare his Dad in Mutinies?
Or with the rest, where is your Darling, Rutland?
Looke Torke, I stayn'd this Napkin with the blood
That valiant Clifford, with his Rapier's point,
Made issue from the Bosome of the Boy:

And if thine eyes can water for his death,
I giue thee this to drie thy Cheekes withall
Alas poore Torke, but that I hate thee deadly,
I should lament thy miserable fate
I prythee grieue, to make me merry, Torke
What, hath thy fierie heart so parcht thine entrayles,
That not a Feare can fall, for Rutland's death?

Why art thou patient, man? thou should'st be mad:
And I, to make thee mad, doe mock thee thus.
Stampe, raue, and fret, that I may sing and dance.
Thou would'st be fed'd, I see, to make me sport:
Torke cannot speake, vnlesse he weare a Crowne.

A Crowne for Torke, and Lords, how lowe to him
Hold you his hands, whilst I doe set it on.

I marry Sir, now lookes he like a King
I, this is he that tooke King Henries Chaire,
And this is he was his adopted Heire.

But how is it, that great Plantagenet
Is crown'd so soone, and broke his solemne Oath?
As I bethinke me you should not be King,
Till our King Henry had shooke hands with Death.

And will you pale your head in Penries Glory,
And rob his Temples of the Diademe,
Now in his Life, against your holy Oath?
Oh 'tis a fault too too vn pardonable.

Off with the Crowne, and with the Crowne, his Head,
And whilst we breathe, take time to doe him dead.

Clifford That is my Office, for my Fathers sake
Queene Nay stay, let's heare the Orizons hee makes

Torke. Shee-Wolfe of France,
But worse then Wolues of France,
Whose Tongue more poysons then the Adders Tooth.
How ill-befecming is it in thy Sex,
To triumph like an Amazonian Trull,
Vpon their Woos, whom Fortune captiuates?
But that thy Face is Vizard like, vnchang'n,
Made impudent with vse of euill deedes.
I would assay, prouwd Queene, to make thee blush.
To tell thee whence thou com'st, of whom deriu'd,
Were shame enough, to shame thee,
Wert thou not shamelesse.

Thy Father beares the type of King of Naples,
Of both the Sicils, and Ierusalem,
Yet not so wealthie as an English Yeoman,
Hath that poore Monarch taught thee to insult?
It needes not, nor it bootes thee not, prouwd Queene,
Vnlesse the Adape must be verif'd,
That Beggies mounted, runne their Horse to death.
'Tis Beautie that doth oft make Women prouwd,
But God he knowes, thy share thereof is small
'Tis Vertue, that doth make them most admir'd,
The contrary, doth make thee wondrous at.
'Tis Gouernment that makes them seeme Diuine,
The want thereof, makes thee abhominable
Thou art as opposite to euery good,
As the Antipodes are vnto vs,
Or as the South to the Septentrion
Oh Tygres Heart, wrapt in a Womans Hide,

How

How could'st thou drayne the Life-blood of the Child,
To bid the Father wipe his eyes withall,
And yet be seene to beare a Womans face?
Women are soft, milde, pittifull, and flexible;
Thou, steene, obdurate, flintie, rough, remorselesse.
Bidst thou me rage? why now thou hast thy will.
Would'st thou haue me weep? why now thou hast thy will.
For raging Wind blowes vp incessant showers,
And when the Rage allayes, the Raine begins.
These Teares are my sweet Rutlands Obsequies,
And euery drop cryes vengeance for his death,
'Gainst thee fell Clifford, and thee false French-woman.

Northumb. Beshrew me, but his passions moues me so,
That hardly can I check my eyes from Teares.

Yorke. That Face of his,
The hungry Caniballs would not haue toucht,
Would not haue stayn'd with blood:
But you are more inhumane, more inexorable,
Oh, tenne times more then Tygers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthlesse Queene, a haplesse Fathers Teares
This Cloth thoudip'd in blood of my sweet Boy,
And I with Teares doe wash the blood away.
Keepe thou the Napkin, and goe boast of this,
And if thou tell'st the heauie storie right,
Vpon my Soule, the hearers will shed Feares.
Yea, euen my Foes will shed fast-falling Teares,
And say, Alas, it was a pittious deed,
There, take the Crowne, and with the Crowne, my Curse,
And in thy need, such comfort come to thee,
As now I reape at thy too cruell hand.
Hard-hearted Clifford, take me from the World,
My Soule to Heauen, my Blood vpon your Heads.

Northumb. Had he been slaughter-man to all my Kinne,
I should not for my Life but weepe with him,
To see how inly Sorrow gripes his Soule.

Queene. What, weeping ripe, my Lord Northumberland?
Thinke but vpon the wrong he did vs all,
And that will quickly drie thy melting Teares.

Clifford. Heere's for my Oath, heere's for my Fathers Death.

Queene. And heeres to right our gentle-hearted
King.

Yorke. Open thy Gate of Mercy, gracious God,
My Soule flies through these wounds, to seeke out thee.

Queene. Off with his Head, and set it on Yorke Gates,
So Yorke may ouer-look the Towne of Yorke.

Flourish. Exit

A March. Enter Edward, Richard, and their power.

Edward. I wonder how our Princely Father scap't:
Or whether he be scap't away, or no,
From Cliffords and *Northumberland*s pursuit?
Had he been trane, we should haue heard the newes;
Had he beene slaine, we should haue heard the newes:
Or had he scap't, me thinks we should haue heard
The happy tidings of his good escape.
How fares my Brother? why is he so sad?

Richard. I cannot ioy, vntill I be resolu'd
Where our right valiant Father is become.
I saw him in the Battaille range about,
And watcht him how he singled Clifford forth.
Me thought he bore him in the thickest troupe,
As doth a Lyon in a Heard of Neat,
Or as a Beare compass'd round with Dogges:

Who hauing pincht a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloofe, and barke at him.
So far'd our Father with his Enemies,
So fled his Enemies my Warlike Father:
Me thinks 'tis prize enough to be his Sonne.
See how the Morning opes her golden Gates,
And takes her farwell of the glorious Sunne.
How well resembles it the prime of Youth,
Trim'd like a Yonker, praucing to his Loue?

Ed. Darle mine eyes, or doe I see three Sunnes?

Rich. Three glorious Sunnes, each one a perfect Sunne,
Not seperated with the racking Clouds,
But seuer'd in a pale cleare-shining Skye.
See, see, they ioyne, embrace, and seeme to kisse,
As if they vow'd some League inuolable,
Now are they but one Lampe, one Light, one Sunne:
In this, the Heauen figures some euent.

Edward. 'Tis wondrous strange,

The like yet neuer heard of.

I thinke it cites vs (Brother) to the field,
That wee, the Sonnes of braue Plantaginet,
Each one already blazing by our meedes,
Should notwithstanding ioyne our Lights together,
And ouer-shine the Earth, as this the World.
What ere it bodes, hence-forward will I beare
Vpon my Targuet three faire shining Sunnes.

Richard. Nay, beare three Daughters.
By your leave, I speake it,
You loue the Breeder better then the Male

Enter one blowing.

But what art thou, whose heauie Lookes fore-tell
Some dreadfull story hanging on thy Tongue?

Alf. Ah, one that was a wofull looker on,
When as the Noble Duke of Yorke was slaine,
Your Princely Father, and my louing Lord.

Edward. Oh speake no more, for I haue heard too much.

Richard. Say how he dy'de, for I will heare it all.

Alf. Enuironed he was with many foes,
And stood against them, as the hope of Troy
Against the Greekes, that would haue entred Troy,
But Hecules himselfe must yeeld to odds:
And many stroakes, though with a little Axe,
Hewes d'owne and fells the hardest-symber'd Oake.
By many hands your Father was subdu'd,
But onely slaught'red by the irefull Arme
Of vn-renting Clifford, and the Queene.
Who crown'd the gracious Duke in high despight,
Laugh'd in his face: and when with griefe he wept,
The ruthlesse Queene gaue him, to dry his Cheekes,
A Napkin, steeped in the armelesse blood
Of sweet young Rutland, by rough Clifford slaine:
And after many scornes, many soule raunts,
They tooke his Head, and on the Gates of Yorke
They set the same, and there it doth remaine,
The saddest spectacle that ere I view'd.

Edward. Sweet Duke of Yorke, our Prop to leane vpon,
Now thou art gone, wee haue no Staffe, no Stay.
Oh Clifford, boy'st'rous Clifford, thou hast slaine
The flower of Europe, for his Cheualrie,
And trecherously hast thou vanquish't him,
For hand to hand he would haue vanquish't thee.
Now my Soules Pallace is become a Prison:
Ah, would she breake from hence, that this my body Might

Might in the ground be closed vp in rest:
For neuer henceforth shall I loy againe:
Neuer, oh neuer shall I see more loy

Rich. I cannot weepe: for all my bodies moysture
Scarfe serues to quench my Furnace-burning hart:
Nor can my tongue vnload my hearts great burthen,
For selfe-same winde that I should speake wthall,
Is kindling coales that fires all my brest,
And burnes me vp with flames, that tears would quench,
To weepe, is to make lesse the depth of greefe
Tearcs then for Babes; Blowes, and Reuenge for mee.
Richard, I beare thy name, Ile venge thy death,
Or dye renowned by attempting it.

Ed. His name that valiant Duke hath left wth thee:
His Dukedome, and his Charre with me is left.

Rich. Nay, if thou be that Princely Eagles Bird,
Shew thy descent by gazing 'gainst the Sunne:
For Chaire and Dukedome, Throne and Kingdome say,
Either that is thine, or else thou wert not his.

March. Enter Warwicke, Marquesse Mountaigne, and their Army.

Warwicke. How now faire Lords? What faire? What newes abroad?

Rich. Great Lord of Warwicke, if we should recompt
Our balefull newes, and at each words deliuerance
Stab Poniards in our flesh, till all were told,
The words would adde more anguish then the wounds.
O valiant Lord, the Duke of Yorke is slaine.

Edw. O Warwicke, Warwicke, that Plantagenet
Which held thee deere, as his Soules Redempcion,
Is by the sterne Lord Clifford done to death

War. Ten dayes ago, I drown'd these newes in teares,
And now to adde more measure to your woes,
I come to tell you things sith then befallne.

After the bloody Fray at Wakefield fought,
Where your braue Father breath'd his latest gaspe,
Tydings, as swiftly as the Postes could runne,
Were brought me of your Losse, and his Depart.
I then in London, Keeper of the King,
Muster'd my Soldiers, gathered flocks of Friends,
March toward S. Albons, to intercept the Queene,
Bearing the King in my behalfe along:
For by my Scouts, I was aduertised
That she was coming with a full intent
To dash our late Decree in Parliament,
Touching King Henries Oath, and your Succession.
Short Tale to make, we at S. Albons met,
Our Battails ioyn'd, and both sides hercelly fought:
But v hether 'twas the coldesse of the King,
Who lool'd fell gently on this warlike Queene,
That robb'd my Soldiers of their heated Spleene.
Or whether 'twas report of her successe,
Or more then common feare of Cliffords Rigour,
Who thunders to his Captiues, Blood and Death,
I cannot iudge: but to conclude v ith truth,
Their Weapons like to Lightning, came and went:
Our Sou'diers like the Nigbt Owles lazle flight,
Or like a lazle Thresher wth a Flaile,
Fell gently downe, as if they stricke their Friends,
I cheer'd them vp with strict of our Cause,
With promise of high pay, and great Rewards:
But all in vaine; they had no heart to fight,
And we (in them) no hope to win the day,
So that we fled: the King into the Queene,
Lord George, your Brother, Norfolke, and my Selve,

In haste, post haste, are come to ioine with you.
For in the Marches heere we heard you were.
Making another Head, to fight againe.

Ed. Where is the Duke of Norfolke, gentle Warwicke?
And when came George from Burgundy to England?

War. Some five miles off the Duke is with the Soldiers,
And for your Brother he was lately sent
From your kinde Aunt Dutchesse of Burgundie,
With a yde of Sou'diers to this needfull Warre.

Rich. Twas oddes belike, when valiant Warwicke fled,
Oft haue I heard his praises in Pursuite,
But ne're till now, his Scandall of Retire.

War. Nor now my Scandall Richard, dost thou heare.
For thou shalt know this strong right hand of mine,
Can plucke the Diadem from faint Henries head,
And wring the awefull Scepter from his Fist,
Were he as fatious, and as bold in Warre,
As he is fam'd for Mildnesse, Peace, and Prayer.

Rich. I know it well Lord Warwicke, blame me not;

'Tis loue I beare thy glories make me speake:
But in this troublous time, what's to be done.
Shall we go throw away our Coates of Steele,
And wrap our bodies in blacke mourning Gownes;
Numb'ring our Aue-Maries with our Beads?
Or shall we on the Helmets of our Foes
Tell our Deuotion with reuengefull Armes?
If for the last, say I, and to it Lords,

War. Why therefore Warwicke came to seek you out,

And therefore comes my Brother Mountaigne -
Attend the Lords, the proud insulting Queene,
With Clifford, and the haught Northumberland,
And of their Feather, many moe proud Birde,
Haue wrought the easie-melting King, like War
He swore consent to your Succession,
His Oath enrolled in the Parliament.
And now to London all the crew are gone,
To frustrate both his Oath, and what beside
May make against the house of Lancaster.
Their power (I thinke) is thirty thousand strong:
Now, if the helpe of Norfolke, and my selfe,
With all the Friends that thou braue Earle of March,
Amongst the louing Welshmen canst procure,
Will but amount to five and twenty thousand,
Why Via, to London will we march,
And once againe, beside our foaming Steeds,
And once againe cry Charge vpon our Foes,
But neuer once againe turne backe and flye.

Rich. I, no me thinks I heare great Warwicke speak;
Ne're may he liue to see a Sun-shine day.

That cries Retire, if Warwicke bid him stay.
Ed. Lord Warwicke, on thy shoulder will I leane,
And when thou failest (as God forbid the house)
Must Edward fall, which perill heauen forefend,

War. No longer Earle of March, but Duke of Yorke:
The next degree, is England's Royall Throne:
For King of England shalt thou be proclaimed
In euery Burrough as we passe along,
And he that throwes not vp his cap for ioys,
Shall for the Fault make forfeit of his head
King Edward, valiant Richard Mountaigne:
Stay we no longer, dreaming of Renoune,
But sound the Trumpets, and about our Taske

Rich. Then Clifford, were thy heart as hard as Steele,
As thou hast shewne it finite by thy deeds,
I come to pierce it, or to giue thee mine.

Ed. Then strike vp Drums, God and S. George for vs!

P

War.

Enter a Messenger.

War. How now? what newes?

Mes. The Duke of Norfolk sends you word by me,
The Queene is comming with a puissant Host,
And craues your company, for speedy counsell.

War. Why then it sorts, braue Warriors, let's away.

Exeunt Omnes.

Flourish. Enter the King, the Queene, Clifford, Northumand Yong Prince, with Drumme and Trumpettes.

Qu. Welcome my Lord, to this braue town of Yorke,
Yonders the head of that Arch-enemy,

That sought to be incompart with your Crowne.

Doth not the obiect cheere your heart, my Lord.

K. I, as the rockes cheere them that feare their wrack,

To see this sight, it irkes my very soule:

With-hold reuenge (deere God) 'tis not my fault,

Nor wittingly haue I infring'd my Vow.

Clif. My gracious Liege, this too much lenity

And harmfull pittie must belay aside:

To whom do Lyons cast their gentle Lookes?

Not to the Beast, that would vsurpe their Den.

Whose hand is that the Forrest Beare doth like?

Not his that spoyles her yong before her face.

Who scapes the lurking Serpents mortall sting?

Not he that sets his foot vpon her backe.

The smallest Worme will turne, being troden on,

And Doues will pecke in safegard of their Brood.

Ambitious Yorke, did leuell at thy Crowne,

Thou smiling, while he knit his angry browes.

He but a Duke, would haue his Sonne a King,

And raise his issue like a louing Sire.

Thou being a King, blest with a goodly sonne,

Did'st yeeld consent to disinherit him:

Which argued thee a most vnloving Father.

Vnreasonable Creatures feed their yong,

And though mans face be fearefull to their eyes,

Yet in protection of their tender ones,

Who hath not seene them euen with those wings,

Which sometime they haue vs'd with fearfull flight,

Make warre with him that climb'd vnto their nest,

Offering their owne liues in their yongs defence?

For shame, my Liege, make them your President:

Were it not pittie that this goodly Boy

Should loose his Birth-right by his Fathers fault,

And long heereafter say vnto his childe,

What my great Grandfather, and Grandfire got,

My carelesse Father fondly gaue away.

Ah, what a shame were this? Looke on the Boy,

And let his manly face, which promisseth

Successfull Fortune Steele thy melting heart,

To hold thine owne, and leaue thine owne with him.

King. Full well hath Clifford plaid the Orator,

Infering arguments of mighty force:

But Clifford tell me, did'st thou neuer heare,

That things ill got, had euer bad success.

And happy alwayes was it for that Sonne,

Whose Father for his hoording went to hell:

Ile leaue my Sonne my Vertuous deeds behinde,

And would my Father had left me no more:

For all the rest is held at such a Rate,

As brings a thousand fold more care to keepe,

Then in possession any iot of pleasure.

Ah Cousin Yorke, would thy best Friends did know,

How it doth greene me that thy head is heere.

Qu. My Lord cheere vp your spirits, our foes are nye,
And this soft courage makes your Followers faint:

You promist Knighthood to our forward sonne,

Vnleath your sword, and dub him presently.

Edward, kneele downe.

King. Edward Plantagenet, arise a Knight,
And learne this Lesson; Draw thy Sword in right.

Prin. My gracious Father, by your Kingly leaue,

Ile draw it as Apparant to the Crowne,

And in that quarrell, vse it to the death.

Clif. Why that is spoken like a toward Prince.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Royall Commanders, be in readinesse,

For with a Band of thirty thousand men,

Comes Warwick backing of the Duke of Yorke,

And in the Townes as they do march along,

Proclaimes him King, and many flye to him,

Darraigne your battell, for they are at hand.

Clif. I would your Highnesse would depart the field,

The Queene hath best successe when you are absent.

Qu. I good my Lord, and leaue vs to our Fortune.

King. Why, that's my fortune too, therefore Ile stay.

North. Be it with resolution then to fight.

Prin. My Royall Father, cheere these Noble Lords,

And hearten those that fight in your defence:

Vnleath your Sword, good Father: Cry S. George.

March. Enter Edward, Warwick, Richard, Clarence, Norfolke, Mountague, and Soldiers.

Edw. Now petiur'd Henry, wilt thou kneel for grace?
And set thy Diadem vpon my head?

Or bide the mortall Fortune of the field.

Qu. Go rate thy Minions, proud insulting Boy,

Becomes it thee to be thus bold in termes,

Before thy Soueraigne, and thy lawfull King?

Ed. I am his King, and he should bow his knee:

I was adopted Heire by his consent.

Cl. Since when, his Oath is broke for as I heare,

You that are King, though he do weare the Crowne,

Haue caus'd him by new Act of Parliament,

To blot out me, and put his owne Sonne in.

Clif. And reason too,

Who should succede the Father, but the Sonne.

Rich. Are you there Butcher? O, I cannot speake.

Clif. I Crooke-back, here I stand to answer thee,

Or any he, the proudest of thy sort.

Rich. 'Twas you that kill'd yong Rutland, was it not?

Clif. I, and old Yorke, and yet not satisfied.

Rich. For Gods sake Lords giue signall to the fight.

War. What say'st thou Henry,

Wilt thou yeeld the Crowne? (you speak?)

Qu. Why how now long-tongu'd Warwick, dare

When you and I, met at S. Albons last,

Your legges did better seruice then your hands,

War. Then 'twas my turne to fly, and now 'tis thine.

Clif. You said so much before, and yet you fled.

War. 'Twas not your valor Clifford droue me thence.

Nor. No, nor your manhood that durst make you stay.

Rich. Northumberland, I hold thee reuerently,

Breake off the parley, for scarce I can reframe

The execution of my big-swolne heart

Vpon that Clifford, that cruell Child-killer.

Clif. I slew thy Father, call'st thou him a Child?

Rich.

Rich. I like a Dastard, and a treacherous Coward,
As thou didd'st kill our tender Brother Rutland,
But ere Sunfer, Ile make thee curse the deed.

King. Haue done with words (my Lords) and heare me speake.

Qu. Desie them then, or els hold close thy lips

King. I prythee giue no limits to my Tongue;
I am a King, and priuiledg'd to speake.

Chf. My Liege, the wound that bred this meeting here,
Cannot be cur'd by Words, therefore be still.

Rich. Then Executioner vnsheath thy sword:
By him that made vs all, I am resolu'd,

That Cliffords Manhood, lyes vpon his tongue.

Ed. Say Henry, shall I haue my right, or no:
A thousand men haue broke their Falts to day,
That ne're shall dine, vnlesse thou yeeld the Crowne.

War. If thou deny, thou hast thy Mothers tongue
For Yorke in iustice put's his Armour on

Pr. Ed. If that be right, which Warwick laies is right,
There is no wrong, but euery thing is right.

War. Who euer got thee, there thy Mother stands,
For well I vot, thou hast thy Mothers tongue

Qu. But thou art neyther like thy Sire nor Damme,
But like a foule mishapen Stygmaticke,
Mark'd by the Destinies to be avoided,
As venome Toades, or Lizards dreadfull stings.

Rich. Iron of Naples, hid with English gilt,
Whose Father beares the Title of a King,
(As if a Channell should be call'd the Sea)
Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy base-borne heart.

Ed. A wifes of straw were worth a thousand Crowns,
To make this shamelesse Callet know her selfe:

Helen of Greece was fayrer farre then thou,
Although thy Husband may be Menelaus;
And ne're was Agamemnon Brother wrong'd
By that false Woman, as this King by thee.
His Father reuel'd in the heart of France,
And tam'd the King, and made the Dolphin stoope:
And had he match'd according to his State,
He might haue kept that glory to this day.

But when he tooke a begger to his bed,
And grac'd thy poore Sire with his Bridall day,
Euen then that Sun-shine brew'd a shewre for him,
That washt his Fathers fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his Crowne at home.
For what hath broach'd this tumult but thy Pride?

Had'st thou bene meeke, our Title still had slept,
And we in pittie of the Gentle King,
Had slept our Claime, vntill another Age.

Cla. But when we saw, our Sunshine made thy Spring,
And that thy Summer bred vs no increase,
We fet the Axe to thy vsurping Roote:
And though the edge hath something hit our selues,
Yet know thou, since we haue begun to strike,
Wee'l neuer leaue, till we haue hewne thee downe,
Or bath'd thy growing, with our heated bloods:

Edw. And in this resolut. on, I desie thee,
Not willing any longer Conference,
Since thou denied'st the gentle King to speake.
Sound Trumpets, let our bloody Colours waue,
And either Victorie, or else a Graue

Qu. Stay Edward.

Ed. No wrangling Woman, wee'l no longer stay,
These words will cost ten thousand liues this day.

Exeunt omnes.

Alarm. Excurfions. Enter Warwick.

War. Fore-spent with Toile, as Runners with a Race,
I lay me downe a little while to breath:
For strokes receiu'd, and many blowes repaid,
Haue robb'd my strong knit sinewes of their strength,
And spight of spight, needs must I rest a-while.

Enter Edward running.

Ed. Smile gentle heauen, or strike vngentle death,
For this world frownes, and Edwards Sunne is clouded.

War. How now my Lord, what happe? what hope of good?

Enter Clarence

Cla. Our hap is losse, our hope but sad dispaire,
Our ranks are broke, and ruine followes vs,
What counsaile giue you? whether shall we flye?

Ed. Bootlesse is flight, they follow vs with Wings,
And weake we are, and cannot shun pursuite.

Enter Richard

Rich. Ah Warwicke, why hast thou withdrawn thy selfe?
Thy Brothers blood the thirsty earth hath drunk,
Broach'd with the Steely point of Cliffords Launce:
And in the very pangs of death, he cryde,
Like to a dismall Clangor heard from farre,
Warwicke, reuenge, Brother, reuenge my death.
So vnderneath the belly of their Steeds,
That stain'd their Fetlockes in his smoaking blood,
The Noble Gentleman gaue vp the ghost.

War. Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.
Ile kill my Horse, because I will not flye:
Why stand we like soft-hearted women heere,
Wayling our losses, whiles the Foe doth Rage,
And looke vpon, as if the Tragedie
Were plaid in iest, by counterfetting Actors.
Heere on my knee, I vow to God aboue,
Ile neuer pawse againe, neuer stand still,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or Fortune giuen me measure of Reuenge

Ed. Oh Warwicke, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chaine my soule to thine:
And ere my knee rise from the Earths cold face,
I throw my hands, mine eyes, my heart to thee,
Thou setter vp, and plucker downe of Kings:
Beseeching thee (if with thy will it stands)
That to my Foes this body must be prey,
Yet that thy brazen gates of heauen may ope,
And giue sweet passage to my sinfull soule.
Now Lords, take leaue vntill we meeete againe,
Where ere it be, in heauen, or in earth.

Rich. Brother,

Giue me thy hand, and gentle Warwicke,
Let me embrace thee in my weary armes:
I that did neuer weepe, now melt with woe,
That Winter should cut off our Spring-time so.

War. Away, away

Once more sweet Lords farwell.

Cla. Yet let vs altogether to our Troopes,
And giue them leaue to flye, that will not stay,
And call them Pillars that will stand to vs:
And if we thriue, promise them such rewards
As Victors weare at the Olympian Games.
This may plant courage in their quailing breasts,
For yet is hope of Life and Victory:

Foreflow no longer, make we hence amaine. Exeunt

Excursions Enter Richard and Clifford.

Rich. Now Clifford, I haue singled thee alone,
Suppose this arme is for the Duke of Yorke,
And this for Rutland, both bound to reuenge,
Wer't thou murther'd with a Brazen wall.

Clif. Now Richard, I am with thee heere alone,
This is the hand that stabb'd thy Father Yorke,
And this the hand, that slew thy Brother Rutland,
And here's the heart, that triumphs in their death,
And cheeres these hands, that slew thy Sire and Brother,
To execute the like vpon thy selfe,
And so haue at thee

They Fight, Warwicke comes, Clifford slues.

Rich. Nay Warwicke, single out some other Chace,
For I my selfe will hunt this Wolfe to death. Exeunt.

Alarum Enter King Henry alone.

Hen. This battell fares like to the mornings Warre,
When dying clouds contend, with growing light,
What time the Shepheard blowing of his nailes,
Can neither call it perfect day, nor night,
Now swayes it this way, like a Mighty Sea,
For'd by the Tide, to combat with the Wave:
Now swayes it that way, like the selfe-same Sea,
For'd to retire by furie of the Winde
Sometime, the Flood preuailes, and than the Winde:
Now, one the better then, another best,
Both tugging to be Victors, brest to brest.
Yet neither Conqueror, nor Conquered.
So is the equall poise of this fell Warre.
Heere on this Mole-hill will I sit me downe,
To whom God will, there be the Victorie:
For Margaret my Queene, and Clifford too
Haue chid me from the Battell Swearing both,
They prosper best of all when I am thence.
Would I were dead, if Gods good will were so;
For what is in this world, but Greefe and Woe.
Oh God! methinkes it were a happy life,
To be no better then a homely Swaine,
To sit vpon a hill, as I do now,
To carue out Dialls quiently, point by point,
Thereby to see the Minutes how they runne:
How many makes the Houre full compleate,
How many Houres brings about the Day,
How many Dayes will finish vp the Yeare,
How many Yeares, a Mortall man may liue.
When this is knowne, then to diuide the Times:
So many Houres, must I tend my Flocke;
So many Houres, must I take my Rest.
So many Houres, must I Contemplate.
So many Houres, must I Sport my selfe.
So many Dayes, my Ewes haue bene with yong:
So many weekes, ere the poore Fooles will Eane
So many yeares, ere I shall there the Fleece.
So Minutes, Houres, Dayes, Monthes, and Yeares,
Past ouer to the end they were created,
Would bring white haire, vnto a Quiet graue.
Ah! what a life were this? How sweet? how louely?
Giues not the Hawthorne bush a sweeter shade
To Shepherds looking on their silly Sheepe,
Then doth a rich Imbroider'd Canopie
To Kings, that feare their Subiects treacherie?
Oh yes, it doth, a thousand fold it doth.
And to conclude, the Shepherds homely Curds,

His cold thinne drinke out of his Leather Bottle,
His wonted sleepe, vnder a fresh trees shade,
All which secure, and sweetly he emoyes,
Is farre beyond a Princes Delicates:
His Vians sparkling in a Golden Cup,
His bodie couched in a curious bed,
When Care, Mistrust, and Treason waits on him.

Alarum. Enter a Sonne that hath kill'd his Father, at one doore: and a Father that hath kill'd his Sonne at another doore.

Son. Ill blowes the winde that profits no body
This man whom hand to hand I slew in fight,
May be possessed with some store of Crownes,
And I that (haply) take them from him now,
May yet (ere night) yeeld both my Life and them
To some man else, as this dead man doth me.
Who's this? Oh God! It is my Fathers face,
Whom in this Conflict, I (vnwares) haue kill'd.
Oh heauy times! begetting such Euent.
From London, by the King was I prest forth,
My Father being the Earle of Warwicks man,
Came on the part of Yorke, prest by his Master:
And I, who at his hands recei'd my life,
Haue by my hands, of Life bereau'd him.
Pardon me God, I knew not what I did.
And pardon Father, for I knew not thee.
My Teares shall wipe away these bloody markes
And no more words, til they haue flow'd their fill

King. O pitteous spectacle! O bloody Times!
Whiles Lyons Warre, and battaile for their Dennes,
Poore harmlesse Lambes abide their enemy
Weepe wretched man! He ayde thee Teare for Teare,
And let our hearts and eyes, like Ciuill Warre,
Be blinde with teares, and break ore-charg'd with griefe

Enter Father, bearing of his Sonne.

Fa. Thou that so stoutly hath resisted me,
Giue me thy Gold, if thou hast any Gold
For I haue bought it with an hundred blowes.
But let me see. Is this our Foe-mans face?
Ah, no, no, no, it is mine onely Sonne.
Ah Boy, if any life be left in thee,
Throw vp thine eye see, see, what showres arise,
Blowne with the windie Tempest of my heart,
Vpon thy wounds, that kille mine Eye, and Heart.
O pittey God, this miserable Age!
What Stragems? how fell? how Butcherly?
Erroneous, mutinous, and vnnatural,
This deadly quarrell daily doth beget?
O Boy! thy Father gaue thee life too soone,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

King. Wo about wee griefe, more the common griefe
O that my death would stay these ruthfull deeds:
O pittey, pittey, gentle heaven pittey.
The Red Roie and the White are on his face,
The fatall Colours of our struing Houses:
The one, his purple Blood right well resembles,
The other his pale Cheekes (me thinkes) presenteth:
Wither one Rose, and let the other flourish:
If you contend, a thousand liues must wither

Son. How will my Mother, for a Fathers death.
Take on with me, and ne're be satisfi'd?

Fa. How will my Wife, for slaughter of my Sonne,
Shed seas of Teares, and ne're be satisfi'd?

King. How will the Country, for these woful chances
Mis-thinke

Mis-thinke the King, and not be satisfied?

Son Was euer sonne, so reu'd a Fathers death?

Fath. Was euer Father so bemoan'd his Sonne?

Hen. Was euer King so greu'd for Subiects woe?

Much is your sorrow; Mine, ten times so much.

Son Ile beare thee hence, where I may weepe my fill.

Fath. These armes of mine shall be thy winding sheet

My heart (sweet Boy) shall be thy Sepulcher,

For from my heart, thine Image ne're shall go.

My fighting brest, shall be thy Funerall bell;

And so obsequious will thy Father be,

Men for the losse of thee, hauing no more,

As Priam was for all his Valiant Sonnes,

Ile beare thee hence, and let them fight that will,

For I haue murdered where I should not kill. Exit

Hen. Sad-hearted-men, much ouergone with Care;
Heere sits a King, more wofull then you are.

Alarums. Excursions Enter the Queen, the Prince, and Exeter.

Prin. Fly Father, flye for all your Friends are fled.

And Warwicke rages like a chafed Bull:

Away, for death doth hold vs in pursuite

Qu. Mount you my Lord, towards Barwicke post a-maine:

Edward and Richard like a brace of Grey-hounds,

Hauing the fearfull flying Hare in sight,

With fiery eyes, sparkling for very wrath,

And bloody Steele graspe in their yrefull hands

Are at our backes, and therefore hence amaine.

Exit. Away for vengeance comes along with them.

Nay, stay not to expostulate, make speed,

Or else come after, Ile away before.

Hen. Nay take me with thee, good sweet Exeter:

Not that I feare to stay, but loue to go

Whether the Queene intends, Forward, away. Exeunt

A lowd alarum. Enter Clifford Wounded.

Clif. Heere burnes my Candle out; I, heere it dies,

Which whiles it lasted, gaue King Henry light.

O Lancaster! I feare thy ouerthrow,

More then my Bodies parting with my Soule:

My Loue and Feare, glew'd many Friends to thee,

And now I fall Thy tough Commixtures melts,

Impairing Henry, strength'ning misproud Yorke;

And whether flye the Gnats, but to the Sunne?

And who shines now, but Henries Enemies?

O Phœbus! had'st thou neuer given consent,

That Phaeton should checke thy fiery Steeds,

Thy burning Carre neuer had scorch'd the earth.

And Henry, had'st thou sway'd as Kings should do,

Or as thy Father, and his Father did,

Giuing no ground vnto the house of Yorke,

They neuer then had sprung like Sommer Flies:

I, and ten thousand in this lucklesse Realme,

Hed left no mourning Widdowes for our death,

And thou this day, had'st kept thy Chaire in peace.

For what doth cherrish Weeds, but gentle ayre?

And what makes Robbers bold, but too much lenity?

Bootlesse are Plaints, and Curelesse are my Wounds:

No way to flye, nor strength to hold out flight.

The Foe is merclesse, and will not pittie

For at their hands I haue deseru'd no pittie.

The ayre hath got into my deadly Wounds,

And much effate of blood, doth make me faint:

Come Yorke, and Richard, Warwicke, and the rest;

I stab'd your Fathers bolsones; Split my brest.

Alarum & Retreat Enter Edward, Warwicke, Richard, and Soldiers, Montague & Clarence.

Ed. Now breath we Lords, good fortune bids vs pause,

And smooth the frownes of War, with peacefull lookes.

Some Troopes pursue the bloody-minded Queene,

That led cildme Henry, though he were a King,

As doth a Saile, fill'd with a fretting Gult

Command an Argosie to stemme the Waues.

But thinke you (Lords) that Clifford fled with them?

War. No, 'tis impossible he should escape:

(For though before his face I speake the words)

Your Brother Richard markt him for the Graue.

And wheresoere he is, hee's surely dead. Clifford groans

Rich. Whose soule is that which takes his heauy leaue?

A deadly groane, like life and deaths departing.

See who it is.

Ed. And now the Battailes endea,

If Friend or Foe, let him be gently vsed.

Rich. Reuoke that doome of mercy, for 'tis Clifford,

Who not contented that he lopp'd the Branch

In hewing Rutland, when his leaues put forth,

But set his murth'ring knife vnto the Roote,

From whence that tender spray did sweetly spring,

I meane our Princely Father, Duke of Yorke,

War. From off the gates of Yorke, fetch downe y head,

Your Fathers head, which Clifford plac'd there:

In stead whereof, let this supply the roome,

Measure for measure, must be answered.

Ed. Bring forth that fatall Schreechowie to our house,

That nothing sung but death, to vs and ours:

Now death shall stop his dimmall threatening sound,

And his ill-boading tongue, no more shall speake.

War. I thinke is vnderstanding is bereft:

Speake Clifford, dost thou know who speakes to thee?

Darke cloudy death ore-shades his beames of life,

And he nor sees, nor heares vs, what we say.

Rich. O would he did, and so (perhaps) he doth,

'Tis but his policy to counterfer,

Because he would auoid such bitter taunts

Which in the time of death he gaue our Father,

Cl. If so thou think'st,

Vex him with eager Words.

Rich. Clifford, aske mercy, and obtaine no grace.

Ed. Clifford, repent in bootlesse penitence.

War. Clifford, deuise excuses for thy faults.

Cl. While we deuise fell Tortures for thy faults.

Rich. Thou didd'st loue Yorke, and I am son to Yorke.

Ed. Thou pittied Rutland, I will pittie thee.

Cl. Where's Captaine Margaret, to fence you now?

War. They mocke thee Clifford,

Sweare as thou wa'st wont.

Ric. What, not an Oath? Nay then the world go's hard

When Clifford cannot spare his Friends an oath:

I know by that he's dead, and by my Soule,

If this right hand would buy two houres life,

That I (in all despight) might rayle at him,

This hand should chop it off & with the issuing Blood

Suffe the Villaine, whose vnstanch'd thirst

Yorke, and yong Rutland could not satisfie

War. I, but he's dead. Of with the Traitors head,

And reare it in the place your Fathers stands.

And now to London with Triumphant march,

There to be crowned Englands Royall King.
 From whence, shall Warwicke cut the Sea to France,
 And aske the Ladie Bona for thy Queene.
 So shalt thou sinow both these Lands together,
 And hauing France thy Friend, thou shalt not dread
 The feattered Foe, that hopes to rise againe
 For though they cannot greatly sting to hurt,
 Yet looke to haue them buz to offerd thine cares:
 First, will I see the Coronation,
 And then to Britanny Ile crosse the Sea,
 To effect this marriage, so it please my Lord.

Ed. Even as thou wilt sweet Warwicke, let it bee.
 For in thy shoulder do I builde my Seate;
 And neuer will I vnderake the thing
 Wherein thy counsaile and consent is wanting.

Richard, I will create thee Duke of Gloucester,
 And George of Clarence; Warwicke as our Selfe,
 Shall do, and vndo as him pleaseth best.

Rich. Let me be Duke of Clarence, George of Gloster,
 For Glosters Dukedom is too ominous.

War. Tut, that's a foolish obseruation.

Richard, be Duke of Gloster. Now to London,
 To see these Honors in possession.

Exeunt

Enter Sinklo, and Humphrey, with Crosse-bowes in their hands.

(our selues
Sink. Vnder this thicke growne brake, wee'l shrowd
 For through this Laund anon the Deere will come,
 And in this couert will we make our Stand,
 Culling the principall of all the Deere.

IHum. Ile stay aboute the hill, so both may shoot.

Sink. That cannot be, the noise of thy Crosse-bow
 Will scarre the Heard, and so my shoot is lost.
 Heere stand we both, and ayme we at the best:
 And for the time shall not seeme tedious,
 Ile tell thee what befell me on a day,
 In this selfe-place, where now we meane to stand.

Sink. Heere comes a man, let's stay till he be past.

Enter the King with a Prayer booke.

IHen. From Scotland am I stolne euen of pure loue,
 To greet mine owne Land with my wishfull sight:
 No Harry, Harry, 'tis no Land of thine,
 Thy place is hill'd, thy Scepter wrung from thee,
 Thy Balme washt off, wherewith thou was Anointed:
 No bending knee will call thee Cesar now,
 No humble suiters prease to speake for right:
 No, not a man comes for redresse of thee
 For how can I helpe them, and not my selfe?

Sink. I, heere's a Deere, whose skin's a Keepers Fee.
 This is the quondam King; Let's seize vpon him.

Hen. Let me embrace the fower Aduersaries,
 For Wise men say, it is the wisest course.

Hum. Why linger we? Let vs lay hands vpon him.

Sink. Forbear a while, wee'l heare a little more.

Hen. My Queene and Son are gone to France for aid.
 And (as I heare) the great Commanding Warwicke
 Is thither gone, to craue the French Kings Sister
 To wife for Edward. If this newes be true,
 Poore Queene, and Sonne, your labour is but lost:
 For Warwicke is a subtle Orator.

And Lewis a Prince soone wonne with mouing words:
 By this account then, Margaret may winne him,
 For she's a woman to be pittied much:
 Her sighes will make a batt'ry in his breast,
 Her teares will pierce into a Marble heart:

The Tyger will be milde, whiles she doth mourne;
 And Nero will be tainted with remorse,
 To heare and see her plaints, her Brinish Teares.
 I, but shee come to begge, Warwicke to giue:
 Shee on his left side, crauing ayde for Henrie;
 He on his right, asking a wife for Edward
 Shee Weepes, and sayes, her Henry is depos'd:
 He Smiles, and sayes, his Edward is insault'd,
 That she (poore Wretch) for greefe can speake no more
 Whiles Warwicke tels his Title, smoothes the Wrong,
 Inferreth arguments of mighty strength,
 And in conclusion winnes the King from her,
 With promise of his Sister, and what else,
 To strengthen and support King Edwards place.
 O Margaret, this 'twill be, and thou (poore soule)
 Art then forsaken, as thou went'st forlorne

Hum. Say, what art thou talk'ft of Kings & Queens?

King. More then I seeme, and lesse then I was born to.
 A man at least, for lesse I should not be:
 And men may talke of Kings, and why not I?

Hum. I, but thou talk'ft, as if thou wert a King.

King. Why so I am (in Minde) and that's enough.

Hum. But if thou be a King, where is thy Crowne?

King. My Crowne is in my heart, not on my head:
 Not deck'd with Diamonds, and Indian stones:
 Nor to be seene: my Crowne, is call'd Content,
 A Crowne it is, that sildome Kings enioy.

Hum. Well, if you be a King crown'd with Content,
 Your Crowne Content, and you, must be contented
 To go along with vs. For (as we thinke)
 You are the king King Edward hath depos'd.
 And we his subiects, sworne in all Allegiance,
 Will apprehend you, as his Enemie.

King. But did you neuer sweare, and breake an Oath.

Hum. No, neuer such an Oath, nor will not now.

King. Where did you dwell when I was K. of England?

Hum. Heere in this Country, where we now remaine.

King. I was annointed King at nine monthes old,
 My Father, and my Grandfather were Kings:
 And you were sworne true Subiects vnto me.
 And tell me then, haue you not broke your Oathes?

Sin. No, for we were Subiects, but while you wer king

King. Why? Am I dead? Do I not breath a Man?
 Ah simple men, you know not what you sweare:
 Looke, as I blow this Feather from my Face,
 And as the Ayre blowes it to me againe,
 Obeying with my winde when I do blow,
 And yeelding to another, when it blowes,
 Commanded alwayes by the greater gust:
 Such is the lightnesse of you, common men.
 But do not breake your Oathes, for of that sune,
 My milde intreatie shall not make you guiltie.
 Go where you will, the king shall be commanded,
 And be you kings, command, and Ile obey.

Sinklo. We are true Subiects to the king,
 King Edward.

King. So would you be againe to Henrie,
 If he were seated as king Edward is.

Sinklo. We charge you in Gods name & the Kings,
 To go with vs vnto the Officers.

King. In Gods name lead, your Kings name be obeyd,
 And what God will, that let your King performe.
 And what he will, I humbly yeeld vnto

Exeunt

Enter K. Edward, Gloster, Clarence, Lady Gray.
King. Brother of Gloster, at S Albons field

This

L. Cham. What is't for?

Lon. The reformation of our trauel'd Gallants,
That fill the Court with quarrels, talke, and Taylors.

L. Cham. I'm glad 'tis there;
Now I would pray our Moniears
To thinke an English Courtier may be wise,
And neuer see the Louure.

Lon. They must either
(For so run the Conditions) leaue those remnants
Of Foole and Feather, that they got in France,
With all their honourable points of ignorance
Pertaining thereunto, as Fights and Fire-workes,
Abusing better men then they can be
Out of a forreigne wise dome, renouncing cleane
The faith they haue in Tennis and tall Stockings,
Short blistred Breeches, and those types of Trauell;
And vnderstand againe like honest men,
Or pack to their old Playfellowes; there, I take it,
They may Cum Præuilegio, wee away
The lag end of their lewdnesse, and be laugh'd at.

L. San. 'Tis time to giue 'em Physicke, their diseases
Are growne so catching.

L. Cham. What a losse our Ladies
Will haue of these trim vanities?

Lonell. I marry,
There will be woe indeed Lords, the slye whorsons
Haue got a speeding trick to lay downe Ladies.
A French Song, and a Fiddle, ha's no Fellow.

L. San. The Diuell fiddle 'em,
I am glad they are going,
For sure there's no conuerting of 'em: now
An honest Country Lord as I am, beaten
A long time out of play, may bring his plaine song,
And haue an houre of hearing, and by'r Lady
Held currant Musicke too.

L. Cham. Well said Lord Sands,
Your Colts tooth is not cast yet?

L. San. No my Lord,
Nor shall not while I haue a stumpe.

L. Cham. Sir Thomas,
Whither were you a going?

Lon. To the Cardinals,
Your Lordship is a guest too.

L. Cham. O, 'tis true,
This night he makes a Supper, and a great one,
To many Lords and Ladies; there will be
The Beauty of this Kingdome Ile assure you.

Lon. That Churchman
Beares a bounteous minde indeed,
A hand as fruitfull as the Land that feeds vs,
His dewes fall euery where.

L. Cham. No doubt hee's Noble;
He had a blacke mouth that said other of him.

L. San. He may my Lord,
Ha's wherewi' hall in him;
Sparing would shew a worse sinne, then ill Doctrine,
Men of his way, should be most liberrall,
They are set heere for examples.

L. Cham. True, they are so;
But few now giue so great ones.

My Barge staves;
Your Lordship shall along. Come, good Sir Thomas,
We shall be late elle, which I would not be,
For I was spoke to, with Sir Henry Guilford
This night to be Comptrollers.

L. San. I am your Lordships.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Hoboes. A small Table vnder a State for the Cardmall, a longer Table for the Guests. Then Enter Anne Bullen, and diuers other Ladies, & Gentlemen, as Guests at one Doore; at an other Doore enter
Sir Henry Guilford.

S. Hen. Guilf. Ladies,
A generall welcome from his Grace
Salutes ye all; This Night he dedicates
To faire content, and you. None heere he hopes
In all this Noble Beuy, has brought with her
One care abroad: hee would haue all as inerry.
As first, good Company, good wine, good welcome,
Can make good people.

Enter L. Chamberlaire L. Sands and Lonell.
O my Lord, y'are taray;
The very thought of this faire Company,
Clapt wings to me.

Cham. You are young Sir Harry Guilford.

San. Sir Thomas Lonell, had the Cardinall
But halfe my Lay-thoughts in him, some of these Should finde a running Banket, ere they rested,
I thinke would better please 'em by my life,
They are a sweet society of faire ones.

Lon. O that your Lordship were but now Confessor,
To one or two of these.

San. I would I were,
They should finde easie pennance.

Lon. Faith how easie?

San. As easie as a downe bed would afford it

Cham. Sweet Ladies will it please you sit, Sir Harry Place you that side, Ile take the charge of this.
His Grace is entering Nay you must not freeze,
Two women plac'd together, makes cold weather.
My Lord Sands, you are one will keepe 'em waking:
Pray sit betweene these Ladies.

San. By my faith,
And thanke your Lordship by your leaue sweet Ladies,
If I chance to talke a little wilde, forgue me:
I had it from my Father.

An Bul. Was he mad Sir?

San. O very mad, exceeding mad, in loue too;
But he would bite none, iust as I doe now,
He would Kisse you Twenty with a breath.

Cham. Well said my Lord:
So now y'are fairly feared. Gentlemen,
The pennance lyes on you, if these faire Ladies
Passe away frowning.

San. For my little Cure,
Let me alone.

Hoboes. Enter Cardmall Wolsey, and takes his State.
Card. Y'are wel come my faire Guests; that noble Lady
Or Gentleman that is not freely merry
Is not my Friend. This to confirme my welcome,
And to you all good health.

San. Your Grace is Noble,
Let me haue such a Bowle may hold my thanks,
And faue me so much talking.

Card. My Lord Sands,

I am beholding to you: cheere your neighbours.

Ladies you are not merry; Gentlemen,
Whose fault is this?

San. The red wine first must rise
In their faire cheekes my Lord, then wee shall haue 'em,
Take vs to silence

An. B. You are a merry Gamster
My Lord Sands,

San. Yes, if I make my play.
Heer's to your Ladiship, and pledge it Madam:
For tis to such a thing.

An. B. You cannot shew me.

Drum and Trumpet, Chambers discharged

San. I told your Grace, they would talke anon.

Card. What's that?

Cham. Looke out there, some of ye.

Card. What warlike voyce,
And to what end is this? Nay, Ladies, feare not;
By all the lawes of Warre y'are priuilegd'd.

Enter a Seruant.

Cham. How now, what is't?

Sern. A noble troupe of Strangers,
For so they seeme, th haue left their Barge and landed,
And hither make, as great Embassadors
From forraigne Princes.

Card. Good Lord Chamberlaine,
Go, giue 'em welcome; you can speake the French tongue
And pray receiue 'em Nobly, and conduct 'em
Into our presence, where this heauen of beauty
Shall shine at full vpon them. Some attend him.

All rise, and Tables remou'd.

You haue now a broken Banket, but wee'l mend it.
A good digestion to you all; and once more
I shewre a welcome on yee welcome all.

Hoboyes. Enter King and others as Maikers, habited like Shepheards, usher'd by the Lord Chamberlaine. They passe directly before the Cardinall, and gracefully salute him

A noble Company: what are their pleasures?

Cham. Because they speake no English, thus they praide
To tell your Grace: That hauing heard by fame
Of this so Noble and so faire assembly,
This night to meet heere they could doe no lesse,
(Out of the great respect they beare to beauty)
But leaue their Flockes, and vnder your faire Conduct
Craue leaue to view these Ladies, and entreat
An houre of Reuels with 'em

Card. Say, Lord Chamberlaine,
They haue done my poore house grace:
For which I pay 'em a thousand thanks,
And pray 'em take their pleasures.

Chosse Ladies, King and An Bullen.

King. The fairest hand I euer touch'd: O Beauty,
Till now I neuer knew thee.

Musicke, Dance.

Card. My Lord

Cham. Your Grace.

Card. Pray tell 'em thus much from me:
There should be one amongst 'em by his person
More worthy this place then my selfe, to whom
(If I but knew him) with my loue and duty
I would surrender it. Whisper.

Cham. I will my Lord

Card. What say they?

Cham. Such a one, they all confesse
There is indeed, which they would haue yo'r Grace
Find out, and he will take it.

Card. Let me see then,
By all your good leaues Gentlemen; heere Ile make
My royall choyce.

Kim. Ye haue found him Cardinall,
You hold a faire Assembly; you doe well Lord:
You are a Churchman, or Ile tell you Cardinall,
I should iudge now vnhappy.

Card. I am glad
Your Grace is growne so pleasant.

Kim. My Lord Chamberlaine,
Pre'hee come hither, what faire Ladie's that?

Cham. An't please your Grace,
Sir Thomas Bullers Daughter, the Viscount Rochford,
One of her Highnesse women.

Kim. By Heauen she is a dainty one. Sweet heart,
I were vmannerly to take you out,
And not to like you. A health Gentlemen,
Let it goe round.

Card. Sir Thomas Lovell, is the Banket ready
I th' Priuy Chamber?

Lon. Yes, my Lord.

Card. Your Grace
I feare, with dancing is a little heated.

Kim. I feare too much

Card. There's fresher ayre my Lord,
In the next Chamber

Kim. Lead in your Ladies eu ry one. Sweet Partner,
I must not yet forsake you. Let's be merry,
Good my Lord Cardinall. I haue halfe a dozen healths,
To drinke to these faire Ladies, and a measure
To lead 'em once againe, and then let's dreame
Who's best in fauour. Let the Musicke knock it.

Exeunt with Trumpets.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen at severall Doores.

1. Whether away so fast?

2. O, God saue ye.

Eu'n to the Hall, to heare what shall become
Of the great Duke of Buckingham.

1. Ile saue you

That labour Sir. All's now done but the Ceremony
Of bringing backe the Prisoner.

2. Were you there?

1. Yes indeed was I.

2. Pray speake what has happen'd.

1. You may guesse quickly what.

2. Is he found guilty?

1. Yes truly is he,

And condemn'd vpon't.

2. I am sorry for't.

1. So are a number more.

2. But pray how past it?

1. Ile tell you in a little. The great Duke
Came to the Bar; where, to his accusations
He pleaded still not guilty, and alledgd
Many sharpe reasons to defeat the Law.
The Kings Attorney on the contrary,
Vrg'd on the Examinations, proofes, confession

Of diuers witnesses, which the Duke desir'd
To him brought una voce to his face;
At which appear'd against him, his Surueyor
Sir Gilbert Pecke his Chancellour, and John Carr,
Confessor to him, with that Diuell Monke,
Hopkins, that made this mischiefe.

2. That was hee

That fed him with his Prophecies.

1. The same,

All these accus'd him strongly, which he saine
Would haue slung from him, but indeed he couldnot;
And so his Peeres vpon this euidence,
Haue found him guilty of high Treason. Much
He spoke, and learnedly for life. But all
Was either pittied in him, or forgotten.

2. After all this, how did he beare himselfe?

1. When he was brought agen to th' Bar, to heare
His Knell rung out, his Iudgement, he was stir'd
With such an Agony, he sweat extreemly,
And something spoke in choller, ill, and hasty.
But he fell to himselfe againe, and sweetly,
In all the rest shew'd a most Noble patience.

2. I doe not thinke he feares death,

1. Sure he does not,

He neuer was so womanish, the cause
He may a little grieue at.

2. Certainly,

The Cardinall is the end of this.

1. Tis likely,

By all coniectures: First Kildares Attendure;
Then Deputy of Ireland, who remou'd
Earle Surrey, was sent thither, and in hast too,
Least he should helpe his Father.

2. That trick of State

Was a deepe enuious one,

1. At his returne,

No doubt he will requite it; this is noted
(And generally) who euer the King fauours,
The Cardinall instantly will finde imployment,
And farre enough from Court too.

2. All the Commons

Hate him perniciously, and o' my Conscience
With him ten faddom deepe. This Duke as much
They loue and doate on: call him bounteous Buckingham,
The Mirror of all courttesie.

Enter Buckingham from his Arraignement, Tiptimes before him, the Axe with the edge towards him, Halberds on each side, accompanied with Sir Thomas Louell, Sir Nicholas Vaux, Sir Walter Sands, and common people, &c.

1. Stay there Sir,

And see the noble ruin'd man you speake of.

2. Let's stand close and behold him.

Buck. All good people,

You that thus farre haue come to pittie me;
Heare what I say, and then goe home and lose me.
I haue this day receiu'd a Traitors Iudgement,
And by that name must dye; yet Heauen beare witnes,
And if I haue a Conscience, let it sincke me,
Euen as the Axe falls, if I be not faithfull.
The Law I beare no mallice for my death,
T has done vpon the preinises, but Iustice:
But those that sought it, I could wish more Christians.
(Be what they will) I heartily forgive'em;
Yet let'em looke they glory not in mischiefe:

Nor build their euils on the graues of great men;
For then, my guiltlesse blood must cry against'em.
For further life in this world I ne're hope,
Nor will I sue, although the King haue mercies
More then I dare make faults.

You saw that lou'd me,

And dare be bold to weepe for Buckingham,
His Noble Friends and Fellowes; whom to leaue
Is only bitter to him, only dying:
Goe with me like good Angels to my end,
And as the long diuorce of Steele falls on me,
Make of your Prayers one sweet Sacrifice,
And lift my Soule to Heauen.
Lead on a Gods name.

Louell. I doe beseech your Grace, for charity
If euer any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now to forgive me frankly.

Buck. Sir Thomas Louell, I as free forgive you
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all.
There cannot be those numberlesse offences
Gainst me, that I cannot take peace with.
No blacke Enuy shall make my Graue.
Commend mee to his Grace.

And if he speake of Buckingham; pray tell him,
You met him halfe in Heauen: my vov'es and prayers
Yet are the Kings; and till my Soule forsake,
Shall cry for blessings on him. May he liue
Longer then I haue time to tell his yeares;
Euer belou'd and louing, may his Rule be;
And when old Time shall lead him to his end,
Goodnesse and he, fill vp one Monument.

Lou. To th' water side I must conduct your Grace;
Then giue my Charge vp to Sir Nicholas Vaux,
Who vndertakes you to your end.

Vaux. Prepare there,

The Duke is coming. See the Barge be ready;
And fit it with such furniture as suites
The Greatnesse of his Person.

Buck. Nay, Sir Nicholas,

Let it alone, my State now will but mocke me.
When I came hither, I was Lord High Constable,
And Duke of Buckingham now, poore Edward Beaufort;
Yet I am richer then my base Accusers,
That neuer knew what Truth meant: I now seale it;
And with that blood will make'em one day groane for't.
My noble Father Henry of Buckingham,
Who first rais'd head against Vsurping Richard,
Flying for succour to his Seruant Beauster,
Being distress'd; was by that wretch betrayd,
And without Tryall, fell; Gods peace be with him.
Henry the Seauenth succeeding, truly pittying
My Fathers losse; like a most Royall Prince
Restor'd me to my Honours: and out of ruines
Made my Name once more Noble. Now his Sonne,
Henry the Eighth, Life, Honour, Name and all
That made me happy; at one stroke ha's taken
For euer from the World. I had my Tryall,
And must needs say a Noble one; which makes me
A little happier then my wretched Father:
Yet thus farre we are one in Fortunes; both Fell by our Seruants, by those Men woul'd most
A most vnnatural and faithlesse Seruice.
Heauen ha's an end in all: yet, you that heare me,
This from a dying man receiue as certaine.
Where you are liberrall of your loues and Counsell,
Be sure you be not losse; for those you make friends,
And

And giue your hearts to; when they once perceiue
The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, neuer found againe
But where they meane to sinke ye: all good people
Pray for me, I must now forsake ye, the last houre
Of my long weary life is come vpon me.
Farewell, and when you would say something that is sad,
Speake how I fall.

I haue done; and God forgive me.

Exeunt Duke and Traine.

1. O, this is full of pittie, Sir, it cald
I feare, too many curses on their heads
That were the Authors.

2. If the Duke be guiltlesse,
'Tis full of woe: yet I can giue you inking
Of an ensuing eual, if it fall,
Greater then this

1. Good Angels keepe it from vs;
What may it be? you doe not doubt my faith Sir?

2. This Secret is so weighty, 'twill require
A strong faith to conceale it.

1: Let me haue it:
I doe not talke much.

2. I am confident;
You shall Sir: Did you not of late dayes heare
A buzzing of a Separation
Between the King and Katherine?

1. Yes, but it held not,
For when the King once heard it, out of anger
He sent command to the Lord Mayor straight
To stop the rumor; and allay those tongues
That durst disperse it

2. But that slander Sir,
Is found a truth now: for it growes agen
Fissher then e're it was; and held for certaine
The King will venture at it: Either the Cardinall,
Or some about him neere, haue out of malice
To the good Queene, posselt him with a scruple
That will yndoe her: To confirme this too,
Cardinall Camperdown is arriv'd, and lately,
As all thinke for this busines.

1. 'Tis the Cardinall,
And meere to reuenge him on the Emperour,
For not bestowing on him at his asking,
The Archbishopsricke of Toledo, this is purpos'd.

2. I thinke
You haue hit the marke; but is't not cruell,
That she should feele the smart of this: the Cardinall
Will haue his will, and she must fall.

1. 'Tis wofull.
Wee are too open heere to argue this:
Let's thinke in priuate more.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine, reading this Letter.

MY Lord, the Horses your Lordship sent for, with all the care I had, I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished.
They were young and handsome, and of the best breed in the North: When they were ready to set out for London, a man of my Lord Cardinalls, by Commission, and waine power took em from us, with this reason: his master would be served.

*for a Subiect, if not before the King, which stop'd our members
Sir.*

I feare he will indeede; well, let him haue them; hee will haue all I thinke.

Enter to the Lord Chamberlaine, the Dukes of Norfolke and Suffolke.

Nor. Well met my Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Good day to both your Graces.

Suff. How is the King imployd?

Cham. I left him priuate,
Full of sad thoughts and troubles.

Nor. What's the cause?

Cham. It seemes the Marriage with his Brothers Wife
Ha's crept too neere his Conscience.

Suff. No, his Conscience

Ha's crept too neere another Ladie.

Nor. 'Tis so,

This is the Cardinals doing. The King-Cardinall,
That blinde Priest, like the eldest Sinne of Fortune,
Tushes what he list. The King will know him one day.

Suff. Pray God he doe,
Hee'l neuer know himselfe else.

Nor. How holily he workes in all his businesse,
And with what zeale? For now he has crackt the League
Between vs & the Emperour (the Queens great Nephew)
He diues into the Kings Soule, and there scatters
Dangers, doubts, wringing of the Conscience,
Feares, and despair, and all these for his Marriage.
And out of all these, to restore the King,
He counsels a Diuorce, a losse of her
That like a Jewell, ha's hung twenty yeares
About his necke, yet neuer lost her lustre;
Of her that loues him with that excellence,
That Angels loue good men with. Euen of her,
That when the greatest stroake of Fortune falls
Will blisse the King and is not this course pious?

Cham. Heauen keep me from such counsel: tis most true
These newes are euery where, euery tongue speaks 'em,
And euery true heart weepes for't. All that daie
Looke into these affaires, see this maine end,
The French Kings Sister: Heauen will one day open
The Kings eyes, that so long haue slept vpon
This bold bad man.

Suff. And free vs from his slavery.

Nor. We had need pray,
And heartily, for our deliuerance;
Or this imperious man will worke vs all
From Princes into Pages. all mens honours
Lie like one lump before him, to be fastion'd
Into what pitch he please.

Suff. For me, my Lords,
I loue him not, nor feare him, there's my Creede:
As I am made without him, so lie stand,
If the King please: his Curfes and his blessings
Touch me alike: th'are breath I not beleue in.
I knew him, and I know him: so I leaue him
To him that made him proud; the Pope.

Nor. Let's in;
And with some other busines, put the King
From these sad thoughts, that work too much vpon him.
My Lord, you'le beare vs company?

Cham. Excuse me,
The King ha's sent me elsewhere. Besides
You finde a most vnfit time to disturbe him:
Health to your Lordships.

Nor.

Norfolke. Thanke my good Lord Chamberlaine.
Exit Lord Chamberlaine, and the King drawes the Curtaine and sits reading pensively.

Suff. How sad he lookes; lute he is much afflicted.

Kin. Who's there? Ha?

Norff. Pray God he be not angry. (seues)

Kin. Who's there? I say? How dare you thrust your Into my priuate Meditations?
 Who am I? Ha?

Norff. A gracious King, that pardons all offences
 Malice ne're meant. Our breach of Duty this way,
 Is businesse of Estate; in which, we come
 To know your Royall pleasure.

Kin. Ye are too bold;

Go too; Ile make ye know your times of businesse:
 Is this an houre for temporall affaires? Ha?

Enter Wolsey and Campeius with a Commission.

Who's there? my good Lord Cardinall? O my Wolsey,
 The quiet of my wounded Conscience;
 Thou art a cure fit for a King; you'r welcome
 Most Learned Reuerend Sir, into our Kingdome,
 Vse vs, and in My good Lord, haue great care,
 I be not found a Talker.

Wol. Sir, you cannot;
 I would your Grace would giue vs but an houre
 Of priuate conference.

Kin. We are busie, goe.

Norff. This Priest ha's no pride in him?

Suff. Not to speake of:

I would not be so sicke though for his place:
 But this cannot continue.

Norff. If it doe, Ile venture one; haue at him.

Suff. I another.

Exeunt Norfolke and Suffolke.

Wol. Your Grace ha's giuen a President of wisedome
 About all Princes, in committing freely
 Your scruple to the voyce of Christendome:
 Who can be angry now? What Envy reach you?
 The Spaniard tide by blood and fauour to her,
 Must now confesse, if they haue any goodnesse,
 The Tryall, iust and Noble. All the Clerkes,
 (I meane the learned oyes in Christian Kingdomes)
 Haue their free voyces. Rome (the Nurse of Iudgement)
 Inuited by your Noble selfe, hath sent
 One generall Tongue vnto vs. This good man,
 This iust and learned Priest, Cardinall Campeius,
 Whom once more, I present vnto your Highnesse.

Kin. And once more in mine armes I bid him welcome,
 And thanke the holy Conclau for their loues,
 They haue sent me such a Man, I would haue wish'd for.

Cam. Your Grace must needs deserue all strangers loues,
 You are so Noble: To your Highnesse hand
 I tender my Commission; by whose vertue,
 The Court of Rome commanding. You my Lord
 Cardinall of Turke, are ioyn'd with me their Seruant,
 In the vnpartiall iudging of this Businesse. (red)

Kin. Two equall men: The Queene shall be acquain-
 Fort with for what you come. Where's Gardiner?

Wol. I know your Maiesty, ha's alwayes lou'd her
 So deare in heart, not to deny her that
 A Woman of iesse Place might aske by Law;
 Schollers allow'd freely to argue for her.

Kin. I, and the best she shall haue; and my fauour
 To him that doth best, God forbid els: Cardinall, Prethee call Gardiner to me, my new Secretary.
 If find him a fit fellow.

Enter Gardiner.

Wol. Giue me your hand: much may I fauour you,
 You are the Kings now.

Gard. But to be commanded
 For euer by your Grace, whose hand ha's rais'd me,

Kin. Come hither Gardiner.

Walkes and whispers.

Cam. My Lord of Turke, was not one Doctor
 In this mans place before him?

Wol. Yes, he was.

Cam. Was he not held a learned man?

Wol. Yes surely.

Cam. Beleeue me, there's an ill opinion spread then,
 Euen of your selfe Lord Cardinall.

Wol. How? of me?

Cam. They will not sticke to say, you couide him;
 And fearing he would rise (he was so vertuous)
 Kept him a forraigne man still, which so greued him,
 That he ran mad, and died.

Wol. Hea'ns peace be with him;

That's Christian care enough: for lining Murmurers,
 There's places of rebuke. He was a Foole;
 For he would needs be vertuous. That good Fellow,
 If I command him followes n y appointment,
 I will haue none so neere els. Letre this Brother,
 We liue not to be gup'd by meaner persons.

Kin. Deliuers this with modesty to th' Queene.

Exit Gardiner.

The most conuenient place, that I can thinke of
 For such receipt of Learning is Black-Fryers.
 There ye shall meete about this weighry busines.
 My Wolsey, see it furnish d, O my Lord,
 Would it not grieue an able man to leaue
 So sweet a Bedfellow? But Conference, Conscience;
 O 'tis a tender place, and I must leaue her. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Anne Bullen, and an old Lady.

An. Not for that neither; here's the pang that pinches
 His Highnesse, hauing liu'd so long with her, and she
 So good a Lady, that no Tongue could euer
 Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life,
 She neuer knew harme doing: Oh, now after
 So many courses of the Sun enthroned,
 Still growing in a Maiesty and pompe, the which
 To leaue, a thousand fold more bitter, then
 'Tis sweet at first to acquire. After this Procelle.
 To giue her the aunsur, it is a pitty
 Would moue a Monster.

Old La. Hearts of most hard temper
 Melt and lament for her.

An. Oh Gods will, much better
 She ne're had knowne pompe; though't be temporall,
 Yet if that quarrell Fortune, do diuorce
 It from the beater, 'tis a sufferance, panging
 As soule and bodies seuering.

Old La. Alas poore Lady,

Shee's a stranger now againe.

An. So much the more
 Must pitty drop vpon her; verily
 If we are, 'tis better to be lowly borne,

And

And range with humble livers in Content,
Then to be perk'd vp in a glistring griefe,
And weare a golden sorrow.

Old L. O my content

Is our best hauing

Anne By my troth, and Maidenhead,
I would not be a Queene.

Old L. Bestrew me, I would,
And venture Maidenhead for't, and so would you
For all this spice of your Hypocrisie
You that haue so faire partes of Woman on you,
Haue (too) a Womans heart, which euer yet
Affected Eniueance, Wealt, Soueraignty;
Which, to say sooth, are Blessings; and which guists
(Sauing your mincing) the capacity
Of you to be Christell Conscience should receiue,
If you might please to stretch it

Anne Nay, good troth

Old L. Yes troth, & troth, you would not be a Queene?

Anne. No, not for all the riches vnder Heauen.

Old L. 'Tis strange; threepence bow'd would hire me
Old as I am, to Queene it - but I pray you,
What thinke you of a Dutchesse? Haue you limbs
To beare that load of Title?

An. No in truth.

Old L. Then you are weakly made, plucke off a little,
I would not be a young Count in your way,
For more then blushing comes to. If your backe
Cannot vouchsafe this burthen, 'tis too weak
Euer to get a Boy.

An How you doe talke;
I sweare againe, I would not be a Queene,
For all the world:

Old L. In faith, for little England
You'd venture an emballing: I my selfe
Would for Carnarvonshire, although there long'd
No more to th' Crowne but that. Lo, who comes here?

Enter Lord Chamberlaire. (know

L. Cham Good morrow Ladies, what wer't worth to
The secret of your conference?

An. My good Lord,
Not your demand; it values not your asking:
Our Mistis Sorrowes we were pitying.

Cham. It was a gentle businesse, and becoming
The action of good women; therefore hope
All will be well.

An. Now I pray God, Amen.

Cham. You beare a gentle modest heavenly blessings
Follow such Creatures. But you may, faire Lady
Perceiue I speake sincerely; and high notes
Tane of your many vertues, the Kings Miestly
Commends his good opinion of you, to you, and Doe's purpose honour to you no lesse following,
Then Marchionesse of Pembroke, to which Title,
A Thousand pound a yeare, Annually support;
Out of his Grace, he addes.

An. I doe not know

What kinde of my obedience; I should tender;
More then my All, is Nothing. Nor my Prayers
Are not words duly hallowd; nor my Wishes
More worth, then empty vanities; yet Prayers & Wishes
Are all I can returne. Beseech your Lordship,
Vouchsafe to speake my thanks, and my obedience,
As from a blushing Handmaid, to his Highnesse;
Whose health and Royalty I pray for.

Cham. Lady;

I shall not faile to approue the faire conceit
The King hath of you. I haue perus'd her well,
Beauty and Honour in her are somingled,
That they haue caught the King: and who knowes yet
But from this Lady, may proceed a Iemine,
To lighten all this Ile. I'le to the King,
And say I spoke with you.

Exit Lord Chamberlaire.

An. My honour'd Lord.

Old L. Why this it is. See, see,
I haue bene begging sixteene yeares in Court (Am yet a Courtier beggerly) nor could Come pat betwix too early, and too late
For any suit of pound: and you, (oh fate)
A very fresh Fish heere; syc, syc, syc vpon
This compell'd fortune. haue your mouth fill'd vp,
Before you open it.

An. This is strange to me.

Old L. How tastes it? Is it bitter? Forty pence, no;
There was a Lady once (tis an old Story)
That would not be a Queene, that would she not
For all the mud in Egypt; haue you heard it?

An. Come you are pleasant

Old L. With your Theame, I could O're-mount the Larke The Marchionesse of Fembrooke?
A thousand pounds a yeare, for pure respect?
No other obligation? by my Life,
That promises mo thousands Honours traine
Is longer then his fore-skirt, by this time
I know your backe will beare a Dutchesse. Say,
Are you not stronger then you were?

An. Good Lady,

Make your selfe mirth with your particular fancy,
And leaue me out on't. Would I had no being
If this salute my blood a iot; it sautes me
To thinke what folloves.

The Queene is comfortlesse, and wee forgetfull
In our long absence pray doe not deliuer,
What heere y'haue heard to her.

Old L. What doe you thinke me — Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Trumpets, Seruet, and Cornets.

Enter two Vergers, with short silver wands, next them two Scribes in the habite of Doctors; after them, the Bishop of Canterbury alone; after him, the Bishop of Lincolne, Ely, Recheester, and S. Asaph. Next them, with some small distance, followes a Gentleman bearing the Purse, with the great Seale, and a Cardinals Hat. Then two Priests, bearing each a Silver Crosse. Then a Gentleman vnder bareheaded, accompanied with a Sergeant at Armes, bearing a Silver Mace. Then two Gentlemen bearing two great Silver Pillers. After them, side by side, the two Cardinals, two Noblemen, with the Sword and Mace. The King takes place vnder the Cloth of State. The two Cardinalls sit vnder him as Judges. The Queene takes place some distance from the King. The Bishops place themselves on each side the Court in manner of a Consistory. Below them the Scribes. The Lords sit next the Bishops. The rest of the Attendants stand in convenient order about the Stage.

Car. Whil'ft our Commission from Rome is read,
Let silence be commanded.

King. What's the need?
It hath already publickly bene read,
And on all sides th' Authority allow'd,
You may then spare that time.

Car. Bee't so, proceed.

Scr. Say, Henry K. of England, come into the Court.

Crier. Henry King of England, &c.

King. Heere

Scribe. Say, Katherine Queene of England,
Come into the Court.

Crier. Katherine Queene of England, &c.

The Queene makes no answer, rises out of her Chaire, goes about the Court, comes to the King, and kneeles at his Feete. Then speaks.

Sir, I desire you do me Right and Iustice,
And to bestow your pittie on me; for
I am a most poore Woman, and a Stranger,
Borne out of your Dominions hauing heere
No Iudge indifferent, nor no more assurance
Of equall Friendship and Proceeding. Alas Sir:
In what haue I offended you? What cause
Hath my behaviour giuen to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceede to put me off,
And take your good Grace from me? Heaven witness,
I haue bene to you, a true and humble Wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Euer in feare to kindle your Dislike,
Yea, subiect to your Countenance. Glad, or sorry,
As I saw it inclin'd? When was the houre
I euer contradietted your Desire?
Or made it not mine too? Or which of your Friends
Haue I not stroue to loue, although I knew
He were mine Enemy? What Friend of mine,
That had to him deu'd your Anger, did I
Continue in my Liking? Nay, gaue notice
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to minde,
That I haue bene your Wife, in this Obedience,
Vpward of twenty yeares, and haue bene blest
With many Children by you. If in the courtie
And proesse of this time, you can report,
And proue it too, against mine Honor, aught;
My bond to Wedlocke, or my Loue and Dutie
Against your Sacred Person; in Gods name
Turne me away and let the fowl st Contempt
Shut doore vpon me, and so giue me vp
To the sharpest kinde of Iustice. Please you, Sir,
The King your Father, was reputed for
A Prince most Prudent; of an excellent
And vnmarch'd Wit, and Iudgement. Ferdinand
My Father, King of Spaine, was reckon'd one
The wisest Prince, that there had reign'd, by many
A yeare before. It is not to be question'd,
That they had gather'd a wise Councell to them
Of euery Realme, that did debate this Businesse,
Who deem'd our Marriage lawful. Wherefore I humbly
Beseech you Sir, to spare me, till I may
Be by my Friends in Spaine, adul'd; whose Counsaile
I will implore. If not, 'th name of God
Your pleasure be fulfill'd.

Pol. You haue heere Lady,
(And of your choice) these Reuerend Fathers, men
Of singular Integrity, and Learning;
Yea, the elect o'th' Land, who are assembled
To pleade your Cause. It shall be therefore bootlesse,

That longer you desire the Court, as well
For your owne quiet, as to rectifie
What is vnsettled in the King

Camp. His Grace

Hath spoken well, and iustly: Therefore Madam,
It's fit this Royall Session do proceed,
And that (without delay) their Arguments
Be now produc'd, and heard.

Qu. Lord Cardinall, to you I speake.

Pol. Your pleasure, Madam.

Qu. Sir, I am about to weepe; but thinking that
We are a Queene (or long haue dream'd so) certaine
The daughter of a King, my drops of teares,
He turne to sparkes of fire.

Pol. Be patient yet.

Qu. I will, when you are humble; Nay before,
Or God will punish me. I do beleue (Induc'd by potent Circumstances) that
You are mine Enemy, and make my Challenge,
You shall not be my Iudge. For it is you
Haue blowne this Coale, betwixt my Lord, and me;
(Which Gods dew quench) therefore, I say againe,
I vterly abhorre; yea, from my Soule
Refuse you for my Iudge, whom yet once more
I hold my most malicious Foe, and thanke not
At all a Friend to truth.

Pol. I do professe

You speake not like your selfe. who euer yet
Haue stood to Channy, and displayd th' effects
Of disposition gentle, and of wisdomes,
Ore topping womans powre. Madam, you do me wrong
I haue no Spleene against you, nor iniustice
For you, or any: how farre I haue proceeded,
Or how farre further (shall) is warranted
By a Commission from the Consistorie,
Yea, the whole Consistorie of Rome. You charge me,
That I haue blowne this Coale: I do deny it,
The King is present. If it be knowne to him,
That I gainsay my Deed, how may he wound,
And worthily my Falsehood, yea, as much
As you haue done my Truth. If he know
That I am free of your Report, he knowes
I am not of your wrong. Therefore in him
It lies to cure me, and the Cure is to Remove these Thoughts from you. The which before
His Highnesse shall ipeake in, I do beseech
You (gracious Madam) to vnthinke your speaking,
And to say so no more.

Queen. My Lord, my Lord,

I am a simple woman, much too weake
To oppose your cunning. Yare meek, & humble-mouth'd
You signe your Place, and Calling, in full seeming,
With Meekenesse and Humilitie: but your Heart
Is cram'd with Arrogancie, Spleene, and Pride.
You haue by Fortune, and his Highnesse fauors,
Gone slightly o're loue steps, and now are mounted
Where Powres are your Retainers, and your words
(Domestickes to you) serue your will, as't please
Your selfe pronounce their Office. I must tell you,
You tender more your persons Honor, then
Your high profession Spirituall. That agen
I do refuse you for my Iudge, and heere
Before you all, Appeale vnto the Pope,
To bring my whole Cause 'fore his Holinesse,
And to be iudg'd by him.

She Christies to the King, and offers to depart.

Camp.

Camp. The Queene is obstinate,
Stubborne to Iustice, apt to accuse it, and Disdainfull to be tri'd by't; tis not well.
Shee's going away.

Kim Call her againe.

Crier. Katherine. Q of England, come into the Court.

Gent. Ush. Madam, you are call'd backe.

Que What need you not? pray you keep your way,
When you are call'd returne Now the Lord helpe,
They vex me past my patience pray you passe on,
I will not tarry no, nor ever more
Vpon this businesse my appearance make,
In any of their Courts.

Exit Queene, and her Attendants.

Kim Goe thy wayes Kate,
That man i'th' world, who shall report he ha's
A better Wife, let him in naught be trusted,
For speaking false in that, thou art alone
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentlenessse,
Thy meeknesse Saint-like, Wise-like Government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Soueraigne and Pious els, could speake thee out)
The Queene of earthly Queenes. Shee's Noble borne;
And like her true Nobility, she ha's
Carried her selfe towards me.

Hol. Most gracious Sir,
In humblest manner I require your Highnes,
That it shall please you to declare in hearing
Of all these eares (for where I am rob'd and bound,
There must I be vnloos'd, although not there
At once, and fully satisfide) whether ever I Did broach this busines to your Highnes, or Laid any scruple in your way whi h might Induce you to the question on't or euer
Haue to you, but with thanks to God for such A Royall Lady, spake one, the least word that might Be to the preiudice of her present State,
Or touch of her good Person?

Kim My Lord Cardmall,
I doe excuse you; yea, vpon mine Honour,
I free you from t: You are not to be taught
That you haue many enemies, that know not
Why they are so, but like to Village Curres, Bark when their fellows doe. By some of these
The Queene is put in anger, y'are excus'd.
But will you be more iustifi'd? You euer
Haue wish'd the sleeping of this busines, neuer desir'd
It to be stir'd, but oft haue hundred, oft
The passages made toward it, on my Honour,
I speake my good Lord Cardmall. to this point;
And thus farre cleare him,
Now, what mou'd me too't,
I will be bold with time and your attention (too't
Then marke th' inducement Thus it came, giue heede
My Conscience first receiu'd a tendernes,
Scruple, and pricke, on certaine Speeches vtter'd
By th' Bishop of Bayon, then French Embassador,
Who had bene hither sent on the debating
And Marriage 'twixt the Duke of Orleans, and
Our Daughter Mary. I'th' Progressse of this busines,
Ere a determinate resolution, hee
(I meane the Bishop) did require a respite,
Wherein he might the King his Lord aduertise,
Whether our Daughter were Legitimate,
Respecting this our Marriage with the Dowager,
Sometimes our Brothers Wife. This respite thooke

The bolome of my Conscience, enter'd me;
Yea, with a spitting power, and made to tremble
The region of my Breast, which forc'd such way,
That many maz'd considerings, did throng
And prest in with this Caution. First, me thought.
I stood not in the smile of Heaven, who had Commanded Nature, that my Ladies wombe
If it conceiu'd a male-child by me, should Doe no more Offices of life too't, then
The Graue does to th' dead: For her Male Issue,
Or di'de where they were made, or shortly after
This world had ay'd them. Hence I tooke a thought,
This was a Iudgement on me, that my Kingdom
(Well worthy the best Heyre o'th' World) should not Be gladdened in't by me. Then followes, that I weigh'd the danger which my Realmes stood in
By this my Issues faile, and that gaue to me
Many a groaning throw: thus hulling in
The wild Sea of my Conscience, I did steere
Toward this remedy, whereupon we are
Now present liere together that's to say,
I meant to rectifie my Conscience, which
I then did feele full sicke, and yet not well,
By all the Reuerend Fathers of the Land,
And Doctors learn'd First I began in priuate,
With you my Lord of Lincolne; you remember
How vnder my oppression I did seeke
When I first mou'd you.

B. Lin. Very well my Liedge.

Kim I haue spoke long, be pleas'd your selfe to say
How fare you satisfide me.

Lin. So please your Highnes,
The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a State of mighty moment in't,
And consequence of dread, that I committed
The darrest Counsaile which I had to doubt,
And did entreate your Highnes to this course,
Which you are running heere.

Kim. I then mou'd you,
My Lord of Canterbury, and got your leaue
To make this present Summons vnsolicited.
I left no Reuerend Person in this Court;
But by particular consent proceeded
Vnder your hands and Seales, therefore goe on,
For no dislike i'th' world against the person
Of the good Queene; but the sharpe thorny points
Of my alleadged reasons, drives this forward:
Proue but our Marriage lawfull, by my Life
And Kingly Dignity, we are contented
To weare our mortall State to come, with her,
(Katherine our Queene) before the primest Creature
That's Parragon'd o'th' World

Camp. So please your Highnes,
The Queene being absent, 'tis a needfull fitnesse,
That we adiourne this Court till further day;
Meane while, must be an earnest motion
Made to the Queene to call backe her Appeale
She intends vnto his Holinesse.

Kim. I may perceiue
These Cardinals trifle with me I abhorre
This dilatory sloth, and trickes of Rome.
My learn'd and welbeloued Seruant Cranmer,
Prethee returne, with thy approach I know,
My comfort comes along. breake vp the Court;
I say, set on.

Exeunt, in manner as they enter'd.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Queen and her Womens as at work.

Queen. Take thy Lute wench,
My Soule growes sad with troubles,
Sing, and disperse 'em if thou canst. leaue working:

SONO.

O Rphens with his Lute made Trees,
And the Mountains tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing.
To his Musicke, Plants and Flowers
Euer spring; as Sunne and Snowes,
There had made lasting Spring
Euer thing that heard him play,
Euen the Billowes of the Sea,
Hug their heads, & then lay by.
In sweet Musicke is such Art,
Killing care, & griefe of heart,
Falls asleepe, or leaues dye.

Enter a Gentleman.

Queen. How now?

Gent. And please your Grace, the two great Cardinals
Wait in the presence.

Queen. Would they speake with me?

Gent. They wil'd me say so Madam.

Queen. Pray their Graces

To comenere: what can be their busines
With me, a poore weake woman, false from fauour?
I doe not like their comming; now I thinke on't,
They should bee good men, their affaires as righte'ous:
But all Hoods, make not Monkes.

Enter the two Cardinals, Wolfey & Campian.

Wolf. Peace to your Highnesse.

Queen. Your Graces find me heere part of a Houewife,
(I would be all) against the worst may happen:
What are your pleasures with me, reuerent Lords?

Wolf. May it please you Noble Madam, to withdraw
Into your priuate Chamber; we shall giue you
The full cause of our comming.

Queen. Speake it heere.

There's nothing I haue done yet o' my Conscience
Deserues a Corner: would all other Women
Could speake this with as free a Soule as I doe.
My Lords, I care not (so much I am happy
About a number) if my actions
Were tri'd by eu'ry tongue, eu'ry eye saw 'em,
Enuy and base opinion set against 'em,
I know my life to euen. If your busines
Seeke me out, and that way I am Wise in;
Out with it boldly. Truth loues open dealing.

Card. Tanta est erga te mentis integritas Regina serenissima.

Queen. O good my Lord, no Latin;

I am not such a Truant since my comming,
As not to know the Language I haue liu'd in: (ours)
A strange Tongue makes my cause more strange, suspit-
Pray speake in English; heere are some will thinke you,
If you speake truth, for then poore Mistis sake;
Beleeue me she ha's had much wrong. Lord Cardinall,
The wilfulle Anne I euer yet committed,
May be absolu'd in English.

Card. Noble Lady,

I am sorry my integrity shoul breed,
(And seruice to his Maiessty, and you)
So deepe suspition, where all faith was meant;
We come not by the way of Accusation,
To taint that honour every good Tongue blest;
Nor to betray you any way to sorrow;
You haue too much good Lady: But to know
How you stand minded in this waighty difference
Betweene the King and you, and to deliuer
(Like free and honest men) our iust opinions,
And comforts to our cause.

Camp. Most honour'd Madam,
My Lord of Yorke, out of his Noblenature,
Zeale and obedience he still bore your Grace,
Forgetting (like a good man) your late Censure
Both of his truth and him (which was too sarte)
Offers, as I doe, in a signe of peace,
His seruice, and his Courtself.

Queen. To betray me.

My Lords, I thanke you both for your good wills,
Ye speake like honest men, (pray God ye proue so)
But how to make ye sodainly an Answer
In such a point of weight, (so nere mine Honour,
(More nere my Life I feare) with my weake wit;
And to such men of grauity and learning;
In truth I know not. I was set as worke,
Among my Maids, full little (God knows) looking Eithr for such men, or such businesse;
For her sake that I haue beene, for I seele
The last sit of my Greatnesse: good your Graces
Let me ha' the time and Councell for my Cause.
Alas, I am a Woman stendlesse, hopelesse
Of Madam,
You wrong the Kings love with these fetters,
Your hopes and friends are infinite.

Queen. In England,
But little for my profit can you thinke Lords.
That any English man dare giue me Councell?
Or be a knowne friend gainst his Highnes pleasure,
(Though he be growne to desperate to be honest)
And liue a Subiect? Nay forsooth, my Friends,
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, liue not heere,
They are (as all my other comforts) far hence
In mine owne Countrey Lords.

Camp. I would your Grace
Would leaue your greeser, and take my Councell.

Queen. How Sir?

Camp. Put ybur maine cause into the Kings protection,
Hee's louing and most gracious. 'Twill be much,
Both for your Honour better, and your Cause:
For if the tryall of the Law o'take ye,
You'l part away disgrac'd.

Wolf. He tels you rightly.

Queen. Ye tell me what ye wish for both, my ruine:
Is this your Christian Councell? Oue upon ye.
Heauen is aboute all yet; there sits a Iudge.
That no King can corrupt.

Camp. Your rage mistakes vs.

Queen. The more shame for ye; holy men I thought ye,
Vpon my Soule two reuerend Cardinall Vertues:
But Cardinall Sins, and hollow hearts I feare ye -
Mend 'em for shame my Lords: Is this your comfort?
The Cordiall that ye bring a wretched Lady?
A woman lost among ye, laugh't at, scum'd?
I will not wish ye halfe my miserie.

I haue more Charity. But say I warn'd ye;
Take heed, for heauens sake take heed, least at once
The burthen of my sorrowes, fall vpon ye

Car. Madam, this is a meere distraction,
You turne the good we offer, into enuy.

Quee Ye turne me into nothing Woe vpon ye,
And all such false Professors. Would you haue me
(If you haue any Iustice, any Pitty,
If ye be any thing but Churchmens habits)
Put my sicke cause into his hands, that hates me?
Alas, ha's banish'd me his Bed already,
His Loue, too long ago. I am old my Lords,
And all the Felio wship I hold now with him
Is onely my Obedience. What can happen
To me, about this wretchednesse? All your Studies
Make me a Curse, like this

Camp. Your feares are worse.

Qu. Haue I liu'd thus long (let me speake my selfe, Since Vertue findes no friends) a Wife, a true one?
A Woman (I dare say without Vainglory)
Neuer yet branded with Suspition?
Haue I, with all my full Affections
Still nert the King? Lou'd him next Heau'n? Obey'd him?
Bin (out of fondnesse) superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my Prayres to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'Tis not well Lords,
Bring me a constant woman to her Husband,
One that ne're dream'd a Ioy, beyond his pleasure;
And to that Woman (when she has done most)
Yet will I adde an Honor; a great Patience.

Car. Madam, you wander from the good
We ayme at.

Qu. My Lord,
I dare not make my selfe so guiltie,
To giue vp willingly that Noble Title
Your Master wed me to - nothing but death
Shall e're diuorce my Dignities.

Car. Pray heare me

Qu. Would I had neuer trod this English Earth,
Or felt the Flatteries that grow vpon it
Ye haue Angels Faces; but Heauen knowes your hearts.
What will become of me now, wretched Lady?
I am the most unhappy Woman liuing
Alas (poore Wenches) where are now your Fortunes?
Shipwrack'd vpon a Kingdome, where no Pitty,
No Friends, no Hope, no Kindred weepe for me?
Almost no Graue allow'd me? Like the Lilly
That once was Mistris of the Field, and flourish'd,
Ile hang my head, and perish.

Car. If your Grace
Could but be brought to know, our Ends are honest,
You'd feele more comfort. Why shold we (good Lady)
Vpon what cause wrong you? Alas, our Places,
The way of our Profession is against it,
We are to Cure such sorrowes, not to sowe'em.
For Goodnesse sake, consider what you do,
How you may hurt your selfe I, vterly
Grow from the Kings Acquaintance, by this Carriage.
The hearts of Princes kisse Obedience,
So much they loue it. But to stubborn Spirits,
They swell and grow, as terrible as stormes
I know you haue a Gentle, Noble temper,
A Soule as euen as a Calme, Pray thinke vs,
Those we professe, Peace-makers, Friends, and Seruants.

Camp. Madam, you'll finde it so:
You wrong your Vertues

With these weake Womens feares. A Noble Spirit
As yours was, put into you, euer casts
Such doubts as false Come from it. The King loues you, Beware you loose it not: For vs (if you please
To trust vs in your businesse) we are ready
To vse our vtmost Studies, in your seruice.

Qu. Do what ye will, my Lords.
And pray forgie me;
If I haue vs'd my selfe vnmanerly,
You know I am a Woman, lacking wit
To make a seemely answer to such persons,
Pray do my seruice to his Maiestie,
He ha's my heart yet, and shall haue my Prayers
While I shall haue my life. Come reuerend Fathers, Bestow your Councils on me. She now begges
That little thought when she set footing heere,
She should haue bought her Dignities so deere. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter the Duke of Norfolk, Duke of Suffolke, Lord Surrey, and Lord Chamberlaire

Nor. If you will now write in your Complaints,
And force them with a Constancy, the Cardinall
Cannot stand vnder them. If you omit
The offer of this time, I cannot promise,
But that you shall sustaine moe new disgraces,
With these you beare alreadie.

Suf. I am ioyfull

To meete the least occasion, that may giue me
Remembrance of my Father-in-Law, the Duke,
To be reueng'd on him.

Suf. Which of the Peeres
Haue vncontemn'd gone by him, or at least
Strangely neglected? When did he regard
The stampe of Noblenesse in any person
Out of himselfe?

Cham. My Lords, you speake your pleasures:
What he deserues of you and me, I know:
What we can do to him (though now the time Giues way to vs) I much feare. If you cannot Barre his access to th' King, neuer attempt
Any thing on him - for he hath a Witchcraft
Ouer the King in's Tongue.

Nor. O feare him not,
His spell in that is out the King hath found
Matter against him, that for euer marres
The Hony of his Language. No, he's settled
(Not to come off) in his displeasure.

Suf. Sir,
I should be glad to heare such Newes as this
Once euery houre.

Nor. Beleue it, this is true.
In the Diuorce, his contrarie proceedings
Are all vnfolded - wherein he appeares,
As I would wish mine Enemy.

Suf. How came
His praesides to light?

Suf. Most strangely.

Suf. O how? how?

Suf. The Cardinals Letters to the Pope miscarried,

And came to th'eye o' th' King, wherein was read
How that the Cardinall did intreat his Holinesse
To stay the Iudgement o' th' Diuorce; for if
It did take place, I do (quoth he) perceiue
My King is tangled in affection, to
A Creature of the Queenes, Lady Anne Bullen.

Sur. Ha's the King this?

Suf. Beleuee it.

Sur. Will this worke?

Cham. The King in this perceiues him, how he coasts
And hedges his owne way. But in this point,
All his trickes founder, and he brings his Physicke
After his Patients death; the King already Hath married the faire Lady.

Sur. Would he had.

Suf. May you be happy in your wish my Lord,
For I professe you haue it.

Sur. Now all my ioy
Trace the Coniunction.

Suf. My Amen too't.

Nor. All mens.

Suf. There's order giuen for her Coronation:
Marry this is yet but yong, and may be left
To some eares vnaccounted. But my Lords
She is a gallant Creature, and compleate
In minde and feature. I perswade me, from her
Will fall some blessing to this Land, which shall
In it be memoriz'd.

Sur. But will the King
Digest this Letter of the Cardinals?
The Lord forbid.

Nor. Marry Amen.

Suf. No, no:

There be moe Waspes that buz about his Nose,
Will make this sting the sooner. Cardinall Campeius,
Is stolne away to Rome, hath tane no leaue,
Ha's left the cause o' th' King vnhandled, and
Is posted as the Agent of our Cardinall,
To second all his plot. I do assure you,
The King cry'de Ha, at this.

Cham. Now God incense him,
And let him cry Ha, lowder.

Nor. But my Lord
When returns Cranmer?

Suf. He is return'd in his Opinions, which Haue satisfied the King for his Diuorce,
Together with all famous Colledges
Almost in Christendome: shortly (I beleuee)
His second Marriage shall be publish'd, and
Her Coronation. Katherine no more
Shall be call'd Queene, but Princess Dowager,
And Widdow to Prince Arthur.

Nor. This same Cranmer's
A worthy Fellow, and hath tane much paine
In the Kings businesse,

Suf. He ha's, and we shall see him
For it, an Arch-bishop.

Nor. So I heare.

Suf. 'Tis so.

Enter Wolsey and Cromwell.

The Cardinall.

Nor. Obserue, obserue, hee's moody.

Car. The Packet Cromwell,
Gau't you the King?

Crom. To his owne hand, in's Bed-chamber.

Card. Look'd he o' th' inside of the Paper?

Crom. Presently

He did vnseale them, and the first he view'd.
He did it with a Serious minde: a heede
Was in his countenance. You he had Attend him heere this Morning.

Card. Is he ready to come abroad?

Crom. I thinke by this he is.

Card. Leaueme a while.

Exit Cromwell.

It shall be to the Dutches of Alanson,

The French Kings Sister; He shall marry her.

Anne Bullen? No. He no Anne Bullens for him,

There's more in't then faire Visage. Bullen?

No, wee'l no Bullens: Speedily I will

To heare from Rome. The Marchionesse of Penbrooke?

Nor. He's discontented.

Suf. Maybe he heares the King
Does whet his Anger to him.

Sur. Sharpe enough,
Lord for thy Iustice.

Car. The late Queenes Gentlewoman?
A Knights Daughter

To be her Missis Missis? The Queenes, Queene?

This Candle burnes not cleere, 'tis I must snuffe it;

Then out it goes. What though I know her vertuous

And well deterring? yet I know her for

A spleeny Lutheran, and not wholesome to

Our cause, that she should lye i'th' bosome of

Our hard rol'd King. Againe, there is sprung vp

An Heretique, an Arch-one; Cranmer, one

Hath crawl'd into the fauour of the King,

And is his Oracle.

Nor. He is vex'd at something

Enter King, reading &c. Seedeile

Sur. I would 'twere something y' would fret the string,
The Master-cord on's heart

Suf. The King, the King.

King. What piles of wealth hath he accumulated
To his owne portion? And what expence by'th'houre Seemes to flow from him? How, i'th' name of Thrift
Does he rake this together? Now my Lords,
Saw you the Cardinall?

Nor. My Lord, we haue

Stood heere obseruing him. Some strange Commotion
Is in his braine. He bites his lip, and starts,
Stops on a sodaine, looks vpon the ground,
Then layes his finger on his Temple. straight
Springs out into fast gate, then stops againe,
Strikes his brest hard, and anon, he casts
His eye against the Moone: in most strange Postures
We haue scene him set himselfe.

King. It may weil be,
There is a mutiny in's minde. This morning,
Papers of State he sent me, to peruse,
As I requir'd: and wot you what I found
There (on my Conscience put vnwittingly)
Forsooth an Inuentory, thus importing
The seuerall parcels of his Plate, his Treasure, Rich Stuffles and Ornaments of Household, which I finde at such proud Rate, that it out-speakes
Possession of a Subiect.

Nor. It's Heauens will,
Some Spirit put this paper in the Packet,
To blesse your eye withall,

King. If we did thinke

His Contemplation were about the earth,
And fixt on Spirituall object, he should still Dwell in his Musings, but I am afraid
His Thinkings are below the Moone, not worth
His serious considering.

King takes his Seat, whispers Louell, who goes to the Cardinall.

Car. Heaven forgive me,
Euer God blesse your Highnesse.

King. Good my Lord,
You are full of Heauenly stuffe, and beare the Inuentory
Of your best Graces, in your minde; the which
You were now running ore you haue scarce time
To steale from Spirituall leytur, a briefe span
To keepe your earthly Audit, sure in that
I deeme you an ill Husband, and am gald
To haue you therein my Companion.

Car. Sir,
For Holy Offices I haue a time; a time
To thinke vpon the part of businesse, which I beare i'th State and Nature does require
Her times of preseruation, which perforce
I her fraile sonne, amongst my Brethren mortall,
Must giue my tendance to

King. You haue said well

Car. And euer may your Highnesse yoake together, (As I will lend you cause) my doing well,
With my well saying

King. 'Tis well said agen,
And 'tis a kinde of good deede to say well,
And yet words are no deeds. My Father lou'd you,
He said he did, and with his deed did Crowne
His word vpon you. Since I had my Office,
I haue kept you next my Heart, haue not alone
Imploy'd you where high Profits might come home,
But par'd my present Hauings, to bestow
My Bounties vpon you.

Car. What should this meane?

Sir. The Lord increase this businesse.

King. Haue I not made you

The prime man of the State? I pray you tell me,
If what I now pronounce, you haue found true:
And if you may confesse it, say withall
If you are bound to vs, or no What say you?

Car. My Soueraigne, I confesse your Royall graces
Shew'd on me daily, haue bene more then could
My studied purposes requite, which went
Beyond all mans endeauors My endeauors,
Haue euer come too short of my Desires,
Yet fill'd with my Abilities Mine owne ends
Haue bene mine so, that euermore they pointed
To 'th' good of your most Sacred Person, and
The profit of the State. For your great Graces
Heap'd vpon me (poore Vnderferuer) I
Can nothing render but Allegiant thanks,
My Prayes to heauen for you; my Loyaltie
Which euer ha's, and euer shall be growning,
Till death (that Winter) kill it.

King. Fairly answer'd

A Loyall, and obedient Subject is Therein illustrated, the Honor of it
Does pay the Act of it, as i'th contrary
The fowlenesse is the punishment. I presume,
That as my hand ha's open'd Bounty to you,
My heart drop'd Loue, my powre rain'd Honor, more
On you, then any So your Hand, and Heart,

Your Braine, and euery Function of your power,
Should, notwithstanding that your bond of duty,
As 'twere in Loues particular, be more
To me your Friend, then any.

Car. I do professe,

That for your Highnesse good, I euer labour'd
More then mine owne: that am, haue, and will be (Though all the world should cracke their duty to you,
And throw it from their Soule, though perils did Abound, as thicke as thought could make 'em, and Appeare in formes more horrid) yet my Duty,
As doth a Rocke against the chiding Flood,
Should the approach of this wilde Riuier breake,
And stand vnshaken yours.

King. 'Tis Nobly spoken

Take notice Lords, he ha's a Loyall brest,
For you haue seene him open't. Read o're this,
And after this, and then to Break'fast with
What appetite you haue.

Exit King, frowning vpon the Cardinall, the Nobles throng after him smiling, and whispering.

Car. What should this meane?

What sodaine Anger's this? How haue I reap'd it?
He parted Frowning from me, as if Ruine
Leap'd from his Eyes. So looks the chafed Lyon
Vpon the daring Huntsman that has gall'd him:
Then makes him nothing I must reade this paper:
I feare the Story of his Anger. 'Tis so:
This paper ha's vndone me. 'Tis 'th' Accompt
Of all that world of Wealth I haue drawne together
For mine owne ends, (Indeed to gaine the Popedome,
And see my Friends in Rome) O Negligence!
Fit for a Foole to fall by What crosse Diuell
Made me put this maine Secret in the Packet
I sent the King? Is there no way to cure this?
No new deuice to beate this from his Braines?
I know 'twill stirre him strongly, yet I know
A way, if it take right, in spite of Fortune
Will bring me off againe What's this? To 'th' Pope?
The Letter (as I liue) with all the Businesse
I writ too's Holinesse. Nay then, farewell
I haue touch'd the highest point of all my Greatnesse,
And from that full Meridian of my Glory,
I haste now to my Setting. I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the Euening,
And no man see me more.

Enter to Woolsey, the Dukes of Norfolk and Suffolke, the Earle of Surrey, and the Lord Chamberlaine.

Nor. Heare the Kings pleasure Cardinall,
Who commands you
To render vp the Great Seale presently
Into our hands, and to Confine your selfe
To Asher-house, my Lord of Winchester's,
Till you heare further from his Highnesse.

Car. Stay:

Where's your Commission? Lords, words cannot carrie
Authority so weighty

Suf. Who dare crosse 'em,
Bearing the Kings will from his mouth expressly?

Car. Till I finde more then will, or words to do it,
(I meane your malice) know, Officious Lords,
I dare, and must deny it. Now I feele
Of what course Mettleye are molded, Enuy,
How eagerly ye follow my Disgraces

As

As if it fed ye, and how sleeke and waiton
Ye appeare in euery thing may bring my ruine?
Follow your enuious courses, men of Malice;
You haue Christian warrant for 'em, and no doubt
In time will finde their fit Rewards. That Seale
You aske with such a Violence, the King
(Mine, and your Master) with his owne hand, gaue me:
Had me enioy it, with the Place, and Honors
During my life; and to confirme his Goodnesse,
Ti'de it by Letters Patentes. Now, who'll take it?

Sur. The King that gaue it.

Car. It must be him selfe then.

Sur. Thou art a proud Traitor, Priest.

Car. Proud Lord, thou lyest:

Within these fortie houres, Surrey durst better
Haue burnt that Tongue, then saide so.

Sur. Thy Ambition
(Thou Scarlet sinne) robb'd this bewailing Land
Of Noble Buckingham, my Father-in-Law,
The heads of all thy Brother-Cardinals,
(With thee, and all thy best parts bound together)
Weigh'd nor a haire of his Plague of your policie,
You sent me Deputie for Ireland,
Farre from his succour; from the King, from all
That might haue mercie on the fault, thou gau'st him.
Whil'st your great Goodnesse, out of holy pittie,
Absolu'd him with an Axe.

Vol. This, and all else
This talking Lord can lay vpon my credit,
I answer, is most false. The Duke by Law Found his defects. How innocent I was
From any priuate malice in his end,
His Noble lurie, and soule Cause can witnesse.
If I lou'd many words, Lord, I should tell you,
You haue as little Honestie, as Honor,
That in the way of Loyaltie, and Truth,
Toward the King, my euer Royall Master,
Dare mate a sounder man then Surrie can be,
And all that loue his follies.

Sur. By my Soule,
Your long Coat (Priest) protects you,
Thou should'st feele
My Sword i'th' life blood of thee else. My Lords,
Can ye endure to heare this Arrogance?
And from this Fellow? If we lue thus tamely,
To be thus laded by a peece of Scarlet,
Farewell Nobilitie let his Grace go forward,
And dare vs with his Cap, like Larkes.

Card. All Goodnesse
Is payson to thy Stomacke.

Sur. Yes, that goodnesse
Of gleaning all the Lands wealth into one,
Into your owne hands (Card'nall) by Extortion:
The goodnesse of your intercepted Packets
You writ to'th Pope, against the King; your goodnesse
Since you prouoke me, shall be most notorious.
My Lord of Norfolk, as you are truly Noble,
As you respect the common good, the State
Of our despis'd Nobilitie, our Issues,
(Whom if he lue, will scarce be Gentlemen)
Produce the grand summe of his finnes, the Articles
Collected from his life. He startle you
Worse then the Sacring Bell, when the browne Wench
Lay kissing in your Armes, Lord Cardinall.

Car. How much me thinkes, I could despise this man,
But that I am bound in Charitie against it.

Nor. Those Articles, my Lord, are in the Kings hand,
But thus much, they are soule onces.

Vol. So much fairer
And spotlesse, shall mine Innocence rise,
When the King knowes my Truth.

Sur. This cannot saue you:
I thanke my Memorie, I yet remember
Some of these Articles, and out they shall.
Now, if you can blush, and crie guiltie Cardinall,
You'll shew a little Honestie.

Vol. Speake on Sir,
I dare your worst Obiections: If I blush,
It is to see a Nobleman want manners.

Sur. I had rather want those, then my head;
Haue at you.

First, that without the Kings assent or knowledge,
You wrought to be a Legate, by which power
You main'd the Iurisdiction of all Bishops.

Nor. Then, That in all you writ to Rome, or else
To Forraigne Princes, Ego & Rex meus
Was still inscrib'd. in which you brought the King
To be your Seruant.

Suf. Then, that without the knowledge
Either of King or Councell, when you went Ambassador to the Emperor, you made bold
To carry into Flanders, the Great Seale.

Sur. Item, You sent a large Commission
To Gregory de Cassado, to conclude
Without the Kings will, or the States allowance,
A League betweene his Highnesse, and Ferrard
Suf. That our of mere Ambition, you haue caus'd
Your holy-Hat to be stamp't on the Kings Coine.

Sur. Then, That you haue sent innumerable substance,
(By what meanes got, I leaue to your owne conscience)
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the wayes
You haue for Dignities, to the mere vndooing
Of all the Kingdome. Man, inore there are,
Which since they are of you, and odious.
I will not taint my mouth with.

Chim. O my Lord,
Pesse not a falling man: too farre 'tis Vertue:
His faults lye open to the Lawes, let them
(Not you) correct him. My heart weeps to see him
So little, of his great Selfe.

Sur. I forgiue him.
Suf. Lord Cardinall, the Kings further pleasure is,
Because all those things you haue done of late
By your power Legatue within this Kingdome,
Fall into'th' compasse of a Premunire;
That therefore such a Writ be sued against you,
To forfeit all your Goods, Lands, Tenements,
Castles, and whatsoeuer, and to be
Out of the Kings protection. This is my Charge.

Nor. And so we'll leaue you to your Meditations
How to lue better. For your Subornitie answer
About the giuing backe the Great Seales, &c.
The King shall knowe, and (no doubt) shall shake you.
So fare you well, my little good Lord Cardinall.

Exeunt all but Wolsey.
Vol. So farewell, to the little good you haue
Farewell! A long farewell to all my Greatnesse.
This is the fate of Man; to day be pittie forth
The tender Leaues of hopes, to morrow Blossomes
And beares his blushing Honors thick vpon him.
The third-day, comes a Frost; a killing Frost;
And when he thinkes, good easie men, full surely

His Greatnesse is a ripening, nippes his roote,
And then he falls as I do I haue ventur'd
Like little wanton Boyes that swim on bladders:
This many Summers in a Sea of Glory,
But farre beyond my depth, my high-blowne Pride
At length broke vnder me, and now ha's left me
Weary, and old with Seruice, to the mercy
Of a rude streame, that must for euer hide me.
Vaine pompe, and glory of this World, I hate ye,
I feele my heart new open'd. Oh how wretched
Is that poore man, that hangs on Princes fauours:
There is betwixt that smile we would aspire too,
That sweet Aspect of Princes, and their ruine,
More pangs, and feares then warres, or women haue,
And when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Neuer to hope againe

Enter Cromwell, standing amazed.

Why how now Cromwell?

Crom I haue no power to speake Sir.

Card What, amaz'd

At my misfortunes? Can thy Spirit wonder
A great man should decline. Nay, and you weep
I am false indeed.

Crom How does your Grace.

Card Why well.

Neuer so truly happy, my good Cromwell,
I know my selfe now, and I feele within me,
A peace about all earthly Dignities,
A still, and quiet Conscience. The King ha's cur'd me,
I humbly thanke his Grace and from these shoulders
These ruin'd Pillers, out of pittie, taken
A load, would sinke a Navy, (too much Honor)
O'tis a burden Cromwell, 'tis a burden
Too heauy for a man, that hopes for Heauen

Crom I am glad your Grace,
Ha's made that right vse of it.

Card I hope I haue.

I am able now (me thinkes)
(Out of a Fortitude of Soule, I feele)
To endure more Miseries, and greater farre
Then my Weake-hearted Enemies, dare offer.
What Newes abroad?

Crom The heauiest, and the worst,
Is your displeasure with the King.

Card God blesse him.

Crom The next is, that Sir Thomas Moore is chosen
Lord Chancellor, in your place

Card That's somewhat sodain.

But he's a Learned man. May he continue
Long in his Highnesse fauour, and do Iustice
For Truths sake, and his Conscience; that his bones,
When he ha's run his course, and sleepest in Blessings,
May haue a Tombe of Orphants teares wept on him.
What more?

Crom That Cranmer is return'd with welcome;
Install'd Lord Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Card That's Newes indeed.

Crom Last, that the Lady Anne,
Whom the King hath in secrecie long married,
This day was view'd in open, as his Queene,
Going to Chappell: and the voyce is now
Onely about her Coronation.

Card There was the waight that pull'd me downe.
O Cromwell,
The King ha's gone beyond me: All my Glories
In that one woman, I haue lost for euer.

No Sun, shall euer vs her forth mine Honors,
Or gilde againe the Noble Troopes that waighted
Vpon my smiles. Go get thee from me Cromwell,
I am a poore false man, vnworthy now
To be thy Lord, and Master. Seeke the King
(That Sun, I pray may neuer set) I haue told him,
What, and how true thou art; he will aduance thee:
Some little memory of me, will stirre him
(I know his Noble Nature) not to let Thy hopefull seruice perish too. Good Cromwell
Neglect him not; make vse now, and prouide
For thine owne future safety

Crom O my Lord,
Must I then leaue you? Must I needes forgo
So good, so Noble, and so true a Master?
Beare witnesse, all that haue not hearts of Iron,
With what a sorrow Cromwell leaues his Lord.
The King shall haue my seruice: but my prayres
For euer, and for euer shall be yours.

Card Cromwell, I did not thinke to shed a teare
In all my Miseries. But thou hast forc'd me
(Out of thy honest truth) to play the Woman.
Let's dry our eyes. And thus farre heare me Cromwell,
And when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleepe in dull cold Marble, where no mention
Of me, more must be heard of. Say I taught thee;
Say Wolsey, that once trod the wayes of Glory,
And founded all the Depths, and Shoales of Honor,
Found thee a way (out of his wracke) to liue in
A sure, and safe one, though thy Master must it
Marke but my Fall, and that that Ruin'd me
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away Ambition,
By that sinne fell the Angels: how can man then
(The Image of his Maker) hope to win by it?
Loue thy selfe last, cherish those hearts that hate thee;
Corruption wins not more then Honesty.
Still in thy right hand, carry gentle Peace
To silence enuious Tongues. Be iust, and feare not;
Let all the ends thou aym'st at, be thy Countries,
Thy Gods, and Truths. Then it thou fall'st (O Cromwell)
Thou fall'st a blessed Martyr.
Serue the King. And prythee leade me in.
There take an Inuentory of all I haue,
To the last peny, 'tis the Kings. My Robe,
And my Integrity to Heauen, is all,
I dare now call mine owne. O Cromwell, Cromwell,
Had I but seru'd my God, with halfe the Zeale
I seru'd my King he would not in mine Age
Haue left me naked to mine Enemies.

Crom Good Sir, haue patience.

Card So I haue. Farewell

The Hopes of Court, my Hopes in Heauen do dwell.

Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen, meeting one another.

1 Y're well met once againe.

2 So are you.

1 You come to take your stand heere, and behold
The Lady Anne, passe from her Coronation.

2 'Tis all my businesse. At our last encounter,
The Duke of Buckingham came from his Trill.

1 'Tis very true. But that time offer'd sorrow,
This generall ioy.

2 'Tis well. The Citizens
I am sure haue shewne at full their Royall minds,
As let 'em haue their rights, they are euer forward
In Celebration of this day with Shewes,
Pageants, and Sights of Honor.

1 Neuer greater,
Nor Ile assure you better taken Sir

2 May I be bold to aske what that contains,
That Paper in your hand.

1 Yes, 'tis the List
Of those that claime their Offices this day,
By custome of the Coronation.
The Duke of Suffolke is the first, and claimes
To be high Steward; Next the Duke of Norfolk,
He to be Earle Marshall. you may reade the rest.

1 I thanke you Sir. Had I not known those customes,
I should haue bene beholding to your Paper:
But I beseech you, what's become of Katherine
The Princess Dowager? How goes her businesse?

1 That I can tell you too. The Archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other
Learned, and Reuerend Fathers of his Order,
Held a late Court at Dunstable, six miles off
From Amptill, where the Princess lay, to which
She was often cyed by them, but appear'd not.
And to be short, for not Appearance, and
The Kings late Scruple, by the maine issent
Of all these Learned men, she was diuorc'd,
And the late Marriage made of none effect.
Since which, she was remou'd to Kymmation,
Where she remains now sicke.

2 Alas good Lady.
The Trumpets sound. Stand close,
The Queene is coming.

Ho-boys.

The Order of the Coronation.

- 1 A lively Flourish of Trumpets.
  - 2 Then, two Iudges
  - 3 Lord Chancellor, with Purse and Mace before him.
  - 4 Quiristers singing. Musicke
  - 5 Mayor of London, bearing the Mace. Then Garter, in his Coat of Armes, and on his head he wore a Gilt Copper Crowne.
  - 6 Marquesse Dorset, bearing a Scepter of Gold, on his head,
a Demy Coronall of Gold. With him, the Earle of Surrey, bearing the Rod of Silver with the Doue, Crowned with an Earles Coronet. Collars of Effes.
  - 7 Duke of Suffolke, in his Robe of Estate, his Coronet on his head bearing a long white Wand, as High Steward. With him, the Duke of Norfolk, with the Rod of Marshallship, a Coronet on his head. Collars of Effes.
  - 8 A Canopy, borne by foure of the Cinque-Ports, under it the Queene in her Robe, in her haire, richly adorned with Pearle Crowned. On each side her, the Bishops of London, and Winchester
  - 9 The Olde Dutchesse of Norfolk, in a Coronall of Gold, wrought with Flowers bearing the Queenes Traine
  - 10 Certaine Ladies or Countesses, with plaine Circlets of Gold, without Flowers
- Exeant, first passing over the Stage in Order and State, and then, A great Flourish of Trumpets.

1 A Royall Trainee beleue me. These I know.
Who's that that beares the Scepter?

1 Marquesse Dorset,
And that the Earle of Surrey with the Rod.
2 A bold braue Gentleman, That should bee
The Duke of Suffolke.

1 'Tis the same. high Steward.
2 And that my Lord of Norfolk?

1 Yes,
2 Heauen blethe thee,
Thou hast the sweetest face I euer look'd on.
Sir, as I haue a Soule, she is an Angell;
Our King has all the Indies in his Armes,
And more, and richer, when he straines that Lady,
I cannot blame his Conscience.

1 They that beare
The Cloath of Honour ouer her, are foure Barons
Of the Cinque Ports.

2 Those men are happy,
And so are all, are neere her.
I take it, she that carries vp the Traine,
Is that old Noble Lady Dutchesse of Norfolk.

1 It is, and all the rest are Countesses.
2 Their Coronets say so. These are Starres indeed,
And sometimes falling ones.
2 No more of that.

Enter a third Gentleman.

1 God saue you Sir. Where haue you bin broiling?
3 Among the crow'd 't' the Abbey, where a finger
Could not be wedg'd in more. I am stifled
With the meere ranknesse of their ioy.

2 You saw the Ceremony?
3 That I did.
1 How was it?

3 Well worth the seeing.
2 Good Sir, speake it to vs?
3 As well as I am able. The rich streame
Of Lords, and Ladies, hauing brought the Queene
To a prepar'd place in the Quire fell off
A distance from her, while her Grace sat downe
To rest a while, some halfe an houre, or so,
In a rich Chaire of State, opposing freely
The Beauty of her Person to the People.

Beleue me Sir, she is the goodliest Woman
That euer lay beuon. which when the people
Had the full view of, such a noyle arose,
As the shrowdes make at Sea, in a stiff Tempest,
As lowd, and to as many Tunes. Hats, Cloakes,
(Doubtless, I thinke) flew vp, and had their Faces
Bin loose, this day they had bene lost. Such ioy
I neuer saw before. Great belly'd women,
That had not halfe a weeke to go, like Rammes
In the old time of Warre, would shake the prease
And make 'em reele befor 'em. No man liuing
Could say this is my wife there, all were wouen
So strangely in one peece.

2 But what follow'd?
3 At length, her Grace rose, and with modest pace
Came to the Altar, where she kneel'd, and Saint-like
Cast her faire eyes to Heauen, and pray'd devoutly.

Then rose againe, and bow'd her to the people:
When by the Arch-bishop of Canterbury,
She had all the Royall makings of a Queene;
As holy Oyle, Edward Confessors Crowne,
The Rod, and Bird of Peace and all such Emblemes
Laid Nobly on her: which perform'd, the Quire

With

With all the choyest Musicke of the Kingdome,
Together sung Te Deum. So she parted,
And with the same full State pac'd backe againe
To Yorke-Place, where the Feasts held.

1 Sir,
You must no more call it Yorke-place, that's past:
For since the Cardinall fell, that Titles lost,
'Tis now the Kings, and call'd White-Hall.

3 I know it:
But 'tis so lately alter'd, that the old name
Is fresh about me.

2 What two Reverend Bishops
Were those that went on each side of the Queene?

3 Stokeley and Gardiner, the one of Winchester,
Newly prefer'd from the Kings Secretary.
The other London.

2 He of Winchester
Is held no great good lover of the Archbishops,
The vertuous Crammer.

3 All the Land knowes that
How euer, yet there is no great breach, when it comes Crammer will finde a Friend will not shrinke from him.

2 Who may that be, I pray you.

3 Thomas Cromwell,
A man in much esteeme with th'King, and truly
A worthy Friend The King he's made him
Master o'th' Jewell House,
And one already of the Priuy Councell

Scena Secunda.

Enter Katherine Dowager, sicke, lea'd betweene Griffith, her Gentleman & Sister, and Patience her Woman

Grif. How do's your Grace?

Kath O Griffith, sicke to death
My Legges like loaden Branches bow to th'Earth,
Willing to leaue their burthen. Reach a Chaire,
So now (me thinkes) I feele a little ease.
D'd'st thou not tell me Grifith, as thou lead'st mee,
That the great Childe of Honor, Cardinall Wolsey
Was dead?

Grif. Yes Madam but I thanke your Grace
Out of the paine, you suffer'd, gaue no care too't
Kath. Pre'thee good Griffith, tell me how he dy'de.
If well, he slept before me happily
For my example

Grif. Well, the voyce goes Madam,
For after the stout Earle Northumberland
Arrested him at Yorke, and brought him forward
As a man forcibly tainted, to his Answer,
He fell sicke sodainly, and grew so ill
He could not sit his Mule.

Kath. Alas poore man,

Grif At last, with easie Rodes, he came to Leicester,

Lodg'd in the Abbey; where the reuerend Abbot
With all his Couent; honourably recei'd him;
To whom he gaue these words. O Father Abbot,
An old man, broken with the stormes of State,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye.

Giue him a little earth for Charity.
So went to bed; where eagerly his sicknesse
Pursu'd him still, and three nights after this,
About the houre of eight, which he himselfe
Foreto'd should be his last, full of Repentance,
Continuall Meditations, Teares, and sorrowes,
He gaue his Honors to the world agen,
His blessed part to Heaven, and slept in peace.

Kath. So may he rest,
His Faulks lye gently on him:
Yet thus faire Griffith, giue me leaue to speake him,
And yet with Charity. He was a man
Of an vnbounded stomacke, euer ranking
Himselfe with Princes One that by suggestion
Ty'de all the Kingdome Symonie, was faire play,
His owne Opinion was his Law I th'presence
He would say vn'ruths, and be euer double
Both in his words, and meaning. He was neuer
(But where he meant to Ruine) pittifull
His Promises, were as he then was, Mighty:
But his performance, as he is now, Nothing
Of his owne body he was ill, and gaue
The Clergy ill example.

Grif. Noble Madam.
Mens euill manners, lye in Brasse, their Vertues
We write in Water. May I please your Highnesse
To heare me speake his good now?

Kath Yes good Griffith,
I were malicious else.

Grif. This Cardinall,
Though from an humble Stocke, vndoubtedly
Was fashion'd to much Honor. From his Cradle
He was a Scholler, and a ripe, and good one
Exceeding wise, faire spoken, and perswading
Lofly, and fowre to them that lou'd him not:
But, to those men that sought him, sweet as Summer.
And though he were vn'satisfied in getting,
(Which was a sinne) yet in bestowing, Madam,
He was most Princely. Euer winnesse for him
Those eu'nnes of Learning, that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich and Oxford: one of which, fell with him,
Vn'willing to out-live the good that did it
The other (though vnfinish'd) yet so Famous,
So excellent in Art, and fill'd with learning,
That Christendome shall euer speake his Vertue.
His Ouertthrow, heap'd Happinesse vpon him:
For then, and not till then, he felt himselfe,
And found the Blessednesse of being little.
And to adde greater Honors to his Age
Then man could giue him, he dy'de, fearing God.

Kath After my death, I wish no other Herald,
No other speaker of my liuing Actions,
To keepe mine Honor, from Corruption,
But such an honest Chronicler as Griffith.
Whom I most hated Liuing, thou hast made mee
With thy Religious Truth, and Modestie.
(Now in his Ashes) Honor Peace be with him.
Patience, be neere me still, and set me lower,
I haue not long to trouble thee. Good Griffith,
Cause the Musicians play me that sad note
I nam'd my Knell, whilst I sit meditating

On that Coelestiall Harmony I go too.

Sad and solemne Musicke.

Grif. She is asleep. Good wench, let's sit down quiet,
For feare we wake her. Softly, gentle Patience.

The Vision

Enter solemnely tripping one after another, sixe Personages, clad in white Robes, wearing on their heades Garlands of Bayes, and golden Vizards on their faces, Branches of Bayes or Palme in their hands. They first Conge unto her, then Dance. and at certaine Changes, the first two hold a spare Garland over her Head, at which the other fower make reuerend Curties. Then the two that held the Garland, deliuer the same to the other next two, who obserue the same order in their Changes, and holding the Garland over her head. Which done, they deliuer the same Garland to the last two: who likewise obserue the same Order. At which (as it were by inspiration) she makes (in her sleepe) signes of reioycing, and holdeth up her hands to heauen. And so, in their Dancing vanishe, carrying the Garland with them. The Musicke continues.

Kath. Spirits of peace, where are ye? Are ye all gone?
And leaue me heere in wretchednesse, behinde ye?

Grif. Madam, we are heere.

Kath. It is not you I call for,
Saw ye none enter since I slept?

Grif. None Madam.

Kath. No? Saw you not even now a blessed Troope
Inuite me to a Banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thou and beames vpon me, like the Sun?
They promis'd me eternall Happinesse,
And brought me Garlands (Griffith) which I seele
I am not worthy yet to weare. I shall assuredly

Grif. I am most ioyfull Madam, such good dreames Possesse your Fancy.

Kath. Bid the Musicke leaue,
They are harsh and heavy to me.

Musicke ceases.

Pats. Do you note?

How much her Grace is alter'd on the sodaine?
How long her face is drawne? How pale the lookes,
And of an earthy cold? Marke her eyes?

Grif. She is going Wench. Pray, pray.

Pats. Heauen comfort her.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. And't like your Grace—

Kath. You are a saw cy Fellow,
Deserue we no more Reuerence?

Grif. You are too blame,
Knowing she will not loofe her wonted Greatnesse
To vse so rude behaviour. Go too, kneele.

Mes. I humbly do entreat your Highnesse pardon,
My hast made me vnmanly. There is staying
A Gentleman sent from the King, to see you.

Kath. Admit him entrance Griffith. But this Fellow
Let me ne're see againe. Exit Messeng.

Enter Lord Capuchin.

If my sight faile not,
You should be Lord Ambassador from the Emperour,
My Royall Nephew, and your name Capuchin.

Cap. Madam the same. Your Seruant.

Kath. O my Lord,
The Times and Tides now are alter'd strangely
With me, since first you knew me.
But I pray you,
What is your pleasure with me?

Cap. Noble Lady,

First mine owne seruice to your Grace, the next
The Kings request, that I would visit you,
Who greues much for your weaknesse, and by me
Sends you his Princely Commendations,
And heartily entreats you take good comfort.

Kath. O my good Lord, that comfort comes too late,
'Tis like a Pardon after Execution;
That gentle Physicke giuen in time, had cur'd me
But now I am past all Comforts heere, but Prayers.
How does his Highnesse?

Cap. Madam, in good health.

Kath. So may he euer do, and euer flourish,
When I shall dwell with Wormes, and my poore name
Banish'd the Kingdome. Patience, is that Letter
I caus'd you write, yet sent away?

Pats. No Madam.

Kath. Sir, I most humbly pray you to deliuer
This to my Lord the King.

Cap. Most willing Madam.

Kath. In which I haue commended to his goodnesse
The Modell of our chaste loues: his yong daughter,
The dewes of Heauen fall thicke in Blessings on her,
Beseeching him to giue her vertuous breeding.
She is yong, and of a Noble modest Nature,
I hope the will deserue well; and a little
To loue her for her Mothers sake, that lou'd him,
Heauen knowes how deere.

My next poore Petition,
Is, that his Noble Grace would haue some pittie
Vpon my wretched women, that so long
Haue follow'd both my Fortunes, faithfully,
Of which there is not one, 'dare auow
(And now I should not lye) but will deserue
For Vertue, and true Beaurie of the Soule,
For honestie, and decent Carrage
A right good Husband (let him be a Noble)
And sure those men are happy that shall haue 'em.
The last is for my men, they are the poorest,
(But pouerty could neuer draw 'em from me)
That they may haue their wages, duly paid 'em.
And something ouer to remember me by.

If Heauen had pleas'd to haue giuen me longer life
And able meanes, we had not parted thus.
These are the whole Contents, and good my Lord,
By that you looe the dearest in this world,
As you wish Christian peace to Soules departed,
Stand these poore peoples Friend, and vrge the King
To do me this last right.

Cap. By Heauen I will,
Or let me loofe the fashion of a man.

Kath. I thanke you honest Lord. Remember me
In all humilitie vnto his Highnesse:
Say his long trouble now is passing
Out of this world. Tell him in death I blest him
(For so I will) mine eyes grow dimme. Farewell
My Lord. Griffith farewell. Nay Patience,
You must not leaue me yet. I must to bed,
Call in more women. When I am dead, good Wench,
Let me be vs'd with Honor; strewe me ouer
With Maiden Flowers, that all the world may know
I was a chaste Wife, to my Graue: Embalme me,
Then lay me forth (although vnqueen'd) yet like
A Queene, and Daughter to a King euer to me.
I can no more.

Scena

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Gardiner Bishop of Winchester, a Page with a Torch before him, met by Sir Thomas Lovell.

God. It's one a clocke Boy, is't not.

Boy. It hath strooke.

Gard. These should be houres for necessities,
Not for delights Times to repayre our Nature
With comforting repose, and not for vs
To waste these times. Good houre of night Sir Thomas:
Whether so late?

Lon. Came you from the King, my Lord?

Gard. I did Sir Thomas, and left him at Primero
With the Duke of Suffolke.

Lon. I must to him too
Before he go to bed. He take my leaue.

Gard. Not yet Sir Thomas Lovell. what's the matter?
It seemes you are in hast and if there be
No great offence belonge too't, giue your Friend
Some touch of your late businesse. Affaires that walke
(As they say Spirits do) at midnight, haue
In them a wilder Nature, then the businesse
That seekes dispatch by day.

Lon. My Lord, I loue you;
And durst commend a secret to your eare
Much waighier then this worke. The Queens in Labor
They say in great Extremity, and fear'd
Shée'l with the Labour, end.

Gard. The fruite she goes with
I pray for heartily, that it may finde
Good time, and liue but for the Stocke Sir Thomas,
I wish it grubb'd vp now.

Lon. Methinkes I could Cry the Amen, and yet my Conscience sayes
Shée's a good Creature, and sweet-Ladie do's
Deferue our better wishes.

Gard. But Sir,
Heare me Sir Thomas, y'are a Gentleman
Of mine owne way. I know you Wise, Religious,
And let me tell you, it will ne're be well,
'Till not Sir Thomas Lovell, tak'e of me,
Till Cranmer, Cromwel, her two hands, and shée
Sleep in their Graues

Lovell. Now Sir, you speake of two
The most remark'd i'th'Kingdome: as for Cromwel,
Beside that of the Iewell-House, is made Master
O'th'Rolles, and the Kings Secretary. Further Sir,
S a i'ds in the gap and Trade of moe Preferments,
With which the Lime will loade him. Th'Arch-bishop
I, e the Kings hand, and tongue, and who dare speak
One syllable against him?

Gard. Yes, yes, Sir Thomas,
There are that Dare, and I my selfe haue ventur'd
To speake my minde of him. and indeed this day,
Sir (I may tell it you) I thinke I haue
Incent the Lords o'th' Councell, that he is (For so I know he is, they know he is)
A most Arch-Hereticke, a Pestilence
That does infect the Land with which, they moued
Haue broken with the King, who hath so farre
Giuen eare to our Complaynt, of his great Grace,
And Princely Care, fore-seeing those fell Mischiefs.

Our Reasons layd before him, hath commanded
To morrow Morning to the Counceli Boord
He be conuented. He's a ranke weed Sir Thomas,
And we must root him out From your Affaires
I hinder you too long : Good night, Sir Thomas.

Exit Gardiner and Page.

Lon. Many good nights, my Lord, I rest your seruant.
Enter King and Suffolke.

King. Charles, I will play no more to night,
My mindes not on't, you are too hard for me.

Suff. Sir, I did neuer win of you before.

King. But little Charles,
Nor shall not when my Fancies on my play.
Now Lovell, from the Queene what is the Newes.

Lon. I could not personally deliuer to her
What you commanded me, but by her woman,
I sent your Message, who return'd her thankses
In the great'st humblenesse, and desir'd your Highnesse
Most heartily to pray for her.

King. What say'st thou? Ha?
To pray for her? What is she crying out?

Lon. So said her woman, and that her suffrance made Almost each pang, a death.

King. Alas good Lady.

Suff. God safely quit her of her Burthen, and
With gent'e Trauaile, to the gladding of Your Highnesse with an Heire.

King. 'Tis midnight Charles,
Prythee to bed, and in thy Prayres remember
Th'e state of my poore Queene Leau me alone,
For I must thinke of that, which company
Would not be friendly too.

Suff. I wish your Highnesse
A quiet night, and my good Mistris will Remember in my Prayers.

King. Charles good night. Exit Suffolke.
Well Sir, what followes?

Enter Sir Anthony Denny.

Den. Sir, I haue brought my Lord the Arch-bishop,
As you commanded me

King. Ha? Canterbury?

Den. I my good Lord.

King. 'Tis true where is he Denny?

Den. He attends your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Bring him to Vs

Lon. This is about that, which the Byshop spake,
I am happily come hither.

Enter Cranmer and Denny.

King. Auoyd the Gallery. Lovell seemes to stay.
Ha? I haue said. Be gone.

What? Exeunt Lovell and Denny.

Cran. I am fearefull : Wherefore frownes he thus?
'Tis his Aspect of Terror. All's not well.

King. How now my Lord?
You do desire to know wherefore
I sent for you

Cran. It is my dutie
T'attend your Highnesse pleasure.

King. Pray you arise
My good and gracious Lord of Canterburie :
Come, you and I must walke a turne together :
I haue Newes to tell you.

Come, come, giue me your hand.
Ah my good Lord, I greeue at what I speake,
And am right sorrie to repeat what followes.
I haue, and most vnwillingly of late

Heard many greuous. I do say my Lord
Greuous complaints of you, which being consider'd,
Haue mou'd Vs, and our Councell, that you shall
This Morning come before vs, where I know
You cannot with such freedome purge your selfe,
But that till further Trill, in those Charges
Which will require your Answer, you must take
Your patience to you, and be well contented
To make your house our Towre: you, a Brother of vs
It fits we thus proceed, or else no witness
Would come against you

Cran. I humbly thanke your Highnesse,
And am right glad to catch this good occasion
Most thoroughly to be winnowed, where my Chaffe
And Corne shall flye asunder. For I know
There's none stands vnder more calumnious tongues,
Then I my selfe, poore man.

King. Stand vp, good Canterbury,
Thy Truth, and thy Integrity is rooted
In vs thy Friend. Gue me thy hand, stand vp,
Prythee let's walke Now by my Holydame,
What manner of man are you? My Lord, I look'd
You would haue giuen me your Petition, that I should inue tane some paines, to bring together
Your selfe, and your Accusers, and to haue heard you
Without indurance further.

Cran. Most dread Liege,
The good I stand on, is my Truth and Honesty:
If they shall faile, I with mine Enemies
Will triumph o're my person, which I waig't not,
Being of those Vertues vacant. I feare nothing
What can be said against me.

King. Know you not
How your state stands i'th' world, with the whole world?
Your Enemies are many, and not small, their practises
Must beare the same proportion, and not euer
The Iustice and the Truth o'th' question carries
The dew o'th' Verdict with it; at what ease
Might corrupt mindes procure, Knaues as corrupt
To sweare against you Such things haue bene done.
You are Potently oppos'd, and with a Malice
Of as great Size Weene you of better lucke,
I meane in perjur'd Witness, then your Master,
Whose Minister you are, whilst here he liu'd
Vpon this naughty Earth? Go too, go too,
You take a Piecept for no scape of danger,
And woe your owne destruction.

Cran. God, and your Maiesty
Protect mine innocence, or I fall into
The trap is laid for me

King. Be of good cheere,
They shall no more p'uaile, then we giue way too:
Keepe comfort to you, and this Morning see
You do appeare before them. If they shall chance
In charging you with matters, to commit you.
The best perswasions to the contrary
Faile not to vse, and with what vehemenie
Th'occasion shall instruct you. If intreaties
Will render you no remedy, this Ring
Deliu'er them, and your Appeal to vs
There make before them. Lobke, the Goodman weeps:
He's honest on mine Honor. Gods blest Mother,
I sweare he is true-hearted, and a soule
None better in my Kingdome. Get you gone,
And do as I haue bid you. Exit Cranmer.
He ha's strangled his Language in his teares.

Enter Olde Lady.

Gent within. Come backe.. what meane you?

Lady Ile not come backe, the tydings that I bring
Will make my boldnesse, manners Now good Angels
Fly o're thy Royall head, and shade thy person
Vnder their blessed wings.

King. Now by thy looks
I gesse thy Message. Is the Queene deliuer'd?
Say I, and of a boy.

Lady I, I my Liege,
And of a louely Boy. the God of heauen
Both now, and euer blesse her: 'Tis a Gyrle
Promises Boyes hereafter Sir, your Queen
Desires your Visitation, and to be Acquainted with this stranger; 'tis as like you,
As Cherry, is to Cherry.

King Lowell,

Lou Sir

King. Giue her an hundred Markes.
Ile to the Queene. Exit King.

Lady. An hundred Markes? By this light, Ile ha more
An ordinary Groome is for such payment.
I will haue more, or scold it out of him.
Said I for this, the Gyrle was like to him? Ile
Haue more, or else vn say't. and now, while 'tis hot,
Ile put it to the issue. Exit Lady

Scena Secunda.

Enter Cranmer, Archbys(hop of Canterbury.

Cran. I hope I am not too late, and yet the Gentleman
That was sent to me from the Councell, pray'd me
To make great hast. All fast? What meanes this? Hoa?
Who waites there? Sure you know me?

Enter Keeper.

Keeper Yes, my Lord.
But yet I cannot helpe you.

Cran. Why?

Keeper. Your Grace must waight till you be call'd for.

Enter Doctor Butts.

Cran. So.

Butts. This is a Peere of Malice: I am glad
I came this way so happily. The King
Shall vnderstand so presently. Exit Butts

Cran. 'Tis Butts.

The Kings Physitian, as he past along
How earnestly he cast his eyes vpon me:
Pray heauen he found not my disgrace: for certaine
This is of purpose laid by some that hate me,
(God turne their hearts. I neuer sought their malice)
To quench mine Honor; they would shame to make me
Wait else at doore: a fellow Councillor
'Mong Boyes, Groomes, and Lackeyes.
But their pleasures
Must be fulfill'd, and I attend with patience.

Enter the King, and Butts, at a Window aboue.

Butts Ile shew your Grace the strangest sight.

King. What's that Butts?

Butts

Butts. I thinke your Highnesse saw this many a day.

Kin. Body a me. where is it?

Butts. There my Lord:

The high promotion of his Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his State at dore 'mongst Pursuants,
Pages, and Foot-boyes.

Kin. Ha? 'Tis he indeed.

Is this the Honour they doe one another?

'Tis we'll there s one about em yer; I had thought
They had parted to much honesty among 'em,
At least good manners, as not thus to suffer
A man of his Place, and so nere our fauour
To dance attendance on their Lordships pleasures
And at the dore too, like a Post with Packets
By holy Mary (Butts) there's knauery,
Let 'em alone, and draw the Curtaine close:
We shall heare more anon.

*A Councell Table brought in with Chayres and Stooles, and placed vnder the State. Enter Lord Chancelour, places himselfe at the upper end of the Table, on the left hand: A
Seate being left void aboue him, as for Canterburies Seate.
Duke of Suffolke, Duke of Norfolk, Surrey, Lord Chamber-laine, Gardiner, seat themselves in Order on each side Cromwell at lower end, as Secretary.*

Chan. Speake to the businesse, M. Secretary,

Why are we met in Councell?

Crom. Please your Honours,

The chiefe cause concernes his Grace of Canterbury.

Gard. Ha's he had knowledge of it?

Crom. Yes.

Norfol. Who waits there?

Keep. Without my Noble Lords?

Gard. Yes.

Keep. My Lord Archbishop.

And ha's done halfe an houre to know your pleasures.

Chan. Let him come in

Keep. Your Grace may enter now.

Granmer approaches the Councell Table

Chan. My good Lord Archbishop, I'm very sorry
To sit here at this present, and behold
That Chayre stand empty. But we all are men
In our owne natures fraile, and capable
Of our flesh, few are Angels; out of which frailty
And want of wisdom, you that best should teach vs,
Haue misdeame'd your selfe, and not a little;
Toward the King first, then his Lawes, in filling
The whole Realme, by your teaching & your Chaplaines
(For so we are inform'd) with new opinions,
Diuers and dangerous, which are Heresies;
And not reform'd, may proue pernicious

Gard. Which Reformation must be sodaine too
My Noble Lords, for those that tame wild Horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouthes with stubborn Bits & spurres 'em,
Till they obey the mannage. If we suffer
Out of our easinesse and childish pittie
To one mans Honour, this contagious sicknesse;
Farewell all Physicke. and what followes then?
Commonions, vprores, with a generall Taint
Of the whole State; as of late dayes our neighbours,
The vpper Germany can dearely witness:
Yet freshly pittied in our memories.

Cran. My good Lords; Hitherto, in all the Progress
Both of my Life and Office, I haue labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching

And the strong course of my Authority,
Might goe one way, and safely, and the end
Was euer to doe well: nor is there liuing,
(I speake it with a single heart, my Lords)
A man that more detells, more sturres against,
Both in his priuate Conscience, and his place,
Defacers of a publique peace then I doe:
Pray Heauen the King may neuer find a heart
With lesse Allegaunce in it. Men that make Enuy, and crooked malice, nourishment;
Dare bite the best. I doe beseech your Lordships,
That in this case of Iustice, my Accusers,
Be what they will, may stand forth face to face,
And freely vrge against me

Suff. Nay, my Lord,

That cannot be, you are a Counsellor,
And by that vertue no man dare accuse you. (ment,

Gard. My Lord, because we haue busines of more mo-
We will be short with you 'Tis his Highnesse pleasure
And our consent, for better tryall of you,
From hence you be committed to the Tower,
Where being but a priuate man againe,
You shall know many dare accuse you boldly,
More then (I feare); on are prouided for.

Cran. Ah my good Lord of Winchester. I thanke you,
You are alwayes my good Friend, if your will passe,
I shall both finde your Lordship, ludge and iuror,
You are so mercifull I see your end,
'Tis my vndoiing. Loue and meekenesse, Lord
Become a Churchman, better then Ambition.
Win straying Soules with modesty againe,
Cast none away That I shall cleere my selfe,
Lay all the weight ye can vpon my patience,
I make as little doubt as you doe conscience,
In doing dayly wrongs I could say more,
But reuence to your calling, makes me modest.

Gard. My Lord, my Lord, you are a Sectary,
That's the plaine truth; your painted glosse discovers
To men that vnderstand you, words and weaknesse.

Crom. My Lord of Winchester, y'are a little,
By your good fauour, too sharpe, Men so Noble,
How euer faultily, yet should finde respect
For what they haue beene: 'tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.

Gard. Good M. Secretary,
I cry your Honour mercie; you may work
Of all this Table say so.

Crom. Why my Lord?

Gard. Doe not I know you for a Fauourer
Of this new Sect? ye are not found,

Crom. Not found?

Gard. Not found I say.

Crom. Would you were halfe so honest:
Mens prayers then would seeke you, not their feares.

Gard. I shall remember this bold Language.

Crom. Doe.

Remember your bold life too

Chan. This is too much;
Forbeare for shame my Lords.

Gard. I haue done

Crom. And I.

Chan. Then thus for you my Lord, it stands agreed
I take it, by all voyces: That forthwith,
You be conuaid to th' Tower a Prisoner;
There to remaine till the Kings further pleasure
Be knowne vnto vs: are you all agreed Lords.

All. We are.

Cran. Is there no other way of mercy,
But I must needs to th' Tower my Lords?

Gard. What other,
Would you expect? You are strangely troublesome:
Let some o' th' Guard be ready there.

Enter the Guard.

Cran. For me?

Must I go like a Traytor thither?

Gard. Receive him,
And see him safe i' th' Tower.

Cran. Stay good my Lords,
I haue a little yet to say. I looke there my Lords,
By vertue of that Ring, I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruell men, and giue it
To a most Noble Iudge, the King my Maister.

Cham. This is the Kings Ring.

Sur. 'Tis no counterfeit.

Suff. 'Tis the right Ring, by Heau'n I told ye all,
When we first put this dangerous stone a rowling,
'T would fall vpon our selues.

Nor. Doe you thinke my Lords
The King will suffer but the little finger
Of this man to be vex'd?

Cham. 'Tis now too certaine;
How much more is his Life in value with him?
Would I were fairly out on't.

Crom. My mind gaue me,
In seeking tales and Informations
Against this man, whose honesty the Diuell
And his Disciples onely enuy at,
Ye blew the fire that burnes ye, now haue at ye.

Enter King frowning on them, takes his Seate.

Gard. Dread Soueraigne,
How much are we bound to Heauen,
In dayly thanks; that gaue vs such a Prince;
Not onely good and wise, but most religious.
One that in all obedience, makes the Church
The cheefe ayme of his Honour, and to strengthen
That holy duty out of deare respect,
His Royall selfe in Iudgement comes to heare
The cause betwixt her, and this great offender.

Kim. You were euer good at sodaine Commendations,
Bishop of Winchester. But know I come not
To heare such flattery now, and in my presence
They are too thin, and base to hide offences,
To me you cannot reach. You play the Spaniell,
And thinke with wagging of your tongue to win me:
But whatsoere thou tak'st me for; I'm sure
Thou hast a cruell Nature and a bloody.
Good man sit downe: Now let me see the proudest
Hee, that dares most, but wag his finger at thee.
By all that's holy, he had better starue,
Then but once thinke his place becomes thee nor.

Sur. May it please your Grace; —

Kim. No Sir, it doe's not please me,
I had thought, I had had men of some vnderstanding,
And wisdom of my Councell; but I finde none:
Was it discretion Lords, to let this man,
This good man (few of you deserue that Title)
This honest man, wait like a lowlie Foot-boy
At Chamber dore? and one, as great as you are?
Why, what a shame was this? Did my Commission
Bid ye so farre forget your selues? I gaue ye Power, as he was a Counsellour to try him,

Not as a Groom: There's some of ye, I see,
More out of Malice then Integrity,
Would trye him to the vtmost, had ye meane,
Which ye shall neuer haue while I liue.

Chan. Thus farre

My most dread Soueraigne, may it like your Grace,
To let my tongue excuse all. What was purpos'd Concerning his Imprisonment, was rather (If there be faith in men) meant for his Tryall,
And faire purgation to the world then malice,
I'm sure in me.

Kim. Well, well my Lords respect him,
Take him, and vse him well; hee's worthy of it.
I will say thus much for him, if a Prince
May be beholding to a Subiect; I
Am for his loue and seruice, so to him.
Make men no more adoe, but all embrace him;
Be friends for shame my Lords: My Lord of Canterbury
I haue a Suite which you must not deny mee.
That is, a faire young Maid that yet wants Baptisme,
You must be Godfather, and answere for her.

Cran. The greatest Monarch now aliuie may glory
In such an honour. how may I deserue it,
That am a poore and humble Subiect to you?

Kim. Come, come my Lord, you'd spare your spoones,
You shall haue two noble Partners with you: the old Duchesse of Norfolke, and Lady Marquesse Dorset? will these please you?

Once more my Lord of Winchester, I charge you
Embrace, and loue this man.

Gard. With a true heart,
And Brotherly loue I doe it.

Cran. And let Heauen
Witness how deare, I hold this Confirmation. (hearts)

Kim. Good Man, those ioyfull teares shew thy true
The common voyce I see is verified
Of thee, which sayes thus: Doe my Lord of Canterbury
A shrewd turne, and hee's your friend for euer:
Come Lords; we trifle time away. I long
To haue this young one made a Christian.
As I haue made ye one Lords, one remaine:
So I grow stronger, you more Honour gaine. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Noyse and Tumult within: Enter Porter and his men.

Port. You'll leaue your noyse anon ye Rascals: doe
you take the Court for Parish Garden. ye rude Slaues, leaue your gaping:

Within. Good M. Porter I belong to th' Larder.

Port. Belong to th' Gallows, and be hang'd ye Rogue:
Is this a place to roare in? Fetch me a dozen Crab-tree staues, and strong ones; these are but switches to 'em:
Ile scratch your heads, you must be seeing Christenings?
Do you looke for Ale, and Cakes heere, you rude Raskalls?

Man. Pray Sir be patient; 'tis as much impossible,
Vnlesse wee sweepe 'em from the dore with Cannons,
To scatter 'em, as 'tis to make 'em sleepe
On May-day Morning, which will neuer be:
We may as well push against Powles as stirre 'em.

Port. How got they in, and be hang'd?

Man.

Man. Alas I know not, how gets the Tide in?
As much as one found Cudgell of foure foote,
(You see the poore remainder) could distribute,
I maue no spare Sir.

Port. You did nothing Sir

Man. I am not Sampson, nor Sir Guy, nor Colebrand,
To mow 'em downe before me: but if I spar'd any
That had a head to hit, either young or old,
He or shee, Cuckold or Cuckold-maker.
Let me ne're hope to see a Chime againe,
And that I would not for a Cow, God saue her.

Within. Do you heare M Porter?

Port. I shall be with you presently, good M Pippy, Keepe the dore close Sirha.

Man. What would you haue me doe?

Por. What should you doe,
But knock 'em downe by th' dozens? Is this More fields
'to murther in? Or haue wee some strange Indian with the great Toole, come to Court, the women so besiege vs?
Blesse me, what a fry of Fornication is at dore? On my Christian Conscience this one Christening will beget a thousand, here will bee Father, God-father, and all together

Man. The Spoones will be the bigger Sir. There is a fellow somewhat neere the doore, he should be a Brasier
by his face, for o'my conscience twenty of the Dogdayes now reigne in's Nose, all that stand about him are vnder the Line, they need no other pennance. that Fire-
Drake did I hit three times on the head, and three times was his Nose discharged against mee, hee stands there like a Morter-piece to blow vs. There was a Habberdashers Wife of small wit, neere him, that rail'd vpon me, till her pinck'd porringer fell off her head, for kindling such a combustion in the State. I mist the Meteor once, and hit that Woman, who cryed out Clubbes, when I might see from farre, some forty Truncheoners draw to her succour, which were the hope o'th' Strand where she was quartered, they fell on, I made good my place; at length they came to th' broome staffe to me, I decide 'em
sil, when sodainly a File of Boyes behind 'em, loose shot, deliuer'd such a shower of Pibbles, that I was faine to draw mine Honour in, and let 'em win the Worke, the Diuell was amongst 'em I thinke surely.

Por. These are the youths that thunder at a Playhouse, and fight for bitten Apples, that no Audience but the tribulation of Tower Hill, or the Limbes of Limehouse, their deare Brothers are able to endure. I haue some of 'em in Limbo Patrum, and there they are like to dance these three dayes, besides the running Banquet of two Beadles, that is to come.

Enter Lord Chamberlaine.

Cham. Mercy o'me. what a Multitude are heere?
(They grow still too, from all Parts they are coming,
As if we kept a Faire heere? Where are these Porters?
These lazy knaues? Yhaue made a fine hand fellowes?
There's a trim rabble let in are all these
Your faithfull friends o'th' Suburbs? We shall haue
Great store of roome no doubt, left for the Ladies,
When they passe backe from the Christening?

Por. And't please your Honour,
We are but men; and what so many may doe,
Not being torne a peeces, we haue done:
An Army cannot rule 'em.

Cham. As I liue,
If the King blame me for't, Ile lay ye all

By th' heeles, and sodainly, and on your heads
Clap round Fines for neglect. y'are lazy knaues,
And heere ye lye bawling of Bombards, when Ye should be Seruice. Harke the Trumpets sound,
Th'are come already from the Christening,
Go breake among the preasse, and finde away out
To let the Troope passe fairely, or Ile finde
A Marshallsey, shall hold ye play these two Monthes.

Por. Make way there, for the Princessse.

Man. You great fellow,
Stand close vp, or Ile make your head ake.

Por. You'r th' Chamb'ler, get vp o'th' raile,
Ile pecke you o're the pales else. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Trumpets sounding. Then two Aldermen, L. Maior, Garter, Crammer, Duke of Norfolk with his Marshalls Staffe, Duke of Suffolke, two Noblemen, bearing great standing Bowles for the Christening Guests. Then foure Noblemen bearing a Canopy, under which the Dutcheffe of Norfolk, Godmother, bearing the Childe richly habited in a Mantle, &c. Traine borne by a Lady. Then follows the Marshawesse Dorset, the other Godmother, and Ladies. The Troope passe once about the Stage, and Garter speaks.

Gart. Heauen

From thy endlesse goodnesse, send prosperous life,
Long, and euer happie, to the high and Mighty Princessse of England Elizabeth.

Flourish. Enter King and Guard.

Cran. And to your Royall Grace, & the good Queen,
My Noble Partners, and my selfe thus pray
All comfort, ioy in this most gracious Lady,
Heauen euery laud vp to make Parents happy,
May hourly fall vpon ye

Kim. Thanke you good Lord Archbishop:
What is her Name?

Cran. Elizabeth.

Kim. Stand vp Lord,
With this Kisse, take my Blessing. God protect thee,
Into whose hand, I giue thy Life.

Cran. Amen.

Kim. My Noble Gossips, y'haue beene too Prodigally,
I thanke ye heartily: So shall this Lady,
When she ha's so much English.

Cran. Let me speake Sir,
For Heauen now bids me, and the words I vtter,
Let none thinke Flattery, for they'l finde 'em Truth.
This Royall Infant, Heauen still moue about her;
Though in her Cradle; yet now promises
Vpon this Land a thousand thousand Blessings,
Which Time shall bring to ripenesse: She shall be,
(But few now liuing can behold that goodnesse)
A Patterne to all Princes liuing with her,
And all that shall succede: Saba was neuer
More couetous of Wisedome, and faire Vertue
Then this pure Soule shall be. All Princely Graces
That mould vp such a mighty Piece as this is,
With all the Vertues that attend the good,
Shall still be doubled on her. Truth shall Nurse her,

Holy

Holy and Heauenly thoughts still Counsell her.
 She shall be lou'd and fear'd, Her owne shall blesse her;
 Her Foes shake like a Field of beaten Corne,
 And hang their heads with sorrow.
 Good growes with her
 In her dayes, Euery Man shall eate in safety,
 Vnder his owne Vine what he plants; and sing
 The merry Songs of Peace to all his Neighbours.
 God shall be truly knowne, and those about her,
 From her shall read the perfect way of Honour,
 And by those claime their greatnesse, not by Blood.
 Nor shall this peace sleepe with her. But as when
 The Bird of Wonder dyes, the Mayden Phoenix,
 Her Ashes new create another Heyre,
 As great in admiration as her selfe.
 So shall she leaue her Blessednesse to One,
 (When Heauen shall call her from this clowd of darknes)
 Who, from the laced Ashes of her Honour
 Shall Star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
 And so stand fix'd. Peace, Plenty, Loue, Truth, Terror,
 That were the Seruants to this chosen Infant,
 Shall then be his, and like a Vine grow to him;
 Where euer the bright Sunne of Heauen shall shine,
 His Honpur, and the greatnesse of his Name,
 Shall be, and make new Nations He shall flourish,

And like a Mountaine Cedar, reach his branches,
 To all the Plaines about him; Our Childrens Children
 Shall see this, and blesse Heauen.

Kim. Thou speakest wonders.

Cran. She shall be to the happinesse of England,
 An aged Princesse; many dayes shall see her,
 And yet no day without a deed to Crowne it:
 Would I had knowne no more: But she must dye,
 She must, the Saints must haue her; yet a Virgin,
 A most vnspotted Lilly shall she passe
 To th' ground, and all the World shall mourne her.

Kim. O Lord Archbishop
 Thou hast made me now a man, neuer before
 This happy Child, did I get any thing.
 This Oracle of comfort, ha's so pleas'd me,
 That when I am in Heauen, I shall desire
 To see what this Child does, and praise my Maker.
 I thanke ye all. To you my good Lord Maior,
 And you good Brethren, I am much beholding
 I haue receiue'd much Honour by your presence,
 And ye shall find me thankfull I ead the way Lords,
 Ye must all see the Queene, and she must thanke ye,
 She will be sicke els. This day, no man thinke
 'Has businesse at his house; for all shall stay:
 This little-One shall make it Holy-day. Exeunt.

THE EPILOGVE.

Is ten to one, this Play can neuer please
 All that are heere Some come to take their ease,
 And sleepe an Act or two; but those we feare
 Wh' haue frighted with our Trimpets so 'tis cleare,
 They'l say tis naught Others to heare the City
 Abus'd extremly, and to cry that's witty,
 Which wee haue not done neither, that I feare

All the expelled good w're like to heare.
 For this Play at this time, is onely in
 The mercifull construction of good women,
 For such a one we shew'd 'em. If they smile,
 And say twill doe; I know within a while,
 All the best men are ours, for 'tis ill hap,
 If they hold, when their Ladies bid 'em clap.

FINIS.

The Prologue.

IN Troy there lyes the Scene : From Iles of Greece
The Princes Orgillous, their high blood chaf'd
Haue to the Port of Athens sent their shippes
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
Of cruell Warre : Sixty and nine that wore
Their Crownets Regall, from th' Athenian bay
Put forth toward Phrygia, and their vow is made
To ransacke Troy, within whose strong emures
Therauisht Helen, Menelaus Queene,
With wanton Paris sleepes, and that's the Quarrell.
To Tenedos they come,
And the deepe-drawing Barke do there disgorge
Their warlike frautage : now on Dardan Plaines
The fresh and yet vnbroused Greekes do pitch
Their braue Pauillions. Priams six-gated City,
Dardan and Timbria, Helias, Chetas, Troien,
And Antenonidus with massie Staples
And corresponsiue and fulfilling Bolts
Stirre vpp the Sonnes of Troy.
Now Expectation tickling skittish spirits,
On one and other side, Troian and Greeke,
Sets all on hazard. And hither am I come,
A Prologue arm'd, but not in confidence
Of Authors pen, or Actors voyce ; but suited
In like conditions, as our Argument ;
To tell you (faire Beholders) that our Play
Leapes ore the vaunt and firstlings of those broyles,
Beginning in the middle. starting thence away,
To what may be digested in a Play :
Like, or finde fault, do as your pleasures are,
Now good, or bad, 'tis but the chance of Warre.

THE TRAGEDIE OF

Troilus and Cressida.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus

Troilus.

C All here my Varlet, Ile vnarme againe
Why should I warre without the wals of Troy
That finde such cruell battell here within?
Each Troian that is master of his heart,
Let him to field, Troilus alas hath none.

Pan. Will this geere nere be mended?

Troy. The Greeks are strong, & skilful to their strength,
Fierce to their skill, and to their fiercenesse Valiant:
But I am weak'r then a womans teare;
Tamer then sleepe, sonder then ignorance;
Lesse valiant then the Virgin in the night,
And skillelesse as vnpractis'd Infancie.

Pan. Well, I haue told you enough of this: For my part, Ile not meddle nor make no farther. Hee that will haue a Cake out of the Wheate, must needs carry the grinding.

Troy. Haue I not carried?

Pan. I the grnding; but you must carry the bolting.

Troy. Haue I not carried?

Pan. I the bolting; but you must carry the leau'ing.
Troy. Still haue I carried.

Pan. I, to the leauening; but heeres yet in the word hereafter, the Kneading, the making of the Cake, the heating of the Ouen, and the Baking; nay, you must stay the cooling too, or you may chance to burne your lips.

Troy. Patience her selfe, what Goddesse ere she be,
Doth lesseer blench at sufferance, then I doe:

At Prims Royall Table doe I sit;

And when faire Cressid comes into my thoughts,
So (Traitor) then she comes, when she is thence.

Pan. Well:

She look'd yesternight fairer, then euer I saw her looke,
Or any woman else.

Troy. I was about to tell thee, when my heart,
As wedged with a sigh, would rine in twaine,
Least Hector, or my Father should perceiue me:
I haue (as when the Sunne doth light a-scorne)
Buried this sigh, in wrinkle of a smile:
But forro n, that is couch'd in seeming gladnesse,
Is like that mirth, Fate turnes to sudden sadnesse.

Pan. And her haire were not somewhat darker then
Helens, well go too, there were no more comparison betweene the Women. But for my part she is my Kinswoman, I would not (as they tearme it) praise it, but I would some-body had heard her talke yesterday as I did: I will not dispraise your sister Cassandra's wit, but——

Troy. Oh Pandarus! I tell thee Pandarus;
When I doe tell thee, there my hopes lye drown'd:
Reply not in how many Fadomes deepe
They lye indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
In Cressids loue. Thou answer'st she is Faire, Pow'r'st in the open Vicer of my heart,
Her Eyes, her Haire, her Cheeke, her Gate, her Voice,
Handlest in thy discourse. O that her Hand
(In whose comparison, all whites are Inke)
Writing their owne reproach; to whose soft seizure,
The Cignets Downe is harsh, and spirit of Sense
Hard as the palme of Plough-man. This thou tel'st me;
As true thou tel'st me, when I say I loue her:
But saying thus, instead of Oyle and Balme,
Thou la'st in euery gash that loue hath giuen me,
The Knife that made it.

Pan. I speake no more then truth.

Troy. Thou do'st not speake so much.

Pan. Faith, Ile not meddle in't. Let her be as shee is, if she be faire, 'tis the better for her: and she be not, she ha's the mends in her owne hands.

Troy. Good Pandarus: How now Pandarus?

Pan. I haue had my Labour for my trauell, ill thought on of her, and ill thought on of you Gone betweene and betweene, but small thanks for my labour.

Troy. What are thou angry Pandarus? what with me?

Pan. Because she's Kinne to me, therefore shee's not so faire as Helen, and she were not kin to me, she would be as faire on Friday, as Helen is on Sunday. But what care I? I care not and she were a Black-a- Moore, 'tis all one to me.

Troy. Say I she is not faire?

Troy. I doe not care whether you doe or no. Shee's a Foolle to stay behinde her Father: Let her to the Greeks, and so Ile tell her the next time I see her. for my part, Ile meddle nor make no more i'th matter.

Troy. Pandarus? Pan. Not I.

Troy. Sweete Pandarus.

Pan. Pray you speake no more to me, I will leaue all as I found it, and there an end. Exit Pand.

Sound Alarum.

Tro. Peace you vngracious Clamors, peace rude sounds,
Foolles on both sides, Helen must needs be faire,
When with your bloud you daily paint her thus.
I cannot fight vpon this Argument:

It is too staru'd a subiect for my Sword,
But Pandarus. O Gods! How do you plague me?
I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he's as teachy to be woo'd to wor,
As she is stubborne, chafte, against all suite.
Tell me Apelles for thy Daphnes Loue
What Cressid is, what Pandar, and what we.
Her bred is India, there she lies, a Pearle,
Between our Ilium, and where shee recides
Let it be cald the wild and wandering flood,
Our selfe the Merchant, and thus saying Pandar,
Our doubtfull hope, our conuoy and our Barke.

Alarm. Enter Aeneas.

Aeneas. How now Prince Troilus?

Wherefore not a field?

Troilus. Because not there; this woman's answer fotts.

For womanish it is to be from thence

What newes Aeneas from the field to day?

Aeneas. That Paris is returned home, and hurt.

Troilus. By whom Aeneas?

Aeneas. Troilus by Meneleus.

Troilus. Let Paris bleed, 'tis but a scar to scorne.

Paris is gor'd with Meneleus horne. Alarm.

Aeneas. Marke what good sport is out of Towne to day

Troilus. Better at home, if would I might were may:

But to the sport abroad, are you bound thither?

Aeneas. In all swift hast.

Troilus. Come goe wee then together. Exeunt.

Enter Cressid and her man.

Cre. Who were those went by?

Man. Queene Hecuba, and Hellen.

Cre. And whether go they?

Man. Vp to the Baiterne Tower,

Whose height commands as subiect all the vaile,

To see the battell. Hektor whose patience,

Is as a Vertue fixt, to day was mou'd.

He chides Andromache and strooke his Armorer, I

And like as there were husbandry in Warre

Before the Sunne rose, hee was hainest lyse,

And to the field goe's he, where euery flower

Did as a Prophet weepe what it forswaw,

In Hektor's wrath.

Cre. What was his cause of anger?

Man. The noife goe's this;

There is among the Greekes,

A Lord of Trojan blood, Nephew to Hektor,

They call him Ajax.

Cre. Good, and what of him?

Man. They say he is a very man per se and stands alone

Cre. So do all men, vnlesse they are drunke, sicke, or haue no legges.

Ajax. This man Lady, hath rob'd many beasts of their particular additions, he is as valiant as the Lyon, churlish as the Beare, slow as the Elephant: a man into whom nature hath so crowded humors, that his valour is crustt into folly, his folly sauced with discretion: there is no man hath a vertue, that he hath not a glimpse of, nor any man an attaint, but he carries some staine of it. He is melancholy without cause, and merry against the haire, hee hath the ioynts of euery thing, but euery thing fo out of ioynt, that hee is a gowtie Briareus, many hands and no vs; or purblind Argus, all eyes and no sight.

Cre. But how should this man that makes me smile, make Hektor angry?

Man. They say he yesterday cop'd Hektor in the battell and stroke him downe, the disdaine & shame whereof, hath euer since kept Hektor fasting and waking.

Enter Pandarus.

Cre. Who comes here?

Man. Madam your Vncle Pandarus.

Cre. Hektor's a gallant man

Man. As may be in the world Lady.

Pan. What's that? what's that?

Cre. Good morrow Vncle Pandarus.

Pan. Good morrow Cozen Cressid what do you talke of good morrow Alexander. how do you Cozen? when were you at Ilium?

Cre. This morning Vncle.

Pan. What were you talking of when I came? Was Hektor arin'd and gone ere yea came to Ilium? Hellen was not vp? was she?

Cre. Hektor was gone but Hellen was not vp?

Pan. E'ene so; Hektor was stirring early.

Cre. That were we talking of, and of his anger.

Pan. Was he angry?

Cre. So he saies here.

Pan. True he was so; I know the cause too, heele lay about him to day I can tell them that, and there's Troilus will not come farre behind him, let them take heede of Troilus; I can tell them that too.

Cre. What is he angry too?

Pan. Who Troilus?

Troilus is the better man of the two.

Cre. Oh Iupiter; there's no comparison.

Pan. What not betweene Troilus and Hektor? do you know a man if you see him?

Cre. I, if I euer saw him before and knew him.

Pan. Well I say Troilus is Troilus.

Cre. Then you say as I say,

For I am sure he is not Hektor.

Pan. No not Hektor is not Troilus in some degrees.

Cre. 'Tis iust, to each of them he is himselfe.

Pan. Himselfe? alas poore Troilus I would he were.

Cre. So he is.

Pan. Conditon I had gone bare-foote to India.

Cre. He is not Hektor.

Pan. Himselfe? no o' hee's not himselfe, would a were himselfe. well the Gods are aboue, time must friend or ends well Troilus well, I would my heart were in her body; no, Hektor is not a better man then Troilus.

Cre. Excuse me.

Pan. He is elder.

Cre. Pardon me, pardon me.

Pan. Th'others not come too't, you shall tell me another tale when th'others come too't: Hektor shall not haue his will this yeare.

Cre. He shall not neede it if he haue his owne.

Pan. Nor his qualines.

Cre. No matter.

Pan. Nor his beautie.

Cre. 'Twould not become him, his own's better.

Pan. You haue no iudgement Neece; Hellen her selfe swore th'other day, that Troilus for a browne fauour (for so 'tis I must confesse) not browne neither.

Cre. No, but browne.

Pan. Faith to say truth, browne and not browne.

Cre. To say the truth, true and not true.

Pan. She prais'd his complexion about Paris.

Cre. Why Paris hath colour inough.

Pan. So he has.

Cre. Then Troilus should haue too much, if she prais'd him aboue, his complexion is higher then his, he hauing colour colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praise for a good complexion, I had as lieue Hellen golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper nole.

The Tragedie of Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. I sweare to you,

I thinke Hellen loues him better then Pan.
Cre. Then shee's a merry Grecke indeed.

Pan. Nay I am sure she does, she came to him th'other day into the compact window, and you know he has not past three or foure haire on his chinne.

Cre. Indeed a Tapsters Arithmetique may soone bring his particulars therein, to a totall.

Pan. Why he is very yong, and yet will he withun three pound lift as much as his brother Hektor.

Cre. Is he is so young a man, and so old a lister?

Pan. But to prouue to you that Hellen loues him, she came and puts me her white hand to his clouen chin.

Cre. Inno haue mercy, how came it clouen?

Pan. Why, you know 'tis dimpled, I thinke his smyling becomes him better then any man in all Phrigia.

Cre. Oh he smiles valiantly.

Pan. Does hee not?

Cre. Oh yes, and 'twere a clow'd in Autumne.

Pan. Why go to then, but to prouue to you that Hellen loues Troilus.

Cre. Troilus wil stand to thee Prooue, if youle prouue it so.

Pan. Troilus? why he esteemes her no more then I esteeme an addle egge.

Cre. If you loue an addle egge as well as you loue an idle head, you would eate chickens; th'shell.

Pan. I cannot chuse but laugh to thinke how she tickled his chin, indeed shee has a maruell's white hand I must needs confesse.

Cre. Without the racke.

Pan. And shee takes vpon her to spie a white haire on his chinne.

Cre. A las poore chin? many a wart is richer.

Pan. But there was such laughing, Queene Hecuba laugh that her eyes ran ore.

Cre. With Milstones.

Pan. And Cassandra laugh.

Cre. But there was more temperate fire vnder the pot of her eyes. did her eyes run ore too?

Pan. And Hektor laugh.

Cre. At what was all this laughing?

Pan. Marry at the white haire that Hellen spied on Troilus chin.

Cre. And t'had beene a greene haire, I should haue laugh too.

Pan. They laugh not so much at the haire, as at his pretty answer.

Cre. What was his answer?

Pan. Quoth shee, heere's but two and fifty haire on your chinne, and one of them is white.

Cre. This is her question.

Pan. That's true, make no question of that, two and fifty haire quoth hee, and one white, that white haire is my Father, and all the rest are his Sonnes. Iupiter quoth sic, which of these haire is Paris my husband? The forked one quoth he, pluckt out and giue it him. but there was such laughing, and Hellen so blusht, and Paris so chafte, and all the rest so laugh, that it past.

Cre. So let it now,

For is has beene a great while going by.

Pan. Well Cozen,

I told you a thing yesterday, think on't.

Cre. So I does.

Pan. He be sworne 'tis true, he will weepe you an'twere a man borne in Aprill.

Sound a retreat.

Cre. And Ile spring vp in his reares, an'twere a nettles against May.

Pan. Hark they are comming from the field, shal we stand vp here and see them, as they passe toward Illium, good Neece do, sweet Neece Cressida.

Cre. At your pleasure.

Pan. Heere, heere, here's an excellent place, heere we may see most brauely, Ile tel you them all by their names, as they passe by, but marke Troilus about the rest.

Enter Aeneas.

Cre. Speake not so low'd.

Pan. That's Aeneas, is not that a braue man, hee's one of the flowers of Troy I can you, but merke Troilus, you shal see anon.

Cre. Who's that?

Enter Antenor.

Pan. That's Antenor, he has a throw'd wit I can tell you, and hee's a man good enough, hee's one o'th soundest iudgement in Troy who focuer, and a proper man of person, when comes Troilus? Ile shew you Troilus anon, if hee see me, you shall see him him nod at me.

Cre. Will he giue you the nod?

Pan. You shall see.

Cre. If he do, the rich shall haue, more.

Enter Hector.

Pan. That's Hektor, that, that, looke you, that there's a fellow. Goe thy way Hektor, there's a braue man Neece, O braue Hektor! Looke how hee lookes t'here's a countenance, ist not a braue man?

Cre. O braue man!

Pan. Is a not? It dooes a mans heart good, looke you what hacks are on his Helme, looke you yonder, do you see? Looke you there? There's no resting, laying on, tak' off, who ill as they say, 'ere be hacks.

Cre. Be those with Swords?

Enter Paris.

Pan. Swords, any thing he cares not, and the diuell come to him, it's all one, by Gods lid it dooes ones heart good. Yonder comes Paris, yonder comes Paris looke yee yonder Neece, ist not a gallant man to, ist not? Why this is braue now who said he ca'ne hurt home to day? Hee's not hurt, why this will do Hektor's heart good now, ha? Would I could see Troilus now, you shall Troilus anon.

Cre. Whose that?

Enter Hellenus.

Pan. That's Hellenus, I maruell where Troilus is, that's Hellenus, I thinke he went not forth to day that's Hellenus.

Cre. Can Hellenus fight Vncle?

Pan. Hellenus no yes heele fight indifferent, -well, I maruell where Troilus is; hark, do you not haere the people crie Troilus? Hellenus is a Priest.

Cre. What sneaking fellow comes yonder?

Enter Troilus.

Pan. Where? Yonder? That's Daphobus, 'tis Troilus! Ther's a man Neece, hem? O braue Troilus, the Prince of Chivalrie.

Cre. Peace, for shame peace.

Pan. Marke him, not him: O braue Troilus - looke weel vpon him Neece, lonke you how his Sword is blow-died, and his Helme more hackt then Hektor, and how hee looke,

Troilus and Cressida.

lookes, and how he goes. O admirable youth! he ne're saw three and twenty. Go thy way Troilus, go thy way, had I a sister were a Grace, or a daughter a Goddess, hee should take his choice. O admirable man! Pand? Pand is durt to him, and I warrant, Helena to change, would give money to boot.

Enter common Soldiers.

Cres. Heere come more.

Pan. Asses, fooles, dolts, chaffe and bran, chaffe and bran; posredge after meat. I could lue and dye i'th'eyes of Troilus. Ne're looke, ne're looke; the Eagles are gon, Crows and Dawes, Crows and Dawes: I had rather be such a man as Troilus, then Agamemnon, and all Greece.

Cres. There is among the Greekes Achilles, a better man then Troilus.

Pan. Achilles? a Dray-man, a Porter, a very Camell.

Cres. Well, well.

Pan. Well, well? Why have you any discretion? have you any eyes? Do you know what a man is? Is not birth, beauty, good shape, discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, vertue, youth, liberality, and so forth: the Spice, and salt that seasons a man?

Cres. I, a mine'd man, and then to be balk'd with no Date in the pye, for then the mans dates out.

Pan. You are such another woman, one knowes not at what ward you lye.

Cres. Vpon my backe, to defend my belly; vpon my wit, to defend my wiles; vpon my secrecy, to defend mine honesty; my Maske, to defend my beauty, and you to defend all these: and at all these wardes I lye at, at a thousand watches.

Pan. Say one of your watches.

Cres. Nay Ile watch you for that, and that's one of the cheefest of them too: If I cannot ward what I would not haue hit, I can watch you for telling how I took the blow, vnlesse it well past hiding, and then it's past watching.

Enter Boy.

Pan. You are such another.

Boy. Sir, my Lord would instantly speake with you.

Pan. Where?

Boy. At your owne house.

Pan. Good Boy tell him I come, I doubt he bee hurt. Fare ye well good Neece.

Cres. Adieu Vnkle.

Pan. Ile be with you Neece by and by.

Cres. To bring Vnkle.

Pan. I, a token from Troilus.

Cres. By the same token, you are a Bawd. Exit Pand
Words, vowe, gifts, reares, & loues full sacrifice,
He offers in anothers enterprise:
But more in Troilus thousand fold I see,
Then in the glasse of Pantlar's praise may be;
Yet hold I off. Women are Angels wooing,
Things won are done, royces soule lyes in the dooing:
That she belou'd, knowes nought, that knowes not this;
Men prize the thing vngain'd, more then it is.
That she was neuer yet, that euer knew
Loue got so sweet, as when desire did sue:
Therefore this maxim out of loose I teach;
"Achieuement, is command; vngain'd, beseech."
That though my heart Consents firme loue doth beare,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appeare. Exit.

Sens. Enter Agamemnon, Nestor, Vlysses, Diomedes, Menelanus, with others

Agam. Princes:

What greeke hath set the Iaudies on your cheekes?
The ample proposit. on that hope makes
In all delignes, begun on earth below
Fayles in the promist largenesse: cheekes and disaters
Grow in the veines of actions highest rear'd.
As knots by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound Pine, and diuers his Graine
Torture and erant from his course of growth,
Nor Princes, is it matter new to vs,
That we come short of our suppose so farre,
That after seuen yeares siege, yet Troy wall's stand,
Sith every action that hath gone before,
Whereof we haue Record, Triall did draw
Bias and thwart, not answering the ayme:
And that vnbody figure of the thought
That gaue't surmised shape. Why then (you Princes)
Do you with cheekes abash'd, behold our workes,
And thinke them shame, which are (indeed) nought else
But the protraidue trials of great loue,
To finde persistue constancie in men?
The finenesse of which Metall is not found
In Fortunes loue. for then, the Bold and Coward,
The Wise and Foole, the Artist and vn-read,
The hard and soft, seeme all affi'd, and kin,
But in the Winde and Tempest of her frowne,
Distinction with a lowd and pov'refull fan,
Puffing at all, winnowes the light away;
And what hath masse, or matter by it selfe,
Lies rich in Vertue, and vmingled.

Nestor. With due Obseruance of thy godly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall apply
Thy latest words.

In the reproofe of Chance,

Lies the true proofe of men: The Sea being smooth,
How many shallow bubble Boates dare saile
Vpon her patient brest, making their way
With those of Nobler bulke?
But let the Russian Boras once enrage
The gentle Theriu, and anon behold
The strong ribb'd Barke through liquid Mounraines cut,
Bounding betweene the two moyst Elements
Like Persu Hoise. Where's then the sawey Boate,
Whose weake vntimber'd sides but euen now
Co-sual'd Greatnesse? Either to harbour fled,
Or made a Tostle for Neptune. Euen so,
Doth valours shew, and valours worth diuide
In stormes of Fortune.

For, in her ray and brightnesse,
The Heard hath more annoyance by the Brieze
Then by the Tyger: But, when the splitting winde
Makes flexible the knees of knotted Oakes,
And Flies fled vnder shade, why then
The thing of Courage,
As row'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize,
And with an accent run'd in selfe-same key,
Retires to chiding Fortune.

Vly. Agamemnon:

Thou great Commander, Nerue, and Bone of Greece,
Heart of our Numbers, soule, and onely spirit,
In whom the tempers, and the mindes of all
Should be shut vp: Heare what Vlysses speaks,
Besides the applause and approbation
The which most mighty for thy place and sway,

S

And

Troilus and Cressida.

And thou most reuerend for thy stretcht-out life,
I giue to both your speeches : which were such,
As Agamemnon and the hand of Greece
Should hold vp high in Brasse: and such againe
As venerable Nestor (harch'd in Silver)
Should with a bond of ayre, strong as the Axletree
In which the Heauens ride, knit all Greekes eares
To his experienc'd tongue: yet let it please both (Thou Great, and Wise) to heare Vlysses speake.

Aga. Speak Prince of Ithica, and be't of lesse expect:
That matter needlesse of importlesse burthen
Diuide thy lips; then we are confident
When ranke Thersites opes his Masticke iawes,
We shall heare Musick's Wit, and Oracle.

Vlyss. Troy yet upon his basis had bene downe,
And the great Hectors sword had lack'd a Master
But for theire instances,
The specialty of Rule hath bene neglected;
And looke how many Grecian Tents do stand
Hollow vpon this Plaine, so many hollow Factions.
When that the Generall is not like the Diue,
To whom the Forragers shall all repara,
What Hony is expected? Degree being vizarded,
Th'vnworthiest shewes as fairely in the Maske.
The Heauens themselves, the Planets, and this Center,
Obserue degée, priority, and place,
Institute, course, proportion, season, forme,
Office, and custome, in all line of Order:
And therefore is the glorious Planet Sol
In noble eminence, enthron'd and sphear'd
Amid'st the other, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill Aspects of Planets euill,
And postes like the Command'ment of a King,
Sans checke, to good and bad. But when the Planets
In euill mixture to disorder wander,
What Plagues, and what portents, what mutiny?
What raging of the Sea? shaking of Earth?
Commotion in the Windes? Frights, changes, horrors,
Diuert, and cracke, rend and deraenate
The vnyty, and married calme of States
Quite from their fixure? O, when Degree is shak'd,
(Which is the Ladder to all high designs)
The enterprize is sicke. How could Communites,
Degrees in Schooles, and Brother-hoods in Cities,
Peacefull Commerce from diuidable shores,
The primogenitiue, and due of Byrth,
Prerogatiue of Age, Crownes, Scepters, Lawrels,
(But by Degree) stand in Authentique place?
Take but Degree away, vn-tune that string,
And hearke what Discord followes: each thing meetes
In meere oppugnancie. The bounded Waters,
Should lift their bosomes higher then the Shores,
And make a soppe of all this solid Globe:
Strength should be Lord of imbecility,
And the rude Sonne should strike his Father dead:
Force should be right, or rather, right and wrong,
(Betweene whose endlesse iarre, Iustice repides)
Should loose her names, and so should Iustice too.
Then every thing includes it selfe in Power,
Power into Will, Will into Appetite,
And Appetite (an vnuerfall Wolfe,
So doubly seconded with Will, and Power)
Must make perforce an vnuerfall prey,
And last, eate v<sup>p</sup> himselfe.

Great Agamemnon.

This Chaos, when Degree is suffocate,

Followes the choaking:

And this neglectiō of Degree, it it
That by a pace goes backward in a purpose
It hath to climbe. The Generall's disdain'd
By him one step below; he, by the next,
That next, by him beneath. So euery step
Exampled by the first pace that is sicke
Of his Superior, growes to an enuious Feauer
Of pale, and bloodlesse Emulation.

And 'tis this Feauer that keepes Troy on foote,
Not her owne sinewes. To end a tale of length,
Troy in our weaknesse liues, not in her strength.

Nest. Most wisely hath Vlysses heere discover'd
The Feauer, whereof all our power is sicke.

Aga. The Nature of the sicknesse found (Vlysses)
What is the remedie?

Vlyss. The great Achilles, whom Opinion crownes,
The sinew, and the fore-hand of our Hoste,
Hauing his eare full of his ayery Fame,
Growes dainty of his worth, and in his Tent
Lyes mocking our designs. With him, Patroclus,
Vpon a lazie Bed, the huc-long day
Breakes scurrill Iests,
And with ridiculous and aukward action,
(Which Slanderer, he imitation call's)
He Pageants vs. Sometime great Agamemnon,
Thy topleesse deputation he puts on;
And like a strutting Player, whose conceit
Lies in his Ham-string, and doth thinke it rich
To heare the wooden Dialogue and sound
'Twixt his stretcht footing, and the Scaffoldage,
Such to be pittied, and ore-rested seeming
He acts thy Greatnesse in. and when he speaks,
'Tis like a Chime a mending. With tearmes vnquar'd,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seemes Hyperboles. At this fustie stuffe,
The large Achilles (on his prest-bed lolling)
From his deepe Chest, laughs out a lowd applause,
Cries excellent, 'tis Agamemnon iust.

Now play me Nestor; hum, and stroke thy Beard
As he, being dress't to some Oration:
That's done, as neere as the extreamest ends
Of paralels; as like, as Vulcan and his wife,
Yet god Achilles still cries excellent,
'Tis Nestor right. Now play him (me) Patroclus,
Arming to answer in a night-Alarme,
And then (forsooth) the faint defects of Age
Must be the Scene of myrth, to cough, and spit,
And with a pallsie fumbling on his Gorget,
Shake in and out the Riuet: and at this sport
Sir Valour dies; cries, O enough Patroclus,
Or, giue me ribs of Steele, I shall split all
In pleasure of my Spleene. And in this fashion,
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Senecals and generals of grace exact,
Atchieuements, plots, orders, preuentions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Successes or losse, what is, or is not, serues
As stuffe for these two, to make paradoxes.

Nest. And in the imitation of these twaine,
Who (as Vlysses sayes) Opinion crownes
With an Imperiall voyce, many are infect:
Ajax is growne selfe-will'd, and beares his head
In such a reyne in full as proud a place
As broad Achilles, and keepes his Tent like him;
Makes factious Feasts, railes on our state of Warre

Bold

Troilus and Cressida.

Bold as an Oracle, and sets Thersites
 A laue, whose Gall coiney flanders like a Mint,
 To match vs in comparisons with durt,
 To weaken and discredit our exposure,
 How ranke soeuer rounded in with danger.

Vlyf. They taxe our policy, and call it Cowardice,
 Count Wifedome as no member of the Warre,
 Fore-stall prescience, and esteeme no arte
 But that of hand: The full and mentall parts,
 That do contriue how many hands shall strike
 When sinnesse call the non, and know by measure
 Of their obseruant toyle, the Enemies waight,
 Why this hath not a fingers dignity.
 They call this Bed-vorke, Mapp'ry, Cloister-Warre:
 So that the Ramme that batter's downe the wall
 For the great swing and rudenesse of his poize,
 They place before his hand that made the Engine,
 Or those that with the sinnesse of their soules,
 By Reason guide his execution

Nest. Let this be granted, and Achilles horse
 Makes many Thetis tonnes. Tucket

Aga. What Trumpet? Looke Merelaus.

Men. From Troy. Enter Aeneas.

Aga. What would you fore our Tent?

Aene. Is this great Agamemnons Tent, I pray you?

Aga. Even this.

Aene. May one that is a Herald, and a Prince,
 Do a faire message to his Kingly eares?

Aga. With surety stronger then Achilles arme,
 Fore all the Greekish heads, which with one voyce
 Call Agamemnon Head and Generall.

Aene. Faire leaue, and large security. How may
 A stranger to those most Imperial lookes,
 Know them from eyes of other Mortals?

Aga. How?

Aene. I. I aske, that I might waken reuerence,
 And on the cheek be ready with a blush
 Modest as morning, when the coldly eyes
 The y outhfull Phoebus.

Which is that God in office guiding men?
 Which is the high and mighty Agamemnon?

Aga. This Trojan scorne vs, or the men of Troy
 Are ceremonious Courtiers.

Aene. Courtiers as free, as debonnaire; vnarm'd,
 As bending Angels. that s their Fame, in peace.
 But when they would seeme Souldiers, they haue gallees,
 Good armes, strong ioynts, true swords, & Iones accord,
 Nothing so full of heart. But peace Aeneas,
 Peace Trojan, lay thy finger on thy lips,
 The worthinesse of praise distaines his worth:
 If that he prais'd himselfe, bring the praise forth.
 But what the repining enemy commends,
 That breath Fame blowes, that praise sole pure transcends.

Aga. Sir, you of Troy, call you your selfe Aeneas?

Aene. I Greeke, that is my name.

Aga. What's your affayre I pray you?

Aene. Sir pardon, 'tis for Agamemnons eares.

Aga. He heares nought priuately

That comes from Troy

Aene. Nor I from Troy come not to whisper him,
 I bring a Trumpet to awake his eare,
 To set his sence on the attentue bent,
 And then to speake.

Aga. Speake frankly as the winde,
 It is not Agamemnons sleeping honre,
 That thou shalt know Trojan he is awake,

He tels thee so himselfe

Aene. Trumpet blow loud,
 Send thy Brasse voyce through all these lazie Tents,
 And euery Greeke of mettle, let him know,
 What Troy meanes fairely, shall be spoke aloud

The Trumpets sound

We haue great Agamemnon heere in Troy,
 A Prince call'd Hektor, Prisam is his Father:
 Who in this dull and long-continew'd Truce
 Is rusty growne. He bad me take a Trumpet,
 And to this purpose speake. Kings, Princes, Lords,
 If there be one among 'st the sayr st of Greece,
 That holds his Honor higher then his ease,
 That seekes his praise, more then he feares his perill,
 That knowes his Valour, and knowes not his feare,
 That loues his Mistis more then in confession,
 (With truant vowes to her owne lips he loues)
 And dare avow her Beauty, and her Worth,
 In other armes then hers to him this Challenge.

Hektor, in view of Trojans, and of Greekes,
 Shall make it good, or do his best to do it.

He hath a Lady, wiser, fairer, truer,
 Then euer Greeke did compass in his armes,
 And will to morrow with his Trumpet call,
 Midway betweene your Tents, and walles of Troy,
 To rowze a Grecian that is true in loue,
 If any come, Hektor shal honour him:
 If none, hee'l say in Troy wile he retires,
 The Grecian Dames are sun-burnt, and not worth
 The splinter of a Lance. Euen so much

Aga. This shall be told our Louers Lord Aeneas,
 If none of them haue soule in such a kinde,
 We left them all at home: But we are Souldiers,
 And may that Souldier a meere recreant proue,
 That meanes not, hath not, or is not in loue:
 If then one is, or hath, or meanes to be,
 That one meets Hektor; if none else, Ile be he.

Nest. Tell him of Nestor, one that was a man
 When Hektor Grandfire suckt. he is old now,
 But if there be not in our Grecian mould,
 One Noble man, that hath one spark of fire
 To answer for his Loue; tell him from me,
 Ile hide my Silver beard in a Gold Beauer,
 And in my Vantbrace put this wither'd brawne,
 And meeting him, wil tell him, that my Lady
 Was fayrer then his Grandame, and as chaste
 As may be in the world: his youth in flood,
 Ile pawne this truth with my three drops of blood.

Aene. Now heauens forbid such scarcitie of youth.

Vlyf. Amen.

Aga. Faire Lord Aeneas,

Let me touch your hand:

To our Pavillion shal I leade you first:
Achilles shall haue word of this intent,
 So shall each Lord of Greece from Tent to Tent:
 Your selfe shall first with vs before you goe,
 And finde the welcome of a Noble Foe.

Exeunt.

Alanc: Vlyses, and Nestor.

Vlyf. Nestor.

Nest. What sayes Vlyses?

Vlyf. I haue a young conception in my braine,
 Be you my time to bring it to some shape.

Nest. What is't?

Vlyses. This 'tis:
 Blunt wedges rive hard knots: the seeded Pride
 That hath to this maturity blowne vp

Troilus and Cressida.

In ranke Achilles, must or now be cropt,
Or shedding breed a Nursery of like euil
To ouer-bulke vs all.

Nest. Wel, and how?

Ulys. This challenge that the gallant Hector sends,
How euer it is spred in general name,
Relates in purpose onely to Achilles.

Nest. The purpose is perspicuous euen in substance,
Whose grossenesse little characters summe vp,
And in the publication make no straine,
But that Achilles, were his braine as barren
As bankes of Lybia, though (Apollo knowes)
'Tis dry enough, wil with great speede of iudgement,
I, with celerity, finde Hector's purpose
Pointing on him.

Ulys. And wake him to the answer, thinke you?

Nest. Yes, 'tis most meet; who may you else oppose
That can from Hector bring his Honor off,
If not Achilles; though't be a sportfull Combate,
Yet in this triall, much opinion dwels.
For heere the Troyans taste our deer'st repute
With their sin'st Pallate: and trust to me Ulysses,
Our imputation shall be oddly poiz'd
In this wilde action. For the successe
(Although particular) shall giue a scantling
Of good or bad, vnto the Generall:
And in such Indexes, although small prickes
To their subsequent Volumes, there is seene
The baby figure of the Gyant-masse
Of things to come at large. It is suppos'd,
He that meets Hector, issues from our choysel;
And choise being mutuall acte of all our soules,
Makes Merit her election, and doth boyle
As 'twere, from forth vs all: a man disill'd
Out of our Vertues; who miscarrying,
What heart from hence receyues the conquering part
To steale a strong opinion to themselves,
Which entertain'd, Limbes are in his instruments,
In no lesse working, then are Swords and Bowes
Directiue by the Limbes.

Ulys. Giue pardon to my speech:

Therefore 'tis meet, Achilles meet not Hector:
Let vs (like Merchants) shew our fowlest Wares,
And thinke perchance they'll sell; If not,
The luster of the better yet to shew,
Shall shew the better. Do not consent,
That euer Hector and Achilles meete:
For both our Honour, and our Shame in this,
Are dogg'd with two strange Followers.

Nest. I see them not with my old eies: what are they?

Ulys. What glory Achilles shares from Hector,
(Were he not proud) we all should weare with him:
But he already is too insolent,
And we were better parch in Affricke Sunne,
Then in the pride and salt scorne of his eyes
Should he scape Hector faire. If he were soyld,
Why then we did our maine opinion crush
In taint of our best man. No, make a Lott'ry,
And by deuice let blockish Ajax draw
The sort to fight with Hector: Among our selues,
Giue him allowance as the worthier man,
For that will physicke the great Myrmidon
Who broyles in lowd applause, and make him fall
His Crest, that prouder then blew Iris bends.
If the dull brainlesse Ajax come safe off,
Wee'll dresse him vp in voyces: if he faile,

Yet go we vnder our opinion still,
That we haue better men. But hit or misse,
Our proiects life this shape of sence assumes,
Ajax employ'd, pluckes downe Achilles Plumes.

Nest. Now Ulysses, I begin to relish thy aduice,
And I wil giue a taste of it forthwith
To Agamemnon, go we to him straight:
Two Curses shal tame each other, Pride alone
Must tarre the Mastiffes on, as 'twere their bone. Exeunt
Enter Ajax, and Thersites.

Aia. Thersites?

Ther. Agamemnon, how if he had Biles (ful) all ouer generally.

Aia. Thersites?

Ther. And those Byles did runne, say so; did not the General run, were not that a botchy core?

Aia. Dogge.

Ther. Then there would come some matter from him:
I see none now.

Aia. Thou Bitch-Wolfes-Sonne, canst thou not heare?
Feele then Strikes him.

Ther. The plague of Greece vpon thee thou Mungrel beefe-witted Lord.

Aia. Speake then you whinid'st leauen speake, I will beate thee into handsomnesse.

Ther. I shal sooner rayle thee into wit and holinesse:
but I thinke thy Horse wil sooner con an Oratour, then I learn a prayer without booke: Thou canst strike, canst thou? A red Murren o'th thy Iades trickes.

Aia. Toads stoole, learne me the Proclamation.

Ther. Doe'st thou thinke I haue no sence thou strik'st

Aia. The Proclamation. (methus?)

Ther. Thou art proclaim'd a foole, I thinke.

Aia. Do not Porpentine, do not; my fingers itch.

Ther. I would thou didst itch from head to foot, and I had the scratching of thee, I would make thee the lothsom'st scab in Greece.

Aia. I say the Proclamation.

Ther. Thou grumblest & raillest euery houre on A- chilles, and thou art as full of enuy at his greatnes, as Cer- berus is at Proserpine's beauty. I, that thou bark'st at him.

Aia. Mistresse Thersites.

Ther. Thou should'st strike him.

Aia. Coblofe.

Ther. He would pun thee into shiuers with his fist, as a Sailor breakes a buker.

Aia. You horson Curre.

Ther. Do, do.

Aia. Thou stoole for a Witch.

Ther. I, do, do, thou foddren-witted Lord: thou hast no more braine then I haue in mine elbows: An Asinico may tutor thee. Thou scurvy valiant Ass, thou art heere but to thresh Troyans, and thou art bought and solde among those of any wit, like a Barbarian slaue. If thou vse to beat me, I wil begin at thy heele, and tel what thou art by inches, thou thing of no bowels thou.

Aia. You dogge.

Ther. You scurvy Lord.

Aia. You Curre.

Ther. Mars his Ideot: do rudenes, do Camell, do, do.

Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.

Achil. Why how now Ajax? wherefore do you this?
How now Thersites? what's the matter man?

Ther. You see him there, do you?

Achil. I, what's the matter.

Ther. Nay looke vpon him.

Achil. So I do: what's the matter?

Ther

Troilus and Cressida.

Ther. Nay but regard him well.

Achil. Well, why I do so.

Ther. But yet you looke not well vpon him: for who some euer you take him to be, he is Aiax.

Achil. I know that foole.

Ther. I, but that foole knowes not himselfe.

Aiax. Therefore I beate thee.

Ther. Lo, lo, lo, what modicum of wit he vtters, his euasions haue cares thus long. I haue bobbd his Braine more then he has beate my bones. I will buy nine Sparrowes for a peny, and his Pisamater is not worth the ninth part of a Sparrow. This Lord (Achilles) Aiax who wears his wit in his belly, and his guttes in his head, Ile tell you what I say of him.

Achil. What?

Ther. I say this Aiax —

Achil. Nay good Aiax.

Ther. Has not so much wit.

Achil. Nay, I must hold you.

Ther. As will stop the eye of Helen's Needle, for whom he comes to fight.

Achil. Peace foole.

Ther. I would haue peace and quietnes, but the foole will not: he there, that he, looke you there.

Aiax. O thou damn'd Curre, I shall —

Achil. Will you set your wit to a Fools

Ther. No I warrant you, for a foolcs will shame it.

Pat. Good words Thersites.

Achil. What's the quarrell?

Aiax. I had thee vile Owle, goe learne me the tenure of the Proclamation, and he rayles vpon me.

Ther. I serue thee not.

Aiax. Well, go too, go too.

Ther. I serue heere voluntary.

Achil. Your last seruice was sufferance, 'twas not voluntary, no man is beaten voluntary: Aiax was heere the voluntary, and you as vnder an Impresse.

Ther. Enefo, a great deale of your wit too lies in your sinnewes, or else there be Liars Hektor shall haue a great catch, if he knocke out either of your braines, he were as good cracke a fustie nut with no kernell.

Achil. What with me to Thersites?

Ther. Thersites's Phisyes, and old Nestor, whose Wit was mouldy ere their Grandfires had nails on their toes, yoke you like draft-Oxen, and make you plough vp the waite.

Achil. What? what?

Ther. Yes good sooth, to Achilles, to Aiax, to —

Aiax. I shall cut out your tongue.

Ther. 'Tis no matter, I shall speake as much as thou afterwards.

Pat. No more words Thersites.

Ther. I will hold my peace when Achilles Brooch bids me, shall I?

Achil. There's for you Patroclus.

Ther. I will see you hang'd like Clotpoles ere I come any more to your Tents; I will keepe where there is wit stirring, and leaue the faction of foolcs. Exit.

Pat. A good riddance

Achil. Marry this Sir is proclaim'd throughal our host, That Hektor by the fifth houre of the Sunne, Will with a Trumper, 'twixt our Tents and Troy To morrow morning call some Knight to Armes, That hath a stomacke, and such a one that dare Maintaine I know not what. 'Tis a rash. Farewell.

Aiax. Farewell? who shall answer him?

Achil. I know not, 'tis put to Lottry: otherwise

Heknew his man.

Aiax. O meaning you, I will go learne more of it. Exit.

Enter Priam, Hektor, Troilus, Patru and Helenus.

Pri. After so many houres, liues, speeches spent,

Thus once againe sayes Nestor from the Greekes,

Deliuert Helen, and all damage else

(As honour, losse of time, trauaile, expence,

Wounds, friends, and what els deere that is consum'd

In hot digestion of this comorant Warre)

Shall be stroke off. Hektor, what say you too't.

Hekt. Though no man lesser feares the Greekes then I,

As farre as touches my particular: yet dread Priam,

There is no Lady of more softer bowels,

More spungie, to sucke in the sense of feare,

More ready to cry out, who knowes what follows

Then Hektor is: the wound of peace is surety,

Surety secure. but modest Doubt is call'd

The Beacon of the wise: the tent that searches

To'th' bottome of the worst. Let Helen go,

Since the first sword was drawne about this question,

Euery tythe soule' mongst many thousand dismes,

Hath bin as deere as Helen: I meane of ours:

If we haue lost so many tenths of ours

To guard a thing not ours, nor worth to vs

(Had it our name) the valew of one ten;

What merit's in that reason which denies

The yeelding of her vp.

Troy. Fie, fie, my Brother;

Weigh you the worth and honour of a King

(So great as our dread Father) in a Scale

Of common Ounces? Wil you with Counters summe

The past proportion of his infinite,

And buckle in a waste most fathomlesse,

With spannes and inches so diminutive,

As feares and reasons? Fie for godly shame?

Hekt. No maruel though you bite so sharp at reasons,

You are so empty of them, should not our Father

Beare the great sway of his affayres with reasons,

Because your speech hath none that tels him so.

Troy. You ate for dreames & slumbers brother Priest

You furre your gloues with reason here are your reasons

You know an enemy intends you harme,

You know, a sword imploy'd is perillous,

And reason flies the object of all harme.

Who maruels then when Helenus beholds

A Grecian and his sword, if he do set

The very wings of reason to his heeler

Or like a Starre disorb'd. Nay, if we take of Reason,

And flye like chidden Mercurie from Ioue,

Let's shut our gates and sleepe: Manhood and Honor

Should haue hard hearts, wold they but fat their thoughts

With this cramw'd reason: reason and respect,

Makes Liners pale, and lustyhood deiect.

Hekt. Brother, she is not worth

What she doth cost the holding.

Troy. What's aught, but as 'tis valew'd?

Hekt. But value dwels not in particular will,

It holds his estimate and dignitie

As well, wherein 'tis precious of it selfe,

As in the prizer: 'Tis made Idolatrie,

To make the service greater then the God,

And the will dotes that is inclinable

To what infectiously it selfe affects,

Without some image of th'affected merit.

Troy. I take to day a Wife, and my election

Is led on in the conduct of my Will;

Troilus and Cressida.

My Will enkindled by mine eyes and eares,
Two traded Pylots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of Will, and Iudgement. How may I auoyde
(Although my will distaste what it elected)
The Wife I chose, there can be no euasion
To blench from this, and to stand firme by honour.
We turne not backe the Silkes vpon the Merchant
When we haue spoyl'd them; nor the remainder Viands
We do not throw in vnrespective fame,
Because we now are full. It was thought meete
Paris should do some vengeance on the Greekes;
Your breath of full consent bellied his Sailes,
The Seas and Windes (old Wranglers) tooke a Truce,
And did him serue; he touch'd the Ports desir'd,
And for an old Aunt whom the Greekes held Captiue,
He brought a Grecian Queen, whose youth & freshnesse
Wrinkles Apolloes, and makes stale the morning.
Why keepe we her? the Grecians keepe our Aunt:
Is she worth keeping? Why she is a Pearle,
Whose price hath launch'd about a thousand Ships,
And turn'd Crown'd Kings to Merchants.
If you'l auouch, 'twas wisdom Paris went,
(As you must needs, for you all cride, Go, go!)
If you'l confesse, he brought home Noble prize,
(As you must needs) for you all clapt your hands,
And cride inestimable; why do you now
The issue of your proper Wisdoms rate,
And do a deed that Fortune neuer did?
Begger the estimation which you priz'd,
Richer then Sea and Land? O Theft most base!
That we haue stolne what we do feare to keepe.
But Theeues vnworthy of a thing so stolne,
That in their Country did them that disgrace,
We feare to warrant in our Native place.

Enter Cassandra with her haire about her eares.

Cas. Cry Troyans, cry.

Prism. What noyse? what shreeke is this?

Troy. 'Tis our mad sister, I do know her voyce.

Cas. Cry Troyans.

Hest. It is Cassandra.

Cas. Cry Troyans cry; lend me ten thousand eyes,
And I will fill them with Propheticke teares.

Hest. Peace sister, peace.

Cas. Virgins, and Boyes; mid-age & wrinkled old.
Soft infancie, that nothing can but cry,
Add to my clamour: let vs pay betimes
A moiety of that masse of moane to come.

Cry Troyans cry, practise your eyes with teares,

Troy must not be, nor goodly Ilium stand,

Our fire-brand Brother Paris burnes vs all.

Cry Troyans cry, a Helen and a woe;

Cry, cry, Troy burnes, or else let Helen goe.

Exit.

Hest. Now youthfull Troilus, do not these hie strains
Of diuination in our Sister, worke
Some touches of remorse? Or is your blood
So madly hot, that no discourse of reason,
Nor feare of bad successe in a bad cause,
Can qualifie the same?

Troy. Why Brother Hector,
We may not thinke the iustnesse of each state
Such, and no other then euent doth forme it
Nor once detect the courage of our mindes;
Because Cassandra's mad, her brainesicke raptures
Cannot distaste the goodnesse of a quarrell,

Which hath our seuerall Honours all engag'd
To make it gracious. Formy private part,
I am no more touch'd, then all Priams sonnes,
And loue forbid there should be done among't vs
Such things as might offend the weakest spleene,
To fight for, and maintaine.

Par. Else might the world conuince of leuitie,
As well my vnder-takings as your counsels:
But I attest the gods, your full consent
Gau wings to my propension, and cut off
All feares attending on so dire a proiect.
For what (alas) can these my single armes?
What propugnation is in one mans valour
To stand the push and enmy of those
This quarrell would excite? Yet I protest,
Were I alone to passe the difficulties,
And had as ample power, as I haue will,
Paris should ne're retract what he hath done,
Nor faint in the pursuite.

Prism. Paris, you speake

Like one be-forted on your sweet delights;
You haue the Hony still, but these the Gall,
So to be valiant, is no praise at all.

Par. Sir, I propose not meere to my selfe,
The pleasures such a beauty brings with it:
But I would haue the soyle of her faire Rape
Wip'd off in honourable keeping her.
What Treason were it to the ransack'd Queene,
Disgrace to your great worths, and shame to me,
Now to deliuer her possession vp
On termes of base compulsion? Can it be,
That so degenerate a straine as this,
Should once set footing in your generous bosomes?
There's not the meanest spirit on our parue,
Without a heart to dare, or sword to draw,
When Helen is defended: nor none so Noble,
Whose life were ill bestow'd, or death vsam'd,
Where Helen is the subiect. Then (I say)
Well may we fight for her, whom we know well,
The worlds large spaces cannot paralell.

Hest. Paris and Troilus, you haue both said well:

And on the cause and question now in hand,
Haue glaz'd, but superficially; not much
Vnlike young men, whom Aristotle thought
Vnsit to heare Morall Philosophie
The Reasons you alledge, do more conduce
To the hot passion of distemp'rd blood,
Then to make vp a free determination
'Twixt right and wrong: For pleasure, and reuenge,
Haue eares more deafe then Adders, to the voyce
Of any true decision. Nature craues
All dues be tender'd to their Owners: now
What neerer debt in all humanity,
Then Wife is to the Husband? If this law
Of Nature be corrupted through affection,
And that great mindes of partiall indulgence,
To their benumbed wills resist the same,
There is a Law in each well-ordred Nation,
To curbe those raging appetites that are
Most disobedient and refractiue.

If Helen then be wife to Sparta's King
(As it is knowne she is) these Morall Lawes
Of Nature, and of Nation, speake aloud
To haue her backe return'd. Thus to perisht
In doing wrong, extendes not wrong,
But makes it much more heauie. Hector's opinion

Troilus and Cressida.

Is this in way of truth: yet nere the lesse,
My spritely brethren, I propend to you
In resolution to keepe Helen still;
For 'tis a cause that hath no meane dependance,
Vpon our ioynt and seuerall dignities.

Tro. Why? there you touch the life of our designe:
Were it not glory that we more affected,
Then the performance of our beauing spleenes,
I would not wish a drop of Troian blood,
Spent more in her defence. But worthy Hector,
She is a theame of honour and renowne,
A spurre to valiant and magnanimous deeds,
Whose present courage may beate downe our foes,
And fame in time to come canonize vs.
For I presume braue Hector would not loose
So rich aduantage of a promis'd glory,
As smiles vpon the fore-head of this action,
For the wide worlds reueneue.

Hect. I am yours,
You valiant off-spring of great Priamus,
I haue a roisting challenge sent among't
The dull and factious nobles of the Greekes,
Will strike amazement to their drowisie spirits,
I was aduertiz'd, their Great generall slept,
Whil'st emulation in the armie crept:
This I presume will wake him.

Exeunt.

Enter Therisites folow.

How now Therisites? what lost in the Labyrinth of thy furie? shall the Elephant Ajax carry it thus? he beates me, and I raile at him: O worthy satisfaction, would it were otherwise. that I could beate him, whil'st he rail'd at me: Sfoote, Ile learne to coniure and raise Diuels, but Ile see some issue of my spitefull execrations. Then ther's
Achilles, arare Engineer. If Troy be not taken till these two vndermine it, the walls will stand till they fall of themselues. O thou great thunder-darter of Olympus, forget that thou art Ioue the King of gods: and Mercury, loose all the Serpentine craft of thy Caduceus, if thou take not that little little lesse then little wit from them that they haue, which short-arm'd ignorance it selfe knowes, is so abundant scarce, it will not in circumuention deliuer a Flye from a Spider, without drawing the massie Irons and cutting the web. after this, the vengeance on the whole Camp, or rather the bone-ach, for that me thinkes is the curse dependant on those that warre for a placket. I haue said my prayers and diuell, enuie, say Amen: What ho?
my Lord Achilles?

Enter Patroclus.

Patr. Who's there? Therisites. Good Therisites come in and raile

Ther. If I could haue remembered a guilt counterfeit, thou would'st not haue slip't out of my contemplation, but it is no matter, thy selfe vpon thy selfe. The common curse of mankinde, follie and ignorance be thine in great reueneue; heauen blesse thee from a Tutor, and Discipline come not neere thee. Let thy bloud be thy direction till thy death, then if the that laies thee out sayes thou art a faire course, Ile be sworne and sworne vpon't she neuer shrowded any but Lazars, Amen. Wher's Achilles?

Patr. What art thou deuout? wast thou in a prayer?

Ther. I, the heauens heare me.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Who's there?

Patr. Therisites, my Lord

Achil. Where, where, art thou come? why my cheefe, my digestion, why hast thou not seru'd thy selfe into my Table, so many meales? Come, what's Agamemnon?

Ther. Thy Commander Achilles, then tell me Patro-clus, what's Achilles?

Patr. Thy Lord Therisites: then tell me I pray thee, what's thy selfe?

Ther. Thy knower Patroclus: then tell me Patroclus,
what art thou?

Patr. Thou maist tell that know'st.

Achil. O tell, tell.

Ther. Ile decline the whole question: Agamemnon commands Achilles, Achilles is my Lord, I am Patroclus know-er, and Patroclus is a foole.

Patr. You rascall.

Ter. Peace foole, I haue not done.

Achil. He is a priuiledg'd man, proceede Therisites.

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole, Achilles is a foole, Ther-sites is a foole, and as aforesaid, Patroclus is a foole.

Achil. Deriue this? come?

Ther. Agamemnon is a foole to offer to command Achilles, Achilles is a foole to be commanded of Agamemnon, Therisites is a foole to serue such a foole: and Patroclus is a foole positiuie.

Patr. Why am I a foole?

Enter Agamemnon, Vlisses, Nestor, Diomedes, Ajax, and Chalcas.

Ther. Make that demand to the Creator, it suffices me thou art. Look you, who comes here?

Achil. Patroclus, Ile speake with no body: come in with me Therisites Exit.

Ther. Here is such patcherie, such iugling, and such knauerie all the argument is a Cuckold and a Whore, a good quarrel to draw emulations, factions, and bleed to death vpon. Now the dry Suppago on the Sabieft, and Warre and Lecherie confound all.

Agam. Where is Achilles?

Patr. Within his Tent, bucall dispos'd my Lord..

Agam. Let it be knowne to him that we are here:
He sent our Messengers, and we lay by
Our appertainments, visiting of him:
Let him be told of, so perchance he thinke
We dare not moue the question of our place,
Or know not what we are.

Patr. I shall so say to him.

Vliss. We saw him at the opening of his Tent,
He is not sicke.

Aia. Yes, Lyon sicke, sicke of proud heart: you may call it Melancholly if will fauour the man, but by my head, it's pride, but why, why, let him show vs the cause?
A word my Lord.

Nes. What moues Aiax thus to bay at him?

Vliss. Achilles hath inuiegled his Foole from him.

Nes. Who, Therisites?

Vliss. He

Nes. Then will Aiax lacke matter, if he haue lost his Argument.

Vliss. No, you see he is his argument that has his argument Achilles

Nes. All the better, their faction is mote our wish then their faction; but it was a strong counsell that a Foole could disunite.

Vliss. The amitie that wise dome knits, noa folly may easily vntie. Enter Patroclus.

Here

Troilus and Cressida.

Here comes Patroclus.

Nest. No Achilles with him?

Ulys. The Elephant hath loynes, but none for curtesie:
His legges are legs for necessitie, not for flight.

Patro. Achilles bids me say he is much sorry:
If any thing more then your sport and pleasure,
Did moue your greatnesse, and this noble State,
To call vpon him; he hopes it is no other,
But for your health, and your digestion sake;
An after Diners breath.

Ag. Heare you Patroclus:
We are too well acquainted with these answers:
But his euasion winged thus swift with scorne,
Cannot outlye our apprehensions.
Much attribute he hath, and much the reason,
Why we ascribeth to him, yet all his vertues,
Not vertuously of his owne part beheld,
Due in our eyes, begin to loose their glossie;
Yea, and like faire Fruite in an vnholdome dist,
Are like to rot vntasted: goe and tell him,
We came to speake with him; and you shall not sinne,
If you doe say, we thinke him ouer proud,
And vnder honestie in selfe-assumpti, on greater
Then in the note of iudgement & worthier then himselfe
Here tends the sauage strangenesse he puts on,
Disguise the holy strength of their command:
And vnder write in an obsequing kinde
His humorous predominance, yet watch
His pettish lines, his ebs, his slowes, as if
The passage and whole carriage of this action
Rode on his tyde. Goe tell him this, and adde,
That if he ouerhold his price so much,
Weele none of him; but let him, like an Engin
Not portable, lye vnder this report.
Bring action hither, this cannot goe to warre:
A stirring Dwarf, we doe allowance giue,
Before a sleeping Gyaunt: tell him so.

Pat. I shall, and bring his answer presently.

Ag. In second voyce weele not be satisfied,
We come to speake with him, Ulysses enter you.

Exit Ulysses.

Ajax. What is he more then another?

Ag. No more then what he thinks he is.

Aia. Is he so much, doe you not thinke, he thinkes himselfe a better man then I am?

Ag. No question.

Ajax. Will you subscribe his thought, and say he is?

Ag. No, Noble Ajax, you are as strong, as valiant, as wise, no lesse noble, much more gentle, and altogether more tractable.

Ajax. Why should a man be proud? How doth pride grow? I know not what it is.

Ag. Your minde is the cleerer Ajax, and your vertues the fairer, he that is proud, eates vp himselfe; Pride is his owne Glasse, his owne trumpet, his owne Chronicle, and what euer praises it selfe but in the deede, deuoures the deede in the praise.

Enter Ulysses.

Aia. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the ingendring of Toades.

Nest. Yet he loues himselfe, is't not strange?

Ulys. Achilles will not to the field to morrow.

Ag. What's his excuse?

Ulys. He doth relye on none,
But carries on the streame of his dispose,
Without obseruance or respect of any,

It will peculiar, and in selfe admission.

Ag. Why, will he not vpon our faire request,
Vntent his person, and share the ayre with vs?

Ulys. Things small as nothing, for requests sake onely
He makes important; posselt he is with greatnesse,
And speakes not to himselfe, but with a pride
That quarrels at selfe-breath. Imagin'd wroth
Holds in his bloud such swolne and hot discourse,
That twice his mentall and his actiue parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters gainst it selfe; what should I say?
He is so plaguy proud, that the death tokens of it,
Cry no recovery.

Ag. Let Ajax goe to him.

Deare Lord, goe you and greete him in his Tent;
Tis said he holds you well, and will be led
At your request a little from himselfe.

Ulys. O Agamemnon, let it not be so.
Weele consecrate the steps that Ajax makes,
When they goe from Achilles; shall the proud Lord,
That bastes his arrogance with his owne feare,
And neuer suffers matter of the world,
Enter his thoughts. Issue such as doe reuolue
And ruminare himselfe. Shall he be worshipt,
Of that we hold an Idoll, more then hee?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant Lord,
Must not so staule his Palme, nobly acquird,
Nor by my will asubingate his merit,
As amply tuled as Achilles is: by going to Achilles,
That were to erlard his fat already, pride,
And adde more Coles to Cancer, when he burnes
With entertaining great Hesperus.
This L goe to him? Jupiter torbid,
And say in thunder, Achilles goe to him.

Nest. O this is well, he rubs the veine of him.

Dis. And how his silence drinckes vp this applause?
Aia. If I goe to him, with my armed fist, Ile pass him ore the face.

Ag. Ono, you shall not goe.

Aia. And a be proud with me, Ile phee his pride: let me goe to him.

Ulys. Not for the worth that hangs vpon our quarrel.

Aia. A pauntry insolent fellow.

Nest. How he describes himselfe.

Aia. Can he not be so able?

Ulys. The Raven chides blacknesse.

Aia. Ile let his humours bloud.

Ag. He will be the Physitian that should be the patient.

Aia. And all men were a my minde.

Ulys. Wit would be out of fashion.

Aia. A should not beare it so, a should eate Swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. And 'twould, you'd carry halfe.

Ulys. A would haue ten shares.

Aia. I will kneede him, Ile make him supple, hee's not yet through warme.

Nest. Force him with praises, poure in, poure in: his ambition is dry.

Ulys. My L. you feede too much on this dislike.

Nest. Our noble Generall, doe not doe so.

Dis. You must prepare to fight withour Achilles.

Ulys. Why, 'tis this naming of him doth him harme.
Here is a man, but 'tis before his face,
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He

Troilus and Cressida.

He is not emulous, as Achilles is.

Ulys. Know the whole world, he is as valiant

Aia. A horson dog, that shal palter thus with vs, would he were a Troian.

Nest. What a vice were it in Aiax now——

Ulys. If he were proud,

Dio. Or couetous of praise.

Ulys. I, or surley borne.

Dio. Or strange, or selfe affected.

U. Thank the heavens L, thou art of sweet composition;
Praise him that got thee, (he that gaue thee sucke.

Fame be thy Tutor, and thy parts of nature

Thrice fam'd beyond, beyond all erudition;

But he that disciplin'd thy armes to fight,

Let Mars deuide Eternity in twaine,

And giue him halfe, and for thy vigour,

Bull-bearing Milo: his addition yeelde

To sinnowe Aiax: I will not praise thy wisdom,

Which like a bourne, a pale, a shore confines

Thy spacious and dilated parts, here's Nestor

Instructed by the Antiquary times.

He must, he is, he cannot but be wise.

But pardon Father Nestor, were your dayes

As Greene as Aiax, and your braine so temper'd,

You should not haue the eminence of him,

But be as Aiax.

Aia. Shall I call you Father?

Ulys. I my good Sonne.

Dio. Be rul'd by him Lord Aiax.

Ulys. There is no carrying here, the Hart Achilles

Keepes thicker: please it our Generall,

To call together all his state of warre,

Fresh Kings are come to Troy; to morrow

We must with all our maine of power stand fast:

And here's a Lord, come Knights from East to West,

And call their flowre, Aiax shall cope the best.

Ag. Goe we to Counsaile, let Achilles sleepe;

Light Botes may saile swift, though greater bulkes draw deepe. Exeunt. Musicke sounds within.

Enter Pandarus and a Seruant

PAN. Friend, you, pray you a word: Doe not you follow the yong Lord Paris?

Ser. I sir, when he goes before me.

PAN. You depend vpon him I meane?

Ser. Sir, I doe depend vpon the Lord.

PAN. You depend vpon a noble Gentleman: I must needs praise him.

Ser. The Lord be praised

Pa. You know me, doe you not?

Ser. Faith sir, superficially.

Pa. Friend know me better, I am the Lord Pandarus.

Ser. I hope I shall know your honour better.

Pa. I doe desire it.

Ser. You are in the state of Grace?

Pa. Grace, not so friend, honor and Lordship are my title What Musique is this?

Ser. I doe but partly know sir: it is Musicke in parts.

Pa. Know you the Musicians.

Ser. Wholly sir

Pa. Who play they to?

Ser. To the hearers sir.

Pa. At whose pleasur: friend?

Ser. At mine sir, and theirs: that loue Musicke.

Pa. Command, I meane friend.

Ser. Who shall I command sir?

Pa. Friend, we vnderstand not one another: I am too courtly, and thou art too cunning. At whose request doe these men play?

Ser. That's too't indeede sir: marry sir, at the request of Paris my L, who's there in person; with him the mortal Penny, the heart bloud of beauty, laves inausible soule.

Pa. Who? my Cosin Cressida.

Ser. No sir, Helena, could you not finde out what by her attributes?

Pa. It should seeme fellow, that thou hast not seen the Lady Cressida. I come to speake with Paris from the Prince Troilus: I will make a complement all assault vpon him, for my businesse seethes.

Ser. Sudden businesse, there's a stewed phrase indeede.

Enter Paris and Helena.

PAN. Faire be to you my Lord, and to all this faire company. faire desires in all faire measure fairely guide them, especially to you faire Queene, faire thoughts be your faire pillow.

Hel. Deere L. you are full of faire words.

PAN. You speake your faire pleasure sweete Queene: faire Prince, here is good broken Musicke.

PAR. You haue broke it cozen: and by my life you shall make it whole againe, you shall peece it out with a peece of your performance. Nel, he is full of harmony.

PAN. Truly Lady no.

Hel. O sir.

PAN. Rude in sooth, in good sooth very rude.

PAR. Well said my Lord. well, you say so, in fits,

PAN. I haue businesse to my Lord, deere Queene: my Lord will you vouchsafe me a word.

Hel. Nay, this shall not hedge vs out, wee'll heare you sing certainly.

PAN. Well sweete Queene you are pleasant with me, but, marry thus my Lord, my deere Lord, and most esteemed friend your brother Troilus.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus, hony sweete Lord.

PAN. Go too sweete Queene, goe to. Commends himselfe most affectionately to you.

Hel. You shall not bob vs out of our melody: if you doe, our melancholly vpon your head.

PAN. Sweete Queene, sweete Queene, that's a sweete Queene I faith——

Hel. And to make a sweet Lady sad, is a sower offence.

PAN. Nay, that shall not serue your turne, that shall it not in truth la. Nay, I care not for such words, no, no. And my Lord he desires you, that if the King call for him at Supper, you will make his excuse.

Hel. My Lord Pandarus?

PAN. What saies my sweete Queene, my very, very sweete Queene?

PAR. What exploit's in hand, where sups he to night?

Hel. Nay but my Lord?

PAN. What saies my sweete Queene? my cozen will fall out with you.

Hel. You must not know where he sups.

PAR. With my disposer Cressida.

PAN. No, no, no such matter, you are wide, come your disposer is sicke.

PAR. Well, Ile make excuse.

PAN. I good my Lord: why should you say Cressida? no, your poore disposer's sicke.

PAR. I sple.

PAN. You

Troilus and Cressida.

Pan. You spie, what doe you spie : come, giue me an Instrument now sweete Queene.

Hel. Why this is kindly done?

Pan. My Neece is horrible in loue with a thing you haue sweete Queene.

Hel. She shall haue it my Lord, if it be not my Lord Paris.

Pand. Hee? no, theele none of him, they two are twaine.

Hel. Falling in after falling out, may make them three.

Pan. Come, come, Ile heare no more of this, Ile sing you a song now.

Hel. I, I, prethee now: by my troth sweet Lord thou hast a fine fore-head.

Pan. I you may, you may.

Hel. Let thy song be loue: this loue will vndoe vs all. Oh Cupid, Cupid, Cupid

Pan. Loue? I that it shall ysaith

Pan. I good now loue, loue, nothing but loue.

Pan. In good troth it begins so.

*Loue, Iotte, nothing but loue, still merris:
For O loues Bow,
Sho vs Bucke and Doe:
The Shaft confornds not that it wounds,
But tickles still the sore.
These Lovers cry, oh ho they dye;
Yet that which seemes the wound to kill,
Doth turne oh ho, to ha ha be.
So dying loue liues still,
O ho a while, but ha ha ha,
O ho grows out for ha ha ha---hey ho.*

Hel. In loue ysaith to the very tip of the nose.

Pan. Heres nothing but doues loue, and that breeds hot blood, and hot blood begets hot thoughts, and hot thoughts beget hot deedes, and hot deedes is loue.

Pan. Is this the generation of loue? Hot blood, hot thoughts, and hot deedes, why they are Vipers, is Loue a generation of Vipers?

Sweete Lord whose a field to day?

Pan. Hektor, Deiphobus, Helenus, Antenor, and all the galla try of Troy. I would faine haue arm'd to day, but my Nell would not haue it so.

How chance my brother Troilus went not?

Hel. He hangs the lippe at something, you know all Lord Pandarus?

Pan. Nor I hony sweete Queene: I long to heare how they sped to day:

Youle remember your brothers excuse?

Pan. To a hayre.

Pan. Farewell sweete Queene.

Hel. Commend me to your Neece.

Pan. I will sweete Queene. Sound a retreat.

Pan. They're come from field: let vs to Priams Hall To greete the Warriors. Sweet Helen, I must wooe you, To helpe vname our Hektor. his stubborne Buckles, With these your white enchanting fingers toucht, Shall more obey then to the edge of Steele, Or force of Greekish sinewes: you shall doe more Then all the Island Kings, disarm great Hektor.

Hel. 'Twill make vs proud to be his seruant Paris: Yea what he shall receiue of vs in duetie, Gues vs more palme in beautie then we haue: Yea ouershines our selfe.

Sweete about thought I loue thee.

Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Troilus Men.

Pan. How now, where's thy Maister. at my Couzen Cressida?

Man. No sir, he slayes for you to conduct him thither.

Enter Troilus.

Pan. O here he comes: How now, how now?

Troy. Sirra walke off.

Pan. Haue you seene my Cousin?

Troy. No Pandarus: I stalk about her doore Like a strange soule vpon the Stugian bankes Staying for waftage. O be thou my Charon, And giue me swift transporthance to those fields, Where I may wallow in the Lilly beds Propos'd for the deseruer. O gentle Pandarus, From Cupids shoulder plucke his painted wings, And flye with me to Cressid.

Pan. Walke here ith Orchard, Ile bring her straight.

Exit Pandarus.

Troy. I am giddy; expectation whirles me round, Th'imaginary relish is so sweete, That it enchants my sence: what will it be When that the witty pallats taste indeede Loues thrice reputed Nectar? Death I feare me Sounding distraction, or some ioy too fine, Too subtile, potent, and too sharpe in sweetnesse, For the capacite of my ruder powers; I feare it much, and I doe feare besides, That I shall loose distinction in my ioyes, As doth a battaile, when they charge on heapes The enemy flying.

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. Shee's waking her ready, sheele come straight, you must be witty now, she does so blush, & fetches her winde so short, as if she were fraid with a sprite: Ile fetch her; it is the prettiest villaine, she fetches her breath so short as a new tane Sparrow.

Exit Pand.

Troy. Euen such a passion doth imbrace my bosome: My heart beates thicker then a feavourous pulse, And all my powers doe their bestowing loose, Like vassalage at vnwares encounting The eye of Majesty.

Enter Pandarus and Cressida.

Pan. Come, come, what neede you blush? Shames a babie; here she is now, sweare the oathes now to her, that you haue sworne to me. What are you gone againe, you must be watchere you be made tame, must you? come your wayes, come your wayes, and you draw back ward weele put you ith his why doe you not speak to her? Come draw this curtaine, & let's see your picture. Alasse the day, how loath you are to offend day light, and 'twere darke you'd close sooner. So, so, rub on, and kisse the mistresse; how now, a kisse in fee-farme? build there Carpenter, the ayre is sweete. Nay, you shall fight your hearts out ere I part you. The Faulcon, as the Tercell, for all the Ducks ith Riuer: go too, go too.

Troy. You haue bereft me of all words Lady.

Pan. Words pay no debts; giue her deedes. but sheele bereaue you 'oth' deeds too, if shee call your stuty in question: what billing againe? here's in witness where-of the Parties interchangeably. Come in, come in, Ile go get a fire?

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Troy. O Cressida, how often haue I wisht me thus?

Cres. Wist my Lord? the gods grant? O my Lord.

Troy. What should they grant? what makes this pretty abruption: what too curious dreg spies my sweete Lady in the fountaine of our loue?

Cres. More

Troilus and Cressida.

Cres. More dregs then water, if my teares haue eyes.

Troy. Feares make diuels of Cherubins, they neuer see truly.

Cres. Blinde feare, that seeming reason leads, findes safe footing, then blinde reason, stumbling without feare. to feare the worst, oft cures the worse.

Troy. Oh let my Lady apprehend no feare,

In all Cypids Pageant there is presented no monster.

Cres. Not nothing monstrous neither?

Troy. Nothing but our vndertakings, when we vowe to weepe seas, liue in fire, eat rocks, tame Tygers, thinking it harder for our Mistresse to deuise. imposition enough, then for vs to vndergoe any difficultie imposed. This is the monstrousitie in loue Lady, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd, that the desire is boundlesse, and the act a slave to limit.

Cres. They say all Louers sweare more performance then they are able, and yet referue an ability that they neuer performe: vowing more then the perfection of ten, and discharging lesse then the tenth part of one. They that haue the voyce of Lyons, and the act of Hares. are they not Monsters?

Troy. Are there such? such are not we. Praise vs as we are tasted, allow vs as we proue. our head shall goe bare till merit crowne it. no perfection in reuerision shall haue a praise in present wee will not name desert before his birth, and being borne his addition shall be humble few words to faile faith Troilus shall be such to Cressid, as what enue can say worst, shall be a mocke for his truth; and what truth can speake truest, not truer then Troilus.

Cres. Will you walke in my Lord?

Enter Pandarus.

Pan. What blushing still? haue you not done talking yet?

Cres. Well Vnckle, what folly I commit, I dedicate to you.

Pan. I thanke you for that: if my Lord get a Boy of you, youle giue him me: be true to my Lord, if he pinch, chide me for it.

Tro. You know now your hostages your Vnckles word and my firme faith.

Pan. Nay, Ile giue my word for her too. our kindred though they be long ere they are wooed, they are constant being wonne. they are Burres I can tell you, they le stick where they are throwne.

Cres. Boldnesse comes to mee now, and brings mee heart Prince Troilus, I haue lou'd you night and day, for many weary moneths.

Troy. Why was Cressid then so hard to win?

Cres. Hard to seeme won. but I was won my Lord With the first glance; that euer pardon me, If I confesse much you will play the tyrant: I loue you now, but not till now so much But I might master it, in faith I lye: My thoughts were like vnbridled children grow Too head-strong for their mother: see we fooles, Why haue I blab'd who shall be true to vs When we are so ynsecret to our selues? But though I lou'd you well, I wooed you not, And yet good faith I wisht my selfe a man; Or that we women had mens priuledge Of speaking first Sweet, bid me hold my tongue, For in this rapture I shall surely speake The thing I shall repent. see, see, your silence Comming in dumbnesse, from my weaknesse drawes

My soule of counsell from me. Stop my mouth.

Troy. And shall, albeit sweete Musicke issues thence,

Pan. Pretty yfaith.

Cres. My Lord, I doe beseech you pardon me,

'Twas not my purpose thus to beg a kisse:

I am asham'd; O Heauens, what haue I done!

For this time will I take my leaue my Lord!

Troy. Your leaue sweete Cressid?

Pan. Leauē and you take leaue till to morrow morning.

Cres. Pray you content you.

Troy. What offends you Lady?

Cres. Sir, mine owne company.

Troy. You cannot shun your selfe.

Cres. Let me goe and try.

I haue a kinde of selfe recides with you:

But an vnkinde selfe, that it selfe will leaue,

To be anothers foole Where is my wit?

I would be gone I speake I know not what.

Troy. Well know they what they speake, that speaks so wisely.

Cres. Perchance my Lord, I shew more craft then loue, And fell so roundly to a large confession, To Angle for your thoughts. but you are wise, Or else you loue not for to be wise and loue, Exceedes mans might, that dwels with gods aboue.

Troy. O that I thought it could be in a woman:

As if it can, I will presume in you,

To seede for aye her lampe and flames of loue.

To keepe her constancie in plight and youth,

Out-living beauries outward, with a minde

That doth renew swifter then blood decays:

Or that perswasion could but thus conuince me,

That my integritie and truth to you,

Might be affronted with the match and waight

Of such a winnowed puritie in loue:

How were I then vp-lifted! but alas

I am as true, as truths simplicitie,

And simpler then the infancie of truth

Cres. In that Ile warre with you.

Troy. O vertuous fight,

When right with right wars who shall be most right:

True swaines in loue, shall in the world to come

Approoue their truths by Troilus, when their times.

Full of protest, of oath and big compare;

Wants similes, truth tir'd with iteration,

As true as Steele, as plantage to the Moone:

As Sunne to day. as Turtle to her mate:

As Iron to Adamant. as East to the Center:

Yet after all comparisons of truth,

(As truths authenticke author to be cited)

As true as Troilus, shall crowne vp the Verse,

And sanctifie the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be.

If I be false, or sweare a haire from truth,

When time is old and hath forgot it selfe:

When water drops haue worne the Stones of Troy;

And blinde obliuion swallow'd Cities vp;

And mightie States characterlesse are gated

To dustie nothing; yet let memory,

From false to false, among false Maids in loue,

Vpbraid my falsehood, when they aue said as false,

As Aire, as Water, as Winde, as sandie earth;

As Foxe to Lambe; as Wolfe to Heifers Calfe;

Pard to the Hynde, or Stepdame to her Sonne;

Yea, let them say, to sticke the heart of falsehood,

Troilus and Cressida.

As false as Cressid.

Pand. Go too, a bargain made: seale it, seale it, Ile be the witness here I hold your hand. here my Cousins, if euer you proue false one to another, since I haue taken such paines to bring you together, let all pittifull goers betweene be cal'd to the worlds end after my name: call them all Panders; let all constant men be Troylusses, all false women Cressids, and all brokers betweene, Panders. say, Amen.

Troy. Amen.

Cres. Amen.

Pan. Amen.

Whereupon I will shew you a Chamber, which bed, because it shall not speake of your prettie encounters, presse it to death. away.

And Cypria grant all long-tide Maidens heere, Bed, Chamber, and Pander, to prouide this geere. Exeunt,

Enter Ulysses, Diomedes, Nestor, Agamemnon,
Menelaus and Chalcas. Flourish.

Cal. Now Princes for the seruice I haue done you, Th aduantage of the time prompts me aloud, To call for recompence. appeare it to your minde, That through the sight I beare in things to loue, I haue abandon'd Troy, left my possession, Incur'd a Traitors name, expos'd my selfe, From certaine and possest conueniences, To doubtfull fortunes, sequestering from me all That time, acquaintance, custome and condition, Made tame, and most familiar to my nature: And here to doe you seruice am become, As new into the world, strange, vnacquainted, I doe beseech you, as in way of talte, To giue me now a little benefite: Out of those many registred in promise, Which you say, lue to come in my behalfe.

Agam. What would'st thou of vs Troian? make demand?

Cal. You haue a Troian prisoner, cal'd Antenor, Yesterday tooke Troy holds him very deere. Oft haue you (often haue you, thanks therefore) Desir'd my Cressid in right great exchange. Whom Troy hath still deni'd: but this Antenor, I know is such a wrest in their affaires; That their negotiations all must slacke, Wanting his mannage. and they will almost, Giue vs a Prince of blood, a Sonne of Priam, In change of him. Let him be sent great Princes, And he shall buy my Daughter: and her presence, Shall quite strike off all seruice I haue done, In most accepted paine.

Aga. Let Diomedes beare him, And bring vs Cressid hither: Calcas shall haue What he requests of vs: good Diomed Furnish you fairely for this enterchange; Withall bring word, if Hector will to morrow Be answer'd in his challenge. Aiax is ready.

Dio. This shall I vnder take, and 'tis a burthen Which I am proud to beare. Exit.

Enter Achilles and Patroclus in their Tent.

Ulys. Achilles stands i'th entrance of his Tent; Please it our Generall to passe strangely by him, As if he were forgot. and Princes all, Lay negligent and loose regard vpon him; I will come last, 'tis like heele question me,

Why such vnplausiue eyes are bent? why turn'd on him? If so, I haue derision medicinable, To vse betweene your strangeness and his pride, Which his owne will shall haue desire to drinke; It may doe good, pride hath no other glasse To show it selfe, but prides for supple knees, Feede arrogance, and are the proud mans tees.

Agam. Wtele execute your purpose, and put on A forme of strangeness as we passe along, So doe each Lord, and either greete him not, Or else disdainfully, which shall shake him more, Then if not lookt on. I will lead the way.

Achil. What comes the Generall to speake with me? You know my minde, Ile fight no more 'gainst Troy.

Aga. What saies Achilles, would he ought with vs?

Nes. Would you my Lord ought with the Generall?

Achil. No.

Nes. Nothing my Lord.

Aga. The better

Achil. Good day, good day.

Men. How doe you? how doe you?

Achil. What, do's the Cuckold scorn me?

Aiax. How now Patroclus?

Achil. Good morrow Aiax?

Aiax. Ha.

Achil. Good morrow.

Aiax. I, and good next day too. Exeunt.

Achil. What meane these fellowes? know they not Achilles?

Patr. They passe by strangely: they were vs'd to bend To tend their smiles before them to Achilles.

To come as humbly as they vs'd to creepe to holy Altars.

Achil. What am I poore of late?

'Tis certaine, greatness once falne out with fortune, Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd is, He shall as soone reade in the eyes of others, As feeble in his owne fall: for men like butter-flies, Shew not their meale wings, but to the Summer: And not a man for being simply man, Hath any honour; but honour'd for those honours That are without him; as place, riches, and fauour, Prizes of accident, as oft as merite: Which when they fall, as being slippery standers; The loue that leand on them as slippery too, Doth one plucke downe another, and together Dye in the fall. But 'tis not so with me; Fortune and I are friends, I doe enioy At ample point, all that I did possesse, Saue these mens looks: who do me thinkes finde out Something not worth in me such rich beholding, As they haue often giuen. Here is Ulysses, Ile interrupt his reading: how now Ulysses?

Ulys. Now great Thetis Sonne.

Achil. What are you reading?

Ulys. A strange fellow here

Writes me, that man, how dearly euer parted, How much in hauing, or without, or in, Cannot make boast to haue that which he hath; Nor feelles not what he owes, but by reflection: As when his vertues shining vpon others, Heate them, and they retort that heate againe To the first giuer.

Achil. This is not strange Ulysses: The beautie that is borne here in the face, The bearer knowes not, but commends it selfe, Not going from it selfe: but eye to eye oppos'd,

Salutes

Troilus and Cressida.

Salutes each other with each others forme.

For speculation turnes not to it selfe,
Till it hath trauail'd, and is married there
Where it may see it selfe: this is not strange at all.

Ulis. I doe not straine it at the position.
It is familiar; but at the Authors drift,
Who in his circumstance, expressly proues
That no may is the Lord of any thing,
(Though in and of him there is much consistiſg.)
Till he communicate his partes to others:
Nor doth he of him selfe know them for ought,
Till he behold them formed in th'applause,
Where they are extended. who like an arch reuerb'rate
The voyce againe, or like a gate of Steele,
Fronting the Sunne, receiues and renders backe
His figure, and his heare. I was much rapt in this,
And apprehended her immediately:
The vnknowne Aiax;

Heauens what a man is there? a very Horse, (are-
That has he knowes not what Nature, what things there
Most abiect in regard, and deare in vse.
What things againe most deere in the esteeme,
And poore in worth: now shall we see to morrow,
An act that very chance doth throw vpon him?
Aiax renown'd? O heauens, what some men doe,
While some men leaue to doe!
How some men creepe in skittish fortunes hall,
Whiles others play the Ideots in her eyes:
How one man eates into anothers pride,
While pride is feasting in his wantonnesse
To see these Greecian Lords; why, euen already,
They clap the lubber Aiax on the shoulder,
As if his foote were on braue Hectors brest,
And great Troy shrinking.

Achil. I doe beleue it:
For they pass by me, as my selfe doe by beggars,
Neither gae to me good word, nor looke.
What are my deedes forgot?

Ulis. Time hath (my Lord) a wallet at his backe,
Wherein he puts almes for obliuion:
A great siz'd monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deedes past,
Which are deuour'd as fast as they are made,
Forgot as soone as done. perseuerance, deere my Lord,
Keepes honor bright, to haue done, is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rustie male,
In monumentall mockrie: take the instant way,
For honour trauels in a straight so narrow,
Where one but goes a breast, keepe then the path
For emulation hath a thousand Sonnes,
That one by one pursue, if you giue way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forth right;
Like to an entred Tyde, they all rush by,
And leaue you hindmost:
Or like a gallant Horse false in first ranke,
Lye there for payment to the abiect, nere
Ore-run and trampled on: then what they doe in present,
Though lesse then yours in past, must ore-top yours
For time is like a fashionable Hoste,
That slightly shakes his parting Guest by th'hand,
And with his armes out-stretcht, as he would flye,
Grasps in the commer: the welcome euer smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O let not vertue seeke
Remuneration for the thing it was: for beautie, wit,
High birth, vigor of bone, desert in seruice,
Loue, friendship, charity, are subiects all

To enuious and calumniating time
One touch of nature makes the whole world kin:
That all with one consent praise new borne gaudes,
Though they are made and moulded of things past,
And goe to dust, that is a little guilt,
More laud then guilt ore dust.
The present eye praises the present object:
Then maruell not thou great and compleat man,
That all the Greekes begin to worship Aiax;
Since things in motion begin to catch the eye,
Then what not stirs. the cry went out on thee,
And still it might, and yet it may againe,
If thou wouldst not entombe thy selfe alieue,
And case thy reputation in thy Tent;
Whose glorious deedes, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And draue great Mars to faction.

Achil. Of this my priuacie,
I haue strong reasons.
Ulis. But gainst your priuacie
These reasons are more potent and heroycall:
'Tis knowne Achilles, that you are in loue
With one of Priams daughters.

Achil. Ha? knowne?
Ulis. Is that a wonder?
The prouidence that's in a watchfull State,
Knowes almost euery graipe of Plutoes gold;
Finds bottome in th'vncomprehensie deepes;
Keepes place with thought, and almost like the gods,
Doe thoughts vnaile in their dumbe cradles:
There is a mysterie (with whom relation Durst neuer meddle) in the soule of State;
Which hath an operation more diuine,
Then breath or pen can giue expresseure to:
All the commer that you haue had with Troy,
As perfectly in ours, as yours, my Lord,
And better would it hit Achilles much,
To throw downe Hector then Polluxena
But it must grieve yong Prius now at home,
When fame shall in her land sound her trumpe;
And all the Greekish Girdles shall tripping sing,
Great Hectors sister did Achilles winne;
But our great Aiax brauely beate downe him.
Farewell my Lord. I as your louer speake;
The foole slides ore the ice that you should breake.

Patr. To this effect Achilles haue I mou'd you;
A woman impudent and mannish growne,
Is not more loth'd, then an effeminate man,
In time of action I stand condemn'd for this;
They thinke my little stomacke to the warre,
And your great loue to me, restraines you thus:
Sweete, rouse your selfe; and the weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your necke vnloose his amorous fould,
And like a dew drop from the Lyons mane,
Be shooke to ayrie ayre.

Achil. Shall Aiax fight with Hector?
Patr. I, and perhaps receiue much honor by him.

Achil. I see my reputation is at stake,
My fame is throwndly gored.

Patr. O then beware:
Those wounds heale ill, that men doe giue themselves:
Omission to doe what is necessary,
Seales a commission to a blanke of danger,
And danger like an ague subtly taints
Euen then when we sit idely in the sunne.

Achil. Goe call Thersites hither sweet Pierides,

Troilus and Cressida.

Ile send the foole to Ajax, and desire him
 To inuite the Trojan Lords after the Combat
 To see vs here vnarm'd: I haue a womans longing,
 An appetite that I am sicke withall,
 To see great Hector in his weedes of peace; Enter Thersites.
 To talke with him, and to behold his visage,
 Euen to my full of view. A labour sau'd.

Ther. A wonder.

Achil. What?

Ther. Alex goes vp and downe the field, asking for himselfe.

Achil. How so?

Ther. Hee must fight singly to morrow with Hector, and is so prophetically proud of an heroicall cudgelling, that he raues in saying nothing.

Achil. How can that be?

Ther. Why he stalkes vp and downe like a Peacock, a stride and a stande ruminates like an hollesse, that hath no Arithmatique but her braine to set downe her reckoning: bites his lip with a politique regard, as who should say, there were wit in his head and twoo'd out; and so there is. but it lyes as coldly in him, as fire in a flint, which will not shew without knocking. The mans vn-done for euer; for if Hector breake not his necke i'th' combat, heele break't himselfe in vaine-glory. He knowes not mee: I said, good morrow Ajax; And he replies, thanks Agamemnon. What thinke you of this man, that takes me for the Generall? Hee's growne a very Jang-fish, languagelesse, a monster: a plague of opinion, a man may weare it on both sides like a leather Jerkin.

Achil. Thou must be my Ambassador to him Thersites.

Ther. Who, I: why, heele answer no body: he professes not answering; speaking is for beggers: he weares his tongue in's armes: I will put on his presence; let Patroclus make his demands to me, you shall see the Pageant of Ajax.

Achil. To him Patroclus; tell him, I humbly desire the valiant Ajax, to inuite the most valorous Hector, to come vnarm'd to my Tent, and to procure safe conduct for his person, of the magnanimous and most illustrious, fixe or seauen times honour'd Captaine, Generall of the Grecian Arme Agamemnon, &c. doe this.

Patro. Ioue blesse great Ajax.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. I come from the worthy Achilles.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. Who most humbly desires you to inuite Hector to his Tent.

Ther. Hum.

Patro. And to procure safe conduct from Agamemnon.

Ther. Agamemnon?

Patro. I my Lord.

Ther. Ha?

Patro. What say you too't.

Ther. God buy you with all my heart.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. If to morrow be a faire day, by eleuen a clocke it will goe one way or other; howsoeuer, he shall pay for me ere he has me.

Patro. Your answer sir.

Ther. Fare you well withall my heart.

Achil. Why, but he is not in this tune, is he?

Ther. No, but he's out a tune thus: what musicke will be in him when Hector has knockt out his braines, I know not: but I am sure none, vntill the Fidler Apollo get his sinewes to make catlings on.

Achil. Come, thou shalt beare a Letter to him straight.

Ther. Let me carry another to his Horse; for that's the more capable creature.

Achil. My minde is troubled like a Fountaine stir'd, And I my selfe see not the bottome of it.

Ther. Would the Fountaine of your minde were cleere againe, that I might water an Ass at it: I had rather be a Ticke in a Sheepe, then such a valiant ignorance.

Enter at one doore Aeneas with a Torch, at another Paris, Diophobus, Antenor, Diomed the Grecian, with Torches.

Par. See how, who is that there?

Dioph. It is the Lord Aeneas.

Aene. Is the Prince there in person?

Had I so good occasion to lye long
 As you Prince Paris, nothing but heauenly businesse,
 Should rob my bed-mate of my company.

Diom. That's my minde too: good morrow Lord Aeneas.

Par. A valiant Greeke Aeneas, take his hand, Witness the proceesse of your speech within; You told how Diomed in a whole weeke by dayes Did haunt you in the Field.

Aene. Health to you valiant sir,
 During all question of the gentle truce:
 But when I meete you arm'd, as blacke defiance,
 As hea: can thinke, or courage execute.

Diom. The one and other Diomed embraces,
 Our blouds are now in calme; and so long health:
 But when contention, and occasion meetes,
 By Ioue, he play the hunter for thy life,
 With all my force, pursuite and pollicy.

Aene. And thou shalt haue a Lyon that will flye
 With his taile backward, in humane gentlenesse:
 Welcome to Troy; now by Archifes life,
 Welcome indeede: by Paris hand I sweare,
 No man aloue can loue in such a sort,
 The thing he meanes to kill, more excellently.

Diom. We sympathize, Ioue let Aeneas liue
 (If to my sword his fate be not the glory)
 A thousand compleate courses of the Sunne,
 But in mine emulous honor let him dye:
 With euery ioynt a wound, and that to morrow.

Aene. We know each other well.

Diom. We doe, and long to know each other worse.

Par. This is the most, despihtful'st gentle greeting;
 The noblest hatefull loue, that ere I heard of.
 What businesse Lord so early?

Aene. I was sent for to the King; but why, I know not.

Par. His purpose meets you; it was to bring this Greeke
 To Calchas's house; and there to rendet him,
 For the enfrsed Antenor, the faire Cressid
 Lers haue your company; or if you please,
 Hasten there before vs. I constantly doe phisake
 (Or rather call my thought a certaine knowledge)
 My brother Troilus lodges there to night.
 Rouse him, and giue him note of our approach,
 With the whole quality whereof, I feare
 We shall be much welcome.

Aene. That I assure you:

Troilus had rather Troy were burne to Greece,
 Then Cressid borne from Troy.

Par. There

Troilus and Cressida.

Par. There is no helpe.
The bitter disposition of the time will haue it so.
O Lord, wee follow you

Ene. Good morrow all. Exit Eneas

Par. And tell me noble Diomed; saith tell me true,
Euen in the soule of found good fellow slup,
Who in your thoughts merits fa re Helen most?
My selfe, or Alerclaud?

Diom. Both alike.
He merits well to haue her, that doth seeke her,
Not making any scruple of her soylure,
With such a hell of paine, and world of charge.
And you as well to keepe her, that defend her,
Not pallating the taste of her dishonour,
With such a costly losse of wealth and friends:
He like a puling Cuckold, would drinke vp
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed peece -
You like a lecher, out of whorish loynes,
Are pleas'd to breede out your inheritors:
Both merits poyz'd, each weighs no lesse nor more,
But heas he, which heauier for a whore

Par. You are too bitter to your country-woman.
Di. Shee's bitter to her country - heare me Paru,
For euery false drop in her boudy veines,
A Grecians life hath sunke for euery scruple
Of her contaminated erron weight,
A Trojan hath beene slaine Since she could speake,
She hath not giuen so many good words breath,
As for her, Grekes and Troians suffred death
Par. Faire Diomed, you doe as chapmen doe,
Dit praise the thing that you desire to buy.
But we in silence hold this vertue well;
Weele not commend, what we intend to sell.
Here lyes our way. Exeunt.

Enter Troilus and Cressida.

Troy. Deere trouble not your selfe. the morne is cold.
Cres. Then sweet my Lord, Ile call mine Vackle downe,
He shall vnbolt the Gates.

Troy. Trouble him not:
To bed, to bed; sleepe kill those pritty eyes,
And giue as soft attachment to thy senses,
As Infants empty of all thought.

Cres. Good morrow then.

Troy. I pri. hee now to bed

Cres. Are you a weary of me?

Troy. O Cressida! but that the busie day
Wak't by the Larke, hath rous'd the ribauld Crowes,
And dreaming night will hide our eyes no longer
I would not from thee.

Cres. Night hath beene too briefe. (staves,
Troy. Bestrew the witch' with venemous wights she
As hidiously as hell; but flies the graspes of loue,
With wings more momentary, swift then thought:
You will catch cold, and curse me.

Cres. Prithee tarry, you men will neuer tarry;
O foolish Cressid, I might haue still held off,
And then you would haue tarried. Hark, ther's one vp

Pand. within What's all the doores open here?

Troy. It is your Vackle. Enter Pandarus

Cres. A pestilence on him now will he be mocking:
I shall haue such a life.

Par. How now, how now? how goe maiden-heads?
Heare you Maide: wher' my cozin Cressid?

Cres. Go hang your self, you naughty mocking Vackle;

You bring me to doo---and then you floute me too.

Par. To do what? to do what? let her say what:
What haue I brought you to doe?

Cres. Come, come, bestrew your heart: youle nere be good, nor suffer others.

Par. Ha, ha alas poore wretch. a poore Chipschia, hast not slept to night? would hee not (a naughty man) let it sleepe a bug-beare take him. One knocks

Cres. Did not I tell you? would hee were knockt ith' head. Who's that at doore? good Vackle goe and see.
My Lord, come you againe into my Chamber.
You smile and mocke me, as if I meant naughtily.

Troy. Ha, ha.

Cres. Come you are deceu'd, I thinke of no such thing.
How earnestly they knocke: pray you come in. Knocke.
I would not for halfe Troy haue you scene here Exeunt

Par. Who's there? what's the matter? will you beate downe the doore? How now, what's the matter?

Ene. Good morrow Lord, good morrow.

Par. Who's there my Lord? Eneas? by my troth I knew you not what newes with you so early?

Ene. Is not Prince Troilus here?

Par. Here? what should hee doe here?

Ene. Come he is here, my Lord, doe not deny him:
It doth import him much to speake with me.

Par. Is he here say you? 'tis more then I know, Ile be sworne For my owne part I came in late: what should he doe here?

Ene. Who, say then - Come, come, youle doe him wrong, ere y'are ware. youle be so true to him, to be false to him: Doe not you know of him, but yet goe fetch him hither, goe.

Enter Troilus.

Troy. How now, what's the matter?

Ene. My Lord, I scarce haue leisure to saute you,

My matter is so rash: there is at hand,

Paru your brother, and Deiphobus,

The Grecian Diomed, and our Artheror

Deliu'er'd to vs, and for him forth-with,

Ere the first sacrifice, within this Houe

We must giue vp to Diomed's hand

The Lady Cressida.

Troy. Is it concluded so?

Ene. By Priam, and the generall state of Troy,
They are at hand, and ready to effect it.

Troy. How my achievements mocke me;

I will goe meete them and my Lord Eneas,

We met by chance; you did not finde me here.

Ene. Good, good, my Lord, the secrets of nature
Haue not more gift in taciturnitie. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressid.

Par. Is't possible? no sooner got but lost: the diuell take Artheror; the yong Prince will goe mad: a plague
vpon Artheror; I would they had brok's necke.

Cres. How now? what's the matter? who was here?

Par. Ah, ha!

Cres. Why sigh you so profoundly? wher's my Lord?
gone? tell me sweet Vackle what's the matter?

Par. Would I were as deepe vnder the earth as I am
aboue.

Cres. O the gods! what's the matter?

Par. Prythee get thee in: would thou had'st here beate borre; I knew thou would'st be his death O poore Gd-tleman. a plague vpon Artheror.

952

Cres. Good

Troilus and Cressida.

Cres. Good Vnckle I beseech you, on my knees, I beseech you what's the matter?

Pan. Thou must be gone wench, thou must be gone; thou art chang'd for Antenor: thou must to thy Father, and be gone from Troilus: 'twill be his death: 'twill be his baine, he cannot beare it..

Cres. O you immortall gods! I will not goe.

Pan. Thou must.

Cres. I will not Vnckle: I haue forgot my Father: I know no touch of consanguinitie:

No kin, no loue, no bloud, no soule, so neere me,
As the sweet Troilus: O you gods diuine!
Make Cressida name the very crowne of falshood!
If euer she leaue Troilus time, orce and death,
Do to this body what extremitie you can;
But the strong bafe and building of my loue,
Is as the very Center of the earth,
Drawing all things to it. I will goe in and weepe.

Pan. Doe, doe.

Cres. Teare ray bright here, and scratch my praised cheekes,
Cracke my cleere voyce with sobz, and breake my heart
With sounding Troilus. I will not goe from Troy. Exiunt.

Enter Paris, Troilus, Aeneas, Deiphobus, Antenor and Diomedes.

Par. It is great morning, and the houre prefix
Of her deliuerie to this valiant Greeke
Comes fast vpon: good my brother Troilus,
Tell you the Lady what she is to doe,
And hast her to the purpose.

Troy. Walke into her house:
Ile bring her to the Grecian presently;
And to his hand, when I deliuer her,
Thinke it an Altar, and thy brother Troilus
A Priest, there offering to it his heart.

Par. I know what 'tis to loue,
And would, as I shall pittie, I could helpe.
Please you walke in, my Lords. Exeunt.

Enter Pandarus and Cressid.

Pan. Be moderate, be moderate.

Cres. Why tell you me of moderation?
The griefe is fine, full perfect that I taste,
And no lesse in a sence as strong
As that which causeth it. How can I moderate it?
If I could temporise with my affection,
Or brew it to a weake and colder pallat,
The like alaument could I giue my griefe:
My loue admits no qualifying crosse; Enter Troilus.
No more my griefe, in such a precious losse.

Pan. Here, here, here, he comes, a sweet ducke.

Cres. O Troilus, Troilus!

Pan. What a paire of spectacles is here? let me embrace too: oh hart, as the goodly saying is; O heart, heauie heart, why sighest thou without breaking? where he answers againe; because thou canst not ease thy smart by filendship, nor by speaking. there was neuer a truer time; let vs cast away nothing, for we may liue to haue neede of such a Verse: we see it, we see it: how now Lambs?

Troy. Cressid I loue thee in so strange a puntie;
That the blest gods, as angry with my fancie,
More bright in zeale, then the deuotion which
Cold lips blow to their Deities. take thee from me.

Cres. Haue the gods enue?

Pan. I, I, I, 'tis too plaine a case.

Cres. And is it true, that I must goe from Troy?

Troy. A hatefull truth.

Cres. What, and from Troilus too?

Troy. From Troy, and Troilus.

Cres. Is possible?

Troy. And sodainely, where iniurie of chance Puts backe leape-taking, iustles roughly by
All time of pause; rudely beguiles our lips
Of all reioyndure: forcibly preuents
Our lockt embrasures; strangles our deare vower,
Euen in the birth of our owne laboring breath.
We two, that with so many thousand sighes
Did buy each other, must poorely sell our selues,
With the rude breuine and discharge of our Iniurious time; now with a robbers haste
Crams his rich thecuerie vp, he knowes not how.
As many farwels as be stars in heauen,
With distinct breath, and consign'd kisses to them,
He fumbles vp into a loose adiew;
And scants vs with a single famishe kisse,
Distasting with the sale of broken teares. Enter Aeneas.

Aeneas wishin. My Lord, is the Lady ready?

Troy. Harke, you are call'd: some say the genius so
Cries, come to him that instantly must dye.
Bid them haue patience: she shall come anon.

Pan. Where are my teares? raide, to lay this winde,
or my heart will be blowne vp by the root.

Cres. I must then to the Grecians?

Troy. No remedy.

Cres. A wofull Cressid 'mongst the merry Greekes.

Troy. When shall we see againe?

Troy. Here me my loue: be thou but true of heart.

Cres. I true? how now? what wicked deeme is this?

Troy. Nay, we must vse expostulation kindly,
For it is parting from vs:
I speake not, be thou true, as fearing thee:
For I will throw my Gloue to death himselfe,
That there's no maculation in thy heart:
But be thou true, say I, to fashion in
My sequent protestation: be thou true,
And I will see thee.

Cres. O you shall be expa'd, my Lord to dangers
As infinite, as imminent: but Ile be true.

Troy. And Ile grow friend with danger;
Weare this Sleeue.

Cres. And you this Gloue.
When shall I see you?

Troy. I will corrupt the Grecian Centinels,
To giue thee nightly visitation.
But yet be true.

Cres. O heauens. be true againe?

Troy. Heare why I speake it; Loue:
The Grecian youths are full of qualitie,
Their louing well compos'd, with gift of nature,
Flawing and swelling ore with Arts and exercise:
How nouelties may moue, and parts with person.
Alas, a kinde of godly realousie;
Which I beseech you call a vertuous sinne:
Makes me afraid.

Cres. O heauens, you loue me not!

Troy. Dye I a villaine then.

In this I doe not call your faith in question
So mainly as my merit: I cannot sing,
Nor heele the high Lauske; nor sweeten talke,
Nor play at subtil games; faire vertues all; &

To

Troilus and Cressida.

To which the Grecians are most prompt and pregnant :
But I can tell that in each grace of these,
There lurkes a still and dumb-discourfuie diuell,
That tempts most cunningly but be not tempted.

Cres. Doe you thinke I will :

Troy. No, but something may be done that we wil not :
And sometimes we are diuels to our selues,
When we will tempt the frailtie of our powers,
Presuming on their changefull potentie

Aeneas within. Nay, good my Lord?

Troy. Come kisse, and let vs part.

Paris within. Brother Troilus?

Troy. Good brother come you hither,
And bring Aeneas and the Grecian with you.

Cres. My Lord, will you be true?

Exit.

Troy. Who I? alas it is my vice, my fault :
Whiles others fish with craft for great opinion,
I, with great truth, catch meere simplicitie,
Whil'st some with cunning guild their copper crownes,
With truth and plainnesse I doe weare mine bare :

Enter the Greekes.

Feare not my truth, the morrall of my wit
Is plaine and true, ther's all the reach of it.
Welcome sir Diomed, here is the Lady
Which for Antenor, we deliuer you.
At the port (Lord) Ile giue her to thy hand,
And by the way possesse thee what she is
Entreate her faire, and by my soule, faire Greeke,
If ere thou stand at mercy of my Sword,
Name Cressid, and thy life shall be as safe
As Prism is in Illion?

Diom. Faire Lady Cressid,

So please you sauethe thanks this Prince expects :
The lustre in youre eye, heauen in your cheek,
Pleades your faire visage, and to Diomed
You shall be mistress, and command him wholly.

Troy. Grecian, thou do'st not vse me curteously,
To shame the seale of my petition towards,
I praiing her. I tell thee Lord of Greece,
Shee is as farre high soaring o're thy praises,
As thou vnworthy to be cal'd her seruant :
I charge thee vse her well, euen for my charge.
For by the dreadful Pinio, if thou do'st not,
(Though the great bulke Achilles be thy guard)
Ile cut th' throate.

Diom. Oh be not mou'd Prince Troilus,
Let me be prauiledg'd by my place and message,
To be a speaker free? when I am hence,
Ile answer to my lust and know my Lord;
Ile nothing doe on charge. to her owne worth
She shall be priz'd but that you say, be't so;
Ilspeake it in my spirit and honor, no.

Troy. Come to the Port Ile tell thee Diomed,
This braue, shall oft make thee to hide thy head
Lady giue me your hand, and as we walke,
To our owne selues bend we our needfull talke.

Sound Trumpet.

Par. Harke, Hectors Trumpet.

Aene. How haue we spent this morning
The Prince must thinke me tardy and remisse,
That swore to ride before him in the field.

Par. 'Tis Troilus fault: come, come, to field with him.

Exeunt.

Diom. Let vs make ready straight.

Ent. Yea, with a Bridegroomes fresh alacrutie

Let vs addresse to tend on Hectors heeles :
The glory of our Troy doth this day lye
On his faire worth, and single Chualrie.

Enter Ajax armed, Achilles, Patroclus, Agamemnon, Menelaus, Vlisses, Nestor, Calcas, &c.

Ag. Here art thou in appointment fresh and faire,
Anticipating time. With starting courage,
Giue with thy Trumpet a loud note to Troy
Thou dreadfull Ajax, that the appauled aire
May pierce the head of the great Combatant,
And hale him hither.

Aia. Thou, Trumpet, ther's my puiſe;
Now cracke thy lungs, and split thy bralen pipe:
Blow villaine, till thy sphered Bize cheek
Out-swell the collicke of puffed Ajalon.
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes spout blood:
Thou blowest for Hector.

Vliss. No Trumpet answers.

Achil. 'Tis but early dayes.

Ag. Is not young Diomed with Calcas daughter?

Vliss. 'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gate,
He rises on the toe that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth

Ag. Is this the Lady Cressid?

Diom. Euen she

Ag. Most deereley welcome to the Greekes, sweete Lady.

Nest. Our Generall doth salute you with a kisse.

Vliss. Yet is the kindenesse but particular, 'twere better
she were kist in generall.

Nest. And very courtly counsell. Ile begin. So much for Nestor.

Achil. Ile take that winter from your lips faire Lady
Achilles bids you welcome

Mene. I had good argument for kissing once.

Patro. But that's no argument for kissing now;
For thus pop'e Paris in his hardiment.

Vliss. Oh deadly gall, and theme of all our scornes,
For which we loose our heads, to gild his hornes.

Patro. The first was Menelaus kisse, this mine.

Patroclus kisses you.

Mene. Oh thus is trim.

Patro. Paris and I kisse euermore for him.

Mene. Ile haue my kisse sir. Lady by your leaue.

Cres. In kissing doe you render, or receiue.

Patro. Both take and giue.

Cres. Ile make my match to liue,
The kisse you take is better then you giue: therefore no kisse.

Mene. Ile giue you boote, Ile giue you three far one.

Cres. You are an odde man, giue euen, or giue none.

Mene. An odde man Lady, every man is odde.

Cres. No, Paris is not; for you know tis true,
That you are odde, and he is euen with you.

Mene. You fillip me a'th' head.

Cres. No, Ile be sworne.

Vliss. It were no match, your naile against his horne:
Mav I sweete Lady beg a kisse of you?

Cres. You may.

Vliss. I doe desire it.

Cres. Why beggesthen?

Vliss. Why ther for Perms sake, giue me a kisse.
When Hector is a made againe, and his

Cres. I am your debtor, claime it when 'tis due.

¶ 53

Vliss. Neuer's

Troilus and Cressida.

Ulf. Neuer's my day, and then a kisse of you.

Diom. Lady a word, Ile bring you to your Father.

Nest. A woman of quicke fence.

Ulf. Fic, sic, vpon her :

Ther's a language in her eye, her cheek, her lip;
Nay, her foote speaks, her wanton spirit looks out
At euery ioynt, and motiue of her body
Oh these encounterers so glib of tongue,
That giue a coasting welcome ere it comes;
And wide vnclasp the tables of their thoughts,
To euery tickling reader set them downe,
For sluttish spoiles of opportunitie,
And daughters of the game.

Exeunt

Enter all of Troy, Hector, Paris, Aeneas, Helenus and Attendants Floresh.

All The Troians Trumper

Aga. Yonder comes the troope.

Aene. Haile all you state of Greece : what shalbe done
To him that victory commands ? or doe you purpose,
A victor shall beknowne : will you the Knights
Shall to the edge of all extremitie
Pursue each others, or shall be diuided
By any voyce, or order of the field : Hector bad aske ?

Aga. Which way would Hector haue it ?

Aene. He cares not, heele obey conditions.

Aga. 'Tis done like Hector, but securely done,
A little proudly, and great deale disprising
The Knight oppos'd.

Aene. If not Achilles sir, what is your name ?

Achil. If not Achilles, nothing

Aene. Therefore Achilles : but what ere, know this,
In the extremity of great and little :
Valour and pride excell themselves in Hector ;
The one almost as infinite as all ;
The other blanke as nothing weigh him well :
And that which lookes like pride, is curtesie :
This Aiax is halfe made of Hectors blood ;
In loue whereof, halfe Hector stales at home :
Halfe heart, halfe hand, halfe Hector, comes to seeke
This blended Knight, halfe Trojan, and halfe Greeke.

Achil. A maiden battaile then ? O I perceiue you.

Aga. Here is sir, Diomed : got gentle Knight,
Stand by our Aiax : as you and Lord Aeneas
Consent vpon the order of their fight,
So be it : either to the vttermost,
Or else a breach the Combatants being kin,
Halfe stints their strife, before their strokes begin.

Ulf. They are oppos'd already.

Aga. What Trojan is that same that lookes so heauy ?

Ulf. The yongest Sonne of Priam,
A true Knight ; they call him Troilus ;
Not yet matlike, yet mitchlesse, firme of word,
Speaking in deedes, and deedlesse in his tongue ;
Not soone prouok't, nor being prouok't, soone calm'd ;
His heart and hand both open, and both free :
For what he hds, he giues ; what thinks, he shewes ;
Yet giue, he not till iudgement guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impaire thought with breath :
Manly as Ulf, but more dangerous ;
For Hector in his blaz of wrath subscribes
To tender obiects, but he, in heate of action,
Is more vindicative then zealous loue.
They call him Troilus, and on him erect,
A second hope, as fairely built as Hector.
Thus saies Aeneas, one that knowes the youth,
Euen to his inches : and with priuate soule,

Did in great Illion thus translate him to me.

Alarm.

Aga. They are in action.

Nest. Now Aiax hold thine owne.

Troy. Hector, thou sleepest, awake thee.

Aga. His blowes are wel dispos'd there Aiax. trifles

Diom. You must no more.

Aene. Princes enough, so please you.

Aia. I am not warme yet, let vs fight againe.

Diom. As Hector pleases.

Hect. Why then will I no more :

Thou art great Lord, my Fathers sisters Sonne ;
A cousin german to great Priams seede :
The obligation of our blood forbids
A gorie emulation 'twixt vs twaine :
Were thy commixion, Greeke and Trojan so,
That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan : the finewes of his Legge,
All Greeke, and this all Troy : my Mothers blood
Runs on the dexter cheek, and this sinister
Bounds in my fathers : by Iene multipotent,
Thou should'st not beare from me a Greekish member
Wherein my sword had not impresseure made
Of our ranke feud : but the iust gods gainsay,
That any drop thou borrow'st from thy mother,
My sacred Aunt, should by my mortall Sword
Be drained. Let me embrace thee Aiax :
By him that thunders, thou hast lustie Armes ;
Hector would haue them fall vpon him thus,
Cozen, all honor to thee.

Aia. I thanke thee Hector :

Thou art too gentle, and too free a man :
I came to kill thee Cozen, and beare hence
A great addition, earned in thy death

Hect. Not Neoptolymus so mirable,
On whose bright crest, fame with her lowd 'st (O yes)
Cries, This is he ; could'st promise to himselfe,
A thought of added honor, come from Hector

Aene. There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will doe ?

Hect. Weele answer it

The issue is embracement : Aiax, farewell.

Aia. If I might in entreaties finde successe,
As seld I haue the chance ; I would desire
My famous Cousin to our Grecian Tents.

Diom. 'Tis Agamemnon wish, and great Achilles
Doth long to see vnarm'd the valiant Hector.

Hect. Aeneas, call my brother Troilus to me :

And signifie this louing enterview
To the expecters of our Trojan part :
Desire them home. Giue me thy hand, my Cousin :
I will goe eate with thee, and see your Knights.

Enter Agamemnon and the rest.

Aia. Great Agamemnon comes to meete vs here.

Hect. The worthiest of them, tell me name by name :
But for Achilles, mine owne serching eyes
Shall finde him by his large and portly size.

Aga. Worthy of Armes : as welcome as to one :
That would be rid of such an enemye.

But that's no welcome : vnderstand more cleere
What's past, and what's to come, is firew'd with huskes,
And formelesse ruine of obliuion :

But in this extant moment, faith and troth,
Strain'd purely from all hollow bias drawing :
Bids thee with most diuine integritie,

From heart of very heart, great Hector welcome.

Hect. I thanke thee most imperious Agamemnon

Aga. My

Troilus and Cressida.

Ag. My well-fam'd Lord of Troy, no lesse to you.

Men. Let me confirme my Princely brothers greeting,
You brace of warlike Brothers, welcome hither.

Hell. Who must we answer?

Ene. The Noble Mercalaus.

Hell. O, you my Lord, by Mars his gauntlet thanks,
Mocke not, that I affect th'vntraded Oath,
Your quondam wife sweares still by Venus Gloue
Shee's well, but bad me not commend her to you

Men. Name her not now sir, she's a deadly Theame.

Hell. O pardon, I offend

Nest. I haue (thou gallant Trojan) scene thee oft Labouring for destiny, make cruell way
Through ranks of Greekish youth and I haue seen thee
As hot as Perseus, spurte thy Phrygian Steed,
And scene thee scorning forscits and subduments,
When thou hast hung thy aduanced sword i'th'ayre,
Not letting it decline, on the declined.

That I haue said vnto my standers by,
Loe Iupiter is yonder, dealing life
And I haue scene thee pause, and take thy breath,
When that a ring of Greekes haue hem'd thee in,
Like an Olympian wrestling. Thus haue I scene,
But this thy countenance (still lockt in Steele)
I neuer saw till now. I knew thy Grandfire,
And once fought with him, he was a Souldier good,
But by great Mars, the Capitaine of vs all,
Neuer like thee. Let an oldman embrace thee,
And (worthy Warriour) welcome to our Tents.

Ene. 'Tis the old Nestor.

Hell. Let me embrace thee good old Chronicle,
That hast so long walk'd hand in hand with time.
Most reuerend Nestor, I am glad to clasp thee
Ne I would my armes could match thee in contention
As they contend with thee in courtisie.

Hell. I would they could.

Nest. Ha? by this white beard I'd fight with thee to morrow. Well, welcom, welcome. I haue seen the time.

Vly. I wonder now, how yonder City stands,
When we haue heere her Base and pillar by vs.

Hell. I know your fauour Lord Vlysses well.
Ah sir, there's many a Greeke and Trojan dead,
Since first I saw your selfe, and Diomed
In Illion, on your Greekish Embassie.

Vly. Sir, I foretold you then what would ensue,
My prophesie is but halfe his iourney yet,
For yonder wals that pertyly front your Towne,
Yond Towers, whose wanton tops do busse the clouds,
Must kisse their owne feet

Hell. I must not belecue you.
There they stand yet and modestly I thinke,
The fall of euery Phrygian stone will cost
A drop of Grecian blood. the end crownes all,
And that old common Arbitrator, Time,
Will one day end it.

Vly. So to him we leaue it.
Most gentle, and most valiant Hellor, welcome;
After the Generall, I beseech you next
To Feast with me, and see me at my Tent.

Achl. I shall forestall thee Lord Vlysses, thou:
Now Hellor I haue fed mine eyes on thee,
I haue with exact view perus'd thee Hellor,
And quoted ioynt by ioynt.

Hell. Is this Achilles?

Achl. I am Achilles.

Hell. Stand faire I prythee, let me looke on thee,

Achl. Be' old thy fill.

Hell. Nay, I haue done already.

Achl. Thou art to breefe, I will the second time,
As I would buy thee, view thee, limbe by limbe

Hell. O like a Booke of sport thou'lt reade me ore:
But there's more in me then thou vnderstand'st.
Why dost thou so oppresse me with thine eye:

Achl. Tell me you Heauens, in which part of his body
Shall I destroy him? Whether there, or there, or there,
That I may giue the locall wound a name,
And make distinct the very breach, where our
Hellors great spirit sh-w. Answer me heauens.

Hell. It would discredit the blest Gods, proud man,
To answer such a question. Stand againe;
Think'st thou to catch my life so pleasantly,
As to prenominate in nice coniecture
Where thou wilt hit me dead?

Achl. I tell thee yea

Hell. Wert thou the Oracle to tell me so,
I'd not beleue thee henceforth guard thee well,
For He not kill thee there, nor there, nor there,
But by the forge that tyndred Mars his helme,
He kill thee euery where, yea, ore and ore.
You wisest Grecians, pardon me this bragge,
His insolence drawes folly from my lips,
But He endeavour deeds to match these words,
Or may I neuer—

Ajax. Do not chafe thee Cousin.

And you Achilles, let these threats alone
Till accident, or purpose bring you too't,
You may euery day enough of Hellor
If you haue stomacke. The generall state I feare,
Can scarce intreat you to be odde with him.

Hell. I pray you let vs see you in the field,
We haue had pelting Warres since you refus'd
The Grecians cause

Achl. Dost thou intreat me Hellor?
Tomorrow do I meete thee fell as death,
To night, all Friends.

Hell. Thy hand vpon that match.

Ag. First, all you Peeres of Greece go to my Tent,
There in the full conuie you Afterwards,
As Hellors leysure, and your bounties shall Concurre together, leuerrally intreat him,
Beate lowd the Taborins, let the Trumpets blow,
That this great Souldier may his welcome know: Exeunt
Troy. My Lord Vlysses, tell me I beseech you,
In what place of the Field doth Calthas keepe?

Vly. At Mentelau Tent, most Princely Troilus,
There Diomed doth feast with him to night,
Who neither looks on heauen, nor on earth,
But giues all gaze and bent of amorous view
On the faire Cressida.

Troy. Shall I (sweet Lord) be bound to thee so much,
After we part from Agamemnons Tent,
To bring me thither?

Vly. You shall command me sir;
As gentle tell me, of what Honour was
This Cressida in Troy, had she no Louer there
That wailes her absence?

Troy. O sir, to such as boasting shew their scars,
A mocke is due: will you walke on my Lord?
She was belou'd, she lou'd; she is, and dooth;
But still sweet Loue is food for Fortunes tooth. Exeunt.

Enter Achilles, and Patroclus.

Achl. He heat his blood with Greekish wine to night,
Which

Troilus and Cressida.

Which with my Cemitar Ile coole to mortow :

Patroclus, let vs Feast him to the hight.

Pat. Heere comes Thersites. Enter Thersites.

Achil. How now, thou core of Envy ?

Thou crusty batch of Nature, what's the newes ?

Ther. Why thou picture of what thou seem'st, & Idoll of Ideot-worshippers, here's a Letter for thee.

Achil. From whence, Fragment ?

Ther. Why thou full dish of Foole, from Troy.

Pat. Who keeps the Tent now ?

Ther. The Surgeons box, or the Patients wound.

Pat. Well said aduersity, and what need these tricks ?

Ther. Prythee be silent boy, I profit not by thy talke, thou art thought to be Achilles male Varlot.

Patro. Male Varlot you Rogue ? What's that ?

Ther. Why his masculine Whore. Now the rotten diseases of the South, guts-gripping Ruptures, Catarres, Loades a grauell i'th'backe, Lethargies, cold Palfies, and the like, take and take againe, such preposstrous discoueries,

Pat. Why thou damnable box of enuy thou, what mean'st thou to curse thus ?

Ther. Do I curse thee ?

Patro. Why no, you ruinous But, you whorson indistinguishable Curre.

Ther. No ? why art thou then exasperate, thou idle, immateriall skiene of Sleyd filke ; thou Greene Sarsenet flap for a sore eye, thou rassell of a Prodigals purse thou : Ah how the poore world is pestred with such water-flies, diminutives of Nature.

Pat. Out gall,

Ther. Finch Egge.

Ach. My sweet Patroclus, I am thwarted quite From my great purpose in to morrowes battell : Heere is a Letter from Queene Hecuba, A token from her daughter, my faire Loue, Both taxing me, and gaging me to keepe An Oath that I haue sworne. I will not breake it, Fall Greekes, faile Fame, Honor or go, or stay, My maior vow lyes heere ; this Ile obey : Come, come, Thersites, helpe to trim my Tent, This night in banquetting must all be spent.

Away Patroclus. Exit.

Ther. With too much blood, and too little Brain, the two may run mad : but if with too much braine, and too little blood, they do, Ile be a curer of madmen. Heere's Agamemnon, an honest fellow enough, and one that loues Quails, but he has not so much Braine as care-wax ; and the goodly transformation of Iupiter there his Brother, the Bull, the primatiue Statue, and oblique memoriall of Cuckolds, a thrifty shooing-horne in a chaine, hanging at his Brothers legges, to what forme but that he is, (shold wit larded with malice, and malice forced with wit, turne him too : to an Ass were nothing ; hee is both Ass and Oxe, to an Oxe were nothing, hee is both Oxe and Ass : to be a Dogge, a Mule, a Cat, a Fitchew, a Toxide, a Lizard, an Owle, a Puttocke, or a Herring without a Roe, I would not care : but to be Menelaus, I would conspire against Destiny. Aske me not what I would be, if I were not Thersites : for I care not to bee the lowke of a Lazar, so I were not Menelaus. Hoy-day, spiritz and fires,

Enter Hector, Ajax, Agamemnon, Vlisses, Nestor, Diomed, with Light.

Ag. We go wrong, we go wrong

Ajax. No yonder 'tis, there where we see the light.

Hect. I trouble you.

Ajax. No, not a whit.

Enter Achilles.

Vliss. Heere comes himselfe to guide you ?

Achil. Welcome braue Hector, welcome Princes all.

Agam. So now faire Prince of Troy, I bid goodnight, Ajax commands the guard to tend on you.

Hect. Thanks, and goodnight to the Greeks general.

Men. Goodnight my Lord.

Hect. Goodnight sweet Lord Menelaus.

Ther. Sweet draught : sweet quoth-a' sweet sinke, sweet sure.

Achil. Goodnight and welcom, both at once, to those that go, or tarry.

Ag. Goodnight,

Achil. Old Nestor carries, and you too Diomed, Keepe Hector company an houre, or two.

Dio. I cannot Lord, I haue important businesse, The tide whereof is now, goodnight great Hector.

Hect. Giue me your hand.

Vliss. Follow his Torch, he goes to Chalcas Tent, Ile keepe you company.

Troy. Sweet sir, you honour me.

Hect. And so good night.

Achil. Come, come, enter my Tent. Exeunt

Ther. That same Diomed a false-hearted Rogue, a most vnruft Knaue ; I will no more trust him when hee leeres, then I will a Serpent when he hisses : he will spend his mouth & promise, like Brabler the Hound, but when he performs, Astronomers foretell it, that it is prodigious, there will come some change : the Sunne borrowes of the Moone when Diomed keeps his word. I will rather leaue to see Hector, then not to dogge him they say, he keeps a Trojan Drab, and yses the Traitor Chalcas his Tent. Ile after——Nothing but Letcherie ? All incontinent Varlets Exeunt

Enter Diomed.

Dio. What are you vp here ho ? speake ?

Chal. Who calls ?

Dio. Diomed, Chalcas (I thinke) wher's you Daughter ?

Chal. She comes to you.

Enter Troilus and Vlisses.

Vliss. Stand where the Torch may not discover vs.

Enter Cressid.

Troy. Cressid comes forth to him.

Dio. How now my charge ?

Cres. Now my sweet gardiant harke a word with you.

Troy. Yea, so familiar ?

Vliss. She will sing any man at first sight.

Ther. And any man may finde her, if he can take her life. She's noted.

Dio. Will you remember ?

Cal. Remember ? yes.

Dio. Nay, but doe then ; and let your minde be coupled with your words.

Troy. What should she remember ?

Vliss. List ?

Cres. Sweete hony Greek, tempt me no more to folly.

Ther. Roguery

Dio. Nay then.

Cres. Ile tell you what.

Dio. Fo, fo, come tell a pin, you are a forswome.-----

Cres. In faith I cannot : what would you haue me do ?

Ther. A iugling tricke, to be secretly open.

Dio. What did you sweare you would bestow on me ?

Cres. I prethee do not hold me to mine oath,

Bid me doe not any thing but that sweete Greeke.

Dio. Good

Troilus and Cressida.

Dis. Good night.
Troy. Hold, patience.
Ulys. How now Trojan?
Cres. Diomed.
Dis. No, no, good night. He be your fool no more.
Troy. Thy better must.
Cres. Harke one word in your eare.
Troy. O plague and madnesse!
Ulys. You are moued Prince, let vs depart I pray you,
 Left your displeasure should enlarge it selfe
 To wrathfull tearmes: this place is dangerous;
 The time right deadly: I beseech you goe.
Troy. Behold, I pray you.
Ulys. Nay, good my Lord goe off:
 You flow to great distraction. come my Lord?
Troy. I pray thee stay?
Ulys. You haue not patience, come.
Troy. I pray you stay? by hell and hell torments,
 I will not speake a word.
Dis. And so good night
Cres. Nay, but you part in anger.
Troy. Doth that grieve thee? O withered truth!
Ulys. Why, how now Lord?
Troy. By Ioue I will be patient
Cres. Gardian? why Greeke?
Dis. Fo, fo, adew, you palter.
Cres. In faith I doe not. come hither once againe.
Ulys. You shake my Lord at something; will you goe?
 you will breake out.
Troy. She strokes his cheeke.
Ulys. Come, come.
Troy. Nay stay, by Ioue I will not speake a word.
 There is betweene my will, and all offences,
 A guard of patience; stay a little while.
Ther. How the diuell Luxury with his fat rumpe and potato finger, tickles these together: fyre lechery, fyre.
Dis. But will you then?
Cres. In faith I will lo; never trust me else.
Dis. Giue me some token for the surety of it.
Cres. He fetch you one. Exit.
Ulys. You haue sweete patience.
Troy. Feare me not sweete Lord.
 I will not be my selfe, nor haue cognition
 Of what I feele. I am all patience. Enter Cressid.
Ther. Now the pledge, now, now, now.
Cres. Here Diomed, keepe this Sleue.
Troy. O beautie! where is thy Faith?
Ulys. My Lord.
Troy. I will be patient, outwardly I will.
Cres. You looke vpon that Sleue? behold it well:
 He lou'd me; O false wench: giue't me againe.
Dis. Whose was't?
Cres. It is no matter now I haue't againe.
 I will not meere with you to morrow night:
 I prythee Diomed visite me no more.
Ther. Now she sharpenes, well said Whetstone.
Dis. I shall haue it.
Cres. What, this?
Dis. I that.
Cres. O all you gods! O prettie, prettie pledge;
 Thy Maister now lies thinking in his bed
 Of thee and me, and sighes, and takes my Gloue,
 And giues memorieall daintie kisses to it;
 As I kisseth thee.
Dis. Nay, doe not snatch it from me.
Cres. He that takes that, takes my heart withall.

Dis. I had your heart before, this followes it.
Troy. I did sweare patience.
Cres. You shall not haue it Diomed, faith you shall not:
 He giue you something else.
Dis. I will haue this: whose was it?
Cres. It is no matter.
Dis. Come tell me whose it was?
Cres. 'Twas one that lou'd me better then you will.
 But now you haue it, take it.
Dis. Whose was it?
Cres. By all Dianas waiting women yond:
 And by her selfe, I will not tell you whose.
Dis. Tomorrow will I weare it on my Helme,
 And grieve his spirit that dares not challenge it.
Troy. Wert thou the diuell, and wor't it on thy horne,
 It should be challeng'd.
Cres. Well, well, 'tis done, 'tis past; and yet it is not:
 I will not keepe my word.
Dis. Why then farewell,
 Thou neuer shalt mocke Diomed againe.
Cres. You shall not goe: one cannot speake a word,
 But it strait starts you.
Dis. I doe not like this fooling.
Ther. Nor I by Pluto: but that that likes not me, please me best.
Dis. What shall I come? the houre.
Cres. I, come: O Ioue! doe, come! I shall be plagu'd.
Dis. Farewell till then. Exit.
Cres. Good night I prythee come:
Troilus farewell; one eye yet lookes on thee;
 But with my heart, the other eye, doth see.
 Ah poore our sexe; this fault in vs I finde:
 The error of our eye, directs our minde.)
 What error leads, must erre: O then conclude,
 Mindes swa'd by eyes, are full of turpitude. Exit.
Ther. A prooue of strength she could not publish more;
 Vnlesse she say, my minde is now turn'd whore.
Ulys. Al's done my Lord.
Troy. It is.
Ulys. Why stay we then?
Troy. To make a recordation to my soule
 Of euery syllable that here was spoke;
 But if I tell how these two did coaſt;
 Shall I not lye, in publishing a truth?
 Sith yet there is a credence in my heart:
 An esperance so obstinately strong,
 That doth inuert that test of eyes and eares;
 As if those organs had deceptiue functions,
 Created onely to calumniate.
 Was Cressed here?
Ulys. I cannot conuere Trojan
Troy. She was not sure.
Ulys. Most sure she was.
Troy. Why my negation hath no taste of madnesse?
Ulys. Nor mine my Lord. Cressid was here but now.
Troy. Let it not be beleen'd for womanhood:
 Thinke we had mothers; doe not giue aduantage
 To stubborne Criticks, apt without a theame
 For deprauation, to square the generall sex
 By Cressid's rule. Rather thinke this not Cressid.
Ulys. What hath she done Prince, that can soyle our mothers?
Troy. Nothing at all vnlesse that this were she.
Ther. Will he swagger himselfe out on's owne eyes?
Troy. This she? no, this is Diomed's Cressida:
 If beautie haue a soule, this is not she:

Troilus and Cressida.

If soules gaue vowes, if vowes are sanctimonie;
 If sanctimonie be the gods delight.
 If there be rule in vniue it selfe,
 This is not she. O madnesse of discourse!
 That cause sets vp, with, and against thy selfe
 By foule authoritie: where reason can reuolt
 Without perdition, and losse assume all reason,
 Without reuolt. This is, and is not Cressid
 Within my soule, there doth conduce a fight
 Of this strange nature, that a thing inseparate,
 Diuides more wider then the skie and earth.
 And yet the spacious bredth of this diuision,
 Admits no Orifex for a point as subtile,
 As Ariachnes broken woofe to enter:
 Instance, O instance! strong as Plutoes gates.
Cressid is mine, tied with the bonds of heauen;
 Instance, O instance, strong as heauen it selfe.
 The bonds of heauen are slip, dissolu'd, and loos'd,
 And with another knot fūe finger tied,
 The factions of her faith, oris of her loue.
 The fragments, scraps, the bits, and greazie reliques,
 Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed.

Vls. May worthy Troilus be halfe attached
 With that which here his passion doth expresse?

Troy. I Greeke and that shall be divulged well
 In Characters, as red as Mars his heart
 Inflam'd with Venus. neuer did yong man fancy
 With so eternall, and so fix a soule.

Harke Greeke as much I doe Cressid: loue;
 So much by weight, hate I her Diomed,
 That Sleeue is mine. that heele beare in his Helme:
 Were it a Caske compos'd by Vulcans skill,
 My Sword should bite it. Not the dreadfull spout,
 Which Shipmen doe the Hurricano call,
 Constring'd in masse by the almighty Fenne,
 Shall dizzie with more clamour Neptunes care
 In his discent; then shall my prompted sword,
 Falling on Diomed.

Ther. Heele tickle it for his concupie.

Troy. O Cressid! O false Cressid! false, false, false.

Let all vnruths stand by thy stained name,
 And theyle seeme glorious

Vls. O containe your selfe.
 Your passion drawes eares hither.

Enter Aeneas.

Aene. I haue bene seeking you this houre my Lord.
Hector by this is arming him in Troy.

Ajax your Guard, staies to conduct you home.

Troy. Haue with you Prince: my courteous Lord adew.
 Farewell reuolted faire and Diomed,
 Stand fast, and weare a Castle on thy head.

Vls. Ile bring you to the Gates.

Troy. Accept distracted thanks.

Exeunt Troilus, Aeneas, and Ulysses.

Ther. Would I could reete that rogue Diomed, I would croke like a Raven: I would bode, I would bode:
Patroclus will giue me any thing for the intelligence of his whore: the Parrot will not doe more for an Almond, then he for a commodious drab: Lechery, lechery. Still warres and techery, nothing else holds fashion. A burning duell take them.

Enter Hector and Andromech.

And. When was my Lord so much vngently temper'd,
 To stop his eares against admonishment?
 Vnarme, vnarme, and doe not fight to day.

Hect. You traine me to offend you: get you gone!

By the euerlasting gods, Ile goe.

And. My dreames will sure proue ominous to the day.

Hect. No more I say. Enter Cassandra.

Cassa. Where is my brother Hector?

And. Here sister, arm'd, and bloody in intent:
 Confort with me in loud and deere petition:
 pursue we him on knees: for I haue dreamt
 Of bloody turbulence; and this whole night
 Hath nothing bene but shapes, and formes of slaughter.

Cass. O, 'tis true.

Hect. Ho? bid my Trumper sound.

Cass. No notes of salie, for the heauens, sweet brother.

Hect. Begon I say: the gods haue heard me sweare.

Cass. The gods are deafe to hot and pccuish vowes;
 They are polluted offerings, more abhord
 Then sported Liuers in the sacrifice.

And. O be perswaded, doe not count it holy,
 To hurt by being iust; it is as lawfull.
 For we would count giue much to as violent thefts,
 And rob in the behalfe of charitie.

Cass. It is the purpose that makes strong the vowe;
 But vowes to euery purpose must not hold:
 Vnarme sweete Hector.

Hect. Hold you still I say;
 Mine honour keeps the weather of my fate.
 Life euery man holds deere, but the deere man
 Holds honor farre more precious, deere, then life

Enter Troilus.

How now yong man? mean'st thou to fight to day?

And. Cassandra, call my father to perswade

Exit Cassandra.

Hect. No faith yong Troilus, doffe thy harnesse youth.
 I am to day it vaine of Chiuallie.

Let grow thy Sinews till their knots be strong;
 And tempt not yet the brushs of the warre.
 Vnarme thee, goe; and doubt thou not braue boy,
 Ile stand to day, for thee, and me, and Troy

Troy. Brother, you haue a vice of inercy in you;
 Which better fits a Lyon, then a man.

Hect. What vice is that? good Troilus chide me for it.

Troy. When many times the captiue Grecian fals,
 Euen in the sanne and winde of your faire Sword:
 You bid them rise, and liue.

Hect. O 'tis faire play.

Troy. Fooles play, by heauen Hector.

Hect. How now? how now?

Troy. For th'loue of all the gods

Let's leaue the Hermit Pitty with our Mothers;
 And when we haue our Armors buckled on,
 The venom'd vengeance ride vpon our swords,
 Spur them to ruthfull worke, reine them from ruth.

Hect. Fie sauage, fie.

Troy. Hector, then 'tis warres.

Hect. Troilus, I would not haue you fight to day.

Troy. Who should with-hold me?
 Not fate, obedience, nor the hand of Mars,
 Beckning with fierie trunchion my retire;
 Not Priamus, and Hecuba on knees;
 Their eyes ore-galled with recourse of teares;
 Nor you my brother, with your true sword drawne
 Oppos'd to hinder me, should stop my way:
 But by my ruine.

Enter Priam and Cassandra.

Cass. Lay hold vpon him Priam, hold him fast:
 He is thy crutch; now if thou loole thy stay,
 Thou on him leaning, and all Troy on thee;

Fall

Troylus and Cressida.

Fall all together.

Prism. Come Hektor, come, goe backe:
Thy wife hath dreamt: thy mother hath had visions;
Cassandra doth foresee; and I my selfe,
Am like a Prophet suddenly enapt,
to tell thee that this day is ominous:
Therefore come backe.

Hekt. Aeneas is a field,
And I do stand engag'd to many Greekes,
Even in the faith of valour, to appeare
This morning to them.

Prism. I, but thou shalt not goe,
Hekt. I must not breake my faith:
You know me dutifull, therefore deare sir,
Let me not shame respect, but giue me leaue
To take that course by your consent and voice,
Which you doe here forbid me, Royall Prism.

Cass. O Prism, yeelde not to him

And. Doe not deere father.

Hekt. Andromache I am offended with you:
Vpon the loue you beare me, get you in.

Exit Andromache.

Troy. This foolish, dreaming, superstitious girle,
Makes all these bodements.

Cass. O farewell, deere Hektor:
Looke how thou diest, looke how thy eye turnes pale.
Looke how thy wounds doth bleede at many vents:
Harke how Troy roares; how Hecuba cries out;
How poore Andromache shrills her dolour forth;
Behold distraction, frenzie, and amazement,
Like witlesse Antickes one another meete,
And all cry Hektor, Hektors dead. O Hektor!

Troy. Away, away.

Cass. Farewell: yes, soft. Hektor I take my leaue;
Thou do'st thy selfe, and all our Troy deceiue. Exit.

Hekt. You are amaz'd, my Liege, at her exclaime:
Goe in and chere the Towne, weeke forth and fight:
Doe deedes of praise, and tell you them at night.

Prism. Farewell. the gods with safetie stand about thee.

Alarm

Troy. They are at it, harke: proud Diomed, beleeue
I come to loose my arme, or winne my sleeue.

Enter Pandar.

Pand. Doe you heare my Lord? do you heare?

Troy. What now?

Pand. Here's a Letter come from yond poore girle.

Troy. Let me reade.

Pand. A whorson tiske, a whorson rascally-tiske, so troubles me, and the foolish fortune of this girle, and what one thing, what another, that I shall leaue you one o'th's dayes: and I haue a rheume in mine eyes too; and such an ache in my bones; that vlesse a man were curst,
I cannot tell what to thinke on't. What sayes shee
there?

Troy. Words, words, meere words, no matter from the heart;

Th'effect doth operate another way.
Goe winde to winde, there turne and change together:
My loue with words and errors still shee feedes;
But edifies another with her deedes.

Pand. Why, but heare you.

Troy. Hence brother lacke, ignomie and shame
Pursue thy life, and lue aye with thy name,

A Larm.

Exeunt.

Enter Therites in exclamation.

Ther. Now they are clapper-clawing one another, Ile goe looke on: that dissembling abominable varlet Diomed, has got that same scurvie, doting, foolish yong knaue Sleeue of Troy, there in his Helme. I would faine see them meet, that, that same yong Trojan esse, that loues
the whore there, might send that Greekish whore-masterly villaine, with the Sleeue, backe to the dissembling luxurious drabbe, of a sleeuelesse errant. O'th' tother side, the pollicie of thole crasue swearing rascals; that stole old Mouse-eaten dry cheefe, Nestor. and that same dogfoxe Plisses is not prou'd worth a Black-berry. They set me vp in pollicy, that mungrell curie Ajax, against that dogge of as bad a kinde, Achilles. And now is the curie
Ajax prouder then the curie Achilles, and will not arme to day. Whereupon, the Grecians began to proclaime barbarisme; and pollicie growes into an ill opinion.

Enter Diomed and Troylus.

Soft, here comes Sleeue, and th'other.

Troy. Flye not: for should'st thou take the Riuer Stix,
I would swim after.

Diom. Thou do'st miscall retire.

I doe not flye, but aduantageous care
Withdrew me from the oddes of multitude:
Haue at thee?

Iher. Hold thy whore Grecian now for thy whore
Troian: Now the Sleeue, now the Sleeue

Enter Hektor

Hekt. What art thou Greek? art thou for Hektors match?
Art thou of blood, and honour?

Ther. No, no I am a rascall: a scurvie railing knaue:
a very filthy rogue

Hekt. I doe beleeue thee, liue.

Ther. God a mercy, that thou wilt beleeue me; but a plague breake thy necke---for frightening me: what's become of the wenching rogues? I thinke they haue swallowed one another. I would laugh at that miracle---yet in a fort, lecherie eates it selfe: Ile seeke them.

Exit.

Enter Diomed and Seruants.

Di. Goe, goe, my seruant, take thou Troylus Horse;
Present the faire Steede to my Lady Cressida.
Fellow, commend my seruice to her beauty;
Tell her, I haue chastis'd the amorous Trojan
And am her Knight by prooffe.

Ser. I goe my Lord Enter Agamemnon.

Ag. Renew, renew, the fierce Polidamus
Hath beate downe Menon bastard Margarelen
Hath Doreus prisoner.

And stands Caloosus-wise wauing his beame,
Vpon the paish'd courfes of the Kings:
Epistropus and Cedus, Polixenes is slaine;
Amphimachus, and Thous deadly hurt;
Patroclus tane or slaine, and Palamedes
Sore hurt and bruised, the dreadfull Sagittary
Appaulls our numbers, haste we Diomed
To re-enforcement, or we perish all.

Enter Nestor

Nest. Coc beart Patroclus body to Achilles,
And bid the snail pac'd Ajax arme for shame;
There is a thousand Hektors in the field:
Now here he fights on Galathea his Horse,
And there lacks worke: and he's there a loote,
And there they flye or dye, like scaled sculs,

Before

Troilus and Cressida.

Before the belching Whale; then is he yonder,
And there the straying Greekes, ripe for his edge,
Fall downe before him, like the mowers swith;
Here, there, and euery where, he leaues and takes;
Dexteritie so obaying appetite,
That what he will, he does, and does so much,
That proofe is call'd impossibility.

Enter Phylis.

Phyl. Oh, courage, courage Princes: great Achilles
Is arming, weeping, cursing, vowing vengeance,
Patroclus wounds haue rous'd his drowzie blond,
Together with his mangled Myrmidons,
That noselesse, handlelesse, hackr and chipe, come to him;
Crying on Hector. Ajax hath lost a friend,
And foames at mouth, and he is arm'd, and at it
Roaring for Troilus; who hath done to day,
Mad and fantassticke execution,
Engaging and redeeming of himselfe,
With such a carelesse force, and forlesse care,
As if that luck in very spight of cunning, bad him win all.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus.
Dio. I, there, there.
Nest. So, so, we draw together.

Enter Achilles.

Achil. Where is this Hector?
Come, come, thou boy-queller, shew thy face:
Know what it is to meete Achilles angry
Hector, wher's Hector? I will none but Hector.

Enter Ajax.

Aia. Troilus, thou coward Troilus, shew thy head.
Diom. Troilus, I say, wher's Troilus?
Aia. What wouldst thou?
Diom. I would correct him.

Aia. Were I the Generall,
Thou should'st haue my office,
Ere that correction Troilus I say, what Troilus?
Enter Troilus.

Troy. Oh traitour Diomed!
Turne thy false face thou traitor,
And pay thy life thou owest me for my horse.

Dio. Ha, art thou there?
Aia. He fight with him alone, stand Diomed.
Dio. He is my prize, I will not looke vpon.
Troy. Come both you coging Greekes, haue at you both

Enter Hector.

Hect. Yea Troilus? O well fought my yongest Brother.
Enter Achilles.

Achil. Now doe I see thee; haue at thee Hector.
Hect. Pause if thou wilt.
Achil. I doe disdaine thy curtesie, proud Trojan:
Be happy that my armes are out of vlie.
My rest and negligence befriends thee now,
But thou anon shalt heare of me againe:
Till when, goe seek thy fortune.

Hect. Fare thee well.
I would haue bene much more a fresher man,
Had I expected thee: how now my Brother?
Enter Troilus.

Troy. Ajax hath tane Aeneas; shall it be?
No, by the flame of yonder glorious heauen,
He shall not carry him: He be tane too,
Or bring him off: Fate heare me what I say;

I wreake not, thought thou end my life to day.
Enter one in Armour.

Hect. Stand, stand, thou Greeke,
Thou art a goodly marke:
No? wilt thou not? I like thy armour well,
Hee frush it, and vnlocke the rivets all,
But he be master of it: wilt thou not best abide?
Why then flye on, he hunt thee for thy hide.

Enter Achilles with Myrmidons.

Achil. Come here about me you my Myrmidons:
Marke what I say; attend me where I wheele.
Strike not a stroake, but keepe your selues in breath;
And when I haue the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about:
In fellest manner execute your arme:
Follow me first, and my proceedings eye;
It is decreed, Hector the great must dye.

Enter Thersites, Menelaus, and Paris.

Ther. The Cuckold and the Cuckold maker are at it:
now bull, now dogge, lowe; Paris lowe; now my double hen'd sparrow, lowe Paris, lowe; the bull has the game. ware hornes ho?

Exit Paris and Menelaus.

Enter Bassard.

Bast. Turne flane and fight.
Ther. What art thou?

Bast. A Bastard Sonne of Priamus

Ther. I am a Bastard too, I loue Bastards, I am a Banard begot, Bastard instructed, Bastard in minde, Bastard in valour, in euery thing illegitimate: one Beare will not bite another, and wherefore should one Bastard? rake heede, the quarrel's most ominous to vs: if the Sonne of a whore fig'it for a whore, he tempts iudgement: farewell Bastard.

Bast. The duell take thee coward.
Enter H. Fer.

Hect. Most putrified core so faire without:
Thy goodly armour thus I leach cost thy life.
Now is my dates worke done, He take good breath:
Now is my dates worke done, He take good breath:
Rest Sword, thou hast thy fill of blood and death.

Enter Achilles and his Myrmidons

Achil. Look Hector how the Sunne begins to set;
How vgly night comes breathing at his heeles,
Euen with the yale and darking of the Sunne.
To close the day vp, Hectors life is done.

Hect. I am vnarm'd, forgoe this vantage Greeke.
Achil. Strike fellowes, strike, this is the man I seeke.
So Illion fall thou: now Troy sinke downe;
Here lyes thy heart, thy sinewes, and thy bone.
On Myrmidons, cry you all a maine,
Achilles hath the mighty *Hector*aine.

Hark, a retreat vpon our Grecian part.
Grec. The Trojan Trumpets sounds the like my Lord
Achil. The dragon wing of night ore-spreads the earth
And stickle-like the Armies seperates
My halfe supt Sword, that frankly would haue fed,
Pleas'd with this dainty-bed; thus goes to bed.
Come, tye his body to my horses taylor;
Along the field, I will the Trojan talle.

Retreat.

Enter Agamemnon, Ajax, Menelaus, Nestor, Diomed, and the rest marching.

Sound Retreat.

Shout.

Exit.

Ag. Hark, hark, what shout is that?
Nest. Peace Drums.

Troilus and Cressida.

Sold Achilles, Achilles, Hector's slaine, Achilles.
Dio The brute is, Hector's slaine, and by Achilles.
Asa If it be so, yet braglesse let it be:
 Great Hector was a man as good as he.

Agam March patiently along, let one be sent
 To pray Achilles see vs at our Tent.
 If in his death the gods haue vs befrended,
 Great Troy is ours, and our sharpe wars are ended.

Exeunt.

Enter Aeneas, Paris, Antenor and Deiphobus.

Aene Stand hoe, yet are we maisters of the field,
 Neuer goe home; here stande we out the night.

Enter Troilus.

Troy Hector is slaine.

All. Hector? the gods forbid

Troy. Hee's dead: and at the murderers Horses taile,
 In beastly sort, drag'd through the shamefull Field;
 Frowne on you heavens, effect your rage with speede:
 Sit gods vpon your thrones, and smile at Troy.
 I say at once, let your brieue plagues be mercy,
 And linger not our sure destructions on.

Aene My Lord, you doe discomfote all the Hoste.

Troy. You vnderstand me not, that tell me so:
 I doe not speake of flight, of feare, of death,
 But dare all imminence that gods and men,
 Addresse their dangers in. Hector is gone:
 Who shall tell Priam so? or Hecuba?
 Let him that will a screechoule aye be call'd,
 Goe in to Troy, and say there, Hector's dead;
 There is a word will Priam turne to stone;
 Make wels, and Niobes of the maides and wiues;
 Coole statues of the youth: and in a word,
 Scarre Troy out of it selfe. But march away,
Hector is dead. there is no more to say.

Stay yet you vile abhominable Tents,
 Thus proudly pight vpon our Phrygian plaines:
 Let Tithon rise as early as he dare,
 Ile through, and through you; & thou great siz'd coward.
 No spate of Earth shall funder our two hates,
 Ile haunt thee, like a wicked conscience still,
 That mouldeth goblins swift as frensie thoughts.
 Strike a free march to Troy, with comfort goe:
 Hope of reuenge, shall hide our inward woe.

Enter Pandarus.

Pand But heare you? heare you?

Troy. Hence broker, lackie, signomy, and shame
 Pursue thy life, and lue aye with thy name. Exeunt.

Pan. A goodly medicine for mine aking bones oh world, world, world! thus is the poore agent dispisde. Oh trait-tours and bawdes; how earnestly are you set a worke, and how ill requited? why should our indeuour be so desir'd, and the performance so loath'd? What Verse for it? what instance for it? let me see.

Full merrily the humble Bee doth sing,
 Till he hath lost his hony, and his sting.
 And being once subdu'd in armed taile,
 Sweete hony, and sweete notes together faile.
 Good traders in the flesh, set this in your painted cloathes;
 As many as be here of Panders hall,
 Your eyes halfe out, weepe out at Pandars fall:
 Or if you cannot weepe, yet giue some grones;
 Though not for me, yet for your aking bones:
 Brethren and sisters of the hold-dore trade,
 Some two months hence, my will shall here be made:
 It should be now, but that my feare is this:
 Some galled Goose of Winchester would hisse:
 Till then, Ile sweare, and seeke about for eases;
 And at that time bequeath you my diseases. Exeunt.

FINIS.

The Tragedy of Coriolanus.

Actus Primus. Scæna Prima.

Enter a Company of Murmuring Citizens, (with Staves, Clubs, and other weapons.

1. Citizen.

BEfore we proceed any further, heare me speake.
All Speake, speake.
1. Cit. You are all resolu'd rather to dy then to famish?

All. Resolu'd, resolu'd.

1. Cit. First you know, Caius Martius is chiefe enemy to the people.

All. We know't, we know't.

1. Cit. Let vs kill him, and wee'l haue Corne at our own price. Is't a Verdict?

All. No more talking on't. Let it be done, away, away

2. Cit. One word, good Citizens.

1. Cit. We are accounted poore Citizens, the Patricians good: what Authority sursets one, would releue vs. If they would yeelde vs but the superfluitie while it were wholsome, wee might guesse they releued vs humanely. But they thinke we are too deere, the leannesse that afflicts vs, the object of our misery, is as an inuentory to particularize their abundance, our sufferance is a gaine to them. Let vs reuenge this with our Pikes, ere we become Rakes. For the Gods know, I speake this in hunger for Bread, not in thirst for Reuenge.

2. Cit. Would you proceede especially against Caius Martius.

All. Against him first. He's a very dog to the Commonalty.

2. Cit. Consider you what Seruices he ha's done for his Country?

1. Cit. Very well, and could bee content to giue him good report for't, but that hee payes himselfe with being proud.

All. Nay, but speak not maliciously.

1. Cit. I say vnto you, what he hath done Famouslie, he did it to that end: though soft conscienc'd men can be content to say it was for his Countrey, he did it to please his Mother, and to be partly proud, which he is euen to the altitude of his vertue.

2. Cit. What he cannot helpe in his Nature, you account a Vice in him. You must in no way say he is couerous.

1. Cit. If I must not, I neede not be barren of Accusations he hath faulcs (with furrows) to tyre in repetition.

Shewts within.

What shewts are these? The other side a'th City is risen why stay we prating heere? To th' Capitoll.

All. Come, come.

1. Cit. Soft, who comes heere?

Enter Menenius Agrippa

2. Cit. Worthy Menenius Agrippa, one that hath alwayes lou'd the people.

1. Cit. He's one honest enough, wold al the rest wer so.

Men. What work's my Countrymen in hand?
Where go you with Bats and Clubs? The matter
Speake I pray you.

2. Cit. Our busines is not vnknowne to th' Senate, they haue had inking this fortnight what we intend to do, & now wee'l shew em in deeds: they say poore Suters haue strong breaths, they shal know we haue strong arms too.

Men. Why Masters, my good Friends, mine honest
Neighbours, will you vndo your selues?

2. Cit. We cannot Sir, we are vndone already.

Men. I tell you Friends, most charitable care
Haue the Patricians of you for your wants.
Your suffering in this dearth, you may as well
Strike at the Heauen with your stauces, as lift them
Against the Roman State, whose course will on
The way it takes cracking ten thousand Curbes
Of more strong linke assunder, then can euer
Appere in your impediment. For the Dearth,
The Gods, not the Patricians make it, and
Your knees to them (not armes) must helpe. Alacke,
You are transported by Calamity
Thether, where more attends you, and you slander
The Helmes o'th State; who care for you like Fathers,
When you curse them, as Enemies.

2. Cit. Care for vs? True indeed, they nere car'd for vs
yet. Suffer vs to famish, and their Store-houses cramm'd with Graine: Make Edicts for Vsurie, to support Vs-urers; repeale daily any wholsome Act established against the rich, and prouide more piercing Statutes dailly, to chaine vp and restraints the poore. If the Warres eate vs not vppe, they will; and there's all the loue they beare vs.

Men. Either you must
Confesse your selues wondrous Malicious,
Or be accus'd of Folly. I shall tell you
A pretty Tale, it may be you haue heard it,
But since it serues my purpose, I will venture
To scale't a little more.

2. Citizen. Well,
He heare it Sir: yet you must not thinke
To fobbe off our disgrace with a tale:
But and't please you deliver.

Men. There was a time, when all the bodics members
Rebell'd against the Belly; thus accus'd it.
That onely like a Gulfe it did remayne

In midd'st a th'body, idle and vnactiue,
Still cubbording the Viand, neuer bearing
Like labour with the rest, where th'other Instruments
Did see, and heare, deuise, instruct, walke, feele,
And mutually participate, did minister
Vnto the appetites, and affection common
Of the whole body, the Belly answer'd.

2. Cit. Well sir, what answer made the Belly.

Men. Sir, I shall tell you with a kinde of Smile,
Which ne're came from the Lungs, but euen thus :
For looke you I may make the belly Smile,
As well as speake, it taintingly replyed
To th'discontented Members, the mutinous parts
That enuied his reciete : euen so most fitly
As you maligne our Senators, for that
They are not such as you.

2. Cit. Your Bellies answer. What
The Kingly crown'd head, the vigilant eye,
The Counsaile Heart, the Arme our Souldier,
Our Steed the Legge, the Tongue our Trumpeter,
With other Muniments and perty helps
In this our Fabricke, if that they

Men. What then? Foreme, this Fellow speakes.
What then? What then?

2. Cit. Should by the Cormorant belly be restrain'd,
Who is the sinke a th'body.

Men. Well, what then?

2. Cit. The former Agents, if they did complaine,
What could the Belly answer?

Men. I will tell you,
If you'll bestow a small (of what you haue little)
Patience awhile, you'll heare the Bellies answer.

2. Cit. Y're long about it.

Men. Note me this good Friend ;
Your most graue Belly was deliberate,
Not rash like his Accusers, and thus answered.
True is it my Incorporate Friends (quoth he)
That I receiue the generall Food at first
Which you do liue vpon. and sit it is,
Because I am the Store-house, and the Shop
Of the whole Body. But, if you do remember,
I send it through the Riues of your blood
Euen to the Court, the Heart, to th'seate o'th'Braine,
And through the Crackes and Offices of man,
The strongest Nerves, and small inferiour Veines
From me receiue that naturall competencie
Whereby they liue. And though that all at once
(You my good Friends, this sayes the Belly) marke me.

2. Cit. I sir, well, well.

Men. Though all at once, cannot See what I do deliuer out to each,
Yet I can make my Awdit vp, that all
From me do backe receiue the Flowre of all,
And leaue me but the Bran. What say you too't?

2. Cit. It was an answer, how apply you this?

Men. The Senators of Rome, are this good Belly,
And you the mutinous Members. For examine
Their Counsailes, and their Cares, digest things rightly,
Touching the Weale a'th Common, you shall finde
No publike benefit which you receiue
But it proceeds, or comes from them to you,
And no way from your selues. What do you thinke?
You, the great Toe of this Assembly?

2. Cit. Is the great Toe? Why the great Toe?

Men. For that being one o'th lowest, basest, poorest
Of this most wise Rebellion, thou goest formost :

Thou Rascall, that art worst in blood to run,
Lead'st first to win some vantage,
But make you ready your stiffe bars and clubs;
Rome, and her Rats, are at the point of battell,
The one side must haue baile.

Enter Caius Martius.

Hayle, Noble Martius.

Mar. Thanks. What's the matter you dissentious rogues
That rubbing the poore Itch of your Opinion,
Make your selues Scabs.

2. Cit. We haue euer your good word.

Mar. He that will giue good words to thee, will flatter
Beneath abhorring. What would you haue, you Curres,
That like nor Peace, nor Warre? The one affrights you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to you,
Where he should finde you Lyons, findes you Hares :
Where Foxes, Geese you are : No surer, no,
Then is the coale of fire vpon the Ice,
Or Hailstone in the Sun. Your Vertue is,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues him,
And curse that Iustice did it. Who deserues Greatnes, Deserues your Hate : and your Affections are
A sickmans Appetite ; who desires most that
Which would encrease his euill. He that depends
Vpon your fauours, swimmes with finnes of Leade,
And hewes downe Oakes, with rushes. Hang ye : trust ye?
With every Minute you do change a Minde,
And call him Noble, that was now your Hate :
Him vilde, that was your Garland. What's the matter,
That in these seuerall places of the Citie,
You cry against the Noble Senate, who (Vnder the Gods) keepe you in awe, which else
Would feede on one another? What's their seeking?

Men. For Corne at their owne rates, wherof they say
The Citie is well stor'd

Mar. Hang 'em : They say?

They'll sit by th' fire, and presume to know
What's done i'th Capitoll : V'ho's like to rise,
Who thrives, & who declines Side factions, & giue out
Coniecturall Marriages, making parties strong,
And feeling such as fit and not in their liking,
Below their cabled Shooes. They say ther's grain enough?
Would the Nobility lay aside their ruth,
And let me vse my Sword, I'de make a Quarrie
With thousands of these quarter'd slaues, as high
As I could picke my Lance.

Men. Nay these are almost thoroughly perswaded
For though abundantly they lacke discretion
Yet are they passing Cowardly. But I beseech you,
What sayes the other Troope?

Mar. They are dissolud : Hang 'em ;
They said they were an hungry, sigh'd forth Prouerbes
That Hunger-broke stone wals : that dogges must eate
That meate was made for mouths. That the gods sent not Corne for the Richmen onely : With these threds
They vented their Complaining, which being answer'd
And a petition granted them, a strange one,
To breake the heart of generosity,
And make bold power looke pale, they threw their caps
As they would hang them on the thornes a'th Moone, Shooting their Emulation.

Men. What is granted them?

Mar. Five Tribunes to defend their vulgar wisdoms
Of their owne choite. One's Iunius Brutus,
Sicinius Velinus, and I know not. Sdeath,

The

The rabble should haue first vnroo'd the City
Ere so preuayl'd with me; it will in time
Win vpon power, and throw forth greater Theames
For Insurrections arguing.

Menen. This is strange

Mar. Go get you home you Fragments.

Enter a Messenger hastily.

Mess. Where's Caius Martius?

Mar. Heere what's the matter?

Mess. The newes is fit, the Volcies are in Armes.

Mar. I am glad on't, then we shall haue means to vent
Our mustie superfluity. See our best Elders

Enter Sicinius Velutus, Annulus Brutus Cominius, Titus Lartius, with other Senators.

1. Sen. Martius 'tis true, that you haue lately told vs,
The Volces are in Armes

Mar. They haue a Leader,
Tullus Aufidius that will put you too't
I sinne in enuying his Nobility;
And were I any thing but what I am,
I would wish me onely he.

Com. You haue fought together?

Mar. Were halfe to halfe the world by th'eares, &c. he vpon my partie, I'de resolt to make Onely my warres with him. He is a Lion
That I am proud to hunt.

1. Sen. Then worthy Martius,
Attend vpon Cominius to these Warres.

Com. It is your former promise.

Mar. Sir it is,

And I am constant. Titus Lartius, thou
Shalt see me once more strike at Tullus face
What art thou stiffe? Stand't out?

Tit. No Caius Martius,
He leane vpon one Crutch, and fight with tother,
Ere stay behinde this Businesse.

Men. Oh true-bred.

Sen. Your Company to th' Capitoll, where I know
Our greatest Friends attend vs

Tit. Lead you on: Follow Cominius, we must followe
you, right worthy you Priority

Com. Noble Martius.

Sen. Hence to your homes, be gone.

Mar. Nay let them follow,

The Volces haue much Corne take these Rays thither,
To gnaw their Garners. Worshipfull Mutiners,
Your valour puts well forth Pray follow. Exeunt

Citizens speake away. Enter Sicinius & Brutus.

Sicinius. Was euer man so proud as is this Martius?

Brutus. He has no equall.

Sicinius. When we were chosen Tribunes for the people.

Brutus. Mark'd you his lip and eyes.

Sicinius. Nay, but his taunte.

Brutus. Being mou'd, he will not spare to gird the Gods

Sicinius. Bemocke the modest Moone.

Brutus. The present Warres deuoure him, he is growne
Too proud to be so valiant.

Sicinius. Such a Nature, tickled with good successe, dis-daines the shadow which he treads on at noone, but I do wonder, his insolence can brooke to be commanded vnder Cominius?

Brutus. Fame, at the which he aymes,
In whom already he's well grac'd, cannot Better be held, nor more attain'd then by

A place below the first: for what miscarries
Shall be the Generals fault, though he performe
To th' vtmost of a man, and giddy censure
Will then cry out of Martius. Oh, if he Had borne the businesse.

Sicinius. Besides, if things go well,
Opinion that so stickes on Martius, shall
Of his demerits rob Cominius.

Brutus. Come: halfe all Cominius Honors are to Martius
Though Martius earn'd them not: and all his faults
To Martius shall be Honors, though indeed
In ought he merit not.

Sicinius. Let's hence, and heare
How the dispatch is made, and in what fashion
More then his singularity, he goes
Vpon this present Action.

Brutus. Let's along.

Exeunt

Enter Tullus Aufidius with Senators of Coriols.

1. Sen. So, your opinion is Aufidius,
That they of Rome are entred in our Counsailes,
And know how we proceede,

Ans. Is it not yours?

What euer haue bin thought one in this State
That could be brought to bodily act, ere Rome
Had circumuention: 'tis not foure dayes gone
Since I heard thence, these are the words, I thinke
I haue the Letter heere yes, heere it is;
They haue prest a Power, but it is not knowne
Whether for East or West: the Dearth is great,
The people Mutinous. And it is rumour'd,
Cominius, Martius your old Enemy
(Who is of Rome worse hated then of you)
And Titus Lartius, a most valiant Roman,
These three leade on this Preparation
Whether 'tis bent: most likely, 'tis for you:
Consider of it.

1. Sen. Our Armie is in the Field.
We neuer yet made doubt but Rome was ready
To answer vs,

Ans. Nor did you thinke it folly,
To keepe your great pretences vail'd, till when
They needs must shew themselves, which in the hatching
It seem'd appear'd to Rome. By the discouery,
We shalbe shortned in our ayme, which was
To take in many Townes, ere (almost) Rome
Should know we were a-foot.

2. Sen. Noble Aufidius,
Take your Commission, hyc you to your Bands,
Let vs alone to guard Coriols
If they set downe before's. for the remoue
Bring vp your Army. but (I thinke) you'll finde
Th' haue not prepar'd for vs.

Ans. O doubt not that,
I speake from Certainties. Nay more,
Some parcels of their Power are forth already,
And onely hitherward I leaue your Honors.
If we, and Caius Martius chance to meete,
'Tis sworne betwene vs, we shall euer strike
Till one can do no more

All. The Gods assist you.

Ans. And keepe your Honors safe.

1. Sen. Farewell.

2. Sen. Farewell.

All. Farewell.

Exeunt omnes.

Enter

*Enter Volunna and Virgilia, mother and wife to Martius :
They set them downe on two lowe stools and sowe.*

Volun. I pray you daughter sing, or expresse your selfe in a more comfortable sort : If my Sonne were my Husband, I should freelier reioyce in that absence wherein he wonne Honor, then in the embracements of his Bed, where he would shew most loue. When yet hee was but tender-bodied, and the onely Sonne of my womb, when youth with comelinesse pluck'd all gaze his way ; when for a day of Kings entreaties, a Mother should not sel him an houre from her beholding ; I considering how Honour would become such a person, that it was no better then Picture-like to hang by th' wall, if renowne made it not stie, was pleas'd to let him seeke danger, where he was like to finde fame. To a cruell Warre I sent him, from whence he return'd, his browes bound with Oake. I tell thee Daughter, I sprang not more in ioy at first hearing hee was a Man-child, then now in first seeing he had proued himselfe a man.

Virg. But had he died in the Businesse Madame, how then ?

Volun. Then his good report should haue beene my Sonne, I therein would haue found issue. Heare me profess sincerely, had I a dozen sons each in my loue alike, and none lesse deere then thine, and my good Martius, I had rather had eleuen dye Nobly for their Countrey, then one volupuously surfeit out of Action.

Enter a Gentlewoman.

Gent. Madam, the Lady Valeria is come to visit you.

Virg. Beseech you giue me leaue to retire my selfe.

Volun. Indeed you shall not :

Me thinkes, I heare hither your Husbands Drumme : See him plucke Aufidius downe by th' haire : (As children from a Beare) the Volces shunning him : Me thinkes I see him stampe thus, and call thus, Come on you Cowards, you were got in feare Though you were borne in Rome ; his bloody brow With his mail'd hand, then wiping, forth he goes Like to a Haruest man, that task'd to mowe Or all, or loose his hyre.

Virg. His bloody Brow ? Oh Iupiter, no blood.

Volun. Away you Foole ; it more becomes a man,

Then gilt his Trophe. The breasts of Hecuba

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not louelier

Then Hectors forehead, when it spit forth blood

At Grecian sword. Contenting, tell Valeria

We are fit to bid her welcome. Exit Gent.

Vir. Heaueus blesse my Lord from fell Aufidius.

Vol. Hee'l beat Aufidius head below his knee,
And treade vpon his necke

Enter Valeria with an Vsher, and a Gentlewoman.

Val. My Ladies both good day to you,]

Vol. Sweet Madam.

Vir. I am glad to see your Ladyship.

Val. How do you both ? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sowing heere ? A fine spoite in good faith. How does your little Sonne ?

Vir. I thanke your Ladyship : Well good Madam.

Vol. He had rather see the swords, and heare a Drum, then looke vpon his Schoolmaster.

Val. A my word the Fathers Sonne : He sweare 'tis a very pretty boy. A my troth, I look'd vpon him a Wednesday halfe an houre together : he's such a confirm'd countenance. I saw him run after a gilded Butterfly, & when he caught it, he let it go againe, and after it againe, and ouer and ouer he comes, and vp againe : catch it againe : or whether his fall enrag'd him, or how 'twas, hee did so set his teeth, and teare it. Oh, I warrant how he mammockt it.

Vol. O're on's Fathers moods.

Val. Indeed he, 'tis a Noble childe.

Virg. A Cracke Madam.

Val. Come, lay aside your stitchery, I must haue you play the idle Hufwife with me this afternoone.

Virg. No (good Madam)

I will not out of doores.

Val. Not out of doores ?

Volun. She shall, she shall

Virg. Indeed no, by your patience ; Ile not ouer the threshold, till my Lord returne from the Warres.

Val. Fye, you confine your selfe most vreasonably. Come, you must go visit the good Lady that lies in.

Virg. I will with her speedy strength, and visite her with my prayers. but I cannot go thither.

Volun. Why I pray you.

Virg. 'Tis not to saue labour, nor that I want loue.

Val. You would be another Penelope ; yet they say, all the yeaere the spun in Ulysses absence, did but fill Athens full of Mothes. Come, I would your Cambrick were sensible as your finger, that you might leaue pricking it for pite. Come you shall go with vs.

Vir. No good Madam, pardon me, indeed I will not forth.

Val. In truth I go with me, and Ile tell you excellent newes of your Husband.

Virg. Oh good Madam, there can be none yer.

Val. Verily I do not rest with you : there came newes from him last night.

Vir. Indeed Madam.

Val. In earnest it's true ; I heard a Senatour speake it. Thus it is : the Volcies haue an Army forth, against who Cominius the Generall is set, with one part of our Romanepower. Your Lord and Titus Lartius, are set down before their Citie Corioles, they nothing doubt preuailling, and to make it breefe Warres, This is true on mine Honor, and so I pray go with vs.

Virg. Giue me excuse good Madame, I will obey you in euery thing heereafter.

Val. Let her alone Ladie, as she is now : She will but diseafe our better mirth.

Valeria. In troth I thinke she would : Fare you well then. Come good sweet Ladie. Prythee Virgilia turne thy solemnnesse out a doore, And go along with vs.

Virgilia. No
At a word Madam ; Indeed I must not,
I wish you much mirth.

Val. Well, then farewell.

Exeunt Ladies

Enter Martius, Titus Lartius, with Drumme and Colours, with Captaines and Souldiers, as before the City Coriolanus : to them a Messenger.

Martius. Yonder comes Newes :
A Wager they haue met.

Lar. My horse to yours, no.

Mar. 'Tis done.

Lart. Agreed.

Myr.

Mar. Say, ha's our Generall met the Enemy?

Mess. They lye in view, but haue not spoke as yet.

Lar. So, the good Horse is mine.

Mar. Ile buy him of you.

Lar. No, Ile nor sel, nor giue him: Lend you him I will
For halfe a hundred yeares: Summon the Towne.

Mar. How farre off lie these Armies?

Mess. Within this mile and halfe.

Mar. Then shall we heare their Latum, & they Ours
Now Mars, I prythee make vs quicke in worke,
That we with smoaking swords may march from hence
To helpe our fielded Friends. Come, blow thy blast.

They Sound a Parley. Enter two Senators with others on the Walles of Coriolanus.

Tullius Aufidius, is he within your Walles?

1. Senat. No, nor a man that feares you lesse then he,
That's lesse then a little. Drum a farre off.

Hearke, our Drummes

Are bringing forth our youth. Wee'l breake our Walles
Rather then they shall pound vs vp our Gates,
Which yet seeme shut, we haue but pin'd with Rushes,
They'le open of themselues. Harke you, farre off

Alarm farre off.

There is Aufidius. List what worke he makes Amongst your clouen Army.

Mars. Oh they are at it.

Lar. Their noise be our instruction. Ladders ho.

Enter the Army of the Volces.

Mar. They feare vs not, but issue forth their Citie.
Now put your Shields before your hearts, and fight
With hearts more prooue then Shields.

Aduaunce brave Titus,

They do disdain vs much beyond our Thoughts, which makes me sweat with wrath. Come on my fellows
He that retires, Ile take him for a Volce,
And he shall feele mine edge.

Alarm, the Romans are beat back to their Trenches

Enter Martius cursing.

Mar. All the contagion of the South, light on you,
You Shames of Rome. you Heard of Byles and Plagues
Plaster you o're, that you may be abhor'd
Farther then seene, and one infect another
Against the Winde a mile: you soules of Geefe,
That beare the shapes of men, how haue you run
From Slaues, that Apes would beate, Pluto and Hell,
All hurt behinde, backes red, and faces pale
With flight and agued feare, mend and charge home,
Or by the fires of heauen, Ile leaue the Foe,
And make my Warres on you. Look too't: Come on,
If you stand fast, wee'l beate them to their Wines,
As they vs to our Trenches followes.

Another Alarm, and Martius follows them to 'gates, and is shut in.

So, now the gates are ope, now proue good Seconds,
'Tis for the followers Fortune, widens them,
Not for the flyers. Marke me, and do the like.

Enter the Gate.

1. Sol. Foole-hardinesse, not I.

2. Sol. Not I

1. Sol. See they haue shut him in. Alarm continues

All. To th' pot I warrant him. Enter Titus Lartius

Tit. What is become of Martius?

All Slaine (Sir) doubtlesse.

2 Sol. following the Flyers at the very heeles,

With them he enters: who vpon the sodaine
Clapt to their Gates, he is himselfe alone,
To answer all the City.

Lar. Oh Noble Fellow!

Who sensibly out-dares his sencelesse Sword,
And when it bowes, stand'st vp: Thionart left Martius,
A Carbuncle in iute: as big as thou art
Weare not so rich a Jewell. Thou wast a Souldier
Euen to Calves with, not fierce and terrible
Onely in strokes, but with thy grim lookes, and
The Thunder-like percussion of thy sound
Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the World
Were feaxorous, and did tremble.

Enter Martius bleeding, assaulted by the Enemy.

1 Sol. Look Sir,

Lar. O 'tis Martius.

Let's fetch him off, or make remaine alike

They fight, and all enter the City.

Enter certaine Romanes with spoiles.

1 Rom. This will I carry to Rome.

2 Rom. And I this.

3 Rom. A Murrain on't, I tooke this for Siluer. exennt.

Alarm continues still a farre off.

Enter Martius, and Titus with a Trumpet.

Mar. See heere these mouers, that do prize their hours
At a crack'd Drachme: Cushions, Leaden Spooones, Irons of a Doit, Dublets that Hangmen would Bury with those that wore them. These base slaues,
Ere yet the fight be done, packe vp, downe with them.
And harke, what noyse the Generall makes. To him
There is the man of my soules hate, Aufidius, Piercing our Romanes. Then Valiant Titus take Conuenient Numbers to make good the City,
Whil'st I with those that haue the spirit, wil haste
To helpe Cominius.

Lar. Worthy Sir, thou bleed'st,
Thy exercise hath bin too violent,
For a second course of Fight.

Mar. Sir, praise me not:

My worke hath yet not warm'd me. Fate you well:
The blood I drop, is rather Physicall

Then dangerous to me: To Aufidius thus, I will appear

Lar. Now the faire Goddesse Fortune, (and fight,
Fall deepe in loue with thee, and her great charmes
Misguide thy Opposers swords, Bold Gentleman: Prosperity be thy Page.

Mar. Thy Friend no lesse,
Then those she placeth highest: So farewell.

Lar. Thou worthiest Martius,
Go sound thy Trumpet in the Market place,
Call thither all the Officers a'th' Towne,
Where they shall know our minde. Away. Exennt

Enter Cominius as it were in retire, with soldiers.

Com. Breathe you my friends, well fought, we are come
Like Romanes, neither foolish in our stands, (off,
Nor Cowardly in retyre: Beleeue me Sirs,
We shall be charg'd againe. Whiles we haue strooke
By Interims and conyeing gufts, we haue heard
The Charges of our Friends. The Roman Gods,
Leade their successes, as we wish our owne,
That both our powers, with smiling Fronts encountering,
May giue you thankfull Sacrifice. Thy Newes?

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Cittizens of Corioles haue yllued,
And giuen to Lartius and to Martius Battaille:

The Tragedie of Coriolanus.

I saw our party to their Trenches driven,
And then I came away.

Com. Though thou speakest truth,
Me thinks thou speak'st not well. How long is't since?

Me. About an hour, my Lord.

Com. 'Tis not a mile: briefly we heard their drummes.
How could'st thou in a mile confound an hour,
And bring thy Newes so late?

Me. Spies of the Volces
Held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheele
Three or foure miles about, else had I fir
Halfe an hour since brought my report.

Enter Martius.

Com. Whose yonder,
That does appeare as he were Flead? O Gods,
He has the stampe of Martius, and I haue
Before time seene him thus.

Mar. Come I too late?

Com. The Shepherd knowes not Thunder frō a Taber,
More then I know the found of Martius Tongue
From euery meane man.

Martius. Come I too late?

Com. I, if you come not in the blood of others,
But mantled in your owne.

Mar. Oh! let me clip ye

In Armes as sound, as when I woo'd in heart;
As merry, as when our Nuptiall day was done,
And Tapers burnt to Bedward.

Com. Flower of Warriors, how is't with Titus Lartius?

Mar. As with a man busied about Decrees.
Condemning some to death, and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatning th'other;
Holding Corioles in the name of Rome,
Euen like a sawning Grey-hound in the Leash,
To let him slip at will.

Com. Where is that Slave
Which told me they had beate you to your Trenches?
Where is he? Call him hither.

Mar. Let him alone,
He did informe the truth: but for our Gentlemen,
The common file, (a plague-Tribunes for them)
The Moufe ne're thunn'd the Cat, as they did budge
From Rascals worse then they.

Com. But how preiur'd you?

Mar. Will the time serue to tell, I do not thinke:
Where is the enemy? Are you Lords a th Field?
If not, why cease you till you are so?

Com. Martius, we haue at disadvantage fought,
And did retyre to w'm our purpose.

Mar. How lies their Battell? Know you on w<sup>h</sup> side
They haue plac'd their men of trust?

Com. As I guesse Martius,
Their Bands i'th Vaward are the Antients
Of their best trust: O re them Aufidians,
Their very heart of Hope.

Mar. I do beseech you,
By all the Battails wherein we haue fought,
By th'Blood we haue shed together,
By th'Vowes we haue made
To endure Friends, that you directly set me
Against Aufidians, and his Antients,
And that you not delay the present (but Filling the aire with Swords aduanc'd) and Dart's,
We proue this very houre.

Com. Though I could wish,

You were conducted to a gentle Bath,
And Balmes applyed to you, yet dare I neuer
Deny your asking, take your choice of those
That best can ayde your action.

Mar. Those are they
That most are willing; if any such be heere,
(As it were sinne to doubt) that loue this painting
Wherein you see me smeas'd, if any feare
Lessen his person, then an ill report:
If any thinke, braue death out-weighes bad life,
And that his Countries deerer then himselfe,
Let him alone: Or so many so minded,
Waue thus to expresse his disposition,
And follow Martius.

They all shout and wave their swords, take him up in their Armes, and cast up their Caps.

Oh me alone, make you a sword of me:
If these shewes be not outward, which of you
But is soure Volces? None of you, but is Able to beare against the great Aufidians
A Shield, as hard as his. A certaine number (Though thanks to all) must I select from all:
The rest shall beare the businesse in some other fight
(As cause will be obey'd) please you to March,
And soure shall quickly draw out my Command,
Which men are best inclin'd.

Com. March on my Fellowes:
Make good this ostentation, and you shall
Diuide in all, with vs.

Titus Lartius, having set a guard upon Corioles, going with Drums and Trumpet toward Corinius, and Caius Mar-tius, Enters with a Lieutenant, otherouldiers, and a Scout.

Exeunt

Lar. So, let the Ports be guarded; keepe your Duties
As I haue set them downe. If I do send, dispatch
Those Centuries to our ayd, the rest will serue
For a short holding, if we loose the Field,
We cannot keepe the Towne.

Lien. Feare not our care Sir.

Lari. Hence, and thus your gates vpon's:
Our Guider come, to th'Roman Campe conduct vs, Exe
Alarum, as in Battail

Enter Martius and Aufidius at several doores.

Mar. He fight with none but thee, for I do hate thee
Worse then a Promise-breaker.

Aufid. We hate alike:
Not Affricke ownes a Serpent I abhorre
More then thy Fame and Enuy. Fix thy foot.

Mar. Let the first Budger dye the others Slave,
And the Gods doome him after

Auf. If I flye Martius, hollow me like a Hare.
Mar. Within these three houres Tullus
Alone I fought in your Corioles walles,
And made what worke I pleas'd: 'Tis not my blood,
Wherein thou seest me maskt, for thy Reuenge
Wrench vp thy power to th'highest.

Auf. Wert thou the Heller,
That was the whip of your bragg'd Progeny,
Thou should'st not scape me heere.

*Heere they fight, and certaine Volces come to the ayde
of Aufidius Martius fights till they be drunen on breathles.*
Officious and not valiant, you haue sham'd me
In your condemned Seconds.

Flourish Alarm. A Retreat is sounded. Enter as one Doore Cominius, with the Romanes. At another Doore Martius, with his Armes in a Scarfe.

Com. If I should tell thee o're this thy dayes Worke, Thou'st not beleue thy deeds: but Ile report it, Where Senators shall mingle teares with smiles, Where great Patricians shall atterd, and shrug, I'th'end admire: where Ladies shall be frighted, And gladly quak'd, heare more: where the dull Tribunes, That with the suttie Plebeians, hate thine Honors, Shall say against their hearts, We thanke the Gods Our Rome hath such a Souldier. Yet cam'st thou to a Morfell of this Feast, Hauing fully din'd before.

Enter Titus with his Power, from the Pursuit.

Titus Martius. Oh Generall: Here is the Steed, wee the Caparison: Hadst thou beheld—

Martius. Pray now, no more: My Mother, who ha's a Charter to extoll her Blood, When she do's prayse me, grieues me. I haue done as you haue done, that I can, Induc'd as you haue beene, that's for my Countrey: He that ha's but effected his good will, Hath ouerta'ne mine Act.

Com. You shall not be the Graue of your desertings, Rome must know the value of her owne.

'Twere a Concealement worse then a Theft, No lesse then a Traducement, To hide your doings, and to silence that, Which to the spire, and top of prayes vouch'd, Would seeme but modest: therefore I beseech you, In signe of what you are, not to reward What you haue done, before our Armie heare me.

Martius. I haue some Wounds vpon me, and they smart To heare themselves remembred.

Com. Should they not: Well might they fester 'gainst Ingratitude, And tent themselves with death. of all the Horses, Whereof we haue ta'ne good, and good store of all, The Treasure in this field atchieued, and Citie, We render you the Tenth, to be ta'ne forth, Before the common distribution, At your onely choyse.

Martius. I thanke you Generall: But cannot make my heart consent to take A Bribe, to pay my Sword: I doe refuse it, And stand vpon my common part with those, That haue beheld the doing.

A long flourish They all cry, Martius, Martius, cast up their Caps and Lances Cominius and Titus stand bare.

Mar. May these same Instruments, which you prophane, Neuer sound more, when Drums and Trumpets shall I'th' field proue flatterers, let Courts and Cities be Made all of false-fac'd soothing When Steele grows soft, as the Parasites Silke, Let him be made an Overture for th' Warres: No more I say, for that I haue not wash'd

My Nose that bled, or foyl'd some debile Wretch, Which without note, here's many else haue done, You shoot me forth in acclamations hyperbolically, As if I lou'd my little should be dieted In prayes, sawc't with Lyes.

Com. Too modest are you:

More cruell to your good report, then grateful To vs, that giue you truly. by your patience, If 'gainst your selfe you be incens'd, wee'le put you (Like one that meanes his proper harme) in Manacles, Then reason safely with you: Therefore be it knowne, As to vs, to all the World, That Caius Martius Wearts this Warres Garland. in token of the which, My Noble Steed, knowne to the Campe, I giue him, With all his trim belonging: and from this time, For what he did before Corioles, call him, With all th'applause and Clamor of the Hoast, Marcus Caius Coriolanus, Beare th'addition Nobly euer?

Flourish. Trumpets sound, and Drums.

Omnes, Marcus Caius Coriolanus.

Martius. I will goe wash:

And when my Face is faire, you shall perceiue Whether I blush, or no: howbeit, I thanke you, I meane to stride your Steed, and at all times To vnder-crest your good Addition, To th'fairenesse of my power.

Com. So, to our Tent:

Where ere we doe repose vs, we will write To Rome of our successe: you Titus Lartius Must to Corioles backe, send vs to Rome The best, with whom we may articulate, For their owne good, and ours.

Lartius. I shall, my Lord.

Martius. The Gods begin to mocke me: I that now refus'd most Princely gifts, Am bound to begge of my Lord Generall.

Com. Tak't, 'tis yours. what is't?

Martius. I sometime lay here in Corioles, At a poore mans house: he v'd me kindly, He cry'd to me: I saw him Prisoner: But then Aufidius was within my view, And Wrath o're-whelm'd my pittie: I request you To giue my poore Host freedome.

Com. Oh well begg'd:

Were he the Butcher of my Sonne, he should Be free, as is the Winde: deliuer him, Titus.

Lartius. Martius, his Name.

Martius. By Iupiter forgot:

I am wearie, yea, my memorie is ty'd: Haue we no Wine here?

Com. Goe we to our Tent:

The blood vpon your Visage dries, 'tis time It should be lookt too: come.

Exeunt.

A flourish. Cornets. Enter Titus Aufidius bloudie, with two or three Souldiers.

Auffi. The Towne is ta'ne.

Sould. 'Twill be deliuer'd backe on good Condition.

Auffi. Condition?

I would I were a Roman, for I cannot.

Being a Vulce, be that I am. Condition?

What good Condition can a Treatie finde

I'th'part that is at mercy? five times, Martius,

I haue fought with thee, so often hast thou beat me:

And would it doe so, I thinke, should we encounter

As

The Tragedie of Coriolanus.

As often as we eate, By th' Elements,
If ere againe I meet him beard to beard,
He's mine, or I am his: Mine Emulation
Hath not that Honor in't it had. For where
I thought to crush him in an equall Force,
True Sword to Sword: He porche at him some way,
Or Wrath, or Craft may get him.

Sol. He's the diuell

Ans. Bolder, though not so subtle: my valors poison'd,
With onely suffring staine by him. for him
Shall flye out of it selfe, nor sleepe, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sicke; nor Phane, nor Capitoll,
The Prayers of Priests, nor times of Sacrifice:
Embarquements all of Fury, shall lift vp
Their rotten Priuiledge, and Custome gainst
My hate to Martius. Where I finde him, were it
At home, vpon my Brothers Guard, euen there
Against the hospitable Canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in's heart. Go you to th' Citie, Learne how 'tis held, and what they are that must Be Hostages for Rome.

Soul. Will not you go?

Ans. I am attended at the Cyprus groue. I pray you
(Tis South the City Mills) bring me word thither
How the world goes that to the pace of it
I may spurre on my iourney.

Soul. I shall sir.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Menenius with the two Tribunes of the people, Sicinius & Brutus

Men. The Agurer tels me, wee shall haue Newes to night.

Br. Good or bad?

Men. Not according to the prayer of the people, for they loue not Martius.

Sic. Nature teaches Beasts to know their Friends.
Men. Pray you, who does the Wolfe loue?

Sic. The Lambe.

Men. I, to deuour him, as the hungry Plebeians would the Noble Martius.

Br. He's a Lambe indeed, that baes like a Beare.

Men. Hee's a Beare indeede, that liues like a Lambe.
You two are old men, tell me one thing that I shall aske
you.

Both. Well sir

Men. In what enormity is Martius poore in, that you two haue not in abundance?

Br. He's poore in no one fault, but stor'd withall.

Sic. Especially in Pride.

Br. And topping all others in boasting.

Men. This is strange now. Do you, two know, how you are censured heere in the City, I mean of vs a'th' right hand File, do you?

Both. Why? ho ware we censur'd?

Men. Because you talke of Pride now. will you not be angry.

Both. Well, well sir, well.

Men. Why 'tis no great matter: for a very little cheefe of Occasion, will rob you of a great deale of Patience:

Giue your dispositions the reines, and bee angry at your pleasures (at the least) if you take it as a pleasure to you, in being so: you blame Martius for being proud,
Br. We do it not alone, sir.

Men. I know you can doe very little alone, for your helpes are many, or else your actions would growe wondrous single: your abilities are to Infant-like, for dooing much alone. You talke of Pride. Oh, that you could turn your eyes toward the Napes of your neckes, and make but an Interiour survey of your good selues. Oh that you could.

Both. What then sir?

Men. Why then you should discouera a brace of vn-meriting, proud, violent, testie Magistrates (alias Fooles)
as any in Rome.

Sic. Menenius, you are knowne well enough too.

Men. I am knowne to be a humorous Patritian, and one that loues a cup of hot Wine, with not a drop of alaying Tiber in't. Said, to be something imperfect in fauouring the first complaint, hasty and Tinder-like vpon, to triuall motion: One, that conuerfes more with the Buttocke of the night, then with the forehead of the morning.
What I think, I vtter, and spend my malice in my breath.
Meeting two such Weales men as you are (I cannot call you Licentgusses.) if the drinke you giue me, touch my Pa-lat aduersly, I make a crooked face at it, I can say, your Worshippes haue deliuer'd the matter well, when I finde the Ass in compound, with the Maior part of your lillables. And though I must be content to beare with those, that say you are reuerend graue men, yet they lye deadly, that tell you haue good faces, if you see this in the Map of my Microcosme, followes it that I am knowne well enough too? What harme can your beesome Conspicuities gleane out of this Character, if I be knowne well-enough too.

Br. Come sit come, we know you well enough.

Men. You know neither mee, your selues, nor any thing: you are ambitious, for poore knaues cappes and legges you weare out a good wholesome Forenoone, in hearing a cause betweene an Orendge wife, and a Forset-seller, and then reiourne the Controuersie of three-pence to a second day of April eue. When you are hearing a matter betweene party and party, if you chauce to bee pinch'd with the Collicke, you make faces like Mummers, set vp the bloodie Flagge against all Patience, and in roaring for a Chamber-pot, dismissthe Controuersie bleeding, the more intargled by your hearing. All the peace you make in their Cause, is calling both the parties
Knaues. You are a payre of strange ones.

Br. Come, come, you are well vnderstood to bee a perfecter gyber for the Table, then a necessary Benchman in the Capitoll.

Men. Our very Priests must become Mockers, if they shall encounter such ridiculous Subjects as you are, when you speake best vnto the purpose. It is not woorth the wagging of your Beards, and your Beards deserue not so honourable a graue, as to stufte a Butchers Cushion, or to be intomb'd in an Asses Packe-saddle; yet you must bee saying, Martius is proud: who in a cheape estimation, is worth all your predecessors, since Dencalion, though peradventure some of the best of 'em were hereditarie hang-men. Godden to your Worships, more of your conuersation would infect my Braine, being the Heardsmen of the Beastly Plebeians. I will be bold to take my leaue of you.

Br. and Sic.

Aside.

Enter

Enter Volunna, Virgilia, and Valeria.

How now (my as faire as Noble) Ladies, and the Moone were shee Earthly, no Nobler; whither doe you follow your Eyes so fast?

Volun. Honorable Menenucius, my Boy Martius approaches: for the loue of Iuno let's goe.

Menen. Ha? Martius comming home?

Volun. I, worthy Menenucius, and with most prosperous approbation.

Menen. Take my Cappe Iupiter, and I thanke thee: hoo, Martius comming home?

2. Ladies. Nay, 'tis true

Volun. Looke, here's a Letter from him, the State hath another, his Wife another, and (I thinke) there's one at home for you.

Menen. I will make my very house reele to night A Letter for me?

Virgil. Yes certaine, there's a Letter for you, I saw't.

Menen. A Letter for me? it giues me an Estate of seuen yeeres health; in which time, I will make a Lippe at the Physician: The most soveraigne Prescription in Galen, is but Emperick cutique; and to this Preferuative, of no better report then a Horse-drench Is he not wounded? he was wont to come home wounded?

Virgil. Oh no, no, no.

Volun. Oh, he is wounded, I thanke the Gods for't.

Menen. So doe I too, if it be not too much: brings a Victorie in his Pocket? the wounds become him.

Volun. On's Browes: Menenucius, hee comes the third time home with the Oaken Garland.

Menen. Ha's he disciplin'd Aufidius soundly?

Volun. Titus Lartius writes, they fought together, but Aufidius got off.

Menen. And 'twas time for him too, Ile warrant him that: and he had stay'd by him, I would not haue been so fiddious'd, for all the Chests in Carioles, and the Gold that's in them. Is the Senate posselt of this?

Volun. Good Ladies let's goe. Yes, yes, yes: The Senate ha's Letters from the Generall, wherein hee giues my Sonne the whole Name of the Warre. he hath in this action out-done his former deeds doubly.

Valer. In troth, there's wondrous things spoke of him.

Menen. Wondrous: I, I warrant you, and not without his true purchasing.

Virgil. The Gods graunt them true.

Volun. True? pow waw.

Mene. True? Ile be sworne they are true: where is hee wounded, God saue your good Worships? Martius is comming home: hee ha's more cause to be proud. where is he wounded?

Volun. Ith'Shoulder, and ith' left Arme: there will be large Cicatrices to shew the People, when hee shall stand for his place: hee receiued in the repulse of Tarqum seuen hurts ith' Body.

Mene. One ith' Neck, and two ith' Thigh, there's nine that I know.

Volun. Hee had, before this last Expedition, twentie five Wounds vpon him.

Mene. Now it's twentie seuen; euerie gash was an Enemies Graue. Hearke, the Trumpets.

A flourish, and flourish.

Volun. These are the Vthers of Martius:

Before him, hee carries Noyse;

And behinde him, hee leaues Teares:

Death, that darke Spint, in's neruic Arme doth lye, Which being aduanc'd, declines, and then men dye.

A Sennet.

Trumpets sound.

Enter Cominius the Generall, and Titus Lartius: betweene them Coriolanus, crown'd with an Oaken Garland, with Capraes and Souldiers, and a Herald.

Herauld. Know Rome, that all alone Martius did fight Within Corioles Gates: where he hath wonne, With Fame, a Name to Martius Caius:

These in honor followes Martius Caius Coriolanus.

Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Sennet. Flourish.

All. Welcome to Rome, renowned Coriolanus.

Coriol. No more of this, it does offend my heart: pray now no more.

Com. Looke, Sir, your Mother.

Coriol. Oh! you haue, I know, petition'd all the Gods for my prosperitie

Kneeler.

Volun. Nay, my good Souldier, vp:

My gentle Martius, worthy Caius, And by deed-atcheuing Honor newly nam'd, What is it (Coriolanus) must I call thee? But oh, thy Wife.

Corio. My gracious Silence, haile: Would'st thou haue laugh'd, had I come Coffin'd home, That weep'st to see me triumph? Ah my deare, Such eyes the Widowes in Carioles were, And Mothers that lacke Sonnes.

Mene. Now the Gods Crowne thee.

Com. And lue you yet? Oh my sweet Lady, pardon.

Volun. I know not where to turne.

Oh welcome home: and welcome Generall, And y'are welcome all.

Mene. A hundred thousand Welcomes:

I could weepe, and I could laugh, I am light, and heauie; welcome.

A Curse begin at very root on's heart,

That is not glad to see thee.

Yon are three, that Rome should dote on:

Yet by the faith of men, we haue

Some old Crab-trees here at home,

That will not be grafted to your Rallish.

Yet welcome Warriors.

Wee call a Nettle, but a Nettle;

And the faults of fooles, but folly.

Com. Euer right.

Cor. Menenucius, euer, euer.

Herauld. Giue way there, and goe on.

Cor. Your Hand, and yours?

Ere in our owne house I doe shade my Head,

The good Patricians must be visited,

From whom I haue receiu'd not onely greetings,

But with them, change of Honors.

Volun. I haue liued,

To see inherited my very Wisnes,

And the Buildings of my Fancie:

Onely there's one thing wanting,

Which (I doubt not) but our Rome

Will cast vpon thee.

Cor. Know, good Mother,

I had rather be their seruant in my way,

Then sway with them in theirs.

Com. On, to the Capitall. Flourish. Cornets.

Exeunt in State, as before.

Enter

Enter Brutus and Seicinius.

Brut. All tongues speake of him, and the bleated fighs
Are spectacled to see him. Your prating Nurse
Into a rapture lets her Baby crye,
While she chats him: the Kitchen Malkin pinnes
Her richest Lockram 'bout her recchie necke,
Clambring the Walls to eye him.
Stalls, Bulkes, Windows, are smother'd vp,
Leades fill'd, and Ridge-hors'd
With variable Complexions; all agreeing
In earnestnesse to see him: self-showne Flamins
Doe presse among the popular Throngs, and puffe
To winne a vulgar station: our veyl'd Dames
Commit the Warre of White and Damaske
In their nicely gawded Cheekes, toth' wanton spoyle
Of Phaebus burning Kisses: such a poother,
As if that whatsoeuer God, who leades him,
Were slyly crept into his humane powers,
And gaue him gracefull posture.

Seicim. On the suddaine, I warrant him Confull.

Brutus. Then our Office may, during his power, goe sleepe.

Seicim. He cannot temp'rately transport his Honors,
From where he should begin, and end, but will Lose those he hath wonne.

Brutus. In that there's comfort

Seicim. Doubt not,
The Commoners, for whom we stand, but they
Vpon their ancient mallice, will forget
With the least cause, these his new Honors,
Which that he will giue them, make 1 as little question,
As he is proud to doo't.

Brutus. I heard him sweare,
Were he to see for Confull, neuer would he Appeare i'th' Market place, nor on him put
The Naples Vesture of Humilitie,
Nor shewing (as the manner is) his Wounds
Toth' People, begge their stinking Breaths.

Seicim. 'Tis right.

Brutus. It was his word:
Oh he would misse it, rather then carry it,
But by the suite of the Gentry to him,
And the desire of the Nobles.

Seicim. I with no better, then haue him hold that purpose, and to put it in execution.

Brutus. 'Tis most like he will.

Seicim. It shall be to him then, as our good wills; a sure destruction.

Brutus. So it must fall out
To him, or our Authorities, for an end.
We must suggest the People, in what hatred
He still hath held them: that to's power he would Haue made them Mules, silenc'd their Pleaders,
And dispropertied their Freedomes; holding them,
In humane Action, and Capacitie,
Of no more Soule, nor fittnesse for the World,
Then Cammels in their Warre, who haue their Prouand
Onely for bearing Burthens, and fore blowes
For sinking vnder them.

Seicim. This (as you say) suggested,
At some time, when his soaring Insolence
Shall teach the People, which time shall not want,
If he be pur vpon't, and that's as easie,
As to set Dogges on Sheepe, will be his fire.

To kindle their dry Stubble. and their Blaze
Shall darken him for euer.

Enter a Messenger.

Brutus. What's the matter?

Mess. You are sent for to the Capitoll:
'Tis thought, that Martius shall be Confull:
I haue scene the dumbe men throng to see him,
And the blind to heare him speak. Matrons stong Gloues,
Ladies and Maids their Scarffes, and Handkerchers,
Vpon him as he pass'd: the Nobles bended
As to Ioues Statue, and the Commons made
A Shower, and Thunder, with their Caps, and Showts:
I neuer saw the like.

Brutus. Let's to the Capitoll,
And carry with vs Eares and Eyes for th' time,
But Hearts for the event.

Seicim. Haue with you.

Exeunt.

*Enter two Officers, to lay Cushions, as it were,
in the Capitoll.*

1. Off. Come, come, they are almost here: how many stand for Consulships?

2. Off. Three, they say: but 'tis thought of euery one,
Coriolanus will carry it.

1. Off. That's a braue fellow: but hee's vengeance
prowd, and loues not the common people.

2. Off. 'Faith, there hath beene many great men that haue flatter'd the people, who ne're loued them, and there be many that they haue loued, they know not wherefore
so that if they loue they know not why, they hate vpon no better a ground. Therefore, for Coriolanus neyther to care whether they loue, or hate him, manifests the true knowledge he has in their disposition, and out of his Noble carelesnesse lets them plainly see't.

1. Off. If he did not care whether he had their loue, or no, hee waued indifferently, twixt doing them neyther good, nor harme: but hee seekes their hate with greater deuotion, then they can render it him; and leaues nothing vndone, that may fully discouer him their opposite. Now to seeme to affect the mallice and displeasure of the People, is as bad, as that which he dislikes, to flatter them for their loue.

2. Off. Hee hath deserued worthily of his Countrey, and his offence is not by such easie degrees as those, who hauing beene supple and courteous to the People, Bon-netted, without any further deed, to haue them at all into their estimation, and report: but hee hath so planted his Honors in their Eyes, and his actions in their Hearts, that for their Tongues to be silent, and not confesse so much,
were a kinde of ingratefull Iniurie: to report otherwise, were a Mallice, that giuing it selfe the Lye, would plucke reprooffe and rebuke from euery Eare that heard it.

1. Off. No more of him, hee's a worthy man. make way, they are comming.

A Scenect. Enter the Patricians, and the Tribunes of the People, Littors before them. Coriolanus, Menen-nius, Cominius the Consul: Seicimius and Brutus take their places by themselves. Coriolanus stands.

Menen. Hauing determin'd of the Volces,
And to send for Tullus Lartius: it remains,
As the maine Point of this our after-meeting,

To

To gratifie his Noble seruice, that hath
Thus stood for his Countrey. Therefore please you,
Most reuerend and graue Elders, to desire
The present Confull, and last Generall,
In our well-found Successes, to report
A little of that worthy Worke, perform'd
By Martius Caius Coriolanus. whom
We met here, both to thanke, and to remember,
With Honors like himselfe

Sen. Speake, good Cominius
Leaue nothing out for length, and make vs thinke
Rather our States defectiue for requittall,
Then we to stretch it out. Masters a'th' People,
We doe request your kindest cares and after
Your louing motion toward the common Body,
To yeeld what passes here.

Scim. We are conuented vpon a pleasing Treatie, and haue hearts inclinable to honor and aduance the Theame of our Assembly.

Brutus Which the rather wee shall be blest to doe, if he remember a kinder value of the People, then he hath hereto priz'd them at.

Menen That's off, that's off. I would you rather had been silent. Please you to heare Cominius speake?

Brutus. Most willingly. but yet my Caution was more pertinent then the rebuke you giue it.

Menen. He loues your People, but tye him not to be their Bed-fellow. Worthie Cominius speake.

Coriolanus rises, and offers to goe away.

Nay, keepe your place.

Senat. Sit Coriolanus neuer shame to heare
What you haue Nobly done.

Coriol Your Honors pardon.

I had rather haue my Wounds to heale againe,
Then heare say how I got them.

Brutus. Sir, I hope my words dis-bench'd you not?

Coriol No Sir yett off,
When blowes haue made me stay, I fled from words.
You sooth'd not; therefore hurt not; but your People,
I loue them as they weigh—

Menen. Pray now sit downe.

Corio I had rather haue one scratch my Head i'th' Sun,
When the Alarme were strucke; then idly sit
To heare my Notings monster d. Exit Coriolanus

Menen. Masters of the People,
Your multiplying Spawne, how can he flatter
That's thousand to one good one, when you now see
He had rather venture all his Limbes for Honor,
Then on ones Eares to heare it. Proceed Cominius.

Com. I shall lacke voyce the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be vtter'd feebly. it is held,
That Valour is the chiefest Vertue,
And most dignifies the haue if it be,
The man I speake of, cannot in the World
Be singly counter-poyse'd. At sixteene yeeres,
When Tarquin made a Head for Rome, he fought
Beyond the marke of others our then Dictator,
Whom with all prayse I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian Shinne he droue
The brizled Lippes before him he bestrid
An o're-prest Roman, and i'th' Consuls view
Slew three Opposers. Tarquins selfe he met,
And struke him on his Knee in that dayes feates,
When he might set the Woman in the Scene,
He prou'd best man i'th' field, and for his meed
Was Brow-bound with the Oake His Pupill age

Man-entred thus, he waxed like a Sea,
And in the brunt of teuentene Battailles since,
He lurcht all Swords of the Garland: for this last,
Before, and in Corioles, let me say
I cannot speake him home: he stopt the flyers,
And by his rare example made the Coward
Turne terror into sport: as Weeds before
A Vessell vnder sayle, so men obey'd,
And fell below his Stem: his Sword, Deaths stampe,
Where it did marke, it tooke from face to foot.
He was a thing of Blood, whose euery motion
Was tim'd with dying Cries: alone he entred
The mortall Gate of th' Citie, which he painted
With shunlesse destime aydelesse came off,
And with a sudden re-inforcement stricke
Carioles like a Planer: now all's his,
When by and by the dinne of Warre gan pierce
His readie sence: then straight his doubled spirit
Réquickned what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the Battaille came he, where he did
Runne reeking o're the liues of men, as if 'twere
A perpetuall spoyle. and till we call'd
Both Field and Citie ours, he neuer stood
To ease his Brest with panting.

Menen Worthy man.

Senat He cannot but with measure fit the Honors which we deuise him

Com. Our spoyles he kickt at,
And look'd vpon things precious, as they were
The common Muck of the World: he couets lesse
Then Miserie it selfe would giue, rewards his deeds
With doing them, and is content
To spend the time to end it.

Menen Hee's right Noble, let him be call'd for.

Senat. Call Coriolanus.

Off. He doth appeare.

Enter Coriolanus.

Menen. The Senate, Coriolanus, are well pleas'd to make thee Confull

Corio. I doe owe them still my Life, and Seruices.

Menen. It then remaines, that you doe speake to the People.

Corio. I doe beseech you,
Let me o're-leape that custome: for I cannot
Put on the Gowne, stand naked, and entreat them
For my Wounds sake, to giue their sufferage:
Please you that I may passe this doing.

Scim. Sir, the People must haue their Voyces,
Neyther will they bate one iot of Ceremonie.

Menen. Put them not too't.

Pray you goe sit you to the Custome,
And take to you, as your Predecessors haue,
Your Honor with your forme

Corio. It is a part that I shall blush in acting,
And might well be taken from the People.

Brutus. Marke you that

Corio. To brag vnto them, thus I did, and thus Shew them sh'vning Skarres, which I should hyde,
As if I had receiv'd them for the hyre
Of their breath onely

Menen. Doe not stand vpon't:
We recommend to you Tribunes of the People
Our purpose to them, and to our Noble Confull
With we all Ioy, and Honor.

Senat To

Senat. To Coriolanus come all ioy and Honor.

Flourish Cornets.

Then Exeunt. Marcellus Sicinius and Brutus.

Brut. You see how he intends to vse the people.

Sicinius. May they perceiue's intent: he wil require them As if he did contemne what he requested. Should be in them to giue.

Brut. Come, wee'l informe them Of our proceedings heere on th' Market place, I know they do attend vs.

Enter seven or eight Citizens.

1. Cit. Once if he do require our voyces, wee ought not to deny him.

2. Cit. We may Sir if we will.

3. Cit. We haue power in our selues to do it, but it is a power that we haue no power to do: For, if hee shew vs his wounds, and tell vs his deeds, we are to put our tongues into those wounds, and speake for them: So if he tel vs his Noble deeds, we must also tell him our Noble acceptance of them. Ingratitude is monstrous, and for the multitude to be ingratefull, were to make a Monster of the multitude; of the which, we being members, should bring our selues to be monstrous members.

1. Cit. And to make vs no better thought of a little helpe will serue: for once we stood vp about the Corne, he himselfe stucke not to call vs the many-headed Multitude.

3. Cit. We haue beene call'd so of many, not that our heads are some browne, some blacke, some Abram, some bald; but that our wits are so diuersly Coulord; and truly I thinke, if all our wittes were to issue out of one Scull, they would flye East, West, North, South, and their consent of one direct way, should be at once to all the points a'th Compasse.

2. Cit. Thinke you so? Which way do you iudge my wit would flye.

3. Cit. Nay your wit will not so soone out as another mans will, 'tis strongly wadg'd vp in a blocke-head. but if it were at liberty, 'twould sure Southward.

2. Cit. Why that way?

3. Cit. To loose it selfe in a Fogge, where being three parts melted away with rotten Dewes, the fourth would returne for Conscience sake, to helpe to get thee a Wife.

2. Cit. You are neuer without your trickes, you may, you may.

3. Cit. Are you all resolu'd to giue your voyces? But that's no matter, the greater part carries it, I say. If hee would incline to the people, there was neuer a worthier man.

Enter Coriolanus in a gowne of Humility, with Menenius.

Heere he comes, and in the Gowne of humility, marke his behaviour: we are not to stay altogether, but to come by him where he stands, by ones, by twos, & by threes. He's to make his requests by particulars, wherein euerie one of vs ha's a single Honor, in giuing him our own voyces with our owne tongues, therefore follow me, and Ile direct you how you shall go by him.

All. Content, content

Men. Oh Sir, you ate not right: haue you not knowne The worthiest men haue done't?

Corio. What must I say, I pray Sir? Plague vpon't, I cannot bring My tongue to such a pace. Looke Sir, my wounds, I got them in my Countries Service, when Some certaine of your Brethren roard, and ranne

From th' noise of our owne Drummer

Men. Oh me the Gods, you must not speak of that, You must desire them to thinke vpon you.

Coriol. Thinke vpon me? Hang 'em, I would they would forget me, like the Vertues Which our Diuines lose by em.

Men. You'l marre all, Ile leaue you: Pray you speake to em, I pray you In wholsome manner.

Exit

Enter three of the Citizens.

Corio. Bid them wash their Faces, And keepe their teeth cleane: So, heere comes a brace, You know the cause (Sir) of my standing heere.

3. Cit. We do Sir, tell vs what hath brought you too't,

Corio. Mine owne desert.

2. Cit. Your owne desert.

Corio. I, but mine owne desire.

3. Cit. How not your owne desire?

Corio. No Sir, 'twas neuer my desire yet to trouble the poore with begging.

3. Cit. You must thinke if we giue you any thing, we hope to gaine by you.

Corio. Well then I pray, your price a'th' Consulship

1. Cit. The price is, to aske it kindly.

Corio. Kindly Sir, I pray let me ha't: I haue wounds to shew you, which shall bee yours in priuate. your good voice Sir, what say you?

2. Cit. You shall ha't worthy Sir.

Corio. A match Sir, there's in all two worthie voyces begg'd: I haue your Almes, Adieu.

3. Cit. But this is something odde.

2. Cit. And 'twere to giue againe: but 'tis no matter

Exeunt. Enter two other Citizens.

Coriol. Pray you now, if it may stand with the tune of your voyces, that I may bee Consul, I haue heere the Customarie Gowne.

1. You haue deserued Nobly of your Countrey, and you haue not deserued Nobly.

Coriol. Your Enigma.

1. You haue bin a scourge to her enemies, you haue bin a Rod to her Friends, you haue not indeede loued the Common people.

Coriol. You should account mee the more Vertuous, that I haue not bin common in my Loue, I will fir flatter my sworne Brother the people to earne a deerer estimation of them, 'tis a condition they account gentle & since the wisdom of their choice, is rather to haue my Hat, then my Heart, I will practice the insinuating nod, and be off to them most counterfeetly, that is sir, I will counterfeite the bewitchment of some popular man, and giue it bountifull to the desirers. Therefore beseech you, I may be Consul:

2. Wee hope to finde you our friend: and therefore giue you our voyces heartily.

1. You haue receyued, many, wounds for your Countrey.

Coriol. I wil not Seale your knowledge with shewing them. I will make much of your voyces, and so trouble you no farther.

Both. The Gods giue you ioy Sir heartily.

Coriol. Most sweet Voyces:

Better it is to dye, better to sterue, Then craue the higher, which first we do deserue. Why in this Wooluish tongue should I stand heere, To begge of Hob and Dicke, that does appeere

Their

Their needlesse Vouches: Custome calls me too't.
What Custome wills in all things, should we doo't?
The Dust on antique Time would lye vnswep't,
And mountainous Error be too highly heapt,
For Truth to o're-peere. Rather then foole it so,
Let the high Office and the Honor go
To one that would doe thus. I am halfe through,
The one part suffered, the other will I doe.

Enter three Citizens more.

Here come moe Voyces.

Your Voyces? for your Voyces I haue fought,
Watch for your Voyces for your Voyces, beare
Of Wounds, two dozen odde. Battailes thrice six
I haue scene, and heard of. for your Voyces,
Haue done many things, some lesse, some more.
Your Voyces? Indeed I would be Consull

1. Cit. Hee ha's done Nobly, and cannot goe without any honest mans Voyce.

2. Cit. Therefore let him be Consull: the Gods giue him ioy, and make him good friend to the People

All Amen, Amen, God saue thee, Noble Consull,

Corio. Worthy Voyces.

Enter Menenius, with Brutus and Scicinius.

Mene. You haue stood your Limitation.
And the Tribunes endue you with the Peoples Voyce,
Remaines, ihat in th' Officiall Markes inuested,
You anon doe meet the Senate.

Corio Is this done?

Scicim. The Custome of Request you haue discharg'd.
The People doe admit you, and are summon'd
To meet anon, vpon your approbation.

Corio. Where? at the Senate-house?

Scicim. There, Coriolanus

Corio. May I change these Garments?

Scicim. You may, Sir

Corio. That Ile straight do and knowing my selfe again,
Repayre toth' Senate-house.

Mene. Ile keepe you company. Will you along?

Brut. We stay here for the People.

Scicim. Fare you well Exeunt Coriol and Mene.

He ha's it now and by his Lookes, me thinkes,
Tis warme at's heart

Brut. With a proud heart he wore his humble Weeds:
Will you dismissthe the People?

Enter the Plebeians

Scicim. How now, my Masters, haue you chose this man?

1. Cit. He ha's our Voyces, Sir.

Brut. We pray the Gods, he may deserue your loues.

2. Cit. Amen, Sir to my poore vnworthy notice,

He mock'd vs, when he begg'd our Voyces.

3. Cit. Certainly, he flowted vs downe-right.

1. Cit. No, 'tis his kind of speech, he did not mock vs.

2. Cit. Not one amongst vs, saue your selfe, but sayes
He vs'd vs scornfully he should haue shew'd vs
His Marks of Merit, Wounds receiv'd for's Countrey.

Scicim. Why so he did I am sure.

All No, no: no man sa w'em.

3. Cit. Hee said hee had Wounds,
Which he could shew in priuate

And with his Hat, thus wauing it in scorne,
I would be Consull, sayes he aged Custome,
But by your Voyces, will not so permit me.

Your Voyces therefore when we graunted that,
Here was, I thanke you for your Voyces, thanke you

Your most sweet Voyces now you haue left your Voyces,
I haue no further with you Was not this mockerie?

Scicim. Why cyther were you ignorant to see't?
Or seeing it, of such Childish friendlinesse,
To yeeld your Voyces?

Brut. Could you not haue told him,
As you were lesson'd. When he had no Power,
But was a pettie seruant to the State,
He was your Enemy, euer spake against
Your Liberties, and the Charters that you beare
I'th' Body of the Weale and now arriuing
A place of Potencie, and sway o'th' State,
If he should still malignantly remaine
Fast Foe toth' Plebey, your Voyces might
Be Curses to your felcys You should haue said,
That as his worthy deeds did clayme no lesse
Then what he stood for so his gracious nature
Wou'd thinke vpon you, for your Voyces,
And translate his Mallice towards you, into Loue
Standing your friendly Lord,

Scicim. Thus to haue said,
As you were fore-aduis'd, had toucht his Spirit,
And try'd his Inclination: from him pluckt
Eyther his gracious Promise, which you might
As cause had call'd you vp, haue held him to,
Or else it would haue gall'd his surly nature,
Which easily endures not Article,
Tying him to ought, so putting him to Rage,
You should haue ta neth' aduantage of his Choller,
And pat's'd him vnelected.

Brut. Did you perceiue,
He did sollicite you in free Contempt,
When he did need your Loues and doe you thinke,
That his Contempt shall not be brushing to you,
When he hath power to crush? Why, had your Bodyes
No Heart among you? Or had you Tongues, to cry
Against the Rectorship of Iudgement?

Scicim. Haue you, ere now, deny'd the asker:
And no w' againe, of him that did not aske, but mock,
Bestow your su'd-for Tongues?

3. Cit. Hee's not confirm'd, we may deny him yet

2. Cit. And will deny him.

Ile haue five hundred Voyces of that sound

1. Cit. I twice five hundred & their friends, to piece'em.

Brut. Get you hence instantly, and tell those friends,
They haue chose a Consull, that will from them take
Their Liberties, make them of no more Voyce
Then Dogges, that are as often beat for barking,
As therefore kept to doe so.

Scicim. Let them assemble: and on a safer Iudgement,
All reuoke your ignorant election Enforce his Pride,
And his old Hate vnto you: besides, forget not
With what Contempt he wore the humble Weed,
How in his Suit he scorn'd you: but your Loues,
Thinking vpon his Seruices, tooke from you
Th' apprehension of his present portance,
Which most gibingly, vngraciously, he did fashion
After the inueterate Hate he beares you.

Brut. Lay a fault on vs, your Tribunes,
That we labour'd (no impediment betwene)
But that you must cast your Election on him.

Scicim. Say you chose him, more after our commandment,
Then as guided by your owne true affections, and that
Your Minds pre-occupy'd with what you rather must do,
Then what you should, made you against the graine
To Voyce him Consull, Lay the fault on vs.

b b

Brut. I,

Brut. I spare vs not. Say, we read Lectures to you,
How younglie he began to serue his Countrey,
How long continued, and what stock he springs of,
The Noble House o'th' Martians: from whence came
That Ancus Martius, Numa's Daughter's Sonne:
Who after great Hostilius here was King,
Of the same House Publius and Quintus were,
That our best Water, brought by Conduits hither,
And Nobly nam'd, so twice being Censor,
Was his great Ancestor.

Seiun. One thus descended,
That hath beside well in his person wrought,
To be set high in place, we did commend
To your remembrances: but you haue found,
Skaling his present bearing with his past,
That hee's your fixed enemy; and reuoke
Your suddaine approbation.

Brut. Say you ne're had don't,
(Harpe on that still) but by our putting on
And presently, when you haue drawne your number,
Repaire toth' Capitoll.

All. We will so. almost all repent in their election.
Exeunt Plebeians.

Brut. Let them goe on:
This Mutinie were better put in hazard,
Then stay past doubt, for greater.
If, as his nature is, he fall in rage
With their resusall, both obserue and answer
The vantage of his anger.

Seiun. Toth' Capitoll, come:
We will be there before the streame o'th' People:
And this shall seeme, as partly 'tis, their owne,
Which we haue goaded on-ward. Exeunt.

Actus Tertius.

Cornets. Enter Coriolanus, Menenius, all the Gentry,
Cominius, Titus Lanius, and other Senators.

Corio. Tullius Aufidius then had made new head.

Lanius. He had, my Lord, and that it was which caus'd
Out swifter Composition.

Corio. So then the Volces stand but as at first,
Readie when time shall prompt them, to make roade
Vpon's againe.

Com. They are worne (Lord Consull) so,
That we shall hardly in our ages see
Their Banners waue againe

Corio. Saw you Aufidius?

Lanius. On safegard he came to me, and did curse
Against the Volces, for they had so vildly
Yielded the Towne: he is retyred to Antium.

Corio. Spoke he of me?

Lanius. He did, my Lord.

Corio. How? what?

Lanius. How often he had met you Sword to Sword:
That of all things vpon the Earth, he hated
Your person most. That he would pawne his fortunes
To hopelesse restitution, so he might Be call'd your Vanquisher.

Corio. At Antium liues he?

Lanius. At Antium.

Corio. I wish I had a cause to seeke him there,
To oppose his hatred fully. Welcome home.

Enter Scicinius and Bruntius.

Behold, these are the Tribunes of the People,
The Tongues o'th' Common Mouth. I do despise them:

For they doe pranke them in Authoritie,
Against all Noble sufferance.

Seiun. Passe no further.

Cor. Hah? what is that?

Brut. It will be dangerous to goe on-- No further.

Corio. What makes this change?

Mene. The matter?

Com. Hath he not pass'd the Noble, and the Common?

Brut. Cominius, no.

Corio. Haue I had Childrens Voyces?

Senat. Tribunes giue way, he shall toth' Market place.

Brut. The People are incens'd against him.

Seiun. Stop, or all will fall in broyle.

Corio. Are these your Heard?

Must these haue Voyces, that can yeeld them now,
And straight disclaim their tounge? what are your Offices?
You being their Mouthes, why rule you not their Teeth?
Haue you not set them on?

Mene. Be calme, be calme.

Corio. It is a purpos'd thing, and growes by Plot,
To curbe the will of the Nobilitie:
Suffer't, and liue with such as cannot rule,
Nor euer will be ruled.

Brut. Call't not a Plot:

The People cry you mocke them: and of late,
When Corne was giuen them gratis, you repm'd,
Scandal'd the Suppliants: for the People, call'd them
Time-placers, flatterers, foes to Noblesse.

Corio. Why this was knowne before.

Brut. Not to them all.

Corio. Haue you inform'd them sithence?

Brut. How? I informe them?

Com. You are like to doe such businesse.

Brut. Not vnlike each way to better yours.

Corio. Why then should I be Consull? by yond Clouds
Let me deferue so ill as you, and make me
Your fellow Tribune.

Seiun. You shew too much of that,
For which the People stirre. if you will passe
To where you are bound, you must enquire your way,
Which you are out of, with a gentler spirit,
Or neuer be so Noble as a Consull,
Nor yooke with him for Tribune.

Mene. Let's be calme.

Com. The People are abus'd: set on, this paltring Becomes not Rome. nor ha's Coriolanus
Deseru'd this so dishonor'd Rub, layd falsely
I'th' plaine Way of his Merit.

Corio. Tell me of Corne this was my speech,
And I will speak'e againe.

Mene. Not now, not now.

Senat. Not in this heat, Sir, now.

Corio. Now as I liue, I will.

My Nobler friends, I craue their pardons:
For the mutable ranke-sented Meynie,
Let them regard me, as I doe not flatter,
And therein behold themselves: I say againe,
In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our Senate
The Cockle of Rebellion, Insolence, Sedition,
Which we our selues haue plowed for, sow'd, & scatter'd,
By mingling them with vs, the honor'd Number,
Who lack not Vertue, no, nor Power, but that
Which they haue giuen to Beggars.

Mene. Well, no more.

Senat. No more words, we beseech you.

Corio. How? no more?

As for my Country, I haue stied my blood,
Not fearing outward force: So shall my Lungs
Coinde words till their decay, against those Meazels
Which we disdain should fester vs, yet fought
The very way to catch them

Bru. You speake a'th' people, as if you were a God.
To punish; Not a man, of their Infirmitie.

Sicm. 'Twere well weter the people know't

Mene. What, what? His Choller?

Cor. Choller? Were I as patient as the midnight sleep,
By Ioue, 'twould be my mi'de

Sicm. It is a sinde that shall remain a poison
Where it is not poyson any further.

Corio. Shall remaine?

Heere you this Triton of the Minototes? Marke you
His absolute Shall?

Com. 'Twas from the Camon.

Cor. Shall? O God! but most enwise Patricians why
You graue, but wreeklesse Senators, haue you thus Given Hida heere to choose an Officer,
That with his peremptory Shall, being but
The horne, and noise o'x' Monsters, wants not spirit
To say, hee'l stiffe your Current in a ditch,
And make your Channell his? If he haue power,
Then vale your Ignorance. If none, awake
Your dangerous Lemity If you are Learn'd,
Be not as common Fooles, if you are not,
Let them haue Cushions by you. You are Plebeians,
If they be Senators: and they are no lesse,
When both your voices blended, the great't taste
Most pallates theirs. They chooseth their Magistrate,
And such a one as he, who puts his Shall,
His popular Shall, against a grauer Bench
Then euer frown'd in Greece. By Ioue himselfe,
It makes the Consuls base; and my Soule asks
To know, when two Authorities are vp,
Neither Supream, How soone Confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of Both, and take
The one by th' other.

Com. Well, on to th' Market place.

Corio. Who euer gaue that Counsell, to giue forth
The Corne a'th' Store-house gratis, as 'twas vs'd
Sometime in Greece.

Mene. Well, well, no more of that.

Cor. Though there the people had more absolute power
I say they norisist disobedience sed, the ruin of the State.

Bru. Why shall the people giue
One that speakes thus, their voyce?

Corio. Ile giue my Reasons,
More worthier then their Voyces They know the Corne
Was not our recompence, resting well assur'd
They ne're did seruice for't, being prest to'th' Warre,
Euen when the Nauell of the State was touch'd,
They would not thred the Gates This kinde of Service
Did not deserue Corne gratis. Being i'th' Warre,
There Mutinies and Reuolts, wherein they shew'd
Most Valour spoke not for them. Th' Accusation
Which they haue often made against the Senate,
All cause vnborne, could neuer be the Nature
Of our so franke Donation Well, what then?
How shall this Bosome-multiplied, digest
The Senates Courtisie? Let deeds expresse
What's like to be their words, We did request it,
We are the greater pole, and in true feare
They gaue vs our demands. Thus we debase
The Nature of our Sears, and make the Rabble

Call our Cares, Feares; which will in time
Breake opo the Lockes a'th' Senate, and bring in
The Crowes to pecke the Eagles.

Mene. Goie enough.

Bru. Enough, with our measure.

Corio. No, take more.

What may be sworne by, both Diuine and Humane:
Seale what I end withall. This double worship,
Whereon part do's disdain with cause, the other
Insult without all reason where Gentry, True, wisedom
Cannot conclude, but by the yea and no
Of generall Ignorance, it must omit
Reall Necessities, and giue way the while
To vnstable Slightnesse. Purpose so barr'd, it followes,
Nothing is done to purpose? Therefore beseech you,
You that will be to selfe fearefull, then discreet,
That loue the Fundamentall part of State
More then you'doubt the change on't. That preferre
A Noble life, before a Long, and Wist,
To iumpe a Body with a dangerous Physicke,
That's sure of death without it: at once plucke out
The Multitudinous Tongue, let them not turke
The sweet which is their poyson. Your dishonor
Mangles true Iudgement, and becaues the Seare
Of that Integrity which should becom't:
Not hauing the power to do the good it w'dild
For th'ill which doth controul't.

Bru. Has said enough

Sicm. Ha's spoken like a Traitor, and shall answer
As Traitors do,

Corio. Thou wretch, despight orewhelme thee.
What should the people do with these baifd Tribunes?
On whom depending, their obedience failes
To'th' greater Bench, in a Rebellion
When what's not meet, but what must be, vs'is Law,
Then were they chosen in a better houte,
Let what is meet, be saide it must be meet,
And throw their power i'th' dust.

Bru. Manifest Treason.

Sicm. This a Consull? No.

Enter an Edile.

Bru. The Ediles hoe: Let him be apprehended:

Sicm. Go call the people, in whose name my Selfe
Attach thee as a Traitorous Innouator
A Foe to'th' publike Weale. Obey I charge thee,
And follow to thine answer.

Corio. Hence old Goat.

All. Wee'l Surety him.

Com. Ag'd sir, hard's off.

Corio. Hence rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy Gaiements.

Sicm. Helpe ye Citizens.

Enter a rabble of Plebeians with the Ediles.

Mene. On both sides more respect.

Sicm. Heere's hee, that would take from you all your power

Bru. Seize him Ediles.

All. Downe with him, downe with him.

2 Sen. Weapons, weapons, weapons.

They all bustle about Coriolanus.

Tribunes, Patricians, Citizens: what ho:

Sicm. Brutus, Coriolanus, Citizens.

All. Peace, peace, peace, stay, hold, peace.

Mene. What is about to be? I am out of Breath, Confusions neere, I cannot speake. You, Tribunes To'th' people: Coriolanus patience Speake good Sicm.

Sicm.

Scio. Heare me, People peace.

All. Let's here our Tribune: peace, speake, speake, speake.

Scio. You are at point to lose your Liberties; Martius would haue all from you; Martius, Whom late you haue nam'd for Confull.

Mene. Fie, fie, fie, this is the way to kindle, not to quench.

Sena. To vnbuild the Citie, and to lay all flat.

Scio. What is the Citie, but the People?

All. True, the People are the Citie.

Brut. By the consent of all, we were establish'd the Peoples Magistrates.

All. You so remaine.

Mene. And so are like to doe.

Com. That is the way to lay the Citie flat, To bring the Roofe to the Foundation, And burie all, which yet distinctly raunges In heapes, and piles of Ruine.

Scio. This deserues Death.

Brut. Or let vs stand to our Authoritie, Or let vs lose it: we doe here pronounce, Vpon the part o'th' People, in whose power We were elected theirs, Martius is worthy Of present Death.

Scio. Therefore lay hold of him: Beare him toth' Rock Tarpeian, and from thence Into destruction cast him.

Brut. Ediles seize him.

All Ple. Yeeld Martius, yeeld.

Mene. Heare me one word, 'beseech you Tribunes, heare me but a word.

Ediles. Peace, peace.

Mene. Be that you seeme, truly your Countries friend, And temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redresse.

Brut. Sir, those cold wayes, That seeme like prudent helpe, are very poysonous, Where the Disease is violent. Lay hands vpon him, And beare him to the Rock. Corio. draws his Sword.

Corio. No, he die here:

There's some among you haue beheld me fighting, Come trie vpon your selues, what you haue seene me.

Mene. Downe with that Sword, Tribunes withdraw a while.

Brut. Lay hands vpon him.

Mene. Helpe Martius, helpe: you that be noble, helpe him young and old.

All. Downe with him, downe with him. Exeunt.

In this Mutinie, the Tribunes, the Ediles, and the People are beat in.

Mene. Goe, get you to our Houses be gone, away, All will be naught else.

2. Sena. Get you gone.

Com. Stand fast, we haue as many friends as enemies.

Mene. Shall it be put to that?

Sena. The Gods forbid:

I prythee noble friend, home to thy House, Leau vs to cure this Cause.

Mene. For 'tis a Sore vpon vs, You cannot Tent your selves be gone, 'beseech you.

Corio. Come Sir, along with vs.

Mene. I would they were Barbarians, as they are, Though in Rome litter'd; nor Romans, as they are not, Though call'd i'th' Porch o'th' Capitoll: Be gone, put not your worthy Rage into your Tongue,

One time will owe another.

Corio. On faire ground, I could beat fortie of them.

Mene. I could my selfe take vp a Brace o'th' best of them, yea, the two Tribunes.

Com. But now 'tis oddes beyond Arithmetick, And Manhood is call'd Foolerie, when it stands Against a falling Fabrick. Will you hence, Before the Tagge returne? whose Rage doth rend Like interrupted Waters, and o're-bear What they are vs'd to beare.

Mene. Pray you be gone:

Ile trie whether my old Wit be in request With those that haue but little: this must be patcht With Cloth of any Colour.

Com. Nay, come away. Exeunt Coriolanus and Cominius.

Patric. This man ha's marr'd his fortune.

Mene. His nature is too noble for the World: He would not flatter Nephtine for his Trident, Or Ioue, for's power to Thunder: his Heart's his Mouth: What his Brest forges, that his Tongue must vent, And being angry, does forget that euer He heard the Name of Death. A Noise within. Here's goodly worke.

Patric. I would they were a bed.

Mene. I would they were in Tyber.

What if vengeance, could he not speake 'em false?

Enter Brutus and Sicinius with the rabble against.

Sicinius. Where is this Viper, That would depopulate the city, & be every man himself

Mene. You worthy Tribunes.

Sicinius. He shall be throwne downe the Tarpeian rock With rigorous hands: he hath resisted Law, And therefore Law shall scorne him further Triall Then the severity of the publike Power, Which he so sets at naught.

1. Cit. He shall well know the Noble Tribunes are The peoples mouths, and we their hands.

All. He shall sure ont.

Mene. Sir, sir,

Sicinius. Peace.

Me. Do not cry hucke, where you shold but hunt With modest warrant.

Sicinius. Sir, how com'st that you haue holpe To make this rescue?

Mene. Heere me speake? As I do know The Confull's worthinesse, so can I name his Faults.

Sicinius. Confull? what Confull?

Mene. The Confull Coriolanus.

Brut. He Confull.

All. No, no, no, no, no.

Mene. If by the Tribunes leaue, And yours good people, I may be heard, I would craue a word or two, The which shall turne you to no further harme, Then so much losse of time.

Sic. Speake breefely then, For we are peremptory to dispatch This Viperous Traitor: to ciect him hence Were but one danger, and to keepe him heere Our certaine death: therefore it is decreed, He dyes to night.

Mene. Now the good Gods forbid, That our renowned Rome, whose gratitude Towards her deserued Children, is enroll'd In Ioues owne Booke, like an vnnatural Dam Should now eate vp her owne.

Sicinius.

Sicin He's a Disease that must be cut away

Mene. Oh he's a Limbe, that ha's but a Disease Mortall, to cut it off: to cure it, easie.

What ha's he done to Rome, that's worthy death? Killing our Enemies, the blood he hath lost (Which I dare vouch, is more then that he hath By many an Ounce) he dropp'd it for his Country: And what is left, to loose it by his Countrey, Were to vs all that doo't, and suffer it A brand to th'end a th World.

Sicin This is cleane hamme.

Brut. Meerely awry

When he did loue his Country, it honour'd him.

Mene. The seruice of the foote Being once gangren'd, is not then respected For what before it was.

Brut. Wee'l heare no more: Pursue him to his house, and plucke him thence, Least his infection being of catching nature, Spred further.

Mene. One word more, one word: This Tiger-footed-rage, when it shall find The harme of vnscan'd swiftnesse, will (too late) Tye Leaden pounds too's heeles. Proceed by Proceffe, Least parties (as he is belou'd) breake out, And sacke great Rome with Romanes

Brut If it were so?

Sicin. What do ye talke?

Haue we not had a taste of his Obedience? Our Ediles smor: our selues resisted. come.

Mene. Consider this. He ha's bin bred i th'Warres Since a could draw a Sword, and is ill-school'd In bouled Language. Meale and Bran together He throwes without distinction. Giue me leaue, Ile go to him, and vndertake to bring him in peace, Where he shall answer by a lawfull Forme (In peace) to his vtmost perill.

Sen. Noble Tribunes, It is the humane way the other course Will proue to bloody and the end of it, Vnknewne to the Beginning

Sic Noble Menenius, be you then as the peoples officer. Masters, lay downe your Weapons.

Brut Go not home.

Sic. Meer on the Market place: wee'l attend you there: Where if you bring not Martius, wee'l proceede In our fust way

Mene. Ile bring him to you.

Let me desire your company: he must come, Or what is worst will follow.

Sen. Pray you let's to him Exeunt Omnes

Enter Coriolanus with Nobles.

Corio Let them pull all about mine eares, present me Death on the Wheele, or at wilde Horses heeles, Or pile ten hilles on the Tarpeian Rocke, That the precipitation might downe stretch Below the beame of sight, yet will I still Be thus to them.

Enter Volumnia.

Noble You do the Nobler.

Corio I muse my Mother

Do's not approue me further, who was wont To call them Wollen Vassalges, things created To buy and sell with Groats, to shew bare heads In Congregations, to yawne, be still, and wonder, When one but of my ordinance stood vp

To speake of Peace, or Warre. I talke of you, Why did you wish me milder? Would you haue me False to my Nature? Rather say, I play The man I am.

Volum. Oh sir, sir, sir,

I would haue had you put your power well on Before you had worne it out

Corio. Let go.

Vol You might haue beene enough the man you are, With struing lesse to be so. Lesser had bin The things of your dispositions, if You had not shew'd them how ye were dispos'd Ere they lack'd power to crosse you.

Corio. Let them hang,

Volum. I, and burne too.

Enter Menenius with the Senators.

Mene. Come, come, you haue bin too rough, something too rough: you must reurne, and mend it.

Sen There's no remedy, Vnlesse by not so doing, our good Citie Cleaue in the midd'l, and perish.

Volum Pray be counsaill'd; I haue a heart as little apt as yours, But yet a braine, that leades my vs of Anger To better vantage.

Mene Well said, Noble woman: Before he should thus stoope to th'heart, but that The violent fit a th'time craues it as Physicke For the whole State; I would put mine Armour on, Which I can scarcely beare.

Corio. What must I do?

Mene. Returne to th'Tribunes.

Corio Well, what then? what then?

Mene. Repent, what you haue spoke.

Corio For them, I cannot do it to the Gods, Must I then doo't to them?

Volum. You are too absolute, Though therein you can neuer be too Noble, But when extremities speake. I haue heard you say, Honor and Policy, like vnseuer'd Friends, I th'Warre do grow together. Grant that, and tell me In Peace, what each of them by th'other loose, That they combine not there?

Corio Tush, tush.

Mene A good demand.

Volum. If it be Honor in your Wattes, to seeme The same you are not, which for your best ends You adopt your policy. How is it lesse or worse That it shall hold Companionship in Peace With Honour, as in Warre, since that to both It stands in like request.

Corio Why force you this?

Volum Because, that

Now it lyes you on to speake to th'people: Not by your owne instruction, nor by th'matter Which your heart prompts you, but with such words That are but roared in your Tongue, Though but Bastards, and Syllables Of no allowance, to your bosomes truth. Now, this no more dishonors you at all. Then to take in a Towne with gentle words, Which else would put you to your fortune, and The hazard of much blood I would dissemble with my Nature, where My Fortunes and my Friends at stake, requir'd I should do so in Honor. I am in this

bb 3

Your

Your Wife, your Sonne These Senators, the Nobles,
And you, will rather shew our generall Lowts,
How you can frowne, then spend a fawne vpon 'em,
For the inheritance of their loues, and safegard
Of what that want might ruine.

Menen. Noble Lady,
Come goe with vs, speake faire: you may saue so,
Not what is dangerous present, but the losse
Of what is past.

Volum. I pry thee now, my Sonne,
Goe to them, with this Bonnet in thy hand,
And thus farre baning stretch it (here be with 'hem)
Thy Knee bussing the Stones: for in such businesse
Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned then the eares, waung thy head,
Which often thus correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble as the ripest Mulberry,
That will not hold the handling: or say to them,
Thou art their Souldier, and being bred in broyles,
Hast not the soft way, which thou do'st confesse
Were fit for thee to vse, as they to clayme,
In asking their good loues, but thou wilt frame
Thy selfe (forsooth) hereafter theirs so farre,
As thou hast power and person.

Menen. This but done,
Euen as she speakes, why their hearts were yours:
For they haue Pardons, being ask'd, as free,
As words to little purpose.

Volum. Prythee now,
Goe, and be rul'd. although I know thou hadst rather Follow thine Enemie in a fierie Gulfe,
Then flatter him in a Bower. Enter Cominius.
Here is Cominius.

Com. I haue beene 'th' Market place and Sir 'tis fit
You make strong partie, or defend your selfe
By calmenesse, or by absence. all's in anger.

Menen. Onely faire speech.

Com. I thinke 'twill serue, if he can thereto frame his spirit.

Volum. He must, and will:
Prythee now say you will, and goe about it.
Corio. Must I goe shew them my vnbarb'd Sconce?
Must I with my base Tongue giue to my Noble Heart
A Lye, that it must beare well? I will doo't.
Yet were there but this single Plot, to loose
This Mould of Marius, they to dust should grinde it,
And throwe 't agamst the Winde Toth' Market place:
You haue put me now to such a part, which neuer
I shall discharge toth' Life.

Com. Come, come, wee'le prompt you.

Volum. I prythee now sweet Son, as thou hast said
My praises made thee first a Souldier, so
To haue my praise for this, performe a part
Thou hast not done before.

Corio. Well, I must doo't:
Away my disposition, and possesse me
Some Harlots spirit. My throat of Warre be turn'd,
Which quier'd with my Drumme into a Pipe,
Small as an Eunuch, or the Virgin voyce
That Babies lull a-sleepe: The smiles of Knaues
Tent in my cheekes, and Schoole-boyes Teares take vp
The Glasses of my sight: A Beggars Tongue
Make motion through my Lips, and my Arm'd kneec
Who bow'd but in my Stirrop, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an Almes. I will not doo't,
Least I surcease to honour mine owne truth,

And by my Bodies action, teach my Minde
A most inherent Balenesse.

Volum. At thy choice then:

To begge of thee, it is my more dishonor,
Then thou of them. Come all to ruine, let Thy Mother rather feele thy Pride, then feare
Thy dangerous Stoutnesse. for I mocke at death
With as bigge heart as thou. Do as thou list,
Thy Valiantnesse was mine, thou suck'st it from me:
But owe thy Pride thy selfe.

Corio. Pray be content:

Mother, I am going to the Market place:
Chide me no more. He Mountebanke their Loues,
Cogge their Hearts from them, and come home belou'd
Of all the Trades in Rome. Looke, I am going:
Commend me to my Wife, He returne Consull
Or neuer trust to what my Tongue can do
I' th way of Flattery further.

Volum. Do your will,

Exit Volumentia.

Com. Away, the Tribunes do attend you. arm your self
To answer mildly: for they are prepar'd
With Accusations, as I heare more strong
Then are vpon you yet.

Corio. The word is, Mildely. Pray you let vs go,
Let them accuse me by invention. I
Will answer in mine Honor.

Menen. I, but mildly.

Corio. Well mildly be it then, Mildely. Exiunt

Enter Sicinius and Brutus.

Brn. In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannicall power. If he euade vs there,
Inforce him, with his enuy to the people,
And that the Spoile got on the Antians
Was ne're distributed What, will he come?

Enter an Edile.

Edile. Hee's comming.

Brn. How accompanied?

Edile. With old Menenius, and those Senators
That alwayes fauour'd him.

Sicn. Haue you a Catalogue
Of all the Voices that we haue procur'd, set downe by 'th
(Pole?)

Edile. I haue. 'tis ready.

Sicn. Haue you collected them by Tribes?

Edile. I haue.

Sicn. Assemble presently the people hither:
And when they heare me say, it shall be so,
I' th' right and strength a' th' Commons: be it either
For death, for fine, or Banishment, then let them
If I say Fine, cry Fine; if Death, cry Death,
Insisting on the olde prerogative
And power i' th' Truth a' th' Cause.

Edile. I shall informe them.

Brn. And when such time they haue begun to cry,
Let them not cease, but with a dinne confus'd
Inforce the present Execution
Of what we chance to Sentence.

Edi. Very well.

Sicn. Make them be strong, and ready for this hint
When we shall hap to giu'them.

Brn. Go about it,

Put him to Choller straite, he hath bene vs'd
Euer to conquer, and to haue his worth
Of contradiction. Being once chaf't, he cannot Be reind' againe to Temperance, then he speaks

What's

What's in his heart, and that is there which looks
With vs to breake his necke.

Enter Coriolanus, with his wife, and Commura, with others.

Sicin Well, heere he comes;

Mene Calmely, I do beseech you.

Corio I, as doth Hostler, that fourth poorest peere
Will beare the Knaue by th Volume:
Th'honor'd Goddes

Keepe Rome in safety, and the Chaires of Iustice
Supplied with worthy men; plant loue amongs
Through our large Temples with shewes of peace
And not our streets with Warre

Sen Amen, Amen

Mene A Noble wish.

Enter the Edile with the Plebeians.

Sicin Draw neere ye people

Edile Lift to your Tribunes. Audience:
Peace I say.

Corio First heere me speake.

Both Tri Well, say - Peace hoe

Corio Shall I be charg'd no further then this present?
Must all determine heere?

Sicin I do demand,

If you submit you to the peoples voices,
Allow their Officers, and are content
To suffer lawfull Censure for such faults
As shall be prou'd vpon you

Corio I am Content.

Mene Lo Citizens, he sayes he is Content.
The warlike Seruice he ha's done, consider: Thinke
Vpon the wounds his body beares, which shew
Like Graues i'th holy Church-yard

Corio Scratches with Briars, scarres to moue
Laughter onely.

Mene Consider further:

That when he speakes not like a Citizen,
You finde him like a Soldier - do not take
His rougher Actions for malicious sounds:
But as I say, such as become a Soldier.
Rather then enuy you.

Com Well, well, no more.

Corio What is the matter,
That being past for Confull with full voyce:
I am so dishonour'd, that the very houre
You take it off againe.

Sicin Answer to vs.

Corio Say then - 'tis true, I ought so

Sicin We charge you, that you haue continu'd to take
From Rome all season'd Office, and to winde
Your selfe into a power tyrannicall,
For which you are a Traitor to the people.

Corio How? Traytor?

Mene Nay temperately: your promise.

Corio The fires i'th lowest hell Fould in the people:
Call me their Traitor, thou inuious Tribune.
Within thine eyes sate twenty thousand deaths
In thy hands clorcht: as many Millions in Thy lying tongue, both numbers. I would say
Thou lyest vnto thee, with a voice as free,
As I do pray the Gods.

Sicin Marke you this people?

All To th'Rocke, to th'Rocke with him.

Sicin Peace

We neede not put new matter to his charge:
What you haue seene him do, and heard him speake:

Beating your Officers, cutting your selues,
Opposing Lawes with stroakes, and heere defying
Those whose great power must try him.
Euen this so criminall, and in such capitall kinde
Deserues th'extreamest death.

Brut But since he hath seru'd well for Rome,

Corio What do you prate of Seruice.

Brut I talke of that, that know it.

Corio You?

Mene Is this the promise that you made your mother.

Com Know, I pray you.

Corio Ile know no further:

Let them pronounce the sleepe Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, Fleasing, pent to linger
But with a graine a day, I would not buy
Their mercie, at the price of one faire word,
Nor checke my Courage for what they can giue,
To haue't with saying, Good morrow.

Sicin For that he ha's

(As much as in him lies) from time to time
Enu'd against the people; seeking meanes
To plucke away their power as now at last,
Giuen Hostile strokes, and that not in the presence
Of dreaded Iustice, but on the Ministers
That doth distribute it. In the name a'th'people,
Add in the power of vs the Tribunes, wee
(Eu'n from this instant) banish him our Citie
In perill of precipitation
From off the Rocke Tarpeian, neuer more
To enter our Rome gates. I'th'Peoples name,
I say it shall bee so

All It shall be so, it shall be so: let him away -
Hee's banish'd, and it shall be so.

Com Heere me my Masters, and my common friends.
Sicin He's sentenc'd. No more hearing.

Com Let me speake -

I haue bene Confull, and can shew from Rome
Her Enemies markes vpon me. I do loue
My Countries good, with a respect more tender,
More holy, and profound, then mine owne life,
My deere Wives estimate, her wombes encrease,
And treasure of my Loynes. then if I would Speake that

Sicin We know your drift. Speake what?

Brut There's no more to be said, but he is banish'd
As Enemy to the people, and his Countrey.
It shall bee so.

All It shall be so, it shall be so.

Corio You common cry of Curs, whose breath I hate,
As reeke a'th'rotten Fennes: whose Loues I prize,
As the dead Carcasses of vnburied men,
That do corrupt my Ayre: I banish you,
And heere remaine with your vncertaintie.
Let euery feeble Rumor shake your hearts:
Your Enemies, with nodding of their Plumes
Fan you into dispaire. Haue the power still
To banish your Defenders, till at length
Your ignorance (which findes not till it feelles,
Making but reueration of your selues,
Still your owne Foes) deliuer you
As most abated Captiues, to some Nation
That wonne you without blowes, despising
For you the City. Thus I turne my backe;
There is a world elsewhere.

Exeunt Coriolanus, Cominius, with Comuuls.

They all shout, and throw up their Caps.

Edile

Edile. The peoples Enemy is gone, is gone.

All. Our enemy is banish'd, he is gone: Hoo, oo.

Sicin. Go see him out at Gates, and follow him
As he hath follow'd you, with all despight
Giue him deseru'd veneration. Let a guard
Attend vs through the City.

All. Come, come, lets see him out at gates, come:
The Gods preferue our Noble Tribunes, come. Exeunt.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Coriolanus, Volumentia, Virgilia, Menenius, Cominius, with the yong Nobility of Rome.

Corio Come leaue your teares a briefe farwel, the best
With many heads butts me away. Nay Mother,
Where is your ancient Courage? You were vs'd
To say, Extremities was the trier of spirits,
That common chances. Common men could beare,
That when the Sea was calme, all Boats alike
Shew'd Mastership in floating. Fortunes blowes,
When most strooke home, being gentle wounded, craues
A Noble cunning. You were vs'd to load me
With Precepts that would make inuincible
The heart that could not them.

Virg. Oh heauens! O heauens!

Corio Nay, I prythee woman.

Vol Now the Red Pestilence strike al Trades in Rome,
And Occupations perish.

Corio. What, what, what:
I shall be lou'd when I am lack'd. Nay Mother,
Resume that Spirit, when you were wont to say,
If you had beene the Wife of Hercules,
Six of his Labours you'd haue done, and sau'd
Your Husband so much sweet. Cominius,
Droope not, Adieu. Farewell my Wife, my Mother,
He do well yet. Thou old and true Menenius,
Thy teares are saltier then a younger mans,
And venomous to thine eyes. My (sometime) Generall,
I haue seene the Sterne, and thou hast oft beheld
Heart-hardning spectacles. Tell these sad women,
'Tis fond to waile ineuitable strokes,
As 'tis to laugh at 'em. My Mother, you wot well
My hazards still haue beene your solace, and Beleeu't not lightly, though I go alone
Like to a lonely Dragoon, that his Fenne
Makes fear'd, and talk'd of more then scene: your Sonne
Will or exceed the Common, or be caught
With cautelous baits and practice.

Volunt. My first Sonne,
Whether wilt thou go? Take good Cominius
With thee awhile. Determine on some course
More then a wilde exposure, to each chance
That start's i'th way before thee.

Corio. O the Gods!

Com. He follow thee a Moneth, deuise with thee
Where thou shalt rest, that thou may'st heare of vs,
And we of thee. So if the time thrust forth
A cause for thy Repeale, we shall not fend
O re the vast world, to seeke a single man,
And loose advantage, which doth euer coole
It's absence of the needier.

Corio Fare ye well:

Thou hast yeares vpon thee, and thou art too full

Of the warres suffers, to go roue with one
That's yet vnbruis'd: bring me but out at gate,
Come my sweet wife, my dearest Mother, and
My Friends of Noble touch: when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. I pray you come:
While I remaine ahoue the ground, you shall Heare from me still, and neuer of me ought
But what is like me formerly.

Menen. That's worthily

As any care can heare. Come, let's not waite,
If I could shake off but one seuen yeeres
From these old armes and legges, by the good Gods
I'd with thee, euery foot

Corio Giue me thy hand, come

Exeunt

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus, with the Edile.

Sicin. Bid them all home, he's gone. & wee I no further,
The Nobility are vexed, whom we see haue sided
In his behalfe.

Brut. Now we haue shewne our power,
Let vs seeme humbler after it is done,
Then when it was a dooing.

Sicin. Bid them home: say their great enemy is gone,
And they, stand in their ancient strength.

Brut. Dismiss them home. Here comes his Mother.

Enter Volumentia, Virgilia, and Menenius

Sicin. Let's not meet her.

Brut. Why?

Sicin. They say she's mad.

Brut. They haue tane note of vs. keepe on your way
Volunt. Oh y'are well met:

Th'hoorded plague a'th Gods requit your loue.

Menen. Peace, peace, be not so loud.

Volunt. If that I could for weeping, you should heare,
Nay, and you shall heare some. Will you be gone?

Virg. You shall stay too. I would I had the power
To say so to my Husband.

Sicin. Are you mankinde?

Volunt. I foole, is that a shame. Note but this Foole,
Was not a man my Father? Had'st thou Foxship
To banish him that strooke more blowes for Rome
Then thou hast spoken words.

Sicin. Oh blessed Heuens!

Volunt. Moe Noble blowes, then euer y wife words.
And for Romes good. He tell thee what: yet goe.
Nay but thou shalt stay too: I would my Sonne
Were in Arabia, and thy Tribe before him,
His good Sword in his hand.

Sicin. What then?

Virg. What then? Hee'd make an end of thy posterity

Volunt. Bastards, and all.

Good man, the Wounds that he does beare for Rome!

Menen. Come, come, peace.

Sicin. I would he had continued to his Country
As he began, and not vnknit himselfe
The Noble knot he made.

Brut. I would he had.

Volunt. I would he had? 'Twas you incens'd the rable.
Cats, that can iudge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those Mysteries which heauen
Will not haue earth to know.

Brut. Pray let's go.

Volunt. Now pray sir get you gone.
You haue done a braue deede. Ere you go, heare this:
As farre as doth the Capitoll exceede
The meanest house in Rome; so farre my Sonne

This

This Ladies Husband heere; this (do you see)
Whom you haue banish'd, does exceed you all.

Bru Well, well, wee'l leave you.

Sicin. Why stay we to be baited

With one that wants her Wits, Exit Tribunes.

Volum. Take my Prayers with you
I would the Gods had nothing else to do,
But to confirme my Curses. Could I meete 'em
But once a day, it would vnlogge my heart
Of what lyes heavy 'too't.

Mene. You haue told them home,
And by my troth you haue cause. you'l Sup with me.

Volum. Angers my Meate. I suppe vpon my selfe,
And so shall sterue with Feeding. Come, let's go,
Leaue this faint-puling, and lament as I do,

In Anger, Imo-like: Come, come, come. Exeunt

Mene. Fie, fie, fie. Exit.

Enter a Roman, and a Volce.

Rom. I know you well sir, and you know mee your name I thinke is Adrian.

Volce. It is so sir, truly I haue forgot you.

Rom. I am a Roman, and my Seruices are as you are, against 'em. Know you me yet.

Volce. Nicanor: no.

Rom. The same sir.

Volce. You had more Beard when I last saw you, but your Fauour is well appear'd by your Tongue. What's the Newes in Rome: I haue a Note from the Volcean state to finde you out there. You haue well saued mee a dayes iourney.

Rom. There hath beene in Rome strange Insurrections:
The people, against the Senatours, Patricians, and Nobles.

Vol. Haucan: is it ended then? Our State thinks not so, they are in a most warlike preparation, & hope to com
vpon them, in the heate of their diuision

Rom. The maine blaze of it is past, but a small thing would make it flame againe. For the Nobles receyue so to heart, the Banishment of that worthy Coriolanus, that they are in a ripe aptnesse, to take al power from the people, and to plucke from them their Tribunes for euer.
This lyes glowing I can tell you, and is almost mature for the violent breaking out.

Vol. Coriolanus Banish'd?

Rom. Banish'd sir.

Vol. You will be welcome with this intelligence Nicanor.

Rom. The day setues well for them now. I haue heard it saide, the fittest time to corrupt a mans Wife, is when shee's false out with her Husband. Your Noble Tullus Aufidius well appeare well in these Warres, his great Opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his coun-trei.

Volce. He cannot choose: I am most fortunate, thus accidentally to encounter you. You haue ended my Businesse, and I will merrily accompany you home

Rom. I shall betweene this and Supper, tell you most strange things from Rome: all tending to the good of their Aduersaries, Haue you an Army ready say you?

Vol. A most Royall one The Centurions, and their charges distinctly billeted already in th'entertainment,
and to be on foot at an houres warning.

Rom. I am ioyfull to heare of their readinesse, and am the man I thinke, that shall set them in present Action. So sir, heartily well met, and most glad of your Company.

Volce. You take my part from mee sir, I haue the most cause to be glad of yours.

Rom. Well, let vs go together. Exeunt

Enter Coriolanus in meane Apparell, Dis-guis'd, and muffled.

Corio. A goodly City is this Antium. Citty,
'Tis I that made thy Widowes Many an heyre
Of these faire Edifices to my Warres
Haue I heard groane, and drop Then know me not,
Least that thy Wiues with Spits, and Boyes with Stones
In puny Battell slay me. Saue you sir.

Enter a Citizen.

Cit. And you.

Corio. Direct me, if it be your will, where great Auf-idius lies: Is he in Antium?

Cit. He is, and Feasts the Nobles of the State, at his house this night.

Corio. Which is his house, beseech you?

Cit. This heere before you.

Corio. Thanke you sir, farewell. Exit Citizen

Oh World, thy slippery turner! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bolomes seemes to weare one Heart,
Whose Houres, whose Bed, whose Meale and Exercise
Are still together: who Twin (as 'twere) in Loue,
Vnsparable, shall within this houre,
On a dissension of a Doit, breake out
To bitterest Enmity: So fellest Foes,
Whose Passions, and whose Plots haue broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Sometime not worth an Egge, shall grow deere friends
And inter-ioyne their yssues. So with me,
My Birth-place haue I, and my loues vpon
This Enemie Towne: Ile enter, if he slay me
He does saue Iustice: if he giue me way,
Ile do his Country Seruice Exit.

Musicke plays. Enter a Seruingman.

1 Ser. Wine, Wine, Wine. What seruice is heere? I thinke our Fellowes are asleepe

Enter another Seruingman.

2 Ser. Where's Corio? my Masters for him: Corio. Exit
Enter Coriolanus.

Corio. A goodly House:

The Feast smells well: but I appeare not like a Guest.

Enter the first Seruingman.

1 Ser. What would you haue Friend? whence are you?
Here's no place for you: Pray go to the doore? Exit

Corio. I haue deseru'd no better entertainment, in being Coriolanus. Enter second Seruant.

2 Ser. Whence are you sir? Ha's the Porter his eyes in his head, that he giues entrance to such Companions?
Pray get you out.

Corio. Away.

2 Ser. Away? Get you away.

Corio. Now th'art troublefome.

2 Ser. Are you so braue. Ile haue you talkt with anon
Enter 3 Seruingman, the 1 meets him.

3 What Fellowes this?

1 A strange one as euer I look'd on: I cannot get him out o'th'house Prythee call my Master to him.

3 What haue you to do here fellow? Pray you auoid the house.

Corio. Let me but stand, I will not hurt your Harth.

3 What are you?

Corio. A Gentleman

3 A maru'llous poore one.

Corio. True, so I am.

3 Pray you poore Gentleman, take vp some other station.

The Tragedie of Coriolanus.

tion: Heere's no place for you, pray you abide; Come.
Corio. Follow your Function, go, and batter on colde
Pushes him away from him.
 bits.

3 What you will not? Prythee tell my Maister: what a strange Guest he ha's heere. Exit second Servingman.
 2 And I shall.

3 Where dwel'st thou?
Corio. Under the Canopy.
 3 Under the Canopy?

Corio. I.
 3 Where's that?
Corio. I'th City of Kites and Crowses.
 3 I'th City of Kites and Crowses? What an Assie it is, then thou dwel'st with Dawes too?

Corio. No, I serue not thy Master
 3 How sir? Do you meddle with my Master?
Corio. I, tis an lionester seruice, then to meddle with thy Mistress Thou prais't, and prais't, serue with thy tren-
Beats him away
 cher. Hence.

Enter Aufidius with the Servingman.
Auf. Where is this Fellow?
 2 Here sir, I'de have beaten him like a dogge, but for disturbing the Lords within.

Auf. Whence com'st thou? What wold'st? Thy name?
 Why speak'st not? Speake man: What's thy name?
Corio. If Tullius not yet thou know'st me, and seeing me, dost not thinke me for the man I am, necessitie commands me name my selfe.

Auf. What is thy name?
Corio. A name vnusuall to the Volscians eares,
 And harsh in sound to thine

Auf. Say, what's thy name?
 Thou hast a Grim apparance, and thy Face
 Beares a Command in't. Though thy Tackles torne, Thou shew'st a Noble Vessell. What's thy name?

Corio. Prepare thy brow to frowne know'st thou me yet?
Auf. I know thee not? Thy Name?

Corio. My name is Caius Martius, who hath done
 To thee particularly, and to all the Volces
 Great hurt and Mischiefe thereto witnesse may
 My Surname Coriolanus The painfull Seruice,
 The extreme Dangers, and the droppes of Blood
 Shed for my thanklesse Country, are requir'd:

And witnesse of the Malice and Displeasure
 Which thou should'st beare me, only that name remains.
 The Cruelty and Enuy of the people,
 Permitted by our dastard Noble, who
 Haue all forsooke me, hath deuour'd the rest:

And suffer'd me by th' voyce of Slaues to be Hoop'd out of Rome Now this extremity,
 Hath brought me to thy Harth, not out of Hope (Mistake me not) to saue my life. for if I had fear'd death, of all the Men in th' World
 I would haue voided thee. But in meere spight
 To be full quit of those my Banishers,
 Stand I before thee heere. Then if thou hast
 A heart of wraake in thee, that wilt reuenge
 Thine owne particular wrongs, and stop those maimes
 Of shame seene through thy Country, speed thee straight
 And make my misery serue thy turne: So vse it,
 That my reuengefull Seruices may proue
 As Benefits to thee. For I will fight
 Against my Cankred Countrey, with the Spleene
 Of all the vnder Friends. But if so be,
 Thou dar'st not this, and that to proue more Fortunes

Th' art tyr'd, then in a word, I also am
 Longer to liue most wearie. and present
 My throat to thee, and to thy Ancient Malice:
 Which not to cut, would shew thee but a Foole,
 Since I haue euer followed thee with hate,
 Drawne Tunnes of Blood out of thy Countries breast,
 And cannot liue but to thy shame, vnlesse
 It be to do thee seruice.

Auf. Oh Martius, Martius;
 Each word thou hast spoke, hath weeded from my heart
 A roote of Ancient Enuy. If Iupiter
 Should from yond clowd speake diuine things,
 And say 'tis true, I'de not beleeue them more
 Then thee all-Noble Martius. Let me twine
 Mine armes about that body, where against
 My grained Ash an hundred times hath broke,
 And scarr'd the Moone with splinters: heere I deap
 The Anule of my Sword, and do contest
 As hotly, and as Nobly with thy Loue,
 As euer in Ambitious strength, I did
 Contend against thy Valour. Know thou first,
 I lou'd the Maid I married. neuer man
 Sigh'd truer breath But that I see thee heere
 Thou Noble thing, more dances my rapt heart,
 Then when I first my wedded Mistress saw
 Bestride my Threshold. Why, thou Mars I tell thee,
 We haue a Power on foote - and I had purpose
 Once more to hew thy Target from thy Brawne,
 Or loose mine Arme for't Thou hast heate mee out
 Twelue seuerall times, and I haue nightly since
 Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thy selfe and me:
 We haue beene downe together in my sarme,
 Vnbuckling Helmes, sitting each others Throat,
 And wak'd halfe dead with nothing Wardy Martius,
 Had we no other quarrell else to Rome, but that Thou art thence Banish'd, we would muster all
 From twelue, to seuentie and powring Warre
 Into the bowels of vngovern'd Rome,
 Like a bold Flood o're Leake Oh come, go in,
 And take our Firenly Senators by th' hands
 Who now are heere, taking their leaues of mee,
 Who am prepar'd against your Territories,
 Though not for Rome it selfe

Corio. You blesse me Gods.
Auf. Therefore most absolute Sir, if thou wilt haue
 The leading of thine owne Reuenges, take
 Th' one halfe of my Commission, and let downe
 As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
 Thy Countries strength and weaknesse, thine own waies
 Whether to knocke against the Gates of Rome,
 Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
 To fright them, ere destroy. But come in,
 Let me commend thee first, to those that shall Say yea to thy desires. A thousand welcomes,
 And more a Friend, then ere an Enemie.
 Yet Martius that was much Your hand: most welcome.

Exit
Enter two of the Servingmen.

1 Heere's a strange alteration?
 2 By my hand, I had thought to haue stroken him with a Cudgell, and yet my minde gaue me, his cloathes made a false report of him.

1 What an Arme he has, he turn'd me about with his finger and his thumbe, as one would set vp a Top.
 2 Nay, I knew by his face that there was some-thing in him. He had sir, a kinde of face methought, I cannot tell

tell how to tearme it.

1 He had so, looking as it were, would I were hang'd but I thought there was more in him, then I could think.

2 So did I, Ile be sworne: He is simply the rarest man i'th' world.

1 I thinke he is. but a greater soldier then he, You wot one.

2 Who my Master?

1 Nay, it's no matter for that

2 Worth fix on him.

1 Nay not so neither: but I take him to be the greater Souldiour.

2 Faith looke you, one cannot tell how to say that. for the Defence of a Towne, our Generall is excellent.

1 I, and for an affablt too.

Enter the third Servingman.

3 Oh Slaues, I can tell you Newes, News you Rascals Both. What, what, what? Let's partake.

3 I would not be a Roman of all Nations; I had as lue be a condemn'd man.

Both Wherefore? Wherefore?

3 Why here's he that was wont to thwacke our Generall, Caius Martius.

1 Why do you say, thwacke our Generall?

3 I do not say thwacke our Generall, but he was alwayes good enough for him

2 Come we are fellowes and friends: he was euer too hard for him, I haue heard him say so himselfe.

1 He was too hard for him directly, to say the Troth on't before Corioles, he scotch't him, and notch't him like a Carbinado.

2 And hee had bin Cannibally giuen, hee might haue boyld and eaten him too.

1 But more of thy Newes

3 Why he is so made on heere within, as if hee were Son and Heire to Mars, set at vpper end o'th' Table: No question askt him by any of the Senators, but they stand bald before him Our Generall himselfe makes a Mistis of him, Sanctifies himselfe with's hand, and turnes vp the white o'th' eye to his Discourse But the bottome of the Newes is, our Generall is cut i'th' middle, & but one halfe of what he was yesterdav. For the other ha's halfe, by the intreaty and graunt of the whole Table. Hee'l go he sayes, and sole the Porter of Rome Gates by th' eares. He will mowe all downe before him, and leaue his passage pould.

2 And he sas like to do't, as any man I can imagine

3 Doo't? he will doo't: for looke you sir, he has as many Friends as Enemies: which Friends sir as it were, durst not (looke you sir) shew themselues (as we terme it) his Friends, whilst he's in Dire<sup>ct</sup>itude.

1 Dire<sup>ct</sup>itude? What's that?

3 But when they shall see sir, his Crest vp againe, and the man in blood, they will out of their Burroughes (like Comes after Raine) and reuell all with him.

1 But when goes this forward?

2 To morrow to day, presently, you shall haue the Drum strooke vp this afternoone 'Tis as it were a parcel of their Feast, and to be executed ere they wipe their lips.

2 Why then wee shall haue a stirring World againe This peace is nothing, but to rust Iron, encrease Taylors, and breed Ballad-makers.

1 Let me haue Warre say I, it exceeds peace as farre as day do's night: It's sprightly walking, audible, and full of Vent. Peace, is ~~very~~ Apoplexy, Lechargie, mull'd, deafe, sleepe, insensible, a getter of more bastard Children, then warres a destroyer of men.

2 'Tis so, and as warres in some sort may be saide to be a Raulisher, so it cannot be denied, but peace is a great maker of Cuckolds.

1 I, and it makes men hate one another

3 Reason, because they then lesse neede one another - The Warres for my money. I hope to see Romanes as cheape as Volcians. They are rising, they are rising.

Both. In, in, in, in

Exeunt

Enter the two Tribunes, Sicinius, and Brutus.

Sicm. We heare not of him, neither need we fear him, His remedies are tame, the present peace, And quietnesse of the people, which before Were in wilde hurry. Heere do we make his Friends Blush, that the world goes well: who rather had, Though they themselues did suffer by't, behold Dissention numbers pestring streets, then see Our Tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their Functions friendly

Enter Menenius.

Bru We stood too't in good time Is this Menenius?

Sicm. 'Tis he, 'tis he: 'O he is grown most kind of late: Haile Sir Mene Haile to you both.

Sicm. Your Coriolanus is not much mist, but with his Friends: the Commonwealth doth stand, and so would do, were he more angry at it.

Mene All's well, and might haue bene much better, if he could haue temporiz'd.

Sicm. Where is he, heare you?

Mene Nay I heare nothing His Mother and his wife, heare nothing from him.

Enter three or foure Citizens

All The Gods preserue you both.

Sicm. Gooden our Neighbours.

Bru. Gooden to you all, gooden to you all.

1 Our selues, our wiues, and children, on our knees, Are bound to pray for you both.

Sicm. Lue, and thrue

Bru Farewell kinde Neighbours:

We wisht Coriolanus had lou'd you as we did.

All Now the Gods keepe you.

Both Tri. Farewell, farewell.

Exeunt Citizens

Sicm. This is a happier and more comely time, Then when these Fellowes ran about the streets, Crying Confusion.

Bru Caius Martius was

A worthy Officer i'th' Warre, but Insolent, O come with Pride, Ambitious, past all thinking Selfe-louing.

Sicm. And affecting one sole Throne, without assistance

Mene. I thinke not so.

Sicm. We should by this, to ail our Lamention, If he had gone forth Confull, found it so.

Bru. The Gods haue well preuented it, and Rome Sits safe and still, without him.

Enter an Edile.

Edile Worthy Tribunes,

There is a Slaue whom we haue put in prison, Reports the Volces with two seuerall Powers Are entred in the Roman Territories, And with the deepest malice of the Warre, Destroy, what lies before 'em.

Mene. 'Tis Aufidius,

Who hearing of our Martius Banishment, Thrusts forth his homes againe into the world Which were Inshell'd, when Martius stood for Rome,

And

And durst not once peepe out.

Sicin. Come, what talke you of Martius.

Brut. Go see this Rumor whipt, it cannot be,
The Volces dare breake with vs.

Mene. Cannot be?

We haue Record, that very well it can,
And three examples of the like, hath beene
Within my Age. But reason with the fellow
Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Least you shall chance to whip your Information,
And beate the Messenger, who bids beware
Of what is to be dreaded.

Sicin. Tell not me. I know this cannot be.

Brut. Not possible.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. The Nobles in great earnestnesse are going
All to the Senate-house. Some newes is comming
That turnes their Countenances.

Sicin. 'Tis this Slaue.

Go whip him fore the peoples eyes. His raising,
Nothing but his report.

Mes. Yes worthy Sir,
The Slaues report is seconded, and more
More fearfull is deliuer'd.

Sicin. What more fearefull?

Mes. It is spoke freely out of many mouths,
How probable I do not know, that Martius
Ioyn'd with Aufidius, leads a power 'gainst Rome,
And vowes Reuenge as spacious, as betweene
The yong'ft and oldeft thing.

Sicin. This is most likely.

Brut. Rais'd onely, that the weaker sort may wish
Good Martius home againe.

Sicin. The very trick on't.

Mene. This is unlikely,
He, and Aufidius can no more attone
Then violent 'st Contrariety.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. You are sent for to the Senate:
A fearefull Army, led by Caius Martius,
Associated with Aufidius, Rages
Vpon our Territories, and haue already
O're-borne their way, consum'd with fire, and tooke
What lay before them.

Enter Commius.

Com. Oh you haue made good worke.

Mene. What newes? What newes?

Com. You haue help to ravish your owne daughters, &
To melt the City Leades vpon your pates,
To see your Wiues dishonour'd to your Noses.

Mene. What's the newes? What's the newes?

Com. Your Temples burned in their Ciment, and Your Franchises, whercon you stood, confin'd
Into an Augurs boare

Mene. Pray now, your Newes.

You haue made faire worke I feare me: pray your newes,
If Martius should be ioyn'd with Volceans.

Com. If? He is their God, he leads them like a thing
Made by some other Deity then Nature,
That shapen man Better: and they follow him
Against vs Brats, with no lesse Confidence,
Then Boyes pursuing Summer Butter-flies,
Or Butchers killing Flyes.

Mene. You haue made good worke,
You and your Apron men. you, that stood so much
Vpon the voyce of occupation, and

The breath of Garlick-eaters.

Com. Hee'l shake your Rome about your eares.

Mene. As Heracles did shake downe Mellow Fruite:
You haue made faire worke.

Brut. But is this true sir?

Com. I, and you'l looke pale
Before you finde it other. All the Regions
Do smilingly Reuolt, and who resists
Are mock'd for valiant Ignorance,
And perish constant Fooles: who is't can blame him?
Your Enemies and his, finde something in him,

Mene. We are all vndone, vnlesse
The Noble man haue mercy.

Com. Who shall aske it?

The Tribunes cannot doo't for shame; the people
Deserue such pittie of him, as the Wolfe
Doe's of the Shepheards. For his best Friends, if they Should say be good to Rome, they charg'd him, euen
As those should do that had deseru'd his hate,
And therein shew'd like Enemies.

Me. 'Tis true, if he were putting to my house, the brand
That should consume it, I haue not the face
To say, beseech you cease. You haue made faire hands,
You and your Craft: you haue crafted faire.

Com. You haue brought
A Trembling vpon Rome, such as was neuer
S'incapable of helpe.

Tri. Say not, we brought it.

Mene. How? Was't we? We lou'd him,
But like Beasts, and Cowardly Nobles,
Gaue way vnto your Clusters, who did hoore
Him out o'th' City.

Com. But I feare

They'l roare him in againe Tullius Aufidius,
The second name of men, obeyes his points
As if he were his Officer. Desperation,
Is all the Policy, Strength, and Defeace
That Rome can make against them.

Enter a Troope of Citizens.

Mene. Heere come the Clusters.
And is Aufidius with him? You are they
That made the Ayre vnuholome, when you cast
Your stinking, greasie Caps, in hooting
At Coriolanus Exile. Now he's comming,
And not a haire vpon a Souldiers head
Which will not proue a whip. As many Coxcombes
As you threw Caps vp, will he tumble downe,
And pay you for your voyces. 'Tis no matter,
If he could burne vs all into one coale,
We haue deseru'd it.

Omnes. Faith, we heare fearfull Newes.

1 Cit. For mine owne part,
When I said banish him, I said 'twas pittie.

2 And so did I.

3 And so did I: and to say the truth, so did very many of vs, that we did we did for the best, and though wee willingly consented to his Banishment, yet it was against our will.

Com. Y'are goodly things, you Voyces.

Mene. You haue made good worke
You and your cry. Shal's to the Capitoll?

Com. Oh I, what else?

Sicin. Go Masters get you home, be not dismayd,
These are a Side, that would be glad to haue
This true, which they so seeme to feare. Go home,
And shew no signe of Feare.

Exeunt boik

1 Cor. The Gods bee good to vs: Come Masters let's home, I euer said we were a th wrong, when we banish'd him.

2 Cit. So did we all. But come, let's home. Exit Cit.

First. I do not like this Newes

Second. Nor I.

Third. Let's to the Capitoll: would halfe my wealth Would buy, this for a lye.

Fourth. Pray let's go.

Exeunt Tribunes.

Enter Aufidius with his Lieutenants.

Auf. Do they flie to th Roman?

Lien. I do not know what Witel easie's in him, but Your Soldiers vse him as the Grace fore meate, Their talk e at Table, and their Thanks at end, And you are dash'd in this action Sir, Even by your owne

Auf. I cannot helpe it now, Vnlesse by vsing meanes I haue the soote Of our designe. He beates himselfe more prouder, Even to my person, then I thought he would When first I did embrace him. Yet his Nature In that's no Changeling, and I must excuse What cannot be amended.

Lien. Yet I wisht Sir, (I meane for your particular) you had not Joynd in Commission with him: but either haue borne The action of your selfe, or else to him, had left it soly.

Auf. I vnderstand thee well, and be thou sure When he shall come to his account, he knowes not What I can vpe against him, although it seemes And so he thinks, and is no lesse apparant To th vulgar eye, that he beares all things fauely And shewes good Husbandry for the Volscian State, Fights Dragon-like, and does as heue as soone As draw his Sword: yet he hath left vndone That which shall breake his necke, or hazard mine, When ere we come to our acco int.

Lien. Sir, I beseech you, thinke you he I carry Rome?

Auf. All places yeelds to him ere he sit downe, And the Nobility of Rome are his The Senators and Patricians loue it most. The Tribunes are no Solders: and their people Will be as rash in the repulse, as hasty To expell him thence. I thinke hee'l be to Rome As the Aspray to the Fish, yb takes it By Sovereignie of Nature. First, he was A Noble seruant to me n, but he could not Carry his Honors euen: whether 'twas Pride Which out of daily Fortune coartains The happy man; whether deest of iudgement, To sale in the disposall of those aduices Which he was Lord of: or whether Nature, Not to be other then one thing, but to moue From th' Cask to th' Caskion: but command appeare Euen with the same assents and eare. As hee will it, so will hee. For one of these (As hee I thinke spies of them all) shall, For I dare so fare free him, make him feared, Solders, and solders him, but he has Merit To be aske in the vidence. So our Vertue, I beleeue, is the prouision of the time, And prouision is solemne and commendable, But not a Tombe for a man of this Charge. I esteeme it with his death.

First. I do not know what Witel easie's in him, but Your Soldiers vse him as the Grace fore meate, Their talk e at Table, and their Thanks at end, And you are dash'd in this action Sir, Even by your owne

Come let's away: when Can Rome is thine, Thou art poorst of all, then shortly are thou

Actus Quintus.

Enter Alferrius, Coriolanus, Sempronius, Titinius, and others.

Alferrius. No, Ile not go. you heare what he hath said Which was sometime his Generall, who loued him In a most deere particular. He call'd me Father: But what o' that? Go you that banish'd him A Mile before his Tent, fall downe, and kore The way into his mercy: Nay, if he coy'd To heare Coriolanus speake, hee keepe at home

Cor. He would not see me to know me.

Alferrius. Do you heare?

Cor. Yet once time he did call me by my name: I sig'd our old acquaintance, and the drops That we haue bled together. Coriolanus He would not answer too: Forbad all Names, He was a kinde of Noth'ng, Titlelesse, Till he had forg'd himselfe a name at this re Of burning Rome.

Alferrius. Why so you haue made good worke: A paire of Tribunes, that haue wrack'd for Rome, To make Coales cheape: A Noble memory

Cor. I minded him, how Reuall 'twas to pardon When it was lesse expected. He replyed It was a bare petition of a State To one whom they had pur' shid.

Alferrius. Very well, could he say lesse.

Cor. I offer'd to awake his regard For's private Friends. His answer to me was He could not stay to picke them, in a pile Of ror some mully Chaffe. He is d, was solly For one poore graine or two, to leaue vrburnt And still to note this offence.

Alferrius. For one poore graine or two? I am one of those: his Mother, Wife, his Child, And this brave Fellow too: we are the Graines, You are the mully Chaffe, and you are steele About the Moore. We must be burnt for you.

Sem. Nay, pray be patient. If you're sicke you syde In this so neuer needed helpe, yet don't Vrburnt's with our distresse, but sure if you Would be your Country's Pleader, your good song re More the instant Antie we can make

Alferrius. We'll stop our Countryman

Alferrius. No, Hee not m'd'e.

Sem. Pray you go to him.

Alferrius. What should I do?

Cor. O'retake him with your Love can do, For Rome, towards Alferrius

Alferrius. Well, and say that Alferrius remembre me, As I am a man of word, whereas, what he said But a confirmed Friend, pressed of With a kind of selfe. Say hee do

Sem. Yet you good will, As I haue not shew'd from Rome, as I haue not

Alferrius. I haue not shew'd

Cor. I haue not shew'd, yet I haue not shew'd, And I haue not shew'd, yet I haue not shew'd

He was not taken well, he had not din'd,
The Venies vnfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We powt vpon the Morning, are vnapt
To giue or to forgiue; but when we haue flufft
These Pipes, and these Conueyances of our blood
With Wine and Feeding, we haue suppler Soules
Then in our Priest-like Fast: therefore Ile watch him
Till he be diered to my request,
And then Ile set vpon him.

Brut. You know the very rode into his kindnesse,
And cannot lose your way.

Mene. Good faith Ile proue him,
Speed how it will. I shall ere long, haue knowledge
Of my successe. Exit.

Com. Hee I neuer heare him.

Sicin. Nor

Com. I tell you, he doe's sit in Gold, his eye
Red as 'twould burne Rome: and his Iniury
The Gaoler to his pittie. I kneel'd before him,
'Twas very faintly he said Rise: dismiss me
Thus with his speechlesse hand. What he would do
He sent in writing after me: what he would nor,
Bound with an Oath to yeeld to his conditions:
So that all hope is vaine, vnlesse his Noble Mother,
And his Wife, who (as I heare) meane to sollicite him
For mercy to his Countrey: therefore let's hence,
And with our fure intreaties hast them on. Exeunt

Enter Menenius to the Watch or Guard.

1 Wat. Stay, whence are you.

2 Wat. Stand, and go backe.

Me. You guard like men, 'tis well. But by your leaue,
I am an Officer of State, & come to speak with Coriolanus.

1 From whence? Mene. From Rome.

1 You may not passe, you must returne: our Generall will no more heare from thence.

2 You'll see your Rome embrac'd with fire, before You'll speake with Coriolanus.

Mene. Good my Friends,

If you haue heard your Generall taske of Rome,
And of his Friends there, it is Lots to Blankes,
My name hath touch't your eares. It is Menenius.

1 Be it so, go back, the vertue of your name,
Is not heere passable.

Mene. I tell thee Fellow,

Thy Generall is my Louer: I haue beene
The booke of his good Acts, whence men haue read
His Fame vnparolell'd, happely amplified:
For I haue euer verified my Friends
(Of whom hee's cheefe) with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Nay, sometimes,
Like to a Bowle vpon a subtle ground
I haue tumbled past the throw: and in his praise
Haue (almost) stamp't the Leasing. Therefore Fellow,
I must haue leaue to passe.

1 Faith Sir, if you had told as many lies in his behalfe, as you haue vttered words in your owne, you should not passe heere: no, though it were as vertuous to lye, as to liue chastly. Therefore go backe.

Men. Prythee fellow, remember my name is Menenius, alwayes factionary on the party of your Generall.

2 How fouer you haue bin his Lier, as you say you haue, I am one that telling true vnder him, must say you cannot passe. Therefore go backe.

Mene. Ha's he din'd can't thou tell? For I would not speake with him, till after dinner.

1 You are a Roman, are you?

Mene. I am as thy Generall is.

1 Then you should hate Rome, as he doe's. Can you, when you haue pusht out your gates, the very Defender of them, and in a violent popular ignorance, giuen your enemy your shield, thinke to fort his reuenges with the easie groanes of old women, the Virginnall Palms of your daughters, or with the palsied intercession of such a decay'd Dotant as you seeme to be? Can you thinke to blow out the intended fire, your City is ready to flame in, with such weake breath as this? No, you are deceiu'd, therefore backe to Rome, and prepare for your execution: you are condemn'd, our Generall has swome you out of repreece and pardon.

Mene. Sirra, if thy Captaine knew I were heere,
He would vse me with estimation.

1 Come, my Captaine knowes you not.

Mene. I meane thy Generall.

1 My Generall cares not for you. Back I say, go: least
I let forth your halfe pinte of blood. Backe, that's the vt-most of your hauing, backe.

Mene. Nay but fellow, fellow.

Enter Coriolanus with Aufidius.

Corio. What's the matter?

Mene. Now you Companion. Ile say an arant for you:
you shall knowe now that I am in estimation: you shall perceiue, that a Iacke gardant cannot office me from my Son Coriolanus, gueesse but my entertainment with him: if thou stand'st not i'th state of hanging, or of some death more long in Spectatorship, and crueller in suffering, behold now prently, and swoond for what's to come vpon thee. The glorious Gods sit in houely Synod about thy particular prosperitie, and loue thee no worse then thy old Father Menenius doe's. O my Son, my Son! thou art preparing fire for vs: looke thee, heere's water to quench it,
I was hardly moued to come to thee. but beeing assured none but my selfe could moue thee, I haue bene blowne out of your Gates with sighes: and coniuere thee to pardon Rome, and thy petitionary Countymen. The good Gods asswage thy wrath, and turne the dregs of it, vpon this Varlet heere: This, who like a blocke hath denyed my access to thee.

Corio. Away.

Mene. How? Away?

Corio. Wite, Mother, Child, I knowe not My affaires
Are Seruant to others: Though I owe
My Reuenge properly, my remission lies
In Volcean breasts: That we haue beene familiar,
Ingrate forgetfulnesse shall poison rather
Then pittie: Note how much, therefore be gone
Mine eares against your suites, are stronger then
Your gates against my force. Yet for I loued thee,
Take this along, I writ it for thy sake,
And would haue sent it. Another word Menenius,
I will not heare thee speake. This man Aufidius
Was my belou'd in Rome: yet thou behold'st. Exeunt

Aufid. You keepe a constant temper.

Manet the Guard and Menenius.

1 Now sir, is your name Menenius?

2 'Tis a spell you see of much power:

You know the way home againe

1 Do you heare how wee are shent for keeping your greatnesse backe?

2 What cause do you thinke I haue to swoond?

Menen. I neither care for th'world, nor your General for such things as you, I can scarce thinke ther's any, y'are so flight: He that hath a will to die by himselfe, feares it
not.

not from another. Let your Generall do his worst. For you, bee that you are, long; and your misery encrease with your age. I say to you, as I was said to, Away. Exit

1 A Noble Fellow I warrant him.

2 The worthy Fellow is our General. He is the Rock, The Oake not to be wmdē-shaken. Exit Watch.

Enter Coriolanus and Aufidius.

Corio. We will before the walls of Rome to morrow Set downe our Hoast. My partner in this Action, You must report to th' Volcian Lords, how plainly I haue borne this Businesse.

Auf. Onely their ends you haue respected, Stopt your eares against the generall suite of Rome. Neuer admitted a priuāt whisper, no not with such fiends That thought them sure of you.

Corio. This last old man, Whom with a crack'd heart I haue sent to Rome, Lou'd me, about the measure of a Father, Nay godded me indeed. Their latell refuge Was to send him. for whose old Loue I haue (Though I shew'd sowrely to him) once more offer'd The first Conditions which they did refuse, And cannot now accept, to grace him onely, That thought he could do more. A very little I haue yeelded too, Fresh Embassies, and Suites, Nor from the State, nor priuate friends hereafter Will I lend eare to. Ha? what shout is this? Shout within Shall I be tempted to infringe my vow In the same time 'tis made? I will not.

Enter Virgilia, Valeria, young Martius, with Attendants.

My wife comes foremost, then the honour'd mould Wherein this Trunke was fram'd, and in her hand The Grandchilde to her blood. But our affection, All bond and priuiledge of Nature breake; Let it be Vertuous to be Obstinate What is that Curt'sie worth? Or those Doves eyes, Which can make Gods forsworne? I melt, and am not Offstronger earth then others: my Mother bowes, As if Olympus to a Mole-hill should In supplication Nod and my yong Boy Hath an Aspect of intercession, which Great Nature cries, Deny not. Let the Volces Plough Rome, and harrow Italy, Ile neuer Be such a Gosling to obey instinct, but stand As if a man were Author or himself, & knew no other kin Virgil. My Lord and Husband.

Corio. These eyes are not the same I wore in Rome.

Virg. The sorrow that deliueys vs thus chang'd Makes you thinke so Corio. Like a dull Actor now, I haue forgot my part, And I am out, euen to a full Disgrace. Best of my flesh, Forgive my Tyranny but do not say, For that forgive our Romanes. Oake se Long as my Exile, sweet as my Revenge! Now by the seaslous Queene of Heaven, that kisse I carried from thee deare, and my true Lippe Hath Virgin'd it ere since. You Gods, I pray, And the most noble Mother of the world Leauē vs salured. Sinke my knee i'th' earth, Of thy deepe ddtty, more impression shew Then that of common Sonnes.

Kneels

Valer. Oh stand vp blest! Whil'st with no softer Cushion'd on the Flint I kneele before thee, and vnproperly Shew duty as mistaken, all this while, Betweene the Childe and Parent.

Corio. What's this? your looks to me?

To your Correded Sonne?

Then let the Pibbles on the hungry beach Fillop the Starres. Then, let the mutinour windes Strike the proud Cedars 'gainst the fiery Sun: Murd ring impossibility, to make What cannot be, slighte worke.

Valer. Thou art my Warriour, I hope to frame thee. Do you know this Lady?

Corio. The Noble Sister of Publicola; The Moone of Rome. Chaste as the Isle That's curdied by the Frost, from purest Snow, And hangs on Diuine Temple. Deere Valeria 1 Volum. This is a poore Epitome of yours, Which by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all your selfe.

Corio. The God of Soldiers: With the consent of supream Ioue, informe Thy thoughts with Noblenesse, that thou mayst proue To shame vnvulnerable, and sticketh with Warres Like a great Sea-marke standing euerie flaw, And sauing those that eye thee.

Valer. Your knee, Sirrah

Corio. That's my braue Boy.

Valer. Euen he, your wite, this Ladie, and my selfe, Are Sutors to you.

Corio. I beseech you peace. Or if you'd aske, remember this before; The thing I haue forsworne to graunt, may neuer Be held by you denials. Do not bid me Dismiss my Soldiers, or capitulate Againe, with Romaine Mechanicks. Tell me not Wherein I seeme vnnaturall. Desire not 't' allay My Rages and Reuenges, with your colder reasons.

Valer. Oh no more, no more:

You haue said you will not grant vs any thing: For we haue nothing else to aske, but that Which you deny already yet we will aske, That if you faile in our request, the blame May hang vpon your hardnesse, therefore heare vs.

Corio. Aufidius, and you Volces marke, for wee'l Heare nought from Rome in priuate. Your request?

Valer. Should we be silent & not speak, our Rames And state of Bodies would bewray what life We haue led since thy Exile. Thinke with thy selfe, How more vnfortunate then all liuing women Are we come hither; since that thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with ioy, harts dance with comfort, Constraines them weepe, and shake with feare & sorrow, Making the Mother, wife, and Childe to see, The Sonne, the Husband, and the Father tearing His Countreies Bowels out, and to poore we Thine enmities most capitall: Thou bast vs Our prayers to the Gods, which is a comfort That all but we enioy. For how can we? Alas! how can we, for our Country pray? Where to we are bound, together with thy victory: Where to we are bound. Alacke, or we must loose The Countreie our deere Nurse, or else thy person Our comfort in the Countreie. We must finde An euidēt Calamity, though we had Our wish, which side should win. For either thou Must as a Forraine Recreation be led With Miracles through our streets, or else Triumphantly treade on thy Countreies ruine,

And

The Tragedie of Coriolanus.

And beare the Palme, for hauing brauely shed
Thy Wife and Childrens blood. For my selfe, Sonne,
I purpose not to waite on Fortune, till
These warres determine. If I cannot perswade thee,
Rather to shew a Noble grace to both parts,
Then seeke the end of one; thou shalt no looner
March to assault thy Country, then to treade
(Trust too't, thou shalt not) on thy Mothers wombe
That brought thee to this world.

Virg. I, and mine, that brought you forth this boy,
To keepe your name liuing to time

Boy. A shall not tread on me. He run away
Till I am bigger, but then He fight.

Corio. Not of a womans tendernes to be,
Requires nor Childe, nor womans face to see.

I haue fare too long.

V. lum. Nay, go not from vs thus:
If it were so, that our request did tend
To saue the Romanes, thereby to destroy
The Volces whom you serue, you might condemne vs
As poysonous of your Honour. No, on suite
Is that you reconcile them. While the Volces
May say, this mercy we haue shew'd: the Romanes,
This we recei'd, and each in either side
Gue the All-haile to thee, and cry be Blest
For making vp this peace. Thou know'st (great Sonne)
The end of Warres vncertaine: but this certaine,

That if thou conquer Rome, the benefit
Which thou shalt thereby reape, is such a name
Whose repetition will be dogg'd with Curses:
But with his last Attempt, he wip'd it out:

Destroy'd his Country, and his name remains
To th'insuing Age, abhor'd. Speake to me Son:
Thou hast affected the fine straines of Honor,

To imitate the graces of the Gods,
To teare with Thunder the wide Cheekes a th'Ayre,
And yet to change thy Sulphure with a Boulte
That should but rine in Oake. Why do'st not speake?

Think'st thou it Honourable for a Nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Daughter, speake you:
He cares not for your weeping. Speake thou Boy,

Perhaps thy childsheneffe will moue him more
Then can our Reasons. There's no man in the world
More bound to's Mother, yet heere he let's me prate
Like one i th'Stockes. Thou hast neuer in thy life,

Shew'd thy deere Mother any curtesie,
When she (poore Hen) fond of no second brood,
Held clock'd thee to the Warres: and safelie home
Loden with Honor. Say my Request's vnjust,

And spurne me backe: But, if it be not so
Thou art not honest, and the Gods will plague thee
That thou reftam'st from me the Duty, which
To a Mothers part belongs. He turnes away.

Down Ladies let vs frame him with him without knees
To his sur-name Coriolanus longs more pride
Then pity to our Prayers. Downe. an end,
This is the last. So, we will home to Rome,

And dye among our Neighbours. Nay, behold's,
This Boy, that cannot tell what he would haue,
But kneeles, and bids vp hands for fellowship,
Doe's reason our Petition with more strength
Then thou hast to deny't. Come, let vs go:

This Fellow had a Volcan in his Mother:
His Wife is in Corioles, and his Childe
Like him by chance: yet giue vs our dispatch:

I am hush't vntill our City be afire, & then He speake a lile
Holds her by the hand silent.

Corio. O Mother, Mother!
What haue you done? Behold, the Heauens do ope,
The Gods looke downe, and this vnaturall Scene
They laugh at. Oh my Mother, Mother. Oh!
You haue wonne a happy Victory to Rome.
But for your Sonne, belecue it. Oh belecue it,
Most dangerously you haue with him preuail'd,
If not most mortall to him. But let it come:
Aufidius, though I cannot make true Warres,
He frame conuenient peace. Now good Aufidius,
Were you in my steed, would you haue heard
A Mother lesse? or granted lesse Aufidius?

Auf. I was mou'd withall.

Corio. I dare be sworne you were:
And sir, it is no little thing to make
Mine eyes to sweat compassion. But (good sir)
What peace you'l make, aduise me. For my part,
He not to Rome, He backe with you, and pray you
Stand to me in this cause. Oh Mother! Wife!

Auf. I am glad thou hast set thy mercy, & thy Honor
At difference to thee. Out of that He worke
My selfe a former Fortune.

Corio. I by and by; But we will drinke together
And you shall beare
A better wirtnesse backe then words, which we
On like conditions, will haue Counter-seal'd.

Come enter with vs: Ladies you deferue
To haue a Temple built you: All the Sworde
In Italy, and her Confederate Armes.
Could not haue made this peace.

Enter Menenius and Sicinius.
Men. See you yon d Com a'th Capitol, yon'd corner
Sic. Why what of that?
Men. If it be possible or you to displace it with your little finger, there is for hope the Ladies of Rome, especially his Mother, ma' reuile with him. But I say, there is no hope in't, our th'vats are sentenc'd, and stay vpon execution.

Sic. Is't possible, that so short a time can alter the condition of a man.

Men. There is differency between a Grub & a Butterfly, yet your Butterfily was a Grub this Marcius, is growne from Man to Dragon. He has wings, hee's more then a creeping thing.

Sic. He lou'd his Mother deere.

Men. So did he mee and he no more remembers his Mother now, then an eight yeare old horse. The tartnesse of his face, sowres ripe Grapes. When he walks, he moues like an Engine, and the ground shrinks before his Treas-ding. He is able to pierce a Corieter with his eye. Talks like a knell, and his hum is a Battery. He sits in his State, as a thing made for Alexander. What he bids bee done, is finisht with his bidding. He wants nothing of a God but Eternity, and a Heauen to Throne in.

Sic. Yes, mercy, if you report him truly
Men. I paint him in the Character. Mark what mercy his Mother shall bring from him: There is no more mercy in him, then there is milke in a male-Tyger, that shall our poore City finde. and all this is long of you.

Sic. The Gods be good vnto vs
Men. No, in such a case the Gods will not bee good vnto vs, When we banish'd him, we respect not them.
and he returning to breake our necks, they respect not vs.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess.

Mef. Sir, if you'd saue your life, flye to your House,
The Plebeians haue got your Fellow Tribune,
And hale him vp and downe, all swearing, if
The Romane Ladies bring not comfort home,
They'l giue him death by Inches.

Enter another Messenger.

Sicn. What's the Newes? (preuayl'd,

Mef. Good Newes, good newes, the Ladies haue
The Volcians are dislodg'd, and Martius gone.
A merrier day did neuer yet greet Rome,
No, nor th'expulsion of the Tarquins.

Sicn. Friend, art thou certainé this is true?
Is't most certaine.

Mef. As certaine as I know the Sun is fire.
Where haue you lurk'd that you make doubt of it:
Ne're through an Arch so hurried the blowne Tide,
As the recomfort through th'gates Why harke you:

Trumpets, Hoboyes, Drums beate, altogether.

The Trumpets, Sack-buts, Psalteries, and Fises,
Tabors, and Symboles, and the shouting Romans,
Make the Sunne dance. Hearke you. About with him

Mene. This is good Newes.

I will go meete the Ladies. This Volumnia,
Is worth of Consuls, Senators, Patricians,
A City full: Of Tribunes such as you,
A Sea and Land full you haue pray'd well to day.
This Morning, for tenthousand of your throates,
I'de not haue giuen a doit. Harke, how they ioy.

Sound still with the Shouts.

Sicn. First, the Gods blesse you for your tydings.
Next, accept my thankfulnessse.

Mef. Sir, we haue all great cause to giue great thanks.

Sicn. They are neerer the City.

Mef. Almost at point to enter.

Sicn. Wee'l meet them, and helpe the ioy. Exeunt.

Enter two Serators, with Ladies, passinge over the Stage, with other Lords.

Sena. Behold our Patronnesse, the life of Rome.
Call all your Tribes together, praise the Gods,
And make triumphant fires, strew flowers before them:
Vnshout the noise that Banish'd Martius;
Repeale him, with the welcome of his Mother:
Cry welcome Ladies, welcome.

All. Welcome Ladies, welcome

A Flourish with Drummes & Trumpets.

Enter Twaine Affidius, with Attendants.

Auf. Go tell the Lords a'th' City, I am heere.

Deluer them this Paper, hauing read it,
Bid them repaire to th' Market place, where I
Euen in theirs, and in the Commons cares
Will vouch the truth of it. Him I accuse:
The City Ports by this hath enter'd, and Intends to appeare before the People, hoping
To purge himselfe with words. Dispatch

Enter 3 or 4 Conspirators of Affidius Fallow.

Most Welcome

1. Con. How is it with our Genetall?

Auf. Euen so, as with a man by his owne Almes-poy son'd, and with his Charity slaine.

2. Con. Most Noble Sir, If you do hold the same intent
Wherein you wisht vs parted: Wee'l deliuer you
Of your great danger.

Auf. Sir, I cannot tell,

We must proceed as we do finde the People.

3. Con. The People will remaine vncertaine, whilst Twixt you there's difference: but the fall of either
Makes the Surmisor heyre of all.

Auf. I know it:

And my pretext to strike at him, admits
A good construction. I rais'd him, and I pawn'd
Mine Honor for his truth: who being so heighten'd,
He watered his new Plants with dewes of Flattery,
Seducing so my Friends: and to this end,
He bow'd his Nature, neuer knowne before,
But to be rough, vnwayable, and free.

3. Consp. Sir, his stoutnesse
When he did stand for Consull, which he lost
By lacke of stooping.

Auf. That I would haue spokt of.

Being banish'd for't, he came vnto my Harth,
Presented to my knife his Throat: I tooke him,
Made him ioynt-servant with me. Gaue him way
In all his owne desires. Nay, let him choose
Out of my Files, his proiects, to accomplish
My best and freshest men, seru'd his designements
In mine or ne person: holpe to reape the Fame
Which he did end all his; and tooke some pride
To do my selfe this wrong: Till at the last
I seem'd his Follower, not Partner, and
He wadg'd me with his Countenance, as if I had bin Mercenary.

1. Con. So he did my Lord:

The Army marueyl'd at it, and in the last,
When he had carried Rome, and that we look'd
For no lesse Spoile, then Glory.

Auf. There was it:

For which my sinewes shall be stretcht vpon him,
At a few drops of Womens thewme, which are
As cheape as Lies; he sold the Blood and Labour
Of our great Action, therefore shall he dye,
And Ile renew me in his fall. But hearke

Drummes and Trumpets sounds with great shouts of the people.

1. Con. Your Native Towne you enter'd like a Poste,
And had no welcomes home, but he returnes
Splitting the Ayre with noyse.

2. Con. And patient Fooles,
Whose children he hath slaine, their base throats teare
With giuing him glory.

3. Con. Therefore at your vantage,
Ere he expresse himselfe, or moue the people
With what he would say, let him feele your Swords:
Which we will second, when he lies along
After your way. His Tale pronounc'd, shall bury His Reasons, with his Body.

Auf. Say no more. Heere come the Lords,

Enter the Lords of the City.

All Lords. You are most welcome home.

Auf. I haue not defer'd it.

But worthy Lords, haue you with heede perused
What I haue written to you?

All. We haue.

1. Lord. And greete to heere't:
What faults he made before the last, I thinke
Might haue found easie Fines: But there to end
Where he was to begin, and giue away
The benefit of our Lewies, answering vs
With our owne charge: making a Treatie, where
There was a yelding; this admits no excuse.

Ans. He approaches, you shall heare him.

Enter Coriolanus marching with Drummes, and Colours. The Commoners being with him.

Corio. Haile Lords, I am return'd your Souldier:
No more infected with my Countries loue
Then when I parted hence: but still subsisting
Vnder your great Command. You are to know,
That prosperously I haue attempted, and
With bloody passage led your Warres, euen to
The gates of Rome: Our spoiles we haue brought home
Doth more then counterpoize a full third part
The charges of the Action. We haue made peace
With no lesse Honor to the Antiates
Then shame to th'Romaines. And we heere deliuer
Subscrib'd by th' Consuls, and Patricians,
Together with the Seale a th' Senat, what
We haue compounded on.

Ans. Read it not Noble Lords,
But tell the Traitor in the highest degree
He hath abus'd your Powers.

Corio. Traitor? How now?

Ans. I Traitor, Martius.

Corio. Martius?

Ans. I Martius, Caio Martius. Do'st thou thinke
Ile grace thee with that Robbery, thy stolne name
Coriolanus in Corioles?

You Lords and Heads a th' State, perfidiously
He ha's betray'd your businesse, and giuen vp
For certaine drops of Salt, your City Rome:
I say your City to his Wife and Mother,
Breaking his Oath and Resolution, like
A twist of rotten Silke, neuer admitting Counsaile a th' warre. But at his Nurses teares
He whin'd and roar'd away your Victory,
That Pages blush'd at him, and men of heart
Look'd wond'ring each at others.

Corio. Hear'st thou Mars?

Ans. Name not the God, thou boy of Tegres.

Corio. Ha?

Ans. No more.

Corio. Measurelesse Lye, thou hast made my heart
Too great for what contains it. Boy? Oh Slaue,
Pardon me Lords, 'tis the first time that euer
I was forc'd to scould. Your iudgments my graue Lords
Must giue this Curre the Lye: and his owne Notion,
Who weares my stripes impress'd vpon him, that Must beare my beating to his Graue, shall ioyne
To thrust the Lye vnto him.

1 Lord. Peace both, and heare me speake.

Corio. Cut me to peeces Volces men and Lads,
Staine all your edges on me. Boy, false Hound:
If you haue writ your Annales true, 'tis there,
That like an Eagle in a Douc-coat, I

Flaster'd your Volcians in Corioles.

Alone I did it, Boy.

Ans. Why Noble Lords,
Will you be put in munde of his blinde Fortune,
Which was your shame, by this vnholly Braggart?
'Fore your owne eyes, and eares?

All Consp. Let him dye for't.

All People. Teare him to peeces, do it presently:
He kill'd my Sonne, my daughter, he kill'd my Cofine
Marcus, he kill'd my Father.

2 Lord. Peace hoe: no outrage, peace:
The man is Noble, and his Fame folds in
This Orbe o th' earth: His last offences to vs
Shall haue Iudicious hearing. Stand Aufidius,
And trouble not the peace.

Corio. O that I had him, with six Aufidiuses, or more
His Tribe, to vse my lawfull Sword.

Ans. Insolent Villaine

All Consp. Kill, kill, kill, kill, kill him.

Draw both the Conspirators, and kils Martius, who fallles, Aufidius stards on him.

Lords. Hold, hold, hold, hold.

Ans. My Noble Masters, heare me speake.

1. Lord. O Tullus

2. Lord. Thou hast done a deed, whereat
Valour will weepe.

3 Lord. Tread not vpon him Masters, all be quiet,
Put vp your Swords.

Ans. My Lords,
When you shall know (as in this Rage
Prouok'd by him, you cannot) the great danger
Which this mans life did owe you, you'l reioyce
That he is thus cut off. Please it your Honours
To call me to your Senate, Ile deliuer
My selfe your loyall Seruant, or endure
Your heauiest Censure.

1. Lord. Beare from hence his body,
And mourne you for him. Let him be regarded As the most Noble Coarse, that euer Herald
Did follow to his Vne.

2. Lord. His owne impatience,
Takes from Aufidius a great part of blame:
Let's make the Best of it.

Ans. My Rage is gone,
And I am stricke with sorrow. Take him vp:
Helpe three a th' cheefest Souldiers, Ile be one.
Beate thou the Drumme that it speake mournfully.
Traile your Steele Pikes. Though in this City hee
Hath widdowed and vnchilded many a one,
Which to this houre bewaile the Iniury,
Yet he shall haue a Noble Memory. Assist,

Exeunt bearing the Body of Martius. A drum march sounded.

FINIS.

The Lamentable Tragedy of Titus Andronicus.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Flourish. Enter the Tribunes and Senators aloft And then enter Saturninus and his Followers at one doore, and Bassianus and his Followers at the other, with Drums & Colours.

Saturninus,

Noble Patricians, Patrons of my right,
Defend the iustice of my Cause with Armes
And Countrey-men, my louing Followers,
Pleade my Successiue Title with your Swords.

I was the first borne Sonne, that was the last
That wore the Imperiall Diadem of Rome.

Then let my Fathers Honours liue in me,
Nor wrong mine Age with this indignitie

Bassianus. Romanes, Friends, Followers,
Fauourers of my Right:

If euer Bassianus, Cæsars Sonne,
Were gracious in the eyes of Royall Rome,
Keepe then this passage to the Capitoll:
And suffer not Dishonour to approach
Th'Imperiall Seate to Vertue: consecrate
To Iustice, Continence, and Nobility:
But let Desert in pure Election shine;
And Romanes, fight for Freedome in your Choice

Enter Marcus Andronicus aloft with the Crowne.

Princes, that strue by Factions, and by Friends,
Ambitiously for Rule and Empery:
Know, that the people of Rome for whom we stand
A speciall Party, haue by Common voyce
In Election for the Romane Emperie,
Chosen Andronicus, Sur-named Probus,
For many good and great deserts to Rome.
A Nobler man, a brauer Warriour,
Lives not this day within the City Wallles.
He by the Senate is accited home.
From weary Warres against the barbarous Gothes,
That with his Sonnes (to terror to our Foes)
Hath yoked a Nation strong, train'd vp in Armes.
Ten yeares are spent, since first he vnderooke
This Cause of Rome, and chastised with Armes
Our Enemies pride. Fieue times he hath return'd
Bleeding to Rome, bearing his Valiant Sonnes
In Coffins from the Field
And now at last, laden with Honours Spoiles,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome,
Renowned Titus, flourishing in Armes.

Let vs intreat, by Honour of his Name,
Whom (worthily) you would haue now succcede,
And in the Capitoll and Senates right,
Whom you pretend to Honour and Adore,
That you withdraw you, and abate your Strength,
Dismiss your Followers, and as Suters should,
Pleade your Deserts in Peace and Humblenesse.

Saturnine. How sayre the Tribune speaks,
To calme my thoughts

Bassia. Marcus Andronicus, so I do affie
In thy vprightnesse and Integrity:
And so I Loue and Honor thee, and thine,
Thy Noble Brother Titus, and his Sonnes,
And Her (to whom my thoughts are humbled all)
Gracious Lavinia, Romes rich Ornament,
That I will heere dismiss my louing Friends:
And to my Fortunes, and the Peoples Fauour,
Commit my Cause in ballance to be weigh'd.

Exit Souldiours.

Saturnine. Friends, that haue beene
Thus forward in my Right,
I thanke you all, and heere Dismiss you all,
And to the Loue and Fauour of my Countrey,
Commit my Selfe, my Person, and the Cause.
Rome, be as iust and gracious vnto me,
As I am confident and kinde to thee.
Open the Gates, and let me in.

Bassia. Tribunes, and me, a poore Competitor.

Flourish. They go up into the Senat house.

Enter a Captaine.

Cap. Romanes make way: the good Andronicus,
Patron of Vertue, Romes best Champion,
Successfull in the Battailles that he fights,
With Honour and with Fortune is return'd,
From whence he circumscribed with his Sword,
And brought to yoke the Enemies of Rome.

Sould Drummes and Trumpets. And then enter two of Titus Sonnes; After them, two men bearing a Coffin covered with blacke, then two other Sonnes. After them, Titus Andronicus, and then Tamora the Queene of Goibes, & her two Sonnes Chiron and Demetrius, with Aaron the Moore, and others, as many as can bee: They set downe the Coffin, and Titus speaks.

Andronicus. Haile Rome: Victorious in thy Mourning Woodes:

Lot,

Loe as the Barke that hath discharg'd his fraught,
 Returnes with precious lading to the Bay,
 From whence at first she wegi'd her Anchorage :
 Commeth Andronicus bound with Lawrell bowes,
 To resalute his Country with his teares,
 Teares of true ioy for his returne to Rome,
 Thou great defender of this Capitoll,
 Stand gracious to the Rites that we intend.
 Romaines, of fise and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
 Halfe of the number that King Priam had,
 Behold the poore remaine alieue and dead!
 These that Suruiue, let Rome reward with Loue :
 These that I bring vnto their latest home,
 With buriall amongst their Ancestors,
 Heere Gothes haue giuen me leaue to sheath my Sword:
Titus ynkinde, and carelesse of thine owne,
 Why suffer'st thou thy Sonnes vnburied yet,
 To houer on the dreadfull store of Stix?
 Make way to lay them by their Bretheren.

They open the Tombe.

There greete in silence as the dead are wont,
 And sleepe in peace, slaine in your Countries warres :
 O sacred receptacle of my ioyes,
 Sweet Cell of vertue and Nobilitie,
 How many Sonnes of mine hast thou in store,
 That thou wilt neuer render to me more?

Luc. Giue vs the proudest prisoner of the Gothes,
 That we may hew his limbes, and on a pile
Admanus fratrum, sacrifice his flesh.

Before this earthly prison of their bones,
 That so the shadowes be not vnappes'd,
 Nor we disturb'd with prodigies on earth.

Tit. I giue him you, the Noblest that Suruiues,
 The eldest Son of this distressed Queene.

Luc. Stay Romaine Bretheren, gracious Conqueror,
 Victorious Titus, rue the teares I shed,
 A Mothers teares in passion for her sonne :
 And if thy Sonnes were euer deere to thee,
 Oh thinke my sonnes to be as deere to mee.
 Sufficeth not, that we are brought to Rome
 To beaurisfe thy Triumphs, and returne
 Captiue to thee, and to thy Romaine yoke,
 But must my Sonnes be slaughter'd in the streetes,
 For Valiant doings in their Countries cause?
 O! If to fight for King and Common-weale,
 Were piety in thine, it is in these.

Andronicus, staine not thy Tombe with blood.
 Wilt thou draw neere the nature of the Gods?
 Draw neere them then in being mercifull.
 Sweet mercy is Nobilitie true badge,
 Thrice Noble Titus, spare my first borne sonne.

Tit. Patient your selfe Madam, and pardon me.
 These are the Brethren, whom you Gothes beheld
 Alieue and dead, and for their Bretheren slaine,
 Religiously they aske a sacrifice:

To this your sonne is markt, and die he must,
 T'appease their groaning shadowes that are gone.

Luc. Away with him, and make a fire straight,
 And with our Swords vpon a pile of wood,
 Let's hew his limbes till they be cleane consum'd.

Exit Sonnes with Alarbus.

Tamo. O cruell irreligious piety,

Chi. Was euer Scythia halfe so barbarous?

Dem. Oppose me Scythia to ambitious Rome,

Alarbus goes to rest, and we suruiue,
 To tremble vnder Titus threatning lookes,
 Then Madam stand resolu'd, but hope withall,
 The selfe same Gods that arm'd the Queene of Troy
 With opportunitie of sharpe reuenge
 Vpon the Thracian Tyrant in his Tent,
 May fauour Tamora the Queene of Gothes,
 (When Gothes were Gothes, and Tamora was Queene)
 To quit the bloody wrongs vpon her foes.

Enter the Sonnes of Andronicus againe.

Luc. See Lord and Father, how we haue perform'd
 Our Romaine rites, Alarbus limbes are lopt,
 And intrals feede the sacrificing fire,
 Whole smoke like incense doth perfume the skie,
 Remaineth nought but to interre our Brethren,
 And with low'd Larums welcome them to Rome.

Tit. Let it be so, and let Andronicus
 Make thus his latest farewell to their soules.

Flourish.

Then Sound Trumpets, and lay the Coffins in the Tombe.
 In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes,
 Romes readiest Champions, repose you heere in rest,
 Secure from worldly chaunces and mishaps :
 Heere lurks no Treason, heere no enuie swels,
 Heere grow no damned grudges, heere are no stormes,
 No noyse, but silence and Eternall sleepe,
 In peace and Honour rest you heere my Sonnes.

Enter Lavinia.

Lau. In peace and Honour, liue Lord Titus long,
 My Noble Lord and Father, liue in Fame:
 I ceat this Tombe my tributarie teares,
 I render for my Bietnerens Obsequies.
 And at thy feet I kneele, with teares of ioy
 Shed on the earth for my returne to Rome.
 O bleesse me heere with thy victorious hand,
 Whose Fortunes Romes best Citizens applaud.

Tit. Kind Rome,
 That hast thus willingly referu'd
 The Cordiall of mine age to glad my hart,
Lavinia liue, out-lie thy Fathers dayes :
 And Fames eternall date for vertues praise.

Marc. Long liue Lord Titus, my beloved brother,
 Gracious Triumpher in the eyes of Rome.

Tit. Thanks Gentle Tribune,
 Noble brother Marcus.

Mar. And welcome Nephews from successfull wars,
 You that suruiue and you that sleepe in Fame.
 Faire Lords your Fortunes are all alike in all,
 That in your Countries seruice drew your Swords.
 But safer Triumph is this Funerall Pompe,
 That hath aspir'd to Solens Happiness,
 And Triumphs ouer chaunce in honours bed.
Titus Andronicus, the people of Rome,
 Whose friend in iustice thou hast ever bene,
 Send thee by me their Tribune and their trust,
 This Palliament of white and spotlesse Hue,
 And name thee in Election for the Empire,
 With these our late deceased Emperours Sonnes :
 Be Candidatus then, and put it on,
 And helpe to set a head on headlesse Rome.

Tit. A better head her Glorious body fits,
 Then his that shakes for age and feeblenesse.

What

What should I do on this Robe and trouble you,
Be chosen with proclamations to day,
To morrow yeeld vp rule, resigne my life,
And serabroad new businesse for you all
Rome I haue bene thy Souldier forty yeares,
And led my Countreys strength successiefully,
And buried one and twenty Valiant Sonnes,
Knighted in Field, slaine manfully in Armes.
In right and Seruice of their Noble Countrie.
Giue me a staffe of Honour for mine age,
But not a Scepter to controule the world,
Vpright he held it Lords, that hold it last.

Mar. Titus, thou shalt obtaine and aske the Emperie.

Sat. Proud and ambitious Tribune canst thou tell?

Titus. Patience Prince Saturninus.

Sat. Romanes do me right.

Patricians draw your Swords, and sheath them not Till Saturninus be Romes Emperour.

Andronicus would thou wert shipt to hell,
Rather then rob me of the peoples hearts.

Luc. Proud Saturnine, interrupter of the good
That Noble minded Titus meanes to thee.

Tit. Content thee Prince, I will restore to thee
The peoples hearts, and weane them from themselves.

Bas. Andronicus, I do not flatter thee
But Honour thee, and will doe till I die.
My Faction if thou strengthen with thy Friend
I will most thankfull be, and thanks to men
Of Noble mindes, is Honourable Meede.

Tit. People of Rome, and Noble Tribunes heere,
I aske your voyces and your Suffrages,
Will you bestow them friendly on Andronicus?

Tribunes. To gratifie the good Andronicus,
And Gratulate his safe returne to Rome,
The people will accept whom he admits.

Tit. Tribunes I thanke you, and this fare I make,
That you Create your Emperours eldest sonne,
Lord Saturnine, whose Vertues will I hope,
Reflect on Rome as Tytans Rayes on earth,
And ripen Iustice in this Common-weale:
Then if you will elect by my aduise,
Crown him, and say Long liue our Emperour.

Mar. An With Voyces and applauses of euery sort, Patricians and Plebeians we Create
Lord Saturninus Romes Great Emperour
And say, Long liue our Emperour Saturnine.

A long Flourish till they come downe.

Sat. Titus Andronicus, for thy Favours done,
To vs in our Election this day,
I giue thee thanks in part of thy Deserts,
And will with Deeds requite thy gentleness
And for an Onset Titus to aduance
Thy Name, and Honorable Familie,
Lavinia will I make my Emperesse,
Rome's Royall Mistresse, Mistresse of my hart
And in the Sacred Pathan her spouse:
Tell me Andronicus doth this motion please thee?

Tit. It doth my worthy Lord, and in this match,
I hold me Highly Honoured of your Grace,
And heere in sight of Rome, to Saturnine,
King and Commander of our Common-weale,
The Wrde-worlds Emperour, do I Consecrate,
My Sword, my Chariot, and my Prisoners,
Presents well Worthy Romes Imperiall Lord:
Receiue them then, the Tribute that I owe,
Mine Honours Ensignes humbled at my feete.

Sat. Thanks Noble Titus, Father of my life,
How proud I am of thee, and of thy gifts
Rome shall record, and when I do forget
The least of these vnspeakable Deserts,
Romans forger your Fealtie to me.

Tit. Now Madam are your prisoner to an Emperour,
To him that for you Honour and your State,
Will vie you Nobly and your followers.

Sat. A goodly Lady, trust me of the Hue
That I would choose, were I to choose a new:
Cleere vp Faire Queene that cloudy countenance,
Though chance of warre

Hath wrought this change of cheere,
Thou com'st not to be made a scorn in Rome:
Princely shall be thy vsage euery way.

Rest or my word, and let not discontent
Daunt all your hopes: Madam he comforts you,
Can make your Greater then the Queene of Gothes?
Lavinia you are not displeas'd with this?

Lau. Not I my Lord, sith true Nobilitie,
Warrants these words in Princely curesie.

Sat. Thanks sweete Lavinia, Romans let vs goe:
Ransomelesse heere we set our Prisoners free,
Proclaime our Honors Lords with Trumpet and Drum.

Bas. Lord Titus by your leave, this Maid is mine.

Tit. How fit? Are you in earnest then my Lord?

Bas. I Noble Titus, and resold withall,
To doe my selfe this reason, and this right.

Marc. Shun equum, is our Romane Iustice,
This Prince in Iustice ceazeth but his owne.

Luc. And that he will and shall, if Lucius liue.

Tit. Traytors auant, where is the Emperours Guard?
Treason my Lord, Lavinia is surpris'd.

Sat. Surpris'd, by whom?

Bas. By him that iustly may
Beare his Betroth'd, from all the world away.

Mutt. Brothers helpe to conuey her hence away,
And with my Sword Ile keepe this doore safe.

Tit. Follow my Lord, and Ile soone bring her backe.

Mut. My Lord you passe not heere.

Tit. What villaine Boy, bar'st me my way in Rome?

Mut. Helpe Lucius helpe. He kills him.

Luc. My Lord you are vnusht, and more then so,
In wrongfull quarrell, you haue slaine your son.

Tit. Nor thou, nor he ate any sonnes of mine,
My sonnes would neuer so dishonour me.
Traytor restore Lavinia to the Emperour.

Luc. Dead if you wil, but not to be his wife,
That is anothers lawfull promist Loue.

Enter aloft the Emperour with Tamora and her two sonnes, and Aaron the Moore.

Empe. No Titus, no, the Emperour needs her not,
Nor her, nor thee, nor any of thy stocke:

Ile trust by Leisure him that mocks me once,
Thee neuer - nor thy Trayterous haughty sonnes,
Confederates all, thus to dishonour me.
Was none in Rome to make a stale

But Saturnine? Full well Andronicus
Agree these Deeds, with that proud bragg of thine,
That said'st, I beg'd the Empire at thy hand?

Tit. O monstrous, what reproachfull words are these?

Sat. But gae thy wayes, goe gae that changing peece,
To him that flourish for her with his Sword:
A Valliant sonne in-law thou shalt enioy:
One, fit to bandy with thy lawlesse Sonnes,

To

To ruffle in the Common-wealth of Rome.

Tit. These words are Razors to my wounded hart.

Sat. And therefore louely Tamora Queene of Gothes,
That like the stately Thybe mong'rt her Nymphs
Dost ouer-shine the Gallant'st Dames of Rome,
If thou be pleas'd with this my sodaine choyle,
Behold I choose thee Tamora for my Bride,
And will Create thee Empresse of Rome.
Speake Queene of Goths dost thou applau'd my choysfe?
And heere I sweare by all the Romaine Gods,
Sith Priest and Holy-water are so neere,
And Tapers burne so bright, and euery thing
In readines for Hymeneus stand,
I will not resalute the streets of Rome,
Or clime my Pallace, till from forth this place,
I leade espous'd my Bride along with me.

Tamo. And heere in sight of heauen to Rome I sweare,
If Saturnine aduance the Queene of Gothes,
Shee will a Hand-maid be to his desires,
A louing Nurse, a Mother to his youth.

Satur. Ascend Faire Queene,
Panthean Lords, accompany
Your Noble Emperour and his louely Bride,
Sent by the heauens for Prince Saturnine,
Whose wisdom hath her Fortune Conquered,
There shall we Consummate our Spoufall rites.

Exeunt omnes.

Tit. I am not bid to waite vpon this Bride.
Titus when wer't thou wont to walke alone,
Dishonoured thus and Challenged of wrongs?

Enter Marcus and Titus Sonnes.

Mar. O Titus see! O see what thou hast done!
In a bad quarrell, slaine a Vertuous sonne.

Tit. No foolish Tribune, no. No sonne of mine,
Nor thou, nor these Confederates in the deed,
That hath dishonoured all our Family,
Vnworthy brother, and vnworthy Sonnes.

Luc. But let vs giue him buriall as be comes:
Giue Mutius buriall with our Bretheren

Tit. Traytors away, he rest's not in this Tombe:
This Monument fise hundreth yeares hath stood,
Which I haue Sumptuously re-edified:
Heere none but Souldiers, and Romes Sermitors,
Repose in Fame. None basely slaine in braules,
Bury him where you can, he comes not heere.

Mar. My Lord this is impiety in you,
My Nephew Mutius deeds do plead for him,
He must be buried with his bretheren.

Titus two Sonnes speakes.

And shall, or him we will accompany.

Tit. And shall! What villaine was it 'spake that word?

Titus sonne speakes.

He that would vouch'd it in any place but heere.

Tit. What would you bury him in my despite?

Mar. No Noble Titus, but in treat of thee,
To pardon Mutius, and to bury him.

Tit. Marcus, Euen thou hast stroke vpon my Crest,
And with these Boyes mine Honour thou hast wounded,
My foes I doe repure you euery one.

So trouble me no more but get you gone.

1. Sonne. He is not himselfe, let vs withdraw.

2. Sonne. Not I tell Mutius bones be buried.

The Brother and the sonnes kneele.

Mar. Brother for in that name doth nature plead.

2. Sonne. Father, and in that name doth nature speake.

Tit. Speake thou no more if all the rest will speede.

Mar. Renowned Titus more then halfe my soule.

Luc. Deare Father, soule and substance of vs all,

Mar. Suffer thy brother Marcus to interre
His Noble Nephew heere in vertues nest,
That died in Honour and Launias's cause.
Thou art a Romaine, be not barbarous:
The Greekes vpon aduise did bury Ajax
That slew himselfe. And Laertes sonne,
Did graciously plead for his Funerals.
Let not young Mutius then that was thy ioy,
Be bar'd his entrance heere.

Tit. Rise Marcus, rise,
The dismall'st day is this that ere I saw,
To be dishonored by my Sonnes in Rome.
Well, bury him, and bury me the next

They put him in the Tombe.

Luc. There lie thy bones sweet Mutius with thy Till we with Trophees do adorne thy Tombe. (friends)

They all kneele and say

No man shed teares for Noble Mutius,
He liues in Fame, that di'd in vertues cause. Exit.

Mar. My Lord to step out of these sudden dumps,
How comes it that the subtile Queene of Gothes,
Is of a sodaine thus aduanc'd in Rome?

Tit. I know not Marcus but I know it is,
(Whether by deuise or no) the heauens can tell,
Is the not then beholding to the man,
That brought her for this high good turne so farre?
Yes, and will Nobly him remunerate.

Flourish.

*Enter the Emperour, Tamora, and her two sons, with the Moore at one doore. Enter at the other doore Bassianus and

Sat. So Bassianus, you haue plaid your prize,
God giue you ioy sir of your Gallant Bride.

Bass. And you of yours my Lord. I say no more,
Nor wish no lesse, and so I take my leaue

Sat. Traytor, if Rome haue law, or we haue power,
Thou and thy Faction shall repent this Rape.

Bass. Rape call you it my Lord, to cease my owne,
My true betrothed Loue, and now my wife?
But let the lawes of Rome determine all,
Meane while I am posselt of that is mine

Sat. 'Tis good sir you are very short with vs,
But if we please, weele be as sharpe with you.

Bass. My Lord, what I haue done as best I may,
Answer I must, and shall do with my life,

Onely thus much I giue your Grace to know,
By all the duties that I owe to Rome,

Thy Noble Gentleman Lord Titus heere,
Is in opinion and in honour wrong'd,

That in the rescue of Launius,
With his owne hand did slay his youngest Son,

In zeale to you, and highly mou'd to wrath.
To be controul'd in that he frankly gaue.

Receive him then to fauour Saturnine,
That hath expre'st himselfe in all his deeds,
A Father and a friend to thee, and Rome.

Tit. Prince Bassianus leaue to plead my Deeds,
'Tis thou, and those, that haue dishonoured me.

Rome and the righteous heauens be my iudge,
How I haue lou'd and Honour'd Saturnine.

Tam. My worthy Lord if euer Tamora,

Were

Were gracious in those Princely eyes of thine,
Then heare me speake indifferently for all:
And at my sute (sweet) pardon what is past.
Satur. What Madam, be dishonoured openly,
And basely put it vp without reuenge?

Tam. Not so my Lord,
The Gods of Rome for-fend,
I should be Authour to dishonour you.
But on mine honour dare, I vndertake
For good Lord Titus innocence in all.
Whose fury not dissembled speaks his griefes:
Then at my sute looke graciously on him,
Loose not so noble a friend on vaine supposse,
Nor with sowe lookes assault his gentle heart.
My Lord, be rul'd by me, be wonne at last,
Dissemble all your griefes and discontents,
You are but newly planted in your Throne,
Least then the people, and Patricians too,
Vpon a iust suruey take Titus part,
And so supplant vs for ingratitude,
Which Rome reputes to be a hainous sinne.
Yeeld at intreats, and then let me alone
He finde a day to massacre them all,
And race their faction, and their familie,
The cruell Father, and his trayt'rous sonnes,
To whom I sued for my deare sonnes life.
And make them know what 'tis to let a Queene,
Kneele in the streetes, and beg for grace in vaine.
Come, come, sweet Emperour, (come Andronicus)
Take vp this good old man, and cheere the heart,
That dies in tempest of thy angry frowne.

King. Rise Titus, rise,
My Emperesse hath preuail'd
Titus I thank you Maiestie,
And her my Lord.
These words, these lookes,
Infuse new life in me.

Tamo. Titus, I am incorporate in Rome,
A Roman now adopted happily.
And must aduise the Emperour for his good,
This day all quarrels die Andronicus.
And let it be mine honour good my Lord,
That I haue reconcil'd your friends and you.
For you Prince Bassianus, I haue past
My word and promise to the Emperour,
That you will be more milde and tractable.
And feare not Lords.

And you Lavinia,
By my aduise all humbled on your knees,
You shall aske pardon of his Maiestie.

Sen. We doe,
And vow to heauen, and to his Highnes,
That what we did, was mildly, as we might,
Tending our sisters honour and our owne.

Mar. That on mine honour heere I do protest

King. Away and talke not, trouble vs no more.

Tamora. Nay, nay,
Sweet Emperour, we must all be friends,
The Tribune and his Nephews kneele for grace,
I will not be denied, sweet hart looke back.

King. Marcus,
For thy sake and thy brothers heere,
And at my lovely Tamora's intreats,
I doe remit these young mens haynous faults.
Stand vp Lavinia, though you left me like a churle,
I found a friend, and sure as death I sware,

I would not part a Batchellour from the Priest.
Come, if the Emperours Court can feast two Priests,
You are my guest Lavinia, and your friends:
This day shall be a Loue-day Tamora.

Tit. To morrow and it please your Maiestie,
To hunt the Panther and the Hart with me,
With horne and Hound,
Weele giue your Grace Bon iour.

Satur. Be it so Titus, and Gramercy to. Exeunt.

Actus Secunda.

Flourish. Enter Aaron alone.

Aron. Now climbeth Tamora Olympus toppe,
Safe out of Fortunes shot, and sits aloft,
Seture of Thunders cracke or lightning flash,
Aduanc'd about pale enuies threatning reach:
As when the golden Sunne salutes the morne,
And hauing gilt the Ocean with his beames,
Gallops the Zodiacke in his glistening Coach,
And ouer-lookes the highest piewing hills:

So Tamora!
Vpon her wit doth earthly honour waite,
And vertue stoopes and trembles at her frowne.
Then Aaron arme thy hart, and sit thy thoughts,
To mount aloft with thy Emperiall Mistis,
And mount her pitch, whom thou in triumph long
Hast prisoner held, fettered in amorous chaines,
And faster bound to Aarons charming eyes,
Then is Prometheus ti'd to Caucasus.
Away with slauish weedes, and idle thoughts,
I will be bright and shine in Pearle and Gold,
To waite vpon this new made Emperesse
To waite said I? To wanton with this Queene,
This Goddesse, this Semiramis, this Queene,
This Syren, that will charme Romes Saturnine,
And see his shipwracke, and his Common weales.
Hollo, what storme is this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius brauing.

Dem. Chiron thy yerres wants wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners to intru'd where I am grac'd,
And may for ought thou know'st affected be.

Ch. Demetrius, thou doo'st ouer-weene in all,
And so in this, to beate me downe with braues,
'Tis not the difference of a yeere or two
Makes me lesse gracious, or thee more fortunate:
I am as able, and as fit, as thou,

To serue, and to deserue my Mistis grace,
And that my sword vpon thee shall approue,
And plead my passions for Lavinia's loue.

Aron. Clubs, clubs, these louers will not keep the peace.

Dem. Why Boy, although our mother (vnaduis'd)
Gave you a daunsing Rapier by your side,
Are you so desperate growne to threat your friends?
Goe too, haue your Lath glued within your sheath,
Till you know better how to handle it.

Chi. Meane while sir, with the little skill I haue,
Full well shall thou perceiue how much I dare.

Dem. I Boy, grow ye so braue? They draw.

Aron. Why how now Lords?
So nere the Emperours Pallace dare you draw,

And

And maintaine such a quarrell openly?
Full well I wote, the ground of all this grudge
I would not for a million of Gold,
The cause were knowne to them it most concerns.
Nor would your noble mother for much more
Be so dishonored in the Court of Rome.
For shame pla't vp

Deme. Not I, till I haue sheath'd
My rapier in his bosome, and withall
Thrust these reprochfull speeches downe his throat,
That he hath breath'd in my dishonour heere.

Chs. For that I am prepar'd, and full resolu'd, Foule spoken Coward,
That thundrest with thy tongue,
And with thy weapon nothing dar'st performe.

Aron. A way I say
Now by the Gods that warlike Gothes adore,
This pretty brabble will vndoo vs all.
Why Lords, and thinke you not how dangerous
It is to set vpon a Princes right?
What is Lavinia then become so loose,
Or Bassianus so degenerate,
That for her loue such quarrels may be broacht,
Without controulement, iustice, or reuenge?
Young Lords beware, and should the Emperesse know,
This discord ground, the musicke would not please.

Chs. I care not I, knew she and all the world,
I loue Lavinia more then all the world

Deme. Youngling,
Learne thou to make some meaner choise,
Lavinia is thine elder brothers hope.

Aron. Why are ye mad? Or know ye not in Rome,
How furious and impatient they be,
And cannot brooke Competitors in loue?
I tell you Lords, you doe but plot your deaths,
By this deuise.

Chs. Aron, a thousand deaths would I propose,
To atchieue her whom I do loue.

Aron. To atchieue her, how?

Deme. Why, inak't thou it so strange?
Shee is a woman, therefore may be woo'd,
Shee is a woman, therefore may be wonne,
Shee is Lavinia therefore must be lou'd
What man, more water glideth by the Mill
Then wots the Miller of, and easie it is
Of a cut loose to steale a shiue we know:
Though Bassianus be the Emperours brother,
Better then he haue worne Vulcans badge.

Aron. I, and as good as Saturninus may.

Deme. Then why should he dispaire that knowes to
With words, faire looks, and liberality (court it
What hast not thou sili often stricke a Doe,
And borne her cleanly by the Keepers nose?

Aron. Why then it seemes some certaine snatch or so
Would serue your turnes.

Chs. I so the turne were serued.

Deme. Aaron thou hast hit it

Aron. Would you had hit it too,
Then should not we be tir'd with this adoo:
Why harke yee, harke yee, and are you such fooles,
To square for this? Would it offend you then?

Chs. Faith not me.

Deme. Nor me, so I were one.

Aron. For shame be friends, & ioyne for that you iar:
Tis pollicie, and stratageme must doe
That you affect, and so must you resolute,

That what you cannot as you would atchieue,
You must perforce accomplish as you may:
Take this of me, Lucece was not more chaste
Then this Lavinia, Bassianus loue,
A speedier course this lingring languishment
Must we pursue, and I haue found the path:
My Lords, a solemne hunting is in hand,
There will the louely Roman Ladies troope:
The Forrest walkes are wide and spacious,
And many vnfrequented plots there are,
Fitted by kinde for rape and villanie:
Single you thither then this dainty Doe,
And strike her home by force, if not by words.
This way or not at all, stand you in hope.
Come, come, our Emperesse with her sacred wit
To villanie and vengeance consecrate,
Will we acquaint with all that we intend,
And she shall file our engines with aduise,
That will not suffer you to square your selues,
But to your wishes height aduance you both.
The Emperours Court is like the house of Fame,
The pallace full of tongues, of eyes, of eares:
The Woods are ruthlesse, dreadfull, deafe, and dull:
There speake, and strike braue Boyes, & take your turnes.
There serue your lusts, shadow'd from heauens eye,
And reuell in Lavinia's Treasure.

Chs. Thy counsell Lad smells of no cowardise.

Deme. Syssa aut nefas, till I finde the streames,
To coole this heat, a Charme to calme their fits,
Per Stigia per manes Vebor. Exeant.

Enter Titus Andronicus and his three sonnes, making a noyse with bounds and hornes, and Marcus.

Tit. The hunt is vp, the morne is bright and gray,
The fields are fragrant, and the Woods are greene,
Vncouple heere, and let vs make a bay,
And wake the Emperour, and his louely Bride,
And rouse the Prince, and ring a hunters peale,
That all the Court may eccho with the noyse.
Sonnes let it be your charge, as it is ours,
To attend the Emperours person carefully.
I haue bene troubled in my sleepe this night,
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd.

Winde Hornes.

Heere a cry of houndes, and wind-hornes in a peale, then Enter Saturninus, Tamora, Bassianus, Lavinia, Chiron, Demetrius and their Attendants.

Ti. Many good morrowes to your Maiestie,
Madam to you as many and as good.
I promised your Grace, a Hunters peale.

Satur. And you haue rung it lustily my Lords,
Somewhat too carely for new married Ladies.

Bass. Lavinia, how say you?

Lau. I say no:

I haue bene awake two houres and more.

Satur. Come on then, horse and Chariots let vs haue,
And to our sport Madam, now shall ye see,
Our Romane hunting

Mar. I haue dogges my Lord,
Will rouse the proudest Panther in the Chase,
And clime the highest P omontary top.

Ti. And I haue horse will follow where the game
Makes way, and runnes likes Swallows ore the plaine

Deme. Chiron

Deme. Chiron we hunt not we, with Horle nor Hound
But hope to plucke a dainty Doe to ground. Exeunt

Enter Aaron alone.

Aron. He that had wit, would thinke that I had none,
To bury so much Gold vnder a Tree,
And neuer after to inherit it.
Let him that thinks of me so abiectly,
Know that this Gold must coine a Stratagem,
Which cunningly effected, will beget
A very excellent peece of villany
And so repose sweet Gold for their vnrest,
That haue the r Almes out of the Empresse Chest.

Enter Tamore to the Moore

Tamo. My louely Aaron,
Wherefore look'st thou sad,
When euery thing doth make a Gleefull boast?
The Birds chaunt melody on euery bush,
The Snake lies rolled in the chearefull Sunne,
The greene leaues quiver with the cooling winde,
And make a cheker'd shadow on the ground.
Vnder their sweete shade, Aaron let vs sit,
And whil'st the babling Echo mock's the Hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well tun'd-Hornes,
As if a double hunt were heard at once,
Let vs sit downe, and marke their yelping noyse
And after confliet, such as was suppos'd
The wandring Prince and Dido once enioy'd,
When with a happy storme they were surpris'd,
And Curtain'd with a Counsaile-keeping Caue,
We may each wreathed in the others armes,
(Our pastimes done) possesse a Golden slumber,
Whiles Hounds and Hornes, and sweet Melodious Birds
Be vnto vs, as is a Nurfes Song
Of Lullaby, to bring her Babe asleepe.

Aron. Madame,

Though Venus gouerne your desires,
Saturne is Dominator ouer mine.
What signifies my deadly standing eye,
My silence, and my Cloudy Melancholic,
My fleece of Woolly haire, that now incurles,
Euen as an Adder when she doth vnrowle
To do some fatall execution?
No Madam, these are no Veneriall signes,
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand,
Blood, and reuenge, are Hammering in my head.
Marke Tamora, the Empresse of my Soule,
Which neuer hopes more heauy, then rests in thee,
This is the day of Doome for Bassianus,
His Phylomet must loose her tongue to day,
Thy Sonnes make Pillage of her Chastity,
And wash their hands in Bassianus blood.
Seest thou this Letter, take it vp I pray thee,
And giue the King this fatall plotted Scrowle,
Now question me no more, we are espied,
Heere comes a parcell of our hopefull Booty,
Which dreads not yet their liues destruction!

Enter Bassianus and Lavinia.

Tamo. Ah my sweete Moore:
Sweeter to me then life.

Aron. No more grear Empresse, Bassianus comes,
Be crosse with him, and he goe fetch thy Sonnes
To backe thy quarrell what so euer they be.

Bassi. Whom haue we heere?
Romes Royall Empresse,

Vnfurnisht of our well beseeing troope?
Or is it Dian habited like her,
Who hath abandoned her holy Groues,
To see the generall Hunting in this Forrest?

Tamo. Saweie countouler of our priuate steps:
Had I the power, that some say Dian had,
Thy Temples should be planted presently.
With Hornes, as was Alcians, and the Hounds
Should driue vpon his new transformed limbes,
Vnmannerly Intruder as thou art.

Lani. Vnder your patience gentle Empresse,
'Tis thought you haue a goodly gift in Horning,
And to be doubted, that your Moore and you
Are siagled forth to try experiments:
Ioue shield your husband from his Hounds to day,
Tis pr'y they should take him for a Stag.

Bassi. Belecue me Queene, your swarth Cymerion,
Doth make your Honour of his bodies Hue,
Spotted, detested, and abominable.
Why are you sequestred from all your traine?
Disfrumted from your Snow-white goodly Steed,
And wandred hither to an obscure plot,
Accompanied with a barbarous Moore,
If foule desire had not conducted you?

Lani. And being intercepted in your sport,
Great reason that my Noble Lord, be rated
For Saucinesse, I pray you let vs hence,
And let her ioy her Rauens coloured loue,
This valley fits the purpose passing well.

Bassi. The King my Brother shall haue notice of this.

Lani. I, for these slips haue made him noted long,
Good Goodnes, to be so mightily abused.

Tamora. Why I haue patience to endure all this?

Enter Chiron and Demetrius.

Dem. How now decre Soueraigne
And our gracious Mother,
Why doth your Highnes looke so pale and wan?

Tamo. Haue I not reason thinke you to looke pale.
These two haue tic'd me hither to this place,
A barren, detested vale you see it is.
The Trees though Sommer, yet forlorne and leane,
Ore-come with Moss, and baleful Mistleto.
Heere neuer shines the Sunne, heere nothing breeds,
Vnlesse the nightly Owle, or fatall Rauens:
And when they shew'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me heere at dead time of the night,
A thousand Fien Is, a thousand hissing Snakes,
Ten thousand swelling Toades, as many Vrchins,
Would make such fearefull and confused cries,
As any mortall body hearing it,
Should straite fall mad, or else die suddenly.
No sooner had they told this hellish tale,
But straite they told me they would binde me heere,
Vnto the body of a dismall yew,
And leaue me to this miserable death.
And then they call'd me foule Adulteresse,
Lasciuious Goth, and all the bitterest teames
That euer care did heare to such effect.
And had you not by wondrous fortune come,
This vengeance on me had they executed:
Reuenge it, as you loue your Mothers life,
Or be ye not henceforth call'd my Children.

Dem. This is a witness that I am thy Sonne stab him.

Chi. And this for me,

Strook home to shew my strength

Lani. I come Semetimus, nay Barbarous Tamora

d d

For

For no name fits thy nature but thy owne.

Tam. Giue me thy poynard, you shal know my boyes
Your Mothers hand shall right your Mothers wrong.

Deme. Stay Madam heere is more belongs to her,
First thrash the Corne, then after burne the straw.
This Minion stood vpon her chastity,
Vpon her Nuptiall vow, her loyaltie,
And with that painted hope, braues your Mightinesse,
And shall she, carry this vnto her graue?

Chi. And if she doe,
I would I were an Eunuch,
Drag hence her husband to some secret hole,
And make his dead Trunke-Pillow to our lust.

Tamo. But when ye haue the hony we desire,
Let not this Waspe out-hue vs both to sting.

Chi. I warrant you Madam we will make that sure:
Come Mistress, now perforce we will enioy,
That nice-preserved honesty of yours.

Lani. Oh Tamora, thou bear'st a woman face.

Tamo. I will not learne her speake, away with her.

Lani. Sweet Lords murther her heere me but a word.

Deme. Listen faire Madam, let it be your glory
To see her teares, but be your hart to them,
As vnrelenting flint to drops of raine.

Lani. When did the Tigers young-ones teach the dam?
O doe not learne her wrath, she taught it thee,
The milke thou suckt from her did turne to Marble,
Euen at thy Teat thou hadst thy Tyranny,
Yet euery Mother breeds not Sonnes alike,
Do thou intreat her shew a woman pity.

Chiro. What,
Would'st thou haue me proue my selfe a bastard?

Lani. 'Tis true,
The Rauens doth not hatch a Larke,
Yet haue I heard, Oh could I finde it now,
The Lion mowd with pity, did endure
To haue his Princely pawes pat'd all away.
Some say, that Rauens foster forlorne children,
The while't their owne birds famish in their neits:
Oh be to me though thy hard hart say no,
Nothing so kind but something pittifull.

Tamo. I know not what it meanes, away with her.

Lani. Oh let me teach thee for my Fathers sake,
That gaue thee life when well he might haue slaine thee:
Be not obdurate, open thy deafe eares.

Tamo. Had'st thou in person nere offended me,
Euen for his sake am I pittiflesse
Remember Boyes I pow'd forth teares in vaine,
To saue your brother from the sacrifice,
But fierce Andronicus would not relent,
Therefore away with her, and vse her as you will,
The worse to her, the better Iou'd of me.

Lani. Oh Tamora,
Be call'd a gentle Queene,
And with thine owne hands kill me in this place,
For 'tis not life that I haue beg'd so long.
Poore I was slaine, when Bassianus dy'd.

Tam. What beg'st thou then? fond woman let me go?

Lani. 'Tis present death I beg, and one thing more,
That womanhood denues my tongue to tell
Oh keepe me from their worse then killing lust,
And rumble me into some loathsome pit,
Where neuer mans eye may behold my body,
Doe this, and be a charitable murderer.

Tam. So should I rob my sweet Sonnes, of their see,
No leaue them sacrifice their lust on thee.

Deme. Away,

For thou hast staid vs heere too long.

Laminia. No Garace,
No womanhood? Ah beastly creature,
The blot and enemy to our generall name,
Confusion fall—

Chi. Nay then Ile stop your mouth
Bring thou her husband,
This is the Hole where Aaron bid vs hide him.

Tam. Farewell my Sonnes, see that you make her sure,
Nere let my heere know merry cheere indeed,
Till all the Andronicus be made away.
Now will I hence to seeke my louely Marcus,
And let my spleenefull Sonnes this Truall defloure. Exit.

Enter Aaron with two of Titus Sonnes.

Aron. Come on my Lords, the better foote before,
Straight will I bring you to the loathsome pit,
Where I espied the Panther fast asleepe.

Quint. My sight is very dull what ere it bodes.

Marc. And mine I promise you, were it not for shame,
Well could I leaue our sport to sleepe a while.

Quint. What art thou fallen?
What subtle Hole is this,
Whose mouth is couered with Rude growing Briars,
Vpon whose leaues are drops of new-shed blood,
As fresh as mornings dew distill'd on flowers,
A very small place it seemes to me:
Speake Brother hast thou hurt thee with the fall?

Marc. Oh Brother,
With the dismal it object
That euer eye with sight made heart lament.
Aron. No vntill I fetch the King to finde them heere,
That he thereby may haue a likely gesse,
How these were they that made away his Brother.

Exit Aaron

Marc. Why dost not comfort me and helpe me out,
From this unhallow'd and blood stained Hole?

Quint. I am affrighted with an vncouth feare,
A chilling feare runs my trembling ioynts,
My heart suspect more then mine eye can see.

Marc. To proue thou hast a true diuining heart,
Aron and thou looke downe into this den,
And see a fearefull sight of blood and death.

Quint. Aron is gone,
And my compassionate eares
Will not permit mine eyes once to behold
The thing whereat it trembles by surmise:
Oh tell me how it is, for nere till now
Was I a child, so feare I know not what.

Marc. Lord Bassianus lies embrewed heere,
All on a heape like to the slaughtered Lamb,
In this detested, darke, blood-drinking pit.

Quint. If it be darke, how doost thou know 'tis he?

Marc. Vpon his bloody finger he doth weare
A precious Ring, that lightens all the Hole:
Which like a Taper in some Monument,
Doth shine vpon the dead mans earthly cheekes,
And shewes the ragged intrails of the pit.
So pale did shine the Mooone on Pyramus,
When he by night lay bath'd in Maiden blood:
O Brother helpe me with thy shining hand,
If feare hath made thee false as mine is bath,
Out of this fell deuouring receptacle,
As hatefull as Oculus his birth.

Quint. Reach me thy hand, that I may helpe thee out,
Or

Or wanting strength to doe thee so much good,
I may be pluckt into the swallowing wombe,
Of this deepe pit, poore Bassianus graue.
I haue no strength to plucke thee to the brinke.

Martius. Nor I no strength to clime without thy help.

Quintus. Thy hand once more, I will not loose againe,
Till thou art heere aloft, or I below,
Thou can'st not come to me, I come to thee. Both fall in.

Enter the Emperour, Aaron the Moore

Satur. Along with me, He see what hole is heere,
And what he is that now is leapt into it
Say, who art thou that lately did'st descend,
Into this gaping hollow of the earth?

Martius. The vnhappie sonne of old Andronicus,
Brought hither in a most vnluckie houre,
To finde thy brother Bassianus dead.

Satur. My brother dead? I know 't ou'dst but iest,
He and his Lady both are at the Lodge,
Vpon the North-side of this pleasant Chase,
'Tis not an houre since I left him there.

Martius. We know not where you left him all aloue,
But our alas, heere haue we found him dead.

Enter Tamora, Andronicus, and Lucius.

Tamora. Where is my Lord the King?

King. Heere Tamora, though grieu'd with killing griefe

Tam. Where is thy brother Bassianus?

King. Now to the bottome dost thou search my wound,
Poore Bassianus heere lies murdered.

Tam. Then all too late I bring this fatall writ,
The complot of this timelesse Tragedie,
And wonder greatly that mans face can fold,
In pleasing smiles such murderous Tyrannie.

She giueth Saturninus a Letter.

Saturninus reads the Letter.

*And if we misse to meete him banefully,
Sweet huntsman, Bassianus 'tis we meane,
Doe thou so much as dig the graue for him,
Thou know'st our meaning, looke for thy reward
Among the Nettles at the Elder tree
Which ouer-shades the mouth of that same pit:
Where we decreed to bury Bassianus
Doe this and purchase vs thy lasting friends*

King. Oh Tamora, was euer heard the like?
This is the pit, and this the Elder tree,
Looke first, if you can finde the huntsman out,
That should haue murdered Bassianus heere.

Aaron. My gracious Lord heere is the bag of Gold.

King. Two of thy whelpes, fell Curs of bloody kind
Haue heere bereft my brother of his life.
Sirs drag them from the pit vnto the prison,
There let them bide vntill we haue deuiz'd
Some neuer heard-of tortering paine for them.

Tamora. What are they in this pit,
Oh wondrous thing!
How easily murder is discovered?

Tit. High Emperour, vpon my feeble knee,
I beg this boone, with teares, not lightly shed,
That this fell fault of my accursed Sonnes,
Accursed, if the faults be prou'd in them.

King. If it be prou'd? you see it is apparant,

Who found this Letter, Tamora was it you?

Tamora. Andronicus himselfe did take it vp.

Tit. I did my Lord,

Yet let me be their baile,

For by my Fathers reuerent Tombe I vow

They shall be ready at your Highnes will,

To answere their suspicion with their liues

King. Thou shalt not baile them, see thou follow me
Some bring the murdered body, some the murderers,
Let them not speake a word, the guilt is plaine,
For by my soule, were there worse end then death,
I hat end vpon them should be executed.

Tamora. Andronicus I will entreat the King,
Feare not thy Sonnes, they shall do well enough.

Tit. Come Lucius come,

Stay not to take with them,

Exeunt.

Enter the Emperesse Sonnes, with Lavinia, her hands cut off and her tongue cut out, and vanisht.

Deme. So now goe tell and if thy tongue can speake,
Who 'twas that cut thy tongue and rauisht thee.

Ch. Write downe thy mind, bewray thy meaning so,
And if thy stumpe will let thee play the Scribe.

Deme. See how with signes and tokens she can scowle

Ch. Goe home,

Call for sweet water, wash thy hands.

Deme. She hath no tongue to call, nor hands to wash.
And so let's leaue her to her silent walkes,

Ch. And 'twere my cause, I should goe hang my selfe.

Deme. If thou had'st hands to helpe thee knit the cord.

Exeunt

Wilde Hornes.

Enter Marcus from hunting, to Lavinia.

Who is this, my Neece that flies away to fast?

Cofen a word, where is you. husband?

If I do dreame would all my wealth would wake me;

If I doe wake, some Planet strike me downe,

That I may slumber in eternall sleepe

Speake gentle Neece, what sterne vngentle hands

Hath lopt, and hew'd, and made thy body bare

Of her two branches, those sweet Ornaments

Whose circkling shadowes, Kings haue sought to sleep in

And might not gaine so great a happines

As halfe thy Loue Why doost not speake to me?

Alas, a Crimson riuer of warme blood,

Like to a bubling fountaine stur'd with winde,

Doth rise and fall betweene thy Rosed lips,

Comming and going with thy hony breath.

But sure some Tereus hath deflowered thee,

And least thou should'st detect them, cut thy tongue.

Ah, now thou turn'st away thy face for shame:

And notwithstanding all this losse of blood,

As from a Conduit with their issing Spouts,

Yet doe thy cheekes looke red as Titanus face,

Blushing to be encountred with a Cloud,

Shall I speake for thee? Shall I say 'tis so?

Oh that I knew thy hart, and knew the beaſt

That I might raile at him to ease my mind.

Sorrow concealed, like an Ouen stopt,

Doth burne the hart to Cinders where it is.

Faire Philemela she but lost her tongue,

And in a tedious Sampler sowed her minde.

But louely Neece, that meane is cut from thee,

A craftier Tereus hast thou met withall,

And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,

dd 2

That

That could haue better sowed then Philomel.
 Oh had the monster scene those Lilly hands,
 Tremble like Aspen leaues vpon a Lute,
 And make the sicken strings delight to kisse them,
 He would not then haue toucht them for his life.
 Or had he heard the heauenly Harmony,
 Whic h that sweet tongue hath made:
 He would haue dropt his knife and fell asleepe,
 As Cerberus at the Thracian Poets seete.
 Come, let vs goe, and make thy father blinde,
 For such a sight will blinde a fathers eye.
 One houres storme will drowne the fragrant meades,
 What, will whole months of teares thy Fathers eyes?
 Doe not draw backe, for we will mourne with thee
 Oh could our mourning ease thy misery. Exeunt

Actus Tertius.

Enter the Iudges and Senatours with Titus two sonnes bound, passing on the Stage to the place of execution, and Titus going before pleading.

Ti. Heare me graue fathers, noble Tribunes slay,
 For pittie of mine age, whose youth was spent
 In dangerous warres, whilst you securely slept
 For all my blood in Romes great quarrell shed,
 For all the frosty nights that I haue watcht,
 And for these bitter teares, which now you see,
 Filling the aged wrinkles in my cheekes,
 Be pittifull to my condemned Sonnes,
 Whose soules is not corrupted as 'tis thought:
 For two and twenty sonnes I neuer wept,
 Because they died in honours lofty bed.

Andronicus lyeth downe, and the Iudges passe by him.
 For these, Tribunes, in the du? I write
 My harts deepe languor, and my soules sad teares:
 Let my teares stanch the earths drie appetite
 My sonnes sweet blood, will make it shame and blush
 O earth! I will be friend thee more with raine Exeunt
 That shall distill from these two ancient ruines,
 Then youthfull Aprill shall with all his showres
 In Summers drought: He drop vpon thee still,
 In Winter with warme teares He melt the snow,
 And keepe eternall spring time on thy face,
 So thou refuse to drinke my deare sonnes blood.

Enter Lucius, with his weapon drawne.

Oh reuerent Tribunes, oh gentle aged men,
 Vnbinde my sonnes, reuerse the doome of death,
 And let me say (that neuer wept before)
 My teares are now preualing Oratours.

Lu. Oh noble father, you lament in vaine,
 The Tribunes heare not, no man is by,
 And you recount your sorrowes to a stone.

Ti. Ah Lucius for thy brothers let me plead,
 Graue Tribunes, once more I intreat of you.

Lu. My gracious Lord, no Tribune heares you speake.

Ti. Why 'tis no matter man, if they did heare
 They would not marke me oh if they did heare
 They would not pittie me.
 Therefore I tell my sorrowes bootles to the stones.

Who though they cannot answere my distresse,
 Yet in some sort they are better then the Tribunes,
 For that they will not intercept my tale;
 When I doe weepe, they humbly at my seete
 Receiue my teares, and seeme to weepe with me,
 And were they but attired in graue weedes,
 Rome could afford no Tribune like to these.
 A stone is as soft waxe,
 Tribunes more hard then stones.
 A stone is silent, and offendeth not,
 And Tribunes with their tongues doome men to death.
 But wherefore stand'st thou with thy weapon drawne?

Lu. To rescue my two brothers from their death,
 For which attempt the Iudges haue pronounc'd
 My euermlasting doome of banishment.

Ti. Oh happy man, they haue befriended thee:
 Why foolish Lucius, dost thou not perceiue
 That Rome is but a wildernes of Tigers?
 Tigers must pray, and Rome affords no prey
 But me and and mine: how happy art thou then,
 From these deuourers to be banished?
 But who comes with our brother Marcus heere?

Enter Marcus and Launius.

Mar. Titus, prepare thy noble eyes to weepe,
 Or if not so, thy noble heart to breake:
 I bring consuming sorrow to thine age.

Ti. Will it consume me? I et me see it then.

Mar. This was thy daughter.

Ti. Why Marcus so she is.

Luc. Aye me this obiect kils me.

Ti. Faint-hearted boy, arise and looke vpon her,
 Speake Launius, what accursed hand
 Hath made thee handlelesse in thy Fathers fight?
 What foole hath added water to the Sea?
 Or brought a faggot to bright burning Troy?
 My griete was at the height before thou cam'st,
 And now like Nylus it dildameth bounds:
 Giue me a swor, Ile chop off my hands too,
 For they haue fought for Rome, and all in vaine:
 And they haue nu't this woe.
 In feeding life:

In bootelesse prayer haue they bene held vp,

And they haue seru'd me to effectlesse vs.

Now all the seruice I require of them,

Is that the one will helpe to cut the other:

'Tis well Launius, that thou hast no hands,

For hands to do Rome seruice, is but vaine.

Luc. Speake gentle sister, who hath martyr'd thee?

Mar. O that delightfull engine of her thoughts,
 That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
 Is torne from forth that pretty hollow cage,
 Where like a sweet melodius bird it sung,
 Sweet varied notes inchanting euery eare.

Luc. Oh say thou for her,
 Who hath done this deed?

Mar. Oh thus I found her straying in the Parke,
 Seeking to hide herselfe as doth the Deare
 That hath receiue some vnrecuring wound.

Ti. It was my Deare,
 And he that wounded her,
 Hath hurt me more, then had he kild me dead:
 For now I stand as one vpon a Rocke,
 Inuiron'd with a wildernes of Sea.
 Who markes the waxing tide,
 Grow waue by waue,

Expecting

Expecting euer when some enuious surge,
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.
This way to death my wretched sonnes are gone:
Heere stands my other sonne, a banisht man,
And heere my brother weeping at my woes
But that which giues my soule the greatest spurne,
Is deere Launius, deerer then my soule
Had I but seene thy picture in this plight,
It would haue manded me: What shall I doe?
Now I behold thy luely body so?

Thou hast no hands to wipe away thy teares,
Nor tongue to tell me who hath martyr'd thee:
Thy husband he is dead, and for his death
Thy brothers are condemn'd, and dead by this.
Looke Marcus, ah sonne Lucius looke on her:
When I did name her brothers, then fresh teares
Stood on her cheekes, as doth the hony dew,
Vpon a gathered Lillie almost withered,

Mar. Perchance she weepes because they kil'd her husband,

Perchance because she knowes him innocent.

Ti. If they did kill thy husband then be ioyfull,
Because the law hath tane reuenge on them.

No, no, they would not doe so foule a deeде,
Witness the sorrow that their sister makes.

Gentle Launius let me kisse thy lips,
Or make some signes how I may do thee ease.

Shall thy good Vncle, and thy brother Lucius,
And thou and I sit round about some Fountaine,

Looking all downewards to behold our cheekes
How they are stain'd in me: dows, yet not dry

With miery slime left on them by a flood.
And in the Fountaine shall we gaze so long,

Till the fresh taste be taken from that cleerenes,
And made a brine pit with our bitter teares?

Or shall we cut away our hands like thine?
Or shall we bite our tongues, and in dumbe shewes

Pass the remainder of our hatefull dayes?
What shall we doe? Let vs that haue our tongues

Plot some deuise of further miseries

To make vs wondred at in time to come

Lu. Sweet Father cease, our teares, for at your griefe
See how my wretched sister sobs and weeps.

Mar. Patience deere Neece, good Titus drie thine eyes.

Ti. Ah Marcus, Marcus, Brother well I wot,
Thy naphin cannot drinke a teare of mine,

For thou poore man hast drown'd it with thine owne.
Lu. Ah my Launius I will wipe thy cheekes.

Ti. Marke Marcus marke, I vnderstand her signes,
Had she a tongue to speake, now would she say

That to her brother which I saue to thee.
His Napkin with her true teares all beuer,

Can do no seruice on her sorrowfull cheekes.
Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!

As farre from helpe as Limbo is from blisse,

Enter Aron the Moore alone

Moore. Titus Andronicus, my Lord the Emperour,
Sends thee this word, that if thou loue thy sonnes,
Let Marcus, Lucius, or thy selfe old Titus,
Or any one of you, chop off your hand,
And send it to the King he for the same,
Will send thee hither both thy sonnes aliue,
And that shall be the ranfome for their fault

Ti. Oh gracious Emperour, oh gentle Aron,
Did euer Rauens sing so like a Lark,
That giues sweet tydings of the Sunnes vprise?
With all my heart, Ile send the Emperour my hand,
Good Aron wilt thou help to chop it off?

Lu. Stay Father, for that noble hand of thine,
That hath throwne downe so many enemies,
Shall not be sent: my hand will serue the turne,
My youth can better spare my blood then you,
And therefore mine shall saue my brothers liues.

Mar. Which of your hands hath not defended Rome,
And rear'd aloft the bloody Battleaxe,
Writing destruction on the enemies Castle?
Oh none of both but are of high desert.
My hand hath bin but idle, let it serue
To ranfome my two nephewes from their death,
Then haue I kept it to a worthy end.

Moore. Nay come agree, whose hand shall goe along
For feare they die before their pardon come.

Mar. My hand shall goe.

Lu. By heauen it shall not goe

Ti. Sirs strue no more, such withered hearbs as these Are meete for plucking vp, and therefore mine.

Lu. Sweet Father, if I shall be thought thy sonne,
Let me redeeme my brothers both from death

Mar. And for our fathers sake, and mothers care,
Now let me shew a brothers loue to thee.

Ti. Agree betweene you, I will spare my hand.

Lu. Then Ile goe fetch an Axe.

Mar. But I will vse the Axe.

Exeunt

Ti. Come hither Aron, Ile deceiue them both,
Lend me thy hand, and I will giue thee mine.

Moore. If that be cal'd deceit, I will be honest,
And neuer whilst I liue deceiue men so.

But Ile deceiue you in another sort,
And that you'll say ere halfe an houre passe.

He cuts off Titus hand.

Enter Lucius and Marcus againe

Ti. Now stay you strife, what shall be, is dispatch:
Good Aron giue his Maistie me hand.

Tell him, it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers: bid him bury it:
More hath it merited: That let it haue.

As for for my sonnes, say I account of them,
As jewels purchast at an easie price,
And yet deere too, because I bought mine owne.

Aron. I goe Andronicus, and for thy hand,
Looke by and by to haue thy sonnes with thee:
Their heads I meane: Oh how this villany
Doth fat me with the very thoughts of it.
Let fooler dee good, and faire men call for grace,
Aron will haue his soule blacke like his face.

Exit.

Ti. O heere I lift this one hand vp to heauen,
And bow this feeble ruine to the earth,
If any power pitties wretched teares,
To that I call: what wilt thou kneele with me?
Doe then deare heart, for heauen shall heare our prayers,
Or with our sighs wee breathe the welkin dimme,
And staine the Sun with fogge as sometime cloudes,
When they do hug him in their melting bosomes.

Mar. Oh brother speake with possibilitie,
And do not breake into these deepe extreames

Ti. Is not my sorrow deepe, hauing no bot' ome

dd 3

nen

Then be my passions bottomlesse with them.

Mar. But yet let reason gouerne thy lament.

Titus. If there were reason for these miseries,
Then into limits could I binde my woes.
When heauen doth weepe, doth not the earth oreflow?
If the windes rage, doth not the Sea wax mad,
Threatning the welkin with his big-swolne face?
And wilt thou haue a reason for this coile?
I am the Sea. Harke how her sighes doe flow.
Shee is the weeping welkin, I the earth:
Then must my Sea be moued with her sighes,
Then must my earth with her continuall teares,
Become a deluge ouerflow'd and drown'd.
For why, my bowels cannot hide her woes,
But like a drunkard must I vomit them:
Then giue me leaue, for loosers will haue leaue,
To ease their stomackes with their bitter tongues,

Enter a messenger with two heads and a hand.

Mess. Worthy Andronicus, ill art thou repaid,
For that good hand thou sentst the Emperour.
Heere are the heads of thy two noble sonnnes.
And heeres thy hand in scorne to thee sent backe.
Thy griefes, their sports. Thy resolution mockt,
That woe is me to thinke vpon thy woes,
More then remembrance of my fathers death.

Exit.

Marc. Now let hot Aeneas coole in Cicilie,
And be my heart an euer-burning hell.
These miseries are more then may be borne
To weepe with them that weepe, doth ease some deale,
But sorrow flouted at, is double death.

Luci. Ah that this sight should make so deep a wound,
And yet detested life not shrinke thereat
That euer death should let life beare his name,
Where life hath no more interest but to breath.

Mar. Alas poore hart that kisse is comfortlesse,
As frozen water to a starued snake.

Titus. When will this fearefull slumber haue an end?

Mar. Now farwell flatterie, die Andronicus,
Thou dost not slumber, see thy two sons heads,
Thy warlike hands, thy mangled daughter here.
Thy other banisht sonnes with this deere sight
Strucke pale and bloodlesse, and thy brother I,
Euen like a stony Image, cold and numme.
Ah now no more will I controule my griefes,
Rent off thy silver haire, thy other hand
Gnawing with thy teeth, and be this dismall sight
The closing vp of our most wretched eyes:
Now is a time to storme, why art thou still?

Titus. Ha, ha, ha,

Mar. Why dost thou laugh? it fits not with this houre.

Ti. Why I haue not another teare to shed
Besides, this sorrow is an enemy,
And would vsurpe vpon my watry eyes,
And make them blinde with tributarie teares.
Then which way shall I finde Reuenges Cause?
For these two heads doe seeme to speake to me,
And threat me, I shall neuer come to blisse,
Till all these mischieues be returned againe,
Euen in their throats that haue committed them.
Come let me see what taske I haue to doe,
You heauenly people, circle me about,
That I may turne me to each one of you,
And sweare unto my soule to right your wrongs.
The vow is made, come Brother take a head,

And in this hand the other will I beare.

And Lavinia thou shalt be employd in these things:
Beare thou my hand sweet wench betweene thy teeth:
As for thee hoy, goe get thee from my sight,
Thou art an Exile, and thou must not stay,
Hie to the Goths, and raise an army there,
And if you loue me, as I thinke you doe,
Let's kisse and part, for we haue much to doe.

Exeunt.

Manet Lucius.

Luci. Farewell Andronicus my noble Father:
The woful'st man that euer liu'd in Rome:
Farewell proud Rome, til Lucius come againe,
Heloues his pledges dearer then his life:
Farewell Lavinia my noble sister,
O would thou wert as thou to fore hast beene,
But now, nor Lucius nor Lavinia lues
But in oblivion and hateful griefes:
If Lucius lues, he will requit your wrongs,
And make proud Saturnine and his Empresse
Beg at the gates likes Tarquin and his Queene.
Now will I to the Goths and raise a power,
To be reueng'd on Rome and Saturnine.

Exit Lucius

A Brauet.

Enter Andronicus, Marcus, Lavinia, and the Boy.

An. So, so, now sit, and looke you eate no more
Then will preferue iust so much strength in vs
As will reuenge these bitter woes of ours.

Marcus ynknit that sorrow-wreathen knot:
Thy Neece and I (poore Creatures) want our hands
And cannot passionate our tenfold grieffe,
With fouled Armes. This poore right hand of mine,
Is left to tyrannize vpon my breast,
Who when my hart all mad with misery,
Beats in this hollow prison of my flesh,
Then thus I chumpe it downe.

Thou Map of woe, that thus dost talk in signes,
When thy poore hart beates without ragious beating,
Thou canst not strike it thus to make it still?
Wound it with sighing gyle, kil it with groanes
Or get some litle knife betweene thy teeth,
And iust against thy hart make thou a hole,
That all the teares that thy poore eyes let fall
May run into that sinke, and soaking in,
Drowne the lamenting foole, in Sea salt teares.

Mar. Fy brother fy, teach her not thus to lay
Such violent hands vpon her tender life.

An. How now! Has sorrow made thee doate already?
Why Marcus, no man should be mad but I.

What violent hands can she lay on her life:
Ah, wherefore dost thou vrge the name of hands,
To bid Aeneas tell the tale twice ore
How Troy was burnt, and he made miserable?
O handle not the theame, to talke of hands,
Least we remember still that we haue none,
Fie, fie, how Frantiquely I square my talke
As if we should forget we had no hands:
If Marcus did not name the word of hands.
Come, lets fall too, and gentle gyle eate this,
Heere is no drinke, Harke Marcus what she saies,
I can interpret all her martur'd signes,
She saies, she drinke no other drinke but teares
Brew'd with her sorrow. merr'd vpon her cheekes,

Speech.

Speechlesse complayne, I will learne thy thought:
In thy dumb action, will I be as perfect
As begging Hermits in their holy prayers.
Thou shalt not sight nor hold thy stumps to heaven,
Nor winke, nor nod, nor kneele, nor make a signe,
But I (of these) will wrest an Alphabet,
And by still practice, learne to know thy meaning.

Boy. Good grandfire leaue these buter deepe laments,
Make my Aunt merry, with some pleasing tale.

Mar. Alas, the tender boy in passion mou'd,
Doth weepe to see his grandfires heauireffe.

An. Peace tender Sapling, thou art made of teares,
And teares will quickly melt thy life away

Marcus strikes the dylb with a knife.

What doest thou strike at Marcus with knife

Mar. At that that I haue kil'd my Lord, a Flys

An. Out on the murderour thou kil'st my hart,
Mine eyes clo'd with view of Titrane
A deed of death done on the Innocent
Becoms not Titus broher get thee goue,
I see thou art not for my company

Mar. Alas (my Lord) I haue but kild a flie

An. But? How if that Flie had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings
And buz lamenting doings in the ayer,
Poore harmelesse Fly,
That with his pretty buzring melody,
Came heere to make vs merry,
And thou hast kil'd him.

Mar. Pardon me sir,
It was a blacke illfauour'd Fly,
Like to the Empresse Moore, therefore I kild him.

An. O, o, o,
Then pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a Charitable deed:
Giue me thy knife, I will insult on him,
Flattering my selves, as if it were the Moore,
Come nither purposely to poyson me.
Ther'es for thy selfe, and thats for Tamara. Alisira,
Yet I thinke we are not brought so low,
But that betweene vs, we can kill a Fly,
That comes in likenesse of a Cole-blacke Moore.

Mar. Alas poore man, griefe ha's so wrought on him,
He takes false shadowes, for true substances
And, Come, take away: Lavinia, goe with me,
He to thy closset, and goe read with thee
Sad stories, chanced in the times of old.
Come boy, and goe with me, thy sight is young,
And thou shalt read, when mine begin to dazell. Exeunt

Actus Quartus.

Enter young Lucius and Lavinia running after him, and the Boy flies from her with his bookes under his arme.

Enter Titus and Marcus

Boy. Helpe Grandfier helpe, my Aunt Lavinia,
Followes me euery where I know not why.

Good Vncle Marcus see how swift she comes,
Alas sweet Aunt, I know not what you meane,

Mar. Stand by me Lucius doe not feare thy Aunt.

Titus. She loues thee boy too well to doe thee harme

Boy. I when my father was in Rome she did.

Mar. What meanes my Neece Lavinia by these signes?

Ti. Feare not Lucius, some what doth she meane:
See Lucius see, how much she makes of thee:
Some whether would she haue thee goe with her.
Ah boy, Cornelia neuer with more care
Read to her sonnes, then she hath read to thee,
Sweet Poetry, and Tullies Oratour.
Canst thou not gesse wherefore she plies thee thus?

Boy. My Lord I know not I, nor can I gesse, Vnlesse some fit or frenzie do possesse her:
For I haue heard my Grandfier say full oft,
Extremite of griefes would make men mad
And I haue read that Hecube of Troy,
Ran mad through sorrow, that made me to feare,
Although my Lord, I know my noble Aunt,
Loues me as deare as ere my mother did,
And would not but in fury fright my youth,
Which made me downe to throw my bookes, and she Causles perhaps, but pardon me sweet Aunt,
And Madam, if my Vncle Marcus goe,
I will most willingly attend your Ladyship

Mar. Lucius I will

Ti. How now Lavinia, Marcus what meanes this?
Some booke there is that she desires to see,
Which is it girle of these? Open them boy,
But thou art deeper read and better skild,
Come and take choyse of all my Library,
And so beguile thy sorrow, till the heauens
Reuale the damn'd contriuer of this deed.
What booke?

Why lifts she vp her armes in sequence thus?

Mar. I thinke she meanes that ther was more then one Confederate in the fact, I more there was.
Or else to heauen she heaues them to reuenge.

Ti. Lucius what booke is that she tosseth so?

Boy. Grandfier 'tis Ouids Metamorphosis,
My mother gaue it me.

Mar. For loue of her that's gone,
Perhabs she culd it from among the rest.

Ti. Soft, so busily she turnes the leaves,
Helpe her, what would she finde? Lavinia shall I read?
This is the tragick tale of Philomel?

And treates of Tereus treason and his rape,
And rape I feare was roote of thine annoy

Mar. See brother see, note how she quotes the leaues

Ti. Lavinia, wert thou thus surpriz'd sweet girle, Rauisht and wrong'd as Philomela was?
Forc'd in the ruthlesse, vast, and gloomy woods?
See, see, I such a place there is where we did hunt,
(O had we neuer, neuer hunted there)
Patern'd by that the Poet heere describes,
By nature made for murders and for rapes.

Mar. O why should nature build so foule a den,
Vnlesse the Gods delight in tragedies?

Ti. Giue signes sweet girle, for heere are none but friend.
What Romaine Lord it was durst do the deed?
Or slunk not Saturnine, as Tarquin erst,
That left the Campe to sinne in Lucrece bed.

Mar. Sit downe sweet Neece, brother sit downe by me,
Appollo, Pallas, Ioue, or Mercury,
Inspire me that I may this treason finde,
My Lord looke heere, looke heere Lavinia.

He writes his Name with his Blasse, and guides it with fecte and monish.

This sandie plot is plaine, guide if thou canst

This

What hath he sent her?

Nurse. A deuill.

Aron. Why then she is the Devils Dam a ioyfull issue.

Nurse. A ioylesse, dismall, blacke & sorrowfull issue,
Heere is the babe as loathsome as a toad,
Amongst the fairest breeders of our clime,
The Emperesse sends it thee, thy stampe, thy scale,
And bids thee christen it with thy daggers point.

Aron. Out you whore, is black so base a hue?

Sweet blowse, you are a beauntious blossome sure.

Deme. Villaine what hast thou done?

Aron. That which thou canst not vndoe.

Chr. Thou hast vndone our mother.

Deme. And therein hellish dog, thou hast vndone,
Woe to her chance, and damn'd her loathed choyce,
Accur'd the off-spring of so foule a fiend.

Chr. It shall not lue.

Aron. It shall not die.

Nurse. Aaron it must, the mother wils it so

Aron. What, must it Nurse? Then let no man but I see execution on my flesh and blood

Deme. Ile broach the Tadmole on my Rapiers point
Nurse giue it me, my sword shall soone dispatch it

Aron. Sooner this sword shall plough thy bowels vp Stay murderous villaines, will you kill your brother?

Now by the burning Tapers of the skie,
That sh'one so brightly when this Boy was got,
He dies vpon my Semitars sharpe point,
That touches this my first borne sonne and here.

I tell you young-lings, not Encladus
With all his threatening band of Typhons broode,
Nor great Aleides, nor the God of warre,

Shall cease this prey out of his fathers hands
What, vnto ye, languine shallow, harted Boyes,
Ye white-limb'd walls, ye Ale-house painted signes,
Cole-blacke is better then another hue,

In that it scornes to beare another hue
For all the water in the Ocean,
Can neuer turne the Swans blacke legs to white,

Although she laue them hourly in the flood
Tell the Emperesse from me, I am of age
To keepe mine owne, excuse it how she can.

Deme. Wilt thou betray thy noble mistris to us?

Aron. My mistris is my mistris this my selfe,
The vigour, and the picture of my youth
This, before all the world do I preferre,
This mauer all the world will I keepe safe,
Or some of you shall smoeke for it in Rome.

Deme. By this our mother is for euer sham'd

Chr. Rome will despise her for this foule escape

Nur. The Emperour in his rage will doome her death.

Chr. I blush to thinke vpon this ignominie

Aron. Why ther's the priuledge your beauty beares.

Fie trecherous hue, that will betray with blushing

The close enacts and counsels of the hart.

Heer's a young Lad fram'd of another leere,

Looke how the blacke slue smiles vpon the father,

As who should say, old Lad I am thine owne,

He is your brother Lords, sensibly sed

Of that selfe blood that first gaue life to you,

And from that wombe where you imprisoned were

He is enfranchised and come to light.

Nay he is your brother by the surer side,

Although my scale be stamp'd on his face

Nurse. Aaron what shall I say vnto the Emperesse?

Deme. Advise thee Aron, what is to be done,

And we will all subscribe to thy aduise.

Sauethou the child, so we may all be safe.

Aron. Then sit we downe and let vs all consult.

My sonne and I will haue the winde of you:

Keepe there, now talke at pleasure of your safety.

Deme. How many women saw this childe of his?

Aron. Why so braue Lords, when we soyne in league

I am a Lambe. but if you braue the Moore,

The chased Bore, the mountaine Lyonesse,

The Ocean swells not so at Aaron stormes.

But say againe, how many saw the childe?

Nurse. Gerulus, the midwife, and my selfe,

And none else but the deliuered Emperresse.

Aron. The Emperresse, the Midwife, and your selfe,

Two may keepe counsell, when the third's away:

Goe to the Emperresse, tell her this I said, He kills her

Weekes, weekes, so cries a Pigge prepared to th' spit

Deme. What mean'st thou Aron?

Wherefore did'st thou this?

Aron. O Lord sir, 'tis a deed of pollicie?

Shall she lue to betray this guilt of our's?

A long tongu'd babbling Gossip? No Lords no:

And now be it knowne to you my full intent.

Not farre, one Mulstet my Country-man

His wife but yesternight was brought to bed,

His childe is like to her, faire as you are:

Goe packe vnto him, and giue the mother gold,

And tell them both the circumstance of all,

And how by this their Childe shall be aduanc'd,

And be receiued for the Emperours heyre,

And substituted in the place of mine,

To calme this tempest whirling in the Court,

And let the Emperour dandle him for his owne.

Harke ye Lords, ye see I haue giuen her physicke,

And you must needs bestow her funeral,

The fields are neere, and you are gallant Groomes:

This done, see that you take no longer daies

But send the Midwife presently to me.

The Midwife and the Nurse well made away,

Then let the Ladies tattle what they please.

Chr. Aron I see thou wilt not trust the ayre with se

Deme. For this care of Tamora, (crees.)

Her selfe, and hers are highly bound to thee. Exeunt.

Aron. Now to the Gothes, as swift as Swallow flies,

There to dispose this treasure in mine armes,

And secretly to greete the Emperesse friends:

Come on you thick-lip'd slauie, Ile beare you hence,

For it is you that puts vs to our shifts:

Ile make you feed on berries, and on rootes,

And feed on curds and whey, and sucke the Goate,

And cabbins in a Caue, and bring you vp

To be a wariour, and command a Campe. Exit

Enter Titus, old Marcus, young Lucius, and other gentlemen

with bowes, and Titus beares the arrowes with

Letters on the end of them.

Tit. Come Marcus, come, kinsmen this is the way.

Sir Boy let me see your Archerie,

Looke yee draw home enough, and 'tis there straight:

Tamara Afric reliquit, be you remembered Marcus.

She's gone, she's fled, first take you to your tooles,

You Cosens shall goe sound the Ocean:

And cast your nets, haply you may find her in the Sea,

Yet ther's as little iustice as at Land:

No Publius and Serppionus, you must doe it,

Tit

'Tis you must dig with Mattocke, and with Spade,
And pierce the inmost Center of the earth:
Then when you come to Plutoes Region,
I pray you deliuer him this petition,
Tell him it is for iustice, and for aide,
And that it comes from old Andronicus,
Shaken with sorrowes in vngratefull Rome.
Ah Rome! Well, well, I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the peoples suffrages
On him that thus doth tyrannize ore me.
Goe get you gone, and pray be carefull all,
And leaue you not a man of warre vnsearcht,
This wicked Emperour may haue shipt her hence,
And kinsmen then we may goe pipe for iustice.

Marc. O Publius is not this a heauie case
To see thy Noble Vnckle thus distract?

Publ. Therefore my Lords it highly vs concerns,
By day and night t'attend him carefully:
And feede his humour kindly as we may,
Till time beget some carefull remedie.

Marc. Kinsmen, his sorrowes are past remedie.
Ioyne with the Gothes, and with reuengefull warre,
Take wreake on Rome for this ingratitude,
And vengeance on the Traytor Saturnine.

Tit. Publius how now? how now my Masters?
What haue you met with her?

Publ. No my good Lord, but Pluto sends you word,
If you will haue reuenge from hell you shall,
Marrie for iustice she is so imploy'd,
He thinks with Ioue in heauen, or some where else:
So that perforce you must needs stay a time.

Tit. He doth me wrong to feed me with delays,
He diue into the burning Lake below,
And pull her out of Acheron by the heeles.

Marcus we are but shrubs, no Cedars we,
No big-bon'd-men, fram'd of the Cyclops size,
But mettall Marcus, Steele to the very backe,
Yet wrung with wrongs more then our backe can beare:
And sith there's no iustice in earth nor hell,
We will sollicite heauen, and moue the Gods
To send downe iustice for to wreake our wrongs:
Come to this geare, you are a good Archer Marcus.

He giues them the Arrowes.

Ad Ionem, that's for you here ad Appollonem,
Ad Martem, that's for my selfe,
Heere Boy to Pallas, heere to Mercuri,
To Saturnine, to Caius, not to Saturnine,
You were as good to shoote against the winde.
Too it Boy, Marcus loose when I bid.
Of my word, I haue written to effect,
There's not a God left vnfollicited.

Marc. Kinsmen, shoot all your shafts into the Court,
We will afflict the Emperour in his pride.

Fir. Now Masters draw, Oh well said Lucius:
Good Boy in Vergoes lap, giue it Pallas.

Marc. My Lord, I aime a Mile beyond the Moone,
Your letter is with Iupiter by this.

Tit. Ha, ha, Publius, Publius, what hast thou done?
See, see, thou hast shot off one of Tamurs hornes.

Marc. This was the sport my Lord, when Publius shot,
The Bull being gal'd, gaue Aries such a knocke,
That downe fell both the Rams hornes in the Court,
And who should finde them but the Empreffe villaine:
She caught, and told the Moore he should not choose
But giue them to his Maister for a present.

Fir. Why there it goes, God giue your Lordship ioy.

Enter the Clowne with a basket and two Pigeons in it.

Titus. Newes, newes, from heauen,
Marcus the poast is come
Sirrah, what tydings? haue you any letters?
Shall I haue iustice, what sayes Iupiter?

Clowne. Ho the Iibbetmaker, he sayes that he hath taken them downe againe, for the man must not be hang'd till the next weeke.

Tit. But what sayes Iupiter I aske thee?

Clowne. Alas sir I know not Iupiter:
I neuer drapke with him in all my life.

Tit. Why villaine art not thou the Carrier?

Clowne. I of my Pigious sir, nothing else

Tit. Why, didst thou not come from heauen?

Clowne. From heauen? Alas sir, I neuer came there, God forbid I should be so bold, to presse to heauen in my young dayes. Why I am going with my pigeons to the Tribunall Plebs, to take vp a matter of brawle, betwixt
my Vnckle, and one of the Emperalls men

Marc. Why sir, that is as fit as can be to serue for your Oration, and let him deliuer the Pigious to the Emperour from you.

Tit. Tell mee, can you deliuer an Oration to the Em-perour with a Grace?

Clowne. Nay truly sir, I could neuer say grace in all my life.

Tit. Sirrah come hither, make no more adoe,
But giue your Pigeons to the Emperour,
By me thou shalt haue iustice at his hands.
Hold, hold, meane while her's money for thy charges.
Giue me pen and inke.

Sirrah, can you with a Grace deliuer a Supplication?

Clowne. I sir

Titus. Then here is a Supplication for you, and when you come to him, at the first approach you must kneele, then kisse his toore then deliuer vp your Pigeons, and then looke for your reward. He be at hand sir, see you do it brauely.

Clowne. I warrant you sir, let me alone,

Tit. Sirrah hast thou a knife? Come let me see it:
Heere Marcus, fold it in the Oration,
For thou hast made it like an humble Suppliant.
And when thou hast giuen it the Emperour,
Knocke at my dore, and tell me what he sayes.

Clowne. God be with you sir, I will.

Tit. Come Marcus let vs goe, Publius follow me.

Exit

Enter Emperour and Empreffe, and her two sonnes, the Emperour brings the Arrowes in his hand that Titus shot at him.

Satur. Why Lords,
What wrongs are these? was euer scene
An Emperour in Rome thus overborne,
Troubled, Confronted thus, and for the extent
Of egall iustice, v'd in such contempt?
My Lords, you know the mightfull Gods,
(How euer these disturbers of our peace
Buz in the peoples eares) there nought hath past,
But euen with law against the willfull Sonnes
Of old Andronicus. And what and if
His sorrowes haue so ouerwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his wreakes,
His fits, his frenzie, and his bitterneffe?
And now he writes to heauen for his redresse.
See, heeres to Ioue, and this to Mercury,

This

This to Apollo, this to the God of warre.
Sweet scrowles to flie about the streets of Rome:
What's this but Libelling against the Senate,
And blazoning our Injustice euery where?
A goodly humour, is it not my Lords?
As who would say, in Rome no Justice were.
But if I liue, his fained extasies
Shall be no shelter to these outrages
But he and his shall know, that Justice liues
In Saturninus health; whom if he sleepe,
Hee'l so awake, as he in fury shall
Cut off the proud'st Conspirator that liues.

Tam. My gracious Lord, my louely Saturnine,
Lord of my life, Commander of my thoughts,
Calme thee, and beare the faults of Titus age,
Th effects of sorrow for his valiant Sonnes,
Whose losse hath pierc't him deepe, and fear'd his heart;
And rather comfort his distressed plight,
Then prosecute the meaneft or the best
For these contempts. Why thus it shall become High witted Tamora to glose with all
But Titus, I haue touch'd thee to the quicke,
Thy life blood out: If Aaron now be wise,
Then is all safe, she Anchor's in the Port.

Enter Clowne.

How now good fellow, would'st thou speake with vs?

Clow. Yea forsooth, and your Misterhip be Emperiall.

Tam. Empresse I am, but yonder sits the Emperour.

Clow. 'Tis he, God & Saint Stephen giue you good den,
I haue brought you a Letter, & a couple of Pigeons heere

He reads the Letter.

Sat. Goe take him away, and hang him presently.

Clowne. How much money must I haue?

Tam. Come sirrah you must be hang'd.

Clow. Hang'at ber Lady, then I haue brought vp a neck to a faire end.

Exit.

Sat. Despightfull and intollerable wrongs,
Shall I endure this monstrous villany?
I know from whence this same deuise proceedes:
May this be borne? As if his traytrous Sonnes,
That dy'd by law for murder of our Brother,
Haue by my meanes beene butcher'd wrongfully?
Goe dragge the villaine hither by the haire,
Nor Age, nor Honour, shall shape priuiledge
For this proud mocke, He be thy slaughter man:
Sly franticke wretch, that holp't to make me great,
In hope thy selfe should gouerne Rome and me.

Enter Nuntius Emilius

Satur. What newes with thee Emilius?

Emil. Arme my Lords, Rome neuer had more cause,
The Gothes haue gather'd head, and with a power
Of high resolu'd men, bent to the spoyle
They hither march amaine, vnder conduct
Of Lucius, Sonne to old Andronicus
Who threats in-course of this reuenge to do
As much as euer Coriolanus did.

King. Is worlike Lucius Generall of the Gothes?
These tydings nip me, and I hang the head
As flowers with frost, or grasse beat downe with stormes.
I now begins our sorrowes to approach,
'Tis he the common people loue so much,
My selfe hath often heard them say,
(When I haue walk'd like a private man)
That Lucius banishment was wrongfully,
And they haue wish't that Lucius were their Emperour.

Tam. Why should you feare? Is not our City strong?

King. I, but the Cittizens fauour Lucius,
And will reuolt from me, to succour him.

Tam. King be thy thoughts Imperious like thy name.
Is the Sunne dim'd, that Gnats do flie in it?
The Eagle suffers little Birds to sing,
And is not carefull what they meane thereby,
Knowing that with the shadow of his wings,
He can at pleasure stint their melodie.
Euen so mayest thou, the giddy men of Rome,
Then cheare thy spirit, for know thou Emperour,
I will enchaunt the old Andronicus,
With words more sweet, and yet more dangerous
Then baits to fish, or hony stalkes to sheepe,
When as the one is wounded with the baite,
The other rotted with delicious foode.

King. But he will not entreat his Sonne for vs.

Tam. If Tamora entreat him, then he will,
For I can smooth and fill his aged eare,
With golden promises, that were his heart
Almost impregnable, his old eares deafe,
Yet should both eare and heart obey my tongue.
Goe thou before to our Embassadour,
Say, that the Emperour requests a parly
Of warlike Lucius, and appoint the meeting.

King. Emilius do this message Honourably,
And let he stand in Hostage for his safety,
Bid him demand what pledge will please him best

Emil. Your bidding shall I do effectually. Exit

Tam. Now will I to that old Andronicus,
And temper him with all the Art I haue,
To plucke proud Lucius from the warlike Gothes
And now sweet Emperour be blithe againe,
And bury all thy feare in my deuises

Sat. Then goe successantly and plead for him. Exit.

Actus Quintus.

Flourish Enter Lucius with an Army of Gothes,
with Drum and Souldiers.

Luc. Approued warriors, and my faithfull Friends,
I haue receiued Letters from great Rome,
Which signifies what hate they beare their Emperour,
And how desirous of our sight they are.
Therefore great Lords, be as your Titles witnesse,
I nperious and impatient of your wrongs,
And wherein Rome hath done you any icathe,
Let him make treble satisfaction.

Goth. Braue slip, sprung from the Great Andronicus,
Whose name was once our terror, now our comfort,
Whose high exploits, and honourable Deeds,
Ingratefull Rome requites with foule contempt.
Behold in vs, weeke follow where thou lead'st,
Like stinging Bees in hottest Sommers day,
Led by their Master to the slow red fields,
And be aueng'd on curld Tamora
And as he saith, so say we all with him.

Luc. I humbly thanke him, and I thanke you all,
But who comes heere, led by a lusty Goth?

Enter a Goth leading of Aaron with his child
in his armes.

Goth. Renowned Lucius, from our troops I straid,
To gaze vpon a ruinous Monastrie,

And

And as I earnestly did fixe mine eye
Vpon the wasted building, suddainely
I heard a childe cry vnderneath a wall:
I made vnto the noyse, when soone I heard,
The crying babe control'd with this discourse:
Peace Tawny slaue, halfe me, and halfe thy Dam,
Did not thy Hue bewray whose brat thou art?
Had nature lent thee, but thy Mothers looke,
Villaine thou might'st haue bene an Emperour.
But where the Bull and Cow are both milk-white,
They neuer doe beget a cole-blacke Calfe
Peace, villaine peace, euen thus he rates the babe,
For I must beare thee to a trusty Goth,
Who when he knowes thou art the Empresse babe,
Will hold thee dearly for thy Mothers sake.
With this, my weapon drawne I rusht vpon him,
Surpriz'd him suddainely, and brought him hither
To vse, as you thinke needefull of the man

Luci. Oh worthy Goth, this is the incarnate deuill,
That rob'd Andronicus of his good hand.
This is the Pearle that pleas'd your Empresse eye,
And heere's the Base Fruit of his burning lust.
Say wall-ey'd slaue, whether would'st thou conuay
This growing Image of thy fiend-like face?
Why dost not speake? what deafe? Not a word?
A halter Souldiers, hang him on this Tree,
And by his side his Fruite of Bastardie.

Aron. Touch not the Boy, he is of Royall blood.

Luci. Too like the Syre for ever being good,
First hang the Child that he may see it sprall,
A sight to vexe the Fathers soule withall.

Aron. Get me a Ladder Lucius, saue the Childe
And beare it from me to the Empresse
If thou do this, Ile shew thee wondrous things,
That highly may aduantage thee to heare,
If thou wilt not, befall what may befall,
Ile speake no more: but vengeance rot you all

Luci. Say on, and if it please me which thou speak'st,
Thy child shall liue, and I will see it Nourisht.

Aron. And if it please thee? why assure thee Lucius,
'Twill vexe thy soule to heare what I shall speake
For I must talke of Murthers, Rapes, and Massacres,
Acts of Blacke-night, abhominable Deeds,
Complots of Mischiefe, Treason, Villanies
Ruthfull to heare, yet pittiously preform'd,
And this shall all be buried by my death,
Vnlesse thou sweare to me my Childe shall liue.

Luci. Tell on thy minde,

I say thy Childe shall liue.

Aron. Sweare that he shall, and then I will begin.

Luci. Who should I sweare by,
Thou beleeuest, no God,
That groned, how can'st thou beleeue an oath?

Aron. What if I do not, as indeed I do not,
Yet for I know thou art Religious,
And hast a thing within thee, called Conscience,
With twenty Popish trickes and Ceremonies,
Which I haue seene thee carefull to obserue:
Therefore I vrge thy oath for that I know
An Idiot holds his Bauble for a God,
And keepe the oath which by that God he sweares,
To that Ile vrge him: therefore thou shalt vow
By that false God what God so ere it be
That thou adorest, and hast in zeuerence,
To saue my Boy, to nourish and bring him vp,
Ore else I will discouer nought to thee.

Luci. Euen by my God I sweare to to thee I will.

Aron. First know thou,

I be got him on the Empresse.

Luci. Oh most Insatiate luxurious woman!

Aron. Tut Lucius, this was but a deed of Charitie,
To that which thou shalt heare of me anon,
'Twas her two Sonnes that murdered Bassianus,
They cut thy Sisters tongue, and rauisht her,
And cut her hands off, and crim'd her as thou saw'st.

Lucius. Oh detestable villaine!

Call it thou that Trimming?

Aron. Why she was washt, and cut, and trim'd,
And 'twas trim sport for them that had the doing of it.

Luci. Oh barbarous beastly villaines like thy selfe!

Aron. Indeepe, I was their Tutor to instruct them,
That Coddling Spirit had they from their Mother,
As sure a Card as euer wonne the Set
That bloody minde I thinke they learn'd of me,
As true a Dog as euer fought at head.
Well, let my Deeds be witness of my worth:
I trayn'd thy Bretheren to that guilefull Hole,
Where the dead Corps of Bassianus lay.

I wrote the Letter, that thy Father found,
And hid the Gold within the Letter mention'd,
Confederate with the Queene, and her two Sonnes,
And what not done, that thou hast cause to rue,
Wherein I had no stroke of Mischiefe in it.

I ply'd the Cheater for thy Fathers hand,
And when I had it, drew my selfe apart,
And almost broke my heart with extreame laughter.
I pried me through the Creuice of a Wall,
When for his hand, he had his two Sonnes heads,
Beheld his teares and laught so hartily,
That both mine eyes were raine like to his:
And when I told the Empresse of this sport,
She sound'd almost at my pleasing tale,
And for my tydings, gaue me twenty kisses.

Goth. What canst thou say all this, and neuer blush?

Aron. I, like a blacke Dogge at the saying is.

Luci. Art thou not sorry for these haughty deedes?

Aron. I, that I had not done a thousand more.

Euen now I curse the day, and yet I thinke
Few come within few compasse of my curse.
Wherein I did not some Notorious ill,
As kill a man, or elie deuise his death,
Rauish a Maid, or plot the way to do it,
Accuse some Innocent, and forgiue me my selfe,
Set deadly Enmity betweene two Friends,
Make poore mens Cartell breake their neckes,
Set fire on Barnes and Haystackes in the night,
And bid the Owners quench them with the teares
Of haue I dig'd vp dead men from their graues,
And set them vp right at their deere Friends doore,
Euen when their sorrowes almost was forgot,
And on their skinned, as on the Barke of Trees,
Haue with my knife carued in Romaine Letters,
Let not your sorrow die, though I am dead.
Tut, I haue done a thousand dreadfull things
As willingly, as one would kill a Fly.
And nothing grieues me hartily indeede,
But that I cannot doe ten thousand more.

Luci. Bring downe the duell, for he must not die
So sweet a death as hanging presently

Aron. If there be diuels, would I were a deuill,
To liue and burne in cuerlasting fire,
So I might haue your company in hell,

But

But to torment you with my bitter tongue.

Luc. Sirs stop his mouth, & let him speake no more.

Enter Emilius.

Goth. My Lord, there is a Messenger from Rome
Desires to be admitted to your presence

Luc. Let him come neere.

Welcome Emilius, what the newes from Rome?

Emi. Lord Lucius, and you Princes of the Gothes,
The Romaine Emperour greetes you all hy me,
And for he vnderstands you are in Armes;
He craues a parly at your Fathers house
Willing you to demand your Hostages,
And they shall be immediately deliuered

Goth. What saies our General?

Luc. Emilius, let the Emperour giue his pledges
Vnto my Father, and my Vncle Marcus, Flourish.
And we will come. march away. Exeunt.

Enter Tamora, and her two Sonnes disguised.

Tam. Thus in this strange and sad Habilliment,
I will encounter with Andronicus,
And say, I am Reuenge sent from below,
To ioyne with him and right his hainous wrongs.
Knocke at his study where they say he keeps,
To ruminat strange plots of dire Reuenge,
Tell him Reuenge is come to ioyne with him,
And worke confusion on his Enemies.

They knocke and Titus opens his study dore.

Tit. Who doth mollest my Contemplation?
Is it your tricke to make me ope the dore,
That so my sad decrees may flie away,
And all my studie be to no effect?
You are deceiue'd, for what I meane to do,
See heere in bloody lines I haue set downe:
And what is written shall be executed

Tam. Titus, I am come to talke with thee,

Tit. No not a word how can I grace my talke,
Wanting a hand to giue it action,
Thou hast the ods of me, therefore no more

Tam. If thou did'st know me,
Thou wouldest talke with me

Tit. I am not mad, I know thee well enough,
Witnesse this wretched stump,
Witnesse these crimson lines,
Witnesse these Trenches made by griefe and care,
Witnesse the tiring day, and heauie night,
Witnesse all sorrow, that I know thee well
For our proud Empresse, Mighty Tamora.
Is not thy comming for my other hand?

Tam. Know thou sad man, I am not Tamora,
She is thy Enemy, and I thy Friend,
I am Reuenge sent from th' infernall Kingdome,
To ease the gnawing Vulture of the mind,
By working vreakesfull vengeance on my Foes.
Come downe and welcome me to this worlds light,
Conferre with me of Murder and of Death,
Ther's not a hollow Cause or lurking place,
No Vast obscurity, or Misty vale,
Where bloody Murder or detested Rape,
Can couch for feare, but I will finde them out,
And in their eares tell them my dreadfull names,
Reuenge, which makes the foule offenders quake

Tit. Art thou Reuenge? and art thou sent to me,
To be a torment to mine Enemies?

Tam. I am, therefore come downe and welcome me.

Tit. Doe me some seruise ere I come to thee
Loe by thy side where Rape and Murder stands,
Now giue some surance that thou art Reuenge,
Stab them, or teare them on thy Chariot wheeles,
And then Ile come and be thy Waggoner,
And whirle along with thee about the Globes,
Provide thee two proper Palfries, as blacke as Iet,
To hale thy vengefull Waggon swift away,
And finde out Murder in their guilty cares
And when thy Car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the Waggon wheele,
Trot like a Seruile footeman all day long,
Euen from Eprons rising in the East,
Vntill his very downefall in the Sea
And day by day Ile do this heauy task,
So thou destroy Rapine and Murder there:

Tam. These are my Ministers, and come with me.

Tit. Are them thy Ministers, what are they call'd?
Tam. Rape and Murder, therefore called so,
Cause they take vengeance of such kind of men.

Tit. Good Lord how like the Empresse Sons they are,
And you the Empresse But we worldly men,
Haue miserable mad mistaking eyes
Oh sweet Reuenge, now do I come to thee,
And if one armes imbracement will content thee,
I will imbrace thee in it by and by.

Tam. This closing with him, fits his Lunacie,
What ere I forge to feede his braine-sicke fits,
Do you vphold, and maintaine in your speeches
For now he firmly takes me for Reuenge,
And being Credulous in this mad thought,
Ile make him send for Lucius his Sonne,
And whilst I at a Banquet hold him sure,
Ile find some cunning practise out of hand
To scatter and disperse the giddie Gothes,
Or at the least make them his Enemies:
See heere he comes, and I must play my theame

Tit. Long haue I bene forlorne, and all for thee,
Welcome dread Fury to my woefull house,
Rapine and Murther, you are welcome too,
How like the Empresse and her Sonnes you are.
Well are you fitted, had you but a Moore,
Could not all hell afford you such a deuill?
For well I wote the Empresse neuer wags;
But in her company there is a Moore,
And would you represent our Queene aright
It were conuenient you had such a deuill
But welcome as you are, what shall we doe?

Tam. What would'st thou haue vs doe Andronicus?

Dem. Shew me a Murderer, Ile deale with him.

Chs. Shew me a Villaine that hath done a Rape,
And I am sent to be reueng'd on him.

Tam. Shew me a thousand that haue done thee wrong,
And Ile be reuenged on them all.

Tit. Looke round about the wicked streets of Rome,
And when thou find'st a man that's like thy selfe,
Good Murder stab him, hee's a Murderer.
Goe thou with him, and when it is thy hap
To finde another that is like to thee,
Good Rapine stab him, he is a Raulsher.
Go thou with them, and in the Emperours Court,
There is a Queene attended by a Moore,
Well maist thou know her by thy owne proportion,
For vp and downe she doth resemble thee,
I pray thee doe on them some violent death,
They haue bene violent to me and mine.

cc

Tamora.

Tam. Well hast thou lesson'd vs, this shall we do.
But would it please thee good Andronicus,
To send for Lucius thy thrice Valiant Sonne,
Who leades towards Rome a Band of Warlike Gothes,
And bid him come and Banquet at thy house.
When he is heere, euen at thy Solemne Feast,
I will bring in the Empresse and her Sonnes,
The Emperour himselfe, and all thy Foes,
And at thy mercy shall they stoop, and kneele,
And on them shalt thou ease thy angry heart:
What faies Andronicus to this deuise?

Enter Marcus.

Tit. Marcus my Brother, 'tis sad Titus calls,
Go gentle Marcus to thy Nephew Lucius,
Thou shalt enquire him out among the Gothes,
Bid him repaire to me, and bring with him
Some of the chiefeest Princes of the Gothes,
Bid him encampe his Souldiers where they are,
Tell him the Emperour, and the Empresse too,
Feasts at my house, and he shall Feast with them,
This do thou for my loue, and so let him,
As he regards his aged Fathers life.

Mar. This will I do, and soone returne againe.

Tam. Now will I hence about thy businesse,
And take my Ministers along with me.

Tit. Nay, nay, let Rape and Murder stay with me,
Or els Ile call my Brother backe againe,
And cleaue to no reuenge but Lucius.

Tam. What say you Boyes, will you bide with him,
Whiles I goe tell my Lord the Emperour,
How I haue gouern'd our determined selfe?
Yeeld to his Humour, smooth and speake him faire,
And tarry with him till I turne againe.

Tit. I know them all, though they suppose me mad,
And will ore-reach them in their owne deuises,
A payre of cursed hell-hounds and their Dam.

Dem. Madam depart at pleasure, leaue vs heere.

Tam. Farewell Andronicus, reuenge now goes
To lay a complot to betray thy Foes.

Tit. I know thou doo'st, and sweet reuenge farewell.

Chi. Tell vs old man, how shall we be employ'd?

Tit. Tut, I haue worke enough for you to doe,
Publius come hither, Cornelius, and Valentine.

Pub. What is your will?

Tit. Know you these two?

Pub. The Empresse Sonnes
I take them, Chiron, Demetrius.

Titus. Fie Publius, fie, thou art too much deceau'd,
The one is Murder, Rape is the others name,
And therefore binde them gentle Publius,
Cornelius, and Valentine, lay hands on them,
Oft haue you heard me wish for such an houre,
And now I find it, therefore binde them sure,

Chi. Villaines forbear, we are the Empresse Sonnes.

Pub. And therefore do we, what we are commanded,
Stop close their mouthes, let them not speake a word,
Is he sure bound, looke that you binde them fast. Exeunt.

Enter Titus Andronicus with a knife, and Lavinia with a Basin.

Tit. Come, come Lavinia, looke, thy Foes are bound,
Sits stop their mouthes, let them not speake to me,
But let them heare what fearefull words I viter.

Oh Villaines, Chiron, and Demetrius,
Here stands the spring whom you haue stain'd with mud,
This goodly Sommer with your Winter mixt,
You kil'd her husband, and for that vil'd fault,
Two of her Brothers were condemn'd to death,
My hand cut off, and made a merry iest,
Both her sweet Hands, her Tongue, and that more deere
Then Hands or tongue, her spotlesse Chastity,
Inhumaine Traytors, you constrain'd and for't.
What would you say, if I should let you speake?
Villaines for shame you could not beg for grace.
Harke Wretches, how I meane to martyr you,
This one Hand yet is left, to cut your throats,
Whil'st that Lavinia twene her stumps doth hold:
The Basin that receiues your guilty blood,
You know your Mother meanes to feast with me,
And calls herselfe Reuenge, and thinke me mad,
Harke Villaines, I will grin'd your bones to dust,
And with your blood and it, Ile make a Paste,
And of the Paste a Cossen I will reare,
And make two Pasties of your shamefull Heads,
And bid that stumper your vnhalloved Dam,
Like to the earth swallow her increase.
This is the Feast, that I haue bid her to,
And this the Banquet she shall surfet on,
For worse then Philomel you vs'd my Daughter,
And worse then Phryne, I will be reueng'd,
And now prepare your throats. Lavinia come.
Receiue the blood, and when that they are dead,
Let me goe grin'd their Bones to powder small,
And with this hatefull Liquor temper it,
And in that Paste let their vil'd Heads be bakte,
Come, come, be euery one officious,
To make this Banquet, which I wish might proue,
More sterne and bloody then the Centaures Feast.

He cuts their throats.

So now bring them in, for Ile play the Cooke,
And see them ready, gi' ast their Mother comes. Exeunt.

Enter Luc. Tit. Marcus, and the Gothes.

Luc. Vnckle Marcus, since 'tis my Fathers minde
That I repaire to Rome, I am content.

Geth. And ours with thine befall, what Fortune will.

Luc. Good Vnckle, ke you in this barbarous Moor,
This Rauinous Tiger, this accursed deuill,
Let him receiue no sustenance, fetter him,
Till he be brought vnto the Emperours face,
For testimony of her foule proceedings.
And see the Ambush of our Friends be strong,
If ere the Emperour meanes no good to vs.

Aron. Some deuill whisper curses in my eare,
And prompt me that my tongue may viter for th,
The Venemous Mallice of my swelling heart.

Luc. Away Inhumaine Dogge, Vnhallowed Slaue,
Sirs, helpe our Vnckle, to conuey him in, Flourish.
The Trumpets shew the Emperour is at hand.

Sound Trumpets. Enter Emperour and Empresse, with Tribunes and others.

Sat. What, hath the Firemament more Suns then one?

Luc. What bootes it thee to call thy selfe a Sonne?

Mar. Romes Emperour & Nephew breake the parole
These quarrels must be quietly debated,
The Feast is ready which the careful Titus,

Harsh

Hath ordained to an Honourable end,
For Peace, for Love, for League, and good to Rome:
Please you therefore draw me and take your places.

Salut. Marcus v'c v' ill. Helges

A Table brought in.

Enter Titus like a Cooke, placing the meat on the Table, and Lavinia with a viall ouer her face.

Titus. Welcome my gracious Lord,
Welcome Dread Queene,
Welcome ye Warlike Gothes, welcome Lucius,
And welcome all although the cheere be poore,
'Twill fill your stomachs, please you eat of it.

Sat. Why art thou thus attir'd Andronicus?

Tit. Because I would be sure to haue all well,
To entertaine your Highnesse, and your Impresse.

Tam. We are beholding to you good Andronicus.

Tit. And if your Highnesse knew my heart, you were My Lord the Emperour resolute me this,
Was it well done of rath Virginius,
To slay his daughter with his owne right hand,
Because she was enforst, stain'd, and deflower'd?

Salut. It was Andronicus.

Tit. Your reason, Mighty Lord?

Sat. Because the Girl, should not surmise her shame,
And by her presence still renew his sorrowes.

Tit. A reason mighty, strong, and effectually,
A patterne, president, and lively warrant,
For me (most wretched) to performe the like.
Die, die, Lavinia, and thy shame with thee,
And with thy shame, thy Fathers sorrow die.

He kills her.

Sat. What hast done, vnnaturall and vnkinde?

Tit. Kill'd her for whom my teares haue made me blind.

*I am as wofull as Virginius was,*

And haue a thousand times more cause then he

Sat. What is she rauisht? tell who did the deed,

Tit. Wilt please you eat,

Wilt please your Highnesse feed?

Tam. Why hast thou slaine thine onely Daughter?

Titus. Not I, 'twas Chiron and Demetrius,
They rauisht her, and cut away her tongue,
And they, 'twas they, that did her all this wrong.

Sat. Go fetch them hither to vs presently.

Tit. Why there they are both, baked in that Pie,
Whereof their Mother daintily hath fed,
Eating the flesh that she herselfe hath bred.

'Tis true, 'tis true, witness my kniues sharpe point

He slays the Emperresse

Sat. Die francke wretch, for this accursed deed.

Luc. Can the Sonnes eye, behold his Father bleed?

There's meede for meede, death for a deadly deed

Mar. You had slaid men, people and Sonnes of Rome,

By vprores neuer d like a sight of Foyle,

Scattered by windes and high tempestuous gusts:

Oh let me teach you how, to knit againe

This scattered Come, into one mutuall sheafe,

These broken limbs againe into one body

Gail. Let Rome herselfe be bane into herselfe,

And shee whom in glorie kingdome curse too,

I like a forlorne and desperate castaway,

Doe shamefull execution on her selfe

But if my frostief, nes an I chaps of age,

Grave witness of true experience,

Cannot induce you to attend my words,

Speake Romes decreed friend, as 'twist our Ancestor,

When with his solemne tongue he did discourse
To loue-sicke Drusus sad attending eare,
The story of that basefull burning night,
When subtil Greekes surpris'd King Priamus Troy:
Tell vs what Sinon hath bewicht our eares,
Or who hath brought the fatall engine in,
That giues our Troy, our Rome the ciuill wound.
My heart is not compact of fust nor Steele,
Nor can I vter all our bitter griefe,
But floods of teares will drowne my Oratorie,
And breake my very vtterance, even in the time
When it should moue you to attend me most,
Lending your kind hand Commiseration.

Heere is a Captaine, let him tell the tale,
Your hearts will throb and weepe to heare him speake.

Luc. This Noble Auditory, be it knowne to you,

That cursed Cliron and Demetrius
Were they that murtherd our Emperours Brother,
And they it were that rauisht our Sister,
For their fell faultes our Brothers were beheaded,
Our Fathers teares despis'd, and basely couer'd,
Of that true hand that fought Romes quarrell out,
And sent her enemies into the graue.

Lastly, my selfe vnkindly lamish'd,
The gates shut on me, and turn'd weeping out,
To beg reliefe among Romes Enemies,
Who drownd their enmity in my true teares,
And op'd their armes to embrace me as a Friend.

And I am turned forth, be it knowne to you,
That I haue prefer'd her welfare in my blood,
And from her bosome took the Enemies point,
Sheathing the Steele in my aduenturous body.

Alas you know, I am no Vaunter I,
My scars can witness, dumbe although they are,
That my report is iust and full of truth
But soft, me thinkes I do digresse too much,
Cying my worthlesse praise Oh pardon me,
I or when no friends are by, men praise themselves,

Mar. Now is my time to speake Behold this Child,
Of this was Tamara deliuered,
The issue of an Irreligious Moor,
Chiefe Architect and plotter of these woes,
The Villaine is aliue in Titus house,
And as he is, to witness this is true.

Now iudge what course had Titus to reuenge
These wrongs, vnspokeable past patience,
Or more then any man could beare.

Now you haue heard the truth, what say you Romanes?
Haue we done ought amisse? shew vs wherein,
And from the place v here you behold vs now,

The poore remainder of Andronicus,
Will hand in hand all headlong cast vs downe,
And on the ragged stones beat forth our braines,
And make a mutuall closure of our house.

Speake Romanes speake, and if you say we shall,
Loe hand in hand, Lucius and I will fall.

Emper. Come come, thou reuerent man of Rome,
And bring our Emperour gently in thy hand,
Lucius our Emperour, for well I know,
The common voyce do cry it shall be so.

Mar. Lucius, all haile Romes Roy all Emperour,
Go, go into old Titus sorrowfull house,
And lither hale that misbeliering Moor,
To be adjudg'd some direfull slaughtering death,
As punishment for his most wicked life
Lucius all haile to Romes gracious Government.

Luc. Thankes gentle Romanes, may I gouerne so,
To heale Romes harmes, and wipe away her woe.
But gentle people, giue me ayme a-while,
For Nature puts me to a heauy taske:
Stand all aloofe, but Vnckle draw you neere,
To shed obsequious teares vpon this Trunke.
Oh take this warme kisse on thy pale cold lips,
These sorrowfull drops vpon thy bloud-staine face,
The last true Duties of thy Noble Sonne.

Marc. Teare for teare, and louing kisse for kisse,
Thy Brother Marcus tenders on thy Lips.
O were the summe of these that I should pay
Countlesse, and infinit, yet would I pay them.

Luc. Come hither Boy, come, come, and learne of vs
To melt in showres: thy Grandfire lou'd thee well:
Many a time he dane'd thee on his knee:
Sung thee asleepe, his Louing Brest, thy Pillow
Many a matter hath he told to thee,
I Meete, and agreeing with thine Infancie:
In that respect then, like a louing Childe,
Shed yet some small drops from thy tender Spring,
Because kinde Nature doth require it so.
Friends, should associate Friends, in Greefe and Wo.
Bid him farewell, commit him to the Graue,
Do him that kindnesse, and take leaue of him.

Boy. O Grandfire, Grandfire: euen with all my heart
Would I were Dead, so you did Liue againe.
O Lord, I cannot speake to him for weeping,
My teares will choake me, if I ope my mouth.

Romans. You sad Andronicus, haue done with woes,
Giue sentence on this execrable Wretch,
That hath beene breeder of these dire euent

Luc. See him brest deepe in earth, and famish him
There let him stand, and raue, and cry for foode:
If any one releuees, or pitties him,
For the offence, he dyes. This is our doome.
Some stay, to see him fast'ned in the earth.

Aron. O why should wrath be mute, & Fury dumb?
I am no Baby I, that with base Prayers
I should repent the Evils I haue done.
Ten thousand worse, then euer yet I did,
Would I performe if I might haue my will:
If one good Deed in all my life I did,
I do repent it from my very Soule.

Lucius. Some louing Friends conuey the Emphence,
And giue him buriall in his Fathers graue,
My Father, and Lavinia, shall forthwith
Be closed in our Houholds Monument:
As for that heynous Tyger Tamora,
No Funerall Rite, nor man in mournfull Weeds:]
No mournfull Bell shall ring her Buriall:
But throw her forth to Beasts and Birds of prey:
Her life was Beast-like, and deuoid of pittie,
And being so, shall haue like want of pittie.
See Iustice done on Aaron that damn'd Moore,
From whom, our heauy happes had their beginning:
Then afterwards, to Order well the State,
That like Euent, may ne're it Ruinate. Exeunt omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF ROMEO and IVLIET

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Sampson and Gregory, with Swords and Bucklers, of the House of Capulet.

Sampson.

G Gregory. A my word wee'l not carry coales,
Greg. No for then we should be Colliers
Samp. I mean, if we be in choller, wee'l draw.
Greg. I, While you live, draw your necke out o'th Collar.

Samp. I strike quickly, being mou'd.

Greg. But thou art not quickly mou'd to strike.

Samp. A dog of the house of Montague, moues me.

Greg. To moue, is to stir and to be valiant, is to stand
Therefore, if thou art mou'd, thou runst away.

Samp. A dogge of that house shall moue me to stand,
I will take the wall of any Man or Maid of Montagues.

Greg. That shewes thee a weake slave, for the weakest goes to the wall.

Samp. True, and therefore women being the weaker Vessels, are euer thrust to the wall: therefore I will push Montagues men from the wall, and thrust his Maides to the wall. (their men)

Greg. The Quarrell is betweene our Masters, and vs

Samp. 'Tis all one, I will shew my selfe a tyrant when I haue fought with the men, I will bee ciuill with the Maids, and cut off their heads.

Greg. The heads of the Maids

Samp. I, the heads of the Maids, or their Maiden-heads,
Take it in what sence thou wilt.

Greg. They might take it sence, that feele it

Samp. Me they shall feele while I am able to stand:
And 'tis knowne I am a pretty peece of flesh

Greg. 'Tis with thee art not fish. If thou had'st, thou had'st bene poore Iohn. Draw thy Toole, here comes of the House of the Montagues.

Enter two other Servingmen.

Samp. My naked weapon is out: quarrell, I will back thee

Gre. How? Turne thy backe, and run.

Samp. Feare me not

Gre. No marry I feare thee,

Samp. Let vs take the Law of our sides: let them begin

Gr. I will frown as I passe by, & let the rake it as they list

Samp. Nay, as they dare. I will bite my Thumb at them, which is a disgrace to them, it they beare it.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs fir-

Samp. I do bite my Thumbe fir.

Abra. Do you bite your Thumbe at vs, fir?

Samp. Is the Law of our side, if I say I? Gre. No

Samp. No fir, I do not bite my Thumbe at you fir but I bite my Thumbe fir.

Greg. Do you quarrell fir?

Abra. Quarrell fir? no fir.

Samp. If you do fir, I am for you, I serue as good a man (as you)

Abra. No better? Samp. Well fir.

Enter Benvolio.

Gr. Say better. here comes one of my masters kinsmen.

Samp. Yes, better.

Abra. You Lye

Samp. Draw if you be men Gregory, remember thy washing blow. They Fight.

Ber. Part Fooles, put vp your Swords, you know not what you do.

Enter Tybalt

Tyb. What art thou drawne, among these heartlesse
Hindes? Turne thee Benvolio, looke vpon thy death.

Ber. I do but keepe the peace, put vp thy Sword,
Or manage it to part these men with me

Tyb. What draw, and talke of peace? I hate the word
As I hate hell, all Montagues, and thee:
Haue at thee Coward. Fight.

Enter three or foure Citizens with Clubs.

Offi. Clubs, Bills, and Partitions, strike, beat them downe
Downe with the Capulets, downe with the Montagues.

Enter old Capulet in his Gowne and his wife.

Cap. What noise is this? Giue me my long Sword he Wife. A crutch, a crutch why call you for a Sword?

Cap. My Sword I say. Old Montague is come,
And flourishes his Blade in spight of me.

Enter old Montague, & his wife.

Mom. Thou Villaine Capulet. Hold me not, let me go
Wife. Thou shalt not stir a foote to seek a Fo.

Enter Prince Escalus, with his Train.

Prince. Rebellous Subjects, Enemies to peace,
Prophaners of this Neighbor-stained Steele,
Will they not heare? What hoe, you Men, you Beasts,
That quench the fire of your pernicious Rage,
With purple Fountaines issuing from your Veines:
On paine of Torture, from those bloody hands
Throw your mistemper'd Weapons to the ground,
And heare the Sentence of your moued Prince.
Three ciuill Broyles, bred of an Ayery word,
By thee old Capulet and Montague,
Haue thrice disturb'd the quiet of our streets,
And made Verona's ancient Citizens
Cast by their Graue befeeming Ornaments,
To wield old Partizans, in hands as old,

cc 3

Cankred

Cankred with peace, to part your Cankred hate,
If euer you disturbe our streets againe,
Your liues shall pay the forfeit of the peace.
For this time all the rest depart away:
You Capulet shall goe along with me,
And Montague come you this afternoone,
To know our Fathers pleasure in this case:
To old Free-towne, our common iudgement place:
Once more on paine of death, all men depart. Exeunt.

Moun. Who set this runcient quarrell new abroad?
Speake Nephew, were you by, when it began:

Ben. Heere were the seruants of your aduersarie,
And yours close fighting ere I did approach,
I drew to part them, in the instant came
The fiery Tibalt, with his sword prepar'd,
Which as he breath'd defiance to my eares,
He swung about his head, and cut the windes,
Who nothing hurt withall, hift him in scorne.
While we were enterchanging thrulls and blowes,
Came more and more, and fought on part and part,
Till the Prince came, who parted either part.

Wife. O where is Romeo, saw you him to day?
Right glad am I, he was not at this fray.

Ben. Madam, an houre before the worship't Sun
Peer'd forth the golden window of the East,
A troubled mind draue me to walke abroad,
Where vnderneath the groue of Sycamore,
That West-ward rooteth from this City side:
So earely walking did I see your Sonne:
Towards him I made, but he was ware of me,
And stole into the covert of the wood,
I measuring his affections by my owne,
Which then most sought, wher most might not be found-
Being one too many by my weary selfe,
Pursued my Honour, not pursuing his
And gladly shunn'd, who gladly fled from me.

Moun. Many a morning hath he there beene scene,
With teares augmenting the fresh mornings dew,
Adding to cloudes, more cloudes with his deepe sighes,
But all so soone as the all-cheering Sunne,
Should in the farthest East begin to draw
The shady Curtaines from Auroras bed,
Away from light steales home my heauy Sonne,
And priuate in his Chamber penne himselfe,
Shuts vp his windowes, lockes faire day-light out,
And makes himselfe an artificiall night:
Blacke and portendous must this humour proue,
Vnlesse good counsell may the cause remoue.

Ben. My Noble Vncle doe you know the cause

Moun. I neither know it, nor can learne of him.

Ben. Haue you importun'd him by any meanes?

Moun. Both by my selfe and many others Friends,
But he his owne affections counsellor,
Is to himselfe (I will not say how true)
But to himselfe so secret and so close,
So farre from sounding and discouery,
As is the bud bit with an enuious worme,
Ere he can spread his sweete leaues to the ayre,
Or dedicate his beauty to the same.
Could we but learne from whence his sorrowes grow,
We would as willingly giue cure, as know.

Enter Romeo.

Be. See where he comes, so please you step aside,
He know his greuance, or be much denide.

Moun. I would thou wert so happy by thy stay,
To heare true shrift. Come Madam let's away. Exeunt.

Ben. Good morrow Cousin.

Rom. Is the day so young?

Ben. But new strooke nine.

Rom. Aye me, sad houres seeme long:

Was that my Father that went hence so fast?

Ben. It was: what sadness lengthens Romeo's houres?

R. Not hauing that, which hauing, makes them short

Ben. In loue.

Romeo. Out.

Ben. Of loue.

Rom. Out of her fauour where I am in loue.

Ben. Alas that loue so gentle in his view,
Should be so tyrannous and rough in proofe.

Rom. Alas that loue, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes, see path-ways to his will:
Where shall we dine? O me: what fray was heere?
Yet tell me not, for I haue heard it all:

Heere's much to do with hate, but more with loue:

Why then, O brawling loue O louing hate,

O anything, of nothing first created:

O heauie lightnesse, serious vanity,
Mishapen Chaos of wellseeing formes,

Feather of lead, bright smoake, cold fire, sickle health,

Still waking sleepe, that is not what it is:

This loue feele I, that feele no loue in this.

Doeft thou not laugh?

Ben. No Core, I rather weepe.

Rom. Good heart, at what?

Ben. At thy good hearts oppression.

Rom. Why such is loues transgression.

Griefes of mine owne he heaue in my breast,

Which thou wilt propagate to haue at preast

With more of thine, this loue that thou hast showne,

Doth adde more griefe, to too much of mine owne.

Loue, is a smoake made with the fume of sighes,

Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in Louers eyes,

Being vent, a Sea nourisht with louing teares,

What is it else? a madnesse, most discrete,

A choking gall, and a preferring sweet:

Farewell my Coze.

Ben. Soft I will goe along.

And if you leaue me so, you do me wrong.

Rom. Tut I haue lost my selfe, I am not here,

This is not Romeo, hee's some other where.

Ben. Tell me in sadnesse, who is that you loue?

Rom. What shall I grone and tell thee?

Ben. Grone, why no: but sadly tell me who.

Rom. A sickle man in sadnesse makes his will:
A word ill vrg'd to one that is so ill:

In sadnesse Cozin, I do loue a woman.

Ben. I aynd so neare, when I suppos'd you lov'd.

Rom. A right good marke man, and shee's faire I loue

Ben. A right faire marke faire Coze, a soonest hit.

Rom. Well in that hit you misse, sheel not be hit
With Cupids arrow, she hath Diana's wit:

And in strong proofe of chastity well arm'd:

From loues weake childifh Bow, she lues encharm'd.

Shee will not stay the siege of louing tearmes,

Nor bid th'incounter of a siliing eyes.

Nor open her lap to Saint-seducing Gold:

O she is rich in beautie, onely poore,

That when shee dies, with beautie dies her store.

Ben. Then she hath sworne, that she will still lue chaste?

Rom. She hath, and in that sparing make huge wast?

For beauty steru'd with her severity.

Cuts beauty off from all posterity.

She

She is too faire, too wisew; - sely too faire,
To merit blisse by making me dispaire:
She hath forsworne to loue, and in that vow
Do I liue dead, that liue to tell it now.

Ben. Be rul'd by me, forget to thinke of her.
Rom. O teach me how I should forget to thinke.

Ben. By giuing liberty vnto thine eyes,
Examine other beauties,

Ro 'Tis the way to call hers (exquisite) in question more,
These happy maskes that kisse faire Ladies browes,
Being blacke, puts vs in mind they hide the faire:
He that is strooken blind, cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eye-sight lost:
Shew me a Mistresse that is passing faire,
What doth her beauty serue but as a note,
Where I may read who past that passing faire
Farewell thou canst not teach me to forget,

Ben. Ile pay that doctine, or else die in debt. Exeunt

Enter Capulet, Countie Paris, and the Clowne.

Capu. Mountague is bound as well as I,
In penalty alike, and tis not hard I thinke,
For men so old as wee, to keepe the peace.

Par. Of Honourable reckoning are you both,
And pittie 'tis you liu'd at ods so long.
But now my Lord, what say you to my sute?

Capu. But saying ore what I haue said before,
My Child is yet a stranger in the world,
Shée hath not seepe the change of fourteene yeares,
Let two more Summers wither in their pride,
Ere we may thinke her ripe to be a Bride.

Paris. Younger then she, are happy mothers made.

Capu. And too soone inard are those so early made.

Earth hath swallowed all my hopes but she,
Shée's the hopefull Lady of my earth
But wooe her gentle Paris, get her heart,
My will to her consent, is but a part,
And shée agree, within her scope of choise,
Lyes my consent, and faire according voice.
This night I hold an old accustom'd Feast,
Whereto I haue inuited many a Guest,
Such as I loue, and you among the store,
One more, most welcome makes my number more:
At my poure house, looke to behold this night,
Earth treading starres, that make darke heauen light,
Such comfort as do lusty young men seele,
When well apparel'd Aprill on the heele
Of slumping Winter treads, euen such delight
Among fresh Fennell buds shall you this night
Inherit at my house: heare all, all see.

And like her most, whose merit most shall be.
Which one more yett, of many, mine being one,
May stand in number, though in reckning none.
Come, goe with me goe sirrah trudge about,
Through faire Verona, find those persons out,
Whose names are written there, and to them say,
My house and welcome, on their pleasure stay. Exit.

Ser. Find them out whose names are written. Heere it is written, that the Shoo-maker should meddle with his Yard, and the Tayler with his Last, the Fisher with his Penfill, and the Painter with his Nets. But I am sent to find those persons whose names are writ, & can neuer find what names the writing person hath here writ: (I must to the learned) in good time

Enter Benuolio and Romeo.

Ben. Tut man, one fire burnes out anothers burning,
One paine is lefied by anothers anguish:

Turne giddie, and be holpe by backward turning:
One desparate greefe, cures with anothers languish:
Take thou some new infection to the eye,
And the rank poyson of the old wil die.

Rom. Your Planton lease is excellent for that.

Ben. For what I pray thee?

Rom. For your broken shin.

Ben. Why Romeo art thou mad?

Rom. Not mad, but bound more then a mad man is:
Shut vp in prison, kept without my foode,
Whipt and tormented: and Godden good fellow,

Ser. Godsigoden, I pray sir can you read?

Rom. I mine owne fortune in my miserie.

Ser. Perhaps you haue learn'd it without booke:
But I pray can you read any thing you see?

Rom. I, if I know the Letters and the Language.

Ser. Ye say honestly, rest you merry.

Rom. Stay fellow, I can read.

He reades the Letter.

*S*aigneur Martino, and his wife and daughter: Conny An- selme and his beauttons sisters: the Lady widow of Utrun-
no, Seigneur Placentio, and his lonely Nieces: Mercutio and his brother Valentine mine vncke Capulet his wife and daughters my faire Neece Rosaline, Luina, Seigneur Valentio, & his Cosen Tybalt Lucio and the lovely Helena
A faire assembly, whither should they come?

Ser. Vp

Rom. Whither? to supper?

Ser. To our house.

Rom. Whose house?

Ser. My Maisters.

Rom. Indeed I should haue askt you that before.

Ser. Now Ile tell you without asking. My maister is the great rich Capulet, and if you be not of the house of Mountagues I pray come and crush a cup of wine. Rest you merry Exit.

Ben. At this same suncient Feast of Capulets
Supps the faire Rosaline, whom thou so loues:
With all the admiured Beauties of Verona.
Go thither and with vnarrainted eye,
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee thinke thy Swan a Crow.

Rom. When the deuout religion of mine eye
Maintaines such falshood, then turne teares to fire:
And these who often drown'd could neuer die,
Transparent Heretiques be burnt for liers.
One fairer then my loue the all-seeing Sun
Nere saw her match, since first the world begun.

Ben. Tut, you saw her faire, none else being by,
Herselfe poyld with herselfe in euer eye.
But in that Christall scales, let there be waid,
Your Ladies loue against some other Maid
That I will show you, shining at this Feast,
And she shew scant shell, well, that now shewes best.

Rom. Ile goe along, no such sight to be showne,
But to reioyce in splendor of mine owne

Enter Capulets Wife and Nurse.

Wife. Nurse wher's my daughter? call her forth to me.
Nurse. Now by my Maidenhead, at twelue yeare old
I bad her come, what Lamb what Ladi-bird, God forbid, Where's this Gille? what Juliet?

Enter Juliet.

Juliet. How now, who calls?

Nur. Your Mother.

Juliet. Madam I am heere, what is your will?

Wife. This is the matter. Nurse giue leaue awhile, we must

must talke in secret. Nurse come backe againe, I haue remembred me, thou'lt heare our counsell. Thou knowest my daughter's of a pretty age.

Nurse. Faith I can tell her age vnto an houre.

Wife. Shee's not fourteene.

Nurse. Ile lay fourteene of my teeth, And yet to my teene be it spoken, I haue but foure, shee's not fourteene.

How long is it now to Lammis tide

Wife. A fortnight and odde dayes.

Nurse. Euen or odde, of all daies in the yeare come Lammis Eue at night shall she be fourteene. Susan & she, God rest all Christian soules, were of an age. Well Susan is with God, she was too good for me. But as I said, on Lammis Eue at night, shall she be fourteene, that shall she marrie, I remember it well. 'Tis since the Earth-quake now eleuen yeares, and she was wean'd I neuer shall forget it, of all the daies of the yeare, vpon that day - for I had then laid Worme-wood to my Dug sitting in the Sunne vnder the Douchhouse wall, my Lord and you were then at Mantua, nay I doe beare a brane. But as I said, when it did tast the Worme-wood on the nipple of my Dugge, and felt it bitter, pretty foole, to see it teache, and fall out with the Dugge, Shake quoth the Douch-house, 'twas no neede I trow to bid mee trudge - and since that time it is a eleuen yeares, for then she could stand alone, nay bi'th' roode she could haue runne, & wailed all about: for euen the day before she broke her brow, & then my Husband God be with his soule, a was a merrie man, tooke vp the Child, yea quoth hee, doest thou fall vpon thy face? thou wilt fall backward when thou hast more wit, wilt thou not Julie? And by my holy-dam, the pretty wretch leste crying, & said I. to see now how a Test shall come about. I warrant, & I shall liue a thousand yeares, I neuer should forget it. wilt thou not Julie quoth he? and pretty foole it stinted, and said I.

Old La. Inough of this, I pray thee hold thy peace.

Nurse. Yes Madam, yet I cannot chuse but laugh, to thinke it should leaue crying, & say I and yet I warrant it had vpon it brow, a bumpe as big as a young Cockrels stone? A perilous knock, and it cryed bitterly. Yea quoth my husband, fall't vpon thy face, thou wilt fall backward when thou comest to age. wilt thou not Julie? It stinted, and said I.

Julie. And stint thou too, I pray thee Nurse, say I.

Nur. Peace I haue done God marke thee too his grace thou wast the prettiest Babe that ere I nurs't, and I might liue to see thee married once, I haue my wish.

Old La. Marry that marry is the very theame I came to talke of, tell me daughter Juliet, How stands your disposition to be Married?

Julie. It is an houre that I dreame not of.

Nur. An houre, were not I thine onely Nurse, I would say thou had'st suckt wisdom from thy teat.

Old La. Well thinke of marriage now, yonger then you Heere in Verona, Ladies of esteeme, Are made already Mothers. By my count I was your Mother, much vpon these yeares That you are now a Maide, thus then in briefe: The valiant Paris seekes you for his loue

Nurse. A man young Lady, Lady. such a man as all the world. Why hee's a man of waxe.

Old La. Veronas Summer hath not such a flower.

Nurse. Nay hee's a flower, in faith a very flower.

Old La. What say you, can you loue the Gentleman? This night you shall behold him at our Feast,

Read ore the volume of young Paris face, And find delight, writ there wth Beauties pen, Examine euery leuerall liniment, And see how one another lends content. And what obscur'd in this faire volume lies, Find written in the Margent of his eyes, This precious Booke of Loue, this vnbound Loue, To Beautifie him, onely lacks a Couer. The fish liues in the Sea, and 'tis much pride For faire without, the faire within to hide. That Booke in manies eyes doth share the glorie, That in Gold claspes, Lockes in the Golden storie: So shall you share all that he doth possesse, By hauing him, making your selfe no lesse.

Nurse. No lesse, nay bigger women grow by men.

Old La. Speake briefly, can you like of Paris loue?

Julie. Ile looke to like, if looking liking moue, But no more deepe will I endart mine eye, Then your consent giues strength to make flye.

Enter a Serving man.

Ser. Madam, the guests are come, supper seru'd vp, you cal'd, my young Lady askt for, the Nurse cur'd in the Pantery, and euery thing in extremitie. I must hence to wait, I beseech you follow straight. Exit.

Mo. We follow thee, Juliet, the Countie staires,

Nurse. Goe Gyrl, seeke happy nights to happy dayes. Exit

Enter Romeo, Mercutio, Benvolio, with five or sixe other Maskers, Torch-bearers.

Rom. What shall this speech be spoke for our excuse? Or shall we on without Apologie?

Ben. The date is out of such prolixitie, Weele haue no Cupid, hood winkt with a skarfe, Bearing a Tartars painted Bow of lath, Skaring the Ladies like a Crow-keeper. But let them measure vs by what they will, Weele measure them a Measure, and be gone.

Rom. Giue me a Torch, I am not for this ambling. Being but heavy I will beare the light.

Mer. Nay gentle Romeo, we must haue you dance.

Rom. Not I beleue me, you haue dancing shooes With nimble soles, I haue a soale of Lead So stikes me to the ground, I cannot moue.

Mer. You are a Louer, borrow Capids wings, And soare with them about a common bound.

Rom. I am too sore enpeaced with his shaft, To soare with his light feathers, and to bound: I cannot bound a pitch above dull woe, Vnder loues heavy burthen doe I sinke.

Hora. And to sinke in it should you burthen loue, Too great oppression for a tender thing.

Rom. Is loue a tender thing? it is too rough, Too rude, too boysterous, and it pricks like thorne.

Mer. If loue be rough with you, be rough with loue, Pricke loue for pricking, and you beat loue downe, Giue me a Case to put my visage in, A Visor for a Visor, what care I What curious eye doth quote deformities: Here are the Beetle-browes shall blush for me.

Ben. Come knocke and enter, and no sooner in, But euery man betake him to his legs.

Rom. A Torch for me, let wantons light of heart Tickle the sencelesse rushes with their heeles. For I am prouerb'd with a Grandfier Phrase, Ile be a Candle-holder and looke on, The game was nere so faire, and I am done.

Mer. Tut

Mer. Tut, duns the Mousse, the Constables owne word,
If thou art dun, weelee draw thee from the mire
Or saue your reuerence loue, wherein thou stickest
Vp to the eares, come we burne day-light ho.

Rom. Nay that's not so.

Mer. I meane sir I delay,

We waite our lights in vaine, lights lights, by day,
Take our good meaning, for our Iudgement sits
Five times in that, ere once in our fine wits.

Rom. And we meane well in going to this Maske, Lut'tis no wit to go.

Mer. Why may one aske?

Rom. I dreamt a dreame to night

Mer. And so did I.

Rom. Well what was yours?

Mer. That dreamers often lye.

Rom. In bed a sleepe while they do dreame things true.

Mer. O then I see Queene Mab hath beene with you.
She is the Fairies Midwife, & she comes in shape no bigger then Agat-stone, on the fore-finger of an Alderman, drawne with a teeme of little Atomes, ouer mens noses as they lie asleepe her Waggon Spokes made of long Spinners legs the Couer of the wings of Grashoppers, her Traces of the smallest Spiders web, her coullers of the Moonshines wary Beames, her Whip of Crickets bone, the Lash of Philoines, her Waggoner, a small gray-coated Gnat, not halfe so bigge as a round little Worme, prick from the Lazie-finger of a man, Her Chariot is an emptie Hafelnut, made by the Ioyner Squirrel or old Grub, time out a mind, the Fairies Coach-makers & in this state she gallops night by night, through Louers braines and then they dreame of Loue On Courtiers knees, that dreame on Curfies strait ore Lawyers fingers, who strait dreamt on Fees, ore Ladies lips, who strait on kisses dreame, which oft aches the angry Mab with blisters plagues, because their breath with Sweet meats tainted are. Sometime she gallops ore a Courtiers nose, & then dreames he of smelling out a sute & sometime comes she with Tith pigs tale, tickling a Parsons nose as a lyes asleepe, then he dreames of another Benefice. Sometime she driueth ore a Souldiers necke, & then dreames he of cutting Foraine throats, of Breaches, Ambuscados, Spanish Blades Of Healths five Fadome deepe, and then anon drums in his eares, at which he startes and wakes, and being thus frighted, sweares a prayer or two & sleepe againe this is that very Mab that plats the manes of Horses in the night & bakes the Elk-locks in foule fluttish haire, which once vntangled, much misfortune bodes,
This is the hag, when Maides lie on their backs,
That presses them, and leaues them first to beare,
Making them women of good carriage
This is she.

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio peace,
Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talke of dreames:
Which as the children of an idle braine,
Begot of nothing, but vaine phantasie,
Which is as thin of substance as the ayre,
And more inconstant then the wind, who woos
Euen now the frozen bosome of the North
And being anger'd, pusses away from thence,
Turning his side to the dew dropping South.

Ben. This wind you talke of blowes vs from our selues,
Supper is done, and we shall come too late

Rom. I feare too early, for my mind misgiues,
Some consequence yet hanging in the starres,

Shall bitterly begin his fearefull date
With this nights reuels, and expire the tearme
Of a despised life clos'd in my brest
By some vile forfeit of untimely death,
But he that hath the sturrage of my course,
Direct my sute. on lustie Gentlemen.

Ben. Strike Drum.

They march about the Stage, and Seruing-men come forth with their napkins.

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Where's Polpan, that he helps not to take away?
He shise a Trencher? he scrape a Trencher?

1 When good manners, shall lie in one or two mens hands, and they vnuash it too, 'tis a foule thing.

Ser. Away with the Toynstooles, remoue the Court-cubbord, looke to the Plate good thou, saue mee a piece of Marchpane, and as thou louest me, let the Porter let in
Susan Grindstone, and Nell, Anthoine and Polpan.

2. I Boy readie.

Ser. You are lookt for, and cal'd for, askt for, & sought for, in the great Chamber

1 We cannot be here and there too, chearly Boyes,
Be brisk awhile, and the longer liuer take all.

Exeunt

Enter all the Guests and Gentlemen to the Maskers

1. Capu. Welcome Gentlemen,
Ladies that haue their toes
Vnplagu'd with Cornes, will walke about with you.
Ah my Mistresses, which of you all
Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,
She lye sweare hath Cornes am I come neare ye now?
Welcome Gentlemen, I haue seene the day
That I haue worne a Visor, and could tell
A whispering tale in a faire Ladies eare
Such as would please: 'tis gone, 'tis gone, 'tis gone,
You are welcome Gentlemen, come Musitians play

Musicke plays and the dance.

A Hall, Hell, que roome, and foote it Girles,
More light you knaues, and turne the Tables vp
And quench the fire, the Roome is growne too hot.
Ah sirrah, this vnlookt for sport comes well:
Nay sit nay sit, good Cozin Capulet,
For you and I are past our dauncing daies.
How long 'ist now since last your selfe and I
Were in a Maske?

2. Capu. Berladly thirty yeares.

1. Capu. What man. 'tis not so much, 'tis not so much,
'Tis since the Nuptiall of Lucentio,
Come Pentycost as quickly as it will,
Some five and twenty yeares, and then we Maske.

2. Cap. 'Tis more, 'tis more, his Sonne is elder sir.
His Sonne is thirty.

3. Cap. Will you tell me that?
His Sonne was but a Ward two yeares agoe.

Rom. What Ladie is that which dothm rich the hand
Of yonder Knight?

Ser. I know not sir.

Rom. O she doth teach the Torch to burne bright
It seemes she hangs vpon the cheek of night,
As a rich Jewel in an Ethiops eare
Beauty too rich for vse, for earth too deare.
So shewes a Snowy Doue trooping with Crowes,
As yonder Lady ore her fellowes shewes;
The measure done, lye watch her place of stand,
And touching hers, make blessed my rude hand

Did

Did my heart loue till now, forswear it sight,
For I neuer saw true Beauty till this night.

Tib. This by his voice, should be a Mountague.
Fetch me my Rapier Boy, what dares the slaue
Come hither couer'd with an antique face,
To fleere and scorne at our Solemnitie?
Now by the stocke and Honour of my kin,
To strike him dead I hold it not a sin.

Cap. Why how now kinsman,
Wherefore storme you so?

Tib. Vncle this is a Mountague, our foe:
A Villaine that is hither come in spight,
To scorne at our Solemnitie this night.

Cap. Young Romeo is it?

Tib. 'Tis he, that Villaine Romeo.

Cap. Content thee gentle Coz, let him alone,
A beares him like a portly Gentleman -
And to say truth, Verona brags of him,
To be a vertuous and well gouern'd youth:
I would not for the wealth of all the towne,
Here in my house do him disparagement
Therefore be patient, take no note of him,
It is my will, the which if thou respect,
Shew a faire presence, and put off these frownes,
An ill be seeming semblance for a Feast.

Tib. It fits when such a Villaine is a guest,
He not endure him.

Cap. He shall be endur'd.
What Goodman boy, I say he shall, go too,
Am I the Maister here or you? go too,
Youle not endure him, God shall mend my soule,
Youle make a Mutinie among the Guests:
You will set cocke a hoope, youle be the man.

Tib. Why Vncle, 'tis a shame.

Cap. Go too, go too,
You are a sawey Boy, 'ist so indeed?
This trickie may chance to scath you, I know what,
You must contrary me, marry 'tis time.
Well said my hearts, you are a Princ Cox, goe,
Be quiet, or more light, more light for shame,
He make you quiet. What, chearely my hearts

Tib. Patience perforce, with wilfull choler meeting,
Makes my flesh tremble in their different greeting:
I will withdraw, but this intrusion shall
Now seeming sweet, conuert to bitter gall. Exit.

Rom. If I prophane with my vnworthiest hand,
This holy shrine, the gentle sin is this,
My lips to blushing Pilgrims did ready stand,
To smooth that rough touch, with a tender kisse.

Iul. Good Pilgrime,
You do wrong your hand too much,
Which mannerly deuotion shewes in this,
For Saints haue hands, that Pilgrims hands do touch,
And palme to palme, is holy Palmers kisse,

Rom. Haue not Saints lips, and holy Palmers too?

Iul. I Pilgrim, lips that they must vse in prayer.

Rom. O then deare Saint, let lips do what hands do,
They pray (grant thou) least faith turne to dispaire.

Iul. Saints do not moue;

Though grant for prayers sake.

Rom. Then moue not while my prayers effect I take:
Thus from my lips, by thine my sin is purg'd.

Iul. Then haue my lips the sin that they haue tooke.

Rom. Sin from my lips? O trespassie sweetly vrg'd:
Gue me my sin againe,

Iul. You kisse by th' hooke.

Nur. Madam your Mother craues a word with you.

Rom. What is her Mother's?

Nur. Marrie Batcheler,

Her Mother is the Lady of the house,
And a good Lady, and a wise, and Vertuous,
I Nur't her Daughter that you talk withall:
I tell you, he that can lay hold of her,
Shall haue the chyncks.

Rom. Is she a Capulet?

O deare account! My life is my foes debt.

Ben. Away, be gone, the sport is at the best.

Rom. I so I feare, the more is my vnrest.

Cap. Nay Gentlemen prepare not to be gone,
We haue a trifling foolish Banquet towards:
Is it e'ne so? why then I thanke you all.

I thanke you honest Gentlemen, good night:
More Torches here come on, then let's to bed
Ah sirrah, by my sale it waxes late,
He to my rest.

Iul. Come hither Nurse,

What is yond Gentleman:

Nur. The Sonne and Heire of old Tybalt.

Iul. What's he that now is going out of doore?

Nur. Marrie that I thinke be young Petruchio.

Iul. What's he that follows here that would not dance?

Nur. I know not.

Iul. Go aske his name: if he be married,
My graue is like to be my wedded bed.

Nur. His name is Romeo, and a Mountague,
The onely Sonne of your great Enemie.

Iul. My onely Loue sprung from my onely hate,
Too early scene, vnknowne, and knowne too late,
Prodigious birth of Loue it is to me,
That I must loue a loathed Enemie.

Nur. What's this? what's this?

Iul. A time, I leaue euen now
Of one I dan't withall.

One calls within, Iuliet.

Nur. Anon, anon -

Come let's away, i' strangers all are gone.

Exit.

Chorus.

Now old desire doth in his death bed lie,
And yong affection gapes to be his Heire,
That faile, for which Loue gron'd for and would die,
With tender Iuliet matcht, is now not faire.
Now Romeo is beloued, and Loues againe,
A like bewitched by the charme of lookes:
But to his foe suppos'd he must complaine,
And she steale Loues sweet bait from fearefull hookes.
Being held a foe, he may not haue access
To breath such voves as Louers vse to sweare,
And she as much in Loue, her meanes much lesse,
To meete her new Beloued any where:
But passion lends them Power, time, meanes to meete,
Temp'ring extremities with extreame sweete.

Enter Romeo alone.

Rom. Can I goe forward when my heart is here?
Turne backe dull earth, and find thy Center out.

Enter Benvolio, with Mercutio.

Ben. Romeo, my Cozen Romeo, Romeo.

Merc. He is wise,

And on my life hath stolne him home to bed.

Ben. He ran this way and leapt this Orchard wall.
Call good Mercutio:

Nay, he conuere too.

Mor.

Mer. Romeo, Humours, Madman, Passion, Louer,
Appeare thou in the likenesse of a sigh,
Speake but one time, and I am satisfied:

Cry me but ay me, Prouant, but Loue and day,
Speake to my goship Venus one faire word,
One Nickname for her purblind Sonne and her,
Young Abraham Cupid he that shot so true,
When King Cepheina lou'd the begger Maid,
He heareth not, he stirreth not, he moueth not,
The Ape is dead, I must conure him,
I conure thee by Rosalind bright eyes,
By her High forehead, and her Scarlet lip,
By her Fine foote, Straight leg, and Quivering thigh,
And the Demeanes, that there Adiacent lie,
That in thy likenesse thou appeare to vs.

Ben. And if he heare thee thou wilt anger him.

Mer. This cannot anger him, 't would anger him
To raise a spirit in his Mistresse circle,
Of some strange nature, letting it stand
Till she had laid it, and conuired it downe,
That were some spight.

My inuocation is faire and honest, & in his Mistis name,
I conure onely but to raise vp him.

Ben. Come, he hath hid himselfe among these Trees
To be comforted with the Humorous night -
Blind is his Loue, and best befits the darke.

Mer. If Loue be blind, Loue cannot hit the marke,
Now will he sit vnder a Medler tree,
And wish his Mistresse were that kind of Fruite,
As Maides call Medlers when they laugh alone,
O Romeo that she were, O that she were
An open, or thou a Poprin Peare,
Romeo goodnight, Ile to my Truckle bed,
This Field-bed is to cold for me to sleepe,
Come shall we go?

Ben. Go then, for 'tis in vaine to seeke him here
That meanes not to be found. Exeunt.

Rom. He reasts at Scarres that neuer felt a wound,
But soft, what light through yonder window breakes?
It is the East, and Juliet is the Sonne,
Arise faire Sun and kill the enuious Moone,
Who is already sicke and pale with griefe,
That thou her Maid art far more faire then she:
Be not her Maid since she is enuious,
Her Vestall livery is but sicke and greene,
And none but fooles do weare it, cast it off -
It is my Lady, O it is my Loue, O that she knew she were,
She speakes, yet she sayes nothing, what of that?
Her eye discourses, I will answer it:
I am too bold 'tis not to me she speakes.
Two of the fairest starres in all the Heauen,
Hauing some businesse do entreat her eyes,
To twinkle in their Spheres till they returne.
What if her eyes were there, they in her head,
The brightnesse of her cheek would shame those starres,
As day-light doth a Lampe, her eye in heauen,
Would through the syrie Region streame so bright,
That Birds would sing, and thinke it were not night.
See how she leanes her cheek vpon her hand.
O that I were a Gloue vpon that hand,
That I might touch that cheek.

Jul. Ayme.

Rom. She speakes

Oh speake againe bright Angell, for thou art
As glorious to this night being ore my head,
As is a winged messenger of heauen:

Vnto the white vturned wondring eyes
Of mortalls that fall backe to gaze on him,
When he bestrides the lazie puffing Cloudes,
And sailes vpon the bosome of the ayre.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo, wherefore art thou Romeo?
Denie thy Father and refuse thy name;
Or if thou wilt not, be but worne my Loue,
And Ile no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I heare more, or shall I speake at this?

Jul. 'Tis but thy name that is my Enemy:
Thou art thy selfe, though not a Montague,
What's Montague? it is nor hand nor toote,
Nor arme, nor face, O be some other name
Belonging to a man

What? in a names that which we call a Rose,
By any other word would smell as sweete,
So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
Retaine that deare perfection which he owes,
Without that title Romeo, dosse thy name,
And for thy hame which is no part of thee,
Take all my selfe.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
Call me but Lone, and Ile be new baptiz'd,
Hence forth I neuer will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that thus besetren'd in night
So stumblest on my counsell?

Rom. By a name,
I know not how to tell thee who I am:
My name deare Saint, is hateful to my selfe,
Because it is an Enemy to thee,
Had I it written, I would teare the word

Jul. My eares haue yet not drunke a hundred words
Of thy tongues vttering, yet I know the sound.
Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague?

Rom. Neither faire Maid, if either thee dislike.

Jul. How cam'st thou hither,

Tell me, and wherefore?
The Orchard walls are high, and hard to climbe,
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here,

Rom. With Loues light wings
Did I ore-perch these Walls,
For stony limits cannot hold Loue out,
And what Loue can do, that dares Loue attempt:
Therefore thy kinsmen are no stop to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder thee.

Rom. Alacke there lies more perill in thine eye,
Then twenty of their Swords, looke thou but sweete,
And I am proofe against their enmity.

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee here

Rom. I haue nights cloake to hide me from their eyes
And but thou loue me, let them finde me here,
My life were better ended by their hate,
Then death proroged wanting of thy Loue.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out this place?

Rom. By Loue that first did prompt me to enquire,
He lent me counsell, and I lent him eyes,
I am no Pylor, yet wert thou as far
As that vast-shore-washest with the farthest Sea,
I should aduenture for such Marchandise.

Jul. Thou knowest the maske of night is on my face,
Else would a Maiden blush bepaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speake to night,
Faine would I dwell on forme, faine, faine, denie
What I haue spoke, but farewell Complement,
Dost thou Loue? I know thou wilt say I,

And

And I will take thy word, yet if thou swear'st,
Thou maiest proue faller at I ouers periuies
They say Love laught, oh gentle Romeo,
If thou dost Love, pronounce it truthfully :
Or if thou thinkest I am too quickly wonne,
He frowne and be peruerie, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt wooe. But else not for the world.
In truth faire Monsieur I am too fond :
And therefore thou maiest thinke my behaviour light,
But trust me Gentleman, he proue more true,
Then thole that haue coying to be strange,
I should haue beene more strange, I must confesse,
But that thou ouerheard'st ere I was ware
My true Loues passion, therefore pardon me,
And not impute this yielding to light Love,
Which the darke night hath discoouered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder Moone I vow,
That tips with silver all these Frute tree tops.

Jul. O sweare not by the Moone, th'inconstant Moone,
That monethly changes in her circled Orbe,
Least that thy Love proue likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I sweare by?

Jul. Do not sweare at all.

O if thou wilt sweare by thy gracious selfe,
Which is the God of my Idolatry,
And he beleue thee.

Rom. If my hearts deare love.

Jul. Well do not sweare, although I joy in thee:
I haue no ioy of this contract to night,
It is too rash, too vnaduis'd, too sudden,
Too like the lightning which doth cease to be
Ere, one can say, it lightens, Sweete good night:
This bud of Love by Summers ripening breath,
May proue a beaustious Flower when next we meete:
Goodnight, goodnight, as sweete repote and rest,
Come to thy heart, as that within my brest.

Rom. O wilt thou leaue me so vn-satisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou haue to night?

Ro. Th'exchange of thy Loves faithfull vow for mine.

Jul. I gaue thee mine before thou did'st request it:
And yet I would it were to giue againe.

Rom. Would'st thou withdraw it,
For what purpose Love?

Jul. But to be franke and giue it thee againe,
And yet I wish but for the thing I haue,
My bounty is as boundlesse as the Sea,
My Love as deepe, the more I giue to thee
The more I haue, for both are Infinite:
I heare some noyse within deare Love adue.

Cal's within.

Anon good Nurse, sweete Monsieur be true:
Stay but a little, I will come againe.

Rom. O blessed blessed night, I am afeard
Being in night, all this is but a dreame,
Too flattering sweet to be substantiall

Jul. Three words deare Romeo,
And goodnight indeed,
If that thy bent of Love be Honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to morrow,
By one that he procure to come to thee,
Where and what time thou wilt performe the rite,
And all my Fortunes at thy foote he lay,
And follow thee my Lord throughout the world.

Within: Madam.

I come, anon: but if thou meanest not well,
I do beseech thee

Within. Madam.

(By and by I come)

To cease thy strife, and leaue me to my grieve,
To morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrue my toile

Is. A thousand times goodnight.

Exit.

Romeo. A thousand times the worse to want thy light,
Love goes toward Love as school-boys fro their books
But Love fro Love, towards schoole with heauie lookes.

Enter Juliet againe.

Jul. Hift Romeo hift O for a Talkners voice,
To lure this Tassell gentle backe againe,
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speake aloud,
Else would I teare the Cause where Echo lies,
And make her ayrie tongue more hoarse, then
With repetition of my Romeo.

Rom. It is my soule that calls vpon my name,
How silver sweet, sound Louers tongues by night,
Like softest Musicke to attending eares.

Jul. Romeo,

Rom. My Neece.

Jul. Whata clock to morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. By the houre of nine.

Jul. I will not faile, 'tis twenty yeares till then,
I haue forgot why I did call thee backe.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it.

Jul. I shall forget, to haue thee still stand there,
Remembring how I Love thy company.

Rom. And he still stay, to haue thee still forget,
Forgetting any other home but this.

Jul. 'Tis almost morn'ng, I would haue thee gone,
And yet no further then a wantons Bird,
That lee's it hop a little from his hand,
Like a poore prisoner in his twisted Gyres,
And with a silken thred plucks it backe againe,
So louing Icalous of his liberty.

Rom. I would Lvere thy Bird.

Jul. Sweet so would I,
Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing.
Good night, good night.

Rom. Parting is such sweete sorrow,
That I shall say goodnight, till it be morrow

Jul. Sleepe dwell vpon thine eyes, peace in thy brest

Rom. Would I were sleepe and peace so sweet to rest,
The gray ey'd morne smiles on the frowning night,
Checking the Easterne Clouds with streakes of light,
And darknesse fleckel'd like a drunkard reeles,
From forth dayes pathway, made by Titans wheels
Hence will I to my ghostly Fries close Cell,
His helpe to craue, and my deare hap to tell.

Exit.

Enter Friar alone with a basket.

Fri. The gray ey'd morne smiles on the frowning night,
Checking the Easterne Cloudes with streaks of light.
And fleckled darknesse like a drunkard reeles,
From forth daies path, and Titans burning wheels
Now ere the Sun aduance his burning eye,
The day to cheere, and nights danke dew to dry,
I must vpfill this Oser Cage of ours,
With balefull weedes, and precious Iuiced flowers,
The earth that's Natures mother, is her Tombe,
What is her burying graue that is her wombe:
And from her wombe children of diuers kind

We

We sucking on her naturall bosome find:
Many for many vertues excellent:
None but for some, and yet all different.
Omickle is the powerfull grace that lies
In Plants, Hearbes, stones, and their true qualities:
For nought so vile, that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some speciall good doth give.
Nor ought so good, but strain'd from that faire use,
Revolts from true birth, stumbling on abuse.
Vertue it selfe turns vice being misapplied,
And vice sometime by action dignified.

Enter Romeo.

Within the infant rind of this weake flower,
Poyson hath residence, and medicine power:
For this being smelt, with that pure cheeres each part,
Being tasted slayes all senses with the heart.
Two luch opposed Kings encampe them still,
In man as well as Hearbes, grace and rude will:
And where the worser is predominant,
Full soone the Canker death eates vp that Plant.

Rom. Good morrow Father.

Fri. Benedicite

What early tongue so sweet salueth me?
Young Sonne, it argues a distempered head,
So soone to bid goodmorrow to thy bed;
Care keeps his watch in euery old mans eye,
And where Care lodges, sleepe will neuer lye:
But where vnbrused youth with vnstuf braine
Doth couch his lims, there, golden sleepe doth raigne;
Therefore thy earlinesse doth me assure,
Thou art vprousd with some distemperature:
Or if not so, then here I hit it right
Our Romeo hath not beene in bed to night.

Rom. That last is true, the sweeter rest was mine.

Fri. God pardon sin wast thou with Rosaline?

Rom. With Rosaline, my ghostly Father? No,
I haue forgot that name, and that names woe.

Fri. That's my good Son, but where hast thou bin then?

Rom. Ile tell thee ere thou aske it me agen.

I haue beene feasting with mine enemy,
Where on a sudden one hath wounded me,
That's by me wounded both our remedies
Within thy helpe and holy phisicke lies:
I beare no hatred, blessed man for loe
My intercession likewise steads my foe.

Fri. Be plaine good Son, rest homely in thy drift,
Riding confession, findes but riding thrife.

Rom. Then plainly know my hearts deare Loue is set,
On the faire daughter of rich Capulet:

As mine on hers, so hers is set on mine,
And all combin'd, saue what thou must combine
By holy marriage. when and where, and how,
We met, we wooed, and made exchange of vow:
Ile tell thee as we passe, but this I pray,
That thou consent to marrie vs to day

Fri. Holy S. Francis, what a change is heere?
Is Rosaline that thou didst Loue so deare

So soone forsaken? young mens Loue then lies
Not truely in their hearts, but in their eyes.

Iesu Maria, what a deale of braine
Hath wast thy fallow cheekes for Rosaline?

How much salt water throwne away in wast,
To season Loue that of it doth not tast
The Sun not yet thy sighes, from heauen cleares,
Thy old groanes yet ringing in my auncient eares:
Lo here vpon thy cheeke the staine doth sit,

Of an old teare that is now wast off yet.

If ere thou wast thy selfe, and these woes thine,
Thou and these woes, were all for Rosaline.

And art thou chang'd? pronounce this sentence then,
Women may fall, when there's no strength in men.

Rom. Thou chid'st me oft for louing Rosaline.

Fri. For doing, not for louing pupill mine.

Rom. And bad'st me bury Loue.

Fri. Not in a graue,

I loay one in, another out to haue.

Rom. I pray thee chide me not, her I Loue now
Doth grace for grace, and Loue for Loue allow:
The other did not so.

Fri. O she knew well,
Thy Loue did read by rote, that could not spell:

But come young wauerer, come goe with me,
In one respect, Ile thy assistant be

For this alliance may so happy proue,
To turne your houshold rancor to pure Loue.

Rom. O let vs hence, I stand on sudden haist

Fri. Wisely and slow, they stumble that run fast.

Exeunt

Enter Benuolio and Mercutio.

Mer. Where the deule should this Romeo be? came he not home to night?

Ben. Not to his Fathers, I spoke with his man.

Mer. Why that same pale hard-hearted wench, that Rosaline torments him so, that he will sure run mad

Ben. Tibalt, the kinsman to old Capulet, hath sent a Letter to his Fathers house.

Mer. A challenge on my life.

Ben. Romeo will answere it.

Mer. Any man that can write, may answere a Letter.

Ben. Nay, he will answere the Letters Maister how he dares, being dared.

Mer. Alas poore Romeo, he is already dead stab'd with a white wenches blacke eye, runne through the eare with a Loue song, the very pinne of his heart, cleft with the blind Bowe-boyes butt-shaft, and is he a man to encouter Tybalt?

Ben. Why what is Tibalt?

Mer. More then Prince of Cats. Oh hee's the Couragi-ous Captaine of Complements. he fights as you sing prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion, he rests his minum, one, two, and the third in your bosom: the very butcher of a silk burton, a Duellist, a Duellist; a Gentleman of the very first house of the first and second cause: ah the immortall Passado the Punto reuerso, the Hay.

Ben. The what?

Mer. The Pox of such antique hisping affecting phan-tacies, these new tuners of accent: Iesu a very good blade,

a very tall man, a very good whore. Why is not this a lamentable thing Grandfire, that we should be thus afflicted with these strange flies - these fashion Mongers, these pardon-mee's, who stand so much on the new form, that they cannot sit at ease on the old bench. O their bones, their bones.

Mer. The Pox of such antique hisping affecting phan-
tacies, these new tuners of accent: Iesu a very good blade,

French fop: you gaue vs the the counterfeit fairely last night.

Romeo. Good morrow to you both, what counterfeit did I giue you?

Mer. The slip sir, the slip, can you not conceiue?

Rom. Pardon Mercutio, my businesse was great, and in such a case as mine, a man may straine curtesie.

Mer. That's as much as to say, such a case as yours constrains a man to bow in the hams.

Rom. Meaning to curfie.

Mer. Thou hast most kindly hit it.

Rom. A most curteous exposition.

Mer. Nay, I am the very pinck of curtesie.

Rom. Pinke for flower.

Mer. Right.

Rom. Why then is my Pump well flow'r'd.

Mer. Sure wit, follow me this ieast, now till thou hast worne out thy Pump, that when the single sole of it is worne, the ieast may remaine after the wearing, singular

Rom. O single sol'd ieast,
Soly singular for the singleness.

Mer. Come betweene vs good Benvolio, my wits faints.

Rom. Swits and spurs,
Swits and spurs, or Ile crye a match.

Mer. Nay, if our wits run the Wild-Goose chase, I am done: For thou hast more of the Wild-Goose in one of thy wits, then I am sure I haue in my whole fiue. Was I with you there for the Goose?

Rom. Thou wast neuer with mee for any thing, when thou wast not there for the Goose.

Mer. I will bite thee by the eare for that iest.

Rom. Nay, good Goose bite not.

Mer. Thy wit is a very Bitter-sweeting,
It is a most sharpe sawce.

Rom. And is it not well seru'd into a Sweet-Goose?

Mer. Oh here's a wit of Cheuerell, that stretches from an ynch narrow, to an ell broad.

Rom. I stretch it out for that word, broad, which added to the Goose, proues thee farre and wide, abroad Goose.

Mer. Why is not this better now, then groning for Loue, now art thou sociable, now art thou Romeo, now art thou what thou art, by Art as well as by Nature, for this drueling Loue is like a great Naturall, that runs lolling vp and downe to hid his bable in a hole.

Ben. Stop there, stop there.

Mer. Thou desir'st me to stop in my tale against the

Ben. Thou would'st else haue made thy tale large. (haire.

Mer. O thou art deceiu'd, I would haue made it short, or I was come to the whole depth of my tale, and meant indeed to occupie the argument no longer.

Enter Nurse and her man.

Rom. Here's goodly geare
A sayle, a sayle.

Mer. Two, two a Shirt and a Smocke.

Nur. Peter?

Peter. Anon

Nur. My Fan Peter?

Mer. Good Peter to hide her face?
For her Fans the fairer face?

Nur. God ye good morrow Gentlemen

Mer. God ye gooden faire Gentlewoman.

Nur. Is it gooden?

Mer. 'Tis no lesse I tell you - for the bawdy hand of the Dyall is now vpon the pricke of Noone.

Nur. Out vpon you what a man are you?

Rom. One Gentlewoman,
That God hath made, himselfe to mar.

Nur. By my troth it is said, for himselfe to, mar quath; Gentlemen, can any of you tel me where I may find the young Romeo?

Romeo. I can tell you, but young Romeo will be older when you haue found him, then he was when you sought him: I am the youngest of that name, for fault of a worse.

Nur. You say well.

Mer. Yea is the worst well,
Very well tooke: I faith, wisely, wisely.

Nur. If you be he sir,
I desire some confidence with you?

Ben. She will endite him to some Supper.

Mer. A baud, a baud, a baud. So no.

Rom. What hast thou found?

Mer. No Hare sir, vnlesse a Hare sir in a Lenten pie, that is something stale and hoare ere it be spent.

An old Hare hoare, and an old Hare hoare is very good meat in Lent.

But a Hare that is hoare is too much for a score, when it hoares ere it be spent,
Romeo will you come to your Fathers? Weele to dinner thither.

Rom. I will follow you.

Mer. Farewell aunient Lady - Farewell Lady, Lady, Lady.

Exit. Mercutio, Benvolio.

Nur. I pray you sir, what sawcie Merchant was this that was so full of his roperie?

Rom. A Gentleman Nurse, that loues to heare himselfe talke, and will speake more in a minute, then he will stand to in a Moneth.

Nur. And a speake any thing against me, Ile take him downe, & a were lustier then he is, and twentie such lackes and it I cannot. Ile finde those that shall scurue knaue, I am none of his flurt-gils, I am none of his skaines mates, and thou must stand by too and suffer euery knaue to vse me at his pleasure

Pet. I saw no man vse you at his pleasure if I had, my weapon should quickly haue bene out, I warrant you, I dare draw as soone as another man, if I see occasion in a good quarrell, and the law on my side.

Nur. Now afore God, I am so vext, that euery part about me quivers, skuruy knaue - pray you sir a word - and as I told you, my young Lady bid me enquire you out, what she bid me say, I will keepe to my selfe - but first let me tell ye, if ye should leade her in a foolies paradise, as they say, it were a very grosse kind of behaviour, as they say: for the Gentlewoman is yong. & therefore, if you should deale double with her, truly it were an ill thing to be offered to any Gentlewoman, and very weake dealing.

Nur. Nurse commend me to thy Lady and Mistresse, I protest vnto thee.

Nur. Good heart, and yfaith I will tell her as much - Lord, Lord she will be a ioyfull woman.

Rom. What wilt thou tell her Nurse? thou dost not make me?

Nur. I will tell her sir, that you do protest, which as I take it, is a Gentleman-like offer. (afternoone,

Rom. Bid her deuise some meanes to come to thrust this Beshru'd and married: here is for thy paines.

Nur. No truly sir not a penny.

Rom. Go too, I say you shall.

Nurse

Nur. This afternoone sir? well the shall be there.

Ro. And stay thou good Nurse behind the Abbey wall,
Within this house my man shall be with thee,
And bring thee Cords made like a rackled staire,
Which to the high top gallant of my ioy,
Must be my conuay in the secret night.
Farewell, be trustie and Ile quite thy paines.
Farewell, commend me to thy Mistresse.

Nur. Now God in heauen bleste thee. hark you sir,

Rom. What saist thou my deare Nurse?

Nurse. Is your man secret, did you nere heare say two may keepe counsell putting one away.

Ro. Warrant thee my man as true as steel'e.

Nur. Well sir, my Mistresse is the sweetest Lady, Lord, Lord, when 'twas a little prating thing. O there is a Noble man in Towne one Paris, that would faine lay knife aboard, but she good soule had as leuee a see Toade, a very Toade as see him I anger her sometimes, and tell her that
Paris is the properer man, but Ile warrant you, when I say so, shee looks as pale as any clout in the verfall world.
Doth not Rosemarie and Romeo begin both with a letter?

Rom. I Nurse, what of that? Both with an R

Nur. A mocker that's the dogsname R. is for the no,
I know it begins with some other letter, and she hath the prettiest sententious of it, of you and Rosemary, that it would do you good to heare it.

Rom. Commend me to thy Lady.

Nur. I a thousand times, Peter?

Pet. Anon.

Nur. Before and apace. Exit Nurse and Peter.

Enter Juliet.

Jul. The clocke strook nine, when I did send the Nurse,
In halfe an houre she promised to returne,
Perchance she cannot meete him that's not so:
Oh she is lame, Loues Hierauld should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glides then the Sunnes beames,
Driuing backe shadowes ouer lowring hills.
Therefore do nimble Pinion'd Doves draw Loue,
And therefore liath the wind-swift Cupid wings:
Now is the Sun vpon the highmost hill
Of this daies iourney, and from nine till twelue,
I three long houres, yet she is not come.
Had she affections and warme youthfull blood,
She would be as swift in motion as a ball,
My words would bandy her to my sweete Loue,
And his to me, but old folkes,
Many faine as they were dead,
Vnwieldie, slow, heauy, and pale as lead

Enter Nurse

O God she comes, O hony Nurse what newes?
Hast thou met with him? send thy man away.

Nur. Peter stay at the gate.

Jul. Now good sweet Nurse.

O Lord, why lookest thou sad?
(Though newes, be sad, yet tell them merrily.
If good thou shalt not the musick of sweet newes,
By playing it to me, with so sower a face,

Nur. I am a weary, que me leque, awhile,
Fie how my bones ake, what a iauing haue I had?

Jul. I would thou had'st my bones, and I thy newes
Nay come I pray thee speake good good Nurse speake.

Nur. Iesu what hast thou can you not stay a while?
Do you not see that I am out of breath?

Jul. How art thou out of breath, when thou hast breath
To say to me, that thou art out of breath?
The excuse that thou dost make in this delay,

Is longer then the tale thou dost excuse.

Is thy newes good or bad? answer to that,
Say either, and Ile stay the circumstance:

Let me be satisfied, ist good or bad?

Nur. Well, you haue made a simple thicke, you know not how to chuse a man: Romeo, no not he though his face be better then any mans, yet his legs excels all mens, and for a hand, and a foote, and a body, though they be not so be talk on, yet they are past compare: he is not the flower of curtesie, but Ile warrant him as gentle as a Lambc... go thy wayes wench, serue God, What haue you din'd at home?

Jul. Nono but all this this did I know before
What saies he of our marriage? what of that?

Nur. Lord how my head akes, what a head haue I?
It beates as it would fall in twerty peeces.

My backe a tother side o my backe, my backe:
Bestrew your heart for sending me about
To catch my death with iauing vp and downe

Jul. I faith I am forrie that that thou art so well.
Sweet sweet, sweet Nurse, tell me what saies my Loue?

Nur. Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman,
And a courteous, and a kind, and a handsome,
And I warrant a vertuous, where is your Mother?

Jul. Where is my Mother?
Why she is within, where should she be?

How odly thou repl'st!

Your Loue saies like an honest Gentleman:
Where is your Mother?

Nur. O Gods Lady deare,
Are you so hot? marrie come vp I trow,

Is this the Poulter for my aking bones?
Henceforward do your messages your selfe,

Jul. Heere's such a coile, come what saies Romeo?

Nur. Haue you got leaue to go to shrift to day?

Jul. I haue.

Nur. Then high you hence to Frier Lawrence Cell,
There staires a Husband to make you a wife.
Now comes the wanton bloud vp in your cheekes,
The le be in Scarlet straight at any newes:
Hie you to Church, I must an other way,
To fetch a Ladder by the which your Loue
Must climde a birds nest Soone when it is darke:
I am the drudge, and to le in your delight:
But you shall beare the burthen soone at night,
Go lie to dinner, hie you to the Cell.

Jul. Hie to high Fortune, honest Nurse, farewell. Exit.

Enter Friar and Romeo.

Fri. So smile the heauens vpon this holy act,
That after houres, with sorrow chide vs not.

Rom. Amen, but come what sorrow can,
It cannot counteruile the exchange of ioy
That one short minute giues me in her sight:
Do thou but close our hands with holy words,
Then Loue-deuoting death do what he daie,
It is enough, I may but call her mine.

Fri. These violent delights haue violent endes,
And in their triumph, die like fire and powder;
Which as they kisse consume, The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in his owne deliciousnesse,
And in the taste confounds the appetite,
Therefore Loue moderately, long Loue doth so,
Too swift arrives as tardie as too slow.

Enter Juliet.

Here comes the Lady. Oh so light a foot
Will nere weare out the swerishing flint,

A Louer may bestride the Gossamours,
That ydles in the wanron Summer ayre,
And yet not fall, so light is vanitie.

Jul. Good euen to my ghostly Confessor.

Fri. Romeo shall thanke thee Daughter for vs both.

Jul. As much to him, else in his thanks too much.

Fri. Ah Juliet, if the measure of thy ioy
Be heapt like mine, and that thy skill be more
To blasfon it, then tweeken with thy breath
This neighbour ayre, and let rich musickes tongue,
Vnfold the imagin'd happinesse that both
Receiue in either, by this deere encounter.

Jul. Conceit more rich in matter then in words,
Brag's of his substance, not of Ornament.
They are but beggers that can count their worth,
But my true Loue is growne to such such excesse,
I cannot sum vp some of halfe my weal'h.

Fri. Come, come with me, & we will make short worke,
For by your leaues, you shall not stay alone,
Till holy Church incorporate two in one.

Enter Mercutio, Benuolio, and men.

Ben. I pray thee good Mercutio lets retire,
The day is hot, the Capulets abroad
And if we meet, we shal not scape a brawle, for now these hot dayes, is the mad blood stirring.

Mer. Thou art like one of these fellows, that when he enters the confines of a Tauerne, claps me his Sword vpon the Table, and sayes, God send me no need of thee and by the operation of the second cup, drawes him on the Drawer, when indeed there is no need

Ben. Am I like such a Fellow?

Mer. Come, come, thou art as hot a Tacke in thy mood, as any in Italie: and as soone moued to be moodie, and assoone moodie to be mou'd.

Ben. And what too?

Mer. Nay, and there were two such, we should haue none shortly, for one would kill the other: thou, why thou wilt quarrell with a man that hath a haire more, or a haire lesse in his beard, then thou hast thou wilt quarrell with a man for cracking Nuts, hauing no other reason, but because thou hast hasell eyes what eye, but such an eye, would spee out such a quarrell? thy head is as full of quarrels, as an egge is full of meat, and yet thy head hath bin beaten as addle as an egge for quarreling thou hast quarrel'd with a man for cossing in the streer, because he hath wakened thy Dog that hath laine asleepe in the Sun Did'st thou not fall out with a Tailor for wearing his new Doub-
let before Easter? with another, for tying his new shooes with old Riband, and yet thou wilt Tutor me from quarrelling?

Ben. And I were so apt to quarell as thou art, any man should buy the Fee-simple of my life, for an houre and a quarter.

Mer. The Fee-simple? O simple.

Enter Tybalt, Petruchio, and others.

Ben. By my head here comes the Capulets:

Mer. By my heele I care not

Tyb. Follow me close, for I will speake to them
Gentlemen, Good day, a word with one of you.

Mer. And but one word with one of vs? couple it with something, make it a word and a blow.

Tyb. You shall find me apt enough to that sir. and you will giue me occasion.

Mercu. Could you not take some occasion without giuing?

Tyb. Mercutio thou comfort'st with Romeo.

Mer. Comfort? what dost thou make vs Minstrels? & thou make Minstrels of vs, looke to heare nothing but discords heere's my fiddlestick, heere's that shall make you daunce. Come comfort.

Ben. We talke here in the publike haunt of men
Either withdraw vnto some priuate place,
Or reason coldly of your greouances:
Or else depart, here all eyes gaze on vs.

Mer. Mens eyes were made to looke, and let them gaze.
I will not budge for no mans pleasure.

Enter Romeo.

Tyb. Well peace be with you sir, here comes my man

Mer. But Ile be hang'd sir if he weare your Livery Marry go before to field, heele be your follower,
Your worship in that sense, may call him mar

Tyb. Romeo, the loue I beare thee, can afford
No better terme then this Thou art a Villaine.

Rom. Tybalt, the reason that I haue to loue thee,
Doth much excuse the appertaining rage
To such a greeting: Villaine am I none;
Therefore farewell, I see thou know'st me not.

Tyb. Boy, this shall not excuse the injuries
That thou hast done me, therefore turne and draw.

Rom. I do protest I neuer inur'd thee,
But lou'd thee better then thou can'st deuise:
Till thou shalt know the reason of my loue,
And so good Capulet, which name I tender
As dearly as my owne, be satisfied.

Mer. O calme, dishonourable, vile submission:
Alla stucatho carries it away.

Tybalt, you Rat-catcher, will you walke?

Tyb. What woulds thou haue with me?

Mer. Good King of Cats, nothing but one of your nine liues, that I meane to make bold withall, and as you shall vse me hereafter dry beate the rest of the eight. Will you pluck your Sword out of his Pilcher by the eares? Make hast, least mine be about your eares ere it be out.

Tyb. I am for you.

Rom. Gentle Mercutio, put thy Rapier vp.

Mer. Come sir, your Passado.

Rom. Draw Benuolio, beat downe their weapons:
Gentlemen, for shame forbear this outrage,
Tybalt, Mercutio, the Prince expresse hath Forbidden bandying in Verona streets
Hold Tybalt, good Mercutio.

Exit Tybalt.

Mer. I am hurt.

A plague a both the Houses, I am sped:
Is he gone and hath nothing?

Ben. What art thou hurt?

Mer. I, I a scratch, a scratch, marry 'tis inough,
Where is my Page? go Villaine fetch a Surgeon.

Rom. Courage man, the hurt cannot be much.

Mer. No 'tis not so deepe as a well, nor so wide as a Church doore, but 'tis inough; 'twill serue: aske for me tomorrow, and you shall find me a grave man. I am pepper'd
I warrant, for this world. a plague a both your houses.
What, a Dog, a Rat, a Mouſe, a Cat to scratch a man to death: a Braggart, a Rogue, a Villaine, that fights by the booke of Arithmetticke, why the deu'le-came you be-twene vs? I was hurt vnder your arme.

Rom. I thought all for the best.

Mer. Helpe me into some house Benuolio,
Or I shall faint: a plague a both your houses.
They haue made wormes meat of me,

I haue it, and soundly to your Houses.

Rom. This Gentleman the Princes neere Alie,
My very Friend hath got his mortall hurt
In my behalfe, my reputation stain'd
With Tybals slaunders, Tybalt that an houre
Hath beene my Cozin O Sweet Juliet,
Thy Beauty hath made me Effeminate,
And in my temper softned Valours Steele.

Enter Benvolio.

Ben. O Romeo, Romeo, braue Mercutio's is dead,
That Gallant spirit hath aspir'd the Cloudes,
Which too vntimely here did scorne the earth.

Rom. This daies blacke Fate, on mo daies doth depend,
This but begins, the wo others must end.

Enter Tybalt

Ben. Here comes the Furious Tybalt backe againe.

Rom. He gon in triumph, and Mercutio slaine?

Away to heauen respectiue Lennie,
And fire and Fury, be my conduct now.
Now Tybalt take the Villaine backe againe
That late thou gau'st me, for Mercutio's soule
Is but a little way about our heads,
Staying for thine to keepe him companie.
Either thou or I, or both, must goe with him.

Tib. Thou wretched Boy that didst consort him here,
Shalt with him hence.

Rom. This shall determine that.

They fight. Tybalt falls.

Ben. Romeo, away be gone.
The Citizens are vp, and Tybalt slaine,
Stand not amaz'd, the Prince will Doome thee death
If thou art taken hence, be gone, away.

Rom. O I am Fortunes foole.

Ben. Why dost thou stay?

Exit Romeo.

Enter Citizens.

Cits. Which way ran he that kild Mercutio?

Tybalt that Murderer, which way ran he?

Ben. There lies that Tybalt.

Cits. Vp sir go with me.

I charge thee in the Princes names obey.

Enter Prince, old Montague, Capulet, their Wives and all.

Prin. Where are the vile beginners of this Fray?

Ben. O Noble Prince, I can discouer all
The vnluckie Mannage of this fatall brall.
There lies the man slaine by young Romeo,
That slew thy kinsman braue Mercutio.

Cap. W's Tybalt, my Cozin? O my Brothers Child,
O Prince, O Cozin, Husband, O the blood is spild
Of my deare kinsman, Prince as thou art true,
For blood of ours, shed blood of Montague.
O Cozin, Cozin,

Prin. Benvolio, who began this Fray?

Ben. Tybalt here slaine, whom Romeo's hand did slay,
Romeo that spoke him faire, bid him bethinke
How nice the Quarrell was, and vrg'd withall
Your high displeasure all this vttered,
With gentle breath, calme look, knees humbly bow'd
Could not take truce with the vnruely spleene
Of Tybalt's deafe to peace, but that he Tilts
With Piercing Steele at bold Mercutio's breast,
Who all as hot, turnes deadly point to point,
And with a Martiall scorne, with one hand beates
Cold death aside, and with the other sends
It back to Tybalt, whose dexterity

Exit.

Retorts it Romeo he cries aloud,
Hold Friends, Friends part, and swifter then his tongue,
His aged arme, beats downe their fatall points,
And twixt them rushes, vnderneath whose arme,
An envious thrust from Tybalt, hit the life
Of stout Mercutio, and then Tybalt fleo.
But by and by comes backe to Romeo,
Who had but newly entertained Reuenge,
And too't they goe like lightning, for ere I
Could draw to part them, was stout Tybalt slaine:
And as he fell, did Romeo turne and fle.

This is the truth, or let Benvolio die.

Cap. W's. He is a kinsman to the Montague,
Affection makes him false, he speakes not true:
Some twenty of them fought in this blacke strife,
And all those twenty could but kill one life.
I beg for Iustice, which thou Prince must giue:
Romeo slew Tybalt, Romeo must not liue.

Prin. Romeo slew him, he slew Mercutio,
Who now the price of his deare blood doth owe.

Cap. Not Romeo Prince, he was Mercutio's Friend,
His fault concludes, but what the law should end,
The life of Tybalt.

Prin. And for that offence,
Immediately we doe exile him hence:
I haue an interest in your hearts proceeding:
My blood for your rude brawles doth lie a bleeding.
But Ile Amerce you with so strong a fine,
That you shall all repent the losse of mine.
It will be deafe to pleading and excuses,
Nor teares, nor prayers shall purchase our abuses.
Therefore vse none, let Romeo hence in hast,
Else when he is found, that houre is his last.
Beare hence this body, and attend our will.
Mercy not Murders, pardoning those that kill.

Exeunt.

Enter Juliet alone.

Jul. Gallop apace, you fiery footed Reedes,
Towards Phaebus lodging, such a Wagoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in Cloudie night immediately.
Spred thy close Curtaine Loue-performing night,
That run-awayes eyes may wincke, and Romeo
Leape to these armes, vntalkt of and vnseene,
Louers can see to doe their Amorous rights,
And by their owne Beauties: or if Loue be blind,
It best agrees with night: come ciuill night,
Thou sober suted Matron all in blacke,
And leame me how to loose a winning match,
Plaid for a paire of stainelesse Maidenhoods,
Hood my vnman'd blood bayting in my Cheekes,
With thy blacke mantle, vll strange Loue grow bold,
Thinke true Loue acted simple modestie.
Come night, come Romeo, come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie vpon the wings of night
Whiter then new Snow vpon a Rauens backe:
Come gentle night, come louing blackebrow'd night,
Giue me my Romeo, and when I shall die,
Take him and cut him out in little farres,
And he will make the Face of heauen so fine,
That all the world will be in Loue with night,
And pay no worship to the Garish Sun,
O I haue bought the Mansion of a Loue,
But not posselt it, and though I am sold,
Not yet enioy'd, so tedious is this day,
As is the night before some Festiual,

ff 3

To

To an impatient child that hath new robes
And may not weare them, O here comes my Nurse .

Enter Nurse with cords.

And she brings newes and euery tongue that speaks
But Romeo, name, speaks heauenly eloquence:
Now Nurse, what newes? what hast thou there?
The Cords that Romeo bid thee fetch?

Nur. I, I, the Cords.

Int. Ay me, what newes?

Why dost thou wring thy hands.

Nur. A welady, hee's dead, hee's dead,
We are vndone Lady, we are vndone.
Alacke the day, hee's gone, hee's kil'd, he's dead.

Int. Can heauen be so enuious?

Nur. Romeo can,
Though heauen cannot, O Romeo, Romeo,
Who euer would haue thought it Romeo.

Int. What diuell art thou,
That dost torment me thus?
This torture should be roar'd in dismall hell,
Hath Romeo slaine himselfe? say thou but I,
And that bare vowell I shall poyson more
Then the death-darting eye of Cockatrice,
I am not I, if there be such an I.
Or those eyes shot, that makes thee answere I:
If he be slaine say I, or if not, no.

Briefe, sounds, determine of my weale or wo.

Nur. I saw the wound, I saw it with mine eyes.
God saue the marke, here on his manly brest,
A piteous Coarse, a bloody piteous Coarse.
Pale, pale as ashes, all bedawb'd in blood,
All in gore blood, I founted at the sight.

Int. O breake my heart,
Poore Banckrout breake at once,
To prison eyes, nere looke on libertie.
Vile earth to earth resigne, end motion here,
And thou and Romeo presse on heauie beere

Nur. O Tybalt, Tybalt, the best Friend I had:
O curteous Tybalt honest Gentleman,
That euer I should liue to see thee dead

Int. What storme is this that blowes so contrarie?
Is Romeo slaughter'd? and is Tybalt dead?
My dearest Cozen, and my dearer Lord.
Then dreadfull Trumpet sound the generall doome,
For who is liuing, if those two are gone?

Nur. Tybalt is gone, and Romeo banished,
Romeo that kil'd him, he is banished.

Int. O God!
Did Rom's hand shed Tybalts blood
It did, it did, alas the day, it did.

Nur. O Serpent heart, hid with a flowring face.
Int. Did euer Dragon keepe so faire a Caue?

Beautifull Tyrant, fiend Angelicall:
Rauenous Dove-feather'd Rauens,
Woluish-rauening Lambe,
Dispis'd substance of Diuine show:
Iust opposite to what thou iustly seem'st,
A dimne Saint, an Honourable Villaine:
O Nature! what had'st thou to doe in hell,
When thou did'st bower the spirit of a fiend
In mortall paradise of such sweet flesh?
Was euer booke containing such vile matter
So fairely bound? O that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous Pallace.

Nur. There's no trust, no faith, no honestie in men,
All persur'd, all forsworne, all naught, all dissemblers,

Ah where's my man? giue me some Aqua-vitz?
These griefes, these woes, these sorrowes make me old
Shame come to Romeo.

Int. Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish, he was not borrie to shame:
Vpon his brow shame is asham'd to sit;
For 'tis a throane where Honour may be Crown'd
Sole Monarch of the vniuersall earth:
O what a beast was I to chide him?

Nur. Will you speake well of him,
That kil'd your Cozen?

Int. Shall I speake ill of him that is my husband?
Ah poore my Lord, what tongue shall smoothe thy name,
When I thy three houres wife haue mangled it.
But wherefore Villaine did'st thou kill my Cozin?
That Villaine Cozin would haue kil'd my husband.
Backe foolish teares, backe to your native spring,
Your tributarie drops belong to woe,
Which you mistaking offer vp to ioy.
My husband liues that Tibalt would haue slaine,
And Tibalt dead that would haue slaine my husband.
All this is comfort, wherefore weepe I then?
Some words there was worsef then Tybalts death
That murdered me, I would forget it feine,
But oh, it presses to my memory,
I like damned guilty deedes to sinners minds,
Tybalt is dead and Romeo banished:

That banished, that one word banished,
Hath slaine ten thousand Tybalts: Tybalts death
Was woe enough if it had ended there:
Or if sower woe delights in fellowship,
And needly will be rankt with other griefes,
Why followed not when she said Tybalts dead,
Thy Father or thy Mother, nay or both,
Which moderne lamentation might haue mou'd.
But which a rere-ward following Tybalts death
Romeo is banished to speake that word,
Is Father, Mother, Tybalt, Romeo, Juliet,
All slaine, all dead. Romeo is banished,
There is no end, no limit, measure, bound,
In that words death, no words can that woe sound.
Where is my Father and my Mother Nurse?

Nur. Weeping and wailing ouer Tybalts Coarse,
Will you go to them? I will bring you thither.

Int. Wash they his wounds with tears: mine shal be spent
When theirs are drie for Romeo's banishment.
Take vp those Cordes, poore ropes you are beguil'd,
Both you and I for Romeo is exild:

He made you for a high-way to my bed,
But I a Maid, die Maiden widowed.
Come Cord, come Nurse, Ile to my wedding bed,
And death not Romeo, take my Maiden head.

Nur. Hie to your Chamber, Ile find Romeo
To comfort you, I wot well where he is.
Harke ye your Romeo will be heere at night,
Ile to him, he is hid at Lawrence Cell.

Int. O find him, giue this Ring to my true Knight,
And bid him come, to take his last farewell.

Exit.

Enter Friar and Romeo.

Frs. Romeo come forth,
Come forth thou fearfull man,
Affliction is enamor'd of thy parts:
And thou art wedded to calamitie.

Rom. Father what newes?

What

What is the Princes Doome?

What sorrow craves acquaintance at my hand,
That I yet know not?

Fri. Too familiar

Is my deare Sonne with such sowre Company?
I bring thee tydings of the Princes Doome.

Rom. What Iesse then Doomesday,
Is the Princes Doome?

Fri. A gentler judgement vanisht from his lips,
Not bodies death, but bodies banishment.

Rom. Ha, banishment? be mercifull, say death:
For exile hath more terror in his looke,
Much more then death. do not say banishment.

Fri. Here from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona walles,
But Purgatorie, Torture, hell it selfe.
Hence banished, is banish: from the world,
And worlds exile is death. Then banished,
Is death, mistearemd, calling death banished,
Thou cutt'st my head off with a golden Axe,
And smilest vpon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin, O rude vnthankfulnesse!
Thy fault our Law calles death, but the kind Prince
Taking thy part, hath rusht aside the Law,
And turn'd that blacke word death, to banishment.
This is deare mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis Torture and not mercy, heauen is here
Where Iuliet liues, and euery Cat and Dog,
And little Mouse, euery vnworthy thing
Liue here in Heauen and may looke on her,
But Romeo may not. More Validitie,
More Honourable state, more Courtship liues
In carrion Flies, then Romeo: they may seaze
On the white wonder of deare Iuliet's hand,
And steale immortall blessing from her lips,
Who euen in pure and veltall modestie
Still blush, as thinking their owne kisses sin.
This may Flies doe, when I from this must flie,
And sailt thou yet, that exile is not death?
But Romeo may not, hee is banished.

Hadst thou no poyson mixt, no sharpe ground knife,
No sudden meane of death, though nere so meane,
But banished to kill me? Banished?

O Friar, the damned vse that word in hell:
Howlings attends it, how hast thou the hart
Being a Diuine, a Ghostly Confessor,
A Sin-Absoluer, and my Friend profest:
To mangle me with that word, banished?

Fri. Then fond Mad man, heare me speake.

Rom. O thou wilt speake againe of banishment.

Fri. Ile giue thee Armour to keepe off that word,
Aduersities sweete milke, Philosophie,
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished? hang vp Philosophie:
Vnlesse Philosophie can make a Iuliet,
Displant a Towne, reuerse a Princes Doome,
It helps not, it preuailes not, talke no more.

Fri. O then I see, that Mad men haue no cares.

Rom. How should they,

When wisemen haue no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispaire with thee of thy estate,

Rom. Thou canst not speake of that I do not feele,
Wert thou as young as Iuliet my Loue.
An houre but married, Tybalt murdered,
Dotting like me, and like me banished,

Then mightest thou speake,
Then mightest thou teare thy hayre,
And fall vpon the ground as I doe now,
Taking the measure of an vnmade graue.

Enter Nurse, and knocks.

Frier. Arise one knockes,
Good Romeo hide thy selfe.

Rom. Not I,
Vnlesse the breath of Harticke groanes
Mist-like infold me from the search of eyes.

Knocke

Fri. Harke how they knocke:
(Who's there) Romeo arise,
Thou wilt be taken, stay a while, stand vp:

Knocke.

Run to my study by and by, Gods will
What simplenesse is this I come, I come.

Knocke.

Who knocks so hard?
Whence come you? what's your will?

Enter Nurse.

Nur. Let me come in,
And you shall know my errand.
I come from Lady Iuliet:

Fri. Welcome then.

Nur. O holy Friar, O tell me holy Friar, Where's my Ladies Lord? where's Romeo?

Fri. There on the ground,
With his owne teares made drunke.

Nur. O he is euen in my Mistresse case,
Iust in her case, O wofull sympathy
Pititious predicament, euen so lies she,
Blubbring and weeping, weeping and blubbring,
Stand vp, stand vp, stand and you be a man,
For Iuliet's sake, for her sake rise and stand:
Why should you fall into so deepe an O.

Rom. Nurse.

Nur. Ah sir, ah sir, death's the end of all.

Rom. Speakest thou of Iuliet? how is it with her?
Doth not she thinke me an old Murtherer,
Now I haue stain'd the Childhood of our ioy,
With blood remoued, but little from her owne?
Where is she? and how doth she? and what sayes
My conceal'd Lady to our conceal'd Loue?

Nur. Oh she sayes nothing sir, but weeps and weeps,
And now falls on her bed, and then starts vp,
And Tybalt calls, and then on Romeo cries,
And then downe falls againe.

Ro. As if that name shot from the dead leuell of a Gun,
Did murder her, as that names curst hand
Murderd her kinsman. Oh tell me Friar, tell me,
In what vile part of this Anatomie
Doth my name lodge? Tell me, that I may sacke
The hateful Mansion.

Fri. Hold thy desperate hand:
Art thou a man? thy forme cries out thou art:
Thy teares are womanish, thy wild aets denote
The vnreasonable Furie of a beast,
Vnseemely woman, in a seeming man,
And ill beseeing beast in seeming both,
Thou hast amaz'd me. By my holy order,
I thought thy disposition better temper'd.
Hast thou slaine Tybalt? wilt thou slay thy selfe?
And slay thy Lady, that in thy life lies,
By doing damned hate vpon thy selfe?
Why rayl'st thou on thy birth? the heauen and earth?

Since

Since birth, and heauen and earth, all three do meete
 In thee at once, which thou at once would'st loose.
 Fie, fie, thou sham'st thy shape, thy loue, thy wit,
 Which like a Vsurer abound'st in all:
 And v'st none in that true vse indeed,
 Which should bedecke thy shape, thy loue, thy wit:
 Thy Noble shape, is but a forme of waxe,
 Digressing from the Valour of a man,
 Thy deare Loue (sworne but hollow periuie,
 Killing that Loue which thou hast vow'd to cherish.
 Thy wit, that Ornament, to shape and Loue,
 Mishapen in the conduct of them both.
 Like powder in a skilless Souldiers flaske,
 Is set a fire by thine owne ignorance,
 And thou dismembred with thine owne defence.
 What, rowfe thee man, thy Juliet is aliue,
 For whose deare sake thou wast but lately dead.
 There art thou happy. Tybalt would kill thee,
 But thou slew'st Tybalt, there art thou happie.
 The law that threatned death became thy friend,
 And turn'd it to exile, there art thou happy.
 A packe or blessing light vpon thy backe,
 Happinesse Courts thee in her best array,
 But like a mishaped and sullen wench,
 Thou putt'st vp thy Fortune as thy Loue:
 Take heed, take heed, for such die miserable.
 Goe get thee to thy Loue as was decreed,
 Ascend her Chamber, hence and comfort her:
 But looke thou stay not till the watch be set,
 For then thou canst not passe to Mantua,
 Where thou shalt liue till we can finde a time
 To blaze your marriage, reconcile your Friends,
 Beg pardon of thy Prince, and call thee backe,
 With twenty hundred thousand times more ioy
 Then thou went'st forth in lamentation.
 Goe before Nurse, commend me to thy Lady,
 And bid her hasten all the house to bed,
 Which heauy sorrow makes them apt vnto.
Romeo is comming.

Nur. O Lord, I could haue staid here all night,
 To heare good counsell. oh what learning is!
 My Lord Ile tell my Lady you will come.

Rom. Do so, and bid my Sweete prepare to chide.

Nur. Heere sir, a Ring she bid me giue you sir.
 Hie you, make hast, for it growes very late

Rom. How well my comfort is recu'd by this.

Fri. Go hence,
 Goodnight, and here stands all your state:
 Either be gone before the watch be set,
 Or by the breake of day disguis'd from hence,
 So iourne in Mantua, Ile find out your man,
 And he shall signifie from time to time,
 Euery good hap to you, that chaunces heere.
 Giue me thy hand, 'tis late, farewell, goodnight.

Rom. But that a ioyfull ioy, calls out on me,
 It were a griefe, so briefe to part with thee:
 Farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter old Capulet, his Wife and Paris.

Cap. Things haue faile out sir so vnluckily,
 That we haue had no time to moue our Daughter:
 Looke you, she Lou'd her kinsman Tybalt dearely,
 And so did I. Well, we were borne to die.
 'Tis very late, she'l not come downe to night:
 I promise you, but for your company,

I would haue bin a bed an houre ago.

Par. These times of wo, affoord no times to wooe.
 Madam goodnight, commend me to your Daughter.

Lady. I will, and know her mind early to morrow,
 To night, she is mew'd vp to her heauiness.

Cap. Sir Paris, I will make a desperate tender
 Of my Childs loue. I thinke she will be rul'd
 In all respects by me. nay more, I doubt it not.
 Wife, go you to her ere you go to bed,
 Acquaint her here, of my Sonne Paris Loue,
 And bid her, marke you me, on Wend'sday next,
 But soft, what day is this?

Par. Monday my Lord.

Cap. Monday, ha ha: well Wend'sday is too soone,
 A Thursday let it be a Thursday tell her,
 She shall be married to this Noble Earle.
 Will you be ready? do you like this hast?
 Weele keepe no great adoe, a Friend or two.
 For harke you, Tybalt being slaine so late,
 It may be thought we held him carelessly,
 Being our kinsman, if we reuell much:
 Therefore weele haue some halfe a dozen Friends,
 And there an end. But what say you to Thursday?

Paris. My Lord,
 I would that Thursday were to morrow.

Cap. Well, get you gone, a Thursday, be it then:
 Go you to Juliet ere you go to bed,
 Prepare her wife, against this wedding day.
 Farewell my Lord, light to my Chamber ho,
 Afore me, it is so late, that we may call it early by and by,
 Goodnight.

Exeunt.

Enter Romeo and Juliet aloft.

Jul. Wilt thou be gone? It is not yet neere day:
 It was the Nightingale, and not the Larke,
 That pierc'd the fearefull hollow of thine eare,
 Nightly she sings on yond Pomegranate tree,
 Beloeue me Loue, it was the Nightingale.

Rom. It was the Larke the Herald of the Morn:
 No Nightingale-look Loue what enuious streakes
 Do lace the feuring Cloudes in yonder East
 Nights Candles are burnt out, and I second day
 Stand as tipto on the mistie Mountaines tops,
 I must be gone and liue, or stay and die.

Jul. Yond light is not daylight, I know it I:
 It is some Meteor that the Sun exhales,
 To be to thee this night a Torch-bearer,
 And light thee on thy way to Mantua.
 I therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be tane, let me be put to death,
 I am content, so thou wilt haue it so.
 Ile say yon gray is not the mornings eye,
 'Tis but the pale reflexe of Cymbrian brow.
 Nor that is not Larke whose noates do beate
 The vaulty heauen so high about our heads,
 I haue more care to stay, then will to go
 Come death and welcome, Juliet wills it so.
 How oft my soule, lets talke, it is not day.

Jul. It is, it is, he hence be gone away:
 It is the Larke that sings so out of tune,
 Straining harsh Discords, and vnpleasing Sharpes.
 Some say the Larke makes sweete Diuision;
 This doth not so for she diuideth vs.
 Some say, the Larke and loathed Toad change eyes,
 O now I would they had chang'd voyces too:

Since

Since arme from arme that voyce doth vs affray,
Hunting thee hence, with Hunt ſvp to this day,
O now be gone, more light and ligh growes.

Rom. More light & light, more darke & darke our woes
Enter Madam and Nurse.

Nur. Madam.

Jul. Nurse.

Nur. Your Lady Mother is comming to your chamber,
The day is broke, be wary, looke about.

Jul. Then window let day in, and let life out.

Rom. Farewell, farewell, one kisse and Ile descend.

Jul. Art thou gone for Loue, Lord, ay Husband, Friend,
I muſt heare from thee euery day in the houre,
For in a minute there are many dayes,
O by this count I ſhall be much in yeares,
Ere I againe behold my Romeo.

Rom. Farewell.

I will omit no opportunitie,

That may conuey my greetings Loue, to thee.

Jul. O thinkeſt thou we ſhall euer meet againe?

Rom. I doubt it not, and all theſe woes ſhall ſerue
For ſweet diſcordes in our time to come.

Juliet. O God! I haue an ill Diuining ſoule,
Me thinkeſ I ſee thee now, thou art ſo lowe,
As one dead in the bottome of a Tombe,
Either my eye-ſight failes, or thou look'ſt pale.

Rom. And truſt me Loue, in my eye ſo do you:
Drie ſorrow drinkeſ our blood. Adue, adue.

Jul. O Fortune, Fortune, all men call thee fickle,
If thou art fickle, what doſt thou with him
That is renown'd for faith? be fickle Fortune.
For then I hope thou wilt not keepe him long,
But ſend him backe.

Enter Mother.

Lad. Ho Daughter, are you vp?

Jul. Who ſt that calls? Is it my Lady Mother
Is ſhe not downe ſo late, or vp ſo early?
What vnaccuſtom'd cauſe procures her hither?

Lad. Why how now Juliet?

Jul. Madam I am not well.

Lad. Euen more weeping for your Cozins death?
What wilt thou waſh him from his graue with teares?
And if thou could'ſt, thou could'ſt not make him liue
Therefore haue done, ſome griefe ſhewes much of Loue,
But much of griefe, ſhewes ſtill ſome want of wit.

Jul. Yet let me weepe, for ſuch a feeling loſſe.

Lad. So ſhall you feele the loſſe, but not the Friend
Which you weepe for.

Jul. Feeling ſo the loſſe,

I cannot chuiſe but euer weepe the Friend.

Lad. Well Giſle, thou weep'ſt not ſo much for his death,
As that the Villaine liues which ſlaughter'd him.

Jul. What Villaine, Maſam?

Lad. That ſame Villaine Romeo.

Jul. Villaine and he, be many Miles aſunder.
God pardon, I doe with all my heart
And yet no man like he, doth grieue my heart.

Lad. That is becauſe the Traitor liues.

Jul. I Madam from the reach of theſe my hands:
Would none but I might venge my Cozins death.

Lad. We will haue vengeance for it, feare thou not.
Then weepe no more, Ile ſend to one in Mantua,
Where that ſame baniſht Run-agate doth liue,
Shall giue him ſuch an vnaccuſtom'd dram,
That he ſhall ſoone keepe Tybalt company -
And then I hope thou wilt be ſatisfied.

Jul. Indeed I neuer ſhall be ſatisfied
With Romeo, till I behold him. Dead
Is my poore heart ſo for a kmiſman vext:
Madam if you could find out but a man
To beare a poyſon, I would temper it;
That Romeo ſhould vpon receit thereof,
Soone ſleepe in quiet. O how my heart abhorre
To heare him nam'd, and cannot come to him,
To wreake the Loue I bore my Cozin,
Vpon his body that hath ſlaughter'd him.

Mo. Find thou the meanes, and Ile find ſuch a man.
But now Ile tell thee ioyfull tidings Gyſle.

Jul. And ioy comes well, in ſuch a needy time.
What are they, beſeech your Ladyſhip?

Mo. Well, well, thou haſt a carefull Father Child?
One who to put thee from thy heauineſſe,
Hath ſorted out a ſudden day of ioy,
That thou expect'ſt not, nor I lookt not for.

Jul. Madam in happy time, what day is this?

Mo. Marry my Child, early next Thursday morne,
The gallant, young, and Noble Gentleman,
The Countie Paris at Saint Peters Church,
Shall happily make thee a ioyfull Bride.

Jul. Now by Saint Peters Church, and Peter too,
He ſhall not make me there a ioyfull Bride.
I wonder at this haſt, that I muſt wed
Ere he that ſhould be Husband comes to wooe:

I pray you tell my Lord and Father Madam,
I will not marrie yet, and when I doe, I ſwear
It ſhall be Romeo, whom you know I hate
Rather then Paris. Theſe are newes indeed.

Mo. Here comes your Father, tell him ſo your ſelfe,
And ſee how he will take it at your hands.

Enter Capulet and Nurse

Cap. When the Sun ſets, the earth doth drizzle daew
But for the Sunlet of my Brothers Sonne,
It raineſ downright.

How now? A Conduit Gyſle, what ſtill in teares?
Euen more ſhow'ring in one little body?

Thou counterſaits a Barke, a Sea, a Wind
For ſtill thy eyes, which I may call the Sea,
Do ebbe and flow with teares, the Barke thy body is Sayling in this ſalt floud, the windes thy ſighes,
Who raging with the teares and they with them,
Withour a ſudden calme will ouer ſet
Thy tempeſt toſſed body. How now wiſe?
Haue you deliuered to her our decree?

Lady. I ſir,

But ſhe will none, ſhe giues you thanks,
I would the ſoole were married to her graue.

Cap. Soft take me with you, take me with you wiſe,
How, will ſhe none? doth ſhe not giue vs thanks?
Is ſhe not proud? doth ſhe not count her bleſt,
Vnworthily as ſhe is, that we haue wrought
So worthy a Gentleman, to be her Bridegroome?

Jul. Not proud yb haue.

But thankfull that you haue:

Proud can I neuer be of what I haue,
But thankfull euen for hate, that is meant Loue.

Cap. How now?

How now? Chopt Logicke? what is this?

Proud, and I thanke you, and I thanke you not.
Thanke me no thankings, nor proud me no prouds,
But ſettle your fine ioints 'gainſt Thursday next,

To go with Paris to Saint Peters Church
Or I will drag thee, on a Iurdle thither.
Out you greene sicknesse cartion, out you baggage,
You tallow face.

Lady. Fie, fie, what are you mad?

Jul. Good Father, I beseech you on my knees
Heare me with patience, but to speake a word.

Fa. Hang thee young baggage, disobedient wretch,
I tell thee what, get thee to Church a Thursday,
Or neuer after looke me in the face.
Speake not, reply not, do not answere me.
My fingers itch, wife: we scarce thought vs blest,
That God had lent vs but this onely Child,
But now I see this one is one too much,
And that we haue a curse in hauing her:
Out on her Hilding.

Nur. God in heauen blesse her,
You are too blame my Lord to ra. e her so.

Fa. And why my Lady wisdom? hold your tongue,
Good Prudence, smatter with your gossip, go.

Nur. I speke no treason,
Father, O God! goden,
May not one speake?

Fa. Peace you mumbling foole,
Vetter your grautie ore a Gossips bowles
For here we need it not.

Le. You are too hot.

Fa. Gods bread, it makes me mad:
Day, night, houre, tide, time, worke, play,
Alone in companie, still my care hath bin
To haue her matcht, and hauing now prouided
A Gentleman of Noble Parentage,
Offaire Demeanes, Youthfull, and Nobly Allied,
Stuff as they say with Honourable parts,
Proportion'd as ones thought would wish a man,
And then to haue a wretched puling foole,
A whining mammet, in her Fortunes tender,
To answer, Ile not wed, I cannot Loue:
I am too young, I pray you pardon me.
But, and you will not wed, lie pardon you.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me:
Looke too't, thinke on't, I do not vse to rest.
Thursday is neere, lay hand on heart, aduise,
And you be mine, Ile giue you to my Friend
And you be not, hang, beg, strau, die in the streets,
For by my soule, Ile nere acknowledge thee,
Nor what is mine shall neuer do thee good:
Trust too't, bethinke you, Ile not be forsworne

Exit.

Jul. Is there no pittie sitting in the Cloudes,
That sees into the bottome of my griefe?
O sweet my Mother giue me not away,
Delay this marriage, for a month, a weeke,
Or if you do not, make the Bridall bed
In that dunnisgappment where Tybalts lies.

Mo. Tall & light to me, for Ile not speake a word,
Do as thou wilt, for I haue done with thee.

Exit.

Jul. O God!
O Nurse, how shall this be preuented?
My Husband is on earth, my faith in heauen,
How shall that faith returne againe to earth,
Vnlesse that Husband send it me from heauen,
By leauing earth? Comfort me, counsaile me.
Hlacke, alacke that heauen, should practise stratagems
Vpon so sofe a subject, as my selfe.
What fast shoud halt thou not a word of spy?
Some comfort Nurse.

Nur. Faith here it is,

Romeo is banished, and all the world to nothing,
That he dares nere come backe to challenge you:
Or if he do, it needs must be by stealth.
Then since the case so stands as now it doth,
I thinke it best you married with the Countie,
O he's a Louely Gentleman.

Romeo a dish-clout to him: an Eagle Madam
Hath not so greene, so quicke, so faire an eye
As Paris hath, bestrow my very heart,
I thinke you are happy in this second match,
For it exceeds your first, or if it did not,
Your first is dead, or 'twere as good he were,
As liuing here and you no vse of him.

Jul. Speakest thou from thy heart?

Nur. And from my soule too,
Or else bestrew them both.

Jul. Amen.

Nur. What?

Jul. Well, thou hast comforted me marue'lous much,
Goun, and tell my Lady I am gone,
Hauing displeas'd my Father, to Lawrence Cell,
To make confession, and to be absolu'd.

Nur. Marrie I will, and this is wisely done.

Jul. Auncient dam nation, O most wicked fiend!
It is more sin to wish me thus forsworne,
Or to dispraise my Lord with that same tongue
Which he hath prais'd him with aboue compare,
So many thousand times? Go Countellor,
Thou and my bosom henchforth shall be twaine:
He to the Friar to know his remedie,
It all else faile, my selfe haue power to die.

Exit.

Enter Friar and Countess P. & S.

Fri. On Thursday first the time is very short.

Par. My Father Capulet will haue it so,
And I am nothing slow to slack his hast.

Frs. You say you do not know the Ladies mind?
Vneuen is the course, I like it not.

Pa. Immoderately she weepes for Tybalts death,
And therefore haue I little talke of Loue,
For Peas smiles not in a house of teares.
Now sit, her father counts it dangerous
That she doth giue her sorrow so much sway:
And in his wisdom, hast our marriage,
To stop the irundation of her teares,
Which too much minded by her selfe alone,
May be put from her by societie.
Now doe you know the reason of this hast?

Fri. I would I knew not why it should be slow'd.
Looke sir, here comes the Lady toward's my Cell.

Enter Juliet.

Par. Happily met, my Lady and my wife.

Jul. That may be sir, when I may be a wife.

Par. That may be, must be Loue, on Thursday next.

Jul. What must be shall be.

Fri. That's a certaine text.

Par. Come you to make confession to this Father?

Jul. To answer that, I should confesse to you.

Par. Do not denie to him, that you Loue me.

Jul. I will confesse to you, that I Loue him.

Par. So will ye, I am sure that you Loue me.

Jul. If I do so, it will be of more price.

Benig spoke behind your backe, then to your face.

Par. Poore soule, thy face is much abus'd with teares.

Jul. The

Jul. The teares haue got small victorie by that:
For it was bad inough before their spight
Pa Thou wrong'st it more then teares with that report.
Jul. That is no slander sir, which is a truth,
And what I spake, I spake it to thy face.
Par. Thy face is mine, and thou hast slandered it.
Jul. It may be so, for it is not mine owne.
Are you at leisure, Holy Father now,
Or shall I come to you at euening Masse?
Fri. My leisure serues me peniue daughter now.
My Lord you must intreat the time alone
Par. Godsheild: I should disturbe Deuotion,
Juliet, on Thursday early wilt I rowle yee,
Till then adue, and keepe this holy kisse. Exit PARUS
Jul. O shut the doore, and when thou hast done so,
Come weepe with me, past hope, past care, past helpe.
Fri. O Juliet, I alreadie know thy griefe,
It streames me past the compasse of my wits -
I heare that thou must and nothing may prorogue it,
On Thursday next be married to this Countie,
Jul. Tell me not Frier that thou hearest of this,
Vnlesse thou tell me how I may preuent it.
If in thy wisdom, thou canst giue no helpe,
Do thou but call my resolution wife,
And with' his knife, Ile helpe it presently.
God ioynd my heart, and Romeo, thou our hands,
And ere this hand by thee to Romeo seal'd.
Shall be the Labell to another Deede,
Or my true heart with trecherous revolt,
Turne to another, this shall slay them both:
Therefore out of thy long expecten't time,
Giue me some present counsell, or benold
Twixt my extreames and me, this bloody knife
Shall play the vmpere, arbitrating that,
Which the commission of thy yeares and art,
Could to no issue of true honour bring.
Be not so long to speak, I lo to die,
If what thou speak'st, speake not of remedy
Fri. Hold Daughter, I doe spie a kind of hope,
Which craues as desperate an execution,
As that is desperate which we would preuent.
If rather then to marrie Countie PARUS
Thou hast the strength of will to stay thy selfe,
Then is it likely thou wilt vndertake
A thinglike death to chide away this shame,
That coap'st with death himselfe, to scape fro it.
And if thou dar'st, Ile giue thee remedie.
Jul. Oh bid me leape, rather then marrie PARUS,
From of the Battlements of any Tower,
Or walke in theeuiſh waies, or bid me lurke
Where Serpents are. chaine me with roaring Beares
Or hide me nightly in a Charnell house,
Orecovered quite with dead mens rattling bones,
With reekie shankes and yellow chappells skulls.
Or bid me go into a new made graue,
And hide me with a dead man in his graue,
Things that to heare them told, haue made me tremble,
And I will doe it without feare or doubt,
To liue an vnstained wife to my sweet Loue.
Fri. Hold then: goe home, be merrie, giue consent,
To marrie PARUS wensday is to morrow,
To morrow night looke that thou lie alone,
Let not thy Nurse lie with thee in thy Chamber:
Take thou this Violl being then in bed,
And this distilling liquor drinke thou off,
When presently through all thy veins shall run,

A cold and drowſie humour. for no pulse
Shall keepe his ratiue progresse, but surcease:
No warmth, no breath shall testifie thou liuest,
The Roses in thy lips and cheekes shall fade
To many ashes, the eyes windowes fall
Like death when he shut vp the day o' life:
Each part depri'd of supple government,
Shall stiffe and starke, and cold appeare like death,
And in this borrowed likenesse of shrunke death
Thou shalt continue two and forty houres,
And then awake, as from a pleasant sleepe.
Now w'l en the Bridegroome in the morning comes,
To rowle thee from thy bed, there art thou dead:
Then as the manner of our country is,
In thy best Robes vncover'd on the Beere,
Be borne to buriall in thy kindreds graue
Thou shalt be borne to that same ancient vault,
Where all the kindred of the Capulets lie,
In the meane time against thou shalt awake,
Shall Romeo by my Letters know our drift,
And hither shall he come, and that very night
Shall Romeo beare thee hence to Manthua.
And this shall free thee from this present shame,
If no inconstant toy nor womanish feare,
Abate thy valour in the acting it.

Jul. Giue me, giue me, O tell not me of feare.
Fri. Hold get you gone, be strong and prosperous:
In this resolute, Ile send a Frier with speed
To Manthua with my Letters to thy Lord,
Jul. Loue giue me strength,
And strength shall helpe afford.
Farewell deare father.

Exit

Enter Father Capulet, Mother, Nurse, and Serving men, two or three.

Cap. So many guests inuite as here are writ,
Sirrah, go hire me twenty cuening Cookes.
Ser. You shall haue none ill sir, for Ile trie if they can licke their fingers
Cap. How canst thou trie them so?
Ser. Marrie sir, 'tis an ill Cooke that cannot licke his owne fingers. therefore he that cannot licke his fingers goes not with me
Cap. Go be gone, we shall be much vnfurnisht for this time - what is my Daughter gone to Frier Lawrence?
Nur. I forsooth.
Cap. Well he may chance to do some good on her,
A peeuish selfe-wild harlotry it is.

Enter Juliet.
Nur. See where she comes from shrift
With merrie looke.
Cap. How now my headstrong,
Where haue you bin gadding?
Jul. Where I haue learnt me to repent the sin
Of disobedient opposition:
To you and your behests, and am enioyn'd
By holy Lawrence, to fall prostrate here,
To beg your pardon: pardon I beseech you,
Henceforward I am euer rul'd by you
Cap. Send for the Countie, goe tell him of this,
Ile haue this knot knit vp to morrow morning.
Jul. I met the youthfull Lord at Lawrence Cell,
And gaue him what becomed Loue I might,
Not stepping ore the bounds of modestie.
Cap. Why I am glad on't, this is well, stand vp,

This

This is as't should be, let me see the County:
I marrie go I say, and fetch him hither.
Now afore God, this reuerend holy Frier,
All our whole Cittie is much bound to him.

Int. Nurse will you goe with me into my Closet,
To helpe me sort such needfull ornaments,
As you thinke fit to furnish me to morrow?

Mso. No not till Thursday, there's time enough.

Fa. Go Nurse, go with her,
Weele to Church to morrow.

Exeunt Juliet and Nurse.

Mso. We shall be short in our promise,
'Tis now neere night.

Fa. Tush, I will stirre about,
And all things shall be well, I warrant thee wife
Go thou to Juliet, helpe to decke vp her,
He not to bed to night, let me alone:
He play the huswife for this once. What ho?
They are all forth, well I will walke my selfe
To Countie Paris, to prepare him vp
Against to morrow, my heart is wondrous light,
Since this same way-ward Gyrl is so reclaim'd.

Exeunt Father and Mother.

Enter Juliet and Nurse.

Jul. I those aures are best, but gentle Nurse
I pray thee leaue me to my selfe to night:
For I haue need of many Orysons,
To moue the heauens to smile vpon my state,
Which well thou know'st, is crosse and full of sin.

Enter Mother.

Mso. What are you busie ho? need you my help?

Int. No Madam, we haue euil'd such necessaries
As are behoouefull for our state to morrow:
So please you, let me now be left alone,
And let the Nurse this night sit vp with you,
For I am sure, you haue your hands full all,
In this so sudden businesse.

Mso. Goodnight.

Get thee to bed and rest, for thou hast need.

Exeunt.

Int. Farewell:

God knowes when we shall meete againe.
I haue a faint cold feare thrills through my veines,
That almost freezes vp the heate of fire:
He call them backe againe to comfort me.
Nurse, what should she do here?
My dismall Seecane, I needs must act alone:
Come Viall, what if this mixture do not worke at all?
Shall I be married then to morrow morning?
No, no, this shall forbid it. Lie thou there,
What if it be a poyson which the Frier
Subtilly hath ministred to haue me dead,
Least in this marriage he should be dishonour'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I feare it is, and yet me thinkes it should not,
For he hath still bene tried a holy man.
How, if when I am laid into the Tombe,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeme me? There's a fearefull point:
Shall I not then be stifled in the Vault?
To whose soule mouth no healthsome ayre breaths in,
And there she strangled ere my Romeo comes.
Or if I lue, is it not very like,
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place,
As in a Vault, an ancient receptacle,

Where for these many hundred yeeres the bones
Of all my buried Ancestors are packt,
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but greene in earth,
Lies felling in his throw'd, where as they say,
At some houres in the night, Spirits resort:
Alacke, alacke, is it not like that I
So early waking, what with loathsome smells,
And strikes like Mandrakes torne out of the earth,
That liuing mortalls hearing them, run mad,
O if I walke, shall I not be distraught,
Inuironed with all these hideous feares,
And madly play with my forefathers ioynts?
And plucke the mangled Tybalt from his throw'd?
And in this rage, with some great kinsmans bone,
As (with a club) dash out my desperate braines.
O looke, me thinkes I see my Cozins Ghost,
Seeking out Romeo that did spit his body
Vpon my Rapiers point. Stay Tybalt, stay;
Romeo, Romeo, Romeo, here's drinke I drinke to thee.

Enter Lady of the house, and Nurse.

Lady. Hold,
Take these heies, and fetch more spices Nurse.

Nur. They call for Dates and Quinces in the Pastie.

Enter old Capulet.

Cap. Come, stir, stir, stir,
The second Cocke hath Crow'd,
The Curfew Bell hath rung, 'tis three a clocke
Looke to the bakre meates, good Angelica,
Spare not for cost.

Nur. Go you Cot-quene, go,
Get you to bed, faith youle be sicke to morrow
For this nights watching.

Cap. No not a whit: what? I haue watcht ere now
All night for lesse cause, and nere bene sicke.

La. I you haue bin a soufe-hunt in your time,
But I will watch you from such watching now.

Exit Lady and Nurse.

Cap. A iealous hood, a iealous hood,
Now fellow, what art thou?

Enter three or foure with spits, and logs, and baskets.

Fel. Things for the Cooke fir, but I know not what.

Cap. Make hast, make hast, firrah, fetch drier Logs.
Call Peter, he will shew thee where they are.

Fel. I haue a head fir that will find out logs,
And neuer trouble Peter for the matter.

Cap. Masse and well said a merrie horson, ha,
Thou shalt be loggerhead, good Father, 'tis day.

Play Assefick

The Countie will be here with Musicke straight,
For so he said he would, I heare him neere,
Nurse, wife, what ho? what Nurse I say?

Enter Nurse.

Go waken Juliet, go and trim her vp,
He go and chat with Paris he, make hast,
Make hast, the Bridegroome, he is come already:
Make hast I say.

Nur. Mistris, what Mistris? Juliet? Fast I warrant her she.
Why Lambe, why Lady, sie you sluggabed,
Why Loue I say? Madam, sweet heart, why Bride?
What not a word? You take your peniworths now.
Sleepe for a weeke, for the next night I warrant
The Countie Paris hath set vp his rest,
That you shall rest but little, God forgiue me:
Marrie and Amen: how sound is she a sleepe?

I must needs wake her : Madam, Madam, Madam,
I let the Countie take you in your bed,
Heele fright you vp yfaith. Will it not be ?
What drest, and in your clothes, and downe againe ?
I must needs wake you Lady, Lady, Lady ?
Alas, alas, helpe, helpe, my Ladyes dead,
Oh weladay, that euer I was borne,
Some Aqua-vitæ ho, my Lord, my Lady ?

Mo. What noife is heere ? Enter Mother

Nur. O lamentable day.

Mo. What is the matter ?

Nur. Looke, looke, oh heauie day.

Mo. O me, O me, my Child, my onely life
Reuiue, looke vp, or I will die with thee.
Helpe, helpe, call helpe.

Enter Father.

Fa. For shame bring Iuliet forth, her Lord is come.

Nur. Shee's dead, deceast, shee's dead, alas the day.

M. Alas the day, shee's dead, shee's dead, shee's dead.

Fa. Ha ? Let me see her, out alas shee's cold,
Her blood is fedled and her ioynts are stiffe.
Life and theselips haue long bene sep erated.

Death lies on her like an vnumely frost
Vpon the sweetest flower of all the field.

Nur. O Lamentable day !

Mo. O wofull time.

Fa. Death that hath tane her hence to make me waile,
Ties vp my tongue, and will not let me speake.

Enter Friar and the Countie

Fri. Come, is the Bride ready to go to Church ?

Fa. Ready to go, but neuer to returne.

O Sonne, the night before thy wedding day,
Hath death laine with thy wife. there she lies,
Flower as she was, deflowred by him
Death is my Sonne in law, death is my Heire,
My Daughter he hath wedded. I will die,
And leaue him all life liuing, all is deaths.

Pa. Haue I thought long to see this mornings face,
And doth it giue me such a sight as this ?

Mo. Accur'd, vnhappy, wretched hatefull day,
Most miserable houre, that ere time saw
In lasting labour of his Pilgrimage,
But one, poore one, one poore and louing Child,
But one thing to reioyce and solace in,
And cruell death hath catcht it from my sight.

Nur. O wo, O wofull, wofull, wofull day,
Most lamentable day, most wofull day,
That euer, euer, I did yet behold,
O day, O day, O day, O hatefull day,
Neuer was scene so blacke a day as this :
O wofull day, O wofull day

Pa. Beguild, diuerced, wronged, spighted, flaine,
Most detestable death, by thee beguil'd,
By cruell, cruell thee, quite ouerthrowne :
O loue, O life, not life, but loue in death.

Fa. Despis'd, distressed, bated, martur'd, kil'd,
Vncomfortable time, why cam'st thou now
To murther, murther our tolemnize ?
O Child, O Child, my soule, and now my Child,
Dead art thou, alas my Child is dead,
And with my Child, my ioyes are buried.

Fri. Peace ho for shame, confusions. Care, liues not
In these confusions, heauen and your selfe
Had part in this faire Maid, now heauen hath all,
And all the better is it for the Maid :
Your part in her, you could not keepe from death,

But heauen keeps his part in eternall life :
The most you sought was her promotion,
For 'twas your heauen, she shouldst be aduan'ft,
And weepe ye now, seeing she is aduan'ft
Above the Cloudes, as high as Heauen it selfe ?
O in this loue, you loue your Child so ill,
That you run mad, seeing that she is well :
Shee's not well married, that liues married long,
But shee's best married, that dies married yong.
Drie vp your teares, and sticke your Rosemarie
On this faire Coarse, and as the custome is,
And in her best array beare her to Church :
For though some Nature bids all vs lament,
Yet Natures teares are Reasons inerriment.

Fa. All things that we ordained Festiuall.
Turne from their office to blacke Funerall :
Our instruments to melancholy Bells,
Our wedding cheare, to a sad buriall Feast :
Our solemne Hymnes, to sullen Dyrges change :
Our Bridall flowers serue for a buried Coarse ;
And all things change them to the contrarie.

Fri. Sir go you in, and Madam, go with him,
And go sir Paris, euery one prepare
To follow this faire Coarse vnto her graue :
The heuens do lowre vpon you, for some ill :
Moue them no more, by crossing their high will. Exeunt

M. Faith we may put vp our Pipes and be gone.

Nur. Honest goodfellowes. Ah put vp, put vp.
For well you know, this is a pitifull case.

Mu. I by my troth, the case may be amended.

Enter Peter.

Pet. Musitions, oh Musitions,
Hearts ease, hearts ease,
O, and you will haue me lue, play hearts ease.

Mu. Why hearts ease,

Pet. O Musitions,
Because my heart it selfe plaies, my heart is full

Mu. Not a dum p we, 'tis no time to play now,

Pet. You will not then ?

Mu. No

Pet. I will then giue it you soundly.

Mu. What will you giue vs ?

Pet. No money on my faith, but the gleeke.
I will giue you the Minstrell.

Mu. Then will I giue you the Seruing creature.

Peter. Then will I lay the seruing Creatures Dagger on your pate I will carie no Crochets, Ile Re you, Ile Fa
you, do you note me ?

Mu. And you Re vs, and Fa vs, you Note vs.

M. Pray you put vp your Dagger,
And put out your wit,
Then haue at you with my wit.

Peter. I will drie-beate you with an yron wit,
And put vp my yron Dagger.
Answer me like men :

When griping griefes the heart doth wound, then Musickewith her siluer found
Why siluer found ? why Musicke with her siluer found ?
what say you Simon Caulling ?

Mu. Mary sir, because siluer hath a sweet sound,

Pet. Pratest, what say you Hugh Rebicke ?

M. I say siluer found, because Musitions found for sil-

Pet. Pratest to, what say you Iames Scound-Poet ? (uer

Mu. Faith I know not what to say.

Pet. O I ery you mercy, you are the Singer.
I will say for you; it is Musicke with her siluer found,

Because Mr Physicians haue no gold for sounding.
Then Musicke with her siluer sound, with speedy helpe doth lend redresse. Exit.

Mn. What a pestilent knaue is this same?

M. Hang him Iacke, come weeke in here, carrie for the Mourners, and stay dinner. Exit.

Enter Romeo

Rom. If I may trust the flattering truth of sleepe,
My dreames prelage some ioyfull newes at hand:
My bosome L. sits lightly in his throne.
And all this day an vncustom'd spirit,
Lifts me about the ground with cheerefull thoughts.
I dreamt my Lady came and found me dead,
(Strange dreame that giues a dead man leaue to thinke,)
And breath'd such life with kisses in my lips,
That I reuiu'd and was an Emperour.
Ah me, how sweet is loue it selfe possesse,
When but loues shadowes are so rich in ioy.

Enter Romeo's man.

Newes from Verona, how now Balthazar?
Dost thou not bring me Letters from the Friar?
How doth my Lady? Is my Father well?
How doth my Lady Juliet? that I aske againe,
For nothing can be ill, if she be well.

Man. Then she is well, and nothing can be ill.
Her body sleepest in Capels Monument,
And her immortall part with Angels liue,
I saw her laid low in her kindreds Vault,
And presently tooke Poste to tell it you:
O pardon me for bringing these ill newes,
Since you did leaue it for my office Sir.

Rom. Is it euen so?

Then I denie you Starres.
Thou knowest my lodging, get me inke and paper,
And hire Post-Horses, I will hence to night.

Mn. I do beseech you sir, haue patience:
Your lookes are pale and wild, and do import
Some misaduenture

Rom. Tush, thou art deceiu'd,
Leaue me, and do the thing I bid thee do.
Hast thou no Letters to me from the Friar?

Mn. No my good Lord.

Exit Mn.

Rom. No matter. Get thee gone,
And hyre those Horses, Ile be with thee straight.
Well Juliet, I will lie with thee to night:
Lets see for meanes; O mischief thou art swift,
To enter in the thoughts of desperate men:
I do remember an Apothecarie,
And here abouts dwells, which late I noted
In tattered weeds, with ouerwhelming browes,
Culling of Simples, meager were his lookes,
Sharpe miserie had worne him to the bones.
And in his needie shop a Tortoyrs hung,
An Allegator stuf, and other skins
Of ill shap'd fishes, and about his shelves,
A beggerly account of emptie boxes,
Greene earthen pots, Bladders, and mustie seedes,
Remnants of packthred, and old cakes of Roses
Were thinly scatter'd, to make vp a shew.
Noting this penury, to my selfe I said,
An if a man did need a poyson now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here liues a Catiffe wretch would sell it him.
O this same thought did but fore-run my need,
And this same needie man must sell it me.

As I remember, this should be the house,
Being holy day, the beggers shop is shut.
What ho? Apothecarie?

Enter Apothecarie.

App. Who call's so low?

Rom. Come hither man, I see that thou art poore,
Hold, there is some Duckets, let me haue
A dram of poyson, such soone speeding geare,
As will disperie it selfe through all the veines,
That the life-wearie-taker may fall dead,
And that the Trunke may be discharg'd of breath,
As violently, as hastie powder fier'd
Doth hurrie from the fatal Canons wombe.

App. Such mortall drugs I haue, but Mantua law
Is death to any he, that vtters them

Rom. Art thou so bare and full of wretchednesse,
And fear'st to die? Famine is in thy cheekes,
Need and oppression starueth in thy eyes,
Contempt and beggerly hangs vpon thy backe:
The world is not thy friend, nor the worlds laws
The world affords no law to make thee rich.
Then be not poore, but breake it, and take this.

App. My pouerty, but not my will consents.

Rom. I pray thy pouerty, and not thy will.

App. Put this in any liquid thing you will
And drinke it off, and if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There's thy Gold,
Worse poyson to mens soules,
Doing more murder in this loathsome world,
Then these poore compounds that thou maiest not sell,
I sell thee poyson, thou hast sold me none,
Farewell, buy food, and get thy selfe in flesh,
Come Cordiall, and not poyson, go with me
To Juliet graue, for there must I vse thee.

Exit

Enter Friar Iohn to Friar Lawrence.

Iohn. Holy Franciscan Friar, Brother, ho?

Enter Friar Lawrence.

Law. This same should be the voice of Friar Iohn.
Welcome from Mantua, what sayes Romeo?
Or if his mind be witt, giue me his Letter.

Iohn. Going to find a bare-foote Brother out,
One of our order to associate me,
Here in this Citie visiting the sick,
And finding him, the Searchers of the Towne
Suspecting that we both were in a house
Where the infectious pestilence did raigne,
Seal'd vp the doores, and would not let vs forth,
So that my speed to Mantua there was staid.

Law. Who bare my Letter then to Romeo?

Iohn. I could not send it, here it is againe,
Nor get a messenger to bring it thee,
So fearefull were they of infection.

Law. Vnhappie Fortune: by my Brotherhood
The Letter was not nice, but full of charge,
Of deare import, and the neglecting it
May do much danger. Friar Iohn go hence,
Get me an Iron Crow, and bring it straight
Vnto my Cell.

Iohn. Brother Ile go and bring it thee.

Law. Now must I to the Monument alone,
Within this three houres will faire Juliet wake,
Shee will bestrew me much that Romeo
Hath had no notice of these accidents:
But I will write againe to Mantua,

Exit.

And

And keepe her at my Cell till Romeo come,
Poore liuing Coarse, clos'd in a dead mans Tombe,

Exit.

Enter Paris and his Page.

Par. Giue me thy Torch Boy, hence and stand aloft,
Yet put it out, for I would not be seene.
Vnder yond young Trees lay thee all along,
Holding thy eare close to the hollow ground,
So shall no foot vpon the Churchyard tread,
Being loose, vnfirm with digging vp of Graues,
But thou shalt heare it whistle then to me,
As signall that thou hearest some thing approach,
Giue me those flowers. Do as I bid thee, go.

Page. I am almost afraid to stand alone
Here in the Churchyard, yet I will adventure.

Pa. Sweet Flower with flowers thy Bridall bed Istrew:
O woe, thy Canopie is dust and stones,
Which with sweet water nightly I will dewe,
Or wanting that, with teares desil'd by mones;
The obsequies that I for thee will keepe,
Nightly shall be, so strew thy graue, and weepe.

Whistle Boy.

The Boy giues warning, something doth approach,
What curst foot wanders this wayes to night,
To crosse my obsequies, and true loues right?
What with a Torch? Muffle me night a while.

Enter Romeo, and Peter.

Rom. Giue me that Mattocke, & the wrenching Iron,
Hold take this Letter, early in the morning
See thou deliuer it to my Lord and Father,
Giue me the light; vpon thy life I charge thee,
What ere thou hear'st or seest, stand all aloofe,
And do not interrupt me in my course,
Why I descend into this bed of death,
Is partly to behold my Ladies face:
But chiefly to take thence from her dead finger,
A precious Ring: a Ring that I must vse,
In deare employment, therefore hence be gone:
But if thou ialous dost returne to prie
In what I further shall intend to do,
By heauen I will teare thee ioynt by ioynt,
And strew this hungry Churchyard with thy limbs:
The time, and my intents are sauage wilde.
More fierce and more inexorable farre,
Then emptie Tygers, or the roaring Sea.

Pet. I will be gone sir, and not trouble you

Ro. So shalt thou shew me friendship take thou that,
Lue and be prosperous, and farewell good fellow.

Pet. For all this same, Ile hide me here about,
His looks I feare, and his intents I doubt.

Rom. Thou, desestable mawe, thou wombe of death,
Gorg'd with the dearest morsell of the earth.
Thus I enforce thy rotten lawes to open,
And in despite, Ile cram thee with more food.

Par. This is that banisht haughtie Mountague,
That murderd my Loues Cozin; with which griefe,
It is supposed the faire Creature died;
And here is come to do some villanous shame
To the dead bodies: I will apprehend him.
Stop thy vnhallowell toyle, vile Mountague:
Can vengeance be pursued further then death?
Condemned vaine, I do apprehend thee.
Obey and go with me, for thou must die,

Rom. I must indeed, and therefore came I hither.
Good gentle youth, tempt not a desperate man,
Flee hence and leaue me, thinke vpon those gone,
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee Youth,
Put not an other sin vpon my head,
By vrging me to furie. O be gone,
By heauen I loue thee better then my selfe,
For I come hither arm'd against my selfe;
Stay not, be gone, lue, and hereafter say,
A mad mans mercy bid thee run away.

Par. I do desie thy commiseration,
And apprehend thee for a fellow here.

Ro. Wilt thou proaoke me? Then haue at thee Boy.

Pet. O Lord they fight, I will go call the Watch.

Pa. O I am slaine, if thou be mercifull,
Open the Tombe, lay me with Juliet.

Rom. In faith I will, let me peruse this face:
Mercutius kinsman, Noble Countie Paris,
What said my man, when my betossed soule
Did not attend him as we rode? I thinke
He told me Paris should haue married Juliet.
Said he not so? Or did I dreame it so?

O am I mad, hearing him talke of Isliet,
To thinke it was so? O giue me thy hand,
One, writ with me in sowre misfortunes booke.
Ile burie thee in a triumphant graue.

A Graue; O no, a Lanthorne, slaughter'd Youth:
For here lies Juliet, and her beautie makes
This Vault a least ng presence full of light.
Death lie thou there, by a dead man inter'd.
How oft when men are at the point of death,
Haue they beene merrie? Which their Keepers call
A lightning before death? Oh how may I
Call this a lightning? O my Loue, my Wife,
Death that hath suckt the honey of thy breath,
Hath had no power yet vpon thy Beautie:
Thou are not conquer'd. Beauries ensigne yet
Is Cymon in thy lips, and in thy cheekes,
And Deaths pale flags not aduanced there.

Tybalt, ly'st thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O what more sauour can I do to thee,
Then with that hand that cut thy youth in twaine,
To funder his that was thy enemy?

Forgiue me Cozen. Ah deare Juliet.
Why art thou yet to fare? I will beleeue,
Shall I beleeue, that vnsubstanciall death is amorous
And that the leane abhorred Monster keepe
Thee here in darke to be his Paramour?
For feare of that, I still will stay with thee,
And neuer from this Pallace of dym night
Depart againe: come lie thou in my armes,
Heere's to thy health, where ere thou tumblest in.
O true Apothecarie!

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.
Depart againe; here, here will I remaine,
With Wormes that are thy Chambermaides: O nyré
Will I set vp my everlasting rest:
And shake the yoke of inauspicious Starres
From this world-wearied flesh: Eyes looke your last!
Armes take your last embrace: And lips, O you
The doores of breath, seal with a righteous kisse
A datelesse bargaine to ingrossing death:
Come bitter conduct, come vnsauoury guide,
Thou desperate Pilot, now at once run on
The dashing Rocks, thy Sea-sicke wearie Barke:
Heere's to my Loue. O true Apothecarie:

EE 2

Thv

Thy drugs are quicke. Thus with a kisse I die.

Enter Friar with Lanthorne, Crow, and Spade.

Fri. St. Francis be my speed, how oft to night
Hauc my old feet stumbled at graues? Who's there?

Man Here's one, a Friend, & one that knowes you well.

Fri. Blisse be vpon you. Tell me good my Friend
What Torch is yond that vainely lends his light
To grubs, and eyelesse Sculles? As I discerne,
It burneth in the Capels Monument.

Man. It doth to holy fir,
And there's my Master, one that you loue.

Fri. Who is it?

Man Romeo.

Fri. How long hath he bin there?

Man. Full halfe an houre.

Fri. Go with me to the Vault.

Man. I dare not Sir.

My Master knowes not but I am gone hence,
And fearefully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to looke on his intents.

Fri. Stay, then Ile go alone, feares comes vpon me,
O much I feare some ill vnluckie thing

Man. As I did sleepe vnder this young tree here,
I dreamt my maister and another fought,
And that my Maister slew him.

Fri. Romeo.

Alacke, alacke, what blood is this which stains
The stony entrance of this Sepulcher?
What meane these Masterkisse, and goarie Swords
To lie discolour'd by this place of peace?

Romeo, on pale vno cle? what Paris too?
And sleept in blood? Ah what an vnkind houre
Is guiltie of this lamentable chance?
The Lady sirs.

Jul. O comfortable Frier, where's my Lord?
I do remember well where I should be
And there I am, where is my Romeo?

Fri. I heare some noyse Lady, come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and vnnaturall sleepe,
A greater power then we can contradiſt
Hath thwarted our intents, come, come away,
Thy husband in thy bosome there lies dead:
And Paris too: come Ile dispose of thee,
Among a Sisterhood of holy Nunnes:
Stay not to question, for the watch is comming.
Come, go good Juliet, I dare no longer stay. Exit.

Jul. Go get thee hence, for I will not away,
What's here? A cup clos'd in my true loes hand?
Poyson I see hath bin his timelesse end
O churle, drinke all? and leſt no friendly drop,
To helpe me after, I will kisse thy lips,
Happie some poyson yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorat.ue.
Thy lips are warme

Enter Boy and Watch.

Watch. Lead Boy which way?

Jul. Yea noyse?

Then ile be briefe. O happy Dagger.
'Tis in thy sheath, there rust and let me die Kills herselfe.

Boy. This is the place,
There where the Torch doth burne

Watch. The ground is bloody,
Search about the Churchyard
Go some of you, who ere you find a trace,
Pittifull sight, here lies the Countie slaine,
And Juliet bleeding, warme and newly dead

Who here hath laine these two dayes buried.

Go tell the Prince, runne to the Capulets,
Raife vp the Montagues, some others search,
We see the ground whereon these woes do lye,
But the true ground of all these piteous woes,
We cannot without circumstance descry.

Enter Romeo's man.

Watch. Here's Romeo's man,

We found him in the Churchyard.

Con. Hold him in safety, till the Prince come hither.

Enter Friar, and another Watchman.

3. Wat. Here is a Frier that trembles, sighes, and weeps:
We tooke this Mattocke and this Spade from him,
As he was comming from this Church-yard side.

Con. A great suspicion, stay the Frier too.

Enter the Prince.

Prin. What misaduenture is so earely vp,
That calls our person from our mornings rest?

Enter Capulet and his Wife.

Cap. What should it be that they so shrike abroad?

Wife. O the people in the streete cry Romeo.
Some Juliet, and some Paris, and all runne
With open outcry toward our Monument.

Prs. What feare is this which startles in your eares?

Wife. Sotteraigne, here lies the Countie Paris slaine,
And Romeo dead, and Juliet dead before,
Warne and new kil'd.

Prin. Search,

Seeke, and know how this foule murder comes.

Wife. Here is a Frier, and Slaughter'd Romeo's man,
With Instruments vpon them fit to open
These dead mens Tombes.

Cap. O heauen!

O wife locke how our Daughter bleedes!
This Dagger with inſtaurke, for loe his house
Is empty on the backe of Montague,
And is miserthled in my Daughters bosome
Wife. O me, this sigh of death, is as a Bell
That waines my old age to a Sepulcher.

Enter Montague

Prs. Come Montague, for thou art early vp

To see thy Sonne and Heire, now early downe
Mount. Alas my liege, my wife is dead to night,
Griefe of my Sonnes exile hath stop't her breath
What further woe conspires against my age?

Prin. Look and thou shalt see.

Mount. O thou vntaught, what manners in is this,
To presse before thy Father to a graue?

Prin. Seale vp the mouth of outrage for a while,
Till we can cleare these ambiguities,
And know their spring, their head, their true descent,
And then will I be generall of your woes,
And lead you euen to death: meane time forbear,
And let mischance be slave to patience,
Bring forth the parties of suspicion.

Fri. I am the greatest, able to doe least,
Yet most suspected as the time and place
Doth make against me of this direfull murder:
And heere I stand both to impeach and purge
My selfe condemned, and my selfe excus'd.

Prin. Then say at once, what thou dost know in this?

Fri. I will be briefe, for my short date of breath
Is not so long as is a tedious tale.
Romeo there dead, was husband to that Juliet,
And she there dead, that's Romeo's faithfull wife:

I married them; and their stolne marriage day
Was Tybalt's Doomesday: whose vntimely death
Banish'd the new-made Bridegroome from this Citie:
For whom (and not for Tybalt's) Iuliet pinde.
You, to remoue that siege of Greefe from her,
Betrouch'd, and would haue married her perforce
To Countie Paris. Then comes she to me,
And (with wilde lookes) bid me deuise some meanes
To rid her from this second Marriage,
Or in my Cell there would she kill her selfe.
Then gaue I her (to Tutor d by my Art)
A sleeping Potion, which so tooke effect
As I intended, for it wrought on her
The forme of death. Meane time, I writ to Romeo,
That he should hither come, as this dyre night,
To helpe to take her from her borrowed graue,
Being the time the Potions force should cease
But he which bore my Letter, Frier John,
Was stay'd by accident; and yesternight
Return'd my Letter backe. Then all alone,
At the prefixed houre of her waking,
Came I to take her from her Kindreds vault,
Meaning to keepe her closely at my Cell,
Till I conueniently could send to Romeo
But when I came (some Minute ere the time
Of her awaking) heere vntimely lay
The Noble Paris, and true Romeo dead,
Shee wakes, and I intreated her come soorth,
And beare this worke of Heauen, with patience;
But then, a noyse did scarre me from the Tombe,
And she (too desperate) would not go with me,
But (as it seemes) did violence on her selfe.
All this I know, and to the Marriage her Nurse is priuy:
And if ought in this misfarr'd by my fault,
Let my old life be sacrific'd, some houre before the time,
Vnto the rigour of seuerest Law.

Prim. We still haue knowne thee for a Holy man.
Where's Romeo's man? What can he say to this?

Boy I brought my Master newes of Iuliet's death,

And then in poste he came from Manua
To this same place, to this same Monument.
This Letter he early bid me giue his Father,
And threatned me with death, going in the Vault,
If I departed not, and left him there.

Prim. Giue me the Letter, I will look on it.
Where is the Counties Page that rais'd the Watch?
Sirra, what made your Master in this place?

Page. He came with flowres to strew his Ladies graue,
And bid me stand aloofe, and so I did.
Anon comes one with light to ope the Tombe,
And by and by my Maister drew on him,
And then I ran away to call the Watch.

Prim. This Letter doth make good the Friers words,
Their course of Loue, the tydings of her death:
And heere he writes, that he did buy a poyson
Of a poore Potheecarie, and therewithall
Came to this Vault to dye, and lye with Iuliet.
Where be these Enemies? Capulet, Montague,
See what a scourge is laide vpon your hate,
That Heauen finds meanes to kill your ioyes with Loue;
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Haue lost a brace of Kinsmen. All are punish'd.

Cap. O Brother Montague, giue me thy hand,
This is my Daughters soynure, for no more
Can I demaund.

Moan. But I can giue thee more.
For I will raise her Statue in pure Gold,
That whiles Verona by that name is knowne,
There shall no figure at that Rate be set,
As that of True and Faithfull Iuliet.

Cap. As rich shall Romeo by his Lady ly,
Poore sacrifices of our enmity.

Prim. A glooming peace this morning with it brings,
The Sunne for sorrow will not shew his head;
Go hence, to haue more talke of these sad things,
Some shall be pardon'd, and some punished.
For neuer was a Storie of more Wo,
Then this of Iuliet, and her Romeo.

Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

THE LIFE OF TYMON OF ATHENS.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Poet, Painter, Jeweller, Merchant, and Mercer, at severall doores.

Poet.

Good day Sir.

Pain. I am glad y<sup>e</sup> are well.

Poet. I haue not seene you long, how goes the World?

Pain. It weares fir, as it growes.

Poet. I that's well knowne:

But what particular Rarity? What strange,
Which manifold record not matches: see
Magicke of Bouny, all these spirits thy power
Hath coniur'd to attend,
I know the Merchant.

Pain. I know them both: th<sup>e</sup> others a Jeweller.

Mer. O 'tis a worthy Lord.

Jew. Nay that's most fixt.

Mer. A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were,
To an vnyreable and continuat goodnesse:
He passes.

Jew. I haue a Jewell heere.

Mer. O pray let's see't. For the Lord Timon, sir?

Jewel. If he will touch the estimate. But for that—

Poet. When we for recompence haue prais'd the vild,
It shaines the glory in that happy Verse,
Which aptly sings the good.

Mer. 'Tis a good forme.

Jewel. And rich. heere is a Water looke ye.

Pain. You are rapt sir, in some worke, some Dedication to the great Lord.

Poet. A thing slip't idly from me.

Our Poetrie is as a Gowne, which vses
From whence 'tis nourisht the fire i'th Flint
Shewes not, till it be strooke: our gentle flame
Prouokes it selfe, and like the currant flies
Each bound it chafes. What haue you there?

Pain. A Picture sir: when comes your Booke forth?

Poet. Vpon the heeles of my presentment sir.
Let's see your peece.

Pain. 'Tis a good Peece.

Poet. So 'tis, this comes off well, and excellent.

Pain. Indifferent.

Poet. Admirable. How this grace
Speakes his owne standing: what a mentall power
This eye shoores forth? How bigge imagination
Moues in this Lip, to th<sup>e</sup> dumbnesse of the gesture,

One might interpret.

Pain. It is a pretty mocking of the life:
Heere is a touch. Is't good?

Poet. I will say of it,
It Tutors Nature, Artificiall strife
Lives in these touches, liuelier then life.

Enter certaine Senators.

Pain. How this Lord is followed.

Poet. The Senators of Athens, happy men.

Pain. Looke moe.

Po. You see this confluence, this great flood of visitors,
I haue in this rough worke, shap'd out a man
Whom this beneath world doth embrace and hugge
With amplest entertainment. My free drift
Halts not particularly, but moues it selfe
In a wide Sea of wax, no leuell'd malice
Infects one comma in the course I hold,
But flies an Eagle flight, bold, and forth on,
Leauing no Tract behinde.

Pain. How shall I vnderstand you?

Poet. I will vnboile to you.

You see how all Conditions, how all Mindes,
As well of glib and slipp'ry Creatures, as
Of Graue and austere qualitie, tender downe
Their seruices to Lord Timon: his large Fortune,
Vpon his good and gracious Nature hanging,
Subdues and properties to his loue and tendance
All sorts of hearts; yea, from the glasse-fac'd Flatterer
To Apemantus, that few things loues better
Then to abhorre himselfe; euen hee drops downe
The knee before him, and returns in peace
Most rich in Timons nod.

Pain. I saw them speake together.

Poet. Sir, I haue vpon a high and pleasant hill
Feign'd Fortune to be thrond.

The Base o'th' Mount

Is rank'd with all deserts, all kinde of Natures
That labour on the bosome of this Sphere,
To propagate their states; among't them all,
Whose eyes are on this Soueraigne Lady fixt,
One do I personate of Lord Timons frame,
Whom Fortune with her luery hand waits to her,
Whose present grace, to present slaues and seruants
Translates his Riuals.

Pain. 'Tis concey'd, to scope
This Throne, this Fortune, and this Hill me thinkes

With

With one man beckn'd from the rest below,
Bowling his head against the steepy Mount
To climbe his happinesse, would be well exprest
In our Condition.

Poet. Nay Sir, but heare me on:
All those which were his Fellowes but of late,
Some better then his valed; on the moment
Follow his strides, his Lobbies fill with tendance,
Raine Sacrificall whisperings in his care,
Make Sacred euen his styrtrop, and through him
Drinke the free Ayre.

Pain. I marry, what of these?

Poet. When Fortune in her shift and change of mood
Spurnes downe her late beloued, all his Dependants
Which labour'd after him to the Mountaines top,
Euen on their knees and hand, let him sit downe,
Nor one accompanying his declining foot.

Pain. 'Tis common:
A thousand morall Paintings I can shew,
That shall demonstrate these quicke blowes of Fortunes,
More pregnantly then words. Yet you do well,
To shew Lord Timon, that meane eyes haue seene
The foot about the head.

Trumpets sound.

Enter Lord Timon, addressing himselfe courteously to euenry Smilor.

Tim. Imprison'd is he, say you?

Mef. Imy good Lord, siue Talents is his debt,
His meanes most short, his Creditors most straites:
Your Honourable Letter he desires
To those haue shut him vp, which failing,
Periods his comfort.

Tim. Noble Ventidius well:
I am not of that Feather, to shake off
My Friend when he must neede me. I do know him
A Gentleman, that well deserves a helpe,
Which he shall haue. Ile pay the debt, and free him.

Mef. Your Lordship euer bindes him

Tim. Commend me to him, I will send his ransom,
And being enfranchizd bid him come to me;
'Tis not enough to helpe the Feeble vp,
But to support him after. Fare you well.

Mef. All happinesse to your Honor.

Exit.

Enter an old Athenian.

Oldm. Lord Timon, heare me speake.

Tim. Freely good Father.

Oldm. Thou hast a Seruant nam'd Lucillus.

Tim. I haue so: What of him?

Oldm. Most Noble Timon, call the man before thee.

Tim. Attends he heere, or no? Lucillus.

Luc. Heere at your Lordships seruice.

Oldm. This Fellow heere, L. Timon, this thy Creature,
By night frequents my house. I am a man
That from my first haue beene inclin'd to thrift,
And my estate deserves an Heyre more rais'd,
Then one which holds a Trencher.

Tim. Well: what further?

Old. One onely Daughter haue I, no Kin else,
On whom I may conferre what I haue got.
The Maid is faire, a'th' youngest for a Bride,
And I haue bred her at my dearest cost
In Qualities of the best. This man of thine
Attempts her loue: I prythee (Noble Lord)

Ioyne with meto forbid him her resort,
My selfe haue spoke in vaine.

Tim. The man is honest.

Oldm. Therefore he will be Timon,
His honesty rewards him in it selfe,
It must not beare my Daughter.

Tim. Does she loue him?

Oldm. She is yong and apt:

Our owne precedent passions do instruct vs
What leuities in youth.

Tim. Loue you the Maid?

Luc. I my good Lord, and she accepts of it.

Oldm. If in her Marriage my consent be missing,
I call the Gods to witnesse, I will choose
Mine heyre from forth the Beggars of the world,
And dispossesse her all.

Tim. How shall she be endowed,
If she be mated with an equall Husband?

Oldm. Three Talents on the present; in future, all.

Tim. This Gentleman of mine
Hath seru'd me long:

To build his Fortune, I will straine a little,
For 'tis a Bond in men. Giue him thy Daughter,
What you bestow, in him Ile counterpoize,
And make him weigh with her.

Oldm. Most Noble Lord,
Pawne me to this your Honour, she is his.

Tim. My hand to thee,
Mine Honour on my promise

Luc. Humbly I thanke your Lordship, neuer may
That state or Fortune fall into my keeping,
Which is not owed to you.

Exit.

Poet. Vouchsafe my Labour,
And long liue your Lordship.

Tim. I thanke you, you shall heare from me anon:
Go not away. What haue you there, my Friend?

Pain. A peece of Painting, which I do beseech
Your Lordship to accept.

Tim. Painting is welcome.
The Painting is almost the Naturall man:
For since Dishonor Traffickes with mans Nature,
He is but out-side: These Pensil'd Figures are Euen such as they giue out. I like your worke,
And you shall finde I like it; Waite attendance.
Till you heare further from me.

Pain. The Gods preserue ye.

Tim. Well fare you Gentleman: giue me your hand.
We must needs dine together. Sir your Jewell
Hath suffered vnder praise.

Jewel. What my Lord, dispraise?

Tim. A meere society of Commendations,
If I should pay you for't as 'tis extold,
It would vnclew me quite.

Jewel. My Lord, 'tis rated
As those which sell would giue: but you well know,
Things of like valew differing in the Owners,
Are prized by their Masters. Beleeu't deere Lord,
You mend the Jewell by the wearing it.

Tim. Well mock'd. Enter Apemantus.

Mer. No my good Lord, he speaks & common soong
Which all men speake with him

Tim. Looke who comes heere, will you be chid?

Jewel. Wee'l beare with your Lordship.

Mer. Hee'l spare none.

Tim. Good morrow to thee,
Gentle Apemantus.

I gave it freely ever, and ther's none
Can truly say he giues, if he receiues:
If our betters play at that game, we must not dare
To imitate them: faults that are rich are faire.

Ym. A Noble spirit.

Tim. Nay my Lords, Ceremony was but deuils'd at first
To set a glosse on faint deeds, hollow welcomes,
Recanting goodnesse, sorry ere 'tis showne:
But where there is true friendship, there needs none.
Pray sit, more welcome are ye to my Fortunes,
Then my Fortunes to me.

1. Lord. My Lord, we alwaies haue confess'd it.

Aper. Ho ho, confess it? Handg'd it? Haue you not?

Tim. O Apermantus, you are welcome

Aper. No. You shall not make me welcome.

I come to haue thee thrust me out of doores.

Tim. Fie, th'art a churle, ye haue got a humour there
Does not become a man, 'tis much too blame:

They say my Lords, Ira furor breuius est,

But yond man is verie angrie.

Go, let him haue a Table by himselfe.

For he does neither affect companie,

Nor is he fit for't indeed.

Aper. Let me stay: thine apperill Timon,

I come to obserue, I giue thee warning on't.

Tim. I take no heede of thee: Th'art an Athenian, therefore welcomie I my selfe would haue no power,
pythee let my meate make thee silent.

Aper. I scorn thy meate, 'twould choake nie for I should nere flatter thee. Oh you Gods! What a number of men eats Timon, and he sees 'em not? It grieues me to see so many dip there meate in one mans blood, and all the madnesse is, he cheeres them vp too.

I wonder men dare trust themselves with men.

Me thinks they should enuite them without knives,

Good for there meate, and safer for their liues.

There's much example for't, the fellow that sits next him, now parts bread with him, pledges the breath of him in a diuided draught is the readiest man to kill him. 'Tas beene proued, if I were a huge man I should feare to drinke at meales, least they should spie my wind-pipes dangerous noates, great men should drinke with harnessse on their throates.

Tim. My Lord in heart and let the health go round

2. Lord. Let it flow this way my good Lord.

Aper. Flow this way? A braue fellow. He keeps his sides well, those healths will make thee and thy state looke ill, Timon.

Heere's that which is too weake to be a sinner,

Honest water, which nere left man i'th'mire:

This and my food are equals, there's no ods,

Feasts are to proud to giue thanks to the Gods.

Apermantus Grace.

Immortal Gods, I crane no pelfe,

I pray for no man but my selfe,

Grant I may neuer proue so fond,

To trust man on his Oath or Bond.

Or a Harlot for ner weeping,

Or a Dogge that seemes asleepeing,

Or a keeper with my freedome,

Or my friends if I should need 'em.

Amen So fall too't

Richmen sin, and I can root.

Much good dich thy good heart, Apermantus

Tim. Captaine,

Alcibiades, your hearts in the field now.

Alci. My heart is euer at your seruice, my Lord.

Tim. You had rather be at a breakefast of Enemies,
then a dinner of Friends.

Alci. So they were bleeding new my Lord, there's no meat like 'em, I could wish my best friend at such a Feast

Aper. Would all those Flatterers were thine Enemies then, that then thou might'st kill 'em. & bid me to 'em

1. Lord. Might we but haue that happinesse my Lord, that you would once vse our hearts, whereby we might expresse some part of our zeales, we should thinke our selues for euer perfect.

Timon. Oh no doubt my good Friends, but the Gods themselves haue prouided that I shall haue much helpe from you how had you beene my Friends else. Why haue you that charitable title from thousands? Did not you chiefly belong to my heart? I haue told more of you to my selfe, then you can with modestie speake in your owne behalfe. And thus farre I confirme you. Oh you Gods (thinke I,) what need we haue any Friends; if we should nere haue need of 'em? They were the most needlesse Creatures liuing, should we nere haue vse for 'em? And would most resemble sweete Instruments hung vp in Cases, that keeps there sounds to themselues. Why I haue often wisht my selfe poorer, that I might come neerer to you. we are borne to do benefits. And what better or properer can we call our owne, then the riches of our Friends? Oh what a pretious comfort 'tis, to haue so many like Brothers commanding one anothers Fortunes. Oh ioyes, e'ne made away er't can be borne mine eies cannot hold out water me thinks to forget their Faults. I drinke to you.

Aper. Thou weep'st to make them drinke, Timon.

2. Lord. Ioy had the like conception in our eies.

And at that instant, like a babe sprung vp

Aper. Ho, ho: I laugh to thinke that babe a bastard.

3. Lord. I promise you my Lord you mou'd me much.

Aper. Much.

Sound Tucket. Enter the Maskers of Amazons, with Lutes in their hands, dauncing and playing.

Tim. What meanes that Trumpe? How now?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Please you my Lord, there are certaine Ladies
Most desirous of admittance.

Tim. Ladies? what are their wils?

Ser. There comes with them a fore-runner my Lord,
which beares that office, to signifie their pleasures.

Tim. I pray let them be admitted.

Enter Cupid with the Masks of Ladies.

Cup. Haile to thee worthy Timon and to all that of his Bounties taste: the five best Sences acknowledge thee their Patron, and come freely to gratulate thy plentiful bosome.

There tast, touch all, pleas'd from thy Table rise:

They onely now come but to Feast thine eies.

Tim. They'r welcome all, let 'em haue kind admittance. Musicke make their welcome.

Luc. You see my Lord, how ample y'are belou'd.

Aper. Hoyday,

What a sweepe of vanitie comes this way.

They daunce? They are madwomen,

Like Madnesse is the glory of this life,
As this pompe shewes to a little oyle and roote.
We make our selues Fooles, to disport our selues,
And spend our Flatteries, to drinke those men,
Vpon whose Age we voyde it vp agen
With poysonous Spight and Enuy.
Who liues, that's not depiaued, or depraued;
Who dyes, that beares not one spurne to their graues
Of their Friends guist.
I should feare, those that dance before me now,
Would one day stampe vpon me: 'Tis bene done,
Men shut their doores against a setting Sunne.

The Lords rise from Table, with much adoring of Timon, and to shew their loues, each single out an Amazon, and all Dance, men with women, a loslie straine or two to the Hoboyes, and cease.

Tim. You haue done our pleasures
Much grace (faire Ladies)
Set a faire fashion on our entertainment,
Which was not halfe so beautifull, and kinde.
You haue added worth vnto't, and luster,
And entertain'd me with mine owne deuice.
I am to thanke you for't.

1 Lord. My Lord you take vs euen at the best.

Aper. Faith for the worst is filthy, and would not hold taking, I doubt me

Tim. Ladies, there is an idle banquet attends you,
Please you to dispose your selues.

All La. Most thankfully, my Lord. Exeunt.

Tim. Flamini.

Fla. My Lord.

Tim. The little Casket bring me hither.

Fla. Yes, my Lord. More Jewels yet?
There is no crossing him in's humor,
Else I should tell him well, yfaith I should;
When all's spent, hee'd be croft then, and he could:
'Tis pity Bounty had not eyes behinde,
That man might ne're be wretched for his minde. Exit.

1 Lord. Where be our men?

Ser. Heere my Lord, in readinesse.

2 Lord. Our Horses

Tim. O my Friends:

I haue one word to say to you: Looke you, my good L.
I must intreat you honour me so much,
As to aduance this Iewell, accept it, and weare it,
Kinde my Lord.

1 Lord. I am so farre already in your guists.

All. So are we all.

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord, there are certaine Nobles of the Senate newly alighted, and come to visit you.

Tim. They are fairely welcome.

Enter Flamini.

Fla. I beseech your Honor, vouchsafe me a word, it does concerne you neere.

Tim. Neere? why then another time Ile heare thee.
I prythee let's be provided to shew them entertainment.

Fla. I scarce know how.

Enter another Seruant.

Ser. May it please your Honor, Lord Lucina
(Ouz of his free loue) hath presented to you
Foure Milke-white Horses, trapt in Siluer.

Tim. I shall accept them fairely: let the Presents
Be worthily entertain'd.

Enter a third Seruant.

How now? What newes?

3. Ser. Please you my Lord, that honourable Gentleman Lord Lucullus, entreats your companie to morrow, to hunt with him, and ha's sent your Honour two brace of Grey-hounds.

Tim. Ile hunt with him,
And let them be receiue'd, not without faire Reward.

Fla. What will this come to?

He commands vs to provide, and giue great guists, and all out of an empty Coffer:

Nor will he know his Purse, or yeeld me this,
To shew him what a Begger his heart is,
Being of no power to make his wishes good.
His promises flye so beyond his state,
That what he speaks is all in debt, he owes for eu'ry word:
He is so kinde, that he now payes interest for't;
His Land's put to their Bookes. Well, would I were Gently put out of Office, before I were forc'd out:
Happier is he that has no friend to feede,
Then such that do e'ne Enemies excede.
I bleed inwardly for my Lord.

Exit

Tim. You do your selues much wrong,
You bate too much of your owne merits,
Heere my Lord, a trifle of our Loue.

2 Lord. With more then common thanks
I will receyue it.

3 Lord. O he's the very soule of Bounty.

Tim. And now I remember my Lord, you gaue good words the other day of a Bay Couser I rod on, 'Tis yours because you lik'd it.

1. L. Oh, I beseech you pardon mee, my Lord, in that.

Tim. You may take my word my Lord: I know no man can iustly praise, but what he does affect. I weighe my Friends affection with mine owne. Ile tell you true, Ile call to you.

All Ser. O none so welcome.

Tim. I take all, and your seuerall visitations
So kinde to heart, 'tis not enough to giue.
Me thinker, I could deale Kingdomes to my Friends,
And nere be wearie. Alexiades,
Thou art a Soldier: therefore sildome rich,
It comes in Charitie to thee: for all thy liuing
Is mong't the dead: and all the Lands thou hast
Lye in a pitch field.

Ale. I, deil'd Land, my Lord.

1. Lord. We are so vertuously bound.

Tim. And so am I to you.

2. Lord. So infinitely endear'd,

Tim. All to you. Lights, more Lights.

1 Lord. The best of Happines, Honor, and Fortunes
Keepe with you Lord Timon.

Tim. Ready for his Friends. Exeunt Lords

Aper. What a coles heere, serving of beckes, and rut-ting out of bummes. I doubt whether their Legges be worth the summes that are giuen for 'em.

Friendships full of dregges,
Me thinkes false hearts, should neuer haue sound legges.
Thus honest Fooles lay out their wealth on Curtiser.

Tim. Now Apermantus (if thou wert not fullen)
I would be good to thee.

Aper. No, Ile nothing; for if I should be brib'd too, there would be none left to raile vpon thee, and then thou wouldst sinne the faster. Thou giu'st so long Timon (I feare me) thou wilt giue away thy selfe in paper shortly.
What needs these Feasts, pompes, and Vaine-glories?

Tim.

Tim. Nay, and you begin to raile on Societie once, I am sworne not to giue regard to you. Farewell, & come with better Musicke. Exit

Aper. So : Thou wilt not heare mee now, thou shalt not then. He locke thy heauen from thee ! Oh that mens eares should be To Counsell deafe, but not to Flatterie. Exit

Enter a Senator.

Sen. And late five thousand to Varro and to Isidore He owes nine thousand, besides my former summe, Which makes it five and twenty. Still in motion Of raging waste ? It cannot hold, it will not. If I want Gold, steale but a beggers Dogge, And giue it Timon, why the Dogge comes Gold If I would sell my Horse, and buy twenty more Better then he, why giue my Horse to Timon. Aske nothing, giue it him, it Foles me straight And able Horses. No Porter at his gate, But rather one that smiles, and still inuites All that passe by. It cannot hold, no reason Can sound his state in safety. Caphis ho, Caphis I say.

Enter Caphis.

Ca. Heere sir, what is your pleasure.

Sen. Get on your cloake, & hast you to Lord Timon, Importune him for my Monyes, be not ceast With slight deniall ; nor then silene'd, when Commend me to your Master, and the Cap Playes in the right hand, thus : but tell him, My Vses cry to me ; I must serue my turne Out of mine owne, his dayes and times are past, And my reliances on his fracted dates Haue smit my credit I loue, and honour him, But must not breake my backe, to heale his finger. Immediate are my needs, and my releefe Must not be tost and turn'd to me in words, But finde supply immediate. Get you gone, Put on a most importunate aspect, A visage of demand - for I do feare When euery Feather stickes in his owne wing, Lord Timon will be left a naked gull, Which flashes now a Phoenix, get you gone.

Ca. I go sir.

Sen. I go sir ? Take the Bonds along with you, And haue the dates in. Come.

Ca. I will Sir.

Sen. Go. Exeunt

Enter Steward, with many billes in his hand.

Stew. No care, no stop, so senselesse of expence, That he will neither know how to maintaine it, Nor cease his flow of Riot. Takes no accompt How things go from him, nor resume no care Of what is to continue: neuer minde, Was to be so vnwise, to be so kinde. What shall be done, he will not heare, till feele - I must be round with him, now he comes from hunting. Fye, fie, fie, fie.

Enter Caphis, Isidore, and Varro.

Cap. Good euen Varro what, you come for money?

Var. Is't not your businesse too?

Cap. It is, and yours too, Isidore?

Isid. It is so.

Cap. Would we were all discharg'd,

Var. I feare it,

Cap. Heere comes the Lord.

Enter Timon, and his Traine.

Tim. So soone as dinners done, wee'l forth againe My Alcibiades. With me, what is your will?

Cap. My Lord, heere is a note of certaine dues,

Tim. Dues? whence are you?

Cap. Of Athens heere, my Lord.

Tim. Go to my Steward.

Cap. Please it your Lordship, he hath put me off To the succession of new dayes this moneth; My Master is awak'd by great Occasion, To call vpon his owne, and humbly prayes you, That with your other Noble parts, you'l suite, In giuing him his right.

Tim. Mine honest Friend,

I prythee but repaire to me next morning.

Cap. Nay, good my Lord.

Tim. Containe thy selfe, good Friend,

Var. One Varroes seruant, my good Lord

Isid. From Isidore, he humbly prayes your speedy payment.

Cap. If you did know my Lord, my Masters wants.

Var. 'Twas due on forfeiture my Lord, sixe weekes, and past.

Isi. Your Steward puts me off my Lord, and I Am sent expressly to your Lordship.

Tim. Giue me breath:

I do beseech you good my Lords keepe on, Ile waite vpon you instantly. Come hither: pray you How goes the world, that I am thus encountred With clamorous demands of debt, broken Bonds, And the detention of long since due debts Against my Honor?

Stew. Please you Gentlemen, The time is vnagreeable to this businesse - Your importunacie cease, till after dinner, That I may make his Lordship vnderstand Wherefore you are not paid.

Tim. Do so my Friends, see them well entertain'd.

Stew. Pray draw neere. Exit

Enter Apemantus and Foole.

Caph. Stay, stay, here comes the Foole with Apemantus, let's ha some sport with 'em.

Var. Hang him, hee'l abuse vs.

Isid. A plague vpon him dogge.

Var. How dost Foole?

Ape. Dost Dialogue with thy shadow?

Var. I speake not to thee.

Ape. No 'tis to thy selfe. Come away

Isi. There's the Foole hangs on your backe already.

Ape. No thousand't single, th'art not on him yet.

Cap. Where's the Foole now?

Ape. He last ask'd the question. Poore Rogues, and Vsurers men, Bauds betwene Gold and want,

Al. What are we Apemantus?

Ape. Asses.

Al. Why?

Ape. That you ask me what you are, & do not know your selues. Speake to 'em Foole.

Foole. How do you Gentlemen?

Al. Gramercies good Foole:

How does your Mistress?

Foole.

Foole. She's e'ne setting on water to scald such Chickens as you are. Would we could see you at Corinth.

Ape. Good, Gramercy.

Enter Page.

Foole. Look you, heere comes my Masters Page.

Page. Why how now Captaine? what do you in this wise Company.

How dost thou Apemantus?

Ape. Would I had a Rod in my mouth, that I might answer thee profitably.

Boy. Prythee Apemantus read me the superscription of these Letters, I know not which is which.

Ape. Canst not read?

Page. No.

Ape. There will little Learning dye then that day thou art hang'd. This is to Lord Timon, this to Alcibiades. Go thou was't borne a Bastard; and thou't dye a Bawd.

Page. Thou was't whelp't a Dogge, and thou shalt furnish a Dogges death.

Answer not, I am gone

Exit

Ape. Ene so thou out-runst Grace,

Foole I will go with you to Lord Timons.

Foole. Will you leaue me there?

Ape. If Timon stay at home.

You three serue three Vsurers?

All. I would they seru'd vs.

Ape. So would I:

As good a trick as euery Hangman seru'd Theefe.

Foole. Are you three Vsurers men?

All. I Foole.

Foole. I thinke no Vsurer, but ha's a Foole to his Seruant. My Mistress is one, and I am her Foole: when men come to borrow of your Masters, they approach sadly, and go away merry: but they enter my Masters house merrily, and go away sadly. The reason of this?

Var. I could render one.

Ape. Do it then, that we may account thee a Whoremaster, and a Knaue, which notwithstanding thou shalt be no lesse esteemed.

Varro. What is a Whoremaster Foole?

Foole. A Foole in good cloathes, and something like thee. 'Tis a spirit, sometime 't appears like a Lord, sometime like a Lawyer, sometime like a Philosopher, with two stones more then 's artificiall one. Hee is verie often like a Knight; and generally, in all shapes that man goes vp and downe in, from fourescore to thirteen, this spirit walkes in.

Var. Thou art not altogether a Foole.

Foole. Not thou altogether a Wise man, As much foolerie as I haue, so much wit thou lack'st.

Ape. That answer might haue become Apemantus.

All. Aside, aside, heere comes Lord Timon.

Enter Timon and Steward.

Ape. Come with me (Foole) come.

Foole. I do not alwayes follow Louer, 'elder Brother, and Woman, sometime the Philosopher.

Stew. Pray you walken eere,

Ile speake with you anon.

Exeunt.

Tim. You make me meruell wherefore ere this time Had you not fully laide my state before me, That I might so haue rated my exence As I had leaue of meares.

Stew. You would not heare me!

At many leysures I propose.

Tim. Go too:

Perchance some single vantages you tooke, When my indisposition put you backe, And that vnaptnesse made your minister Thus to excuse your selfe.

Stew. O my good Lord, At many times I brought in my accompts, Laid them before you, you would throw them off, And say you found them in mine honestie, When for some trifling present you haue bid me Returne so much, I haue shooke my head, and wept: Yea 'gainst th' Authoritie of manners, pray'd you To hold your hand more close. I did indure Not sildome, nor no slight checkes, when I haue Prompted you in the ebbe of your estate, And your great flow of debts; my lou'd Lord, Though you heare now (too late) yet nowes a time, The greatest of your hauing, lackes a halfe, To pay your present debts.

Tim. Let all my Land be sold.

Stew. 'Tis all engag'd, some forfeited and gone, And what remains will hardly stop the mouth Of present dues; the future comes apace: What shall defend the interim, and at length How goes our reck'ning?

Tim. To Lacedemon did my Land extend.

Stew. O my good Lord, the world is but a word, Were it all yours, to giue it in a breath, How quickly were it gone.

Tim. You tell me true

Stew. If you suspect my Husbandry or Falshood, Call me before th' exactest Auditors, And let me on the prooffe. So the Gods blesse me, When all our Offices haue beene oppress'd With riotous Feeters, when our Vaults haue wept With drunken spilt of Wine, when euery roome Hath blaz'd with Lights, and braid with Mistresse, I haue rety'd me to a wastefull cocke, And set mine eyes at flow.

Tim. Prythee no more.

Stew. Heauens haue I said the bounty of this Lord: How many prodigall bits haue Slaves and Pezants This night englotted, who is not Timon, What heart, head, sword, force, meane, but is L. Timon. Great Timon, Noble, Worthy, Royall Timon: Ah, when the meanes are gone, that buy this praise, The breath is gone, whereof this praise is made: Feast won, fast lost; one cloud of Winter shewres, These flies are coucht.

Tim. Come sermon me no further.

No villanous bounty yet hath past my heart; Vnwisely, not ignobly haue I giuen. Why dost thou weepe, canst thou the conscience lacke, To thinke I shall lacke friends: secure thy heart, If I would broucht the vessels of my loue, And try the argument of hearts, by borrowings, Men, and mens fortunes could I frankly vse As I can bid thee speake.

Stew. Assurance blesse your thoughts.

Tim. And in some sort these wants of mine are crown'd, That I account them blessings. For by these Shall I trie Friends. You shall perceiue How you mistake my Fortunes: I am weakthie in my Friends. Within there, Flaminius, Seruilus?

Enter

Enter three Servants.

Ser. My Lord, my Lord.

Tim. I will dispatch you severally.
You to Lord Lucius, to Lord Lucullus you, I hunted with his Honor to day, you to Sempronius, commend me to their loves; and I am proud say, that my occasions have found time to use 'em toward a supply of money: let the request be fifty Talents.

Flam. As you have said, my Lord

Stew. Lord Lucius and Lucullus? Humh.

Tim. Go you fir to the Senators;

Of whom, even to the States best health; I have Deserv'd this Hearing. bid 'em send o'th instant
A thousand Talents to me.

Stew. I have beene bold

(For that I knew it the most generall way)
To them, to use your Signet, and your Name,
But they do shake their heads, and I am heere
No richer in returne.

Tim. Is't true? Can't be?

Stew. They answer in a ioynt and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall, want Treasure cannot Do what they would, are forrie you are Honourable,
But yet they could have wisht, they know not,
Something hath beene amisse, a Noble Nature
May catch a wench; would all were well; tis pittie,
And so intending other serious matters,
After distastefull lookes; and these hard Fractions
With certaine halfe-caps, and cold mouing nods,
They froze me into Silence.

Tim. You Gods reward them:

Prythee man looke cheerely. These old Fellowes
Have their ingratitude in them Hereditary:
Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it sildome flows,
'Tis lacke of kindly warmth, they are not kinde,
And Nature, as it growes againe toward earth,
Is fashon'd for the iourney, dull and heavy.
Go to Ventidius (prythee be not sad,
Thou art true, and honest; Ingeniously I speake,
No blame belongs to thee) Ventidius lately
Buried his Father, by whose death hee's stepp'd
Into a great estate. When he was poore,
Imprison'd, and in scarcity of Friends,
I cleer'd him with five Talents. Greet him from me,
Bid him suppose, some good necessity
Touches his Friend, which craues to be remembred
With those five Talents; that had, giue't these Fellowes
To whom 'tis instant due. New'r speake, or thinke,
That Timons fortunes 'mong his Friends can sinke.

Stew. I would I could not thinke it:

That thought is Bounties Foe;
Being free it selfe, it shinkes all others so. Exeunt

Flaminius waiting to speake with a Lord from his Master, enters a servant to him.

Ser I have told my Lord of you, he is comming down to you

Flam. I thanke you Sir

Enter Lucullus.

Ser. Heere's my Lord.

Luc. One of Lord Timons men? A Gist I warrant
Why this hits right I dreamt of a Silver Bason & Ewre to night. Flaminius, honest Flaminius, you are verie respectfully welcome sir. Fill me some Wine. And how does that Honourable, Complete, Free-hearted Gentleman of Athens thy very bountifull good Lord and Mayster?

Flam. His health is well sir.

Luc. I am right glad that his health is well sir: and what hast thou there vnder thy Cloake, pretty Flaminius?

Flam. Faith, nothing but an empty box Sir, which in my Lords behalfe, I come to intreat your Honor to supply: who hauing great and instant occasion to use fiftie Talents, hath sent to your Lordship to furnish him: nothing doubting your present assistance therein.

Luc. La, la, la, la. Nothing doubting sayes hee? Atas good Lord, a Noble Gentleman 'tis, if he would not keep to good a house. Many a time and often I ha din'd with him, and told him on't, and come againe to supper to him of purpose, to haue him spend lesse, and yet he wold embrace no counsell, take no warning by my coming, eue-ry man has his fault, and honesty is his. I ha told him on't, but I could nere get him from't.

Enter Servant with Wine.

Ser Please your Lordship, heere is the Wine.

Luc. Flaminius, I haue noted thee alwayes wise.
Heere's to thee.

Flam. Your Lordship speakes your pleasure.

Luc. I haue obserued thee alwayes for a towardlie prompt spirit, giue thee thy due, and one that knowes what belongs to reason; and canst use the time well, if the time use thee well. Good parts in thee; get you gone fir-
rah. Draw neerer honest Flaminius. Thy Lords a bountifull Gentleman, but thou art wise, and thou know'st well enough (although thou com'st to me) that this is no time to lend money, especially vpon bare friendshippe without securitie. Here's three Solidares for thee, good Boy winke at me, and say thou saw'st mee not. Fare thee well.

Flam. Is't possible the world should so much differ,
And we aliuie that liued? Fly damned basenessse
To him that worships thee

Luc. Ha? Now I see thou art a Foole, and fit for thy Master. Exit L.

Flam. May these adde to the number y may scald thee:
Let moulten Coine be thy damnation,
Thou disease of a friend, and not himselfe:
Has friendship such a faint and milkie heart,
It turnes in lesse then two nightes? O you Gods!
I feele my Masters passion. This Slaue vnto his Master,
Has my Lords meate in him
Why should it thrue, and tume to Nutriment,
When he is turn'd to payson?
O may Diseases onely worke vpon't:
And when he's sick to death, let not that part of Nature
Which my Lord payd for, be of any power
To expell sicknesse, but prolong his hower. Exit.

Enter Lucius with three strangers.

Luc. Who the Lord Timon? He is my very good friend and an Honourable Gentleman.

1 We know him for no lesse, though we are but strangers to him. But I can tell you one thing my Lord, and which I heare from common rumours, now Lord Timons happie howres are done and past, and his estate shrinkes from him.

Lucius. Fye no, doe not belecue it: hee cannot want for money

2 But belecue you this my Lord, that not long agoe, one of his men was with the Lord Lucullus, to borrow so many Talents, nay vrg'd extremly for't, and shewed
what

what necessity belong'd too't, and yet was deny'de.

Luci. How?

2 I tell you, deny'de my Lord.

Luci. What a strange case was that? Now before the Gods I am asham'd on't. Denied that honourable man? There was verie little Honour shew'd in't. For my owne part, I must needs confesse, I haue receyued some small kindnesse from him, as Money, Plate, Jewels, and such like Trifles; nothing comparing to his: yet had hee mistooke him, and sent to me, I should ne're haue denied his Occasion so many Talents.

Enter Seruilius.

Seruil. See, by good hap yonders my Lord, I haue sweet to see his Honor. My Honor'd Lord.

Lucil. Seruilius? You are kindly met sir. Farthwell, commend me to thy Honourable vertuous Lord, my verie exquisite Friend.

Seruil. May it please your Honour, my Lord hath sent——

Luci. Has? what ha's he sent? I am so much endecred to that Lord; hee's euer sending. how shall I thank him think'st thou? And what has he sent now?

Seruil. Has onely sent his present Occasion now my Lord: requesting your Lordship to supply his instant vse with so many Talents

Lucil. I know his Lordship is but merry with me, He cannot want fifty five hundred Talents.

Seruil. But in the mean time he wants lesse my Lord. If his occasion were not vertuous, I should not vrge it halfe so faithfully.

Luc. Dost thou speake seriously Seruilius?

Seruil. Vpon my soule 'tis true Sir.

Luci. What a wicked Beast was I to disfigure my self against such a good time, when I might ha shewn my selfe Honourable? How vnluckily it hapned, that I shold Purchase the day before for a little part, and vndo a great deale of Honour? Seruilius, now before the Gods I am not able to do (the more beast I say) I was sending to vse Lord Timon my selfe, these Gentlemen can witnesse; but I would not for the wealth of Athens I had done't now. Commend me bountifully to his good Lordship, and I hope his Honor will conceiue the fairest of mee, because I haue no power to be kinde And tell him this from me, I count it one of my greatest afflictions say, that I cannot pleasure such an Honourable Gentleman. Good Seruilius, will you befriend mee so farre, as to vse mine owne words to him?

Ser. Yes sir, I shall.

Exit Seruil.

Lucil. Hee looke you out a good turne Seruilius.

True as you said, Timon is shrunk indeede, And he that's once deny'de, will hardly speede. Exit

1 Do you obserue this Hofilius?

2 I, to well.

Why this is the worlds soule,
And iust of the same peece
Is every Flatterers sport: who can call him his Friend
That dips in the same dish? For in my knowing
Timon has bin this Lords Father,
And kep this credit with his purse:
Supported his estate, nay Timons money
Has paid his men their wages. He ne're drinkes,
But Timons Siluer treads vpon his Lip,
And yet, oh see the monstrousnesse of man,
When he looks out in an vngratefull shape;
He does deny him (in respect of his)

What charitable men afford to Beggars.

3 Religion grones at it.

1 For mine owne part, I neuer tasted Timon in my life
Nor came any of his bounties ouer me,
To marke me for his Friend. Yet I protest,
For his right Noble minde, illustrious Vertue,
And Honourable Carriage,
Had his necessity made vse of me,
I would haue put my wealth into Donation,
And the best halfe should haue return'd to him,
So much I loue his heart. But I perceiue,
Men must learne now with pittie to dispence,
For Policy sits about Conscience. Exit.

Enter a third servant with Sempronius, another of Timons Friends.

Semp. Must he needs trouble me in't? Hum.
'Boue all others?

He might haue tried Lord Lucius, or Lucullus,
And now Ventidgius is wealthy too,
Whom he redeem'd from prison. All these
Owes their estates vnto him.

Ser. My Lord,
They haue all bin touch'd, and found Base-Metle,
For they haue all denied him.

Semp. How? Haue they deny'de him?
Has Ventidgius and Lucullus deny'de him,
And does he send to me? Three? Humh?
It shewes but little loue, or iudgement in him.
Must I be his last Refuge? His Friends (like Physicians)
Thriue, giue him ouer. Must I take th' Cure vpon me?
Has much disgrac'd me in't, I'me angry at him,
That might haue knowne my place. I see no sence for't,
But his Occasions might haue wooed me first:
For in my conscience, I was the first man
That ere receiued guist from him.
And does he thinke so backwardly of me now,
That Ile requite it last? No:

So it may proue an Argument of Laughter
To th'rest, and 'mongst Lords be thought a Foole:
I'de rather then the worth of thrice the summe,
Had sent to me first, but for my mindes sake:
I'de such a courage to do him good. But now returne,
And with their faint reply, this answer ioynce;
Who bates mine Honor, shall not know my Coyne. Exit

Ser. Excellent: Your Lordships a goodly Villain the diuell knew not what he did, when hee made man Poli-ticke; he crossed himselfe by't: and I cannot thinke, but in the end, the Villanies of man will set him cleere. How fairly this Lord strues to appeare foule? Takes Vertuous Copies to be wicked: like those, that vnder hotte ardent zeale, would set whole Realmes on fire, of such a nature is his politike loue.

This was my Lords best hope, now all are fled
Saue onely the Gods. Now his Friends are dead.
Doores that were ne're acquainted with their Wards
Many a bounteous yeere, must be employ'd
Now to guard sure their Master:
And this is all a liberall course allowes,
Who cannot keepe his wealth, must keepe his house. Exit.

Enter Varro's man, meeting others. All Timons Creditors to wait for his coming out. Then enter Lucius and Hortensius.

Var. man. Well met, goodmorrow Titus & Hortensius
Titus

Tit. The like to you kinde Varro.

Hort. Lucius, what do we meet together?

Luci. I, and I think one businesse do's command vs all.
For mine is money.

Tit. So is theirs, and ours.

Enter Philotus.

Luci. And sir Philotus too.

Phil. Good day at once.

Luci. Welcome good Brother.

What do you thinke the houre?

Phil. Labouring for Nine

Luci. So much?

Phil. Is not my Lord seene yet?

Luci. Not yet.

Phil. I wonder on't, he was wont to shine at seauen

Luci. I, but the dayes are waxt shorter with him.

You must consider, that a Prodigall course
Is like the Sunnes, but nor like his recoverable, I feare:
'Tis deepest Winter in Lord Timons purse, that is: One may reach deepe enough, and yet finde little.

Phil. I am of your feare, for that

Tit. He shew you how 't obserue a strange euent:
Your Lord sends now for Money?

Hort. Most true, he doe's

Tit. And he weares Jewels now of Timons gisft,
For which I waite for money.

Hort. It is against my heart.

Luci. Marke how strange it shoves,

Timon in this, should pay more then he owes:
And e'ne as if your Lord should weare rich Jewels,
And send for money for 'em.

Hort. I'm weary of this Charge,
The Gods can witness:
I know my Lord hath spent of Timons wealth,
And now Ingratitude, makes it worse then stealth.

Varro. Yes, mine's three thousand Crownes:

What's yours?

Luci. Five thousand mine.

Varro. 'Tis much deepe, and it should seem by 't sum
Your Masters confidence was about mine,
Else surely his had equall'd.

Enter Flaminius.

Tit. One of Lord Timons men

Luci. Flaminius Sir, a word. Pray is my Lord readie to come forth?

Flam. No, indeed he is not.

Tit. We attend his Lordship. pray signifie so much

Flam. I need not tell him that, he knowes you are too
Enter Steward in a Cloake, muffled (diligent.

Luci. Ha: is not that his Steward muffled so?

He goes away in a Clowd. Call him, call him.

Tit. Do you heare, sir?

2 Varro. By your leave, sir.

Stew. What do ye aske of me, my Friend.

Tit. We waite for certaine Money heere, sir.

Stew. I, if Money were as certaine as your waiting.

'Twere sure enough
Why then prefer'd you not your summes and Billes
When your false Masters eate of my Lords meat?
Then they could smile, and fawne vpon his debts,
And take downe th' Interest into their glutt'nous Mawes,
Let do your felues but wrong, to stirre me vp,

You me passe quietly

Believe't, my Lord and I haue made an end,
I haue no more to reckon, he to spend.

Luci. I, but this answer will not serue.

Serv. If't will not serue, 'tis not so base as you,
For you serue Knaues.

1 Varro. How? What dots his easheer'd Worshipp mutter?

2 Varro. No matter what, hee's poore, and that's reuenge enough. Who can speake broader, then hee that has no house to put his head in? Such may rayle against great buildings.

Enter Seruilius.

Tit. Oh heere's Seruilius: now wee shall know some answers.

Seru. If I might beseech you Gentlemen, to repayre some other houre, I should deriue much from't. For tak't of my soule, my Lord leanes wondrously to discontent:
His comfortable temper has forooke him, he's much out of health, and keepes his Chamber.

Luci. Many do keepe their Chambers, are not sicke:
And if it be so farre beyond his health,
Me thinks he should the sooner pay his debts,
And make a cleere way to the Gods.

Seru. Good Gods.

Titus. We cannot take this for answer, sir.

Flaminius within. Seruilius helpe, my Lord, my Lord.

Enter Timon in a rage.

Tim. What, are my dores oppos'd against my passage?
Haue I bin euer free, and must my house
Be my retentive Enemy? My Gaole?
The place which I haue Feasted, does it now
(Like all Mankinde) shew me an Iron heart?

Luci. Put in now Timu.

Tit. My Lord, heere is my Bill.

Luci. Here's mine.

1 Var. And mine, my Lord.

2 Var. And ours, my Lord.

Philo. All our Billes.

Tim. Knocke me downe with 'em, cleaue mee to the Girdle

Luc. Alas, my Lord.

Tim. Cut my heart in summes.

Tit. Mine, fifty Talents.

Tim. Tell out my blood.

Luc. Five thousand Crownes, my Lord.

Tim. Five thousand drops payes that.

What yours? and yours?

1 Var. My Lord.

2 Var. My Lord.

Tim. Teare me, take me, and the Gods fall vpon you.

Exit Timon.

Hort. Faith I perceiue our Masters may throwe their caps at their money, these debts may well be call'd desperate ones, for a madman owes 'em

Exeunt.

Enter Timon.

Timon. They haue e'ne put my breath from mee the slauces. Creditors? Duels.

Stew. My deere Lord.

Tim. What if it should be so?

Stew. My Lord.

Tim. He haue it so. My Steward?

Stew. Heere my Lord.

Tim. So fitly? Go, bid all my Friends againe,
Lucius, Lucullus, and Sempronius V'llersa: All,
He once more feast the Rascals.

Stew. O my Lord, you onely speake from your distracted soule; there's not so much left to, furnish out a moderate Table.

Timon.

Tim. Be it not in thy care:
Go I charge thee, invite them all, let in the tide
Of Knaues once more. my Cooke and Ile prouide. Exeunt

Enter three Senators at one doore, Alcibiades meeting them, with Attendants.

1. Sen. My Lord, you haue my voyce, too't.
The faults Bloody:

'Tis necessary he should dye:

Nothing imboldens sinne so much, as Mercy.

2 Most true, the Law shall bruiſe 'em.

Alc. Honor, health, and compassion to the Senate.

1 Now Captaine.

Alc. I am an humble Sutor to your Vertues;

For pity is the vertue of the Law,
And none but Tyrants vse it cruelly.

It pleases time and Fortune to lye heauie

Vpon a Friend of mine, who in hot blood

Hath stept into the Law: which is past depth

To those that (without heede) do plunge intoo't.

He is a Man (setting his Fate aside) of comely Vertues,

Nor did he soyle the fact with Cowardice,

(And Honour in him, which buyes out his fault)

But with a Noble Fury, and faire spirit,

Seeing his Reputation touch'd to death,

He did oppose his Foe.

And with such sober and vnnoted passion

He did behouue his anger ere 'twas spent,

As if he had but prou'd an Argument

1 Sen. You vndergo too strict a Paradox,

Striuing to make an vgly deed looke faire.

Your words haue tooke such paines, as if they labour'd

To bring Man-slaughter into forme, and set Quarrelling

Vpon the head of Valour; which indeede

Is Valour misbegot, and came into the world,

When Sects, and Factions were newly borne.

Hee's truly Valiant, that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breath,

And make his Wrongs, his Out-sides,

To weare them like his Rayment, carelessly,

And ne're preferre his injuries to his heart,

To bring it into danger.

If Wrongs be euilles, and inforce vs kill,

What Folly 'tis, to hazard life for Ill.

Alc. My Lord.

1. Sen. You cannot make grosse sinnes looke cleare,
To reuenge is no Valour, but to beare.

Alc. My Lords, then vnder fauour, pardon me,
If I speake like a Captaine.

Why do sond men expose themselves to Battell,

And not endure all threats? Sleepe vpon't,

And let the Foes quietly cut their Throats

Without repugnancy? If there be

Such Valour in the bearing, what make wee

Abroad? Why then, Women are more valiant

That stay at home, if Bearing carry it.

And the Ass, more Captaine then the Lyon?

The fellow loaden with Irons, wiser then the Iudge?

If Wisdome be in suffering, Oh my Lords,

As you are great, be pitifully Good,

Who cannot condemne rashnesse in cold blood?

To kill, I grant, is sinnes extreamest Guilt,

But in defence, by Mercy, 'tis most iust.

To be in Anger, is impietie:

But who is Man, that is not Angrie.

Weigh but the Crime with this.

2. Sen. You breath in vaine.

Alc. In vaine?

His seruice done at Lacedemon, and Bizantium,
Were a sufficient briber for his life.

1 What's that?

Alc. Why say my Lords ha's done faire seruice,
And slaine in fight many of your enemies:

How full of valour did he beare himselfe

In the last Conflict, and made plenteous wounds?

2 He has made too much plenty with him:

He's a sworne Riotor, he has a sinne

That often drownes him, and takes his valour prisoner.

If there were no Foes, that were enough

To ouercome him. In that Beastly furie,

He has bin knowne to commit outrages,

And cherrish Factions. 'Tis inferr'd to vs,

His dayes are foule, and his drinke dangerous.

1 He dyes.

Alc. Hard fate: he might haue dyed in warre.

My Lords, if not for any parts in him,

Though his right arme might purchase his owne time,

And be in debt to none: yet more to moue you,

Take my deserts to his, and soyne 'em both.

And for I know, your reuerend Ages loue Security,

Ile pawne my Victories, all my Honour to you

Vpon his good returnes.

If by this Crime, he owes the Law his life,

Why let the Warre receiue't in valiant gore,

For Law is strict, and Warre is nothing more.

1 We are for Law, he dyes, vrge it no more

On height of our displeasure. Friend, or Brother,

He forfeits his owne blood, that spilles another.

Alc. Must it be so? It must not bee:

My Lords, I do beseech you know mee.

2 How?

Alc. Call me to your remembrances.

3 What

Alc. I cannot thinke but your Age has forgot me,

It could not else be, I should proue so base,

To sue and be deny'd such common Grace.

My wounds ake at you.

1 Do you dare our anger?

'Tis in few words, but spacious in effect:

We banish thee for euer.

Alc. Banish me?

Banish your dotage, banish vsurie,

That makes the Senate vgly.

1 If after two dayes shine, Athens containe thee,

Attend our waigher Iudgement.

And not to swell our Spirit,

He shall be executed presently. Exeunt.

Alc. Now the Gods keepe you old enough,

That you may liue

Onely in bone, that none may looke on you.

I'm worse then mad. I haue kept backe their Foes

While they haue told their Money, and let out

Their Coine vpon large interest. I my selfe,

Rich onely in large hurts. All those, for this?

Is this the Balsome, that the vsuring Senat

Powres into Captaines wounds? Banishment.

It comes not ill: I hate not to be banish'd,

It is a cause worthy my Spleene and Furie,

That I may strike at Athens. Ile cheere vp

My discontented Troopes, and lay for hearts;

'Tis Honour with most Lands to be at odds, Exit.
Souldiers should brooke as little wrongs as Gods. Enter

Enter diners Friends at severall doores.

1 The good time of day to you, sir.
2 I also wish it to you: I thinke this Honorable Lord did but try vs this other day.

1 Vpon that were my thoughts trying when wee encountered. I hope it is not so low with him as he made it seeme in the triall of his severall Friends.

2 It should not be, by the perswasion of his new Feasting.

1 I should thinke so. He hath sent mee an earnest inviting, which many my neere occasions did vrgeme to put off but he hath coniu'd mee beyond them, and I must needs appeare.

2 In like manner was I in debt to my importunat businesse, but he would not heare my excuse. I am sorrie, when he sent to borrow of mee, that my Prouision was out.

1 I am sicke of that greefe too, as I vnderstand how all things go.

2 Euery man heares so: what would hee haue borrowed of you?

1 A thousand Peeces.

2 A thousand Peeces?

1 What of you?

2 He sent to me sir — Heere he comes.

Enter Timon and Attendants.

Tim. With all my hearts Gentlemen both; and how fare you?

1 Euer at the best, hearing well of your Lordship.

2 The Swallow follows not Summer more willingly, than we your Lordship.

Tim. Nor more willingly leaues Winter, such Summer Birds are men. Gentlemen, our dinner will not recompence this long stay. Feast your eares with the Musick awhile. If they will fare so harshly o'th' Trumpets sound we shall too't presently.

1 I hope it remains not vnkindely with your Lordship, that I return'd you an empty Messenger.

Tim. O sir, let it not trouble you.

2 My Noble Lord.

Tim. Ah my good Friend, what cheere?

The Banket brought in

2 My most Honorable Lord, I am e'ne sick of shame, that when your Lordship this other day sent to me, I was so vnfortunate a Beggar.

Tim. Thinke not on't, sir.

2 If you had sent but two houres before.

Tim. Let it not cumber your better remembrance. Come bring in all together.

2 All couer'd Dishes

1 Royall Cheare, I warrant you.

2 Doubt not that, if money and the season can yeild it

1 How do you? What's the newes?

2 Alcibiades is banish'd: heare you of it?

Both Alcibiades banish'd?

3 'Tis so, be sure of it.

1 How? Howe

2 I pray you vpon what?

Tim. My worthy Friends, will you draw neere?

3 He tell you more anon. Here's a Noble feast toward

2 This is the old man still.

3 Will hold? Wilt hold?

2 It do's: but time will, and so.

3 I do conceyue.

Tim. Each man to his stoole, with that spurre as hee would to the lip of his Mistress: your dyet shall bee in all places alike. Make not a Citie Feast of it, to let the meat coole, ere we can agree vpon the first place. Sit, sit The Gods require our Thankes.

You great Benefactors, sprinkle our Society with Thankfulness. For your owne givings, make your selues prais'd. But reserve still to giue, lest your Desires be despised. Lend to each man enough, that one needs not lend to another. For were your Godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the Gods. Make the Meate be belov'd, more then the Man that giues it. Let no Assembly of Twenty, be without a score of Villaines. If there sit twelue Women at the Table, let a dozen of them bee as they are. The rest of your Fees, O Gods, the Senators of Athens, together with the common legge of People, what is amisse in them, you Gods; make futeable for destruction. For these my present Friends, as they are to mee nothing, so in nothing blisse them, and so nothing are they welcome.

Vncouer Dogges, and lap

Some speake What do's his Lordship meane?

Some other. I know not.

Timon. May you a better Feast neuer behold You knot of Mouth-Friends: Smoke, & lukewarm water Is your perfection. This is Timons last, Who stucke and spangled you with Flatteries, Washes it off and sprinkles in your faces Your reeking villany. Liue loath'd, and long Most smiling, smooth, drested Parasites, Curteous Destroyers, affable Wolves, meeke Beastes: You Fooles of Fortune, Trencher-friends, Times Flies, Cap and knee-Slaues, vapours, and Minute Larkes. Of Man and Beast, the infinite Maladie Cruel you quite o're. What do'st thou go? Soft, take thy Physicke first; thou too, and thou: Stay I will lend thee money, borrow none. What? All in Motion? Henceforth be no Feast, Whereat a Villaine's not a welcome Guest. Burne house, smoke Athens, henceforth hated be Of Timon Man, and all Humanity.

Exit

Enter the Senators, with other Lords.

1 How now, my Lords?

2 Know you the quality of Lord Timons fury?

3 Push, did you see my Cap?

4 I haue lost my Gowne.

1 He's but a mad Lord, & nought but humors swaies him. He gaue me a Jewell th'other day, and now hee has beate it out of my hat.

Did you see my Jewell?

2 Did you see my Cap.

3 Heere 'tis.

4 Heere lyes my Gowne.

1 Let's make no stay.

2 Lord Timons mad.

3 I feel't vpon my bones.

4 One day he giues vs Diamonds, next day Stones.

Exeunt the Senators

Enter Timon.

Tim. Let me looke backe vpon thee, O thou Wall That girdles in those Wolves, due in the earth, And fence not Athens. Matrons, turne incontinent, Obedience fayle in Children. Slaues and Fooles

 Instruction, Manners, Mysteries, and Trades,
 Degrees, Obseruances, Customes, and Lawes,
 Decline to your confounding contraries.
 And yet Confusion liue. Plagues incident to men,
 Your potent and infectious Feauors, heape
 On Athens ripe for stroke. Thou cold Sciatica,
 Cripple our Senators, that their limbes may halt
 As lamely as their Manners. Lust, and Libertie
 Creepe in the Mindes and Marrowes of our youth,
 That 'gainst the streame of Vertue they may strue,
 And drowne themselves in Riot. Itches, Blaines,
 Sowe all th'Athenian bosomes, and their crop
 Be generall Leprosie: Breath infect breath,
 That their Society (as their Friendship) may
 Be merely poyson. Nothing Ile beare from thee
 But nakednesse, thou detestable Towne;
 Take thou that too, with multiplying Bannes:
Timon will to the Woods, where he shall finde
 Th'vnkindest Beast, more kinder then Mankinde.
 The Gods confound (hearme you good Gods all)
 Th'Athenians both within and out that Wall.
 And graunt as Timon growes, his hate may grow
 To the whole race of Mankinde, high and low.
 Amen.

Enter Steward with two or three Seruants.

1 Heare you M Steward, where's our Master?
 Are we vndone, cast off, nothing remaining?
Stew. Alack my Fellowes, what should I say to you?
 Let me be recorded by the righteous Gods,
 I am as poore as you.

1 Such a House broke?
 So Noble a Master false, all gone, and not
 One friend to take his Fortune by the arme,
 And go along with him.
 2 As we do turne our backs
 From our Companion, throwne into his grane,
 So his Familiars to his buried Fortunes
 Slinke all away, leaue their false vowes with him
 Like empty purses pickt; and his poore selfe
 A dedicated Beggar to the Ayre,
 With his disease, of all shunn'd poeuerty,
 Walkes like contempt alone. More of our Fellowes.

Enter other Seruants.

Stew. All broken Implements of a ruin'd house.
 3 Yet do our hearts weare Timons Liury,
 That see I by our Faces: we are Fellowes still,
 Seruing alike in sorrow: Leak'd is our Barke,
 And we poore Mates, stand on the dying Decke,
 Hearing the Surges threat: we must all part
 Into this Sea of Ayre.

Stew. Good Fellowes all,

The latest of my wealth Ile share among'st you.
 Where euer we shall meeete, for Timons sake,
 Let's yet be Fellowes. Let's shake our heads, and say
 As 'twere a Knell vnto our Masters Fortunes,
 We haue seene better dayes. Let each take some:
 Nay put out all your hands: Not one word more,
 Thus part we rich in sorrow, parting poore.

Embrace and part severall wayes.

Oh the fierce wretchednesse that Glory brings vs!
 Who would not wish to be from wealth exempt,
 Since Riches poeint to Misery and Contempt?
 Who would be so mock'd with Glory, or to liue
 But in a Dreame of Friendship,
 To haue his pompe, and all what state compounds,
 But onely painted like his varnished Friends:
 Poore honest Lord, brought lowe by his owne heart,
 Vndone by Goodnesse: Strange vnusuall blood,
 When mans worst sinne is, He do's too much Good.
 Who then dares to be halfe so kinde agen?
 For Bounty that makes Gods, do still marre Men.
 My dearest Lord, blest to be most accurst,
 Rich onely to be wretched; thy great Fortunes
 Are made thy cheefe Afflictions. Alas (kinde Lord)
 Hee's slung in Rage from this ingratefull Seate
 Of monstrous Friends.
 Nor ha's he with him to supply his life,
 Or that which can command it:
 Ile follow and enquire him out.
 Ile euer serue his minde, with my best will,
 Whilst I haue Gold, Ile be his Steward still.

Exit.

Enter Timon in the woods.

Tim. O blessed breeding Sun, draw from the earth
 Rotten humidity. below thy Sisters Orbe
 Infect the ayre. Twin'd Brothers of one wombe,
 Whose procreation, residence, and birth,
 Scarfe is diuidant touch them with seuerall fortunes,
 The greater scomes the lesser. Not Nature
 (To whom all sores lay siege) can beare great Fortune
 But by contempt of Nature.
 Raise me this Begger, and deny't that Lord,
 The Senators shall beare contempt Hereditary,
 The Begger Native Honor.
 It is the Pastour Lards, the Brothers sides,
 The wirt that makes him leaue who dares? who dares
 In puritie of Manhood stand vp right
 And say, this mans a Flatterer. If one be,
 So are they all: for euerie grize of Fortune
 Is smooth'd by that below. The Learned pate
 Duckes to the Golden Foole All's oblique:
 There 's nothing leuell in our cursed Natures
 But direct villanie. Therefore be abhor'd,
 All Feasts, Societies, and Throngs of men.
 His semblable, yea himselfe Timon disdaines,
 Destruction phang mankind; Earth yeeld me Rootes,
 Who seekes for better of thee, sawce his pallate
 With thy most operant Poyson. What is heere?
 Gold? Yellow, glittering, precious Gold?
 No Gods, I am no idle Votarist,
 Rootes you cleere Heauens. Thus much of this will make Blacke, white; fowle, faire; wrong, right;
 Base, Noble; Old, young; Coward, valiant.
 Ha you Gods! why this? what this, you Gods? why this
 Will lugge your Priests and Seruants from your sides?
 Plucke four mens pillowes from below their heads.

This

This yellow Slaue,
Will knit and breake Religions, blesse th'acurst,
Make the hoare Leprosie adord, place Theeues,
And giue them Title, knee, and approbation
With Senators on the Bench: This is it
That makes the wappen'd Widdow wed againe;
Shee, whom the Spittle-houfe, and vicerous sores,
Would cast the gorge at. This Embalme and Spices
To'th'Aprill day againe. Come damn'd Earth,
Thou common whore of Mankinde, that putteth oddes
Among the rout of Nations, I will make thee
Do thy right Nature. Macrofferre off.
Ha? A Drumme? Th'art quicke,
But yet lie bury thee: Thou'rt go (strong Theefe)
When Gowty keepers of thee cannot stand.
Nay stay thou out for earnest.

Enter Alcibiades with Drumme and Fife in warlike manner, and Phrynia and Timandra

Alc. What art thou there? speake.
Tim. A Beast as thou art The Canker gnaw thy hart
For shewing me againe the eyes of Man.

Alc. What is thy name? Is man so hatefull to thee,
That art thy selfe a Man?

Tim. I am Misanthropos, and hate Mankinde.
For thy part, I do wish thou wert a dogge,
That I might loue thee something.

Alc. I know thee well:
But in thy Fortunes am vnlearn'd, and strange.
Tim. I know thee too, and more then that I know thee
I not desire to know. Follow thy Drumme,
With mans blood paint the ground Gules, Gules:
Religious Cannons, ciuill Lawes are cruell,
Then what should we be? This fell whore of thine,
Hath in her more destruction then thy Sword,
For all her Cherubin looke.

Phrynia. Thy lips rot off.
Tim. I will not kisse thee, then the rot returnes
To thine owne lippes againe.

Alc. How came the Noble Timon to this change?
Tim. As the Moone do's, by wanting light to giue:
But then renew I could not like the Moone,
There were no Sunnes to borrow of.

Alc. Noble Timon, what friendship may I do thee?
Tim. None, but to maintaine my opinion.

Alc. What is it Timon?
Tim. Promise me Friendship, but performe none.
If thou wilt not promise, the Gods plague thee, for thou art a ruan. if thou do'st performe, confound thee, for thou art a man.

Alc. I haue heard in some sort of thy Miseries.
Tim. Thou saw'st them when I had prosperitie.

Alc. I see them now, then was a blessed time
Tim. As thine is now, held with a brace of Harlots.
Timandra. Is this th' Athenian Minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardlully?

Tim. Art thou Timandra? Timandra. Yes.
Tim. Be a whore still, they loue thee not that vse thee, giue them diseases, leauing with thee their Lust. Make vse of thy salt houres, season the slaues for Tubbes and Bathes, bring downe Rose-cheekt youth to the Fubfast, and the Diet.

Timandra. Hang thee Monster.
Alc. Pardon him sweet Timandra, for his wits
Are drown'd and lost in his Calamities.

I haue but little Gold of late, braue Timon,
The want whereof, doth dayly make reuolt
In my penurious Band. I haue heard and greend
How curst Athens, mindelesse of thy worth,
Forgetting thy great deeds, when N ighbour states
But for thy Sword and Fortune trod vpon them.

Tim. I prythee beate thy Drum, and get thee gone.

Alc. I am thy Friend, and p'ty thee deere Timon.
Tim. How dost thou p'ty him whom y dost trouble;
I had rather be alone.

Alc. Why fare thee well:
Heere is some Gold for thee.

Tim. Keepe it, I cannot eate it.

Alc. When I haue laid proud Athens on a heape.

Tim. Warr'st thou 'gainst Athens.

Alc. I Timon, and haue cause.

Tim. The Gods confound them all in thy Conquest,
And thee after, when thou hast Conquer'd.

Alc. Why me, Timon?

Tim. That by killing of Villaines
Thou wast burne to conquer my Country,
Put vp thy Gold. Go on, heeres Gold, go on;
Be as a Plannetary plague, when Ioue
Will o're some high-Vic'd City, hang his poyson
In the sicke ayre - let not thy sword skip ones:
Pitty not honour'd Age for his white Beard,
He is an Vsurer. Strike me the counterfet Matron
It is her habite onely, that is honest,
Her selfe's a Bawd. Let not the Virgins cheekes
Make soft thy trenchant Sword for those Milke pappes
That through the window Barne bore at mens eyes,
Are not within the Lease of pitty writ,
But set them down horrible Traitors. Spare not the Babe
Whose dimpled smiles from Fooles exhaust their mercy;
Thinke it a Bastard, whom the Oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounced, the throat shall cut,
And mince it sans remorse. Swear against Obiects,
Put Armour on thine eares, and on thine eyes,
Whose prooffe, not yels of Mothers, Maides, nor Babes,
Nor sight of Priests in holy Vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a rot There's Gold to pay thy Souldiers,
Make large confusion. and thy fury pent,
Confounded be thy selfe Speake not, be gone.

Alc. Haft thou Gold yet, Ile take the Gold thou giuest me, not all thy Courtesie.

Tim. Dost thou or dost thou not, Heauens curse vpon
thee.

Balth. Giue vs some Gold good Timon, hast y more?
Tim. Enough to make a Whore forswear her Trade,
And to make Whores, a Bawd. Hold vp you Sluts
Your Aprons mountant, you are not Othable,
Although I know you'll swear, terribly swear
Into strong shudders, and to heauenly Agues
Th'immortall Gods that heare you. Spare your Oathes:
Ile trust to your Conditions, be whores still,
And he whose pious breath seekes to conuert you,
Be strong in Whore, allure him, burne him vp,
Let your close fire predominate his smoke,
And be no turne-coats: yet may your paines six months
Be quite contrary. And Thatch
Your poore thin Roofes with burthens of the dead,
(Some that were hang'd) no matter:
Weare them, betray with them; Whore still,
Paint till a horse may myre vpon your face:
A pox of wrinkles.

Balth. Well, more Gold, what then?

h k 2

Beloeue't

Beleeue't that wee'l do any thing for Gold

Tim. Consumptions sowe
In hollow bones of man, strike their sharpe shinnes,
And marre mens spurring. Cracke the Lawyers voyce,
That he may neuer more false Title pleade,
Nor sound his Quillies shrilly Hoare the Flamen.
That scold't against the quality of flesh,
And not beleeues himselfe. Downe with the Nose,
Downe with it flat, take the Bridge quite away
Of him, that his particular to foresee (bald
Smels from the generall weale. Make curld' pate Ruffians
And let the vnscarr'd Braggerts of the Warre
Denie some paine from you. Plague all,
That your Aetiuity may defeat and quell
The course of all Erektion. There's more Gold,
Do you damne others, and let this damne you.
And ditches graue you all.

Both. More counsell with more Money, bounteous
Timon.

Tim. More whore, more Mischeefe first, I haue gi-uen you earnest.

Alc. Strike vp the Drum towards Athens, farewell
Timon : if I thrive well, Ile visit thee againe.

Tim If I hope well, Ile neuer see thee more.

Alc. I neuer did thee harme

Tim. Yes, thou spok'st well of me

Alc. Call'st thou that harme?

Tim. Men dayly finde it. Get thee away,
And take thy Beagles with thee.

Alc. We but offend him, strike.

Exeunt.

Tim. That Nature being sicke of mans vnkindnesse
Should yet be hungry. Common Mother, thou
Whose wombe vnmeasureable, and infinite brei't
Teemes and feeds all whose selfesame Mettle
Whereof thy proud Childe (arrogant man) is pufft,
Engenders the blacke Toad, and Adder blew,
The gilded Newt, and eyelesse venom'd Worme,
With all th'abhorred Birtns below Crispe Heauen,
Whereon Hyperions quickning fire doth shine:
Yeeld him, who all the humane Sonnes do hate,
From forth thy plenteous bosome, one poore roote:
Enseare thy Fertile and Conception wombe,
Let it no more bring out ingratefull man.
Goe great with Tygers, Dragons, Wolves, and Beares,
Teeme with new Monsters, whom thy upward face
Hath to the Marbled Mansion all about
Neuer presented. O, a Root, deare thanks:
Dry vp thy Marrowes, Vines, and Plough-torne Leas,
Whereof ingratefull man with Licourish draughts
And Morfels Vnctious, greases his pure minde,
That from it all Consideration slippes —

Enter Apemantus.

More man? Plague, plague.

Alc. I was directed hither. Men report,
Thou dost affect my Manners, and dost vse them.

Tim Tis then, because thou dost not keepe a dogge
Whom I would imitate. Consumption catch thee.

Alc. This is in thee a Nature but infected,
A poore vnmanly Melancholly sprung
From change of future. Why this Spade? this place?
This Slaue-like Habit, and these lookes of Care?
Thy Flatterers yet weare Silke, drinke Wine, lye soft,
Hugge their diseas'd Perfumes, and haue forgot
That euer Timon was. Shame not these Woods,
By putting on the cunning of a Carper
Be thou a Flatterer now, and seeke to thrive

By that which ha's vndone thee; hindge thy knee,
And let his very breath whom thou'lt obserue
Blow off thy Cap: praise his most vicious straine,
And call it excellent: thou wast told thus:

Thou gau'st thine eares (like Tapsters, that bad welcom)
To Knaues, and all approachers: 'Tis most iust
That thou turne Rascall, had'st thou wealth againe,
Rascals should haue't. Do not assume my likenesse.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'de throw away my selfe.

Alc. Thou hast cast away thy selfe, being like thy self
A Madman so long, now a Foole: what think'st
That the bleake ayre, thy boysterous Chamberlaine
Will put thy shirt on warme? Will these moyst Trees,
That haue out-liu'd the Eagle, paye thy heeles
And skip when thou point'st out? Will the cold brooke
Candied with Ice, Cawdle thy Morning taste
To cure thy o're-nights surfer? Call the Creatures,
Whose naked Natures liue in all the spight
Of wrekefull Heauen, whose bare vnhus'd Trunkes,
To the conflicting Elements expos'd
Answer meere Nature: bid them flatter thee.

O thou shalt finde.

Tim. A Foole of thee. depart.

Alc. I loue thee better now, then ere I did

Tim. I hate thee worse.

Alc. Why?

Tim. Thou flatter'st misery.

Alc. I flatter not, but say thou art a Caytiffe.

Tim. Why do'st thou seeke me out?

Alc. To vex thee.

Tim. Alwayes a Villaines Office, or a Fooles.
Dost please thy selfe in't?

Alc. I.

Tim. What, a Knaue too?

Alc. If thou did'st put this sowre cold habit on
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well: but thou
Dost it enforcedly: Thou dost Courtier be againe
Wert thou not Beggar. willing misery/
Out-lives' incertaine pompe, is crown'd before:
The one is filling still, neuer complet.
The other, at high wish: best state Contentlesse,
Hath a distracted and most wretched being,
Worse then the worst Content.

Thou should'st desire to dye, being miserable.

Tim. Not by his breath, that is more miserable
Thou art a Slaue, whom Fortunes tender arme
With fauour neuer claspt but bred a Dogge.
Had'st thou like vs from our first swarth proceeded,
The sweet degrees that this breefe world affords,
To such as may the passiuie drugges of it
Freely command'st: thou would'st haue plung'd thy self
In generall Riot, melted downe thy youth
In different beds of Lust, and neuer learn'd
The Icie precepts of respect, but followed
The Sugred game before thee. But my selfe,
Who had the world as my Confectionarie,
The mouthes, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts of men,
At duty more then I could frame employment;
That numberlesse vpon me stuck, as leaues
Do on the Oake, haue with one Winters brist
Fell from their boughes, and left me open, bare,
For euery storme that blowes. I to beare this,
That neuer knew but better, is some burthen.
Thy Nature, did commence in sufferance, Time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why should'st thou hate Men?
They neuer flatter'd thee. What hast thou giuen?

If

If thou wilt curse; thy Father (that poore ragge)
Must be thy subiect; who in spight put stuffe
To some shee-Begger, and compounded thee
Poore Rogue, hereditary. Hence, be gone,
If thou hadst not bene borne the worst of men,
Thou hadst bene a Knaue and Flatterer.

Ape Art thou proud yet?

Tim I, that I am not thee.

Ape I, that I was no Prodigall.

Tim I, that I am one now.

Were all the wealth I haue shut vp in thee,
I'd giue thee leaue to hang it. Get thee gone:
That the whole life of Athens were in this,
Thus would I eate it.

Ape Heere, I will mend thy Feast.

Tim First mend thy company, take away thy selfe

Ape So I shall mend me owne, by th'lacke of thine

Tim 'Tis not well mended so, it is but botchy;

If not, I would it were

Ape What would'st thou haue to Athens?

Tim Thee thither in a whirlwind. if thou wilt,
Tell them there I haue Gold, looke, so I haue.

Ape Heere is no vse for Gold.

Tim The best, and truest

For heere it sleepest, and do's no hyred harme.

Ape Where lyest thou, Timon?

Tim Vnder that's about me.

Where feed'st thou a dayes Apemantus

Ape Where my stomacke findes meate, or rather where I eate it

Tim Would poyson were obedient & knew my mind

Ape Where would'st thou send it?

Tim To sawce thy dishes.

Ape The middle of Humanity thou neuer knewest, but the extremitie of both ends. When thou wast in thy Gill, and thy Perfume, they mockt thee for too much Curiositie. in thy Raggess thou knowst none, but art despis'd for the contrary. There's a medler for thee, eate it.

Tim On what I haue, I feed not.

Ape Do'st hate a Medler?

Tim I, though it looke like thee.

Ape And th'hadst hated Medlers sooner, 't should'st haue loued thy selfe better now. What man didd'st thou euer know vnthrift, that was beloued after his meane?

Tim Who without those meanes thou talk'st of, didst thou euer know belou'd?

Ape My selfe.

Tim I vnderstand thee: thou had'st some meanes to keepe a Dogge.

Apem. What things in the world canst thou needest compare to thy Flatterers?

Tim Women needest, but men men are the things themselves. What would'st thou do with the world Apemantus, if it lay in thy power?

Ape Giue it the Beasts, to be rid of the men.

Tim Would'st thou haue thy selfe fall in the confusion of men, and remaine a Beast with the Beasts.

Ape I Timon

Tim A beastly Ambition, which the Goddess graunt thee attaine to. If thou wert the Lyon, the Foxe would beguile thee: if thou wert the Lambe, the Foxe would eate thee: if thou wert the Fox, the Lion would suspect thee, when peradventure thou wert accus'd by the Asse:
If thou wert the Asse, thy dunghill would torment thee;
and still thou liu'dst but as a Breakfast to the Wolfe. If thou wert the Wolfe, thy greedinesse would afflict thee,

& oft thou should'st hazard thy life for thy dinner. Wert thou the Vnicorne, pride and wrath would confound thee, and make thine owne selfe the conquest of thy fury.
Wert thou a Beare, thou would'st be kill'd by the Horse:
wert thou a Horse, thou would'st be seiz'd by the Leopard: wert thou a Leopard, thou wert Germane to the Lion, and the spotted of thy Kindred, wert Iurors on thy life. All thy safety were remotion, and thy defence absence. What Beast could'st thou bee, that were not subiect to a Beast: and what a Beast art thou already, that seest not thy losse in transformation.

Ape If thou could'st please me
With speaking to me, thou might'st
I haue hit vpon it heere
The Common wealth of Athens, is become A Forrest of Beasts.

Tim How ha'st the Asse broke the wall, that thou art out of the Citie.

Ape Yonder comes a Poet and a Painter.
The plague of Company light vpon thee.
I will feare to catch it, and giue wry.
When I know not what else to do,
Ile see thee againe.

Tim When there is nothing liuing but thee,
Thou shalt be welcome
I had rather be a Beggers Dogge,
Then Apemantus.

Ape Thou art the Cap
Of all the Fooles alie.

Tim Would thou wert cleane enough
To spit vpon.

Ape A plague on thee,
Thou art too bad to curse.

Tim All Villaines
That do stand by thee, are pure.

Ape There is no Leprosie,
But what thou speak'st

Tim If I name thee, Ile beate thee;
But I should infect my hands.

Ape I would my tongue
Could rot them off.

Tim Away thou issue of a mangie dogge,
Choller does kill me,

That thou art alie, I swoond to see thee.
Ape Would thou would'st burst.

Tim Away thou tedious Rogue, I am sorry I shall lose a stone by thee,

Ape Beast.

Tim Slaue.

Ape Toad.

Tim Rogue, Rogue, Rogue.

I am sicke of this false world, and will loue nought
But euen the meere necessitiues vpon't:
Then Timon presently prepare thy graue.
Lye where the light Forme of the Sea may beate
Thy graue stone dayly, make thine Epitaph,
That death in me, at others liues may laugh.
O thou sicke King-killer, and deare diuorce
Twixt naturall Sunne and fire: thou bright defiler of Himans purest bed, thou valiant Mars,
Thou euer, yong, fresh, loued, and delicate wooer,
Whose blush doth thawe the consecrated Snow
That lyeth on Dian's lap.
Thou visible God,
That should'st close Impossibilitie,
And mak'st them kisse, that speak'st with euery Tongue

To euerie purpose O thou touch of hearts,
Thinke thy slaue-man rebels, and by thy vertue
Set them into confounding oddes, that Beasts
May haue the world in Empire.

Ape. Would'twere so,
But not till I am dead. Ile say th'hast Gold.
Thou wilt be throng'd too shortly

Tim. Throng'd too?

Ape. I.

Tim. Thy backe I prythee.

Ape. Liue, and loue thy misery.

Tim. Long liue so, and so dyc. I am quit.

Ape. Mo things like men,
Eate Timon, and abhorre then. Exit Apeman.

Enter the Bandetts.

1 Where should he haue this Gold? It is some poore Fragment, some slender Ort of his remainder: the meere want of Gold, and the falling from of his Friendes, droue him into this Melancholly.

2 It is nois'd
He hath a masse of Treasure

3 Let vs make the assay vpon him, if he care not for't, he will supply vs easily. if he couetously referue it, how shall's get it?

2 True: for he beares it not about him:
'Tis hid.

1 Is not this hee?

All. Where?

2 'Tis his description.

3 He? I know him.

All. Saue thee Timon.

Tim. Now Theeues.

All. Soldiers, not Theeues.

Tim. Both too, and womens Sonnes.

All. We are not Theeues, but men
That much do want.

Tim. Your greatest want is, you want much of meat:
Why should you want? Behold, the Earth hath Rootes:
Within this Mile breake forth a hundred Springs:
The Oakes beare Mast, the Briars Scarlet Heps,
The bounteous Huswife Nature, on each bush,
Layes her full Messe before you. Want? why Want?

1 We cannot liue on Grasse, on Berries, Water,
As Beasts, and Birds, and Fishes.

Ti. Nor on the Beasts themselues, the Birds & Fishes,
You must eate men. Yet thanks I must you con,
That you are Theeues protest that you worke not
In holier shapes: For there is boundlesse Theft
In limited Professions. Rascall Theeues

Heere's Gold Go, sucke the subtle blood o'th' Grape,
Till the high Feauor seeth your blood to froth,
And so scape hanging. Trust not the Physitian,

His Antidotes are poyson, and he slayes
Moe then you Rob: Take wealth, and liues together,
Do Villaine-do, since you protest to doo't.

Like Workemen, Ile example you with Theuery:
The Sunnes a Theefe, and with his great attraction
Robbes the vaste Sea. The Moones an arrant Theefe,
And her pale fire, she snatches from the Sunne.

The Seas a Theefe, whose liquid Surge, resolues
The Moone into Salt teares The Earth's a Theefe,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stoine
From gen'rall excrement: each thing's a Theefe.

The Lawes, your curbe and whip, in their rough power

Ha's vncheek'd Theft. Loue not your selues, away,
Rob one another, there's more Gold, cut throates,
All that you meete are Theeues. to Athens go,
Breake open shoppes, nothing can you steale
But Theeues do loose it. Steale lesse, for this I giue you,
And Gold confound you howsoere Amen.

3 Has almost charm'd me from my Profession, by perswading me to it.

1 'Tis in the malice of mankind, that he thus aduises vs not to haue vs thriue in our mystery.

2 Ile beleue him as an Enemy,
And giue ouer my Trade.

1 Let vs first see peace in Athens, there is no time so miserable, but a man may be true. Exit Theeues.

Enter the Steward to Timon.

Stew. Oh you Gods!

Is yon'd despis'd and ruinous man my Lord?
Full of decay and sayling? Oh Monument
And wonder of good deeds, euilly bestow'd!
What an alteration of Honor has desp'rate want made?
What vilder thing vpon the earth, then Friends,
Who can bring Noblest mindes, to basest ends.
How rarely does it meete with this times guise,
When man was wisht to loue his Enemies:
Grant I may euer loue, and rather woo
Those that would mischeefe me, then those that doo.
Has caught me in his eye, I will present my honest griefe vnto him; and as my Lord, still serue him with my life.
My deereft Master.

Tim. Away: what art thou?

Stew. Haue you forgot me, Sir?

Tim. Why dost aske that? I haue forgot all men.
Then, if thou grunt'st, th'art a man.
I haue forgot thee.

Stew. An honest poore seruant of yours.

Tim. Then I know thee not:
I neuer had honest man about me, I all
I kept were Knaues, to serue in meate to Villaines

Stew. The Gods are witness,
Neu'r did poore Steward weare a truer greefe
For his yndone Lord, then mine eyes for you.

Tim. What, dost thou weepe?
Come neerer, then I loue thee
Because thou art a woman, and disclaim'st
Flinty mankind whose eyes do neuer giue,
But thorow Lust and Laughter. pittie's sleeping.
Strange times y weepe with laughing, not with weeping.

Stew. I begge of you to know me, good my Lord,
T'accept my greefe, and whil'st this poore wealth lasts,
To entertaine me as your Steward still.

Tim. Had I a Steward
So true, so iust, and now so comfortable?
It almost turnes my dangerous Nature wilde.
Let me behold thy face. Surely, this man
Was borne of woman.

Forgiue my generally, and exceptlesse rashnesse
You perpetuall sober Gods. I do proclaime
One honest man: Mistake me not, but one:
No more I pray, and hee's a Steward.
How faine would I haue hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thy selfe. But all saue thee,
I fell with Curses.
Me thinkes thou art more honest now, then wise:
For, by oppressing and betraying mee,

Thou

Thou might'st haue sooner got another Seruice :
For many so arrive at second Masters,
Vpon their first Lords necke. But tell me true,
(For I must euer doubt, though ne're so sure)
Is not thy kindnesse subtle, couctous,
If not a Vsur-ing kindnesse, and as rich men deale Guists,
Expecting in returne twenty for one ?

Stew. No my most worthy Master, in whose brest
Doubt, and suspect (alas) are plac'd too late:
You should haue fear'd false times, when you did Feast.
Suspect still comes, where an estate is least.
That which I shew, Heauen knowes, is meere ly Loue,
Dutie, and Zeale, to your vnmatch'd minde;
Care of your Food and Liuing, and belecue it,
My most Honour'd Lord,

For any benefit that points to mee,
Either in hope, or present, I'de exchange
For this one wish, that you had power and wealth
To requite me, by making rich your selfe.

Tim. Looke thee, 'tis so thou singly honest man,
Heere take the Gods out of my miserie
Ha's sent thee Treasure. Go, liue rich and happy,
But thus condition'd. Thou shalt build from men
Hate all, curse all, shew Charity to none,
But let the famisht flesh slide from the Bone,
Ere thou releue the Begger. Gue to dogges
What thou denyest to men. Let Prisons swallow 'em,
Debts wither 'em to nothing, be men like blasted woods
And may Diseases lick vp their false bloods,
And so farewell, and thrive.

Stew. O let me stay, and comfort you, my Master.

Tim. If thou ha'st Curses
Stay not flye, whil'st thou art blest and free.
Ne're see thou man, and let me ne're see thee. Exit

Enter Poet, and Painter.

Pain. As I tooke note of the place, it cannot be farre
where he abides.

Poet. What's to be thought of him ?
Does the Rumor hold for true,
That hee's so full of Gold ?

Painter. Certaine
Alcibiades reports it. Phryca and Timandyllo
Had Gold of him. He likewise enrich'd
Poore stragling Souldiers, with great quantity.
'Tis faide, he gaue vnto his Steward
A mighty summe.

Poet. Then this breaking of his,
Ha's beene but a Try for his Friends ?

Painter. Nothing else.
You shall see him a Palme in Athens againe,
And flourish with the highest :
Therefore, 'tis not amisse, we tender our loues
To him, in this suppos'd distresse of his :
It will shew honestly in vs,
And is very likely, to loade our purposes
With what they traualle for,
If it be a iust and true report, that goes
Of his hauing.

Poet. What haue you now
To present vnto him ?

Painter. Nothing at this time
But my Visitation : onely I will promise him
An excellent Peece.

Poet. I must serue him so too :
Tell him of an intent that's coming toward him.

Painter. Good as the best.

Promising, is the verie Ayre o'th' Time ;
It opens the eyes of Expectation.
Performance, is euer the duller for his acte,
And but in the plainer and simpler kinde of people,
The deede of Saying is quite out of vse.
To Promise, is most Courtly and fashionable ;
Performance, is a kinde of Will or Testament
Which argues a great sicknesse in his iudgement
That makes it.

Enter Timon from his Cave

Timon. Excellent Workeman,
Thou canst not paint a man so Ladde
As is thy selfe

Poet. I am thinking
What I shall say I haue prouided for him :
It must be a personation of himselfe
A Satyre against the softnesse of Prosperity,
With a Discoverie of the infinite Flatteries
That follow youth and opulencie.

Timon. Must thou needes
Stand for a Villaine in thine owne Worke ?
Wilt thou whip thine owne faults in other men ?
Do so, I haue Gold for thee

Poet. Nay let's seeke him.
Then do we sinne against our owne estate,
When we may profit meeete, and come too late

Painter. True.
When the day serues before blacke-corner'd night ;
I finde what thou want'st, by free and offer'd light.
Come.

Tim. He meeete you at the turne.
What a Gods Gold, that he is worshipt
In a baser Temple, then where Swine feede ?
'Tis thou that rigg'st the Barke, and plow'st the Fome,
Setlest admired reuerence in a Slaue,
To thee be worshipt, and thy Saints for aye
Be crown'd with Plagues, that thee alone obay.
Fit I meet them

Poet. Haile worthy Timon
Pain. Our late Noble Master.

Timon. Haue I once liu'd
To see two honest men ?

Poet. Sir.
Hauing often of your open Bounty tasted,
Hearing you were retyr'd, your Friends false off,
Whose thanklesse Natures (O abhorred Spirits)
Not all the Whippes of Heauen, are large enough
What, to you,
Whose Starre-like Noblenesse gaue life and influence
To their whole being ? I am rapt, and cannot couer
The monstrous bulke of this Ingratitude
With any lize of words.

Timon. Let it go,
Naked men may see't the better.
You that are honest, by being what you are,
Make them best seene, and knowne.

Pain. He, and my selfe
Haue traual'd in the great showre of your guists,
And sweetly felt it.

Timon. I, you are honest man

Painter. We are hither come
To offer you our seruice.

Timon. Most honest men:

Why

Why how shall I requite you?

Can you eate Roots, and drinke cold water, not

Both. What we can do,

Wee'l do to do you seruice.

Tim. Y'are honest men,

Y haue heard that I haue Gold,

I am sure you haue, speake truth, y'are honest men.

Pam. So it is said my Noble Lord, but therefore Came not my Friend, nor I.

Timon. Good honest men- Thou draw'st a counterfet Best in all Athens, th'art indeed the best, Thou counterfet'st most liuely.

Pam. So, so, my Lord.

Tim. Ene so far as I say. And for thy fiction, Why thy Verse swells with stuffe so fine and smooth, That thou art euen Naturall in thine Art.

But for all this (my honest Natur'd friends)

I must needs say you haue a little fault,

Marry 'tis not monstrous in you, neither with I

You take much paines to mend.

Both. Beseech your Honour

To make it knowne to vs.

Tim. You'l take it ill.

Both. Most thankfully, my Lord.

Timon. Will you indeed?

Both. Doubt it not worthy Lord.

Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a Knaue, That mightily deceiues you.

Both. Do we, my Lord?

Tim. I, and you heare him cogge, See him dissemble,

Know his grosse patchery, loue him, feede him,

Keepe in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd

That he's a made-up Villaine.

Pam. I know none such, my Lord.

Pam. Nor I.

Timon. Looke you,

I loue you well, Ile giue you Gold

Rid me these Villaines from your companies;

Hang them, or stab them, drowne them in a daught,

Confound them by some course, and come to me,

Ile giue you Gold enough.

Both. Name them n y Lord, let's know them.

Tim. You that way, and you this:

But two in Company:

Each man apart, all single, and alone,

Yet an arch Villaine keepe him company:

If where thou art, two Villaines shall not be,

Come not neere him. If thou would'st not recide

But where one Villaine is, then him abandon.

Hence, packe, there's Gold, you came for Gold ye slaues:

You haue worke for me; there's payment, hence,

You are an Alcumist, make Gold of that:

Our Rascall dogges.

Exeunt

Enter Steward, and two Senators.

Stew. It is vaine that you would speake with Timon: For he is set so onely to himselfe, That nothing but himselfe, which lookes like man, Is friendly with him.

1 Sen. Bring vs to his Cave.

It is our part and promise to th'Athenians To speake with Timon

2 Sen. At all times alike

Men are not still the same: 'twas Time and Greece

That fram'd him thus. Time with his fairer hand, Offering the Fortunes of his former dayes, The former man may make him: bring vs to him And chanic'd it as it may.

Stew. Heere is his Cave:

Peace and content be heere. Lord Timon, Timon, Looke out, and speake to Friends Th'Athenians By two of their most reuerend Senate greet thee: Speake to them Noble Timon.

Enter Timon out of his Cave.

Tim. Thou Sunne that comforts burne, I Speake and be hang'd: For each true word, a blister, and each false Be as a Cantherizing to the root o'th'Tongue, Consuming it with speaking.

1 Worthy Timon.

Tim. Of none but such as you, And you of Timon.

1 The Senators of Athens, greet thee Timon.

Tim. I thanke them, And would send them backe the plague, Could I but catch it for them.

1 O forget

What we are sorry for our selues in thee: The Senators, with one consent of loue, Intreate thee backe to Athens, who haue thought On speciall Dignities, which vacante lyce For thy best vse and wearing.

2 They confesse

Toward thee, forgetfulness too generall grosse; Which now the publike Body, which doth sildome Play the re-canter, feeling in it selfe A lacke of Timons ayde, hath since withall Of it owne fall, restraining ayde to Timon, And send forth vs, to make their sorrowed render, Together, with a recompence more fruitfull Then their offence can weigh downe by the Dramme, I euen such heapes and summes of Loue and Wealth, As shall to thee blot out, what wrongs were theirs, And write in thee the figures of their loue, Euer to read them shine.

Tim. You witch me in it;

Surprize me to the very brinke of teares; Lend me a Fooles heart, and a womans eyes, And Ile beweepe these comforts, worthy Senators.

1 Therefore so please thee to returne with vs, And of our Athens, thine and ours to take The Captainship, thou shalt be met with thanks, Allowed with absolute power, and thy good name I iue with Authority: so soone we shall drue backe Of Alcibiades th'approacher wild, Who like a Bore too sauage, doth root vp His Countries peate.

2 And shakes his threatening Sword Against the walles of Athens.

1 Therefore Timon.

Tim. Well sir, I will. therefore I will sir thus: If Alcibiades kill my Countrymen, Let Alcibiades know this of Timon, That Timon cares not, But if he sacke faire Athens, And take our goodly aged men by th'Beards, Giuing our holy Virgins to the flame Of contumelious, beastly, mad, brain'd warre: Then let him know, and tell him Timon speaks it,

In

In pittie of our aged, and our youth,
I cannot choose but tell him that I care not,
And let him tak't at worst. For their Knives care not,
While you haue throats to answer. For my selfe,
There's not a whittle, in th'vnruly Campe,
But I do prize it at my loue, be'ore
The reuerends Throat in Athens. So I leaue you
To the protection of the prosperous Gods,
As Theeues to Keepers

Stew. Stay not, all's in vaine.

Tim. Why I was writing of my Epitaph,
It will be seene to morrow. My long sicknesse
Of Health, and Liuing, now begins to mend,
And nothing brings me all things. Go, liue still,
Be Alcibiades your plague; you his,
And last so long enough.

1 We speake in vaine.

Tim. But yet I loue my Country, and am not
One that reioyces in the common wracke,
As common brute doth put it.

1 That's well spoke.

Tim. Commend me to my louing Countrey men

1 These words become your lippes as they passe thow them.

2 And enter in our eares, like great Triumphers
In their applauding gates.

Tim. Commend me to them,
And tell them, that to ease them of their greefes,
Their feares of Hostile strokes, their Acres losses,
Their pangs of Loue, with other incident throwes
That Natures fragile Vessell doth sustaine
In lifes vncertaine voyage, I will some kindpes do them;
He teach them to preuent wilde Alcibiades wrath.

1 I like this well, he will returne againe.

Tim. I haue a Tree which growes heere in my Close,
That mine owne vse inuites me to cut downe,
And shortly must I sell it. Tell my Friends,
Tell Athens, in the sequence of degree,
From high to low throughout, that who so please
To stop Affliction, let him take his haste;
Come hither ere my Tree hath felt the Axe,
And hang himselfe. I pray you do my greeting.

Stew. Trouble him no further, thus you still shall Finde him.

Tim. Come not to me againe, but say to Athens,
Timon hath made his everlasting Mansion
Vpon the Beached Verge of the salt Flood,
Who once a day with his embossed Froth
The turbulent Surge shall couer; thither come,
And let my graue-stone be your Oracle.
Lippes, let foure words go by; and Language end:
What is amisse, Plague and Infection mend.
Graues onely be mens workes, and Death their game;
Sunne, hide thy Beames, Timon hath done his Raigne.

Exit Timon.

1 His discontentes are vnremoueably coupled to Nature.

2 Our hope in him is dead let vs returne,
And straine what othet meanes is left vnto vs
In our deere perill

1 It requires swift foot.

Exeunt.

Enter two other Senators, with a Messenger.

1 Thou hast painfully discover'd .are his Files
As full as thy report?

Mef. I haue spoke the least.

Besides his expedition promises present approach.

2 We stand much hazard, if they bring not Timon.

Mef. I met a Currier, one mine ancient Friend,
Whom though in generall part we were oppos'd,
Yet our old loue made a particular force,
And made vs speake like Friends. This man was riding
From Alcibiades to Timon's Caue,
With Letters of intreaty, which imported
His Fellowship i'th' cause against your City,
In part for his sake moud.

Enter the other Senators

1 Heere come our Brothers.

3 No talke of Timon, nothing of him expect,
The Enemies Drumme is heard, and fearefull scouring
Doth choake the ayre with dust. In, and prepare,
Ours is the fall I feare, our Foes the Snare. Exeunt

Enter a Souldier in the Words seeking Timon.

Sol. By all description this should be the place.
Whose heere? Speake ho! No answer? What is this?
Timon is dead, who hath out-stretcht his span,
Some Beast reade this; There do's not lue a Man.
Dead sure, and this his Graue, what's on this Tomb,
I cannot read. the Charracter He take with wax,
Our Captaine hath in euery figure skill;
An ag'd Interpreter, though young in dayes:
Before proud Athens hee's set downe by this,
Whose fall the marke of his Ambition is. Exit

Trumpets found. Enter Alcibiades with his Powers before Athens.

Alc. Sound to this Coward, and lasciuious Towne,
Our terrible approach.

Sounds a Parly.

The Senators appeare vpon the wals.

Till now you haue gone on, and fill'd the time
With all Licentious measure, making your willes
The scope of lustice. Till now, my selfe and such As slept within the shadow of your power
Haue vander'd with our trauerst Armes, and breath'd
Our sufferance vainly. Now the time is flush,
When crouching Marrow in the bearer strong
Cries (of it selfe) no more. Now breathlesse wrong,
Shall sit and pant in your great Chaires of ease,
And pursue Insolence shall breake his winde
With feare and horrid flight.

1. Sen. Noble, and young;

When thy first greefes were but a meere conceit,
Ere thou had'st power, or we had cause of feare,
We sent to thee, to gree thy rages Balme,
To wipe out our Ingratitude, with Loues
About their quantitie.

2 So did we woore

Transformed Timon, to our Citties loue
By humble Message, and by promist meanes:
We were not all vnkinde, nor all deserue
The common stroke of warre.

1 These walles of ours,
Were not erected by their hands, from whom
You haue receyvd your greefe. Nor are they such,
That these great Towres, Trophies, & Schools shold fail
For priuate faults in them.

2 Nor are they liuing

Who

Who were the motives that you first went out,
(Shame that they wanted, cunning in excess)
Hath broke their hearts. March, Noble Lord,
Into our City with thy Banners spread,
By decimation and a tythed death;
If thy Reuenges hunger for that Food
Which Nature loathes, take thou the destin'd tenth,
And by the hazard of the spotted dye,
Let dye the spotted.

1 All haue not offended:

For those that were, it is not square to take
On those that are, Reuenge. Crimes, like Lands
Are not inherited, then deere Countryman,
Bring in thy rinkes; but leaue without thy rage,
Spare thy Athenian Cradle, and those Kin
Which in the bluster of thy wrath must fall
With those that haue offended, like a Shepheard,
Approach the Fold, and cull th'infected forth,
But kill not altogether.

2 What thou wilt,
Thou rather shalt inforce it with thy smile,
Then hew too't, with thy Sword.

1 Set but thy foot
Against our rampyr'd gates, and they shall ope:
So thou wilt send thy gentle heart before,
To say thou'lt enter Friendly.

2 Throw thy Gloue,
Or any Token of thine Honour else,
That thou wilt vse the warres as thy redresse,
And not as our Confusion: All thy Powers
Shall make their harbour in our Towne, till wee
Haue seal'd thy full desire.

Alc. Then there's my Gloue,
Defend and open your vncharged Ports,

Those Enemies of Timon, and mine owne
Whom you your selues shall set out for reproofe,
Fall and no more; and to atone your feares
With my more Noble meaning, not a man
Shall passe his quarter, or offend the streame
Of Regular Iustice in your Citties bounds,
But shall be remedied to your publique Lawes
At heauiest answer.

Both. 'Tis most Nobly spoken.

Alc. Descend, and keepe your words.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. My Noble Generall, Timon is dead,
Entomb'd vpon the very hemme o'th'Sea,
And on his Grauestone, this Insculpture which
With wax I brought away: whose soft Impression
Interprets for my poore ignorance.

Alcibiades reads the Epitaph.

Here lies a wretched Course, of wretched Soules bereft,
Seek not my name: A Plague consume you, wicked Cautifs left!
Here lye I Timon, who aliue, all liuing men did hate,
Passe by, and curse thy fil, but passe and stay not here thy gate.
These well expresse in thee thy latter spirits.
Though thou abhorrd'st in vs our humane gnefes,
Scornd'st our Braines flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard Nature fall; yet Rich Conceit
Taught thee to make vast Neptune weepe for aye
On thy low Graue, on fautes forgiven Dead
Is Noble Timon, of whose Memorie
Heeres after more. Bring me into your Citie,
And I will vse the Olive, with my Sword:
Make war breed peace; make peace stint war, make each
Prescribe to other, as each others Leach.
Let our Drummes strike.

Ex. omnes.

Enter Flavius, Murellus, and certaine Commoners ouer the Stage.

Flavius.

Hence home you idle Creatures, get you home
Is this a Holiday? What, know you not (Being Mechanical) you ought not walke
Vpon a labouring day, without the signe
Of your Profession? Speake, what Trade art thou?

Car. Why Sir, a Carpenter.

Mur. Where is thy Leather Apron, and thy Rule?
What dost thou with thy best Apparrell on?
You sir, what Trade are you?

Cob. Truly Sir, in respect of a fine Workman, I am but as you would say, a Cöbler.

Mur. But what Trade art thou? Answer me directly

Cob. A Trade Sir, that I hope I may vie, with a safe Conscience, which is indeed Sir, a Mender of bad soules

Fla. What Trade thou knaue? Thou naughty knaue, what Trade?

Cob. Nay I beseech you Sir, be not out with me: yet
if you be our Sir, I can mend you.

Mur. What meanst thou by that? Mend mee, thou fawcy Fellow?

Cob. Why sir, Cobble you

Fla. Thou art a Cöbler, art thou?

Cob. Truly sir, all that I liue by, is with the Aule. I meddle with no Tradesmans matters, nor womens matters; but withal I am indeed Sir, a Surgeon to old shooes when they are in great danger, I recouer them. As pro-

Fla. But wherefore art not in thy Shop to day?
Why dost thou leade these men about the streets?

Cob. Truly sir, to weare out their shooes, to get my selfe into more worke. But indeede sir, we make Holy-day to see Cæsar, and to reioyce in his Triumph.

Mur. Wherefore reioyce?

What Conquest brings he home?

What Tributaries follow him to Rome,

To grace in Captiue bonds his Chariot Wheelles?

You Blockes; you stones, you worse then senslesse things

O you hard hearts, you cruell men of Rome,

Knew you not Pompey many a time and oft?

Haue you climb'd vp to Walles and Battlements,

To Towres and Windowes? Yea, to Chimney tops,

Your Infants in your Armes, and there haue late

The liue-long day, with patient expectation,

To see great Pompey passe the streets of Rome:
And when you saw his Chariot but appeare,
Haue you not made an Vniuersall shout,
That Tyber trembled vnderneath her bankes
To heare the replication of your sounds,
Made in her Concaue Shores?

And do you now put on your best attyre?
And do you now cull out a Holy day?
And do you now strew Flowers in his way,
That comes in Triumph ouer Pompeys blood?

Be gone,
Runne to your houses, fall vpon your knees,
Pray to the Gods to intermit the plague
That needs must light on this Ingratitude

Fla. Go, go, good Countrymen, and for this fault
Assemble all the poore men of your fort;
Draw them to Tyber bankes, and weepe your teares
Into the Channell, till the lowest streame
Do kisse the most exalted Shores of all.

Exeunt all the Commoners.

See where their basest mettle be not mou'd,
They vanish tongue-tyed in their guiltlesse:
Go you downe that way towards the Capitoll,
This way will I Disrobe the Images,
If you do finde them deckt with Ceremonies.

Mur. May we do so?

You know it is the Feast of Lupercall.

Fla. It is no matter, let no Images
Be hung with Cæsars Tophces. Ile about,
And drue away the Vulgar from the streets;
So do you too, where you perceiue them thicke.
These growing Feathers, pluckt from Cæsars wing,
Will make him flye an ordinary pitch,
Who else would soare about the view of men,
And keepe vs all in seruile fearefulnessse.

Exeunt

Enter Cæsar, Antony for the Course, Calphurnia, Portia, De-cius, Cicero, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, a Soothsayer after them Murellus and Flavius.

Cæs. Calphurnia

Cask. Peace ho, Cæsar speaks.

Cæs. Calphurnia

Calp. Heere my Lord

Cæs. Stand you directly in Antonio's way,
When he doth run his course

Ant. Cæsar, my Lord

Cæs. Forget not in your speed Antonio,
To touch Calphurnia for our Elders sakes

k k

The

The Barren touched in this holy chace,
Shake off their sterile curse.

Ant. I shall remember,

When Caesar sayes, Do this; it is perform'd.

Cas. Set on, and leaue no Ceremony out.

Sooth. Caesar.

Cas. Ha? Who calles?

Cas. Bid euery noyse be still: peace yet againe.

Cas. Who is it in the presse, that calles on me?

I heare a Tongue thriller then all the Musicke

Cry, Caesar. Speake, Caesar is turn'd to heare.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cas. What man is that?

Br. A Sooth-sayer bids you beware the Ides of March

Cas. Set him before me, let me see his face.

Cassi. Fellow, come from the throng, look vpon Caesar.

Cas. What sayst thou to me now? Speak once againe.

Sooth. Beware the Ides of March.

Cas. He is a Dreamer, let vs leaue him: Passe.

Sennet. Exeunt Manet Brut. & Cassi.

Cassi. Will you go see the order of the course?

Brut. Not I.

Cassi. I pray you do.

Brut. I am not Gamesome: I do lacke some part

Of that quicke Spirit that is in Antony:

Let me not hinder Cassius your desires;

Ile leaue you.

Cassi. Brutus, I do obserue you now of late:

I haue not from your eyes, that gentlenesse

And shew of Loue, as I was wont to haue.

You beare too stubborne, and too strange a hand

Ouer your Friend, that loues you.

Brut. Cassius,

Be not decei'd. If I haue veyl'd my looke,

I turne the trouble of my Countenance

Meerely vpon my selfe. Vexed I am

Of late, with passions of some difference,

Conceptions onely proper to my selfe,

Which giue some soyle (perhaps) to my Behaviours:

But let not therefore my good Friends be green'd

(Among which number Cassius be you one)

Nor construe any further my neglect;

Then that poore Brutus with himselfe at warre,

Forgets the shewes of Loue to other men

Cassi. Then Brutus, I haue much mistook your passion,

By meanes whereof, this Brest of mine hath buried

Thoughts of great value, worthy Cogitations.

Tell me good Brutus, Can you see your face?

Brutus. No Cassius.

For the eye sees not it selfe but by reflection,

By some other things.

Cassius. 'Tis true,

And it is very much lamented Brutus,

That you haue no such Mirrors, as will turne

Your hidden worthinesse into your eye,

That you might see your shadow:

I haue heard

Where many of the best respect in Rome,

(Except immortall Caesar) speaking of Brutus,

And groaning vnderneath this Ages yoke,

Haue wish'd, that Noble Brutus had his eyes.

Brut. Into what dangers, would you

Leade me Cassius?

That you would haue me seeke into my selfe,

For that which is not in me?

Cas. Therefore good Brutus, be prepar'd to heare:

And since you know, you cannot see your selfe
So well as by Reflection; I your Glasse,
Will modestly discouer to your selfe
That of your selfe, which you yet know not of.
And be not iealous on me, gentle Brutus:
Were I a common Laughter, or did vse
To stale with ordinary Oathes my loue
To euery new Protester: if you know,
That I do fawne on men, and hugge them hard,
And after scandle them: Or if you know,
That I professe my selfe in Banquetting
To all the Rout, then hold me dangerous,

Flourish, and Shout.

Brut. What meanes this Showing?

I do feare, the People choose Caesar

For their King

Cassi. I, do you feare it?

Then must I thinke you would not haue it so.

Brut. I would not Cassius, yet I loue him well:

But wherefore do you hold me heere so long?

What is it, that you would impart to me?

If it be ought toward the generall good,

Set Honor in one eye, and Death in other,

And I will looke on both indifferently:

For let the Gods so speed mee, as I loue

The name of Honor, more then I feare death.

Cassi. I know that vertue to be in you Brutus,

As well as I do know your outward fauour.

Well, Honor is the subiect of my Story:

I cannot tell, what you and other men

Thinke of this life: But for my single selfe,

I had as lief not be, as liue to be

In awe of such a Thing, as I my selfe.

I was borne free as Caesar, so were you,

We both haue fed as well, and we can both

Endure the Winters cold, as well as hee.

For once, vpon a Rowe and Gustie day,

The troubled Tyber, chasing with her Shores,

Caesar saide to me, Dar'st thou Cassius now

Leape in with me into this angry Flood,

And swim to yonder Point? Vpon the word,

Accourted as I was, I plunged in,

And had him follow. So indeed he did.

The Torrent roar'd, and we did buffer it

With lusty Sinewes, throwing it aside,

And stemming it with hearts of Controuersie.

But ere we could arriue the Point propos'd,

Caesar cride, Helpe me Cassius, or I sinke.

I (as Aeneas, our great Ancestor,

Did from the Flames of Troy, vpon his shoulder

The old Anchises beare) so, from the waues of Tyber

Did I the tyred Caesar: And this Man,

Is now become a God, and Cassius is

A wretched Creature, and must bend his body,

If Caesar carelessly but nod on him.

He had a Feauer when he was in Spaine,

And when the Fit was on him, I did marke

How he did shake: 'Tis true, this God did shake,

His Coward lippes did from their colour flye,

And that same Eye, whose bend doth owe the World,

Did loose his Lustre. I did heare him grone:

I, and that Tongue of his, that bad the Romans,

Marke him, and write his Speeches in their Booke,

Alas, it cride, Giue me some drinke Titinius.

As a sicke Girle : Ye Gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of the Maiesticke world,
And beare the Palme alone.

Shout. Flores.

Brn. Another generall shout?
I do beleue, that these applauses are
For some new Honors, that are heap'd on Caesar.

Cassi. Why man, he doth bestride the narrow world
Like a Colossus, and we petty men
Walke vnder his huge legges, and peepe about
To finde our selues dishonourable Graues
Men at sometime, are Masters of their Fates.
The fault (deere Brutus) is not in our Starres,
But in our Selues, that we are vnderlings.

Brutus and Caesar What should be in that Caesar?
Why should that name be sounded more then yours
Write them together. Yours, is as faire a Name :
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well :
Weigh them, it is as heavy Coniure with 'em,
Brutus will start a Spirit as soone as Caesar.
Now in the names of all the Gods at once,
Vpon what meate doth this our Caesar feede,
That he is growne so great? Age, thou art sham'd.
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of Noble Bloods.
When went there by an Age, since the great Flood,
But it was fam'd with more then with one man?
When could they say (till now) that talk'd of Rome,
That her wide Walkes incompast but one man?
Now is't Rome indeed, and Roome enough
When there is in it but one onely man.
O! you and I, haue heard our Fathers say,
There was a Brutus once, that would haue brook'd
Th'eternall Duell to keepe his State in Rome,
As easily as a King.

Brn. That you do loue me, I am nothing icalous.
What you would worke me too, I haue some ayme.
How I haue thought of this, and of these times
I shall recount heereafter. For this present,
I would not so (with loue I might intreat you)
Be any further mou'd. What you haue said,
I will consider what you haue to say
I will with patience heare, and finde a time
Both meete to heare, and answer such high things.
Till then, my Noble Friend, chew vpon this.
Brutus had rather be a Villager,
Then to repute himselfe a Sonne of Rome
Vnder these hard Conditions, as this time
Is like to lay vpon vs.

Cassi. I am glad that my weake words
Haue strucke but thus much shew of fire from Brutus.

Enter Caesar and his Traine.

Brn. The Games are done,
And Caesar is returning.

Cassi. As they passe by,
Plucke Caesar by the Sleeve,
And he will (after his sower fashion) tell you
What hath proceeded worthy note to day.

Brn. I will do so. but looke you Cassius,
The ang y spot doth glow on Caesar's brow,
And all the rest looke like a chidden Traine :
Calphurnia & Cherke is pale, and Cicero
Lookes with such Ferret, and such fiery eyes
As we haue seene him in the Capitoll

Being crost in Conference, by some Senators.

Cassi. Caesar will tell vs what the matter is.

Ces. Antonio.

Ans. Caesar.

Ces. Let me haue men about me, that are fat,
Sleeke-headed men, and such as sleepe a-nights :
Yond Cassius has a leane and hungry looke,
He thinks too much such men are dangerous.

Ans. Feare him not Caesar, he's not dangerous,
He is a Noble Roman, and well giuen.

Ces. Would he were fatter; But I feare him not :
Yet if my name were lyable to feare,
I do not know the man I should auoyd
So soone as that spare Cassius. He reades much,
He is a great Obseruer, and he lookes
Quite through the Deeds of men. He loues no Playes,
As thou dost Antony : he heares no Musicke ;
Seldome he smiles, and smiles in such a sort
As if he mock'd himselfe, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mou'd to smile at any thing
Such men as he, be neuer at hearts ease,
Whiles they behold a greater then themselues,
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Then what I feare : for alwayes I am Caesar.
Come on my right hand, for this eare is deafe,
Ar d tell me truly, what thou think'st of him. Sennit

Exeunt Caesar and his Traine.

Caes. You pul'd me by the cloake, would you speake with me?

Brn. I Caes. tell vs what hath chanc'd to day
That Caesar lookes so sad.

Caes. Why you were with him, were you not?

Brn. I should not then aske Caes. what had chanc'd

Caes. Why there was a Crowne offer'd him; & being offer'd him, he put it by with the backe of his hand thus,
and then the people fell a shouting.

Brn. What was the second noyse for?

Caes. Why for that too.

Cassi. They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?

Caes. Why for that too.

Brn. Was the Crowne offer'd him thrice?

Caes. I marry was't, and hee put it by thrice, euerie time gentler then other; and at euery putting by, mine honest Neighbors shew'd.

Cassi. Who offer'd him the Crowne?

Caes. Why Antony.

Brn. Tell vs the manner of it, gentle Caes.

Caes. I can as well bee hang'd as tell the manner of
it. It was meete Foolerie, I did not marke it. I sawe
Marke Antony offer him a Crowne, yet twas not a Crowne neyther, 'twas one of these Coronets and as I told you, hee put it by-once but for all that, to my thinking, he would faine haue had it. Then hee offered it to him againe. then hee put it by againe but to my thinking, he was very loath to lay his fingers off it. And then he offered it the third time; hee put it the third time by,
and still as hee refus'd it, the rabblement howted, and clapp'd their chopt hands, and threw vpe their sweate
Night-cappes, and vttered such a deale of stinking breath, because Caesar refus'd the Crowne, that it had (almost) choaked Caesar: for hee swooned, and fell downe at it: And for mine owne part, I durst not laugh, for feare of opening my Lippes, and receyuing the bad Ayre.

Cassi.

Cass. But soft I pray you: what did Caesar swoone?
Cass. He fell downe in the Market-place, and foame'd at mouth, and was speechlesse.

Brut. 'Tis very like he hath the Falling sicknesse.

Cass. No, Caesar hath it not: but you, and I,
 And onest Cassius, we haue the Falling sicknesse.

Cass. I know not what you meane by that, but I am iure Caesar fell downe. If the rag-ragge people did not clasp him, and hisse him, according as he pleas'd, and dis-pleas'd in, as they vse to doe the Players in the Theatre, I am no true man.

Brut. What said he, when he came vnto himselfe?

Cass. Marry, before he fell downe, when he perceiud the common Heard was glad he refus'd the Crowne, he pluckt me ope his Doublet, and offer'd them his Throat to cut: and I had bene a man of any Occupation, if I would not haue taken him at a word, I would I might goe to Hell among the Rogues, and to hee sell. When he came to himselfe againe, hee said, If hee had done, or said any thing amisse, he desir'd their Worshipps to thinke it was his infirmitee. Three or foure Venches where I stood, cryed, Alasse good Soule, and forgane him with all their hearts: But there's no heed to be taken of them;
 if Caesar had stab'd their Mothers, they would haue done
 no lesse.

Brut. And after that, he came thus sad away.

Cass. 1.

Cass. Did Cicero say any thing?

Cass. I, he spoke Greeke.

Cass. To what effect?

Cass. Nay, and I tell you that, Ile ne're looke you i'th' face againe. But those that vnderstood him, smil'd at one another, and shooke their heads: but for mine owne part, it was Greeke to me. I could tell you more newes too. Murellus and Flavius, for pulling Scarffes off Caesar's Images, are put to silence. Fare you well.
 There was more Foolerie yet: if I could remember it.

Cass. Will you suppe with me to Night, Cassius?

Cass. No, I am promis'd forth.

Cass. Will you Dine with me to morrow?

Cass. I, if I be alue, and your minde hold, and your Dinner worth the eating.

Cass. Good, I will expect you.

Cass. Doe so: farewell both. Exit.

Brut. What a blune fellow is this growne to be?
 He was quick Mettle, when he went to Schoole.

Cass. So is he now, in execution
 Of any bold, or Noble Enterprize,
 How-euer he puts on this raddre forme-
 This Rudenesse is a Sawte to his good Wit,
 Which giues men stomacke to digest his words
 With better Appetite.

Brut. And so it is:

For this time I will leaue you:
 To morrow, if you please to speake with me,
 I will come home to you: vntill you will.
 Come home to me, and I will wait for you.

Cass. I will doe so: till then, thinke of the World,
 Exit Brutus.

Well Brutus, thou art Noble: yet I see,
 Thy Honorable Mettleness be wrought
 From that it is dispos'd: therefore it is meete,
 That Noble mindes keepe better with their likes:
 For who so fits me, that cannot be seduc'd?
Caesar doth beare me hard, but he loues Brutus.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius,
 He should not humor me. I will this Night,
 In seuerall Hand's, in at his Windows throw,
 As if they came from seuerall Citizens,
 Writings, all tending to the great opinion
 That Rome holds of his Name. wherein obscurely
Caesar's Ambition shall be glanced at.
 And after this, let Caesar see him sure,
 For wee will shake him, or worse dayes endure.

Exit.

Thunder, and Lightning. Enter Cassius, and Cicero.

Cic. Good euen, Cassius: brought you Caesar home?
 Why are you breathlesse, and why stare you so?

Cass. Are not your mou'd, when all the sway of Earth
 Shakes, like a thing in firme? O Cicero,
 I haue scene Tempests, when the scolding Winds
 Haue riu'd the knotie Oakes, and I haue scene
 Th'ambitious Ocean swell, and rage, and foame,
 To be exalted with the threatening Clouds:
 But neuer till to Night, neuer till now,
 Did I goe through a Tempest-dropping-fire.
 Eyther there is a Ciuill strife in Heauen,
 Or else the World, too lawcie with the Gods,
 Incenseth them to send destruction.

Cic. Why, saw you any thing more wonderfull?

Cass. A common haue, you know him well by sight,
 Held vp his left Hand, which did flame and burne
 Like twentie Torches ioyn'd, and yet his Hand,
 Not sensible of fire, remain'd vnscorch'd.
 Besides, I ha' not since put vp my Sword,
 Against the Capitoll I met a Lyon,
 Who glaz'd vpon me, and went surly by,
 Without annoying me. And there were drawne
 Vpon a heape, a hundred gasly Women,
 Transformed with their feare, who swore, they saw
 Men, all in fire, walke vp and downe the streets.
 And yesterday, the Bird of Night did sit,
 Euen at Noone-day vpon the Market place,
 Howling, and shrieking. When these Prodigies
 Doe so conioyntly meet, let not men say,
 These are their Reasens, they are Naturall:
 For I beleue, they are portentous things
 Vnto the Clynate, that they point vpon.

Cic. Indeed, it is a strange disposed time:
 But men may construe things after their fashion,
 Cleane from the purpose of the things themselves.
 Comes Caesar to the Capitoll to morrow?

Cass. He doth: for he did bid Antonius
 Send word to you, he would be there to morrow.

Cic. Good-night then; Cassius.
 This disturbed Skie is not to walke in.

Cass. Farewell Cicero. Exit Cicero.

Enter Cassius.

Cass. Who's there?

Cass. A Roman.

Cass. Cassius, by your Voyce.

Cass. Your Eare is good.

Cassius, what Night is this?

Cass. A very pleasing Night to honest men.

Cass. Who euer knew the Heauens menace so:

Cass. Those that haue knowne the Earth so full of faults.

For

For my part, I haue walk'd about the streets,
Submitting me vnto the perillous Night;
And thus vnbraced, Caska, as you see,
Haue bar'd my Bosome to the Thunder-stone:
And when the crosse blew Lightning seem'd to open
The Breest of Heauen, I did present my selfe
Euen in the ayme, and very flash of it. (uens >

Cask. But wherefore did you so much tempt the Hea-
It is the part of men, to feare and tremble,
When the most mightie Gods, by tokens send
Such dreadfull Heralds, to astonish vs.

Cassi. You are dull, Caska
And those sparkes of Life, that should be in a Roman,
You doe want, or else you vse not.
You looke pale, and gaze, and put on feare,
And cast your selfe in wonder,
To see the strange impatience of the Heauens:
But if you would consider the true cause,
Why all these Fires, why all these gliding Ghosts,
Why Birds and Beasts, from qualitie and kinde,
Why Old men, Fooles, and Children calculate,
Why all these things change from their Ordinance,
Their Natures, and pre-formed Faculties,
To monstrous qualitie; why you shall finde,
That Heauen hath i'rsus'd them with these Spirits,
To make them Instruments of feare, and warning,
Vnto some monstrous State.

Now could I (Caska) name to thee a man,
Most like this dreadfull Night,
That Thunders, Lightens, opens Graues, and roares,
As doth the Lyon in the Capitoll:
A man no mightier then thy selfe, or me,
In personall action; yet prodigious growne,
And fearefull, as these strange eruptions are.

Cask. 'Tis Caesar that you meane:
Is it not, Cassius?

Cassi. Let it be who it is: for Romans now
Haue Thewes, and Limbes, like to their Ancestors;
But woe the while, our Fathers mindes are dead,
And we are gouern'd with our Mothers spirits,
Our yoake, and sufferance, shew vs Womanish.

Cask. Indeed, they say, the Senators to morrow
Meane to establish Caesar as a King:
And he shall weare his Crowne by Sea, and Land,
In every place, saue here in Italy.

Cassi. I know where I will weare this Dagger then;
Cassius from Bondage will deliuer Cassius:
Therein, yee Gods, you make the weakes most strong;
Therein, yee Gods, you Tyrants doe defeat.
Nor Stonie Tower, nor Walls of beaten Brasse,
Nor ayre-lesse Dungeon, nor strong Linkes of Iron,
Can be retentiu to the strength of spirit.
But Life being wearie of these worldly Barres,
Neuer lacks power to dismisse it selfe.
If I know this, know all the World besides,
That part of Tyrannie that I doe beare,
I can shake off at pleasure. - Thunder still.

Cask. So can I:
So euer Bond-man in his owne hand beares
The power to cancell his Captiuitie.

Cassi. And why should Caesar be a Tyrant then?
Poore man, I know he would not be a Wolfe,
But that he sees the Romans are but Sheepe:
He were no Lyon, were not Romans Hindes.
Those that with haste will make a mightie fire,
Begin it with weakes Strawes. What trash is Rome?

What Rubbish, and what Offall? when it serues
For the base matter, to illuminate
So vile a thing as Caesar. But oh Griefe,
Where hast thou led me? I (perhaps) speake this Before a willing Bond-man: then I know
My answer must be made. But I am arm'd,
And dangers are to me indifferent.

Cask. You speake to Caska, and to such a man,
That is no flearing Tell-tale. Hold, my Hand:
Be factious for redresse of all these Griefes,
And I will set this foot of mine as farre,
As who goes farthest.

Cassi. There's a Bargaine made.
Now know you, Caska, I haue mou'd already
Some certaine of the Noblest minded Romans
To vnder-goe, with me, an Enterprize,
Of Honorable dangerous consequence;
And I doe know by this, they stay for me
In Pompeys Porch for now this fearefull Night,
There is no stirre, or walking in the streetes;
And the Complexion of the Element
Is Fauours, like the Worke we haue in hand,
Most bloodie, fierie, and most terrible.

Enter Cinna.

Caska Stand close a while, for heere comes one in haste.

Cassi. 'Tis Cinna, I doe know him by his Gate,
He is a friend Cinna, where haste you to?

Cinna. To finde out you: Who's that, Metellus
Cymbre?

Cassi. No, it is Caska, one incorporate
To our Attempts. Am I not stay'd for, Cinna?

Cinna. I am glad on't.
What a fearefull Night is this?

There's two or three of vs haue scene strange sights
Cassi. Am I not stay'd for? tell me.

Cinna. Yes, you are. O Cassius,
If you could but winne the Noble Brutus
To our party—

Cassi. Be you content. Good Cinna, take this Paper,
And looke you lay it in the Pretors Chayre,
Where Brutus may but finde it: and throw this
In at his Window; set this vp with Waxe
Vpon old Brutus Statue: all this done,
Repaire to Pompeys Porch, where you shall finde vs.
Is Decius Brutus and Trebonius there?

Cinna. All, but Metellus Cymbre, and hee's gone
To seeke you at your house. Well, I will hit,
And so bestow these Papers as you bad me.

Cassi. That done, repaire to Pompeys Theater.

Exit Cinna.

Come Caska, you and I will yet, ere day,
See Brutus at his house: three parts of him
Is ours already, and the man entyre
Vpon the next encounter, yeelds him ours.

Cask. O, he sits high in all the Peoples hearts:
And that which would appeare Offence in vs,
His Countenance, like richest Alchymie,
Will change to Vertue, and to Worthinesse.

Cassi. Him, and his worth, and our great need of him,
You haue right well conceited: let vs goe,
For it is after Mid-night, and ere day,
We will awake him, and be sure of him.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Brutus in his Orchard.

Brut. What Lucius, hoe?
I cannot, by the progresse of the Starres,
Giue guess how neere to day. — Lucius, I say?
I would it were my fault to sleepe so soundly.
When Lucius, when? awake, I say: what Lucius?

Enter Lucius.Luc. Call'd you, my Lord?

Brut. Get me a Taper in my Study, Lucius:
When it is lighted, come and call me here.

Luc. I will, my Lord. Exit.

Brut. It must be by his death: and for my part,
I know no personall cause, to speake at him,
But for the generall. He would be crown'd:
How that might change his nature, there's the question?
It is the bright day, that brings forth the Adder,
And that craues warlike walking: Crowne him that,
And then I graunt we put a Sting in him,
That at his will he may doe danger with.
Th'abuse of Greatnesse, is, when it disioynes
Remorse from Power: And to speake truth of Caesar,
I haue not knowne, when his Affections sway'd
More then his Reason. But 'tis a common prooffe,
That Lowlynesse is young Ambitions Ladder,
Whereto the Climber vpward turnes his Face.
But when he once attaines the vpmost Round,
He then vnto the Ladder turnes his Backe,
Lookes in the Clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend: so Caesar may;
Then leaſt he may preuent. And since the Quarrell
Will beate no colour, for the thing he is,
Fashion it thus; that what he is, augmented,
Would runde to these, and these extremities:
And therefore thinke him as a Serpents egge,
Which hatch'd, would as his kinde grow mischieuous;
And kill him in the shell.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. The Taper burneth in your Closet, Sir:
Searching the Window for a Flint, I found
This Paper, thus seal'd vp, and I am sure
It did not lye there when I went to Bed

Giues him the Letter

Brut. Get you to Bed againe, it is not day:
Is not to morrow (Boy) the first of March?

Luc. I know not, Sir.Brut. Looke in the Calender, and bring me word*Luc.* I will, Sir. Exit.

Brut. The exhalations, whizzing in the ayre,
Giue so much light, that I may reade by them.

Opens the Letter, and reades.

Brutus thou sleepest; awake, and see thy selfe:
Shall Rome, &c. speake, strike, redresse
Brutus, thou sleepest awake.
Such instigations haue beene often dropt,
Where I haue tooke them vp:
Shall Rome, &c. Thus must I piece it out:
Shall Rome stand vnder one mans awe? What Rome?
My Ancestors did from the streetes of Rome
The Tarquin drive, when he was call'd a King.
Speake, strike, redresse. Am I entreated

To speake, and strike? O Rome, I make thee promise,
If the redresse will follow, thou receiuest
Thy full Petition at the hand of Brutus.

Enter Lucius.Luc. Sir, March is wasted fifteene dayes,Knocks within.

Brut. 'Tis good. Go to the Gate, some body knocks Since Cassius first did whet me against Caesar,
I haue not slept.

Betweene the acting of a dreadfull thing,
And the first motion, all the Interims is Like a Phantasma, or a hideous Dreame;
The Genius, and the mortall Instruments
Are then in counsell; and the state of a man,
Like to a little Kingdome, suffers then
The nature of an Insurrection.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sir, 'tis your Brother Cassius at the Doore,
Who doth desire to see you,

Brut. Is he alone?Luc. No, Sir, there are moe with him,Brut. Doe you know them?

Luc. No, Sir, their Hats are pluckt about their Eares,
And halfe their Faces buried in their Cloakes,
That by no meanes I may discouer them,
By any mark of fauour.

Brut. Let 'em enter:

They are the Faction. O Conspiracie,
Sham'st thou to shew thy dang'rous Brow by Night,
When euils are most free? O then, by day
Where wilt thou finde a Cauerne darke enough,
To maske thy monstrous Visage? Seek none Conspiracie,
Hide it in Smiles, and Affabilitie:
For if thou path thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus it selfe were dimme enough,
To hide thee from preuention.

Enter the Conspirators, Cassius, Cato, Decius, Cinna, Metellus, and Trebonius.

Cass. I thinke we are too bold vpon your Rest:
Good morrow Brutus, doe we trouble you?

Brut. I haue beene vp this howre, awake all Night:
Know I these men that come along with you?

Cass. Yes, every man of them; and no man here
But honors you: and every one doth wish,
You had but that opinion of your selfe,
Which every Noble Roman beares of you.

This is Trebonius.Brut. He is welcome hither.Cass. This, Decius Brutus.Brut. He is welcome too.

Cass. This, Cato; this, Cinna; and this, Metellus
Cymbet.

Brut. They are all welcome.
What watchfull Cares doe interpose themselves
Betwixt your Eyes, and Night?

Cass. Shall I entreat a word? They whisper
Decius. Here lyes the East: doth not the Day breake
heere?

Cato. No.

Cin. O pardon, Sir, it doth; and yon grey Lines,
That fret the Clouds, are Messengers of Day.
Cato. You shall confesse, that you are both deceiv'd.
Heere, as I point my Sword, the Sunne arises,
Which is a great way growing on the South,

Weigh-

Weighing the youthfull Season of the year.
Some two moneths hence, vp higher toward the North
He first presents his fire, and the high East
Stands as the Capitoll, directly heere.

Brn Giue me your hands all ouer, one by one.

Cas And let vs sweare our Resolution.

Brn. No, not an Oath: if not the Face of men,
The sufferance of our Soules, the times Abuse;
If these be Motiues weake, breake oft betimes,
And every man hence, to his idle bed
So let high-sighted-Tyranny range on,
Till each man drop by Lottery But if these
(As I am sure they do) beare fire enough
To kindle Cowards, and to Steele with valour
The melting Spirits of women Then Countrymen,
What neede we any spur, but our owne caule,
To pricke vs to redresse? What other Bond,
Then secret Romans, that haue spoke the word,
And will not palter? And what other Oath,
Then Honesty to Honesty ingag'd,
That this shall be, or we will fall for it.
Sweare Priests and Cowards, and men Cautelous
Old feeble Carrions, and such suffering Soules
That welcome wrongs Vnto bad causes, sweare
Such Creatures as men doubt; but do not staine
The euen vertue of our Enterprize,
Nor th'insuppressiue Mettle of our Spirits,
To thinke, that our Cause, or our Performance
Did neede an Oath. When every drop of blood
That every Roman beares, and Nobly beares
Is guilty of a feuerall Bastordie,
If he do breake the smallest Particle
Of any promise that hath pass from him

Cas. But what of Cicero? Shall we sound him?
I thinke he will stand very strong with vs.

Cas. Let vs not leaue him out.

Cyn. No, by no means.

Metel. O let vs haue him, for his Siluer haire
Will purchase vs a good opinion
And buy mens voyces, to commend our deeds:
It shall be sayd, his iudgement rul'd our hands,
Our youths, and wildenesse, shall no whit appeare,
But all be buried in his Grauity.

Brn. O name him not; let vs not breake with him,
For he will neuer follow any thing
That other men begin.

Cas. Then leaue him out.

Cas. Indeed, he is not fit.

Decius. Shall no man else be toucht, but onely Caesar?

Cas. Decius well arg'd I thinke it is not meet,

Marke Antony 'O well belon'd of Caesar,
Should out-live Caesar, we shall finde of him
A shrew'd Contriuer And you know, his means
If he improve them, may well stretch so farre
As to annoy vs all which to preuent,
Let Antony and Caesar fall together

Brn Our course will seeme too bloody, Caius Casius,
To cut the Head off, and then hacke the Limbes.
Like Wrath in death, and Enuy afterwards:
For Antony, is but a Limbe of Caesar.

Let's be Sacrificers, but not Butchers Caius:
We all stand vp against the spirit of Caesar,
And in the Spirit of men, there is no blood:
O that we then could come by Caesar's Spirit,
And not dismember Caesar! But (alas)
Caesar must bleed for it. And gentle Friends,

Let's kill him Boldly, but not Wrathfully:
Let's carue him, as a Dish fit for the Gods,
Not hew him as a Carcasse fit for Hounds:
And let our Hearts, as suble Masters do,
Sturre vp their Seruants to an acte of Rage,
And after seeme to chide 'em. This shall make
Our purpose Necessary, and not Enuious.
Which so appearing to the common eyes,
We shall be call'd Purgers, not Murderers.
And for Marke Antony, thinke not of him:
For he can do no more then Caesar's Arme,
When Caesar's head is off.

Cas. Yet I feare him,

For in the ingrafted loue he beares to Caesar.

Brn. Alas, good Casius, do not thinke of him:
If he loue Caesar, all that he can do
Is to himselfe, take thought, and dye for Caesar,
And that were much he should. for he is giuen
To sports, to wildenesse, and much company.

Treb. There is no feare in him; let him not dye,
For he will liue, and laugh at this heereafter

Clocke strikes.

Brn Peace, count the Clocke.

Cas. The Clocke hath stricken three.

Treb 'Tis time to part

Cas. But it is doubtfull yet,
Whether Caesar will come forth to day, or no:
For he is Superstitious growne of late,
Quite from the maine Opinion he held once,
Of Fantasie, of Dreames, and Ceremonies:
It may be, these apparant Prodigious,
The vnaccustom'd Terror of this night,
And the perswasion of his Augurers,
May hold him from the Capitoll to day.

Decius Neuer feare that. If he be so resolu'd,
I can ore-sway him: For he loues to heare,
That Vncomers may be betray'd with Trees,
And Beares with Glasses, Elephants with Holes,
Lyons with Toyles, and men with Flatterers.
But, when I tell him, he hates Flatterers,
He sayes, he does, being then most flattered.
Lerne worke.

For I can giue his humour the true bent;
And I will bring him to the Capitoll

Cas. Nay, we will all of vs, be there to fetch him;

Brn. By the eight houre, is that the vitermost?

Cin Be that the vitermost, and faile not then.

Met. Caius Ligarius doth beare Caesar hard,
Who rated him for speaking well of Pompey;
I wonder none of you haue thought of him.

Brn. Now good Metellus go along by him:
He loues me well, and I haue giuen him Reasons,
Send him but hither, and Ile fashion him

Cas. The morning comes vpon's:
Wee'll leaue you Brutus,
And friends disperse your selues; but all remember
What you haue said, and shew your selues true Romans.
Brn. Good Gentlemen, looke fresh and metnily,
Let not our looks put on our purposes,
But beare it as our Roman Actors do,
With vnry'd Spirits, and formall Conscience,
And so good morrow to you every one.

Exeunt.

Marche Bruius.

Boy: Lucius: Fast asleepe? It is no matter,
Enioy the hony-heavy-Dew of Slumber:
Thou hast no Figures, nor no Fantasies,

Which

Which busie care drawes, in the braines of men;
Therefore thou sleepest so sound.

Enter Portia.

Por. Brutus, my Lord.

Brn. Portia: What meane you? wherefore rise you now?
It is not for your health, thus to commit
Your weake condition, to the raw cold morning.

Por. Nor for yours neither. Y<sup>e</sup> have vngently Brutus
Stole from my bed: and yesternight at Supper
You sodainly arose, and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your armes a-crosse:
And when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd vpon me, with vngentle lookes.
I urg'd you further, then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp't with your foote:

Yet I insifted, yet you answer'd not,
But with an angry waser of your hand
Gaue signe for me to leaue you. So I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience
Which seem'd too much inkindled; and withall,
Hoping it was but an effect of Humor,
Which sometime hath his houre with euery man.
It will not let you eate, nor talke, nor sleepe;
And could it worke so much vpon your shape,
As it hath much preusyl'd on your Condition,
I should not know you Brutus. Deare my Lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of greefe.

Brn. I am not well in health and that is all.

Por. Brutus is wise, and were he not in health,
He would embrace the meanes to come by it.

Brn. Why so I do: good Portia go to bed.

Por. Is Brutus sicke? And is it Physicall
To walke vnbraced, and sucke vp the humours
Of the danke Morning? What, is Brutus sicke?
And will he steale out of his wholsome bed
To dare the vile contagion of the Night?
And tempt the Rheumy, and vnpurged Ayre,
To adde vnto his sicknesse? No my Brutus,
You haue some sicke Offence within your minde,
Which by the Right and Vertue of my place
Iought to know of: And vpon my knees,
I charme you, by my ouce commended Beauty,
By all your vowes of Loue, and that great Vow
Which did incorporate and make vs one,
That you vnfold to me, your selfe; your halfe
Why you are heauy: and what men to night
Haue had resort to you. for heere haue beene
Some fixe or seuen, who did hide their faces
Euen from darknesse.

Brn. Kneele not gentle Portia.

Por. I should not neede, if you were gentle Brutus.
Within the Bond of Marriage, tell me Brutus,
Is it excepted, I should know no Secrets
That appertaine to you? Am I your Selfe,
But as it were in sort, or limitation?
To keepe with you at Meales, comfort your Bed,
And talke to you sometimes? Dwell I but in the Suburbs
Of your good pleasure? If it be no more,
Portia is Brutus Harlot, not his Wife.

Brn. You are my true and honourable Wife,
As deere to me, as are the ruddy dropes
That dwelt in my sad heart.

Por. If this were true, then should I know this secret.
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,
A Woman that Lord Brutus tooke to Wife:
I graunt I am a Woman; but withall,

A Woman well reputed Cato's Daughter.
Thirke you, I am no stronger then my Sex
Being so Father'd, and so Husbanded?
Tell me your Counsels, I will not disclose 'em:
I haue made strong prooffe of my Constancie,
Giuing my selfe a voluntary wound
Heere, in the Thigh: Can I beare that with patience,
And not my Husbands Secrets?

Brn. O ye Gods!

Render me worthy of this Noble Wife. Knocke.
Hark, hark, one knockes. Portia go in a while,
And by and by thy bosome shall partake
The secrets of my Heart.
All my engagements, I will contrue to thee,
All the Charaſtery of my sad browes.
Leaue me with hast. Exit Portia.

Enter Lucius and Ligarius.

Lucius, who's that knockes.

Luc. Heere is a sicke man that would speak with you.
Brn. Caius Ligarius, that Metellus spake of.
Boy, stand aside. Caius Ligarius, how?

Cai. Vouchsafe good morrow from a feeble tongue.

Brn. O what a time haue you chose out braue Cains
To weare a Kerchiefe? Would you were not sicke.

Cai. I am not sicke, if Brutus haue in hand
Any exploit worthy the name of Honor.

Brn. Such an exploit haue I in hand Ligarius,
Had you a healthfull care to heare of it.

Cai. By all the Gods that Romans bow before,
I heere discard my sicknesse. Soule of Rome,
Braue Sonne, deriud from Honourable Loines,
Thou like an Exorcist, hast comur'd vp
My mortified Spirit. Now bid me runne,
And I will strue with things impossible,
Yea get the better of them. What's to do?

Brn. A peece of worke,
That will make sicke men whole.

Cai. But are not some whole, that we must make sicke?

Brn. That must we also. What it is my Cains,
I shall vnfold to thee, as we are going,
To whom it must be done.

Cai. Set on your foote,
And with a heart new-fir'd, I follow you,
To do I know not what: but it sufficeth
That Brutus leads me on.

Brn. Follow me then.

Thunder.
Exeunt

Thunder & Lightning.

Enter Julius Caesar in his Night-gowne.

Caesar. Nor Heauen, nor Earth,
Haue beene at peace to night:
Thrice hath Calphurnia, in her sleepe cryed out,
Helpe, ho: They murder Caesar. Who's within?

Enter a Seruant.

Ser. My Lord.

Cas. Go bid the Priests do present Sacrifice,
And bring me their opinions of Successe.

Ser. I will my Lord

Exit

Enter Calphurnia

Cal. What mean you Caesar? Think you to walk forth?
You shall not stirre out of your house to day.

Cas. Caesar shall forth; the things that threaten'd me,
Ne're look'd but on my backe: When they shall see
The face of Caesar they are vanishe.

Calp.

Calp. Caesar, I neuer stood on Ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me: There is one within,
Besides the things that we haue heard and scene,
Recounts most horrid sights scene by the Witch.
A Lionesse hath whelped in the streets,
And Graues haue yawn'd, and yeelded vp their dead;
Fierce fiery Warriours fight vpon the Clouds
In Rankes and Squadrons, and right forme of Warre
Which drizel'd blood vpon the Capitoll.
The noise of Battell hurtled in the Ayre:
Horses do neigh, and dying men did grone,
And Ghosts did shriek and squeale about the streets.
O Caesar, these things are beyond all vie,
And I do feare them.

Ces. What can be ayoyded
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty Gods?
Yet Caesar shall go forth: for these Predictions
Are to the world in generall; as to Caesar.

Calp. When Beggers dye, there are no Comets seen,
The Heauens themselues blaze forth the death of Princes

Ces. Cowards dye many times before their deaths,
The valiant neuer taste of death but once.
Of all the Wonders that I yet haue heard,
It seemes to me most strange that men should feare,
Seeing that death, a necessary end
Will come, when it will come

Enter a Seruant.

What say the Augurers?

Ser. They would not haue you to stirre forth to day
Plucking the intrayles of an Offering forth,
They could not finde a heart within the beast.

Ces. The Gods do this in shame of Cowardice
Caesar should be a Beast without a heart
If he should stay at home to day for feare
No Caesar shall not, Danger knowes full well
That Caesar is more dangerous then he.
We heare two Lyons luter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible,
And Caesar shall go forth.

Calp. Alas my Lord,
Your wisdome is consum'd in confidence:
Do not go forth to day: Call it my feare,
That keeps you in the house, and not your owne.
Wee'l send Mark Antony to the Senate house,
And he shall say, you are not well to day
Let me vpon my knee, preuaile in this.

Ces. Mark Antony shall say I am not well,
And for thy humor, I will stay at home.

Enter Decius

Heere's Decius Brutus, he shall tell them so.

Deci. Caesar, all hail! Good morrow worthy Caesar,
I come to fetch you to the Senate house.

Ces. And you are come in very happy time,
To beare my greeting to the Senators,
And tell them that I will not come to day
Cannot, is false: and that I dare not, false:
I will not come to day, tell them so Decius.

Calp. Say he is sicke.

Ces. Shall Caesar send a Lye?

Haue I in Conquest stretcht mine Arme so farre,
To be afraid to tell Gray-beards the truth?
Decius, go tell them, Caesar will not come.

Deci. Most mighty Caesar, let me know some cause,
Left I be laugh't at when I tell them so

Ces. The cause is in my Will, I will not come,
That is enough to satisfie the Senate.

But for your ptiuate satisfaction,
Because I loue you, I will let you know.
Calphurnia heere my wife, stayes me at home:
She dreamt to night, she saw my Statue,
Which like a fountaine, with an hundred spouts
Did run pure blood. and many lusty Romans
Came smiling, & did bathe their hands in it:
And these does she apply, for warnings and portents,
And euils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to day.

Deci. This Dreame is all amisse interpreted,
It was a vision, faire and fortunate:
Your Statue spouting blood in many pipes,
In which so many smiling Romans bath'd,
Signifies, that from you great Rome shall sucke
Reuiuing blood, and that great men shall presse
For Tinctures, Staines, Reliques, and Cognisance.
This by Calphurnia's Dreame is signified.

Ces. And this way haue you well expounded it.

Deci. I haue, when you haue heard what I can say:
And know it now, the Senate haue concluded
To giue this day, a Crowne to mighty Caesar.
If you shall send them word you will not come,
Their mindes may change. Besides, it were a mocke
Apt to be render'd, for some one to say,
Breake vp the Senate, till another time:
When Caesar's wife shall meete with better Dreames.
If Caesar hide himselfe, shall they not whisper
Loe Caesar is afraid?

Pardon me Caesar, for my deere deere loue
To your proceeding, bids me tell you this:
And reason to my loue is liable.

Ces. How foolish do your fears seeme now Calphurnia?
I am ashamed I did yeeld to them
Giue me my Robe, for I will go.

Enter Brutus, Ligarius, Metellus, Caska, Trebo-
nus, Cynna, and Publius.

And looke where Publius come to fetch me!

Pub. Good morrow Caesar

Ces. Welcome Publius

What Brutus, are you stirr'd so earely too?
Good morrow Caska. Cinna Ligarius,
Caesar was nere so much your enemy,
As that same Ague which hath made you leane.
What is't a Clocke?

Bru. Caesar, 'tis stricken eight.

Ces. I thanke you for your paines and curtesie.

Enter Antony.

See, Antony that Reuels long a-nights
Is notwithstanding vp. Good morrow Antony.

Ant. So to most Noble Caesar

Ces. Bid them prepare within.

I am too blame to be thus waited for.
Now Cynna, now Metellus: what Trebonius,
I haue an houres talke in store for you:
Remember that you call on me to day:
Be neere me, that I may remember you.

Treb. Caesar I will, and so neere will I be,

That your best Friends shall wish I had bene further.
Ces. Good Friends go in, and taste some wine with me.
And we (like Friends) will straight way go together.

Bru. That every like is not the same, O Caesar,
The heart of Brutus eernes to thinke vpon

Enter Artemidorus.

Caesar, beware of Brutus, take heed of Cassius; common neere

neere Caska, haue an eye to Cyma, trust not Trebonius, marke well Metellus Cymbre, Decius Brutus loues thee not. Thou hast wrong'd Cinus Ligarius. There is but one minde in all these men, and it is bent against Caesar. If thou beest not Immortall, looke about you: Security giues way to Conspiracie. The mighty Gods defend thee.

Thy Louer, Artemidorus.

Heere will I stand, till Caesar passe along,
And as a Tutor will I giue him this:
My heart laments, that Vertue cannot liue
Out of the reach of Emulation.
If thou reade this, O Caesar, thou mayest liue;
If not, the Fates with Traitors do contriue.

Exit.

Enter Portia and Lucius.

Por. I prythee Boy, run to the Senate-house,
Stay not to answer me, but get thee gone.
Why dost thou stay?

Luc. To know my errand Madam.

Por. I would haue had thee there and heere agen
Ere I can tell thee what thou should'st do there:
O Constancie, be strong vpon my side,
Set a huge Mountaine 'twene my Heart and Tongue:
I haue a mans minde, but a womans might:
How hard it is for women to keepe counsell.
Art thou heere yet?

Luc. Madam, what should I do?
Run to the Capitoll, and nothing else?
And so returne to you, and nothing else?

Por. Yes, bring me word Boy, if thy Lord look well,
For he went sickly forth: and take good note
What Caesar doth, what Sutors presse to him.
Hearke Boy, what noyse is that?

Luc. I heare none Madam.

Por. Prythee listen well:

I heard a busling Rumor like a Fray,
And the winde brings it from the Capitoll.

Luc. Sooth Madam, I heare nothing.

Enter the Soothsayer.

Por. Come hither Fellow which way hast thou bin?

Sooth. At mine owne house, good Lady.

Por. What is't a clocke?

Sooth. About the ninth houre Lady.

Por. Is Caesar yet gone to the Capitoll?

Sooth. Madam not yet, I go to take my stand,
To see him passe on to the Capitoll.

Por. Thou hast some suite to Caesar, hast thou not?

Sooth. That I haue Lady, if it will please Caesar
To be so good to Caesar, as to heare me:
I shall beseech him to befriend himselfe.

Por. Why know'st thou any harme's intended towards him?

Sooth. None that I know will be,
Much that I feare may chance:
Good morrow to you: heere the street is narrow:
The throng that follows Caesar at the heeles,
Of Senators, of Prætors, common Sutors,
Will crowd a feeble man (almost) to death.
He get me to a place more voyd, and there
Speake to great Caesar as he comes along.

Por. I must go in:

Exit.
Luc. How weak a thing
The heart of woman is! O Brutus,
The Heauens speede thee in thine enterprize.
Sure the Boy heard me: Brutus hath a suite
That Caesar will not grant. O I grow faint:
Run Lucius, and commend me to my Lord,

Say I am merry; Come to me againe,
And bring me word what he doth say to thee. Exit.

Actus Tertius.

Flourish.

Enter Caesar, Brutus, Cassius, Caska, Decius, Metellus, Trebonius, Cyma, Antony, Lepidus, Artemidorus, Publius, and the Soothsayer.

Caes. The Ides of March are come.

Sooth. I Caesar, but not gone.

Art. Haile Caesar: Read this Scedule.

Dec. Trebonius doth desire you to ore-read
(At your best leysure) this his humble suite,

Art. O Caesar, reade mine first. for mine's a suite
That touches Caesar neerer. Read it great Caesar.

Caes. What touches vs our selfe, shall be last seru'd.

Art. Delay not Caesar, read it instantly.

Caes. What is the fellow mad?

Pub. Sirra, giue place.

Cass. What, vrge you your Petitions in the street?
Come to the Capitoll.

Popil. I wish your enterprize to day may thrive.

Cass. What enterprize Popilius?

Popil. Fare you well.

Brut. What said Popilius Lena?

Cass. He wish't to day our enterprize might thrive:
I feare our purpose is discouered.

Brut. Looke how he makes to Caesar: marke him.

Cass. Caska be sodaine, for we feare preuention.

Brutus what shall be done? If this be knowne,
Cassius or Caesar neuer shall turne backe,
For I will slay my selfe.

Brut. Cassius be constant:

Popilius Lena speakes not of our purposes,
For looke he smiles, and Caesar doth not change.

Cass. Trebonius knowes his time: for look you Brutus
He draves Mark Antony out of the way.

Dec. Where is Metellus Cymbre, let him go,
And presently preferr'e his suite to Caesar.

Brut. He is addrest: presse neere, and second him.

Cin. Caska, you are the first that reares your hand.

Caes. Ate we all ready? What is now amisse,
That Caesar and his Senate must redresse?

Metel. Most high, most mighty, and most puissant Caesar,
Metellus Cymbre throwes before thy Seate
An humble heart.

Caes. I must preuent thee Cymbre:
These couchings, and these lowly courtesies
Might fire the blood of ordinary men,
And turne pre-Ordinance, and first Decree
Into the lane of Children. Be not fond.
To thinke that Caesar beares such Rebell blood
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth Fooles, I meane sweet words,
Low-crooked-curtisies, and base Spannell fawning:
Thy Brother by decree is banished:
If thou dost bend, and pray, and fawne for him,
I spurne thee like a Curie out of my way:
Know, Caesar doth not wrong, nor without cause
Will he be satisfied.

Metel. Is there no voyce more worthy then my owne,
To

To sound more sweetly in great Caesar's eare, for the repealing of my banish'd Brother?

Brut. I kisse thy hand, but not in flattery Caesar:

Desiring thee, that Publius Cymbler may
Haue an immediate freedome of repeale.

Cass. What Brutus?

Cassi. Pardon Caesar - Caesar pardon:

As lowe as to thy foote doth Cassius fall,
To begge infranchisement for Publius Cymbler.

Cass. I could be well mou'd, if I were as you,
If I could pray to mooue, Prayers would mooue me:

But I am constant as the Northerne Starre,

Of whose true fixt, and resting quality,

There is no fellow in the Firmament.

The Skies are painted with vnnumbred sparkes,

They are all Fire, and euery one doth shine.

But, there's but one in all doth hold his place.

So, in the World; 'Tis furnish'd well with Men,

And Men are Flesh and Blood, and apprehensiuē;

Yet in the number, I do know but One

That vnassayleable holds on his ranke,

Vnshak'd of Motion; and that I am he,

Let me a little shew it, euen in this:

That I was constant Cymbler should be banish'd,

And constant do remaine to keepe him so.

Cinna. O Caesar.

Cass. Hence. Wilt thou lift vp Olympus?

Decius. Great Caesar.

Cass. Doth not Brutus bootlesse kneele?

Cass. Speake hands for me.

They stab Caesar.

Cass. Et Tu Brute? — Then fall Caesar.

Dyes

Cin. Liberty, Freedome; Tyranny is dead,

Run hence, proclaime, cry it about the Streets.

Cassi. Some to the common Pulpits, and cry out

Liberty, Freedome, and Enfranchisement.

Brut. People and Senators, be not affrighted:

Fly not, stand still - Ambitions debt is paid.

Cass. Go to the Pulpit Brutus.

Dec. And Cassius too.

Brut. Where's Publius?

Cin. Heere, quite confounded with this mutiny.

Met. Stand fast together, least some Friend of Caesars

Should chance —

Brut. Talk not of standing. Publius good cheere,

There is no harme intended to your person,

Not to no Roman else: so tell them Publius.

Cassi. And leaue vs Publius, least that the people

Rushing on vs, should do your Age some mischief.

Brut. Do so, and let no man abide this deede,

But we the Doers

Enter Trebonius.

Cassi. Where is Antony?

Treb. Fled to his House amaz'd:

Men, Wives, and Children, stare, cry out, and run,

As it were Doomed day.

Brut. Fates, we will know your pleasures:

That we shall dye we know, 'tis but the time

And drawing dayes out, that men stand vpon.

Cass. Why he that cuts off twenty yeares of life,

Cuts off so many yeares of fearing death.

Brut. Grant that, and then is Death a Benefit:

So are we Caesars Friends, that haue abridg'd

His time of festing death. Stoope Romans, stoope,

And let vs bathe our hands in Caesars blood

Vp to the Elbowes, and besmeare our Swords:

Then walke we forth, euen to the Market place,

And waving our red Weapons o're our heads,

Let's all cry Peace, Freedome, and Liberty.

Cassi. Stoop then, and wash: How many Ages hence

Shall this our lofty Scene be acted ouer,

In State vnborne, and Accents yet vnknowne?

Brut. How many times shall Caesar bleed in sport,

That now on Pompey's Basis lye along,

No worthier then the dust?

Cassi. So oft as that shall be,

So often shall the knot of vs be call'd,

The Men that gaue their Country liberty.

Dec. What, shall we forth?

Cassi. I, euery man away.

Brutus shall leade, and we will grace his heeles

With the most boldest, and best hearts of Rome.

Enter a Seruant.

Brut. Soft, who comes heere? A friend of Antony's.

Ser. Thus Brutus did my Master bid me kneele;

Thus did Mark Antony bid me fall downe,

And being prostrate, thus he bad me say:

Brutus is Noble, Wise, Valiant, and Honest;

Caesar was Mighty, Bold, Royall, and Louing:

Say, I loue Brutus, and I honour him;

Say, I fear'd Caesar, honour'd him, and lou'd him.

If Brutus will vouchsafe, that Antony

May safely come to him, and be resolu'd

How Caesar hath deseru'd to lye in death,

Mark Antony, shall not loue Caesar dead

So well as Brutus living; but will follow

The Fortunes and Affaires of Noble Brutus,

Thorough the hazards of this vtrod State,

With all true Faith. So sayes my Master Antony.

Brut. Thy Master is a Wise and Valiant Romane,

I neuer thought him worse:

Tell him, so please him come vnto this place

He shall be satisfied. and by my Honor

Depart vntouch'd

Ser. Ile fetch him presently.

Exit Seruant.

Brut. I know that we shall haue him well to Friend,

Cassi. I wish we may. But yet haue I a minde

That feares him much; and my misgiving still

Falles shrewdly to the purpose.

Enter Antony.

Brut. But heere comes Antony

Welcome Mark Antony.

Ant. O mighty Caesar! Dost thou lye so lowe?

Are all thy Conquests, Glories, Triumphes, Spoiles,

Shrunke to this little Measure? Fare thee well.

I know not Gentlemen what you intend,

Who else must be let blood, who else is ranke:

If I my selfe, there is no houre so fit

As Caesars deaths houre, nor no Instrument

Of halfe that worth, as those your Swords, made rich

With the most Noble blood of all this World.

I do beseech yet, if you beare me hard,

Now, whilst your purpled hands do reeke and smooke,

Fulfill your pleasure. Live a thousand yeeres,

I shall not finde my selfe so apt to dye.

No place will please me so, no meane of death,

As heere by Caesar, and by you cut off,

The Choice and Master Spirits of this Age.

Brut. O Antony I Begge nor your death of vs:

Though now we must appeare bloody and cruell.

As by our hands, and thus our present Acte

You see we do: Yet see you but our hands,

And

And this, the bleeding businesse they haue done:
Our hearts you see not, they are pittifull:
And pittie to the generall wrong of Rome,
As fire driues out fire, so pittie, pittie
Hath done this deed on Caesar. For your part,
To you, our Swords haue leaden points Marke Antony:
Our Armes in strength of malice, and our Hearts
Of Brothers temper, do receiue you in,
With all kinde loue, good thoughts, and reuerence.

Cass. Your voyce shall be as strong as any mans,
In the disposing of new Dignities.

Bru. Onely be patient, till we haue appeas'd
The Multitude, beside themselves with feare,
And then, we will deliuer you the cause,
Why I, that did loue Caesar when I strooke him,
Haue thus proceeded.

Ant. I doubt not of your Wisedome.
Let each man render me his bloody hand
First Marcus Brutus will I shake with you;
Next Caius Cassius do I take your hand;
Now Decius Brutus yours; now yours Metellus;
Yours Cinna; and my valiant Caska, yours;
Though last, not least in loue, yours good Trebonius
Gentlemen all. Alas, what shall I say,
My credit now stands on such slippery ground,
That one of two bad wayes you must conceit me,
Either a Coward, or a Flatterer.
That I did loue thee Caesar, O 'tis true:
If then thy Spirit looke vpon vs now,
Shall it not greene thee deerer then thy death,
To see thy Antony making his peace,
Shaking the bloody fingers of thy Foes?
Most Noble, in the prefence of thy Coarse,
Had I as many eyes, as thou hast wounds,
Weeping as fast as they streame forth thy blood,
It would become me better, then to close
In tearmes of Friendship with thine enemies.
Pardon me Julius, heere was't thou bay'd braue Hart,
Heere did'st thou fall, and heere thy Hunters stand
Sign'd in thy Spoyle, and Crimson'd in thy Lethee.
O World! thou wast the Forrest for this Hart,
And this indeed, O World, the Hart of thee.
How like a Deere, stroken by many Princes,
Dost thou heere lye?

Cass. Mark Antony.

Ant. Pardon me Caius Cassius:
The Enemies of Caesar, shall say this:
Then, in a Friend, it is cold Modestie.

Cass. I blame you not for praising Caesar so,
But what compact meane you to haue with vs?
Will you be prick'd in number of our Friends,
Or shall we on, and not depend on you?

Ant. Therefore I tooke your hands, but was indeed
Sway'd from the point, by looking downe on Caesar.
Friends am I with you all, and loue you all,
Vpon this hope, that you shall giue me Reasons,
Why, and wherein, Caesar was dangerous.

Bru. Or else were this a sauage Spectacle:
Our Reasons are so full of good regard,
That wert you Antony, the Some of Caesar,
You should be satisfied.

Ant. That's all I seeke,
And am moreouer sutor, that I may
Produce his body to the Market-place,
And in the Pulpit as becomes a Friend,
Speake in the Order of his Funerall.

Bru. You shall Marke Antony.

Cass. Brutus, a word with you:
You know not what you do, Do not content
That Antony speake in his Funerall
Know you how much the people may be mou'd
By that which he will vter.

Bru. By your pardon:
I will my selfe into the Pulpit first,
And shew the reason of our Caesars death.
What Antony shall speake, I will protest
He speaks by leaue, and by permission:
And that we are contented Caesar shall
Haue all true Rites, and lawfull Ceremonies,
It shall aduantage more, then do vs wrong.

Cass. I know not what may fall, I like it not.

Bru. Mark Antony, heere take you Caesars body:
You shall not in your Funerall speech blame vs,
But speake all good you can deuise of Caesar,
And say you doo't by our permission:
Else shall you not haue any hand at all
About his Funerall. And you shall speake
In the same Pulpit whereto I am going,
After my speech is ended.

Ant. Be it so:

I do desire no more.

Bru. Prepare the body then, and follow vs. Exeunt.

Manet Antony.

O pardon me, thou bleeding peece of Earth:
That I am meeke and gentle with these Butchers.
Thou art the Ruines of the Noblest man
That euer liued in the Tide of Times.
Woe to the hand that shed this costly Blood.
Ouer thy wounds, now do I Prophesie,
(Which like dumbe mouths do ope their Ruby lips
To begge the voyce and vterance of my Tongue)
A Curse shall light vpon the limbes of men;
Domesticke Fury, and fierce Ciuill strife,
Shall cumber all the parts of Italy:
Blood and destruction shall be so in vse,
And dreadfull Objects so familiar,
That Mothers shall but smile, when they behold
Their Infants quartered with the hands of Warre.
All pittie choak'd with custome of fell deeds,
And Caesars Spirit ranging for Reuenge,
With Ate by his side, come hot from Hell,
Shall in these Confinnes, with a Monarkes voyce,
Cry hauocke, and let slip the Dogges of Warre,
That this foule deede, shall smell about the earth
With Carrion men, groaning for Buriall.

Enter Octavius's Seruant.

You serue Octavius Caesar, do you not?

Ser. I do Marke Antony.

Ant. Caesar did write for him to come to Rome.

Ser. He did receiue his Letters, and is comming,
And bid me say to you by word of mouth——
O Caesar!

Ant. Thy heart is bigge: get thee a-part and weeper:
Passion I see is catching from mine eyes,
Seeing those Beads of sorrow stand in thine,
Began to water. Is thy Master comming?

Ser. He lies to night within seuen Leagues of Rome.

Ant. Post backe with speede,
And tell him what hath chanc'd:
Heere is a mourning Rome, a dangerous Rome,
No Rome of safety for Octavius yet,
Hie hence; and tell him so. Yet stay a while,

Thou

Thou shalt not backe, till I haue borne this course
Into the Market place There shall I try
In my Orat[i]on, how the People take
The cruell issue of these bloody men,
According to the which, thou shalt discourse
To yong Octavius, of the state of things
Lend me your hand.

Exeunt

Enter Brutus and goes into the Pulpit, and Cassius, with the Plebeians.

Ple. We will be satisfied let vs be satisfied,
Brn. Then follow me, and giue me Audience friends.
Cassius go you into the other streete,
And part the Numbers.
Those that will heare me speake, let 'em stay heere;
Those that will follow Cassius, go with him,
And publike Reasons shall be rendred
Of Cæsars death

1. Ple. I will heare Brutus speake.
2. I will heare Cassius, and compare their Reasons,
When severally we heare them rendred.
3 The Noble Brutus is ascended. Silence.
Brn. Be patient till the last Romans, Countrey-men, and Louers, heare mee for my cause, and be silent, that you may heare Beleeue me for mine Honor, and haue respect to mine Honor, that you may beleeue. Censure me in your Wisedom, and awake your Senses, that you may the better Iudge If there bee any in this Assembly, any deere Friend of Cæsars, to him
I say, that Brutus loue to Cesar, was no lesse then his. If then, that Friend demand, why Brutus rose against Cesar, this is my answer Not that I lou'd Cesar lesse, but that I lou'd Rome more. Had you rather Cesar were liuing, and dye all Slaues; then that Cesar were dead, to liue all Free-men? As Cesar lou'd mee, I weep for him, as he was Fortunate, I reioyce at it; as he was Valiant, I honour him. But, as he was Ambitious, I slew him. There is Teares, for his Loue. Joy, for his Fortune Honor, for his Valour; and Death, for his Ambition Who is heere so base, that would be a Bondman? If any, speake, for him haue I offended. Who is heere so rude, that would not be a Roman? If any, speake, for him haue I offended Who is heere so vile, that will not loue his Countrey? If any, speake, for him haue I offended. I pause for a Reply.

All. None Brutus, none

Brutus Then none haue I offended I haue done no more to Cesar, then you shall do to Brutus. The Quest[i]o[n] of his death, is inroll'd in the Capitoll. his Glory not extenuated, wherein he was worthy, nor his offences enforced, for which he suffered death.

Enter Mark Antony, with Cæsars body.

Heere comes his Body, mourn'd by Marke Antony, who though he had no hand in his death, shall receiue the benefit of his dying, a place in the Commonwealt[h], as which of you shall not. With this I depart, that as I slewe my best Lower for the good of Rome, I haue the same Dagger for my selfe, when it shall please my Countrey to need my death.

All. Liue Brutus, liue, liue.

1. Bring him with Triumph home vnto his house.
2. Giue him a Statue with his Ancestors
3. Let him be Cesar.
4. Cæsars better parts,

Shall be Crown'd in Brutus.

1. Wee'l bring him to his House,
With Showts and Clamors.

Brn. My Countrey-men.

2. Peace, silence, Brutus speaks.

1. Peace ho.

Brn. Good Countrey-men, let me depart alone,
And (for my sake) stay heere with Antony.
Do grace to Cæsars Corpes, and grace his Speech
Tending to Cæsars Glories, which Marke Antony
(By our permission) is allow'd to make.
I do intreat you, not a man depart,
Saue I alone, till Antony haue spoke.

Exit

1 Stay ho, and let vs heare Mark Antony.

3 Let him go vp into the publike Chaire,

Wee'l heare him. Noble Antony go vp.

Ant. For Brutus sake, I am beholding to you.

4 What does he say of Brutus?

3 He sayes, for Brutus sake

He findes himselfe beholding to vs all.

4 'Twere best he speake no harme of Brutus heere?

1 This Cesar was a Tyrant.

3 Nay that's certaine

Weare blest that Rome is rid of him.

2 Peace, let vs heare what Antony can say;

Ant. You gentle Romans

All. Peace hoe, let vs heare him.

Ant. Friends, Romans, Countrey-men, lend me your ears:

I come to bury Cesar, not to praise him:

The euill that men do, liues after them,

The good is oft enterred with their bones,

So let it be with Cesar. The Noble Brutus;

Hath told you Cesar was Ambitious.

If it were so, it was a greuous Fault,

And greuously hath Cesar answer'd it.

Heere, vnder leaue of Brutus, and the rest

(For Brutus is an Honourable man,

So are they all, all Honourable men)

Come I to speake in Cæsars Funerall.

He was my Friend, faithfull, and iust to me;

But Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious,

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

He hath brought many Captiues home to Rome,

Whose Ransomes, did the generall Coffers fill:

Did this in Cesar seeme Ambitious?

When that the poore haue cry'de, Cesar hath wept:

Ambition should be made of sterner stuffe,

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious!

And Brutus is an Honourable man.

You all did see, that on the Lupercall;

I thrice presented him a Kingly Crowne,

Which he did thrice refuse Was this Ambition?

Yet Brutus sayes, he was Ambitious:

And sure he is an Honourable man

I speake not to disprooue what Brutus spoke,

But heere I am, to speake what I do know;

You all did loue him once, not without cause,

What cause with-holds you then, to mourne for him?

O Iudgement! thou art fled to brutish Beasts,

And Men haue lost their Reason Beare with me,

My heart is in the Coffin there with Cesar,

And I must pause, till it come backe to me.

1 Me thinks there is much reason in his sayings

2 If thou consider rightly of the matter,

Cesar ha's had great wrong.

(his place.

3 Ha's hee Masters? I feare there will a worse come in 11

4 Marke

4. Marke ye his words? he would not take y<sup>e</sup> Crown,
Therefore 'tis certaine, he was not Ambitious:

1. If it be found so, some will deere abide it.

2. Poore soule, his eyes are red as fire with weeping.

3. There's not a Nobler man in Rome then Antony.

4. Now marke him, he begins againe to speake.

Ant. But yesterday, the word of Caesar might Haue stood against the World: Now lies he there,
And none so poore to do him reuerence,
O Masters! If I were dispos'd to stirre
Your hearts and mindes to Mutiny and Rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong:
Who (you all know) are I honourable men.
I will not do them wrong: I rather choose
To wrong the dead, to wrong my selfe and you,
Then I will wrong such Honourable men
But heere's a Parchment, with the Seale of Caesar,
I found it in his Closset, 'tis his Will:
Let but the Commons heare this Testament:
(Which pardon me) I do not meane to reade,
And they would go and kisse dead Caesar's wounds,
And dip their Napkins in his Sacred Blood;
Yea, begge a haire of him for Memory,
And dying, mention it within their Willes,
Bequeathing it as a rich Legacie
Vnto their issue.

4. Wee'l heare the Will, reade it Marke Antony.

All. The Will, the Will; we will heare Caesar's Will

Ant. Haue patience gentle Friends, I must not read it.

It is not meete you know how Caesar lou'd you:
You are not Wood, you are not Stones, but men:
And being men, hearing the Will of Caesar,
It will inflame you, it will make you mad:
'Tis good you know not that you are his Heires,
For it you should, O what would come of it?

4. Read the Will, wee'l heare it Antony:
You shall reade vs the Will, Caesar's Will.

Ant. Will you be Patient? Will you stay a while?
I haue o're-shot my selfe to tell you of it,
I feare I wrong the Honourable men,
Whose Daggers haue stabb'd Caesar: I do feare it.

4. They were Traitors: Honourable men?

All. The Will, the Testament.

2. They were Villaines, Murderers the Will, read the Will.

Ant. You will compell me then to read the Will:
Then make a Ring about the Corpses of Caesar,
And let me shew you him that made the Will:
Shall I descend? And will you giue me leaue?

All. Come downe.

2. Descend

3. You shall haue leaue.

4. A Ring, stand round.

1. Stand from the Hearse, stand from the Body.

2. Roome for Antony, most Noble Antony.

Ant. Nay presse not so vpon me, stand farre off.

All. Stand backe: roome, beare backe.

Ant. If you haue teares, prepare to shed them now.

You all do know this Mantle, I remember
The first time euer Caesar put it on,
'Twas on a Summers Euening in his Tent,
That day he ouercame the Nervy.
Looke in this place ran Cassius Dagger through:
See what a rent the enuious Caius made:
Through this, the wel-beloued Brutus stabb'd,
And as he pluck'd his cursed Steele away:

Marke how the blood of Caesar followed it,
As rushing out of doores, to be resolu'd
If Brutus so vnkindely knock'd, or no:
For Brutus, as you know, was Caesar's Angel.
Iudge, O you Gods, how deere Caesar lou'd him:
This was the most vnkindest cut of all.
For when the Noble Caesar saw him stab,
Ingratitude, more strong then Traitors armes,
Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his Mighty heart,
And in his Mantle, murther'd vp his face,
Euen at the Base of Pompey's Statue
(Which all the while ran blood; great Caesar fell.
O what a fall was there, my Countrymen?
Then I, and you, and all of vs fell downe,
Whil'st bloody Treason flourish'd ouer vs.
O now you weepe, and I perceiue you feele
The dint of pittie: These are gracious droppes
Kinde Soules, what weepe you, when you but behold
Our Caesar's Vesture wounded? Looke you heere, Heere is Himselfe, murther'd as you see with Traitors.

1. O piteous spectacle!

2. O Noble Caesar!

3. O wofull day!

4. O Traitors, Villaines!

1. O most bloody sight!

2. We will be reueng'd. Reuenge
About, seeke, burne, fire, kill, slay,
Let not a Traitor liue.

Ant. Stay Country-men.

1. Peace there, heare the Noble Antony.

2. Wee'l heare him, wee'l follow him, wee'l dy with him. (you vp)

Ant. Good Friends, sweet Friends, let me not stirre
To such a sodaine Flood of Mutiny:
They that haue done this Deede, are honourable.
What private griefes they haue, alas I know not,
That maketh them do it: They are Wile, and Honourable,
And will no doubt with Reasons answer you.
I come not (Friends) to steale away your hearts,
I am no Orator, as Brutus is;
But (as you know me all) a plaine blunt man
That loue my friend, and that they know full well,
That gaue me publike leaue to speake of him:
For I haue neyther writ nor words, nor worth,
Action, nor Vterance, nor the power of Speech,
To stirre mens Blood. I onely speake right on:
I tell you that, which you your selues do know,
Shew you sweet Caesar's wounds, poor poor dum mouths
And bid them speake for me. But were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruse, -p your Spirits, and put a Tongue
In eury Wound of Caesar, that should moue
The stones of Rome, to rise and Mutiny.

All. Wee'l Mutiny.

1. Wee'l burne the house of Brutus.

3. Away then, come, seeke the Conspirators.

Ant. Yet heare me Countymen, yet heare me speake

All. Peace hoe, heare Antony, most Noble Antony.

Ant. Why Friends, you go to do you know not what:
Wherein hath Caesar thus deseru'd your loues?

Alas you know not, I must tell you then:

You haue forgot the Will I told you of.

All. Most true, the Will, let's stay and heare the Will.

Ant. Heere is the Will, and vnder Caesar's Seale.

To eury Roman Citizen he giues,
To eury seuerall man, seuentie five Drachmes.

2 Ple. Most Noble Caesar, wee'l reuenge his death.

3 Ple. O Royall Caesar.

Ant. Heare me with patience.

All. Peace hoe

Ant. Moreover, he hath left you all his Walkes,
His priuate Arbors, and new-planted Orchards,
On this side Tyber, he hath left them you,
And to your heyres for euer: common pleasures
To walke abroad, and recreate your selues.
Heere was a Caesar: when comes such another?

1. Ple. Neuer, neuer come, away, away

Wee'l burne his body in the holy place,
And with the Brands fire the Traitors houses.
Take vp the body.

2 Ple. Go fetch fire.

3. Ple. Plucke downe Benches.

4. Ple. Plucke downe Formes, Windowes, any thing.

Exit Plebeians.

Ant. Now let it worke Mischeefe thou art a-foot,
Take thou what course thou wilt
How now Fellow?

Enter Seruant.

Ser. Sir, Octavius is already come to Rome.

Ant. Where is hee?

Ser. He and Lepidus are at Casars house.

Ant. And thither will I straight go visit him.

He comes vpon a wish Fortune is merry,
And in this mood will giue vs any thing.

Ser. I heard him say, Brutus and Cassius

Are rid like Madmen through the Gates of Rome

Ant. Belike they had some notice of the people
How I had moued them Bring me to Octavius. Exeunt

Enter Cinna the Poet, and after him the Plebeians.

Cinna. I dreamt to night, that I did feast with Caesar,
And things vnluckily charge my Fantasie
I haue no will to wander forth of doores,
Yet something leads me forth.

1. What is your name?

2. Whether are you going?

3. Where do you dwell?

4. Are you a married man, or a Batchellor?

2. Answer euery man directly.

1. I, and breesely.

4. I, and wisely.

3. I, and truly, you were best.

Cin. What is my name? Whether am I going? Where do I dwell? Am I a married man, or a Batchellour? Then to answer euery man, directly and breesely, wisely and truly: wisely I say, I am a Batchellor.

2 That's as much as to say, they are fooles that mar-me: you'l beare me a bang for that I feare proceede directly.

Cinna. Directly I am going to Casars Funerail.

1. As a Friend, or an Enemy?

Cinna. As a friend

2. That matter is answered directly.

4. For your dwelling: breesely

Cinna. Breesely, I dwell by the Capitoll.

3. Your name sir, truly.

Cinna. Truly, my name is Cinna.

1. Teach him to peeces, hee's a Conspirator.

Cinna. I am Cinna the Poet, I am Cinna the Poet.

4. Teach him for his bad verses, teare him for his bad Verses.

Cin. I am not Cinna the Conspirator.

4. It is no matter, his name's Cinna, plucke but his name out of his heart, and turne him going

3. Teare him, teare him, Come Brands hoe, Firebrands:
to Brutus, to Cassius, burne all. Some to Drusus House, and some to Caske's; some to Ligarius: Away, go,
Exeunt all the Plebeians.

Actus Quartus.

Enter Antony, Octavius, and Lepidus

Ant. These many then shall die, their names are pricke

Octa. Your Brother too must dye: content you Lepidus?

Lep. I do consent.

Octa. Pricke him downe Antony.

Lep. Vpon condition Publius shall not liue,

Who is your Sisters sonne. Marke Antony

Ant. He shall not liue; looke, with a spot I dam him,

But Lepidus, go you to Casars house.

Fetch the Will hither, and we shall determine

How to cut off some charge in Legacies.

Lep. What? shall I finde you heere?

Octa. Or heere, or at the Capitoll Exit Lepidus

Ant. This is a slight vnmeterable man,

Meet to be sent on Errands: is it fit

The three-fold Would diuided, he should stand

One of the three to share it?

Octa. So you thought him,
And tooke his voyce who should be prickt to dye
In our blacke Sentence and Proscription.

Ant. Octavius, I haue scene more dayes then you,

And though we lay these Honours on this man,

To ease our felues of diuers stand rous loads,

He shall but beare them, as the Ass beares Gold,

To groane and sweet vnder the Businesse,

Either led or driuen, as we point the way:

And hauing brought our Treasure, where we will,

Then take we downe his Load, and turne him off

(I like to the empty Ass) to shake his eares,

And graze in Commons

Octa. You may do your will.

But hee's a tried, and valiant Souldier.

Ant. So's my Horse Octavius, and for that

I do appoint him store of Prouender.

It is a Creature that I teach to fight,

To winde, to stop, to run directly on:

His corporall Motion, govern'd by my Spirit,

And in some taste, is Lepidus but so.

He must be taught, and train'd, and bid go forth:

A barren spirit'd Fellow; one that feeds

On Obiects, Arts, and Imitations.

Which out of vse, and stal'd by other men

Begin his fashion: Do not talke of him,

But as a property: and now Octavius,

Listen great things. Brutus and Cassius

Are leuying Powers; We must straight make head:

Therefore let our Alliance be combin'd,

Our best Friends made, our meanes stretcht,

And let vs presently go sit in Councell,

How couert matters may be best disclos'd,

And open Perils surest answered

Octa. Let vs do so: for we are at the stake,

112

And

And bayed about with many Enemies,
And some that smile haue in their hearts I feare
Millions of Mischeefes.

Exeunt

Drum. Enter Brutus, Lucillius, and the Army. Titinius and Pindarus meete them.

Brut. Stand ho.

Lucil. Giue the word ho, and Stand.

Brut. What now Lucillius, is Cassius neere?

Lucil. He is at hand, and Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his Master.

Brut. He greets me well. Your Master Pindarus
In his owne change, or by ill Officers,
Hath giuen me some worthy cause to wish
Things done, and done: But if he be at hand
I shall be satisfied.

Pin. I do not doubt
But that my Noble Master will appeare
Such as he is, full of regard, and Honour.

Brut. He is not doubted. A word Lucillius
How he receiue'd you: let me be resolu'd.

Lucil. With courtesie, and with respect enough,
But not with such familiar instances,
Nor with such free and friendly Conference
As he hath vs'd of old.

Brut. Thou hast describ'd
A hot Friend, cooling: Euer note Lucillius,
When Loue begins to sicken and decay
It weth an enforced Ceremony
There are no trickes, in plaine and simple Faith:
But hollow men, like Horses hot at hand,
Make gallant shew, and promise of their Mettle:

Long March within.

But when they should endure the bloody Spurre,
They fall their Crests, and like decentfull Iades Sinke in the Triall Comes his Army on?

Lucil. They meane this night in Sardis to be quarter'd:
The greater part, the Horse in generall
Are come with Cassius

Enter Cassius and his Pavers

Brut. Hearke, he is arriv'd:
March gently on to meete him.

Cassi. Stand ho,

Brut. Stand ho, speake the word along.

Stand.

Stand.

Stand.

Cassi. Most Noble Brother, you haue done me wrong.

Brut. Iudge me you Gods; wrong I mine Enemies?
And if not so, how should I wrong a Brother

Cassi Brutus, this sober forme of yours, hides wrongs,
And when you do them——

Brut Cassius, be content,

Speake your griefes softly, I do know you well.
Before the eyes of both our Armies heere
(Which should perceiue nothing but Loue from vs)
Let vs not wrangle. Bid them moue a way:
Then in my Tent Cassius enlarge your Griefes,
And I will giue you Audience.

Cassi Pindarus,
Bid our Commanders leade their Charges off
A little from this ground

Brut. Lucillius, do you the like, and let no man
Come to our Tent, till we haue done our Conference.

Let Lucius and Titinius guard our doore.

Exeunt

Manet Brutus and Cassius.

Cassi. That you haue wrong'd me, doth appear in this
You haue condemn'd, and noted Lucius Pella
For taking Bribes heere of the Sardians;
Wherein my Letters, praying on his side,
Because I knew the man was slighted off.

Brut. You wrong'd your selfe to write in such a case

Cassi. In such a time as this, it is not meet
That euery nice offence should beare his Comment.

Brut. Let me tell you Cassius, you your selfe,
Are much condemn'd to haue an itching Palme,
To sell, and Mart your Offices for Gold
To Vndeseruers.

Cassi. I, an itching Palme?

You know that you are Brutus that speaks this,
Or by the Gods, this speech were else your last.

Brut. The name of Cassius Honors this corruption,
And Chastisement doth therefore hide his head

Cassi. Chastisement?

Brut. Remember March, the Ides of March remeber:
Did not great Iulius bleed for Iustice sake?

What Villaine touch'd his body, that did stab,
And not for Iustice? What? Shall one of Vs,
That stricke the Formost man of all this World,
But for supporting Robbers shall we now,
Contaminate our fingers, with base Bribes?
And sell the mighty space of our large Honors
For so much trash, as may be grasped thus?
I had rather be a Dogge, and bay the Moone,
Then such a Roman

Cassi Brutus, baxe not me,
He not indure it: you forget your selfe
To hedge me in. I am a Souldier, I,
Older in practice, Abler then your selfe
To make Conditions

Brut Go too you are not Cassius

Cassi I am.

Brut. I say, you are not.

Cassi Vnge me no more, I shall forget my selfe
Haue minde vpon your health: Tempt me no farther.

Brut Away slight man.

Cassi Is't possible?

Brut. Heare me, for I will speake.

Must I giue way, and roome to your rash Choller?
Shall I be frighted, when a Madman faires?

Cassi. O ye Gods, ye Gods, Must I endure all this?

Brut. All this? I more Fret till your proud hart break Go shew your Slaues how Chollerick you are,
And make your Bondmen tremble. Must I bouge?
Must I obserue you? Must I stand and crouch
Vnder your Testie Humour? By the Gods,
You shall digest the Venom of your Spleene
Though it do Split you For, from this day forth,
He vse you for my Mirth, yea for my Laughter
When you are Waspsish

Cassi Is it come to this?

Brut You say, you are a better Souldier
Let it appeare so, make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well. For mine owne part,
I shall be glad to learne of Noble men.

Cassi. You wrong me euery way
You wrong me Brutus:
I saide, an Elder Souldier, not a Better.
Did I say Better?

Brut. If you did, I care not.

Cassi. When Cæsar liu'd, he durst not thus haue mou'd
Brut. Peace, peace, you durst not so haue tempted him

(me
Cass

Cassi. I durst not.

Bru. No.

Cassi. What? durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cassi. Do not presume too much vpon my Loue, Imay do that I shall be sorry for

Bru. You haue done that you should be sorry for.

There is no terror Cassius in your threats
For I am Arm'd so strong in Honesty,
That they passe by me, as the idle winde,
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certaine summes of Gold, which you deny'd me,
For I can raise no money by vile meanes
By Heauen, I had rather Come my Heart,
And drop my blood for Drachmaes, then to wring
From the hard hands of Pezants, their vile trash
By any indirection I did send
To you for Gold to pay my Legions,
Which you deny'd me - was that done like Cassius?
Should I haue answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so Couetous,
To locke such Rascall Counters from his Friends,
Be ready Gods with all your Thunder-bolts,
Dash him to peeces.

Cassi. I deny'd you not.

Bru. You did.

Cassi. I did not. He was but a Foole
That brought my answer back. Brutus hath riu'd my hart
A Friend should beare his Friends infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater then they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practice them on me

Cassi. You loue me not.

Bru. I do not like your faults.

Cassi. A friendly eye could neuer see such faults.

Bru. A Flatterer would not, though they do appeare
As huge as high Olympus.

Cassi. Come Antony, and yong Octavius come,
Reuenge your selues alone on Cassius,
For Cassius is a-weary of the World:
Hated by one he loues, brau'd by his Brother,
Check'd like a bondman, all his faults obseu'd,
Set in a Note-booke, learn'd, and con'd by rote
To cast into my Teeth. O I could weepe
My Spirit from mine eyes. There is my Dagger,
And heere my naked Breast - Within, a Heart
Deerer then Pluto's Mine, Richer then Gold.
If that thou bee'st a Roman, take it forth.
I that deny'd thee Gold, will giue my Heart:
Strike as thou did'st at Caesar For I know,
When thou did'st hate him worst, I loued'st him better
Then euer thou loued'st Cassius.

Bru. Sheath your Dagger.

Be angry when you will, it shall haue scope:
Do what you will, Dishonor, shall be Humour.
O Cassius, you are yoked with a Lambe
That carries Anger, as the Flint beares fire,
Who much inforced, shewes a hastic Spark,
And strait is cold agen.

Cassi. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but Mirth and Laughter to his Brutus,
When greefe and blood ill temper'd vexeth him?

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill temper'd too

Cassi. Do you confesse so much? Giue me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too.

Cassi. O Brutus!

Bru. What's the matter?

Cassi. Haue not you loue enough to beare with me,
When that rash humour which my Mother gaue me
Makes me forgetfull.

Bru. Yes Cassius, and from henceforth
When you are ouer-earnest with your Brutus,
Hec'll thinke your Mother chides, and leaue you so.

Enter a Poet.

Poet. Let me go in to see the Generals,
There is some grudge betweene em, 'tis not meete
They be alone.

Luci. You shall not come to them.

Poet. Nothing but death shall stay me.

Cas. How now? What's the matter?

Poet. For shame you Generals; what do you meane?
Loue, and be Friends, as two such men should bee,
For I haue scene more yeeres I'm sure then yee.

Cas. Ha, ha, how vildely doth this Cynicke rime?

Bru. Get you hence sitra: Sawcy fellow, hence.

Cas. Beare with him Brutus, 'tis his fashion.

Bru. He know his humor, when he knowes his time.
What should the Warres do with these liggig Fooles?
Companion, hence

Cas. Away, away be gone.

Exit Poet

Bru. Lucillus and Titinius bid the Commanders
Prepare to lodge their Companies to night.

Cas. And come your selues, & bring Messala with you Immediately to vs

Bru. Lucius, a bowle of Wine.

Cas. I did not thinke you could haue bin so angry.

Bru. O Cassius, I am sicke of many griefes.

Cas. Of your Philosophy you make no vse,
If you giue place to accidentall euils.

Bru. No man beares sorrow better. Portia is dead.

Cas. Had Portia?

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How scap'd I killing, when I crost you so?
O insupportable, and touching losse!
Vpon what sicknesse?

Bru. Impatient of my absence,
And greefe, that yong Octavius with Mark Antony
Haue made themselues so strong. For with her death
That tydings came. With th's she fell distra'd,
And (her Attendants absent) swallow'd fire.

Cas. And dy'd so?

Bru. Euen so.

Cas. O ye immortall Gods!

Enter Boy with Wine, and Tapers.

Bru. Speak no more of her Giue me a bowl of wine,
In this I bury all unkindnesse Cassius. Drinke!

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that Noble pledge,
Fill Lucius, till the Wine ore-swell the Cup:
I cannot drinke too much of Brutus loue.

Enter Titinius and Messala.

Brutus. Come in Titinius - Welcome good Messala
Now sit we close about this Taper heere,
And call in question our necessities.

Cas. Portia, art thou gone?

Bru. No more I pray you.

Messala. I haue heere receiued Letters,
That yong Octavius, and Mark Antony
Come downe vpon vs with a mighty power,
Bending their Expedition toward Philippi.

Mess. My selfe haue Letters of the selfe-same Tenure.

Brut. With what Addition.

Mess. That by proscription, and billes of Outlarie,
Octavius, Antony, and Lepidus,
Haue put to death, an hundred Senators.

Brut. Therein our Letters do not well agree:
Mine speake of seventy Senators, that dy'de
By their proscriptions, Cicero being one.

Cassi. Cicero one?

Messa. Cicero is dead, and by that order of proscription
Had you your Letters from your wife, my Lord?

Brut. No Messala.

Messa. Nor nothing in your Letters writ of her?

Brut. Nothing Messala.

Messa. That me thinkes is strange.

Brut. Why aske you?

Hear you ought of her, in yours?

Messa. No my Lord.

Brut. Now as you are a Roman tell me true

Messa. Then like a Roman, beare the truth I tell,
For certaine she is dead, and by strange manner.

Brut. Why farewell Portia We must die Messala:
With meditating that she must dye once,
I haue the patience to endure it now.

Messa. Euen so great men, great losses shold indure

Cassi. I haue as much of this in Art as you,

But yet my Nature could not beare it so.

Brut. Well, to our worke aloue. What do you thinke
Of marching to *Philipp*s presently.

Cassi. I do not thinke it good.

Brut. Your reason?

Cassi. This it is:

'Tis better that the Enemy seeke vs,
So shall he waste his meanes, weary his Souldiers,
Doing himselfe offence, whilst we lying still,
Are full of rest, defence, and nimblenesse.

Brut. Good reasons must of force giue place to better:
The people 'twixt *Philipp*s, and this ground
Do stand but in a forc'd affection:
For they haue grudg'd vs Contribution.
The Enemy, marching along by them,
By them shall make a fuller number vp,
Come on refresh'd, new added, and encourag'd:
From which advantage shall we cut him off.
If at *Philipp*s we do face him there,
These people at our backe.

Cassi. Hear me good Brother.

Brut. Vnder your pardon. You must note beside,
That we haue tride the vtmost of our Friends:
Our Legions are brim full, our cause is ripe,
The Enemy encrease the every day,
We at the height, are ready to decline.
There is a Tide in the assayres of men,
Which taken at the Flood, leades on to Fortune:
Omitted, all the voyage of their life,
Is bound in Shallowes, and in Miseries
On such a full Sea are we now a-flour,
And we must take the current when it serues,
Or loose our Ventures.

Cassi. Then with your will go on: wee'l along
Our selues, and meet them at *Philipp*s.

Brut. The deepe of night is crept vpon our talke,
And Nature must obey Necessitie,
Which we will niggard with a little rest.
There is no more to say

Cassi. No more, good night,

Early to morrow will we rise, and hence.

Enter Lucius

Brut. Lucius my Gowne-farewell good Messala,
Good night Titinius: Noble, Noble Cassius.
Good night, and good repose.

Cassi. O my deere Brother:

This was an ill beginning of the night:
Neuer come such distulion 'twene our soules -
Let it not Brutus.

Enter Lucius with the Gowne.

Brut. Euery thing is well.

Cassi. Good night my Lord.

Brut. Good night good Brother.

Tit. Messa Good night Lord Brutus.

Brut. Farwell euery one.

Exeunt

Giue me the Gowne. Where is thy Instrument?

Lho. Heere in the Tent

Brut. What, thou speak'st drowsily?

Poore knaue I blame thee not, thou art ore-watch'd,
Call Claudio, and some other of my men,
He haue them sleepe on Cushions in my Tent.

Luc. Varrus, and Claudio.

Enter Varrus and Claudio.

Var. Cals my Lord?

Brut. I pray you sirs, lye in my Tent and sleepe,
It may be I shall rase you by and by
On businesse to my Brother Cassius.

Var. So please you, we will stand,
And watch your pleasure.

Brut. I will it not haue it so: Lye downe good sirs,
It may be I shall otherwise bethinke me
Looke Lucius, heere's the booke I sought for so
I put it in the pocket of my Gowne.

Luc. I was sure your Lordship did not giue it me.

Brut. Beare with me good Boy, I am much forgetfull.
Canst thou hold vp thy heame eyes a-while,
And touch thy Instrument a straine or two.

Luc. I my Lord, an't please you.

Brut. It does my Boy:

I trouble thee too much, but thou art willing.

Luc. It is my duty Sir.

Brut. I should not vrge thy duty past thy might,
I know yong bloods looke for a time of rest.

Luc. I haue slept my Lord already.

Brut. It was well done, and thou shalt sleepe againe
I will not hold thee long. If I do 'uue,
I will be good to thee.

Musicke, and a Song

This is a sleepey Tune. O Murd'rous slumbler!
Layest thou thy Leaden Mace vpon my Boy,
That playes thee Musicke? Gentle knaue good night.
I will not do thee so much wrong to wake thee:
If thou do'st nod, thou break'st thy Instrument,
He take it from thee, and (good Boy) good night
Let me see, let me see; is not the Lease run'd downe
Where I left reading? Heere it is I thinke.

Enter the Ghost of Caesar.

How ill this Taper burnes Ha! Who comes heere?
I thinke it is the weakenesse of mine eyes
That shapeth this monstrous Apparition.
It comes vpon me: Art thou any thing?
Art thou some God, some Angell, or some Diuell,
That mak'st my blood cold, and my haire to stare?
Speake to me, what thou art.

Ghost. Thy euill Spirit Brutus?

Brut. Why com'st thou?

Ghost

Ghost. To tell thee thou shalt see me at Philippi.
Brut. Well : then I shall see thee againe?
Ghost. I, at Philippi.
Brut. Why I will see thee at Philippi then
 Now I haue taken heart, thou vanishest.
Ill Spirit, I would hold more talke with thee.
Boy, Lucius, Varrus, Claudius, Sirs . Awake
Claudius.
Luc. The strings my Lord, are false
Brut. He thinks he still is at his Instrument,
Lucius, awake.
Luc. My Lord
Brut. Did'st thou dreame Lucius, that thou so cryedst out?
Luc. My Lord, I do not know that I did cry.
Brut. Yes that thou did'st . Did'st thou see any thing?
Luc. Nothing my Lord
Brut. Sleepe againe Lucius Sirra Claudius, fellow, Thou Awake
Varr. My Lord.
Claus. My Lord.
Brut. Why did you so cry out sir, in your sleepe?
Boith. Did we my Lord?
Brut. I . saw you any thing?
Varr. No my Lord, I saw nothing.
Claus. Nor I my Lord.
Brut. Go, and commend me to my Brother Cassius .
 Bid him set on his Powres betimes before,
 And we will follow.
Boith. It shall be done my Lord. Exeunt

Actus Quintus.

Enter Octavius, Antony, and their Army.
Octa. Now Antony, our hopes are answered,
 You said the Enemy would not come downe,
 But keepe the Hilles and vpper Regions:
 It proues not so their battailes are at hand,
 They meane to warne vs at Philippi heere:
 Answering before we do demand of them
Ant. Tut I am in their bosomes, and I know
 Wherefore they do it . They could be content
 To visit other places, and come downe
 With fearefull brauery: thinking by this face
 To fasten in our thoughts that they haue Courage;
 But 'tis not so.

Enter a Messenger.
Mes. Prepa: e you Generals,
 The Enemy comes on in gallant shew:
 Their bloody signe of Battell is hung out,
 And something to be done immediately.
Ant. Octavius, leade your Battaille softly on Vpon the left: hand of the euen Field.
Octa. Vpon the right hand I keepe thou the left
Ant. Why do you crosse me in this exigent.
Octa. I do not crosse you but I will do so. March.

Drum. Enter Brutus, Cassius, & their Army.
Brut. They stand, and would haue parley.
Cassi. Stand fast Titinius, we must out and talke
Octa. Mark Antony, shall we giue signe of Battaille?
Ant. No Caesar, we will answer on their Charge.

Make forth, the Generals would haue some words,
Oct. Surre not vntill the Signall.
Brut. Words before blowes: is it so Countrymen?
Octa. Not that we loue words better, as you do,
Brut. Good words are better then bad strokes Octavius.
Ant. In your bad strokes Brutus, you giue good words
 Witnesse the hole you made in Caesar's heart,
 Crying long-loue, Haile Caesar.
Cassi. Antony,
 The posture of your blowes are yet vnknowne;
 But for your words, they rob the Hibla Bees,
 And leaue them Hony-lesse
Ant. Not stinglesse too.
Brut. O yes, and foundlesse too:
 For you haue stolne their buzzing Antony,
 And very wisely threat before you sting.
Ant. Villains: you did not so, when your vile daggers
 Hackt one another in the sides of Caesar .
 You shew'd your teethes like Apes,
 And fawn'd like Hounds,
 And bow'd like Bondmen, kissing Caesar's feete;
 Whil'st damned Caska, like a Curie, behinde
 Strooke Caesar on the necke. O you Flatterers.
Cassi. Flatterers? Now Brutus thanke your selfe,
 This tongue had not offended so to day,
 If Cassius might haue rul'd
Octa. Come, come, the cause, if arguing make vs sweet,
 The prooue of it will turne to redder drops:
 Looke, I draw a Sword against Conspirators,
 When thinke you that the Sword goes vp againe?
 Neuer till Caesar's three and thirtie wounds
 Be well sueng'd, or till another Caesar
 Haue added slaughter to the Sword of Traitors.
Brut. Caesar, thou canst not dye by Traitors hands,
 Vnlesse thou bring'st them with thee.
Octa. So I hope .
 I was not borne to dye on Brutus Sword.
Brut. O if thou wer't the Noblest of thy Straine,
 Yong-man, thou could'st not dye more honourable.
Cassi. A peeuisch School-boy, worthles of such Honor
 Ioyn'd with a Masker, and a Reueller.
Ant. Old Cassius still.
Octa. Come Antony - away:
 Defiance Traitors, hurle we in your teeth.
 If you dare fight to day, come to the Field,
 If not, when you haue stomackes.
Exit Octavius, Antony, and Army
Cassi. Whynow blow winde, swell Billow,
 And swimme Barke:
 The Storme is vp, and all is on the hazard.
Brut. Ho Lucilius, hearke, a word with you.
Lucilius and Messala stand forth.
Luc. My Lord.
Cassi. Messala.
Messa. What sayes my Generall?
Cassi. Messala, this is my Birth-day : as this very day
 Was Cassius borne. Giue me thy hand Messala:
 Be thou my witnesse, that against my will
 (As Pompey was) am I compell'd to set
 Vpon one Battell all our Liberties.
 You know, that I held Epichurus strong,
 And his Opinion: Now I change my minde,
 And partly credit things that do preface.
 Comming from Sardis, on our former Ensigne
 Two mighty Eagles fell, and there they perch'd,
 Gorging and feeding from our Soldiers hands,

Who

Who to Philipp heere comforted vs:
This Morning are they fled away, and gone,
And in their steeds, do Rauens, Crowes, and Kites
Fly ore our heads, and downward looke on vs
As we were sickely prey; their shadowes seeme
A Canopy most fatall, vnder which
Our Army lies, ready to giue vp the Ghost.

Messa. Beleeue not so.

Cassi. I but beleeue it partly,
For I am fresh of spirit, and resolu'd
To meete all perils, very constantly.

Brut. Euen so Lucilius.

Cassi. Now most Noble Brutus,
The Gods to day stand friendly, that we may
Louers in peace, leade on our dayes to age.
But since the affayres of men rests still incertaine,
Let's reason with the worst that may befall.
If we do lose this Battaille, then is this
The very last time we shall speake together:
What are you then determined to do?

Brut. Euen by the rule of that Philosophy,
By which I did blame Cato, for the death
Which he did giue himselfe, I know not how:
But I do finde it Cowardly, and vile,
For feare of what might fall, so to preuent
The time of life, arming my selfe with patience,
To stay the prouidence of some high Powers,
That gouerne vs below.

Cassi. Then, if we loose this Battaille,
You are contented to be led in Triumph
Thorow the streets of Rome.

Brut. No Cassius, no:

Thinke not thou Noble Romane,
That euer Brutus will go bound to Rome,
He beares too great a minde. But this same day
Must end that worke, the Ides of March begun.
And whether we shall meete againe, I know not:
Therefore our euerlasting farewell take:
For euer, and for euer, farewell Cassius,
If we do meete againe, why we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cassi. For euer, and for euer, farewell Brutus:
If we do meete againe, wee'll smile indeede;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Brut. Why then leade on. O that a man might know
The end of this dayes businesse, ere it come:
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is knowne. Come ho, away. Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter Brutus and Messala.

Brut. Ride, ride Messala, ride and giue these Billes
Vnto the Legions, on the other side.

Lowd Alarm.

Let them set on at once. For I perceive
But cold demeanor in Octavius's wing:
And sodaine push giues them the ouerthrow:
Ride, ride Messala, let them all come downe. Exeunt.

Alarums. Enter Cassius and Titinius.

Cassi. O looke Titinius, looke, the Villaines flye:
My selfe haue to mine owne turn'd Enemy:
This Ensigne heere of mine was turning backe,
I slew the Coward, and did take it from him.

Titim. O Cassius, Brutus gaue the word too early,

Who hauing some aduantage on Octavius,
Tooke it too eagerly. his Soldiers fell to spoyle,
Whil'st we by Antony are all inclos'd.

Enter Pindarus.

Pind. Fly further off my Lord. flye further off,
Mark Antony is in your Tents my Lord.
Flye therefore Noble Cassius, flye farre off.

Cassi. This Hill is farre enough. Looke, look Titinius,
Are those my Tents where I perceiue the fire?

Tit. They are, my Lord.

Cassi. Titinius, if thou louest me,
Mount thou my horse, and hide thy spurs in him,
Till he haue brought thee vp to yonder Troopes
And heere againe, that I may rest assur'd
Whether yond Troopes, are Friend or Enemy.

Tit. I will be heere againe, euen with a thought. Exit.

Cassi. Go Pindarus, get higher on that hill,
My sight was euer thicke: regard Titinius,
And tell me what thou nor'st about the Field.
This day I breathed first, Time is come round,
And where I did begin, there shall I end,
My life is run his compasse. Sirra, what newes?

Pind. Abooue. O my Lord

Cassi. What newes?

Pind. Titinius is enclosed round about
With Horsemen, that make to him on the Spurre,
Yet he spurres on. Now they are almost on him.
Now Titinius. Now some light. O he lights too.
Hee's tane. Shout.

And hearke, they shout for ioy.

Cassi. Come downe, behold no more:
O Coward that I am, to liue so long,
To see my best Friend tane before my face

Enter Pindarus

Come hither sirrah. In Parthia did I take thee Prisoner,
And then I swore thee, sauing of thy life,
That whatsoeuer I did bid thee do,
Thou should'st attempt it. Come now, keepe thine oath,
Now be a Free-man, and with this good Sword
That ran through Cesar's howels, search this bosome.
Stand not to answer. Heere, take thou the Hilt,
And when my face is couer'd, as 'tis now,
Guide thou the Sword — Cesar, thou art reueng'd,
Euen with the Sword that kill'd thee.

Pind. So, I am free,
Yet would not so haue beene
Durst I haue done my will. O Cassius,
Farre from this Country Pindarus shall run,
Where neuer Roman shall take note of him.

Enter Titinius and Messala.

Messa. It is but change, Titinius: for Octavius
Is ouerthrowne by Noble Brutus power,
As Cassius Legions are by Antony.

Titim. These tydings will well comfort Cassius.

Messa. Where did you leaue him.

Titim. All disconsolate,

With Pindarus his Bondman, on this Hill.

Messa. Is not that he that lyes vpon the ground?

Titim. He lies not like the Liuing. O my heart!

Messa. Is not that hee?

Titim. No, this was he Messala,

But Cassius is no more. O setting Sunne.
As in thy red Rayes thou dost sinke to night;

So

So in his red blood Cassius day is set.
The Sunne of Rome is set. Our day is gone,
Clouds, Dewes, and Dangers come; our deeds are done:
Mistrust of my successe hath done this deed

Messa. Mistrust of good successe hath done this deed
O hatefull Error, Melancholies Childe
Why do'st thou shew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O Error soone concey'd,
Thou neuer com'st vnto a happy byrth,
But kill'st the Mother that engenderd thee.

Tit. What Pindarus? Where art thou Pindarus?
Messa. Seeke him Tutius, whilst I go to meet
The Noble Brutus, thrusting this report
Into his eares; I may say thrusting it
For piercing Steele, and Darts inuenomed,
Shall be as welcome to the eares of Brutus,
As tydings of this fight.

Tit. Hye you Messala,
And I will seeke for Pindarus the while:
Why did'st thou send me forth braue Cassius?
Did I not meet thy Friends, and did not they Put on my Browes this wreath of Victorie,
And bid me giue it thee? Did'st thou not heare their Alas, thou hast misconstrued every thing (showts)
But hold thee, take this Gaiand on thy Brow,
Thy Brutus bid me giue it thee, and I
Will do his bidding. Brutus, come apace,
And see how I regarded Caius Cassius:
By your leaue Gods: This is a Romans part,
Come Cassius Sward, and finde Tutius hart

Dies

Alarm. Enter Brutus, Messala, young Cato,
Sirato, Volumnius, and Lucilius.

Brut. Where, where Messala, doth his body lye?

Messa. Loe yonder, and Tutius mourning it.

Brut. Tutius face is vpward.

Cato. He is slaine.

Brut. O Inlius Caesar, thou art mighty yet,
Thy Spirit walkes abroad, and turnes our Swords
In our owne proper Entrailles.

Low Alarm

Cato. Braue Tutius,
Looke where he haue not crown'd dead Cassius.

Brut. Are yet two Romans living such as these?
The last of all the Romans, far thee well

It is impossible, that euer Rome
Should breed thy fellow Friends I owe no teares
To this dead man, then you shall see me pay.

I shall finde time, Cassius I shall finde time
Come therefore, and to Thursus send his body,
His Funerals shall not be in our Campe,
Least it discomfort vs. Lucilius come,
And come young Cato, let vs to the Field,
Labio and Flavius set our Battailes on
'Tis three a clocke, and Romans yet ere night,
We shall try Fortune in a second fight.

Exeunt.

Alarm. Enter Brutus, Messala, Cato, Lucilius, and Flavius.

Brut. Yet Country-men O yet, hold vp your heads
Cato What Eastard doth not? Who will go with me?

I will proclaime my name about the Field,
I am the Sonne of Marcus Cato, hoe.

A Foe to Tyrants, and my Countreys Friend

I am the Soune of Marcus Cato, hoe
Enter Souldiers, and fight.

And I am Brutus, Marcus Brutus, I,

Brutus my Countreys Friend: Know me for Brutus.

Luc. O young and Noble Cato, art thou downe?

Why now thou dyest, as brauely as Tutius,
And may'st be honour'd, being Cato's Sonne.

Sold. Yeeld, or thou dyest.

Luc. Onely I yeeld to dye:

There is so much, that thou wilt kill me straight:

Kill Brutus, and be honour'd in his death.

Sold. We must not: a Noble Prisoner.

Enter Antony.

2 Sold. Roome here: tell Antony, Brutus is tane.

2 Sold. Ile tell thee newes: Heere comes the Generall,
Brutus is tane, Brutus is tane my Lord.

Ant. Where is hee?

Luc. Safe Antony, Brutus is safe enough:

I dare assure thee, that no Enemy

Shall euer take a liue the Noble Brutus:

The Gods defend him from so great a shame,

When you do finde him, or a liue, or dead,

He will be found like Brutus, like himselfe.

Ant. This is not Brutus friend, but I assure you,

A prize no lesse in worth; keepe this man safe,

Giue him all kindnesse, I had rather haue

Such men my Friends, then Enemies. Go on,

And see where Brutus be a liue or dead,

And bring vs word, vnto Octavius Tent:

How euerly thing is chang'd

Exeunt.

Enter Brutus, Dardanius, Clitus, Sirato, and Volumnius

Brut. Come poore remaines of friends, rest on this Rocke.

Clit. Statilius shew'd the Torch-light, but my Lord
He came not backe he is or tane, or slaine.

Brut. Sit thee downe, Clitus: slaying is the word,
It is a deed in fashion. Hearke thee, Clitus

Clit. What I, my Lord? No, not for all the World.

Brut. Peace then, no words.

Clit. Ile rather kill my selfe.

Brut. Hearke thee, Dardanius.

Dard. Shall I doe such a deed?

Clit. O Dardanius.

Dard. O Clitus

Clit. What ill request did Brutus make to thee?

Dard. To kill him, Clitus looke he meditates.

Clit. Now is that Noble Vessell full of griefe,

That it runnes ouer euen at his eyes.

Brut. Come hither, good Volumnius, list a word.

Volum. What sayes my Lord?

Brut. Why this, Volumnius:

The Ghost of Caesar hath appear'd to me
Two seuerall times by Night at Sardis, once;
And this last Night, here in Philippi fields.

I know my houre is come.

Volum. Not so, my Lord.

Brut. Nay, I am sure it is, Volumnius.

Thou seest the World, Volumnius, how it goes,
Our Enenues haue beat vs to the Pit.

Low Alarm.

It is more worthy, to leape in our selues,

Then carry till they push vs. Good Volumnius,

Thou know'st, that we two went to Schoole together:

Euen for that our loue of old, I prethee

Hold thou my Sword hilts, whilst I runne on it.

Vol. That's not an Office for a friend, my Lord.

Alarm still.

Clit. Fly,

Cly Fly, flye my Lord, there is no carrying heere.

Brut. Farewell so you, and you, and you Volumnius.

Strato, thou hast bin all this while asleepe :

Farewell to thee, to Strato, Countrymen :

My heart doth ioy, that yet In all my life,

I found no man, but he was true to me.

I shall haue glory by this loosing day

More then Octavius, and Marke Antony,

By this vile Conquest shall attaine vnto.

So fare you well at once, for Brutus tongue

Hath almost ended his liues History :

Night hangs vpon mine eyes, my Bones would rest,

That haue but labour'd, to attaine this houre.

Alarum. Cry within, Flye, flye, flye.

Cly Fly my Lord, flye.

Brut. Hence : I will follow .

I prythee Strato, stay thou by thy Lord,

Thou art a Fellow of a good respect .

Thy life hath had some smatch of Honor in it,

Hold then my Sword, and turne away thy face,

While I do run vpon it. Wilt thou Strato ?

Strat. Giue me your hand first, Fare you wel my Lord.

Brut. Farewell good Strato. ——— Cesar, now be still,
I kill'd not thee with halfe so good a will. Dyes.

Alarum. Retreat. Enter Antony, Octavius, Messala,

Lucilius, and the Army.

Octa. What man is that ?

Messa. My Masters man Strato, where is thy Master ?

Strat. Free from the Bondage you are in Messala,

The Conquerors can but make a fire of him :

For Brutus onely ouercame himselfe,

And no man else hath Honor by his death.

Lucil. So Brutus should be found. I thank thee Brutus

That thou hast prou'd Lucilius saying true,

Octa. All that seru'd Brutus, I will entertaine them.

Fellow, wilt thou bestow thy time with me ?

Strat. I, if Messala will preferre me to you.

Octa. Do so, good Messala.

Messa. How dyed my Master Strato ?

Strat. I held the Sword, and he did run on it.

Messa. Octavius, then take him to follow thee,
That did the latest seruice to my Master

Ant. This was the Noblest Roman of them all :

All the Conspirators saue onely hee,

Did that they did, in enuy of great Cesar :

He, onely in a generall honest thought,

And common good to all, made one of them.

His life was gentle, and the Elements

So mixt in him, that Nature might stand vp,

And say to all the world; This was a man.

Octa. According to his Vertue, let vs vse him

Withall Respect, and Rites of Buriall,

Within my Tent his bones to night shall ly,

Most like a Souldier ordered Honourably.

So call the Field to rest, and let's away,

To part the glories of this happy day. Exeunt omnes

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF MACBETH.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Thunder and Lightning. Enter three Witches.

1.  Hen shall we three meet againe?
In Thunder, Lightning, or in Raine?
2. When the Hurley-burley's done,
When the Battaille is lost, and wonne.
3 That will be ere the set of Sunne.
1 Where the place?
2. Vpon the Heath
3 There to meet with Macbeth.
1 I come, Gray-Malkin
All Paddock calls anon faire is foule, and foule is faire,
Houer through the fogge and filthie ayre. Exeunt.

Scœna Secunda.

Alarm within. Enter King Malcolm, Donalbaine, Lenox, with attendants, meeting a bleeding Captaine

King. What bloody man is that? he can report,
As seemeth by his plight, of the Revolt
The newest state

Mal. This is the Serient,
Who like a good and hardie Souldier fought
'Gainst my Captiuitie: Haile braue friend;
Say to the King, the knowledge of the Broyle,
As thou didst leaue it.

Cap. Doubtfull it stood,
As two spent Swimmers, that doe cling together,
And choake their Art: The merciesse Macdonwald (Worthie to be a Rebelle, for to that
The multiplying Villanies of Nature
Doe warme vpon him) from the Westerne Isles
Of Kernes and Gallowgrosses is supply'd,
And Fortune on his damned Quarry smiling,
Shew'd like a Rebells Whore but all's too weake
For braue Macbeth (well hee deserues that Name)
Disdayning Fortune, with his brandisht Steele,
Which sinoak'd with bloody execution
(Like Valours Minion) caru'd out his passage,
Till hee fac'd the Slaue.
Which neu'r shooke hands, nor bad farwell to him,
Till he vnscam'd him from the Naue toth' Chops,
And fix'd his Head vpon our Battlements.

King. O valiant Cousin, worthy Gentleman.

Cap. As whence the Sunne 'gins his reflection,
Shipwracking Stormes, and direfull Thunders.
So from that Spring, whence comfort seem'd to come,
Discomfort swells Marke King of Scotland, mark,
No sooner Iustice had, with Valour arm'd,
Compell'd these shipping Kernes to trust their heeles,
But the Norweyan Lord, surueying vantage,
With furbush't Armes, and new supplies of men,
Began a fresh assault

King. Dismay'd not this our Captaines Macbeth and Banquoh?

Cap. Yes, as Sparrowes, Eagles;
Or the Hare, the Lyon.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As Cannons ouer-charg'd with double Cracks,
So they doubly redoubled stroakes vpon the Foe:
Except they meant to bathe in reeking Wounds,
Or memorize another Golgotha,
I cannot tell but I am faint,
My Gashes cry for helpe.

King. So well thy words become thee, as thy wounds,
They smack of Honor both: Goe get him Surgeons,

Enter Ross and Angus.

Who comes here?

Mal. The worthy Thane of Ross.

Lenox. What a haste lookes through his eyes?
So should he looke, that seemes to speake things strange.

Rosse. God saue the King.

King. Whence cam'st thou, worthy Thane?

Rosse. From Fife, great King,
Where the Norweyan Banners flowt the Skie,
And sanne our people cold,
Norway himselfe, with terrible numbers,
Assisted by that most disloyall Traytor,
The Thane of Cawdor, began a dismall Conflict,
Till that Bellona's Bridegroome, lapt in prooffe,
Confronted him with selfe-comparisons,
Point against Point, rebellious Arme 'gainst Arme,
Curbing his lawles spirit: and to conclude,
The Victorie fell on vs.

King. Great happinesse.

Rosse. That now Sueno, the Norweyes King,
Craves composition
Nor would we deigne him buriall of his men,
Till he disbursed, at Saint Colmes synch,
Ten thousand Dollars, to our generall vs.

King. No

The Tragedie of Macbeth.

King. No more that Thane of Cawdor shall deceive
Our Bosome interest: Goe pronounce his present death,
And with his former Title greet Macbeth.
Rosse. Ile see it done
King. What he hath lost, Noble Macbeth hath wonne.
Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1. Where hast thou beene, Sister?
2. Killing Swine.
3. Sister, where thou?
1. A Saylor's Wife had Chestnuts in her Lappe,

And mouncht, & mouncht, and mouncht.
Giue me, quoth I.
Aroynt thee, Witch, the rumpe-fed Ronyon cries.
Her Husband's to Aleppo gone, Master o'th' Tiger;
But in a Syue Ile thither sayle,
And like a Rat without a tayle,
Ile doe, Ile doe, and Ile doe.

2. Ile giue thee a Winde.
3. Th'art kinde.
1. And I another.
1. I my selfe haue all the other,

And the very Ports they blow,
All the Quarters that they know,
I'th' Ship-mans Card,
Ile dreyne him drie as Hay.
Sleepe shall neyther Night nor Day
Hang vpon his Pent-house Lid:
He shall liue a man forbid:
Wearie Seu' nights, nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peake, and pine:
Though his Barke cannot be lost,
Yet it shall be Tempest-soft.
Looke what I haue.

2. Shew me, shew me.
1. Here I haue a Pilots Thumbe,
3. A Drumme, a Drumme.

Macbeth doth come.
All. The weyward Sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the Sea and Land,
Thus doe goe, about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice againe, to make vp nine.
Peace, the Charme's wound vp.

Enter Macbeth and Banquo.

Macb. So foule and faire a day I haue not seene.
Banquo. How farre is't call'd to Soris? What are these,
So wither'd, and so wilde in their attyre,

That looke not like th'Inhabitants o'th' Earth,
And yet are on't? Liue you, or are you aught
That man may question? you seeme to vnderstand me,
Ey each at once her choppie finger laying
Vpon her skinnie Lips: you should be Women,
And yet your Beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Mac. Speake if you can: what are you?
1. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Glamis,
2. All haile Macbeth, haile to thee Thane of Cawdor,
3. All haile Macbeth, that shalt be King hereafter
Banq. Good Sir, why doe you start, and seeme to feare
Things that doe sound so faire? i'th' name of truth

Are ye fantastickall, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew? My Noble Partner
You greet with present Grace, and great prediction
Of Noble hauing, and of Royall hope,
That he seemes wrapt withall. to me you speake not,
If you can looke into the Seedes of Time,
And say, which Graine will grow, and which will not,
Speake then to me, who neyther begge, nor feare
Your fauors, nor your hate.

1. Hayle.

2. Hayle.

3. Hayle.

1. Lesser then Macbeth, and greater.
2. Not so happy, yet much happier,
3. Thou shalt get Kings, though thou be none:

So all haile Macbeth, and Banquo

1. Banquo, and Macbeth, all haile.

Macb. Stay you imperfect Speakers, tell me more:
By Smells deeth, I know I am Thane of Glamis,
But how, of Cawdor? the Thane of Cawdor liues
A prosperous Gentleman: And to be King,
Stands not within the prospect of beleefe,
No more then to be Cawdor. Say from whence
You owe this strange Intelligence, or why
Vpon this blasted Heath you stop our way
With such Prophetique greeting?

Speake, I charge you.

Banq. The Earth hath bubbles, as the Water ha's,
And these are of them: whither are they vanish'd?
Macb. Into the Ayre. and what seem'd corporall,
Melted, as breath into the Winde.

Would they had stay'd.

Banq. Were for a things here, as we doe speake about?
Or haue we eate on the insane Root,
That takes the Reason Prisoner?

Macb. Your Children shall be Kings.

Banq. You shall be King

Macb. And Thane of Cawdor too: went it not so?
Banq. Toth' selfe-same tune, and words: who's here?

Enter Rosse and Angus.

Rosse. The King hath happily recon'd, Macbeth,
The newes of thy successe: and when he reade
Thy personall Venture in the Rebels fight,
His Wonders and his Prayfes doe contend,
Which should be thine, or his. Silence with that,
In viewing o're the rest o'th' selfe-same day,
He findes thee in the stout Norwegian Ranks,
Nothing afraid of what thy selfe didst make
Strange Images of death, as thick as Tale
Can post with post, and euery one did beare
Thy prayfes in his Kingdomes great defence,
And pow'd them downe before him.

Ang. Wee are sent,
To giue thee from our Royall Master thanks,
Onely to harrold thee into his sight,
Not pay thee.

Rosse. And for an earnest of a greater Honor,
He bad me, from him, call thee Thane of Cawdor

In

In which addition, haile most worthy Thane,
For it is thine.

Bang. What, can the Deuill speake true?

Macb. The Thane of Cawdor liues:

Why doe you dresse me in borrowed Robes?

Ang. Who was the Thane, liues yet,
But vnder heauie Iudgement beares that Life,
Which he deserues to loose.

Whether he was combin'd with those of Norway,
Or did lyne the Rebell with hidden helpe,
And vantage; or that with both he labour'd
In his Countreyes wracke, I know not:
But Treasons Capitall, confests'd, and prou'd,
Haue ouerthrowne him.

Macb. Glamys, and Thane of Cawdor:
The greatest is behinde. Thankes for your paines.
Doe you not hope your Chil'dren shall be Kings,
When those that gaue the Thane of Cawdor to me,
Promis'd no lesse to them.

Bang. That trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you vnto the Crowne,
Besides the Thane of Cawdor. But 'tis strange:
And oftentimes, to winne vs to our harme,
The Instruments of Darknesse tell vs Truths,
Winne vs with honest Trifles, to betray's
In deepest consequence.

Cousins, a word, I pray you.

Macb. Two Truths are told,
As happy Prologues to the swelling Act
Of the Imperiall Theame. I thanke you Gentlemen.
This supernaturall solliciting
Cannot be ill; cannot be good
If ill? why hath it giuen me earnest of successe,
Commencing in a Truth? I am Thane of Cawdor
If good? why doe I yeeld to that suggestion,
Whose horrid Image doth vnfixe my Heire,
And make my seated Heart knock at my Ribbes,
Against the vse of Nature? Present Feares
Are lesse then horrible Imaginings
My Thought, whose Murther yet is but fantasticall,
Shakes to my single state of Man,
That Function is smother'd in surmise,
And nothing is, but what is not.

Bang. Looke how our Partner's rapt

Macb. If Chance will haue me King,

Why Chance may Crowne me,
Without my stirre.

Bang. New Honors come vpon him
Like our strange Garments, cleaue not to their mould,
But with the aid of vse.

Macb. Come what come may,
Time, and the Houre, runs through the roughest Day.

Bang. Worthy Macbeth, wee stay vpon your ley-
sure

Macb. Giue me your fauour
My dull Braine was wrought with things forgotten
Kinde Gentlemen, your paines are registred,
Where every day I turne the Lease,
To reade them.

Let vs toward the King, thinke vpon
What hath chanc'd and at more time,
The Interim hauing weigh'd it, let vs speake
Our free Hearts each to other.

Bang. Very gladly.

Macb. Till then enough:

Come friends

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Flourish. Enter King, Lenox, Malcolme,
Donalbaine, and Attendants.

King. Is execution done on Cawdor?
Or not those in Commission yet return'd?

Mal. My Liege, they are not yet come back.
But I haue spoke with one that saw him die:
Who did report, that ~~very~~ frankly hee
Confess'd his Treasons, implor'd your Highnesse Pardon,
And set forth a deepe Repentance.
Nothing in his Life became him,
Like the leauing it. Hee dy'de,
As one that had bene studied in his death,
To throw away the dearest thing he ow'd.
As 'twere a carelesse Trifle.

King. There's no Art,
To finde the Mindes construction in the face:
He was a Gentleman, on whom I built
An absolute Trust.

Enter Macbeth, Banquo, Rosse, and Angus.
O worthyest Cousin,

The sinne of my Ingratitude euen now
Was heauie on me. Thou art so farre before,
That swiftest Wing of Recompence is slow,
To ouertake thee. Would thou hadst lesse desert'd
That the proportion both of thanks, and payment,
Might haue bene mine. Onely I haue left to say,
More is thy due, then more then all can pay.

Macb. The seruice, and the loyaltie I owe,
In doing it, payes it selfe
Your Highnesse part, is to receiue our Duties:
And our Duties are to your Throne, and State,
Children, and Seruants, which doe but what they should,
By doing euery thing faine toward your Loue
And Honor

King. Welcome hither -
I haue begun to plant thee, and will labour
To make thee full of growing. Noble Banquo,
That hast no lesse desertu'd, nor must be knowne
No lesse to haue done so: Let me enfold thee,
And hold thee to my Heart.

Bang. There if I grow,
The Haruest is your owne

King. My plenteous Ioyes,
Wanton in fulnesse, seeke to hide themselves
In drops of sorrow. Sonnes, Kinsmen, Thanes,
And you whose places are the nearest, know,
We will establish our Estate vpon
Our eldest, Malcolme, whom we name hereafter,
The Prince of Cumberland: which Honor must
Not vnaccompanied, meet him onely,
But signes of Noblenesse, like Starres, shall shine
On all deserters. From hence to Envernes,
And binde vs further to you.

Macb. The Rest is Labor, which is not vs'd for you:
Ile be my selfe the Herbeuger, and make ioyfull
The hearing of my Wife, with your approach:
So humbly take my leaue.

King. My worthy Cawdor.

Macb. The Prince of Cumberland, that is a Step,
On which I must fall downe, or else o're-leape,

m m

For

For in my way it lyes. Starres hide your fires,
Let not Light see my black and deepe desires :
The Eye winke at the Hand; yet let that bee,
Which the Eye feares, when it is done to see. Exit.

King. True, worthy Banquo : he is full so valiant,
And in his commendations, I am fed :
It is a Banquet to me. Let's after him;
Whose care is gone before, to bid vs welcome.
It is a peerelesse Kinsman. Flourish. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeths Wife alone with a Letter.

Lady. They met me in the day of successe. and I have learn'd by the perfect'st report, they haue more in them, then mortall knowledge. When I burnt in desire to question them further, they made themselves Ayre, into which they vanish'd.
Whiles I stood rapt in the wonder of it, came Mistieues from the King, who all-hail'd me Thane of Cawdor, by which Title before, these weyward Sisters saluted me, and restor'd me to the coming on of time, with haile King that shalt be. This haue I thought good to deliuer thee (my dearest Partner of Greatnesse) that thou might'st not loose the dyes of reioycing by being ignorant of what Greatnesse is promis'd thee. Lay it to thy heart, and farewell.

Glamys thou art, and Cawdor, and shalt be
What thou art promis'd. yet doe I feare thy Nature,
It is too full o' th' Milke of humane kindnesse,
To catch the neere way. Thou would'st be great,
Art not without Ambition, but without
The illnesse should attend it. What thou would'st highly,
That would'st thou holily would'st not play false,
And yet would'st wrongfully winne.

Thould'st haue, great Glamys, that which cries,
Thus thou must doe, if thou haue't;
And that which rather thou do'st feare to doe,
Then wishest should be vndone. High thee hither,
That I may powre my Spirits in thine Eare,
And chastise with the valour of my Tongue
All that impeides thee from the Golden Round,
Which Fate and Metaphysicall ayde doth seeme
To haue thee crown'd withall. Enter Messenger
What is your tidings?

Mess. The King comes here to Night.

Lady. Thou'rt mad to say it.
Is not thy Master with him? who, wert'so,
Would haue inform'd for preparation.

Mess. So please you, it is true our Thane is comming.
One of my fellows had the speed of him;
Who almost dead for breath, had scarcely more
Then would make vp his Message.

Lady. Giue him tending,
He brings great newes. Exit Messenger.
The Raven himselfe is hoarse,
That croakes the fatall entrance of Duncan
Vnder my Battlements. Come you Spirits,
That tend on mortall thoughts, vnto me here,
And fill me from the Crowne to the Toe, top-full
Of direct Crueltie. make thick my blood,
Stop vp th'accesse, and passage to Remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of Nature

Shake my fell purpose, nor keepe peace betweene
Th'effect, and hit. Come to my Womans Breasts,
And take my Milke for Gall, you murth'ring Ministers,
Where-euer, in your sightlesse Substances,
You wait on Natures Mischiefe. Come thick Night,
And pall thee in the dunneest smoake of Hell,
That my keen'd Knife see not the Wound it makes,
Nor Heauen peepe through the Blanket of the darke,
To cry, hold, hold. Enter Macbeth.

Great Glamys, worthy Cawdor,
Greater then both, by the all-haile hereafter,
Thy Letters haue transported me beyond
This ignorant present, and I feele now
The future in the instant.

Macb. My dearest Loue,
Duncan comes here to Night.

Lady. And when goes hence?

Macb. To morrow, as he purposes.

Lady. O neuer,
Shall Sunne that Morrow see.
Your Face, my Thane, is as a Booke, where men
May reade strange matters, to beguile the time.
Iooke like the time, beare welcome in your Eye,
Your Hand, your Tongue: looke like th' innocent flower,
But we the Serpent vnder't. He that's comming,
Must be provided for: and you shall put
This Nights great Businesse into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our Nights, and Dayes to come,
Giue solely soueraigne sway, and Maisterdome

Macb. We will speake further.

Lady. Onely looke vp cleare.
To alter fauor, euer is to leare
Leaue all the rest to me. Exit.

Scena Sexta.

*Hoboyes, and Trenches. Enter King, Malcolm,
Donalbaine, Banquo, Lenox, Macduff,
Ross, Angus, and Attendants.*

King. This Castle hath a pleasant seat,
The ayre nimbly and sweetly recommends it selfe
Vnto our gentle senses.

Banq. This Guest of Summer,
The Temple-haunting Barlet does approve,
By his loued Mansonry, that the Heauens breath
Smells wooingly here. no luty frieze,
Buttrice, nor Coigne of Vantage, but this Bird
Hath made his pendant Bed, and procreant Cradle,
Where they must breed, and haunt. I haue obseru'd
The ayre is delicate. Enter Lady.

King. See, see, our honor'd Hostesse.
The Loue that followes vs, sometime is our trouble,
Which still we thanke as Loue. Herein I teach you,
How you shall bid God-cyld vs for your paines,
And thanke vs for your trouble.

Lady. All our seruice,
In euery point twice done, and then done double,
Were poore, and single Businesse, to contend
Against those Honors deepe, and broad,
Wherewith your Maestie loades our House:
For those of old, and the late Dignities,
Heap'd vp to them, we rest your Ermites.

King. Where's

King. Where's the Thane of Cawdor?
We court him at the heeles, and had a purpose
To be his Purueyor: But he rides well,
And his great Loue (sharpe as his Spurre) hath holp him
To his home before vs: Faire and Noble Hostesse
We are your guest to night.

La. Your Seruants euer,
Haue theirs, themselves, and what is theirs in compt,
To make their Audit at your Highnesse pleasure,
Still to returne your owne.

King. Giue me your hand
Conduct me to mine Host we loue him highly,
And shall continue, our Graces towards him.
By your leaue Hostesse.

Exeunt

Scena Septima.

* Ho boyes. Torches.

Enter a Sewer, and diuers Seruants with Dishes and Seruice ouer the Stage. Then enter Macbeth

Macb. If it were done, when 'tis done, then 'twere well,
It were done quickly. If th'Assassination
Could trammell vp the Consequence, and catch
With his surcasse, Success that bur this blow
Might be the be all, and the end all. Heere,
But heere vpon this Banke and Schoole of time,
Wee'd impe the life to come. But in these Cases,
We still haue iudgement heere, that we but teach
Bloody Instructions, which being taught, returne
To plague th'Inuenter. This euil-handed Iustice
Commends th'Ingredience of our poyson'd Chalice
To our owne lips. Hee's heere in double trust,
First, as I am his Kirisman, and his Subiect,
Strong both against the Deed. Then, as his Host,
Who should against his Murderer shut the doore,
Not beare the knife my selfe. Besides, this Duncane
Hath borne his Faculties so mecke, hath bin
So cleere in his great Office, that his Vertues
Will pleade like Angels, Trumpet-tongu'd against
The deepe damnation of his taking off.
And Pitty, like a naked New-borne Babe,
Striding the blast, or Heauens Cherubin, hors'd
Vpon the sightlesse Curriers of the Ayre,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That teares shall drowne the winde. I haue no Spurre
To prick the sides of my intent, but onely
Vaulting Ambition, which ore leapes it selfe,
And fallies off th'other.

Enter Lady.

How now? What Newes?

La. He has almost sup't why haue you left the chamber?

Mac. Hath he ask'd for me?

La. Know you not, he has?

Mac. We will proceed no further in this Businesse
He hath Honour'd me of late, and I haue bought
Golden Opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worse now in their newest gloss,
Not cast aside so soone.

La. Was the hope drunk,
Wherein you dress'd your selfe? Hath it slept since?
And wakes it now to looke so greene, and pale,
At what it did so freely? From this time,
Such I account thy loue. Art thou assear'd
To be the same in thine owne Act, and Valour,
As thou art in desire? Would'st thou haue that

Which thou esteem'st the Ornament of Life,
And lue a Coward in thine owne Esteeme?
Letting I dare not, wait vpon I would,
Like the poore Cat i'th'Aodage.

Macb. Prythee peace:

I dare do all that may become a man,
Who dares no more, is none.

La. What Beast was't then

That made you breake this enterprize to me?
When you durst do it, then you were a man:
And to be more then what you were, you would Be so much more the man. Nor time, nor place
Did then adhere, and yet you would make both.
They haue made themselves, and that their finesse now
Do's vnmake you. I haue giuen Sucke, and know
How tender 'tis to loue the Babe that milkes me,
I would, while it was smyling in my Face,
Haue pluckt my Nipple from his Bonelesse Gummets,
And dash't the Braines out, had I so sworne
As you haue done to this.

Macb. If we should faile?

Lady. We faile?

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And wee'll not faile. When Duncane is asleepe,
(Where to the rather shall his dayes hard Iourney Soundly inuite him) his two Chamberlaines
Will I with Wine, and Wassell, so conume,
That Memorie, the Warder of the Braine,
Shall be a Fume, and the Recet of Reason
A Lymbeck onely when in Swinish sleepe,
Their drenched Natures lyes as in a Death,
What cannot you and I performe vpon
Th'vnguarded Duncane? What not put vpon
His spungie Officers? who shall beare the guilt
Of our great quell.

Macb. Bring forth Men-Children onely:
For thy vndaunted Mettle should compose
Nothing but Males. Will it not be receiu'd,
When we haue mark'd with blood those sleepe two
Of his owne Chamber, and vs'd their very Daggers,
That they haue don't?

Lady. Who dares receiue it other,
As we shall make our Griefes and Clamor rore,
Vpon his Death?

Macb. I am settled, and bend vp
Each corporall Agent to this terrible Fear,
Away, and mock the time with fairest show,
False Face must hide what the false Heart doth know.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo, and Fleance, with a Torch before him.

Banq. How goes the Night, Boy?

Fleance. The Moone is downe. I haue not heard the Clock.

Banq. And she goes downe at Twelue.

Fleance. Take't, 'tis later, Sir.

Banq. Hold, take my Sword.
There's Husbandry in Heaven,
Their Candles are all out. Take thee that too.

A

A heauie Summons lyes like Lead vpon me,
And yet I would not sleepe:
Mercifull Powers, retrain in me the cursed thoughts
That Nature giues way to in repose.

Enter Macbeth, and a Seruant with a Torch.

Giue me my Sword: what's there?

Macb. A Friend.

Banq. What Sir, not yet at rest? the King's a bed.
He hath beene in vnusuall Pleasure,
And sent forth great Largesse to your Offices.
This Diamond he greetes your Wife withall,
By the name of most kind Hostesse,
And shut vp in measurelesse content.

Mac. Being vnprepar'd,
Our will became the seruant to defect,
Which else should free haue wrought.

Banq. All's well.

I dreamt last Night of the three weyward Sisters:
To you they haue shew'd some truth.

Macb. I thinke not of them:

Yet when we can entreat an houre to serue,
We would spend it in some words vpon that Businesse,
If you would graunt the time.

Banq. At your kind'st leysure.

Macb. If you shall cleaue to my consent,
When 'tis, it shall make Honor for you.

Banq. So I lose none,

In seeking to augment it, but still keepe
My Bosome franchis'd, and Allegiance cleare,
I shall be counsaill'd.

Macb. Good repose the while.

Banq. Thanks Sir: the like to you. Exit Banquo.

Macb. Goe bid thy Mistresse, when my drinke is ready,
She strike vpon the Bell. Get thee to bed. Exit.

Is this a Dagger, which I see before me,
The Handle toward my Hand? Come, let me clutch thee:
I haue thee not, and yet I see thee still.

Art thou not fatal Vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A Dagger of the Minde, a false Creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed Braine?
I see thee yet, in forme as palpable,
As this which now I draw.

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going,
And such an Instrument I was to vse.
Mine Eyes are made the foolles o'th' other Sences,
Or else worst all the rest: I see thee still;
And on thy Blade, and Dudgeon, Gouts of Blood,
Which was not so before: There's no such thing.
It is the bloody Businesse, which informes
Thus my mine Eyes. Now o're the one halfe World
Nature seemes dead, and wicked Dreames abuse
The Curtaine of sleepe. Witchcraft celebrates
Pale Heccats Offerings. and wither'd Murder,
Alarm'd by his Centinell, the Wolfe,
Whose howle's his Watch, thus with his stealthy pace,
With Tarquins rafiishing sides, towards his designe
Moves like a Ghost. Thou fowre and firme-set Earth
Heare not my steps, which they may walke, for feare
Thy very stones prate of my where-about,
And take the present horror from the tined,
Which now sutes with it. Whides I threat, he liues:
Words to the heat of deedes too bold breath giues.

A Bell rings.

I goe, and it is done: the Bell invites me.
Heare it not, Duncan, for it is a Knell,
That summons thee to Heauen, or to Hell.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lady.

La. That which hath made the drunk, hath made me bold:
What hath quench'd them, hath giuen me fire.
Hearke, peace: it was the Owle that shriek'd,
The fatal Bell-man, which giues the stern'st good-night,
He is about it, the Doores are open:
And the surfeted Groomes doe mock their charge
With SnORES. I haue drugg'd their Possers,
That Death and Nature doe contend about them,
Whether they liue, or dye.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. Who's there? what hoa?

Lady. Alack, I am afraid they haue awak'd,
And 'tis not done: th' attempt, and not the deed,
Confounds vs: hearken: I lay'd their Daggers ready,
He could not misse 'em. Had he not resembled
My Father as he slept, I had don't.
My Husband?

Macb. I haue done the deed:
Didst thou not heare a noyse?

Lady. I heard the Owle schreame, and the Crickets cry.
Did not you speake?

Macb. When?

Lady. Now.

Macb. As I descended?

Lady. I.

Macb. Hearke, who lyes i'th' second Chamber?

Lady. Donalbaine.

Mac. This is a sorry sight.

Lady. A foolish thought, to say a sorry sight.

Macb. There's one did laugh in's sleepe,
And one cry'd Murder, that they did wake each other.
I flood, and heard them: But they did say their Prayers,
And addrest them againe to sleepe.

Lady. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cry'd God blesse vs, and Amen the other,
As they had scene me with these Hangmans hands:
Lifting their feare, I could not say Amen,
When they did say God blesse vs.

Lady. Consider it not so deeply.

Mac. But wherefore could not I pronounce Amen?
I had most need of Blessing, and Amen stuck in my throat.

Lady. These deeds must not be thought
After these wayes, so, it will make vs mad.

Macb. Me thought I heard a voyce cry, Sleep no more:
Macbeth dyes murder Sleep, the innocent Sleep,
Sleep that knits vp the rauel'd Sleeue of Care,
The death of each dayes Life, sore Labors Bath,
Balme of hurt Mindes, great Natures second Course,
Chiefe nourisher in Life's Feast.

Lady. What doe you meane?

Macb. Still it cry'd, Sleep no more to all the House:
Glamis hath murder'd Sleep, and therefore Cawdor
Shall sleepe no more: Macbeth shall sleepe no more.

Lady. Who was it, that thus cry'd? why worthy Thane,
You doe ynbend your Noble strength, to thinke
So braine-sickly of things: Goe get some Water,

And

And wash this filthie Witnesse from your Hand.
Why did you bring these Daggers from the place?
They must lye there goe carry them, and smear
The sleepe Groomes with blood.

Macb Ile goe no more:
I am afraid, to thinke what I haue done:
Looke on't againe, I dare not

Lady Infringe of purpose
Giue me the Daggers the sleeping, and the dead,
Are but as Pictures 'tis the Eye of Child-hood,
That feares a painted Deuill. If he doe bleed,
Ile giue the Faces of the Groomes withall,
For it must seeme their Guilt. Exit.

Knocke within.

Macb Whence is that knocking?
How is't with me, when euerie noyse appalls me?
What Hands are here? hah they pluck out mine Eyes.
Will all great Neptunes Ocean wash this blood
Cleane from my Hand? no this my Hand will rather
The multitudinous Seas incarnardine,
Making the Greene one, Red.

Enter Lady.

Lady. My Hands are of your colour but I shame
To weare a Heart so white. Knocke.
I heere a knocking at the South entry:
Retyre we to our Chamber
A little Water cleares vs of this deed.
How easie is it then? your Constancie
Hath left you vnattended. Knocke.
Hearke, more knocking
Get on your Night-Gowne, least occasion call vs,
And shew vs to be Watchers be not loit
So poorly in your thoughts
Macb. To know my deed, Knocke.
'Twere best not know my selfe.
Wake Duncan with thy knocking.
I would thou could'st. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter a Porter

Knocking within

Porter. Here's a knocking indeede - if a man were Porter of Hell Gate, hee should haue old turning the Key Knock Knock, Knock, Knock. Who's there
i'th' name of Belzebub? Here's a Farmer, that hang'd himselfe on th' expectation of Plentie Come in time, haue Napkins enow about you, here you'll sweat for't. Knock
Knock, knock. Who's there in th' other Deuils Name?
Faith here's an Equiuocator, that could sweare in both the Scales against eyther Scale, who committed Treason enough for Gods sake, yet could not equiuocate to Heauen oh come in, Equiuocator. Knock Knock,
Knock, Knock. Who's there? Faith here's an English
Taylor come hither, for stealing out of a French Hose
Come in Taylor, here you may rost your Goose. Knock Knock, Knock. Neuer at quiet What are you? but this place is too cold for Hell Ile Deuill-Porter it no further
I had thought to haue let in some of all Professions, that goe the Primrose way to th' eu'lasting Bonfire. Knock
Anon, anon, I pray you remember the Porter.

Enter Macduff, and Lenox.

Macd. Was it so late, friend, ere you went to Bed,
That you dot lye so late?

Port. Faith Sir, we were carowing till the second Cock.
And Drinke, Sir, is a great prouoker of three things.

Macd. What three things does Drinke especially prouoke?

Port. Marry, Sir, Nose-painting, Sleepe, and Vrine.
Lecherie, Sir, it prouokes, and vnprouokes - it prouokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Therefore much Drinke may be said to be an Equiuocator with Lecherie. it makes him, and it marres him; it sets him on,
and it takes him off; it perswades him, and dis-heartens him, makes him stand too, and not stand too: in conclusion, equiuocates him in a sleepe, and giuing him the Lye, leaues him.

Macd. I belecue, Drinke gaue thee the Lye last Night.

Port. That it did, Sir, i'th' very Throat on me: but I requited him for his Lye, and (I thinke) being too strong for him, though he tooke vp my Legges sometime, yet I made a Shift to cast him.

Enter Macbeth.

Macd. Is thy Master stirring?

Our knocking ha's awak'd him here he comes.

Lenox Good morrow, Noble Sir

Macb Good morrow both.

Macd. Is the King stirring, worthy Thane?

Macb Not yet

Macd He did command me to call timely on him,
I haue almost slipt the houre.

Macb Ile bring you to him.

Macd. I know this is a ioyfull trouble to you:

But yet 'tis one.

Macb The labour we delight in, Physicks paine:
This is the Doure.

Macd. Ile make so bold to call, for 'tis my limited
seruice Exit Macduff.

Lenox. Goes the King hence to day?

Macb He does. he did appoint so

Lenox The Night ha's been vnruly.

Where we lye, our Chimneys were blowne downe,
And (as they say) lamentings heard i'th' Ayres;
Strange Schreemes of Death,
And Prophecyng, with Accents terrible,
Of dyre Combustion, and confus'd Euentis,
New hatch'd toth' wofull time
The obscure Bird clamor'd the lue-long Night.
Some say, the Earth was feurours,
And did shake.

Macb. 'Twas a rough Night

Lenox My young remembrance cannot paralell
A fellow to it.

Enter Macduff.

Macd. O horror, horror, horror,
Tongue nor Heart cannot conceiue, nor name thee.

Macb. and Lenox. What's the matter?

Macd. Confusion now hath made his Master-peece:
Most sacrilegious Murder hath broke ope
The Lords anoynted Temple, and stole thence
The Life o'th' Building.

Macb. What is't you say, the Life?

Lenox Meane you his Maestie?

Macd. Approch the Chamber, and destroy your fight
With a new Gorgon. Doe not bid me speake.

mm 3

Sec,

See, and then speake your selues: awake, awake,
Exeunt Macbeth and Lenox.

Ring the Alarum Bell: Murther, and Treason,
Banquo, and Donalbaine: Malcolme awake,
Shake off this Downey sleepe, Deaths counterfeite,
And looke on Death it selfe: vp, vp, and see
The great Doomes Image: Malcolme, Banquo,
As from your Graues rise vp, and walke like Sprights,
To countenance this horror. Ring the Bell.

Bell rings. Enter Lady.

Lady. What's the Businesse?
That such a hideous Trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the House? speake, speake.

Macd. O gentle Lady,
'Tis not for you to heare what I can speake:
The repetition in a Womans eare,
Would murther as it fell.

Enter Banquo.

O Banquo, Banquo, Our Royall Master's murther'd.

Lady. Woe, alas:

What, in our House?

Ban. Too cruell, any where Deare Duff, I prythee contradict thy selfe,
And say, it is not so.

Enter Macbeth, Lenox, and Rosse.

Macb. Had I but dy'd an houre before this chance,
I had had a blessed time. for from this instant,
There's nothing serious in Mortalitie:
All is but Toyes: Renowne and Grace is dead,
The Wine of Life is drawne, and the meere Lees
Is left this Vault, to brag of.

Enter Malcolme and Donalbaine.

Donal. What is amisse?

Macb. You are, and doe not know't:
The Spring, the Head, the Fountaine of your Blood
Is stopp'd, the very Source of it is stopp'd.

Macd. Your Royall Father's murther'd.

Mal. Oh, by whom?

Lenox. Those of his Chamber, as it seem'd, had don't:
Their Hands and Faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their Daggers, which vnwip'd, we found
Vpon their Pillowes: they star'd, and were distracted,
No mans Life was to be trusted with them.

Macb. O, yet I doe repent me of my furie,
That I did kill them.

Macd. Wherefore did you so?

Macb. Who can be wise, amaz'd temp'rate, & furious,
Loyall, and Neutrall, in a moment? No man:
Th'expedition of my violent Loue
Out-run the pawser, Reason. Here lay Duncan,
His Silver skinne, lac'd with his Golden Blood,
And his gash'd Stabs, look'd like a Breach in Nature,
For Ruines wastfull entrance: there the Murtherers,
Steep'd in the Colours of their Trade; their Daggers
Vnmannerly breech'd with gore. who could reframe,
That had a heart to loue; and in that heart,
Courage, to make's loue knowne?

Lady. Helpe me hence, ho.

Macd. Looke to the Lady.

Mal. Why doe we hold our tongues,
That most may clayme this arguement for ours?

Donal. What should be spoken here,

Where our Fate hid in an augure hole,
May rush, and seize vs? Lo's away,
Our Teares are not yet brew'd.

Mal. Nor our strong Sorrow
Vpon the foot of Motion.

Banq. Looke to the Lady
And when we haue our naked Frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure; let vs meet,
And question this most bloody piece of worke,
To know it further. Feares and scruples shake vs:
In the great Hand of God I stand, and thence,
Against the vdiuulg'd pretence, I fight
Of Treasonous Mallice.

Macd. And so doe I.

All. So all.

Macb. Let's briefly put on manly readinesse,
And meet it th' Hall together.

All. Well contented.

Exeunt.

Malc. What will you doe?

Let's not consort with them:
To shew an vnsele Sorrow, is an Office
Which the false man do's easie.
He to England.

Don. To Ireland, I.

Our seperated fortune shall keepe vs both the safer:
Where we are, there's Daggers in mens Smiles;
The neere in blood, the neerer bloody.

Malc. This murderous Shaft that's shot,
Hath not yet lighted; and our safest way,
Is to auoid the ayme. Therefore to Horse,
And let vs not be daintie of leaue-taking,
But shift away: there's warrant in that Theft,
Which steales it selfe, when there's no mercie left.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Rosse, with an Old man.

Old man. Threescore and ten I can remember well,
Within the Volume of which Time, I haue scene
Houres dreadfull, and things strange: but this fore Night
Hath trifled former knowings.

Rosse. Ha, good Father,
Thou seest the Heauens, as troubled with mans Act,
Threatens his bloody Stage: byth' Clock 'tis Day,
And yet darke Night strangles the trauailing Lampe:
Is't Nights predominance, or the Dayes shame,
That Darknesse does the face of Earth intombe,
When huing Light should kisse it?

Old man. 'Tis vnnaturall,
Even like the deed that's done: On Tuesday last,
A Faulcon rowning in her pride of place,
Was by a Mowing Owle hawk't at, and kill'd.

Rosse. And Duncans Horses,
(A thing most strange, and certaine)
Beauteous, and swift, the Minions of their Race,
Turn'd wilde in nature, broke their stalls, flong out,
Contending 'gainst Obedience, as they would Make Warre with Mankind.

Old man. 'Tis said, they eate each other.

Rosse. They did so:

To th'amazement of mine eyes that look'd vpon't.

Enter Macdiffe.

Heere comes the good Macdiffe.

How goes the world Sir, now?

Macd. Why see you not?

Ross Is't known who did this more then bloody deed?

Macd. Those that Macbeth hath slaine.

Ross Alas the day,

What good could they pretend?

Macd. They were subborned,

Malcolme, and Donaibaine the Kings two Sonnes
Are stolne away and fled, which puts vpon them
Suspition of the deed.

Ross. 'Gainst Nature still,
Thriftlesse Ambition, that will rauen vp
Thine owne liues meanes: Then 'tis most like,
The Soueraignty will fall vpon Macbeth

Macd. He is already nam'd, and gone to Scone
To be inuested.

Ross. Where is Duncans body?

Macd. Carried to Colmekill,
The Sacred Store-house of his Predecessors,
And Guardian of their Bones.

Ross. Will you to Scone?

Macd. No Cousin, Ile to Fife.

Ross. Well, I will thither.

Macd. Well may you see things wel done there: Adieu Least our old Robes sit easier then our new.

Ross. Farewell, Father

Old M. Gods beny son go with you, and with those
That would make good of bad, and Friends of Foes.

Exeunt omnes

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Banquo.

Banq. Thou hast it now, King, Cawdor, Glamis, all,
As the weyard Women promis'd, and I feare
Thou playd'st most fowly for't yet it was saide
It should not stand in thy Posterity,
But that my selfe should be the Roore, and Father
Of many Kings If there come truth from them,
As vpon thee Macbeth, their Speeches shine,
Why by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my Oracles as well,
And set me vp in hope. But hush, no more.

Seris sounded. Enter Macbeth as King, Lady Lenox, Ross, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. Heere's our chiefe Guest.

La If he had bene forgotten,
It had bene as a gap in our great Feast,
And all-thing vnbecomming.

Macb Tonight we hold a solemne Supper fir,

And Ile request your prefence

Banq. Let your Highnesse
Command vpon me, to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tye
For euer knit.

Macb. Ride you this afternoone?

Ban. I, my good Lord.

Macb. We should haue else desir'd your good aduice

(Which still hath been both graue, and prosperous)
In this dayes Councell: but wee'll take to morrow.
Is't farre you ride?

Ban. As farre, my Lord, as will fill vp the time
'Twixt this, and Supper. Goe not my Horse the better,
I must become a borrower of the Night,
For a darke houre, or twaine.

Macb. Faile not our Feast.

Ban. My Lord, I will nor.

Macb. We heare our bloody Cozens are bestow'd
In England, and in Ireland, not confessing
Their cruell Parricide, filling their hearers
With strange inuention But of that to morrow,
When therewithall, we shall haue cause of State,
Crauing vs ioyntly. Hye you to Horse:
Adieu, till you returne at Night.
Goes Fleance with you?

Ban. I, my good Lord our time does call vpon's.

Macb I wish your Horses swift, and sure of foot:
And so I doe commend you to their backs
Farwell. Exit Banquo.

Let euery man be master of his time,
Till seuen at Night, to make societie
The sweeter welcome
We will keepe our selfe till Supper time alone:
While then, God be with you. Exeunt Lords.
Sirrha, a word with you: Attend those men
Our pleasure?

Servant. They are, my Lord, without the Pallace Gate

Macb Bring them before vs Exit Servant.
To be thus, is nothing, but to be safely thus:
Our feares in Banquo sticke deepe,
And in his Royaltie of Nature reignes that
Which would be fear'd. 'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntlesse temper of his Minde,
He hath a Wisdome, that doth guide his Valour,
To act in safetie. There is none but he,
Whose being I doe feare. and vnder him,
My Gem is rebuk'd, as it is said

Mark Antonies was by Cesar He chid the Sisters,
When first they put the Name of King vpon me,
And bad them speake to him. Then Prophet-like,
They hayl'd him Father to a Line of Kings.
Vpon my Head they plac'd a fruitlesse Crowne,
And put a barren Scepter in my Gripe,
Thence to be wrenched with an vnlineall Hand,
No Sonne of mine succeeding if't be so,
For Banquo's Issue haue I fil'd my Minde,
For them, the gracious Duncan haue I murder'd,
Put Rancours in the Vessell of my Peace
Onely for them, and mine eternall Iewell
Given to the common Enemie of Man,
To make them Kings, the Seedes of Banquo Kings,
Rather then so, come Fate into the Lyft,
And champion me to th' vtterance.
Who's there?

Enter Servant, and two Murderers.

Now goe to the Doore, and stau there till we call.

Exit Servant.

Was it not yesterday we spoke together?

Murth. It was, so please your Highnesse.

Macb. Well then,
Now haue you consider'd of my speeches:

Know,

Know, that it was he, in the times past,
Which held you so vnder fortune,
Which you thought had been our innocent felte.
This I made good to you, in our last conference,
Past in probation with you:
How you were borne in hand, how cross.
The Instruments. who wrought with them:
And all things else, that might
To halfe a Soule, and to a Notion craz'd, Say, Thus did Banquo.

1. Murth You made it knowne to vs.

Macb. I did so:

And went further, which is now.
Our point of second meeting.
Doe you finde your patience so predominant,
In your nature, that you can let this goe?
Are you so Gospell'd, to pray for this good man,
And for his Issue, whose heatie hand
Hath bow'd you to the Graue, and begger'd
Yours for euer?

1. Murth. We are men, my Liege.

Macb. I, in the Catalogue ye goe for men,
As Hounds, and Greyhounds, Mungrels, Spaniels, Curres,
Showghs, Water-Rugs, and Demy-Wolues are clipt
All by the Name of Dogges: the valued file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtile,
The House-keeper, the Hunter, every one
According to the gift, which bounteous Nature
Hath in him clos'd: whereby he does receiue
Particular addition, from the Bill,
That writes them all alike. and so of men.
Now, if you haue a Station in the file,
Not i'th' worst ranke of Manhood, say't,
And I will put that Businesse in your Bosomes,
Whose execution takes your Enemie off,
Grapples you to the heart; and loue of vs,
Who weare our Health but sickly in his Life,
Which in his Death were perfect.

2. Murth. I am one, my Liege,
Whom the vile Blowes and Buffets of the World
Hath so incens'd, that I am recklesse what I doe,
To spight the World.

1. Murth. And I another,
So wearie with Disasters, tugg'd with Fortune,
That I would set my Life on any Chance,
To mend it, or be rid on't.

Macb. Both of you know Banquo was your Enemie.

Murth. True, my Lord.

Macb. So is he mine: and in such bloody distance,
That every minute of his being, thrusts
Against my neer't of Life: and though I could
With bare-fac'd power sweepe him from my sight,
And bid my will auouch it; yet I must not,
For certaine friends that are both his, and mine,
Whose loues I may not drop, but wayle his fall,
Who I my selfe struck downe: and thence it is,
That I to your assistance doe make loue,
Masking the Businesse from the common Eye,
For sundry weightie Reasons.

2. Murth. We shall, my Lord,
Performe what you command vs.

1. Murth. Though our Liues--

Macb. Your Spirits shine through you,
With this houre, at most,
I will aduise you where to plant your selues,
Acquaint you with the perfect Spy o'th' time,

The moment on't, for't must be done to Night,
And something from the Pallace: alwayes thought,
That I require a clearenesse; and with him,
To leaue no Rubs nor Borches in the Worke:
Fleane, his Sonne, that keepes him companie,
Whose absence is no lesse materall to me,
Then is his Fathers, must embrace the fare
Of that darke houre: resolute your selues apart,
He come to you anon.

Murth. We are resolu'd, my Lord.

Macb. He call vpon you straight: abide within.
It is concluded. Banquo, thy Soules flight,
If it finde Heauen, must finde it out to Night. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macbeths Lady, and a Seruant.

Lady. Is Banquo gone from Court?

Seruant. I, Madame, but returns againe to Night.

Lady. Say to the King, I would attend his leysure,
For a few words.

Seruant. Madame, I will.

Exit.

Lady. Nought's had, all's spent,
Where our desire is got without content:
'Tis safer, to be that which we destroy,
Then by destruction dwell in doubtful ioy.

Enter Macbeth

How now, my Lord, why doe you keepe alone?
Ot sorryest Fancies your Companions making,
Vsing those Thoughts, which should indeed haue dy'd
With them they thinke on things without all remedie
Should be without regard: what's done, is done.

Macb. We haue scorch'd the Snake, not kill'd it
Shee'll close, and be her selfe, whilst our poore Mallice
Remaines in danger of her former Tooth.
But let the frame of things dis-ioynt,
Both the World's suffer,
Ere we will eate our Meale in feare, and sleepe
In the affliction of these terrible Dreames,
That shake vs Nightly. Better be with the dead,
Whom we, to gayne our peace, haue sent to peace,
Then on the torture of the Minde to lye
In restlesse extasie.

Duncane is in his Graue:

After Lifes fitfull Feuer, he sleepest well,
Treason ha's done his worst: nor Steele, nor Poyson,
Mallice domestique, forraime Leue, nothing,
Can touch him further.

Lady. Come on:

Gentle my Lord, sleeke o're your rugged Lookes
Be bright and Iouall among your Guests to Night.

Macb. So shall I Loue, and so I pray be you:
Let your remembrance apply to Banquo,
Present him Eminence, both with Eye and Tongue:
Vnsafe the while, that wee must laue
Our Honors in these flattering streames,
And make our Faces Vizards to our Hearts,
Disguising what they are.

Lady. You must leaue this.

Macb. O, full of Scorpions is my Minde, deare Wife.
Thou know'st, that Banquo and his Fleane liues.

Lady. But

Lady. But in them, Natures Coppie's not eterne.

Macb. There's comfort yet, they are assailable,
Then be thou assured ere the Bat hath flowne
His Cloyster'd flight, ere to black Heccats summons
The shard-borne Beetle, with his drowisie hums,
Hath rung Nights yawning Peale,
There shall be done a deed of dreadfull note.

Lady. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest Chuck,
Till thou applaud the deed. Come, feeling Night,
Skarfe vp the tender Eye of pitifull Day,
And with thy bloodie and invisible Hand
Cancell and teare to pieces that great Bond,
Which keeps me pale. Light thickens,
And the Crow makes Wing toth' Rookie Wood.
Good things of Day begin to droope, and drowse,
Whiles Nights black Agents to their Prey's doe rowse.
Thou maruell'st at my words, but hold thee still,
Things bad begun, make strong themselves by ill.
So prythee goe with me. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter three Murderers.

1. But who did bid thee ioyne with vs?

3. Macbeth.

2. He needes not our mistrust, since he deliuers
Our Offices, and what we haue to doe,
To the direction iust

1. Then stand with vs

The West yet glimmers with some streakes of Day.
Now spurs the lated Traveller apace,
To gayne the timely Inne, end nere approaches
The subiect of our Watch

3. Hearke, I heare Horses.

Banquo within Giue vs a Light there, ho.

2. Then 'tis hee.

The rest, that are within the note of expectation,
Alreadie are i'th' Court

1. His Horses goe about.

3. Almost a mile, but he does vsnally,
So all men doe, from hence toth' Pallace Gate
Make it their Walke.

Enter Banquo and Fleance, with a Torch.

2. A Light, a Light.

3. 'Tis hee.

1. Stand too't.

Ban. It will be Rayne to Night.

1. Let it come downe.

Ban. O, Trecherie!

Flye good Fleance, flye flye flye,

Thou may steeuenge O Slaue

3. Who did Strike out the Light?

1. Was't not the way?

3. There's but one downer the Sonne's fled.

2. We haue lost

Best halfe of our Affaire

1. Well, let's away, and say how much is done.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Banquet prepar'd. Enter Macbeth, Lady, Rosse, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Macb. You know your owne degrees, sit downe:
At first and last, the hearty welcome.

Lords. Thanks to your Maesty.

Macb. Our selfe will mingle with Society,
And play the humble Host
Our Hostesse keeps her State, but in best time
We will require her welcome.

La. Pronounce it for me Sir, to all our Friends,
For my heart speakes, they are welcome.

Enter first Murderer.

Macb. See they encounter thee with their hearts thanks
Both sides are euen: heere Ile sit i'th' mid't,
Be large in mirth, anon wee'l drinke a Measure
The Table round. There's blood vpon thy face.

Mur. 'Tis Banquo's then.

Macb. 'Tis better thee without, then he within.
Is he dispatch'd?

Mur. My Lord his throat is cut, that I did for him.

Mac. Thou art the best o'th' Cut-throats,
Yet hee's good that did the like for Fleance;
If thou did'st it, thou art the Non-pareill.

Mur. Most Royall Sir

Fleance is scap'd.

Macb. Then comes my Fit againe:
I had else beene perfect;

Whole as the Marble, founded as the Rocke,
As broad, and generally, as the casing Ayre.
But now I am cabin'd, crib'd, confin'd, bound in
To sawcy doubts, and feares. But Banquo's safe?

Mur. I, my good Lord: safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head;
The least a Death to Nature.

Macb. Thanks for that.

There the growne Serpent lyes, the worrne that's fled
Hath Nature that in time will Venom breed,
No teeth for th' present. Get thee gone, to morrow
Wee'l heare our selues againe. Exit Murderer.

Lady. My Royall Lord,
You do not giue the Cheere, the Feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making:
'Tis giuen, with welcome. to feede were best at home:
From thence, the sawce to meate is Ceremony,
Meeting were bare without it.

Enter the Ghost of Banquo, and sits in Macbeths place.

Macb. Sweet Remembrancer -
Now good digestion waite on Appetite,
And health on both

Lenox. May't please your Highnesse sit.

Macb. Here had we now our Countries Honor, roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present
Who, may I rather challenge for vnkindnesse,
Then pittie for Mis'chance.

Rosse. His absence (Sir)
Layes blame vpon his promise. Pleas't your Highnesse
To grace vs with your Royall Company?

Macb.

Macb. The Table's full.

Lenox. Heere is a place reseru'd Sir,

Macb. Where?

Lenox. Heere my good Lord.

What is't that moues your Highnesse?

Macb. Which of you haue done this?

Lords. What, my good Lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say I did it. neuer shake
Thy goary lockes at me.

Rosse. Gentlemen rise, his Highnesse is not well.

Lady. Sit worthy Friends: my Lord is often thus,
And hath bene from his youth. Pray you keepe Seat,
The fit is momentary, vpon a thought
He will againe be well. If much you note him
You shall offend him, and extend his Passion,
Feed, and regard him not. Are you a man?

Macb. I, and a bold one, that dare looke on that
Which might appall the Duell.

La. O proper stuffe.

This is the very painting of your feare:
This is the Ayre-drawne-Dagger which you said
Led you to Duncan. O, these flawes and stars
(Impostors to true feare) would wellbecome
A womans story, at a Winters fire
Authoriz'd by her Grandam: shame it selfe,
Why do you make such faces? When all's done
You looke but on a stoole.

Macb. Prythee see there.

Behold, looke, loe, how say you?
Why what care I, if thou canst nod, speake too.
If Charnell houses, and our Graues must send
Those that we bury, backe; our Monuments
Shall be the Mawes of Kytes.

La. What? quite vnmann'd in folly.

Macb. If I stand heere, I saw him.

La. Fie for shame.

Macb. Blood hath bene shed ere now, i'th'olden time
Ere humane Statute purg'd the gentle Weale:
I, and since too, Murthers haue bene perform'd
Too terrible for the eare. The times has bene,
That when the Braines were out, the man would dye,
And there an end: But now they rise againe
With twenty mortall murthers on their crownes,
And puth vs from our stooles: This is more strange
Then such a murder is.

La. My worthy Lord
Your Noble Friends do lacke you.

Macb. I do forget.

Do not muse at me my most worthy Friends,
I haue a strange infirmity, which is nothing
To those that know me. Come, loue, and health to all,
Then Ile sit downe. Giue me some Wine, fill full:

Enter Ghost

I drinke to th'generall ioy o'th'whole Table,
And to our deere Friend Banquo, whom we misse:
Would he were heere. to all, and him we thirst,
And all to all

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

Macb. Auant, & quit my sight, let the earth hide thee:
Thy bones are marrowlesse, thy blood is cold.
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Which thou dost glare with.

La. Thinke of this good Peeres,

But as a thing of Custom: 'Tis no other,
Onely it spoyles the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian Beare,
The arm'd Rhinoceros, or th'Hircan Tiger,
Take any shape but that, and my firme Nerues
Shall neuer tremble. Or be aloue againe,
And dare me to the Desert with thy Sword:
If trembling I inhabit then, protest mee
The Baby of a Gille. Hence horrible shadow,
Vncall mock'ry hence. Why so, being gone
I am a man againe: pray you sit still.

La. You haue displac'd the mirth,
Broke the good meeting, with most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And ouercome vs like a Summers Clowd,
Without our speciaall wonder? You make me strange
Euen to the disposition that I owe,
When now I thinke you can behold such sights,
And keepe the naturall Rubie of your Cheekes,
When mine is blanch'd with feare.

Rosse. What sights, my Lord?

La. I pray you speake not: he growes worse & worse
Question enrages him: at once, goodnight.
Stand not vpon the order of your going,
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health Attend his Majesty.

La. A kinde goodnight to all.

Exit Lords.

Macb. It will haue blood they say.
Blood will haue Blood.

Stones haue bene knowne to moue, & Trees to speake:
Augures, and vnderstood Relations, haue
By Maggot Pyes, & Choughes, & Rookes brought forth
The secret'st man of Blood. What is the night?

La. Almost at oddes with morning, which is which.

Macb. How say'st thou that Macduff denies his person
At our great bidding.

La. Did you send to him Sir?

Macb. I heare it by the way. But I will send:
There's not a one of them but in his house
I keepe a Seruant Feed. I will to morrow
(And betimes I will) to the weyard Sisters.
More shall they speake: for now I am bent to know
By the worst meanes, the worst, for mine owne good,
All causes shall giue way, I am in blood
Stepp in so farre, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go ore.
Strange things I haue in head, that will to hand,
Which must be acted, ere they may be scand.

La. You lacke the season of all Natures sleepe.

Macb. Come, wee'l to sleepe: My strange & self-abute
Is the initiate feare, that wants hard vse:
We are yet but yong indeed.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches, meeting
Hec.

1. Why how now Hecat, you looke angerly?
Hec. Haue I not reason (Beldams) as you are?
Sawcy, and ouer-bold, how did you dare
To Trade, and Trafficke with Macbeth,
In Riddles, and Affaires of death;

And

And I the Mistress of your Charmes,
The cloſe contriuer of all harmes,
Was neuer call'd to beare my part,
Or ſhew the glory of our Art?
And which is worſe, all you haue done
Hath bene but for a wayward Sonne,
Spightfull, and wretchedfull, who (as others do)
Loues for his owne ends, not for you
But make amends now. Get you gon,
And at the pit of Acheron
Meet me i'th' Morning thither he
Will come, to know his Deſtine.
Your Veſſels, and your Spels prouide,
Your Charmes, and euery thing beſide;
I am for th'Ayre. This night he ſpend
Vnto a diſmall, and a Fatall end.
Great buſineſſe muſt be wrought ere Noone.
Vpon the Corner of the Moone
There hangs a vap'rous drop, profound,
He catch it ere it come to ground,
And that diſtill'd by Magicke ſlights,
Shall raiſe ſuch Artificiall Sprights,
As by the ſtrength of their illuſion,
Shall draw him on to his Confuſion.
He ſhall ſpurne Fate, ſcorne Death, and beare
His hopes 'boue Wiſedome, Grace, and feare.
And you all know, Security
Is Mortals cheefeſt Enemye.

Aſſiſke, and a Song.

Hearke, I am call'd: my little Spirit ſee
Sits in a Foggy cloud, and ſtays for me.

Sing within Come away, come away, &c.

1 Come, let's make haſt, ſhee'l ſoone be Backe againe.

Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Lenox, and another Lord.

Lenox My former Speeches,
Haue but hit your Thoughts
Which can interpret farther Onely I ſay
Things haue bin ſtrangely borne. The gracious Duncan
Was pittied of Macbeth. marry he was dead.
And the right valiant Bargno walk'd too late,
Whom you may ſay (if it pleaſe you) Fleance kill'd,
For Fleance fled Men muſt not walke too late.
Who cannot want the thought, how monſtrous
It was for Malcolme, and for Donalbane
To kill their gracious Father? Damned Fact,
How it did grieue Macbeth? Did he not ſtraight
In pious rage, the two delinquents teare,
That were the Slaues of drinke, and thralls of ſleepe?
Was not that Nobly doner I, and wiſely too.
For 'twould haue anger'd any heart ſhure
To heare the men deny't. So that I ſay,
He ha's borne all things well, and I do thinke,
That had he Duncans Sonnes vnder his Key,
(As, and't pleaſe Heauen he ſhall not) they ſhould finde
What 'twere to kill a Father So ſhould Fleance.
But peace, for from broad words, and cauſe he ſay'd
His preſence at the Tyrants Feaſt, I heare
Macdoffe liues in diſgrace Sir, can you tell

Where he beſtows himſelfe?

Lord. The Sonnes of Duncane

(From whom this Tyrant holds the due of Birth)
Liues in the Engliſh Court, and is recey'd
Of the moſt Pious Edward, with ſuch grace,
That the maleuolence of Fortune, nothing
Takes from his high reſpect. Thither Macdoffe
Is gone, to pray the Holy King vpon his ayd
To wake Northumberland, and warlike Seymour,
That by the helpe of theſe (with him aboue)
To ratiſie the Worke) we may againe
Giue to our Tables meate, ſleepe to our Nights;
Free from our leaſts, and Banquets bloody kniues;
Do faithfull Homage, and receiue free Honors,
All which we pine for now And this report
Hath ſo exaſperate their King, that hee
Prepares for ſome attempt of Warre.

Len Sent he to Macdoffe?

Lord. He did: and with an abſolute Sir, not I
The cloudy Meſſenger turnes me his backe,
And hums, as who ſhould ſay, you'l rue the time
That clogges me with this Answer.

Lenox And that well might Adviſe him to a Caution, to hold what diſtance
His wiſedome can prouide. Some holy Angell
Flye to the Court of England, and vnfold
His Meſſage ere he come, that a ſwift bleſſing
May ſoone returne to this our ſuffering Country,
Vnder a hand accur'd

Lord. He ſend my Prayers with him.

Exeunt

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Thunder. Enter the three Witches.

1 Thrice the brinded Cat hath mew'd.
2 Thrice, and once the Hedge-Pigge whin'd.
3 Harpier cries, 'tis time, 'tis time.
1 Round about the Caldron go:
In the poyſond Entrailes throw
Toad, that vnder cold ſtone,
Dayes and Nights, ha's thirty one:
Sweltred Venom ſleeping got,
Boyle thou fiſt i'th' charmed pot.
All Double, double, toyle and trouble;
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.
2 Filler of a Fenny Snake,
In the Cauldron boyle and bake.
Eye of Newt, and Toe of Frogge,
Wooll of Bat, and Tongue of Dogge:
Adder Forke, and Blinde-wormes Sting,
Lizards legges, and Howlets wing:
For a Charme of powrefull trouble,
Like a Hell-broth, boyle and bubble.
All Double, double, toyle and trouble,
Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble
3 Scale of Dragon, Tooth of Wolfe,
Witches Mummy, Maw, and Gulfe
Of the rauen'd ſalt Sea Sharke.
Roote of Hemlocke, digg'd i'th' darke:
Luer of Blaſpheming Iew,
Gall of Goate, and Slippes of Yew,
Shuer'd in the Moones Eccliſe:

Noſc

Nose of Turke, and Tartars lips :

Finger of Birth-strangled Babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a Drab,

Make the Grewell thicke, and slab

Add thereto a Tigers Chawdron,

For th'Ingredience of our Cawdron.

All. Double, double, toyle and trouble,

Fire burne, and Cauldron bubble.

2 Coole it with a Baboones blood,

Then the Charme is firme and good.

Enter Hecate, and the other three Witches.

Hec. O well done I commend your paines,

And euery one shall share i'th'gaines :

And now about the Cauldron sing

Like Blues and Fairies in a Ring,

Inchanting all that you put in.

Musicke and a Song. Blacke Spirits, &c.

2 By the pricking of my Thumbe,

Something wicked this way comes:

Open Lockes, who euer knockes.

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. How now you secret, black, & midnight Hags? What is't you do?

All. A deed without a name.

Macb. I coniure you, by that which you Professe, (How ere you come to know it) answer me :

Though you vntye the Windes, and let them fight

Against the Churches. Though the yesty Waues

Confound and swallow Navigation vp .

Though bladed Corne be lodg'd, & Trees blown downe,

Though Castles topple on their Warders heads :

Though Pallaces, and Pyramids do slope

Their heads to their Foundations. Though the treasure

Of Natures Germaine, tumble altogether,

Euen till destruction sicken. Answer me

To what I aske you.

1 Speake.

2 Demand.

3 Wee'l answer,

1 Say, if th'hadst rather heare it from our mouthes, Or from our Masters.

Macb. Call 'em . let me see 'em.

1 Powre in Sowes blood, that hath eaten

Her nine Farrow. Greaze that's sweaten

From the Murderers Gibbet, throw

Into the Flame.

All. Come high or low :

Thy Selfe and Office deaftly show.

Thunder.

1. Apparition, an Armed Head.

Macb. Tell me, thou vnknowne power.

1 He knowes thy thought :

Heare his speech, but say thou nought.

1 Appar Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth :

Beware Macduffe,

Beware the Thane of Fife : dismisse me. Enough.

He Descends.

Macb. What ere thou art, for thy good caution, thanks Thou hast harp'd my feare aright. But one word more.

1 He will not be commanded heere's another

More potent then the first.

Thunder.

2 Apparition, a Bloody Child.

2 Appar Macbeth, Macbeth, Macbeth.

Macb. Had I three eares, I'd beare thee.

2 Appar Be bloody, bold, & resolute :

Laugh to scorne

The powre of man . For none of woman borne

Shall harme Macbeth.

Descends.

Mac. Then lue Macduffe. what need I feare of thee? But yet Ile make assurance . double sure,

And take a Bond of Fate . thou shalt not lue,

That I may tell pale-hearted Feare, it lies ;

And sleepe in spight of Thunder.

Thunder

3 Apparition, a Child Crowned, with a Tree in his hand.

What is this, that rises like the issue of a King,

And weares vpon his Baby-brow, the round

And top of Soueraignty?

All. Listen, but speake not too't.

3 Appar. Be Lyon metled, proud, and take no care:

Who chafes, who frets, or where Conspirers are :

Macbeth shall neuer vanquish'd be, vnill

Great Byrnam Wood, to high Dunsmane Hill

Shall come against him

Descend.

Macb. That will neuer bee .

Who can imresse the Forrest, bid the Tree

Vnfixe his earth-bound Root? Sweet boadments, good .

Rebellious dead, rise neuer till the Wood

Of Byrnam rise, and our high plac'd Macbeth

Shall lue the Lease of Nature, pay his breath

To time, and mortall Custome. Yet my Hart

Throbs to know one thing. Tell me, if your Art

Can tell so much Shall Banquo s issue euer

Reigne in this Kingdome?

All. Seeke to know no more.

Macb. I will be satisfied. Deny me this,

And an eternall Curse fall on you . Let me know,!

Why sinkes that Caldron? & what noise is this? Hobbes

1 Shew.

2 Shew.

3 Shew.

All. Shew his Eyes, and greeue his Hart.

Come like shadowes, so depart.

A shew of eight Kings, and Banquo last, with a glasse in his hand.

Macb. Thou art too like the Spirit of Banquo Down:

Thy Crowne do's feare mine Eye-balls. And thy haire

Thou other Gold-bound-brow, is like the first :

A third, is like the former. Filthy Haggas,

Why do you shew me this? — A fourth? Start eyes!

What will the Line stretch out to'th'cracke of Doome?

Another yet? A seauenth? Ile see no more .

And yet the eight appeares, who beares a glasse,

Which shewes me many more : and some I see,

That two-fold Balles, and trebble Scepters carry.

Horrible sight . Now I see 'tis true,

For the Blood-bolter'd Banquo smiles vpon me,

And points at them for his What? is this so?

1 I Sir, all this is so. But why

Stands Macbeth thus amazedly?

Come Sisters, cheere we vp his sprights,

And shew the best of our delights.

Ile Charme the Ayre to gue a sound,

While you performe your Antique round :

That this great King may kindly say,

Our duties, did his welcome pay.

Musicks.

The Witches Dance, and vanish.

Macb. Where are they? Gone?

Let this pernicious houre,

Stand aye accursed in the Kalender.

Come in, without there.

Enter Lenox.

Lenox. What's your Graces will.

Macb.

Macb. Saw you the Weyard Sisters ?

Lenox. No my Lord.

Macb. Came they not by you ?

Lenox. No indeed my Lord.

Macb. Infected be the Ayre whereon they ride,
And damn'd all those that trust them. I did heare
The galloping of Horse. Who was't came by ?

Len. 'Tis two or three my Lord, that bring you word :
Macduff is fled to England.

Macb. Fled to England ?

Len. I, my good Lord.

Macb. Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose neuer is o're-tooke
Vnlesse the deed go with it. From this moment,
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. And euen now
To Crown my thoughts with Acts be it thought & done.
The Castle of Macduff, I will surprize,
Seize vpon Fife, giue to th'edge o'th'Sword
His Wife, his Babes, and all vnfortunate Soules
That trace him in his Line. No boasting like a Foole,
This deed Ile do, before this purpose coole,
But no more fights. Where are these Gentlemen ?
Come bring me where they are

Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Macduffs Wife, her Son, and Rosse.

Wife. What had he done, to make him fly the Land ?

Rosse. You must haue patience Madam.

Wife. He had none

His flight was madnesse. when our Actions do not,
Our feares do make vs Traitors.

Rosse. You know not
Whether it was his wisdome, or his feare.

Wife. Wisdome ? to leaue his wife, to leaue his Babes,
His Mansion, and his Titles, in a place
From whence himselfe do's flye ? He loues vs not,
He wants the naturall touch For the poore Wren
(The most diminutive of Birds) will fight,
Her yong ones in her Nest, against the Owle :
All is the Feare, and nothing is the Loue ;
As little is the Wisdome, where the flight
So runnes against all reason.

Rosse. My dearest Cooz,
I pray you schoole your selfe. But for your Husband,
He is Noble, Wise, Iudicious, and best knowes
The fits o'th' Season. I dare not speake much further,
But cruell are the times, when we are Traitors
And do not know our selues when we hold Rumor
From what we feare, yet know not what we feare,
But floate vpon a wilde and violent Sea
Each way, and moue. I take my leaue of you :
Shall not be long but Ile be heere againe
Things at the worst will cease or else climbe upward,
To what they were before. My pretty Cosine,
Blessing vpon you.

Wife. Father'd he is,
And yet hee's Father-lesse.

Rosse. I am so much a Foole, should I stay longer
It would be my disgrace, and your discomfort.
I take my leaue at once.

Exit Rosse.

Wife. Sirra, your Fathers dead,
And what will you do now ? How will you liue ?

Son. As Birds do Mother.

Wife. What with Wormes, and Flyes ?

Son. With what I get I meane, and so do they.

Wife. Poore Bird,
Thou'dst neuer Feare the Net, nor Lime,
The Pitfall, nor the Gin.

Son. Why should I Mother ?

Poore Birds they are not set for -

My Father is not dead for all your saying.

Wife. Yes, he is dead

How wilt thou do for a Father ?

Son. Nay how will you do for a Husband ?

Wife. Why I can buy me a Hensmate at any Market.

Son. Then you'l by 'em to sell againe.

Wife. Thou speak'st with wit enough for thee,
And yet I'faith with wit enough for thee

Son. Was my Father a Traitor, Mother ?

Wife. I, that he was

Son. What is a Traitor ?

Wife. Why one that sweares, and lyes.

Son. And be all Traitors, that do so.

Wife. Euery one that do's so, is a Traitor,
And must be hang'd.

Son. And must they all be hang'd, that swear and lye ?

Wife. Euery one.

Son. Who must hang them ?

Wife. Why, the honest men.

Son. Then the Liars and Swearers are Fools for there are Lyars and Swearers enow, to beate the honest men, and hang vp them.

Wife. Now God helpe thee, poore Monkie :

But how wilt thou do for a Father ?

Son. If he were dead, you'd weepe for him : if you would not, it were a good signe, that I should quickly
haue a new Father.

Wife. Poore prater, how thou talk'st ?

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Bless you faire Dame. I am not to you known,
Though in your state of Honor I am perfect ;
I doubt some danger do's approach you neerely.
If you will take a homely mans aduice,
Be not found heere Hence with your little ones
To fight you thus. Me thinks I am too sauage:
To do worse to you were fell Cruelty,
Which is too me your person. Heauen preserue you,
I dare abide no longer.

Exit Messenger

Wife. Whether should I flye ?

I haue done no harme But I remember now
I am in this earthly world : where to do harme
Is often laudable, to do good sometime
Accounted dangerous folly Why then (alas)
Do I put vp that womanly defence,
To say I haue done no harme ?
What are these faces ?

Enter Murderers.

Mur. Where is your Husband ?

Wife. I hope in no place so vn sanctified,
Where such as thou may'st finde him.

Mur. He's a Traitor.

Son. Thou ly'st thou shagge-eard Villaine.

Mur. What you Egge ?
Yong fry of Treachery

Son. He ha's kill'd me Mother,
Run away I pray you.

N n

Exit crying Murder.

Scena

Scena Tertia.

Enter Malcolm and Macduffe.

Mal. Let vs seeke out some desolate shade, & there Weepe our sad bolomes empty.

Macd. Let vs rather Hold fast the mortall Sword: and like good men, Bestride our downfall Birthdome: each new Morne, New Widdowes howle, new Orphans cry, new sorowes Strike heauen on the face, that it rebound As it it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out Like Syllable of Dolour.

Mal. What I beleue, Ile waile; What know, beleue; and what I can redresse, As I shall finde the time to friend: I wil. What you haue spoke, it may be so perchance. This Tyrant, whose sole name blisters our tongues, Was once thought honest: you haue lou'd him well, He hath not touch'd you yet. I am yong, but something You may discerne of him through me, and wisdom To offer vp a weake, poore innocent Lambe T'appease an angry God.

Macd. I am not treacherous.

Mal. But Macbeth is. A good and vertuous Nature may recoyle In an Imperiall charge. But I shall craue your pardon: That which you are, my thoughts cannot transpose; Angels are bright still, though the brightest fell. Though all things soule, would wear the brows of grace Yet Grace must still look so.

Macd. I haue lost my Hopes.

Mal. Perchance euen there Where I did finde my doubts. Why in that rawnesse left you Wife, and Childe? Those precious Morues, those strong knots of Loue, Without leaue-taking. I prau you, Let not my Iealousies, be your Dishonors, But mine owne Safeties: you may be rightly iust, What euer I shall thinke.

Macd. Bleed, bleed poore Country, Great Tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure, For goodnesse dare not check thee: weare y thy wrongs, The Title, is asseard. Far thee well Lord, I would not be the Villaine that thou thinkest, For the whole Space that's in the Tyrants Grasp, And the rich East to boot.

Mal. Be not offended: I speake not as in absolute feare of you. I thinke our Country sinkes beneath the yoke, It weepes, it bleeds, and each new day a gash Is added to her wounds. I thinke withall, There would be hands vplifted in my right: And heere from gracious England haue I offer Of goodly thousands. But for all this, When I shall tread vpon the Tyrants head, Or weare it on my Sword; yet my poore Country Shall haue more vices then it had before, More suffer, and more sundry wayes then euer, By him that shall succede.

Macd. What should he be?

Mal. It is my selfe I meane. in whom I know All the particulars of Vice so grafted,

That when they shall be open'd, blacke Macbeth Will seeme as pure as Snow, and the poore Star Esteeme him as a Lambe, being compar'd With my confinclesse harmes.

Macd. Not in the Legions Of horrid Hell, can come a Diuell more damn'd In euils, to top Macbeth.

Mal. I grant him Bloody, Luxurious, Avaricious, False, Decentfull, Sodaine, Malicious, smacking of euery sinne That ha's a name. But there's no bottome, none In my Voluptuousnesse. Your Wiues, your Daughters, Your Matrons, and your Maides, could not fill vp The Cesterne of my Lust, and my Desire All coninent Impediments would ore-bear That did oppose my will. Better Macbeth, Then such an one to reigne.

Macd. Boundlesse intemperance In Nature is a Tyranny. It hath bene Th'vntimely emptying of the happy Throne, And fall of many Kings. But feare not yet To take vpon you what is yours: you may Conuey your pleasures in a spacious plenty, And yet seeme cold. The time you may so hoodwinke: We haue willing Dames enough: there cannot be That Vulture in you, to deuoure so many As will to Greatnesse dedicate themselves, Finding it so inclinde.

Mal. With this, there growes In my most ill-compos'd Affection, such A stanchlesse Auarice, that were I King, I should cut off the Nobles for their Lands, Desire his Jewels, and this others House, And my more-hauing, would be as a Sawce To make me hunger more, that I should forge Quarrels vniust against the Good and Loyall, Destroying them for wealth.

Macd. This Auarice stickes deeper: growes with more pernicious roote Then Summer-seeming Lust. and it hath bin The Sword of our slaine Kings. yet do not feare, Scotland hath Foysons, to fill vp your will Of your meere Owne. All these are portable, With other Graces weigh'd.

Mal. But I haue none. The King-becoming Graces, As Iustice, Verity, Temp'rance, Stablenesse, Bounty, Perseuerance, Mercy, Lowliness, Deuotion, Patience, Courage, Fortitude, I haue no relish of them, but abound In the diuision of each seuerall Crime, Acting it many wayes. Nay, had I powre, I should Poure the sweet Milke of Concord, into Hell, Vpore the vnuerfall peace, confound All vniety on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland.

Mal. If such a one be fit to gouerne, speake: I am as I haue spoken.

Mac. Fit to gouerne? No not to liue. O Nation miserable! With an vntitled Tyrant, bloody Sceptred, When shalt thou see thy wholsome dayes againe? Since that the truest Issue of thy Throne By his owne Interdiction stands accus'd, And do's blaspheme his breed: Thy Royall Father Was a most Sainted-King: the Queene that bore thee, Ofiner vpon her knees, then on her feet, Dy'de euery day she liu'd. Fare thee well,

These

These Evils thou repeat'st upon thy selfe,
Hath banish'd me from Scotland. O my Brest,
Thy hope ends heere.

Mal. Macduff, this Noble passion
Childe of integrity, hath from my soule
Wip'd the blacke Scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good Truth, and Honor. Diminish Macbeth,
By many of these traines, hath sought to win me
Into his power - and modest Wisdome pluckes me
From ouer-credulous hast but God aboute
Deale betweene thee and me, For euen now
I put my selfe to thy Direction, and Vnspeake mine owne detraction. Heere abiure
The taints, and blames I laide vpon my felie,
For strangers to my Nature. I am yet
Vnknowne to Woman, neuer was forsworne,
Scarfely haue coueted what was mine owne
At no time broke my Faith, would not betray
The Deuill to his Fellow, and delight
No lesse in truth then life. My first false speaking
Was this vpon my selfe. What I am truly
Is thine, and my poore Countries to command.
Whither indeed, before they heere appoach
Old Seyward with ten thousand warlike men
Already at a point, was setting forth -
Now wee'l together, and the chance of goodnesse
Be like our warranted Quarrell. Why are you silent?

Macd. Such welcome, and vnwelcom things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile.

Enter a Doctor

Mal. Well, more anon. Comes the King forth
I pray you?

Doct. I Sir there are a crew of wretched Soules
That stay his Cure - their malady conuincs
The great assay of Art. But at his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heauen giuen his hand,
They presently amend. Exit.

Mal. I thanke you Doctor.

Macd. What's the Disease he meanes?

Mal. 'Tis call'd the Euill

A most myraculous worke in this good King,
Which often since my heere remaine in England,
I haue seene him do. How he solicites heauen
Himselfe best knowes but strangely visited people
All swolne and Vicerous, pittifull to the eye,
The meere dispaire of Surgery, he cures,
Hanging a golden Pamppe about their neckes,
Put on with holy Prayers, and 'tis spok'n
To the succeeding Royalty he leaues
The healing Benediction With this strange vertue,
He hath a heauenly giust of Prophecie,
And sundry Blessings hang about his Throne,
That speake him full of Grace

Enter Rosse.

Macd. See who comes heere.

Mal. My Countryman. but yet I know him nor.

Macd. My euer gentle Cozen, welcome hither.

Mal. I know him now. Good God betimes remoue
The meanes that makes vs Strangers.

Rosse. Sir, Amen.

Macd. Stands Scotland where it did?

Rosse. Alas poore Country,
Almost afraid to know it selfe. It cannot
Be call'd our Mother, but our Graue; where nothing
But who knowes nothing, is once seene to smile
Where sighes, and groanes, and shrieks that rent the ayre

Aie made, not mark'd: Where violent sorrow seemes
A Moderne extasie: The Deadmans knell,
Is there scarce ask'd for who, and good mens liues
Expire before the Flowers in their Caps,
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macd. Oh Relation, too nice, and yet too true.

Mal. What's the newest griefe?

Rosse. That of an houres age, doth hisse the speaker,
Each minute teemes a new one.

Macd. How do's my Wife?

Rosse. Why well.

Macd. And all my Children?

Rosse. Well too.

Macd. The Tyrant ha's not batter'd at their peace?

Rosse. No, they were wel at peace, when I did leaue 'em

Macd. Be not a miggard of your speech: How goes't?

Rosse. When I came hither to transport the Tydings
Which I haue heauily borne, there ran a Rumour
Of many worthy Fellowes, that were out,
Which was to my beleefe witness the rather,
For that I saw the Tyrants Power a-foot.
Now is the time of helpe: your eye in Scotland
Would create Soldiours, make our women fight,
To dosse their dire distresses.

Mal. Bee't their comfort

We are comming thither: Gracious England hath Lent vs good Seyward, and ten thousand men,
An older, and a better Souldier, none
That Christendome giues out.

Rosse. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like. But I haue words
That would be howl'd out in the desert ayre,
Where hearing should not latch them

Macd. What concerne they,
The generall cause, or is it a Fee-griefe
Due to some single brest?

Rosse. No minde that's honest
But in it shares some woe, though the maine part Pertaines to you alone

Macd. If it be mine

Keepe it not from me, quickly let me haue it.

Rosse. Let not your eares dispise my tongue for euer,
Which shall possesse them with the heauiest sound
That euer yet they heard.

Macd. Hum. I guesse at it.

Rosse. Your Castle is surpriz'd. your Wife, and Babes
Sauagely slaughter'd. To relate the manner
Were on the Quarry of these murder'd Deere
To adde the death of you.

Mal. Mercifull Heauen

What man, ne're pull your hat vpon your browes:
Giue sorrow words, the griefe that do's not speake,
Whispers the ore-fraught heart, and bids it breake.

Macd. My Children too?

Rosse. Wife, Children, Seruants, all that could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence? My wife kil'd too?

Rosse. I haue said.

Mal. Be comforted

Let's make vs Med'cines of our great Reuenge,
To cure this deadly griefe.

Macd. He ha's no Children. All my pretty ones?
D. you say All? Oh Hell-Kite! All?

What, All my pretty Chickens, and their Damme
At one fell swoope?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so.

Nn 2

But

But I must also feele it as a man,
I cannot but remember such things were
That were most precious to me. Did heaven looke on,
And would not take their part? Sinfull Macduff,
They were all strooke for thee. Naught that I am,
Not for their owne demerits, but for mine
Fell slaughter on their soules: Heaven rest them now.

Mal. Be this the Whetstone of your sword, let griefe
Conuert to anger: blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O I could play the woman with mine eyes,
And Braggart with my tongue. But gentle Heauens,
Cut short all intermission. Front to Front,
Bring thou this Fiend of Scotland, and my selfe
Within my Swords length let him, if he scape
Heaven forgieue him too.

Mal. This time goes manly:
Come go we to the King, our Power is ready,
Our lacke is nothing but our leaue. Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the Powres about
Put on their Instruments: Receiue what cheere you may,
The Night is long, that neuer findes the Day Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter a Doctor of Physicke, and a Waiting Gentlewoman.

Doct. I haue too Nights watch'd with you, but can perceiue no truth in your report. When was it shee last walk'd?

Gent. Since his Maiesty went into the Field, I haue seene her rise from her bed, throw her Night-Gown vppon her, vnlocke her Closet, take forth paper, folde it, write vpon't, read it, afterwards Seale it, and againe re-
turne to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleepe.

Doct. A great perturbation in Nature, to receiue at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching.
In this slumbry agitation, besides her walking, and other actual performances, what (at any time) haue you heard her say?

Gent. That Sir, which I will not report after her.

Doct. You may to me, and 'tis most meet you should.

Gent. Neither to you, nor any one, hauing no witness to confirme my speech. Enter Lady, with a Taper
Lo you, heere she comes. This is her very guise, and vp-on my life fast asleepe: obserue her, stand close

Doct. How came she by that light?

Gent. Why it stood by her. she ha's light by her continually, tis her command.

Doct. You see her eyes are open.

Gent. I but their sense are shut.

Doct. What is it she do's now?
Looke how she rubbes her hands.

Gent. It is an accustom'd action with her, to seeme thus washing her hands. I haue knowne her continue in this a quarter of an houre.

Lad. Yet heere's a spot.

Doct. Heark, she speaks, I will set downe what comes from her, to satisfie my remembrance the more strongly.

Lad. Out damned spot. out I say. One: Two: Why then 'tis time to doo't. Hell is murky. Fye, my Lord, fie, a Souldier, and affear'd? what need we feare? who knowes it, when none can call our powre to accompt: yet who would haue thought the olde man to haue had so much blood in him.

Doct. Do you marke that?

Lad. The Thane of Fife, had a wife: where is she now?
What will these hands ne re be cleane? No more o'that my Lord, no more o'that: you marre all with this starting.

Doct. Go too, go too:

You haue knowne what you should not.

Gent. She ha's spoke what she should not, I am sure of that. Heauen knowes what she ha's knowne

Lad. Heere's the smell of the blood still: all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand
Oh, oh, oh

Doct. What a sigh is there? The hart is sorely charg'd

Gent. I would not haue such a heart in my bosome, for the dignity of the whole body.

Doct. Well, well, well.

Gent. Pray God it be sir.

Doct. This disease is beyond my practise: yet I haue knowne those which haue walkt in their sleep, who haue dyed holily in their beds.

Lad. Wash your hands, put on your Night-Gowne, looke not so pale. I tell you yet againe Banquo's buried,
he cannot come out on's graue.

Doct. Euen so?

Lad. To bed, to bed. there's knocking at the gate.
Come, come, come, come, giue me your hand: What's done, cannot be vndone. To bed, to bed, to bed.

Exit Lady.

Doct. Will she go now to bed?

Gent. Directly.

Doct. Foule whelp' rings are abroad vnnaturall deeds
Do breed vnnaturall troubles: infected mindes
To their deafe pillowes will discharge their Secrets.
More needs she the Diuine, then the Physitian
God, God forgieue vs all. Looke after her,
Remoue from her the means of all annoyance,
And still keepe eyes vpon her: So goodnight,
My minde she ha's mated, and amaz'd my sight.
I thinke, but dare not speake.

Gent. Goodnight good Doctor.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Drum and Colours. Enter Menteth, Cathnes, Angus, Lenox, Soldiers.

Ment. The English powre is neere, led on by Malcolm,
His Vnkle Seyward, and the good Macduff.
Reuenges burne in them: for their deere causes
Would to the bleeding, and the grim Alarme
Excite the mortified man

Ang. Neere Byrnan wood
Shall we well meet them, that way are they comming.

Cath. Who knowes if Donalbaine be with his brother?

Len. For certaine Sir, he is not. I haue a File
Of all the Gentry; therq is Seywards Sonne,
And many vnruffe youths, that euen now
Protest their first of Manhood.

Ment. What do's the Tyrant.

Cath. Great Dunfinane he strongly Fortifies?
Some say hee's mad: Others, that lesse hate him,
Do call it valiant Fury, but for certaine

He

He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
Within the belt of Rule.

Ang. Now do's he feele
His secret Murthers sticking on his hands,
Now minutely Revolts vpbraid his Faith-breach:
Those he commands, moue onely in command,
Nothing in loue Now do's he feele his Title
Hang loose about him, like a Giants Robe
Vpon a dwarfish Theefe

Ment Who then shall blame
His pester'd Senses to recoyle, and start,
When all that is within him, do's condemne
It selfe, for being there

Cath. Well, march we on,
To giue Obedience, where 'tis truly ow'd:
Meet we the Med'cine of the sickly Weale,
And with him poure we in our Countries purge,
Each drop of vs.

Lenox. Or so much as it needs,
To dew the Soueraigne Flower, and drowne the Weeds
Make we our March towards Birnan. Exeunt marching

Scena Tertia.

Enter Macbeth, Doctor, and Attendants.

Macb. Bring me no more Reports, let them flye all.
Till Byrnan wood remoue to Dunsinne,
I cannot taint with Feare. What's the Boy Malcolme?
Was he not borne of woman? The Spirits that know
All mortall Consequences, haue pronounc'd me thus Feare not Macbeth, no man that's borne of woman
Shall ere haue power vpon thee Then fly false Thanes,
And mingle with the English Epicures,
The minde I sway by, and the heart I beare,
Shall neuer sagge with doubt, nor shake with feare

Enter Seruant.

The diuell damne thee blacke, thou cream-fac'd Loone
Where got'st thou that Goose-lookke.

Ser There is ten thousand.

Macb. Geesse Villaine?

Ser. Souldiers Sir

Macb. Go pricke thy face, and ouer-red thy feare
Thou Lilly-luer'd Boy. What Soldiers, Patch?
Death of thy Soule, those Linnen cheekes of thine
Are Counsaillers to feare What Soldiers Whay-face?

Ser. The English Force, so please you.

Macb. Take thy face hence. Seyton, I am sick at hart,
When I behold Seyton, I say, this push
Will cheere me euer, or dis-eate me now.
I haue liu'd long enough. my way of life
Is false into the Seare, the yellow Leafe,
And that which should accompany Old-Age,
As Honor, Loue, Obedience, Troopes of Friends,
I must not looke to haue but in their speed,
Curfes, not lowd but deepe, Mouth-honor, breath
Which the poore heart would faine deny, and dare not Seyton?

Enter Seyton.

Sey. What's your gracious pleasure?

Macb. What Newes mote?

Sey. All is confirm'd my Lord, which was reported.

Macb. Ile fight, till from my bones, my flesh be backt.

Giue me my Armor.

Seyt 'Tis not needed yet.

Macb. Ile put it on

Send out thoe Horses, skirre the Country round,
Hang those that talke of Feare. Giue me mine Armor:
How do's your Patient, Doctor?

Doct. Not so sicke my Lord,

As she is troubled with thicke-comming Fancies
That keepe her from her rest,

Macb. Cure of that.

Can'st thou not Minister to a minde discas'd,
Plucke from the Memory a rooted Sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the Braine,
And with some sweet Obliuious Antidote
Cleanse the stuffe bosome, of that perillous stuffe
Which weighe's vpon the heart?

Doct. Therein the Patient

Must minister to himselfe.

Macb. Throw Physicke to the Dogs, Ile none of it.
Come, put mine Armour on: giue me my Staffe.

Seyton, send out Doctor, the Thanes flye from me:
Come sir, dispatch. If thou could'st Doctor, cast

The Water of my Land, finde her Disease,
And purge it to a sound and pristue Health,
I would applaud thee to the very Eccho,
That should applaud againe. Pull't off I say,
What Rubarb, Cyme, or what Purgatiue drugges
Would scowre these English hence. hear'st 't of them?

Doct. I my good Lord your Royall Preparation
Makes vs heare somethirg.

Macb. Bring it after me

I will not be affraid of Death and Bane,
Till Birnan Forrest come to Dunsinne

Doct. Were I from Dunsinne away, and cleere, Profit againe should hardly draw me heere. Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Drum and Colours. Enter Malcolme, Seyward, Macduffe, Seywards Sonne, Mentein, Cathnes, Angus, and Soldiers Marching.

Malc. Cousins, I hope the dayes are neere at hand
That Chambers will be safe.

Ment. We doubt it nothing.

Syew. What wood is this before vs?

Ment. The wood of Birnane.

Malc. Let euery Souldier hew him downe a Bough,
And beart before him, thereby shall we shadow
The numbers of our Hoast, and make discouery
Erre in report of vs.

Sold. It shall be done.

Sym. We learne no other, but the confident Tyrant Keepes still in Dunsinne, and will indure
Our setting downe before t.

Malc. 'Tis his maine hope:

For where there is aduantage to be giuen
Both more and lesse haue giuen him the Revolt,
And none serue with him, but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too.

Macd. Let our iust Censures Attend the true euent, and pur we on

nn 3

Industrious

Industrious Souldierſhip.

Sey. The time approaches,
That will with due deciſion make vs know
What we ſhall ſay we haue, and what we owe:
Thoughts ſpeculatiue, their vnſure hopes relate,
But certaine iſſue, ſtroakes muſt arbitrate,
Towards which, aduance the warre. Exeunt marching

Scena Quinta.

Enter Macbeth, Seyton, & Souldiers, with, Drum and Colours.

Macb. Hang our Banners on the outward walls,
The Cry is ſtill, they come. our Caſtles ſtrength
Will laugh a Siedge to ſcorne. Heere let them lye,
Till Famine and the Ague eate them vp:
Were they not forc'd with thoſe that ſhould be ours,
We might haue met them darefull, beard to beard,
And beate them backward home. What is that noiſe?

A Cry within of Women.

Sey. It is the cry of women, my good Lord.

Macb. I haue almoſt forgot the taſte of Feares:
The time ha's beene, my ſences would haue cool'd
To heare a Night-ſhrieke, and my Full of haire
Would at a diſmall Treauſe rowze, and ſtirre
As life were in't. I haue ſuſt full with horrors,
D'reſſe familiar to my ſlaughterous thoughts
Cannot once ſtirr me. Wherefore was that cry?

Sey. The Queene (my Lord) is dead.

Macb. She ſhould haue dy'de heereafter;
There would haue beene a time for ſuch a word:
To morrow, and to morrow, and to morrow,
Creepes in this petty pace from day to day,
To the laſt Syllable of Recorded time:
And all our yesterdaies, haue lighted Fooles
The way to duſty death. Out, out, breefe Candle,
Life's but a walking Shadow, a poore Player,
That ſtruts and frets his houre vpon the Stage,
And then is heard no more. It is a Tale
Told by an Ideot, full of ſound and fury Signifying nothing. Enter a Meſſenger.
Thou com'ſt to viſe thy Tongue: thy Story quickly.

Meſ. Gracious my Lord,
I ſhould report that which I ſay I ſaw,
But know not how to doo't.

Macb. Well, ſay ſir.

Meſ. As I did ſtand my watch vpon the Hill
I look'd toward Byrnane, and anon me thought
The Wood began to moue.

Macb. Lyar, and Slaue.

Meſ. Let me endure your wrath, if't be not ſo:
Within this three Mile may you ſee it comming.
I ſay, a mouing Groue.

Macb. If thou ſpeak'ſt truth,
Vpon the next Tree ſhall thou hang alue
Till Famine cling thee. If thy ſpeech be ſooth,
I care not if thou doſt for me as much.
I pull in Reſolution, and begin
To doubt th' Equiuocation of the Fiend,
That lies like truth. Feare not, till Byrnane Wood
Do come to Dunſinane, and now a Wood,

Comes toward Dunſinane. Arme, Arme, and out,
If this which he auouches, do's appeare,
There is nor flying hence, nor tarrying here.
I'ginne to be a-weary of the Sun,
And wiſh th'eſtate o'th' world were now vndon.
Ring the Alarum Bell, blow Winde, come wracke,
Atleaſt wee'l dye with Harneſſe on our backe. Exeunt

Scena Sexta.

Drumme and Colours.
Enter Malcolm, Seyward, Macduffe, and their Army, with Boughes.

Mal. Now neere enough:
Your leauy Shreenes throw downe,
And ſhew like thoſe you are: You (worthy Vnkle)
Shall with my Coſin your right Noble Sonne
Leade our firſt Battell. Worthy Macduffe, and wee Shall take vpon's what elſe remains to do,
According to our order.

Sey. Fare you well.

Do we but finde the Tyrants power to night,
Let vs be beaten, if we cannot fight.

Macd. Make all our Trumpets ſpeak, giue th'e all breath
Thoſe clamorous Harbingers of Blood, & Death. Exeunt
Alarums continued.

Scena Septima.

Enter Macbeth

Macb. They haue tied me to a ſtake, I cannot flye,
But Beare-like I muſt fight the courſe. What's he
That was not borne of Woman? Such a one
Am I to feare, or none.

Enter young Seyward.

Y. Sey. What is thy name?

Macb. Thou'lt be affraid to heare it.

Y. Sey. No. though thou call'ſt thy ſelfe a hotter name
Then any is in hell.

Macb. My name's Macbeth.

Y. Sey. The duell himſelfe could not pronounce a Title
More hatefull to mine eare.

Macb. No nor more fearefull.

Y. Sey. Thou lyest abhorred Tyrant, with my Sword
Ile proue the lye thou ſpeak'ſt.

Fight, and young Seyward ſlaine.

Macb. Thou waſt borne of woman;
But Swords I ſmile at, Weapons laugh to ſcorne, Brandiſh'd by man that's of a Woman borne. Exit.

Alarums. Enter Macduffe.

Macd. That way the noiſe is. Tyrant ſhew thy face,
If thou beſt ſlaine, and with no ſtroake of mine,
My Wife and Childrens Ghoſts will haunt me ſtill.
I cannot ſtrike at wretched Kernes, whoſe armes
Are hyr'd to beare their Staues; either thou Macbeth,
Or elſe my Sword with an vn battered edge
I ſheath againe vndeeded. There thou ſhould'ſt be,
By this great clatter, one of greateſt note

Seemes

Seemes bruited. Let me finde him Fortune,
And more I begge not Exit Alarums.

Enter Malcolme and Seyward.

Sey. This way my Lord, the Castles gently rendred -
The Tyrants people, on both sides do fight,
The Noble Thanes do brauely in the Warre,
The day almost it selfe professes yours,
And little is to do.

Malc. We haue met with Foes
That strike beside vs.

Sey. Enter Sir, the Castle Exeunt. Alarums.
Enter Macbeth

Macb. Why should I play the Roman Foole, and dye
On mine owne sword? whiles I see liues, the gashes
Do better vpon them.

Enter Macduffe

Macd. Turne Hell-hound, turne.

Macb. Of all men else I haue auoyded thee
But get thee backe, my soule is too much charg'd
With blood of thine already

Macd. I haue no words,
My voice is in my Sword, thou bloodier Villaine
Then termes can giue thee out. Fight: Alarums

Macb. Thou loofest labour,
As easie may'st thou the intrenchant Ayre
With thy keene Sword impresse, as make me bleed
Let fall thy blade on vulnerable Crests,
I beare a charmed Life, which must not yeeld
To one of woman borne.

Macd. Dispaire thy Charme,
And let the Angell whom thou stil' hast seru'd
Tell thee, Macduffe was from his Mothers womb
Vnrimely ript.

Macb. Accursed be that tongue that tels mee so;
For it hath Cow'd my better part of man
And be these Iugling Fiends no more beleeu'd,
That palter with vs in a double fence,
That keepe the word of promise to our eare,
And breake it to our hope. Ile not fight with thee.

Macd. Then yeeld thee Coward,
And lue to be the shew, and gaze o'th' time.
Wee'l haue thee, as our rarer Monsters are Painted vpon a pole, and vnder-writ,
Heere may you see the Tyrant.

Macb. I will not yeeld
To hisse the ground before young Malcolmes feet,
And to be baited with the Rabbies curse
Though Byrnane wood be come to Dunsinane,
And thou oppos'd, being of no woman borne.
Yet I will try the last. Before my body,
I throw my warlike Shield. Lay on Macduffe,
And damn'd be him, that first cries hold, enough.
Exeunt fighting Alarums.

Enter Fighting, and Macbeth slaine:

Retreat, and Flourish. Enter with Drumme and Colours, Malcolme, Seyward, Rosse, Thanes, & Soldiers.

Mal. I would the Friends we miss, were safe arriv'd.

Sey. Some must go off and yet by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought.

Mal. Macduffe is missing, and your Noble Sonne.

Rosse. Your son my Lord, ha's paid a fouldiers debt,
He onely luv'd but till he was a man,
The which no sooner had his Prouesse confirm'd
In the vnshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd.

Sey. Then he is dead?

Rosse. I, and brought off the field: your cause of sorrow
Must not be measur'd by his worth, for then
It hath no end.

Sey. Had he his hurts before?

Rosse. I, on the Front.

Sey. Why then, Gods Soldier be he -
Had I as many Sonnes, as I haue haire,
I would not wish them to a fairer death:
And so his Knell is knoll'd.

Mal. Hee's worth more sorrow,
And that Ile spend for him

Sey. He's worth no more,
They say he parted well, and paid his score,
And so God be with him. Here comes newer comfort.

Enter Macduffe, with Macbeths head.

Macd. Haile King, for to thou art
Behold where stands
Th' Vsurpers curst head the time is free:
I see thee compast with thy Kingdomes Pearle,
That speake my salutation in their minds.
Whose voyces I desire aloud with mine.
Haile King of Scotland.

All. Haile King of Scotland. Flourish.

Mal. We shall not spend a large expence of time,
Before we reckon with your feuerall loues,
And make vs euen with you. My Thanes and Kinsmen
Henceforth be Earles, the first that euer Scotland
In such an Honor nam'd: What's more to do,
Which would be planted newly with the time,
As calling home our exil'd Friends abroad,
That fled the Snares of watchfull Tyranny,
Producing forth the cruell Ministers
Of this dead Butcher, and his Fiend-like Queene;
Who (as 'tis thought) by selfe and violent hands,
Tooke off her life. This and what needfull else
That call's vpon vs, by the Grace of Grace,
We will performe in measure, time, and place:
So thanks to all at once, and to each one,
Whom we muite, to see vs Crown'd at Scene.

Flourish. Exeunt Omnes.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF HAMLET, Prince of Denmarke.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Barnardo and Francisco two Centinels.

Barnardo.

Ho's there?

Fran. Nay answer me. Stand & vnfold your selfe.

Bar. Long liue the King.

Fran. Barnardo?

Bar. He.

Fran. You come most carefully vpon your houre.

Bar. 'Tis now strook twelue, get thee to bed Francisco.

Fran. For this releefe much thanks. 'Tis bitter cold,
And I am sicke at heart

Barn. Haue you had quiet Guard?

Fran. Not a Mouse stirring.

Barn. Well, goodnight. If you do meet Horatio and Marcellus, the Riuals of my Watch, bid them make hast.

Enter Horatio and Marcellus

Fran. I thinke I heare them. Stand. who's there?

Hor. Friends to this ground.

Mar. And Leige-men to the Dane.

Fran. Giue you good night.

Mar. O farwel honest Soldier, who hath relieu'd you?

Fra. Barnardo ha's my place. giue you goodnight.

Exit Fran.

Mar. Holla Barnardo.

Bar. Say, what is Horatio there?

Hor. A peece of him.

Bar. Welcome Horatio, welcome good Marcellus

Mar. What, ha's this thing appear'd againe to night.

Bar. I haue seene nothing

Mar. Horatio saies, 'tis but our Fantasie,
And will not let beleefe take hold of him
Touching this dreaded sight, twice seene of vs,
Therefore I haue interested him along
With vs, to watch the minutes of this Night,
That if againe this Apparition come,
He may approue our eyes, and speake to it.

Hor. Tush, tush, 'twill not appeare.

Bar. Sit downe a while,

And let vs once againe assaile your eares,
That are so fortified against our Story,
What we two Nights haue seene.

Hor. Well, sit we downe,

And let vs heare Barnardo speake of this.

Bar. Last night of all,
When yond same Starre that's Westward from the Pole
Had made his course t'illumine that part of Heauen

Where now it burnes, Marcellus and my selfe,
The Bell then beating one.

Mar. Peace, breake thee of: Enter the Ghost.
Looke where it comes againe.

Barn. In the same figure, like the King that's dead.

Mar. Thou art a Scholler, speake to it Horatio.

Barn. Lookes it not like the King? Marke it Horatio.

Hor. Most like. It harrowes me with fear & wonder

Barn. It would be spoke too

Mar. Question it Horatio.

Hor. What art thou that vsurp'st this time of night,
Together with that Faire and Warlike forme

In which the Maiesty of buried Denmarke

Did sometimes march By Heauen I charge thee speake.

Mar. It is offended.

Barn. See, it stalkes away

Hor. Stay. Ipeake, speake: I Charge thee, speake.

Exit the Ghost

Mar. 'Tis gone, and will not answer.

Barn. How now Horatio? You tremble & look pale
Is not this something more then Fantasie?

What thinke you on't?

Hor. Before my God, I might not this beleue
Without the sensible and true aouch
Of mine owne eyes.

Mar. Is it not like the King?

Hor. As thou art to thy selfe,
Such was the very Armour he had on,
When th' Ambitious Norway combatted.
So frown'd he once, when in an angry parle
He smot the fledded Pollax on the Ice.
'Tis strange.

Mar. Thus twice before, and iust at this dead houre,
With Martiall stalke, hath he gone by our Watch

Hor. In what particular thought to work, I know not:
But in the grosse and scope of my Opinion,
This boades some strange eruption to our State.

Mar. Good now sit downe, & tell me he that knowes
Why this same strict and most obseruant Watch,
So nightly toyles the subiect of the Land,
And why such dayly Cast of Brazon Cannon
And Forraigne Mart for Implements of warre:
Why such impresse of Ship-wrights, whole sore Taske
Do's not diuide the Sunday from the weeke,
What might be toward, that this sweaty hast
Doth make the Night ioynt-Labourer with the day
Who is't that can informe me?

Hor. That can I,

At

At least the whisper goes so Our last King,
Whose Image euen but now appear'd to vs,
Was (as you know) by Fortinbras of Norway,
(Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate Pride)
Dar'd to the Combate. In which, our Valiant Hamlet,
(For so this side of our knowne world esteem'd him)
Did slay this Fortinbras: who by a Seal'd Compact,
Well ratified by Law, and Heraldrie,
Did forfeite (with his life) all those his Lands
Which he stood seiz'd on, to the Conqueror:
Against the which, a Moity competent
Was gaged by our King: which had return'd
To the Inheritance of Fortinbras,
Had he bin Vanquisher, as by the same Cou'nant
And carriage of the Article designe,
His fell to Hamlet. Now sir, young Fortinbras,
Of vnimproued Mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, heere and there,
Shark'd vp a List of Landleesse Resolutes,
For Foode and Diet, to some Enterprize
That hath a stomacke in't which is no other
(And it doth well appeare vnto our State)
But to recouer of vs by strong hand
And termes Compulsatiue, those foresaid Lands
So by his Father lost: and this (I take it)
Is the maine Motiue of our Preparations,
The Source of this our Warch, and the cheefe head
Of this post-hast, and Romage in the Land.

Enter Ghost againe.

But soft, behold Lo, where it comes againe:
Ile crosse it, though it blast me. Stay Illusion.
If thou hast any sound, or vse of Voyce,
Speake to me If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me; speake to me
If thou art priuy to thy Countries Fate
(Which happily foreknowing may auoyd) Oh speake.
Or, if thou hast vp-hoorded in thy life
Extorted Treasure in the wombe of Earth,
(For which, they say, you Spirits oft walke in death)
Speake of it. Stay, and speake Stop it Marcellus.

Mar Shall I strike at it with my Partizan?

Hor. Do, if it will not stand

Barn. 'Tis heere.

Hor. 'Tis heere.

Mar. 'Tis gone

Exit Ghost.

We do it wrong, being so Maieesticall
To offer it the shew of Violence,
For it is as the Ayre, invulnerable,
And our vaine blowes, malicious Mockery.

Barn. It was about to speake, when the Cocke crew.

Hor. And then it started, like a guilty thing
Vpon a fearfull Summons. I haue heard,
The Cocke that is the Trumpet to the day,
Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding Throate
Awake the God of Day and at his warning,
Whether in Sea, or Fire, in Earth, or Ayre,
Th'extravagant, and erring Spirit, hies
To his Confinde And of the truth heerein,
This present Obiect made probation

Mar It faded on the crowing of the Cocke.
Some sayes, that euer 'gainst that Season comes Wherein our Saviours Birth is celebrated,
The Bird of Dawning singeth all night long
And then (they say) no Spirit can walke abroad,
The nights are wholesome, then no Planets strike,
No Faery talkes, nor Witch hath power to Charme:

So hallow'd, and so gracious is the time

Hor. So haue I heard, and do in part beleue it.
But looke, the Morne in Russet mantle clad,
Walkes o're the dew of yon high Easterne Hill,
Breake we our Watch vp, and by my aduice
I et vs impart what we haue seene to night
Vnto yong Hamlet. For vpon my life,
This Spirit dumbe to vs, will speake to him.
Do you consent we shall acquaint him with it,
As needfull in our Loues, fitting our Duty?

Mar. Let do't I pray, and I this morning know
Where we shall finde him most conueniently. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Claudius King of Denmarke, Gertrude the Queene, Hamlet, Polonius, Laertes, and his Sister Ophelia, Lords Attendant.

King. Though yet of Hamlet our deere Brothers death
The memory be greene and that it vs besitteth
To beare our hearts in grieue, and our whole Kingdome
To be contracted in one brow of woe
Yet so faire hath Discretion fought with Nature,
That we with wisest sorrow thinke on him,
Together with remembrance of our selues
Therefore our sometimes Sister, now our Queen,
Th'Imperiall Ioyntresse of this warlike State,
Haue we, as 'twere, with a defeated ioy,
With one Auspicious, and one Dropping eye,
With much in Funerall, and with Dirge in Marriage,
In equall Scale weighing Delight and Dole
Taken to Wife: nor haue we heerein barr'd
Your better Wisedomes, which haue wisely gone
With this affaile along, for all our Thanks
Now followes, that you know young Fortinbras,
Holding a weake supposall of our worth;
Or thinking by our late deere Brothers death,
Our State to be disioyned, and out of Frame,
Collegued with the dreame of his Aduantage;
He hath not say'd to pester vs with Message,
Importing the surrender of those Lands
Lost by his Father with all Bonds of Law
To our most valiant Brother So much for him.

Enter Voltemand and Cornelius.

Now for our selfe, and for this time of meeting
Thus much the businesse is. We haue heere writ
To Norway, Vncle of young Fortinbras,
Who Impotent and Bedrid, scarcely heares
Of this his Nephewes purpose, to suppress
His further gate heerein In that the Leues,
The Lists, and full proportions are all made
Out of his subiect and we heere dispatch
You good Cornelius, and you Voltemand,
For bearing of this greeting to old Norway,
Giuing to you no further personall power
To businesse with the King, more then the scope
Of these dilated Articles allow
Farewell and let your hast commend your duty.

Vol. In that, and all things, will we shew our duty.

King. We doubt it nothing heartily farewell

Exit Voltemand and Cornelius.

And now Laertes, what's the newes with you?

You

You told vs of some suite. What is't Laertes ?
 You cannot speake of Reason to the Dane,
 And loose your voyce What would'st thou beg Laertes,
 That shall not be my Offer, nor thy Asking ?
 The Head is not more Native to the Heart,
 The Hand more Instrumentall to the Mouth,
 Then is the Throne of Denmarke to thy Father.
 What would'st thou haue Laertes ?

Laer Dead my Lord,
 Your leaue and fauour to returne to France.
 From whence, though willingly I came to Denmarke
 To shew my duty in your Coronation,
 Yet now I must confesse, that duty done,
 My thoughts and wishes bend againe towards France,
 And bow them to your gracious leaue and pardon.

King. Haue you your Fathers leaue ?
 What sayes Pollonius ?

Pol. He hath my Lord!
 I do beseech you giue him leaue to go.
King. Take thy faire houre Laertes, time be thine,
 And thy best graces spend it at thy will.
 But now my Cousin Hamlet, and my Sonne ?

Ham. A little more then kin, and lesse then kinde.
King. How is it that the Clouds still hang on you ?
Ham. Not so my Lord, I am too much i'th'Sun.

Queen. Good Hamlet cast thy nightly colour off,
 And let thine eye looke like a Friend on Denmarke.

Do not for euer with thy veyled lids
 Seeke for thy Noble Father in the dust;
 Thou know'st 'tis common, all that liues must dye,
 Passing through Nature, to Eternity.

Ham. I Madam, it is common.
Queen. If it be,

Why seemes it so particular with thee.

Ham. Seemes Madam? Nay, it is I know not Seemes:
 'Tis not alone my Inky Cloake (good Mother)
 Nor Customary suites of solemne Blacke,
 Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
 No, nor the fruitfull Riuer in the Eye,
 Nor the infected hauiour of the Visage,
 Together with all Formes, Moods, shewes of Griefe,
 That can denote me truly These indeed Seeme,
 For they are actions that a man might play.
 But I haue that Within, which passeth show;
 These, but the Trappings, and the Suites of woe

King. 'Tis sweet and commendable
 In your Nature Hamlet,
 To giue these mourning duties to your Father:
 But you must know, your Father lost a Father,
 That Father lost, lost his, and the Suruiuer bound
 In filiall Obligation, for some terme
 To do obsequious Sorrow. But to perseuer
 In obstinate Condolement, is a course
 Of impious stubbornnesse. 'Tis vnmanly grieffe,
 It shewes a will most incorrect to Heauen,
 A Heart vnfortified, a Minde impatient,
 An Vnderstanding simple, and vnchool'd:
 For, what we know must be, and is as common
 As any the most vulgar thing to sence,
 Why should we in our peeuish Opposition
 Take it to heart? 'Fye, 'tis a fault to Heauen,
 A fault against the Dead, a fault to Nature,
 To Reason most absurd, whose common Theame
 Is death of Fathers, and who still hath cried,
 From the first Coarse, till he that dyed to day,
 This must be so. We pray you throw to earth

This vnpreuayling woe, and shine of vs
 As of a Father; For let the world take note,
 You are the most immediate to our Throne,
 And with no lesse Nobility of Loue,
 Then that which dearest Father beares his Sonne,
 Do I impart towards you. For your intent
 In going backe to Schoole in Wittenberg,
 It is most retrograde to our desire.
 And we beseech you, bend you to remaine
 Heere in the cheere and com'fort of our eye,
 Our cheefest Courtier Cousin, and our Sonne
Qu. Let not thy Mother lose her Prayers Hamlet.
 I prythee stay with vs, go not to Wittenberg
Ham. I shall in all my best
 Obey you Madam.

King. Why 'tis a louing, and a faire Reply,
 Be as our selfe in Denmarke. Madam come,
 This gentle and vnforc'd accord of Hamlet
 Sits smiling to my heart; in grace whereof,
 No second health that Denmarke drinks to day,
 But the great Cannon to the Clouds shall tell,
 And the Kings Rounce, the Heauens shall Luite againe, Respeaking earthly Thunder. Come away. Exeunt

Alone Hamlet.

Ham. Oh that this too too solid Flesh, would melt,
 Thaw, and resoluie it selfe into a Dew
 Or that the Euerlasting had not fixt
 His Cannon 'gainst Selfe-slaughter. O God, O God!
 How weary, stale, flat, and vnprofitable
 Seemes to me all the vses of this world?
 Fie on't? Oh fie, fie, 'tis an vnweeded Garden
 That growes to Seed. Things rank, and grosse in Nature
 Possesse it meereely. That should come to this
 But two months dead Nay, not to much, not two,
 So excellent a King, that was to this
Hyperion to a Satyre - so louing to my Mother,
 That he might not beneere the windes of heauen
 Visit her face too roughly. Heauen and Earth
 Must I remember why she would hang on him,
 As if encreate of Appetite had growne
 By what it fed on, and yet within a month?
 Let me not thinke on't. Frailty, thy name is woman.
 A little Moneth, or ere those shoes were old,
 With which she follow'd my poore Fathers body
 Like Niebe, all teares. Why she, even she.
 (O Heauen! A beast that wanes discourse of Reason
 Would haue moun'd longer) married with mine Vnkle,
 My Fathers Brother - but no more like my Father,
 Then I to Hercules. Within a Moneth?
 Ere yet the file of most vnrighteous Teares
 Had left the flushing of her gauled eyes,
 She married O most wicked speed, to post
 With such dexterity to incestuous sheets:
 It is not, nor it cannot come to good
 But breake my heart, for I must hold my tongue.

Enter Horatio, Barnard, and Marcellus.

Hor. Haile to your Lordship.

Ham. I am glad to see you well.
Horatio, or I do forget my selfe.

Hor. The same my Lord,
 And your poore Seruant euer.

Ham. Sir my good friend,
 Ile change that name with you:
 And what make you from Wittenberg Horatio?

Mar.

Marcellus.

Mar. My good Lord.

Ham. I am very glad to see you good euen Sir
But what in faith make you from Wittenberge?

Hor. A truant disposition, good my Lord.

Ham. I would not haue your Enemy say so,
Nor shall you doe mine eare that violence,
To make it trustful of your owne report
Against your selfe. I know you are no Truant:
But what is your affaire in Elfenor?

Wee'l teach you to drinke deepe, ere you depart,

Hor. My Lord, I came to see your Fathers Funerall.

Ham. I pray thee doe not mock me (fellow Student)
I thinke it was to see my Mothers Wedding

Hor. Indeed my Lord, it tolloved hard vpon

Ham. 'Thrift, thrift Horatio. the Funerall Bakt-meats
Did coldly furn sh forth the Marriage Tables;
Would I had met my dearest foe in heauen,
Ere I had euer seene that day Horatio.
My father, me thinks I see my father.

Hor. Oh where my Lord?

Ham. In my minds eye (Horatio)

Hor. I saw him once, he was a goodly King

Ham. He was a man, take him for all in all.
I shall no look vpon his like againe.

Hor. My Lord, I thinke I saw him yesternight.

Ham. Saw? Who?

Hor. My Lord, the King your Father.

Ham. The King my Father?

Hor. Season your admiration for a while
With an attent eare, till I may deliuer
Vpon the witnessse of these Gentlemen,
This maruell to you.

Ham. For Heauens loue let me heare

Hor. Two nights together, had these Gentlemen
(Marcellus and Barrardo) on their Watch
In the dead wast and middle of the night
Beene thus encountred. A figure like your Father,
Arm'd at all points exactly, Cap a Pe,
Appeares before them, and with holle mine march
Goes slow and stately: By them thrice he walkt,
By their opprest and feare-surprized eyes,
Within his Trunche ins lengths whilst they bestid d
Almost to Ielly with the Act of feare,
Stand dumbe and speake not to him. This to me
In dreadfull secretie impart they did,
And I with them the third Night kept the Watch,
Whereas they had deliuer'd both in time,
Forme of the thing, each word made true and good,
The Apparition comes. I knew your Father.
These hands are not more like.

Ham. But where was this?

Mar. My Lord vpon the platforme where we watcht

Ham. Did you not speake to it?

Hor. My Lord, I did;

But answer made it none yet once me thought
It lifted vp it head, and did addresse
It selfe to motion, like as it would speake:
But euen then, the Morning Cocke crew lowd;
And at the sound it thrunk in hast away,
And vanisht from our sight

Ham. Tis very strange

Hor. As I doe lue my honourd Lord 'tis true;
And we did thinke it writ downe in our duty
To let you know of it

Ham. Indeed, indeed Sirs, but this troubles me.

Hold you the watch to Night?

Both. We doe my Lord.

Ham. Arm'd, say you?

Both. Arm'd, my Lord.

Ham. From top to toe?

Both. My Lord, from head to foote.

Ham. Then saw you not his face?

Hor. O yes, my Lord, he wore his Beauer vp.

Ham. What, lookt he frowningly?

Hor. A countenance more in sorrow then in anger.

Ham. Pale, or red?

Hor. Nay very pale.

Ham. And fixt his eyes vpon you?

Hor. Most constantly.

Ham. I would I had bene there.

Hor. It would haue much amaz'd you

Ham. Very like, very like. Said it long? (dred.)

Hor. While one with moderate hast might tell a hun-

All. Longer, longer

Hor. Not when I saw't.

Ham. His Beard was grisly? no.

Hor. It was, as I haue seene it in his life,

A Sable Silver'd. (gaine.)

Ham. He watch to Night; perchance 'twill wake a-

Hor. I warrant you it will.

Ham. If it assume my noble Fathers person,
He speake to it, though Hell it selfe should gape
And bid me hold my peace. I pray you all,
If you haue hitherto conceald this sight;
Let it bee treble in your silence still.
And whatsoeuer els shall hap to night,
Giue it an vnderstanding but no tongue;
I will requite your loues; so, fare ye well:
Vpon the Platforme twixt eleuen and twelue,
He visit you

All. Our duty to your Honour. Exeunt.

Ham. Your loue, as mine to you farewell
My Fathers Spirit in Armes? All is not well.
I doubt some foule play. would the Night were come;
Till then sit still my soule, foule deeds will rise,
Though all the earth orewhelm them to mens eyes. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Laertes and Ophelia.

Laer. My necessaries are imbarck't, Farewell:
And Sister, as the Winds giue Benefit,
And Conuoy is assistant; doe not sleepe,
But let me heare from you.

Ophel. Doe you doubt that?

Laer. For Hamlet, and the trifling of his fauours,
Hold it a fashion and a toy in Bloud;
A Violet in the youth of Primy Nature;
Froward, not permanent, sweet not lasting
The suppliance of a minute? No more.

Ophel. No more but so.

Laer. Thinke it no more;

For nature cressant does not grow alone,
In thewes and Bulke but as his Temple waxes,
The inward seruice of the Minde and Soule
Growes wide withall: Perhaps he loues you now,
And now no soyle nor cauteil doth besmerch
The vertue of his feare: but you must feare

His

The Tragedie of Hamlet.

His greatnesse weigh'd, his will is not his owne;
For hee himselfe is subiect to his Birth:
Hee may not, as vnallued persons doe,
Carue for himselfe; for, on his choyce depends
The sanctity and health of the weole State.
And therefore must his choyce be circumscrib'd
Vnto the voyce and yeelding of that Body,
Whereof he is the Head. Then if he sayes he loues you,
It fits your wisdome so farre to beleue it;
As he in his peculiar Sect and force
May giue his saying deed, which is no further,
Then the maine voyce of Denmarke goes withall.
Then weigh what losse your Honour may sustaine,
If with too credent eare you list his Songs;
Or lose your Heart; or your chaste Treasure open
To his vnmaistred importunity.
Feare it Ophelia, feare it my deare Sister,
And keepe within the reare of your Affection,
Out of the shot and danger of Desire.
The chariest Maid is Prodigall enough,
If she vnmaske her beauty to the Moone.
Vertue it selfe escapes not calumnious stroakes,
The Canker Galls, the Infants of the Spring
Too oft before the buttons be discolor'd,
And in the Morne and liquid dew of Youth,
Contagious blastments are most imminent.
Be wary then, best safety lies in feare;
Youth to it selfe rebels, though none else neere.
Oph. I shall th'effect of this good Lesson keepe,
As watchmen to my heart: but good my Brother
Doe not as some vngracious Pastors doe,
Shew me the steepe and thorny way to Heauen;
Whilst like a pult and recklesse Libertine
Himselfe, the Primrose path of dalliance treads,
And reaks not his owne reade.

Laer. Oh, feare me not.

Enter Polonius.

I stay too long; but here my Father comes:
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles vpon a second leaue.
Polon. Yet heere Laertes Aboord, aboard for shame,
The winde sits in the shoulder of your saile,
And you are staid for there: my blessing with you;
And these few Precepts in thy memory,
See thou Character. Giue thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any vnproportion'd thought his Act;
Be thou familiar; but by no means vulgar:
The friends thou hast, and their adoption trade,
Grapple them to thy Soule, with hoopes of Steele;
But doe not dull thy palme, with entertainment
Of each vncharit'ed, vnledg'd Comrade. Beware
Of entrance to a quarrell: but being in Bear't that th'oppos'd may beware of thee.
Giue euery man thine eare; but few thy voyces:
Take each mans censure; but reserve thy iudgement:
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy;
But not exprest in fancie, rich, not gawdie:
For the Apparell oft proclaimes the man,
And they in France of the best ranck and station,
Are of a most select and generous cheff in that.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be;
For lone oft loses both it selfe and friend:
And borrowing duns the edge of Husbandry.
This aboue all; to thine owne selfe be true:
And it must follow, as the Night the Day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Farewell: my Blessing season this in thee.

Laer. Most humbly doe I take my leaue, my Lord.

Polon. The time mutes you, goe, your seruants tend.

Laer. Farewell Ophelia, and remember well
What I haue said to you.

Oph. 'Tis in my memory lockt,
And you your selfe shall keepe the key of it.

Laer. Farewell. Exit Laer.

Polon. What ist Ophelia he hath said to you?

Oph. So please you, something touching the Lord Hamlet.

Polon. Marry, well bethought:

'Tis told me he hath very oft of late

Giuen private time to you; and you your selfe

Haue of your audience beene most free and bounteous

If it be so, as so it put on me;

And that in way of caution: I must tell you,

You doe not vnderstand your selfe so cleerly,

As it behoues my Daughter, and your Honour.

What is betweene you, giue me vp the truth?

Oph. He hath my Lord of late, made many tenders
Of his affection to me.

Polon. Affection puh. You speake like a greene Gulse,
Vntis'd in such perillous Circumstance

Doe you beleue his tenders, as you call them?

Oph. I do not know, my Lord, what I should thinke.

Polon. Marry Ile teach you; thinke your selfe a Baby;

That you haue rane his tenders for true pay,

Which are not sterling. Tender your selfe more dearly;

Or not to crack the winde of the poore Phrase,
Roaming it thus, you tender me a foole

Oph. My Lord, he hath importun'd me with loue,
In honourable fashion.

Polon. I fashion you may call it, go too, go too.

Oph. And hath giuen countenance to his speech,
My Lord, with all the vower of Heauen.

Polon. I, Sprinckles to catch Woodlocks: I doe know
When the Bloud burnes, how Prodigall the Soule

Giues the tongue vower: these blazes, Daughter,

Giuing more light then heates; extinct in both,

Euen in their prouoke, as it is a making;

You trust not: for fire. For this time Daughter,

Be some what auer of your Maiden presence;

Set your enternments at a higher rate,

Then a command to parley. For Lord Hamlet,

Beleue so much in him, that he is young;

And with a larger tether may he walke,

Then may be giurn you. In few, Ophelia,

Doe not beleue his vower; for they are Broakers,

Not of the eye, which their Inuents show:

But meere implorators of vnholie Sutes,
Breathing like sanctified and pious bonds,

The better to beguile. This is for all:

I would not, in plainet termes, from this time forth,

Haue you so slander any moment leisure,

As to giue words or talke with the Lord Hamlet:

Looke too't, I charge you; come your wayes.

Oph. I shall obey my Lord. Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, Horatio, Marcellus.

Ham. The Ayre bites shrewdly: is it very cold?

Hor. It is a nipping and an eager ayre.

Ham. What hower now?

Hor. I thinke it lacks of twelue.

Ham. No, it is strooke.

Hor. Indeed I heard it not: then it drawes neere the

What does this meane my Lord?

Ham. The King doth wake to night, and takes his Keepes wassels and the swaggering ypspring teeles,
And as he dreines his draughts of Rensh downe,
The kettle Drum and Trumpet thus bray out
The triumph of his Pledge.

Horat. Is it a custome?

Ham. I marry is,
And to my mind, though I am native heere,
And to the manner borne It is a Custome
More honour'd in the breach, then the obseruance.

Enter Ghost

Hor. Looken y Lord, it comes.

Ham. Angels and Ministers of Grace defend vs:
Be thou a Spirit of health or Goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee ayres from Heauen, or blasts from Hell,
Bethey euents wicked or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape
That I will speake to thee. Ile call thee Hamlet,
King, Father, Roy, all Dane. Oh, oh, answer me,
Let me not burie in Ignorance; but tell
Why thy Canoniz'd bones hearst in death,
Hau' burst their cements, why the Sepulcher
Wherein we saw thee quietly enur'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and Marble iawes,
To cast thee vp againe? What may it be meane?
That thou dead Carse againe in compleat Steele,
Reuisits thus the glimpses of the Moone,
Making Night hideous? And 't'he fooles of Nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition,
With thoughts beyond thee, reaches of our Soules,
Say, why is this? wherefore? what should we doe?

Ghost beckens Hamlet.

Hor. It beckons you to go away with it,
As if it some impartment did desire
To you alone.

Mar. Look with what courteous action
It waits you to a more remoued ground:
But doe not goe with it.

Hor. No, by no means.

Ham. It will not speake then will I follow it.

Hor. Doe not my Lord.

Ham. Why, what should be the feare?
I doe not set my life at a pins fee,
And for my Soule, what can it doe to that?
Being a thing immorall as it selfe
It waues me forth againe, Ile follow it.

Hor. What if it tempt you toward the loud my Lord?
Or to the dreadfull Sonnet of the Cliffe,
That beetles o're his base into the Sea,
And there assumes some other horrible forme,
Which might deprue your Soueraignty of Reason,
And draw you into madnesse thinke of it?

Ham. It waits me still. goe on, Ile follow thee.

Mar. You shall not goe my Lord.

Ham. Hold off your hand,

Hor. Be rul'd, you shall not goe

Ham. My fate cries out,
And makes each petty Artire in this body,
As hardy as the Nemean Lions nerue
Still am I call'd? Vnharm'd me Gentlemen
By Heau'n, Ile make a Ghost of him that lets me:
I say away, goe on, Ile follow thee.

Hor. He waxes desperate with imagination.

Mar. Let's follow, 'tis not fit thus to obey him.

Hor. Haue after, to what issue will this come?

Mar. Something is rotten in the State of Denmarke.

Hor. Heauen will direct it.

Mar. Nay, let's follow him.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

(thet

Ham. Where wilt thou lead me? speake; Ile go no fur

Gho. Marke me

Ham. I will.

Gho. My bowier is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting Flames
Must render vp my selfe.

Ham. Alas poore Ghost.

Gho. Pity me not, but lend thy serious hearing
To what I shall vnfold.

Ham. Speake, I am bound to heare.

Gho. So art thou to reuenge, when thou shalt heare.

Ham. What?

Gho. I am thy Fathers Spirit,
Doom'd for a certaine terme to walke the night;
And for the day confin'd to fast in Fiers,
Till the foule crimes done in my dayes of Nature
Are burnt and purg'd away? But that I am forbid
To tell the secrets of my Prison-House;
I could a Tale vnfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow vp thy soule, freeze thy young bloud,
Make thy two eyes like Starres, start from their Spheres,
Thy knotty and combined locks to part,
And each particular haire to stand an end,
Like Quilles vpon the fretfull Porpentine.
But this eternall blason must not be
To eares of flesh and blood, list Hamlet, oh list, if thou didst euer thy deare Father loue.

Ham. O' Heauen!

Gho. Reuenge his foule and most vnnaturall Murther.

Ham. Murther?

Ghost. Murther most foule, as to the best it is;
But this most foule, strange, and vnnaturall.

Ham. Hast, hast me to know it,

That with wings as swift
As meditation, or the thoughts of Loue,
May sweepe to my Reuenge

Ghost. I finde thee apt,

And duller shouldst thou be then the fat weede
That rots it selfe in ease, on Leache Wharfe,
Wouldst thou not stirre in this? Now Hamlet heare:
It's giuen out, that sleeping in mine Orchard,
A Serpent stung me. So the whole eage of Denmarke,
Is by a forged proceesse of my death
Rankly abus'd. But know thou Noble youth,
The Serpent that did sting thy Fathers life,
Now weares his Crowne.

Ham. O my Propheticke soule. mine Vncle?

Ghost. I that incestuous, that adulterate Beast
With witchcraft of his wits, hath Traitorous guifts,
Oh wicked Wit, and Gifts, that haue the power
So to seduce? Vpon to to this shamefull Lust
The will of my most seeming vertuous Queene:
Oh Hamlet, what a falling off was there,
From me, whose loue was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand, eu'n with the Vow
I made to her in Marriage, and to decline
Vpon a wretch, whose Naturall gifts were poore
To those of mine. But Verrue, as it neuer wil be moued,
Though Lewdnesse count it in a shape of Heauen:
So Lust, though to a radiant Angell link'd,
Will fate it selfe in a Celestiall bed, & prey on Garbage.

O o

But

But soft, methinkes I sent the Mornings Ayre;
 Briefe let me be: Sleeping within mine Orchard,
 My custome alwayes in the afternoone;
 Vpon my secure hower thy Vncle stole
 With iuyce of curfed Hebenon in a Violl,
 And in the Porches of mine eares did poure
 The leaperous Distilment; whose effect
 Holds such an enmity with bloud of Man,
 That swift as Quick-siluer, it courfes through
 The naturall Gates and Allies of the Body;
 And with a sodaine vigour it doth poffect
 And curd, like Aygre droppings into Milke,
 The thin and whoosome blood. so did it mine;
 And a most instant Tetter bak'd about,
 Most Lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
 All my smooth Body.
 Thus was I, sleeping, by a Brothers hand,
 Of Life, of Crowne, and Queene at once dispatcht
 Cut off euen in the Blossomes of my Sinne,
 Vnhouzzled, disappointed, vnnaneld,
 No reckoning made, but sent to my account
 With all my imperfections on my head;
 Oh horrible, Oh horrible, most horrible:
 If thou hast nature in thee beare it not;
 Let not the Royall Bed of Denmarke be
 A Couch for Luxury and damned Incest.
 But howsoever thou pursuest this Act,
 Taint not thy mind; nor let thy Soule contriue
 Against thy Mother ought; leaue her to heauen,
 And to those Thornes that in her bosome lodge,
 To pricke and sting her. Fare thee well at once;
 The Glow-worme showes the Matine to be neere,
 And gins to pale his vneffectuall Fire:
 Adue, adue, Hamlet: remember me. Exit.
Ham Oh all you host of Heauen! Oh Earth; what els?
 And shall I couple Hell? Oh fie: hold my heart;
 And you my sinnewes, grow not instant Old;
 But beare me stiffely vp: Remember thee?
 I, thou poore Ghost, while memory holds a seate
 In this distracted Globe. Remember thee?
 Yea, from the Table of my Memory,
 Ile wipe away all triuall fond Records,
 All sawes of Bookes, all formes, all presures past,
 That youth and obseruation coppied there;
 And thy Commandment all alone shall lue
 Within the Booke and Volume of my Braine,
 Vmixt with baser matter; yes, yes, by Heauen:
 Oh most pernicious woman!
 Oh Villaine, Villaine, smiling damned Villaine!
 My Tables, my Tables; meet it is I set it downe,
 That one may smile, and smile and be a Villaine;
 At least I'm sure it may be so in Denmarke;
 So Vncle there you are. now to my words;
 It is; Adue, Adue, Remember me. I haue sworn't.
Hor & Mar. within. My Lord, my Lord,
Enter Horatio and Marcellus.
Mar. Lord Hamlet.
Hor. Heauen secure him.
Mar. So be it.
Hor. Illo, ho, ho, my Lord.
Ham. Hillo, ho, ho, boy; come bird, come.
Mar. How ist't my Noble Lord?
Hor. What newes, my Lord?
Ham. Oh wonderfull!
Hor. Good my Lord tell it.
Ham. No you're uesale it.

Hor. Not I, my Lord, by Heauen.
Mar. Nor I, my Lord. (think it?)
Ham. How say you then, would heart of man once
 But you'l be secret?
Both. I, by Heau'n, my Lord.
Ham. There's nere a villaine dwelling in all Denmarke
 But hee's an arrant knaue.
Hor. There needs no Ghost my Lord, come from the Graue, to tell vs this.
Ham. Why right, you are i'th' right;
 And so, without more circumstance at all,
 I hold it fit that we shake hands, and part.
 You, as your busines and desires shall point you:
 For euery man ha's businesse and desire,
 Such as it is. and for mine owne poore part,
 Looke you, Ile goe pray.
Hor. These are but wild and hurling words, my Lord.
Ham. I'm sorry they offend you heartily:
 Yes faith, heartily.
Hor. There's no offence my Lord.
Ham. Yes, by Saint Patrick, but there is my Lord,
 And much offence too, touching this Vision heere:
 It is an honest Ghost, that let me tell you
 For your desire to know what is betweene vs,
 O remaster't as you may. And now good friends,
 As you are Friends, Schollers and Soldiers,
 Giue me one poore request.
Hor. What is't my Lord? we will.
Ham. Neuer make known what you haue seen to night.
Both. My Lord we will not.
Ham. Nay, but swear't.
Hor. In faith my Lord, not I.
Mar. Nor I my Lord in faith.
Ham. Vpon my sword
Marcell. We haue sworne my Lord already.
Ham. Indeed, vpon my sword, indeed.
Gho. Swear, Ghost cries under the Stage.
Ham. Ah ha boy, sayest thou so. Art thou there true-penny? Come one you here this fellow in the selleredge Consent to swear.
Hor. Propose the Oath my Lord.
Ham. Neuer to speake of this that you haue seene.
 Swear by my sword.
Gho. Swear.
Ham. Hic & ubique? Then wee'l shift for grownd,
 Come hither Gentlemen,
 And lay your hands againe vpon my sword,
 Neuer to speake of this that you haue heard:
 Swear by my Sword. (fast?)
Gho. Swear.
Ham. Well said old Mole, can't worke i'th' ground so
 A worthy Pioner, once more remoue good friends.
Hor. Oh day and night but this is wondrous strange
Ham. And therefore as a stranger giue it welcome.
 There are more things in Heauen and Earth, Horatio,
 Then are dream't of in our Philosophy. But come,
 Here as before, neuer so helpe you mercy,
 How strange or odde so ere I beare my selfe;
 (As I perchance heereafter shall thinke meet
 To put an Anticke disposition on)
 That you at such time seeing me, neuer shall
 With Armes encombred thus, or thus, head shake,
 Or by pronouncing of some doubtfull Phrase;
 As well, we know, or we could and if we would,
 Or if we list to speake; or there be and if there might,
 Or such ambiguous giuing out to note,

That

That you know ought of me; this nor to doe -
So grace and mercie at your most neede helpe you :
Swear

Ghost. Swear.

Ham. Rest lest perturbed Spirit so Gentleman
Withall my true I doe commend me to you,
And what so poore a man as Hamlet is,
May doe't expresse his true and frending to you,
God willing shall not lacke. let vs goe in together,
And still your fingers on your lippes I pray,
The time is out of ioynt. Oh cursed sight,
That euer I was borne to set it right,
Nay, come let's goe together. Exeunt.

Actus Secundus.

Enter Polonius and Reynoldo.

Polon. Give him his money, and these notes Reynoldo.

Reynol. I will my Lord.

Polon. You shall doe marvels wisely good Reynoldo,
Before you visite him you make inquiry
Of his behaviour.

Reynol. My Lord, I did intend it.

Polon. Marry, well said;
Very well said. Looke you Sir,
Enquire me first what Daniskers are in Paris;
And how, and who, what meanes; and where they keepe;
What company, at what expence - and finding
By this encompassment and drift of question,
That they doe know my sonne. Come you more nerter
Then your particular demands will touch it,
Take you as 'twere some distant knowledge of him,
And thus I know his father and his friends,
And in part him. Doe you marke this Reynoldo?

Reynol. I, very well my Lord

Polon. And in part him, but you may say not well,
But it be hee I meane, hees very wilde,
Addicted so and so; and there put on him
What forgeries you please. marry, none so ranke,
As may dishonour him, take heed of that;
But Sir, such winton, wild, and vsuall slips,
As are Companions noted and most knowne
To youth and liberty

Reynol. As gaming my Lord

Polon. I, or drinking, fencing, swearing,
Quarelling, drabbing. You may goe so farre.

Reynol. My Lord that would dishonour him

Polon. Faith no, as you may reason it in the charge;
You must not put another scandall on him,
That hee is open to Incontinencie,
That's not my meaning but breath his faults so quaintly,
That they may seeme the raints of liberty;
The flash and out-broke of a fiery minde,
A savagenes in vnreclaim'd blood of generall assault.

Reynol. But my good Lord

Polon. Wherefore should you doe this?

Reynol. I my Lord, I would know that.

Polon. Marry Sir, heere's my drift,
And I believe it is a fetch of warrant
You laying these slight sulleyes on my Sonne,
As 'twere a thing a little soild i'th working - (sound,
Marke you your party in conuerser; him you would Hauing euer seene. In the prenominate crimes,

The youth you breath of guiltie, be assur'd
He closes with you in this consequence:
Good sir, or so, or friend, or Gentleman,
According to the Phrase and the Addition,
Of man and Country.

Reynol. Very good my Lord.

Polon. And then Sir does he this?

He does: what was I about to say.
I was about to say something where did I leaue?

Reynol. At closes in the consequence:

At friend, or so, and Gentleman.

Polon. At closes in the consequence, I marry,
He closes with you thus. I know the Gentleman,
I saw him yesterday, or tother day,
Or then or then, with such and such, and as you say,
There was he gaming, there o'retook it's Route,
There falling out at Tennis; or perchance,
I saw him enter such a house of sale,
Videlicet, a Brothell, or so forth. See you now;
Your bait of falshood, takes this Cape of truth;
And thus doe we of wisdom and of reach
With windleses, and with assaies of Bias.
By ind'rections finde directions out.

So by my former Lecture and aduice
Shall you my Sonne, you haue me, haue you not?

Reynol. My Lord I haue

Polon. God buy you, fare you well

Reynol. Good my Lord

Polon. Obserue his inclination in your selfe

Reynol. I shall my Lord,

Polon. And let him ply his Musicke

Reynol. Well, my Lord Exit.

Enter Ophelia.

Polon. Farewell

How now Ophelia, what's the matter?

Ophel. Alas my Lord, I haue beene so affrighted.

Polon. With what, in the name of Heauen?

Ophel. My Lord, as I was sowing in my Chamber,
Lord Hamlet with his doublet all vnbrac'd,
No hat vpon his head, his stockings foul'd,
Vngartered, and downe guied to his Anckle,
Pale as his shirt, his knees knocking each other,
And with a looke so pious in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell,
To speake of horrors he comes before me.

Polon. M-d for thy Loue?

Ophel. My Lord, I doe not know. but truly I do feare it.

Polon. What said he?

Ophel. He tooke me by the wrist, and held me hard;
Then goes he to the length of all his arme;
And with his other hand thus o're his brow,
He falls to such perusall of my face,
As he would draw it. Long ita'd he so,
At last, a little shaking of mine Arme -
And thrice his head thus wauing vp and downe;
He rais'd a sigh, so pious and profound,
That it did seeme to shatter all his bulke,
And end his being. That done, he lets me goe,
And with his head ouer his shoulders turn'd,
He seem'd to finde his way without his eyes.
For out adores he went without their helpe;
And to the last, bended their light on me.

Polon. Goe with me, I will goe seeke the King,
This is the very extasie of Loue,
Whose violent property foredoes it selfe,

And

And leads the will to desperate Vndertakings,

As oft as my passion vnder Heauen,
I ha. does afflict our Natures. I am sorrie,
What haue you giuen him any hard words of late?

Oph. No my good Lord. but as you did command,
I did repell his Letters, and deny'de
His access to me.

Pol. Thir hath made him mad.
I am sorrie that with better speed and iudgement
I had not quoted him. I feare he did but trifle,
And meant to wracke thee: but bestrew my ieaousie:
It seemes it is as proper to our Age,
To cast beyond our selues in our Opinions,
As it is common for the younger lust
To lacke discretion. Come, go we to the King,
This must be knowne, w<sup>ch</sup> being kept close might moue
More greefe to hide, then hate to vicer loue. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter King, Queene, Rosinera, and Guilden-sterne Cum alijs.

King. Welcome deere Rosinera and Guilden-sterne.
Moreover, that we much did long to see you,
The neede we haue to vse you, did prouoke
O'r hasty sending. Something haue you heard
Of Hamlets transformation: to I call it,
Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man
Resembles that it was. What it should bee
More then his Fathers death, that thus hath put him
So much from th' vnderstanding of himselfe,
I cannot deeme of. I intreat you both,
That being of so young dayes brought vp with him:
And since to Neighbour'd to his youth, and humour,
That you vouchsafe your rest heere in our Court
Some little time: so by your Companies
To draw him on to pleasures, and to gather
So much as from Occasions you may gleane,
That open'd lies within our remedie.

Qu. Good Gentlemen, he hath much talk'd of you,
And sure I am, two men there are not liuing,
To whom he more adheres. If it will please you
To shew vs so much Gentrie, and good will,
As to expend your time with vs a while,
For the supply and profit of our Hope,
Your Visitation shall receive such thanks
As fits a Kings remembrance.

Rosin. Both your Maiesties
Might by the Soueraigne power you haue of vs,
Put your dread pleasures, more into Command
Then to Entreatie.

Gnil. We both obey,
And here giue vp our selues, in the full bene,
To lay our Services freely at your feete,
To be commanded.

King. Thanks Rosinera, and gentle Guildensterne.

Qu. Thanks Guildensterne and gentle Rosinera.

And I beseech you instantly to visit
My too much changed Sonne.

Go some of ye,
And bring the Gentlemen where Hamlet is.

Gnil. He iuens make our presence and our practises
Pleasant and helpfull to him. Exit.

Queene. Amen.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Th' Ambassadors from Norway, my good Lord,
Are ioyfully return'd.

King. Thou still hast bin the Father of good Newes.

Pol. Haue I, my Lord? Assure you, my good Liege,
I hold my dutie, as I hold my Soule,
Both to my God, one to my gracious King:
And I do thinke, or else this braine of mine
Hunts not the traile of Policie, so sure
As I haue vs'd to do: that I haue found
The very cause of Hamlets Lunacie.

King. Oh speake of that, that I do long to heare.

Pol. Giue first admittance to th' Ambassadors,
My Newes shall be the Newes to that great Feast.

King. Thy selfe do grace to them, and bring them in.
He tell me my sweet Queene, that he hath found
The head and fource of all your Sonnes distemper.

Qu. I doubt it is no other, but the maine,
His Fathers death, and our o're-hasty Marriage.

Enter Polonius, Volinmand, and Cornelius.

King. Well, we shall list him. Welcome good Friends:
Say Volinmand, what from our Brother Norway?

Vol. Most faire returne of Greetings, and Desires.
Vpon our first, he sent out to suppress
His Nephewes Leuies, which to him appear'd
To be a preparation 'gainst the Poleak:
But better look'd into, he truly found
It was against your Highnesse, whereat greued,
That so his Sicknesse, Age, and Impotence
Was falsely borne in hand, sends out Arrests
On Fortinbras, which he (in breefe) obeyes,
Receiues rebuke from Norway: and in hie,
Makes Vow betwix his Vnkle neuer more
To giue th' assay of Armes against your Maiestie.
Whereon old Norway, overcome with ioy,
Gives him three thousand Crownes in Annuall Fee,
And his Commission to employ those Soldiers
So leaued as before, against the Poleak:
With an intreaty heerein further thewne,
That it might please you to giue quiet passe
Through your Dominions for his Enterprize,
On such regards of safety and allowance,
As therein are set downe.

King. It likes vs well.
And at our more consider'd time we'll read,
Answer, and thinke vpon th' Businesse.
Meane time we thanke you, for your well-tooke Labour
Go to your rest, at night wee'll feast together.
Most welcome home. Exit Ambass.

Pol. This businesse is very well ended.
My Liege, and Madam, to expostulate
What Maiestie should be, what Duties,
Why day is day; night, night; and time is time,
Were nothing but to waste Night, Day and Time.
Therefore, since Breuitie is the Soule of Wit,
And tediousnesse, the limbes and outward flourishes,
I will be breefe. Your Noble Sonne is mad.
Mad call I it; for to define true Madnesse,
What is't, but to be nothing else but mad.
But let that go.

Qu. More matter, with lesse Art.
Pol. Madam, I sweare I vfe no Art at all.
That he is mad, 'tis true. 'Tis true 'tis pittie,
And pittie it is true: A foolish figure,
But farewell it: for I will vse no Art.

Mad

Mad let vs grant him then : and now remains
That we finde out the cause of this effect,
Or rather say, the cause of this defect;
For this effect defectiue, comes by cause,
Thus it remains, and the remainder thus. Perpend,
I haue a daughter haue, whilst she is mine,
Who in her Dutie and Obedience, marke,
Hath giuen me this now gather, and surmise.

The Letter.

To the Celestiall, and my Soules Idoll, the most beautified Ophelia

That's an ill Phrase, a vilde Phrase, beautified is a vilde Phrase but you shall heare these in her excellenc white bosome, these.

Qu. Came this from Hamlet to her.

Pol. Good Madam stay awhile, I will be faithfull.

Doubt thou, the Starres are fire,

Doubt, that the Sunne doth moue :

Doubt Truth to be a Lier,

But neuer Doubt, I lise.

O deere Ophelia, I am ill at these Numbers, I haue not Art to reckon my groanes ; but that I lise thee best, oh most Best be-lieue it. Adieu.

There e'ermore most deere Lady, whilst this Machine is to him, Hamlet.

This in Obedience hath my daughter shew'd me
And more about hath his soliciting,
As they fell out by Time, by Meanes, and Place,
All giuen to mine care

King. But how hath she recei'd his Loue?

Pol. What do you thinke of me?

King. As of a man, faithfull and Honourable.

Pol. I would faine proue so. But what might you think?

When I had seene this hot loue on the wing,
As I perceiued it, I must tell you that
Before my Daughter told me, what might you
Or my deere Maiestie your Queene heere, think,
If I had playd the Deske or Table-booke,
Or giuen my heart a winking, mute and dumbe,
Or look'd vpon this Loue, with idle sight,
What might you thinke? No, I went round to worke,
And (my young Mistis) thus I did bespeake
Lord Hamlet is a Prince out of thy Starre,
This must not be - and then, I Precepts gaue her,
That she should locke her selfe from his Resort,
Admit no Messengers, receiue no Tokens
Which done, she tooke the Frutes of my Aduice,
And he repulsed A short Tale to make,
Fell into a Sadr esse, then into a Fitt,
Thence to a Watch, thence into a Weaknesse,
Thence to a Lightnesse, and by this declension
Into the Madnesse whereon now he raues,
And all we waile for.

King. Do you thinke 'tis this?

Qu. It may be very likely.

Pol. Hath there bene such a time, I de fain know that,
That I haue possitiuely said, 'tis so,
When it prou'd otherwise?

King. Not that I know.

Pol. Take this from this, if this be otherwise,
If Circumstances leade me, I will finde
Where truth is hid, though it were hid indeede
Within the Center.

King. How may we try it further?

Pol. You know sometimes
He walke foure houres together, heere

In the Lobby.

Qu. So he ha's indeed.

Pol. At such a time Ile loose my Daughter to him,
Be you and I behinde an Arras then,
Marke the encounter : If he loue her not,
And be not from his reason false thereon;
Let me be no Assistant for a State,
And keepe a Farme and Carters.

King. We will try it.

Enter Hamlet reading on a Booke.

Qu. But looke where sadly the poore wretch
Comes reading.

Pol. Away I do beseech you, both away,
Ile boord him presently. Exit King & Queen.
Oh giue me leaue How does my good Lord Hamlet?

Ham. Well, God-a-mercy.

Pol. Do you know me, my Lord?

Ham. Excellent, excellent well y'are a Fishmonger.

Pol. Not I my Lord.

Ham. Then I would you were so honest a man.

Pol. Honest, my Lord?

Ham. I sir, to be honest as this world goes, is to bee
one man pick'd out of two thousand.

Pol. That's very true, my Lord.

Ham. For if the Sun breed Magots in a dead dogge, being a good kissing Carrion——

Haue you a daughter?

Pol. I haue my Lord.

Ham. Let her not walke i'th' Sunne : Conception is a blessing, but not as your daughter may conceiue. Friend looke too't

Pol. How say you by that? Still harping on my daughter yet he knew me not at first, he said I was a Fishmonger he is farre gone, farre gone : and truly in my youth,
I suffred much extremitie for loue very neere this. Ile speake to him againe. What do you read my Lord?

Ham. Words, words, words

Pol. What is the matter, my Lord?

Ham. Betweene who?

Pol. I meane the matter you meane, my Lord.

Ham. Slanders Sir : for the Satyricall slaue saies here, that old men haue gray Beards; that their faces are wrin-kle'd, their eyes purging thicke Amber, or Plum-Tice Gumme and that they haue a plentiful locke of Wit, together with weake Hammes All which Sir, though I most powerfully, and potently belecue ; yet I holde it not Honestie to haue it thus set downe For you your selfe Sir, should be old as I am, if like a Crab you could go backward.

Pol. Though this be madnesse,
Yet there is Method in't : will you walke
Out of the ayre my Lord?

Ham. Into my Graue?

Pol. Indeed that is out o'th' Ayre.

How pregnant (sometimes) his Replies are?

A happinesse,

That often Madnesse hits on,

Which Reason and Sanitie could not

So prosperously be deliuer'd of.

I will leave him,

And sodainely contriue the meanes of meeting

Betweene him, and my daughter

My Honourable Lord, I will most humbly

Take my leaue of you.

Ham. You cannot Sir take from me any thing, that I will more willingly part withall, except my life, my life.

Polon. Fare you well my Lord.

Ham. These tedious old fooles.

Polon. You goe to lecke my Lord Hamlet; there hee is.

Enter Rosincran and Guildenstern.

Rosin. God saue you Sir.

Guild. Mine honour'd Lord?

Rosin. My most deare Lord?

Ham. My excellent good friends? How do'st thou Guildenstern? Oh, Rosincran, good Lads: How doe ye both?

Rosin. As the indifferent Children of the earth.

Guild. Happy, in that we are not ouer-happy: on Fortunes Cap, we are not the very Button

Ham. Nor the Soales of her Shoo?

Rosin. Neither my Lord.

Ham. Then you liue about her waste, or in the middle of her fauour?

Guil. Faith, her priuates, we.

Ham. In the secret parts of Fortune? Oh, most true: she is a Strumpet. What's the newes?

Rosin. None my Lord; but that the World's growne honest.

Ham. Then is Doomesday neere. But your newes is not true. Let me question more in particular. what haue you my good friends, deserued at the hands of Fortune, that she sends you to Prison hither?

Guil. Prison, my Lord?

Ham. Denmark's a Prison.

Rosin. Then is the World one.

Ham. A goodly one, in which there are many Confines, Wards, and Dungeons; Denmarke being one o'th' worst.

Rosin. We thinke not so my Lord.

Ham. Why then 'tis none to you, for there is nothing either good or bad, but thinking makes it so: to me it is a prison.

Rosin. Why then your Ambition makes it one: 'tis too narrow for your minde.

Ham. O God, I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count my selfe a King of infinite space; were it not that I haue bad dreames.

Guil. Which dreames indeed are Ambition: for the very substance of the Ambitious, is meerely the shadow of a Dreame.

Ham. A dreame it selfe is but a shadow.

Rosin. Truly, and I hold Ambition of so ayry and light a quality, that it is but a shadowes shadow.

Ham. Then are our Beggers bodies; and our Monarchs and out-stretcht Heroes the Beggers Shadows: shall wee to th' Court: for, by my fey I cannot reation?

Both. Wee'l wait vpon you.

Ham. No such matter. I will not fortify you with the rest of my seruants: for to speake to you like an honest man: I am most dreadfully attended; but in the beaten way of friendship, What make you at Elsonower?

Rosin. To visit you my Lord, no other occasion.

Ham. Begger that I am, I am even poore in thanks; but I thanke you: and sure deare friends my thanks are too deare a halfe peny; were you not sent for? Is it your owne inclining? Is it a free visitation? Come,

deale iustly with me: come, come; nay speake

Guil. What should we say my Lord?

Ham. Why any thing. But to the purpose; you were sent for; and there is a kinde confession in your lookes, which your modesties haue not craft enough to color, I know the good King & Queene haue sent for you.

Rosin. To what end my Lord?

Ham. That you must teach me: but let mee coniure you by the rights of our fellowship, by the consonancy of our youth, by the Obligation of our euer-preserved loue, and by what more deare, a better proposer could charge you withall; be euen and direct with me, whether you were sent for or no.

Rosin. What say you?

Ham. Nay then I haue an eye of you; if you loue me hold not off.

Guil. My Lord, we were sent for.

Ham. I will tell you why; so shall my anticipation prevent your discouery of your secretie to the King and Queene. moult no feather, I haue of late, but wherefore I know not, lost all my mirth, forgone all custome of exercise; and indeed, it goes so heauenly with my disposition, that this goodly frame the Earth, seemes to me a sterill Promontory; this most excellent Canopy the Ayre, look you, this braue ore-hanging, this Maiesticall Roofe, fretted with golden fire: why, it appears no other thing to mee, then a foule and pestilent congregation of vapours. What a piece of worke is a man! how Noble in Reason? how infinite in faculty? in forme and moving how expresse and admirable? in Action, how like an Angell? in apprehension, how like a God the beauty of the world, the Parragon of Animals, and yet to me, what is this Quintessence of Dust? Man delights not me, no, nor Woman neither, though by your smiling you seeme to say so.

Rosin. My Lord, there was no such stiffe in my thoughts.

Ham. Why did you laugh, when I said, Man delights not me?

Rosin. To thinke, my Lord, if you delight not in Man, what Lenton entertainment the Players shall receiue from you: we coated them on the way, and hither are they comming, to offer you Seruice.

Ham. He that playes the King shall be welcome, his Maesty shall haue Tribute of mee: the aduenturous knight shal vse his Foyle and Target: the Loner shall not sigh gratu, the humorous man shall end his part in peace: the Clowne shall make those laugh whose lungs are tickled a'th' sere: and the Lady shall say her minde freely; or the blanke Verse shall halt for't: what Players are they?

Rosin. Euen those you were wont to take delight in the Tragedians of the City.

Ham. How chanced it they traual? their residence both in reputation and profit was better both wayes.

Rosin. I thinke their Inhibition comes by the meanes of the late Innouation?

Ham. Doe they hold the same estimation they did when I was in the City? Are they so follow'd?

Rosin. No indeed, they are not.

Ham. How comes it? doe they grow rusty?

Rosin. Nay, their indeauour keepes in the worsted pace; But there is Sir an ayrie of Children, little Yafes, that crye out on the top of question, and are most tyrannically clapt for't: these are now the fashi-fashion, and so be-rattled the common Stages (so they call them) that many weating Rapiers, are affraide of Goose-quils, and dare scarce come thither.

Ham. What are they Children? Who maintains 'em? How are they escoted? Will they pursue the Quality no longer then they can sing? Will they not say afterwards if they should grow themselves to common Players (as it is like most if their meanes are not better) their Writers do them wrong, to make them exclaim against their owne Succession.

Rosin. Faith there ha's bene much to do on both sides. and the Nation holds it no sinne; to tarre them to Contouerfie. There was for a while, no money bid for argument, vntill the Poet and the Player went to Cuffes in the Question.

Ham. Is't possible?

Guild. Oh there ha's bene much throwing about of Braines.

Ham. Do the Boyes carry it away?

Rosin. I that they do my Lord, Hercules & his load too

Ham. It is not strange: for mine Vnckle is King of Denmarke, and those that would make mowes at him while my Father liued; giue twenty, forty, an hundred Ducates a peece, for his picture in Little. There is something in this more then Naturall, if Philosophie could finde it out.

Flourish for the Players.

Guild. There are the Players.

Ham. Gentlemen, you are welcom to Elisnowier: your hands, come: The appurtenance of Welcome, is Fashion and Ceremony. Let me comply with you in the Garbe, lest my extent to the Players (which I tell you must shew fauere outward) should more appeare like entertainment then yours. You are welcome: but my Vnckle Father, and Aunt Mother are deceiu'd.

Guild. In what my deere Lord?

Ham. I am but mad North, North-West. when the Winde is Southerly, I know a Hawke from a Handsaw.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. Well be with you Gentlemen.

Ham. Hearke you Guildenstern, and you too at each eare a hearer: that great Baby you see there, is not yet out of his swathing clouts.

Rosin. Happily he's the second time come to them: for they say, an old man is twice a child.

Ham. I will Prophesie. Hee comes to tell me of the Players. Mark it, you say right Sir for a Monday morning 'twas so indeed.

Pol. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

Ham. My Lord, I haue Newes to tell you.

When Rosinus an Actor in Rome—

Pol. The Actors are come hither my Lord.

Ham. Buzz, buzz.

Pol. Vpon mine Honors.

Ham. Then can each Actor on his Ass—

Polon. The best Actors in the world, either for Tragedie, Comedie, Historie, Pastorall Pastoricall-Comickall-Historicall-Pastorall Tragicall-Historicall: Tragicall-Comickall-Historicall-Pastorall. Scene indubitable, or Poem vnlimited. Seneca cannot be too heauy, nor Plautus too light, for the law of Write, and the Liberty. These are the onely men.

Ham. O Iephtha Iudge of Israel, what a Treasure had'st thou?

Pol. What a Treasure had he, my Lord?

Ham. Why one faire Daughter, and no more,

The which he loued passing well.

Pol. Still on my Daughter.

Ham. Am I not i'th' right old Iephtha?

Polon. If you call me Iephtha my Lord, I haue a daughter that I loue passing well.

Ham. Nay that followes not.

Polon. What followes then, my Lord?

Ha. Why, As by lot, God wot. and then you know, It came to passe, as most like it was: The first rowe of the Pons Chanson will shew you more. For looke where my Abridgements come.

Enter foure or fine Players

You are welcome Masters, welcome all. I am glad to see thee well: Welcome good Friends. O my olde Friend? Thy face is valiant since I saw thee last. Com'st thou to beard me in Denmarke? What, my yong Lady and Mistress? Byrlady your Ladiship is neerer Heauen then when I saw you last, by the altitude of a Choppine. Pray God your voice like a peece of vncurfant Gold be not crack'd within the ring. Masters, you are all welcome wee'l e'ne to't like French Faulconers, flie at any thing we see. wee'l haue a Speech straight. Come giue vs a tast of your quality come, a passionate speech

1. Play. What speech, my Lord?

Ham. I heard thee speak me a speech once, but it was neuer Acted or if it was, not aboue once, for the Play I remember pleas'd not the Million, 'twas Cauari to the Generall but it was (as I receiued it, and others, whose iudgement in such matters, cried in the top of mine) an excellent Play; well digested in the Scenes, set downe with as much modestie, as cunning. I remember one said, there was no Sallets in the lines, to make the matter sauoury; nor no matter in the phrase, that might indite the Author of affectation, but call'd it an honest method. One cheefe Speech in it, I cheefely lou'd, 'twas Aeneas Tale to Dido, and thereabout of it especially, where he speaks of Priams slaughter. If it liue in your memory, begin at this Line, let me see, let me see: The rugged Pyrrhus like th'Hyrcanian Beast. It is not so: it begins with Pyrrhus. The rugged Pyrrhus, he whose Sable Armes Blacke as his purpose, did the night resemble When he lay couched in the Ominous Horse, Hath now this dread and blacke Complexion smear'd With Heraldry more dismall. Head to foote Now is he to take Geulles, horribly Trick'd With blood of Fathers, Mothers, Daughters, Sonnes, Bak'd and impasted with the parching streets, That lend a tyrannous, and damned light To their vilde Murthers, roasted in wrath and fire, And thus o're-siz'd with coagulate gore, With eyes like Carbuncles, the hellish Pyrrhus Old Grandfire Priam seeks.

Pol. For God, my Lord, well spoken, with good accent, and good discretion.

1. Player. Anon he findes him, Striking too short at Greekes. His anticke Sword, Rebellious to his Arme, lyes where it fallers Repugnant to command. Vnequall match, Pyrrhus at Priam drues, in Rage strikes wide: But with the whiffe and winde of his fell Sword, Th'vnnerved Father falls. Then senselesse Illium, Seeming to feele his blow, with flaming top Stoppes to his Bace, and with a hideous crash Takes Prisoner Pyrrhus care. For loe, his Sword Which was declining on the Milkie head Of Reuerend Priam, seem'd i'th' Ayre to sticke:

So as a painted Tyrant Pyrrhus stood,
And like a Newtrall to his will and matter, did nothing.
But as we often see against some storme,
A silence in the Heauens, the Racke stand still,
The bold windes speechlesse, and the Orbe below
As hush as death: Anon the dreadfull Thunder
Doth rend the Region. So after Pyrrhus pause,
A rowld Vengeance sets him new a-work,†
And neuer did the Cyclops hammers fall
On Mars his Armour, forg'd for prooffe Eterne,
With Iesse remorse then Pyrrhus bleeding sword
Now falles on Prism.
Out, out, thou Strumpet-Fortune, all you Gods,
In generall Synod take away her power:
Breake all the Spokes and Fallies from her wheele,
And boule the round Naue downe the hill of Heauen,
As low as to the Fiends.

Pol. This is too long.

Ham. It shall to'th Barbars, with your beard. Pry-thee say on: He's for a Iigge, or a tale of Baudry, or hee sleepes. Say on; come to Hecuba.

1 Play But who, O who, had seen the inobled Queen.

Ham. The inobled Queene?

Pol. That's good: Inobled Queene is good.

1 Play. Run bare-foot vp and downe,
Threatning the flame
With Bisson Rheume: A clout about that head,
Where late the Diadem stood, and for a Robe
About her lanke and all ore-termed Lones,
A blanket in th' Alarum of feare caught vp.
Who this had scene, with tongue in Venome steep'd,
'Gainst Fortunes State, would Treason haue pronounc'd?
But if the Gods themselves did see her then,
When she saw Pyrrhus make malicious sport
In mincing with his Sword her Husbonds limbes,
The instant Burst of Clamour that she made (Vnlesse things mortall moue them not at all)
Would haue made milche the Burning eyes of Heauen,
And passion in the Gods.

Pol. Looke where he ha's not turn'd his colour, and ha's teares in's eyes. Pray you no more

Ham. 'Tis well, Ile haue thee speake out the rest.
Soone. Good my Lord, will you see the Players wel be-sow'd. Doye heare, let them be well vs'd. for they are the Abstracts and breefe Chronicle of the time. After your death, you were better haue a bad Epitaph, then their ill report while you liued.

Pol. My Lord, I will vse them according to their de-sart.

Ham. Gods bodykins man, better. Vse euerie man after his desert, and who should scape whipping: vse them after your own Honor and Dignity. The lesse they deserue, the more merit is in your bountie. Take them
in.

Pol. Come sirs.

Exit Polon

Ham. Follow him Friends: wee'l heare a play to morrow. Dost thou heare me old Friend, can you play the murther of Gonzago?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. Wee'l ha't to morrow night. You could for a need study a speech of some dosen or sixtene lines, which I would set downe, and insert in't? Could ye not?

Play. I my Lord.

Ham. Very well. Follow that Lord, and looke you mock him not. My good Friends, Ile leaue you til night you are welcome to Elsonower?

Polon. Good my Lord.

Manet Hamlet.

Exeunt.

Ham. I so, God buy'ye: Now I am alone.
Oh what a Rogue and Pefant slaue am I?
Is it not monstrous that this Player heere,
But in a Fixion, in a dreame of Passion,
Could force his soule so to his whole conceit,
That from her working, all his visage warm'd;
Teares in his eyes, distraction in's Aspect,
A broken voyce, and his whole Function suiting
With Formes, to his Conceit? And all for nothing?
For Hecuba?
What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
That he should weepe for her? What would he doe,
Had he the Motiue and the Cue for passion
That I haue? He would drowne the Stage with teares
And cleaue the generall eare with horrid speech:
Make mad the guilty, and apale the free,
Confound the ignorant, and amaze indeed,
The very faculty of Eyes and Eares Yet I,
A dull and muddy-metled Rascall, peake
Like Iohn a-dreames, vnpregnant of my cause,
And can say nothing: No, not for a King,
Vpon whose property, and most deere life,
A damn'd defeate was made. Am I a Coward?
Who calles me Villaine? breakes my pate a-crosse?
Pluckes off my Beard, and blowes it in my face?
Tweakes me by'th' Nose? giues me the Lye i'th' Throate,
As deepe as to the Lungs? Who does me this?
Ha? Why I should take it: for it cannot be,
But I am Pigeon-Liuer'd, and lacke Gall
To make Oppression bitter, or ere this,
I should haue fated all the Region Kites
With this Slaves Offall, bloody: a Bawdy Villaine, Remorselesse, Treacherous, Letcherous, kindles villaine!
Oh Vengeance!
Who? What an Ass am I? I sure, this is most braue,
That I, the Sonne of the Deere murthered,
Prompted to my Reuenge by Heauen, and Hell,
Must (like a Whore) vnpacke my heart with words,
And fall a Cursing like a very Drab,
A Scullion? Fye vpon't. Foh. About my Braine.
I haue heard, that guilty Creatures sitting at a Play,
Haue by the very cunning of the Scotte,
Bene strooke so to the soule, that presently
They haue proclaim'd their Malefactions.
For Murther, though it haue no tongue, will speake
With most myraculous Organ. Ile haue these Players,
Play something like the murder of my Father,
Before mine Vnkle. Ile obserue his lookes,
Ile tent him to the quicke: If he but blench
I know my course. The Spirit that I haue scene
May be the Diuell, and the Diuel hath power
T'assume a pleasing shape, yea and perhaps
Out of my Weaknesse, and my Melancholly,
As he is very potent with such Spirits,
Abuses me to damne me. Ile haue grounds
More Relatiue then this. The Play's the thing,
Wherein Ile catch the Conscience of the King.

Exit

Enter King, Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, Ros-sincrance, Guildenstern, and Lords.

King. And can you by no drift of circumstance
Get from him why he puts on this Confusion:
Grating so harshly all his dayes of quiet

With

With turbulent and dangerous Lunacy.

Rosin. He does confesse he feels himselfe distracted,
But from what cause he will by no meanes speake

Guild. Nor do we finde him forward to be founded,
But with a crafty Madnesse keepe aloofe:
When we would bring him on to some Confession
Of his true state.

Qu. Did he receive you well?

Rosin. Most like a Gentleman.

Guild. But with much forcing of his disposition.

Rosin. Niggard of question, but of our demands
Most free in his reply.

Qu. Did you assay him to any pastime?

Rosin. Madam, it so fell out, that certaine Players
We ore-wrought on the way of these we told him,
And there did seeme in him a kinde of toy
To heare of it. They are about the Court,
And (as I thinke) they have already order
This night to play before him.

Pol. 'Tis most true

And he beseech'd me to intreate your Maiesties
To heare, and see the matter.

King. With all my heart, and it doth much content me
To heare him so inclin'd. Good Gentlemen,
Giue him a further edge, and drive his purpose on
To these delights.

Rosin. We shall my Lord Exeunt.

King. Sweet Gertrude leave vs too,
For we haue closely sent for Hamlet hither,
That he, as 'twere by accident, may there
Affront Ophelia. Her Father and my selfe (lawful espials)
Will so bestow our selues, that seeing vnscene
We may of their encounter frankly iudge,
And gather by him, as he is behaued,
If 't be th' affliction of his loue, or no
That thus he suffers for.

Qu. I shall obey you,

And for your part Ophelia, I do wish
That your good Beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlets wildenesse. So shall I hope your Vertues
Will bring him to his wonted way againe,
To both your Honors.

Ophe. Madam, I wish it may

Pol. Ophelia, walke you heere. Gracious so please ye
We will bestow our selues. Reade on this booke,
That shew of such an exercise may colour
Your loneliness. We are oft too blame in this,
'Tis too much prou'd, that with Devotions visage,
And pious Action, we do surge o're
The diuell himselfe

King. Oh 'tis true

How smart a lash that speech doth giue my Conscience?
The Harlots Cheeke beautied with plastring Art
Is not more vgly to the thing that helps it,
Then is my decde, to my most painted word.
Oh heauie burthen!

Pol. I heare him coming, let's withdraw my Lord.

Exeunt

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. To be, or not to be, that is the Question.
Whether 'tis Nobler in the minde to suffer
The Slings and Arrowes of outrageous Fortune,
Or to take Armes against a Sea of troubles,
And by opposing end them: to dye, to sleepe
No more, and by a sleepe, to say we end
The Heart-ake, and the thousand Naturall shokes

That Flesh is heyre too? 'Tis a consummation
Deuoutly to be wish'd. To dye to sleepe,
To sleepe, perchance to Dreame; I, there's the sub,
For in that sleepe of death, what dreames may come,
When we haue shuffel'd off this mortall coile,
Must giue vs pause. There's the respect
That makes Calamity of so long life.

For who would beare the Whips and Scornes of time,
The Oppressors wrong, the poore mans Consumely,
The pangs of dispriz'd Loue, the Lawes delay,
The insolence of Office, and the Spurnes
That patient merit of the vnworthy takes,
When he himselfe might his Quintessence make
With a bare Bodkin? Who would these Fardles beare
To grunt and sweat vnder a weary life,
But that the dread of something after death,
The vndiscover'd Countrey, from whose Borne
No Traveller returnes, Puzels the will,
And makes vs rather beare those ills we haue,
Then flye to others that we know not of.
Thus Conscience does make Cowards of vs all,
And thus the Native hew of Resolution
Is sicklied o're, with the pale cast of Thought,
And enterprizes of great pith and moment,
With this regard their Currants turne away,
And loose the name of Action. Soft you now,
The faire Ophelia! Nymph, in thy Orizons
Be all my sinnes remembered.

Ophe. Good my Lord,

How does your Honor for this many a day?

Ham. I humbly thanke you well, well, well.

Ophe. My Lord, I haue Remembrances of yours,
That I haue longed long to re-deluer.
I pray you now, receive them

Ham. No, no, I neuer gaue you ought.

Ophe. My honor'd Lord, I know right well you did,
And with them words of so sweet breath compos'd,
As made the things more rich, then pearles left:
Take these againe, for to the Noble minde
Rich gifts wax poore, when giuers proue vnkinde.
There my Lord

Ham. Ha, ha Are you honest?

Ophe. My Lord,

Ham. Are you faire?

Ophe. What meanes your Lordship?

Ham. That if you be honest and faire, your Honesty
Should admit no discourse to your Beautie.

Ophe. Could Beautie my Lord, haue better Comrades
then your Honesty?

Ham. I trow: for the power of Beautie, will sooner transforme Honesty from what it is, to a Bawd, then the force of Honesty can translate Beautie into his likeness.
This was sometime a Paradox, but now the time giues it prooffe. I did loue you once.

Ophe. Indeed my Lord, you made me beleeue so.

Ham. You should not haue beleeued me. For verie cannot so innoculate our old stocke, but we shall relish of it. I loued you not.

Ophe. I was the more deceiued,

Ham. Get thee to a Nunnerie. Why would'st thou be a breeder of Sinners? I am my selfe indifferent honest, but yet I could accus: mee of such things, that it were better my Mother had not borne me. I am very prou'd, reuengefull, Ambitious, with more offences at my becke, then I haue thoughts to put them in imagination, to giue them shape, or time to act them in. What should such

Fel-

Fellowes as crawling betwene Heauen and Earth.
We are arrant Knaues all, beleue none of vs: Goe thy wayes to a Nunnery. Where's your Father?

Oph. Achome, my Lord.

Ham. Let the doores be shut vpon him, that he may play the Foole no way, but in his owne houle. Farewell.

Oph. O helpe him, you sweet Heauens.

Ham. If thou dost Marry: Ile giue thee this Plague for thy Downrie. Be thou as chaste as Ice, as pure as Snow, thou shalt not escape Calumny. Get thee to a Nunnery.
Go, Farewell. Or if thou wilt needs Marry, marry a fool:
for Wife men know well enough, what monsters you make of them. To a Nunnery go, and quickly too. Farwell.

Oph. O heauenly Powers, restore him.

Ham. I haue heard of your pratings too wel enough.
God has giuen you one pice, and you make your selfe another you gidge, you amble, and you tilpe, and nickname
Gods creatures, and make your Wantonnesse, your Ignorance Go too, Ile no more on t, it hath made me mad.
I say, we will haue no more Marringes. Those that are married already, all but one shall liue, the rest shall keep as they are. To a Nunnery. go Exit Hamlet

Oph. O what a Noble minde is heere o're-thrown?
The Courtiers, Soldiers, Scholiers. Lye, tongue, sword,
Th'expence of Iansie and Rose of the faire State,
The glasse of Fashion, and the mould of I come,
Th'obseru'd of all Obseruers, quite, quite downe.
Haue I of Ladies most delect and wretched,
That suck'd the Honie of his Musicke Vowes:
Now see that Noble, and most Soueraigne Reason,
Like sweet Bels tangled out of tune, and harsh,
That vnmatch'd Forme and Feature of blowne youth,
Blasted with ecstasie. Oh woe is me,
Th'haue seene what I haue seene. See what I see.

Enter King, and Polonius.

King. Loue? His affections do not that way tend.
Nor what he spake, though it lick'd forme a little,
Was not like Madnesse. There's something in his soule
O're which his Melancholly sits on brood,
And I do doubt the hatch, and the disclosure
Will be some danger, which to preuent
I haue in quicke determination
Thus set it downe. He shall with speed to England
For the demand of our neglected Tribute:
Haply the Seas and Countreys difference
With variable Obiects, shall expell

This something seied matter in his heart:
Whereon his Braines still beating, puts him thus
From fastidius at himselfe. What thinke you on't?

Pol. It shall do well. But yet do I beleue
The Origin and Commencement of this Greefe
Spring from a neglected loue. How now Ophelia?
You need not tell vs, what Lord Hamlet saide;
We heard it all. My Lord, do as you please,
But if you hold it fit after the Day,
Let his Queene Mother all alone intreat him
To shew his Greefes. Let her be round with him,
And Ile be plac'd so, p'cate you in the eare
Of all their Conference. If she finde him not,
For England sent him; Or confine him where
Your wisdome best shall thinke.

King. It shall be so. It shall.
Madnesse in great Ones, must not vnwatch'd go.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet, and two or three of the Players.

Ham. Speake the Speech I pray you, as I pronounc'd it to you trippingly on the Tongue. But if you mouth it, as many of your Players do, I had as liue the Town-Cryer had spoke my Lines. Nor do not saw the Ayre too much your hand thus, but vie all gently; for in the verie Torrent, Tempest, and (as I may say) the Whirl-winde of Passion, you must acquire and beget a Temperance that may giue it Smoothnesse. One offends mee to the Soule, to see a robustious Pery-wig-pated Fellow, teare a Passion to tatters, to verie ragges, to split the eares of the Groundlings: who (for the most part) are capable of nothing, but inexplicable dumbe shewes, & noise I could haue such a Fellow whipt for o're-doing Termagant: it out-Herod's Herod. Pray you auoid it.

Player. I warrant your Honor.

Ham. Be not too tame neyther: but let your owne Discretion be your Tutor. Sute the Action to the Word,
the Word to the Action, with this speciall obseruance
That you ore-stop not the modestie of Nature; for any thing so ouer-done, is frid the purpose of Playing, whole end both at the first and now, was and is, to hold as twer
the Mirrour vp to Nature; to shew Vertue her owne Feature, Scorne her owne Image, and the verie Age and Bodie of the Time, his forme and pressure. Now, this ouer-done, or come tardie off, though it make the vnshilfull laugh, cannot but make the Iudicious grieue. The censure of the which One, must in your allowance o're-way a whole Theater of Others. On, there bee Players that I haue seene Play, and heard others praise, and that highly (not to speake it prophane) that neyther hauing
the accent of Christians, nor the gate of Christian, Pagan, or Norman, haue so strutted and bellowed, that I haue thought some of Nature's fourney-men had made men, and not made them well, they imitated Humanity so abominably

Pl<sup>y</sup>. I hope we haue reform'd that indifferently with vs, Sir.

Ham. O reforme it altogether. And let those that play your Clownes, speake no more then is set downe for them. For there be of them, that will themselues laugh, to set on some quantitie of barren Spectators to laugh too, though in the meane time, some necessary Questin of the Play be then to be considered that's Villanous, & shewes a most pittifull Ambition in the Foole that vies
it. Go make you readie. Exit Players.

Enter Polonius, Rosinrance, and Guildenstern.

How now my Lord,
Will the King heare this peece of Worke?

Pol. And the Queene too, and that presently.

Ham. Bid the Players make hast
Will you two helpe to hasten them?

Both. We will my Lord.

Enter Horatio.

Ham. What hoa, Horatio?

Hora. Heere sweet Lord, at your Service.

Ham. Horatio, thou art eene as iust a man
As ere my Conuerfation cap'd withall.

Hora. O my deere Lord.

Ham. Nay, do not thinke I flatter.
For what aduancement may I hope from thee,
That no Reuennew hast, but thy good spirits

To

To feed & cloath thee. Why shold the poor be flatter'd?
No, let the Candied tongue, like absurd pompe,
And crooke the pregnant Hindges of the knee,
Where thrife may follow faiming? Dost thou heare,
Since my deere Soule was Mistris of my choyse,
And could of men distingurish, her election
Hath seal'd thee for her selfe For thou hast bene
As one in suffering all, that suffers nothing.
A man that Fortunes buffets, and Rewards
Hath 'tane with equall Thankes. And blest are those,
Whose Blood and Iudgement are so well co-nungled,
That they are not a Pipe for Fortunes finger,
To sound what stop the please. Give me that man,
That is not Passions Slave, and I will weare him
In my hearts Core I, in my Heart of heart,
As I do thee. Something too much of this,
There is a Play to night before the King,
One Scene of it comes neere the Circumstance
Which I haue told thee, of my Fathers death.
I prythee, when thou see'st that Acte a-foot,
Euen with the verie Comment of my Soule
Obserue mine Vnkle: If his occulted guilt,
Do not it selfe vnkennell in one speech,
It is a damned Ghost that we haue scene:
And my Imaginations are as foule
As Vulcans Strythe. Give him needfull note,
For I mine eyes will ruet to his Face.
And after we will both our iudgements ioyn,
To censure of his seeming.
Hora. Well my Lord.
If hee should ought the whil'st this Play is Playing,
And scape detecting, I will pay the Theft.

Enter King, Queene, Polonius, Ophelia, Rosincrance, Guildestjerne, and other Lords attendant, with his Guard carrying Torches. Dancs March Sound a Flourish.

Ham. They are comming to the Play: I must be idle.
Get you a place.

King. How fares our Cosin Hamlet?

Ham. Excellent! I faith, of the Camelions dish: I eate
the Ayre promise-cramm'd, you cannot feed Capons so.

King. I haue nothing with this answer Hamlet, these words are not mine.

Ham. No, nor mine. Now my Lord, you plaid once i'th' Vniuersity, you say?

Polon. That I did my Lord, and was accounted a good Actor

Ham. And what did you enact?

Pol. I did enact Julius Caesar, I was kill'd i'th' Capitol.
Brutus kill'd me.

Ham. It was a brute part of him, to kill so Capitall a Calfie there. Be the Players ready?

Rosin. I my Lord, they stay vpon your patience.

Qu. Come hither my good Hamlet, sit by me.

Ha. No good Mother, here's Mettle more attractive.

Pol. Oh ho, do you marke that?

Ham. Ladie, shall I lye in your Lap?

Ophe. No my Lord.

Ham. I meane, my Head vpon your Lap?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Do you thinke I meant Country matters?

Ophe. I thinke nothing, my Lord

Ham. That's a faire thought to ly between Maids legs

Ophe. What is my Lord?

Ham. Nothing.

Ophe. You are merrie, my Lord?

Ham. Who I?

Ophe. I my Lord.

Ham. Oh God, your onely Iigge-maker: what should a man do, but be merrie. For looke you how cheerefully my Mother lookes, and my Father dyed within's two Houres.

Ophe. Nay, 'tis twice two moneths, my Lord.

Ham. So long? Nay then let the Diuel weare blacke, for Ile haue a suite of Sables. Oh Heauens! dye two mo-neths ago, and not forgotten yet? Then there's hope, a great mans Memorie, may out-live his life halfe a yeare.
But byrlady he must builde Churches then: or else shall he suffer not thinking on, with the Hoby-horsie, whose Epitaph is, For o, For o, the Hoby-horsie is forgot.

Hobozes play. The dumbe shew enters.

*Enter a King and Queene, very louingly, the Queene embracing him. She kneeles, and makes shew of Protestation vnto him. He takes her vp, and declines his head vpon her neck.
Layes him downe vpon a Banke of Flowers. She seeing him a-sleepe, leaues him. Anon comes in a Fellow, takes off his Crowne, kisses it, and powres poison in the Kings eares, and Exits. The Queene returnes, findes the King dead, and makes passionate Aklron. The Poisoner, with some two or three Mutes comes in againe, seeming to lament with her.
The dead body is carried away. The Poisoner Wooes the Queene with Gifts, she seemes loath and unwilling awhile, but in the end, accepts his loue. Exeunt*

Ophe. What meanes this, my Lord?

Ham. Marry this is Miching Malicho, that meanes Mischeefe.

Ophe. Belike this shew imports the Argument of the Play?

Ham. We shall know by these Fellowes, the Players cannot keepe counsell, they'll tell all.

Ophe. Will they tell vs what this shew means?

Ham. I, or any shew that you I shew him. Bee not you asham'd to shew, hee'l not shame to tell you what it meanes.

Ophe. You are naught, you are naught, Ile sparke the Play

Enter Prologue.

For vs, and for our Tragedie,

Heere stooping to your Clemencie:

We begge your hearing Patientlie.

Ham. Is this a Prologue, or the Poefie of a Ring?

Ophe. 'Tis briefe my Lord.

Ham. As Womens loue,

Enter King and his Queene.

King. Full thirtie times hath Phœbus Cart gon round,
Neptunes salt Wash, and Tellus Orbed ground:
And thirtie dozen Moones with borrowed sheene,
About the World haue times twelue thirties beene,
Since loue our hearts, and Hymen did our hands
Vnite commutall, in most sacred Bands.

Bar. So many iournies may the Sunne and Moone
Make vs againe count o're, ere loue be done.
But woe is me, you are so sicke of late,
So farre from cheere, and from your forme state,
That I distrust you: yet though I distrust,
Discomfort you (my Lord) it nothing must:
For womens Feare and Loue, holds quantitie,

In

In neither ought, or in extremity:

Now what my loue is, prooffe hath made you know,
And as my Loue is siz'd, my Feare is so.

King. Faith I must leaue thee Loue, and shortly too:
My operant Powers my Functions leaue to do:
And thou shalt lue in this faire world behinde,
Honour'd, belou'd, and haply, one as kinde.

For Husband shalt thou——

Bap. Oh confound the rest:
Such Loue, must needs be Treason in my brest:
In second Husband, let me be accurst,
None wed the second, but who kill'd the first.

Ham. Wormwood, Wormwood.

Bapt. The instances that second Marriage moue,
Are base respects of Thrift, but none of Loue.
A second time, I kill my Husband dead,
When second Husband kisses me in Bed

King. I do beleue you. Think what now you speak.
But what we do determine, oft we breake.
Purpose is but the slave to Memorie,
Of violent Birth, but poore validitie:

Which now like Eruite vnripe stickes on the Tree,
But fall vnshak en, when they meilow bee,
Most necessary 'tis, that we forget

To pay our selues, what to our selues is debt:
What to our selues in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose.

The violence of other Greefe or Ioy,
Their owne enactors with themselves destroy:
Where Ioy most Reuels, Greefe doth most lament;
Greefe Ioyes, Ioy greues on slender accident.

This world is not for aye, nor 'tis not strange
That even our Loues shuld with our Fortunes change.
For 'tis a question left vs yet to proue,
Whether Loue lead Fortune, or else Fortune Loue.

The great man downe, you marke his fauourites flies,
The poore aduanc'd makes Friends of Enemies:

And hitherto doth Loue on Fortune tend,
For who not needs, shall neuer lacke a Friend:
And who in want a hollow Friend doth try,
Direly seasons him his Enemye.

But orderly to end, where I begin,
Our Willes and Fates do so contrary run,
That our Deuices still are ouerthrowne,
Our thoughts are ours, their ends none of our owne.
So thinke thou wilt no second Husband wed.

But die thy thoughts, when thy first Lord is dead.

Bap. Nor Earth to giue me food, nor Heauen light,
Sport and repose locke from me day and night:
Each opposite that blankes the face of Ioy,
Meet what I wou'd haue well and it destroy;
Both heere, and hence, pursue me lasting strife,
If once a Widdow, euer I be Wife.

Ham. If she should breake it now,

King. 'Tis deeply sworne.
Sweet, leaue me heere a while,
My spirits grow dull, and faine I would beguile
The tedious day with sleepe.

Qu. Sleepe rocke thy Braine, Sleeper
And neuer come mischance betweene vs twaine. Exit

Ham. Madam, how like you this Play?

Qu. The Lady protests to much me thirkes.

Ham. Oh but shee'l keepe her word.

King. Haue you heard the Argument, is there no Offence in't?

Ham. No, no, they do but iest, poyson in iest, no Offence in't world.

King. What do you call the Play?

Ham. The Moule-trap: Marry how? Tropically:
This Play is the Image of a murder done in Vicenna. Gonzago is the Dukes name, his wife Baptista. you shall see anon: 'tis a knauish peece of worke. But what o'that?
Your Maiestie, and wee that haue free soules, it touches vs not: let the gall d ride winch: our withers are vnring

Enter LUCIANUS.

This is one LUCIANUS nephew to the King.

Ophe. You are a good Chorus, my Lord.

Ham. I could interpret betweene you and your loue:
if I could see the Puppets dallying.

Ophe. You are keene my Lord, you are keene.

Ham. It would cost you a groaning, to take off my edge

Ophe. Still better and worse.

Ham. So you mistake Husbonds.

Begin Murderer. Pox, leaue thy damnable Faces, and begin.
Come, the croaking Rauens doth bellow for Reuenge.

Lucius. Thoughts blacke, hands apt,
Drugges fit, and Time agreeing
Confederate season, else no Creature seeing:
Thou mixture ranke, of Midnight Weeds collected,
With Hecats Ban, thrice blasted, thrice infected,
Thy natural Magicke, and dire propertie,
On wholsome life, vlturpe immediately

Poyses the poyson in his eares.

Ham. He poysons him with Garden for's estate. His name's Gonzago: the Story is extant and writ in choyce Italian. You shall see anon how the Murtherer gets the loue of Gonzago's wife

Ophe. The King rises.

Ham. What, frighted with false fire.

Qu. How fares my Lord?

Pol. Giue o'te the Play

King. Giue me some Light. Away.

All. Lights, Lights, Lights

Exit

Enter Hamlet & Horatio.

Ham. Why let the stricken Deere go weepe,
The Hart vnghalled play:

For some must watch, while some must sleepe;
So runnes the world away.

Would not this Sir, and a Forrest of Feathers, if the rest of my Fortunes turne Turke with me; with two Prouinciall Roses on my rac'd Shooes, get me a Fellowship in a crie of Players sir.

Hor. Halfe a share.

Ham. A whole one I,
For thou dost know: Oh Damon deere,
This Realme dismantled was of Ioue himselfe,
And now reignes heere.
A verie verie Paocke.

Hor. You might haue Rim'd.

Ham. Oh good Horatio, Ile take the Ghosts word for a thousand pound. Did'st perceiue?

Hor. Verie well my Lord.

Ham. Vpon the talke of the poysoning?

Hor. I did verie well note him

Enter Rosinrance and Guildenstjerne.

Ham. Oh, ha? Come some Musick. Come y Recorders:
For if the King like not the Comedie,
Why then belike he likes it not perdie.

Come some Musicke.

Guild. Good my Lord, vouchsafe me a word with you.

Ham.

Ham. Sir, a whole History.

Guild. The King, sir.

Ham. I sir, what of him?

Guild. Is in his retyrement, maruellous distemper'd.

Ham. With drinke Sir?

Guild. No my Lord, rather with choller.

Ham. Your wisdome should shew it selfe more richer, to signifie this to his Doctor. for for me to put him to his Purgation, would perhaps plunge him into farre more Choller.

Guild. Good my Lord put your discourse into some frame, and that not so wildly from my affayre.

Ham. I am tame Sir, pronounce

Guild. The Queene your Mother, in most great affliction of spirit, hath sent me to you.

Ham. You are welcome.

Guild. Nay, good my Lord, this courtesie is not of the right breed. If it shall please you to make me a wholesome answer, I will doe your Mothers commandment. if not, your pardon, and my returne shall bee the end of my Businesse.

Ham. Sir, I cannot.

Guild. What, my Lord?

Ham. Make you a wholesome answer: my wits decrease'd. But sir, such answers as I can make, you shal command: or rather you say, my Mother therefore no more but to the matter. My Mother you say.

Rosin. Then thus she sayes: your behauior hath strooke her into amazement, and admiration.

Ham. Oh wonderfull Sonne, that can so astonish a Mother. But is there no sequell at the heeles of this Mothers admiration?

Rosin. She desires to speake with you in her Closet, ere you go to bed

Ham. We shall obey, were she ten times our Mother. Haue you any further Trade with vs?

Rosin. My Lord, you once did loue me.

Ham. So I do still, by these pickers and stealers

Rosin. Good my Lord, what is your cause of distemper? You do freely barre the doore of your owne Libertie, if you deny your greefes to your Friend.

Ham. Sir I lacke Aduancement.

Rosin. How can that be, when you haue the voyce of the King himselfe, for your Succession in Denmarke?

Ham. I, but while the grassie growes, the Prouerbe is something musty.

Enter one with a Recorder.

O the Recorder. Let me see, to withdraw with you, why do you go about to recouer the winde of mee, as if you would driue me into a toyle?

Guild. O my Lord, if my Dutie be too bold, my loue is too vnmannerly.

Ham. I do not well vnderstand that. Will you play vpon this Pipe?

Guild. My Lord, I cannot.

Ham. I pray you

Guild. Beleeue me, I cannot.

Ham. I do beseech you.

Guild. I know no touch of it my Lord.

Ham. 'Tis as easie as lying: gouerne these Ventiges with your finger and thumbe, giue it breath with your mouth, and it will discourse most excellent Musicke. Looke you, these are the stoppes,

Guild. But these cannot I command to any vtterance of harmony. I haue not the skill.

Ham. Why looke you now, how vnworthy a thing you make of me: you would play vpon mee; you would seeme to know my stops: you would pluck out the heart of my Mysterie; you would sound mee from my lowest Note, to the top of my Compass: and there is much Musicke, excellent Voice, in this little Organe, yet cannot you make it. Why do you thinke, that I am easier to bee plaid on, then a Pipe? Call me what Instrument you will, though you can fret me, you cannot play vpon me. God blesse you Sir.

Enter Polonius.

Polon. My Lord, the Queene would speak with you, and presently

Ham. Do you see that Clowd? that's almost in shape like a Camell.

Polon. By 'th' Misse, and it's like a Camell indeed.

Ham. Me thinks it is like a Weazell.

Polon. It is back'd like a Weazell.

Ham. Or like a Whale?

Polon. Verie like a Whale.

Ham. Then will I come to my Mother, by and by: They foole me to the top of my bent. I will come by and by.

Polon. I will say so.

Exit.

Ham. By and by, is easly said. Leau me Friends: 'Tis now the verie witching time of night, When Churchyards yawne, and Hell it selfe breathes out Contagion to this world. Now could I drink hot blood, And do such bitter businesse as the day Would quake to looke on. Soft now, to my Mother: Oh Heart, loose not thy Nature; let not euer The Soule of Nero, enter this firme bosome: Let me be cruell, not vnnaturall, I will speake Daggers to her, but vse none: My Tongue and Soule in this be Hypocrites, How in my words someuer she be shent, To giue them Scales, neuer my Soule consent.

Enter King, Rosinrance, and Guildenstjerne.

King. I like him not, nor stands it safe with vs, To let his madnesse range. Therefore prepare you, your Commission will forthwith dispatch, And he to England shall along with you: The termes of our estate, may not endure Hazard so dangerous as doth houely grow Out of his Lunacies.

Guild. We will our selues prouide: Most holie and Religious feare it is To keepe those many many bodies safe That liue and feede vpon your Maiestie.

Rosin. The single

And peculiar life is bound

With all the strength and Armour of the minde,

To keepe it selfe from noyance: but much more,

That Spirit, vpon whose spirit depends and rests

The liues of many, the cease of Maiestie

Dies not alone, but like a Gulfe doth draw

What's nere it, with it. It is a massie wheele

Fixt on the Somner of the highest Mount,

To whose huge Spokes, ten thousand lesser things

Are mortiz'd and adioyn'd. which when it falls,

Each small annexment, pettie consequence

Attends the boystrous Ruine. Neuer done

Did the King fighe, but with a generall grone.

King. Arme you, I pray you to this speedie Voyage; For we will Fetters put vpon this feare, pp

Which

Which now goes too free-footed.

Both. We will haste vs.

Exeunt Gent.

Enter Polonius.

Pol. My Lord, he's going to his Mothers Closset.
Behinde the Arras Ile conuey my selfe
To heare the Proceffe. Ile warrant shee'l tax him home,
And as you said, and wisely was it said,
'Tis meete that some more audience then a Mother,
Since Nature makes them partiall, should o're-heare
The speech of vantage. Fare you wel! my Liege,
Ile call vpon you ere you go to bed,
And tell you what I know.

King. Thankes deere my Lord.
Oh my offence is ranke, it smels to heauen,
It hath the primall eldest curse vpon't,
A Brothers murder. Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharpe as will:
My stronger guilt, defeats my strong intent,
And like a man to double businesse bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect; what if this curst hand
Were thicker then it selfe with Brothers blood,
Is there not Raine enough in the sweet Heauens
To wash it white as Snow? Whereto serues mercy,
But to confront the visage of Offence?
And what's in Prayer, but this two-fold force,
To be fore-stalled ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being downe? Then Ile looke vp,
My fault is past. But oh, what forme of Prayer
Can serue my turne? Forgive me my foule Murder.
That cannot be, since I am still possesst
Of those effects for which I did the Murder.
My Crowne, mine owne Ambition and my Queene:
May one be pardon'd, and retaine th' offence?
In the corrupted currants of this world,
Offences gilded hand may shoue by Iustice,
And oft 'tis seene, the wicked prize it selfe
Buies out the Law; but 'tis not so about,
There is no shuffling, there the Action lyes
In his true Nature, and we our selues compell'd
Euen to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To giue in euidence. What then? What rests?
Try what Repentance can. What can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
Oh wretched state! Oh boosome, blacke as death!
Oh limed soule, that struggling to be free,
Art more ingag'd. Helpe Angels, make assay:
Bow stubborn knees, and heare with strings of Steele,
Be soft as sinewes of the new-borne Babe,
All may be well.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now might I do it pat, now he is praying,
And now Ile doo't, and so he goes to Heauen,
And so am I reueng'd: that would be scann'd,
A Villaine killes my Father, and for that I his foule Sonne, do this same Villaine send
To heauen. Oh this is hyre and Sallery, not Reuenge.
He tooke my Father grossely, full of bread,
With all his Crimes broad blowne, as fresh as May,
And how his Audit stands, who knowes, saue Heauen:
But in our circumstance and course of thought
'Tis heauie with him. and am I then reueng'd,
To take him in the purging of his Soule,
When he is fit and season'd for his passage? No.
Vp Sword, and know thou a more horrid hent

When he is drunke asleepe: or in his Rage,
Or in th' incestuous pleasure of his bed,
At gaming, swearing, or about some aste
That ha's no rellish of Saluation in't,
Then trip him, that his heeles may kicke at Heauen,
And that his Soule may be as damn'd and blacke
As Hell, whereto it goes. My Mother staves,
This Physicke but prolongs thy sickly dayes. Exit.
King. My words flye vp, my thoughts remain below,
Words without thoughts, neuer to Heauen go. Exit.

Enter Queene and Polonius.

Pol. He will come straight:
Looke you lay home to him,
Tell him his pranks haue bene too broad to beare with,
And that your Grace hath scree'nd, and stood betwene
Much heate, and him. Ile silence me e'ene heere.
Pray you be round with him.

Ham. within. Mother, mother, mother,

Qu. Ile warrant you, feare me not.
Withdraw, I heare him coming.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Now Mother, what's the matter?

Qu. Hamlet, thou hast thy Father much offended.

Ham. Mother, you haue my Father much offended.

Qu. Come, come, you answer with an idle tongue.

Ham. Go, go, you question with an idle tongue.

Qu. Why loo' now Hamlet?

Ham. What the matter now?

Qu. Haue you forgot me?

Ham. No by the Rood, not so.

You are the Queene, your Husbonds Brothers wife,
But would you were not so. You are my Mother

Qu. Nay, then Ile see those to you that can speake

Ham. Come, come, and sit you downe, you shall not boudge

You go not till I set you vp a glasse,
Where you may see the inmost part of you?

Qu. What wilt thou do? thou wilt not murder me?
Helpe, helpe, ho.

Pol. What hoa, helpe, helpe, helpe.

Ham. How now, a Rat? dead for a Ducate, dead.

Pol. Oh I am slaine.

Killes Polonius

Qu. Oh me, what hast thou done?

Ham. Nay I know not, is it the King?

Qu. Oh what a rash, and bloody deed is this?

Ham. A bloody deed, almost as bad good Mother,
As kill a King, and marrie with his Brother.

Qu. As kill a King?

Ham. I Lady, 'twas my word,
Thou wretched, rash, intruding foole farewell,
I tooke thee for thy Betters, take thy Fortune,
Thou find'st to be too busie, is some danger.
Leaue wringing of your hands, peace, sit you downe,
And let me wring your heart, for so I shall
If it be made of penetrable stuffe;
If damned Custome haue not braz'd it so,
That it is proofe and bulwarke against Sense.

Qu. What haue I done, that thou dar'st wag thy tong,
In noise so rude against me?

Ham. Such an Act

That blurres the grace and blush of Modestie,
Cals Vertue Hypocrite, takes off the Rose
From the faire forehead of an innocent loue,
And makes a blister there. Makes marriage vowes
As false as Dicers Oathes. Oh such a deed,

As

As from the body of Contraction pluckes
The very soule, and sweete Religion makes
A rapshidie of words. Heavens face doth glow,
Yea this solidity and compound masse,
With triffull visage as against the doome,
Is thought-sicke at the act

Qu. Aye me; what act, that roares so lowd, & thunders in the Index.

Ham. Looke heere vpon this Picture, and on this,
The counterfet presentment of two Brothers:
See what a grace was seated on his Brow,
Hyperions curls, the front of Ioue himselfe,
An eye like Mars, to threaten or command
A station, like the Herald Mercurie
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill:
A Combination, and a forme indeed,
Where euerie God did seeme to set his Scale,
To giue the world assurance of a man.
This was your Husband, Looke you now what followes.
Heere is your Husband, like a Mildew d ear
Blasting his wholsome breath. Haue you eyes?
Could you on this faire Mountaine leaue to feed,
And batten on this Moore? Ha? Haue you eyes?
You cannot call it Loue. For at your age,
The hey-day in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waites vpon the Iudgement: and what Iudgement
Would step from this, to this? What diuell was't,
That thus hath coufend you at hoodman-blinde?
O Shame! where is thy Blush? Rebellious Hell,
If thou canst mutine in a Matrons bones,
To flaming youth, let Vertue be as waxe,
And melt in her owne fire. Proclaime no shame,
When the compulsiue Ardore giues the charge,
Since Frost it selfe, is aetiuely doth burne,
As Reason panders Will.

Qu. O Hamlet, speake no more.

Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soule,
And there I see such blarke and grained spots,
As will not leaue their Tinct

Ham. Nay, but to liue

In the ranke sweat of an enseamed bed,
Stew'd in Corruption, honying and making loue
Ouer the nasty Sye.

Qu. Oh speake to me, no more,
These words like Daggers enter in mine eares.
No more sweet Hamlet

Ham. A Murderer, and a Villaine:
A Slave, that is not twentieth part the tythe
Of your precedent Lord. A vice of Kings,
A Curpse of the Empire and the Rule.
That from a shelve, the precious Diadem stole,
And put it in his Pocket.

Qu. No more.

Enter Ghost

Ham. A King of shreds and patches.
Saue me, and houer o're me with your wings
You heavenly Guards! What would you gracious figure?

Qu. Alas he's mad.

Ham. Do you not come your tardy Sonne to chide,
That laps't in Time and Passion, lets go by Th'important acting of your dread command? Oh say.

Ghost. Do not forget, this Visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But looke, Amazement on thy Mother sits;
O step betweene her, and her fighting Soule,
Conceit in weakest bodies, strongest workes,

Speake to her Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you Lady?

Qu. Alas, how is't with you?

That you bend your eye on vacancie,
And with their corporall ayre do hold discourse.
Forth at your eyes, your spirits wildly peepe,
And as the sleeping Soldiours in th'Alarme,
Your bedded haire, like life in excrements,
Start vp, and stand an end. Oh gentle Sonne,
Vpon the heate and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle coole patience. Whereon do you looke?

Ham. On him, on him look you how pale he glares,
His forme and cause conioyn'd, preaching to stones,
Would make them capable. Do not looke vpon me,
Least with this pittieous action you conuert
My sterne effects: then what I haue to do,
Will want true colour; teares perchange for blood.

Qu. To who do you speake this?

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Qu. Nothing at all, yet all that is I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing heare?

Qu. No, nothing but our selues

Ham. Why look you there looke how it steals away:
My Father in his habite, as he liued,
Looke where he goes euen now out at the Portall. Exit.

Qu. This is the very coynage of your Braine,
This bodilesse Creation extasie is very cunninge,

Ham. Extasie!

My Pulse as yours doth temperately keepe time,
And makes as healthfull Musicke. It is not madnesse
That I haue vttered, bring me to the Test
And I the matter will re-word: which madnesse
Would gamboll from. Mother, for loue of Grace,
Lay not a flattering Vnction to your scule,
That not your trespasse, but my madnesse speaks.
It will but skin and fime the Vicerous place;
Whil'st ranke Corruption mining all within,
Infects vnseene. Confesse your selfe to Heauen,
Repent what's past, auoyd what is to come,
And do not spred the Compost on the Weedes,
To make them ranke. Forgiue me this my Vertue,
For in the fatnesse of this pursie times,
Vertue's selte, of Vice must pardon begge,
Yea court, and woe, for leaue to do him good;

Qu. Oh Hamlet,

Thou hast clef't my heart in twaine.

Ham. O throw away the worser part of it,
And liue the purer with the other halfe.
Good night, but go not to mine Vnkles bed,
Assume a Vertue, if you haue it not; refraine to night,
And that shall lend a kinde of easinesse
To the next abstinence. Once more goodnight,
And when you are desirous to be blest,
Ile blessing begge of you. For this same Lord,
I do repent: but heauen hath pleas'd it so,
To punish me with this, and this with me,
That I must be their Scourge and Minister
I will bellow him, and will answer well
The death I gaue him: so againe, good night:
I must be cruell, onely to be kinde;
Thus bad begins, and worse remaines behinde.

Qu. What shall I do?

Ham. Not this by no meanes: that I bid you do:
Let the blunt King tempt you againe to bed,
Pinch Wanton on your cheek, call you his Mouse,
And let him for a paire of reechie kisses,

pp 2

Or

Or padding in your necke with his dam'd Fingers,
Make you to rauell all this matter out.
That I essentially am not in madnesse,
But made in craft. 'Twere good you let him know,
For who that's but a Queene, faire, sober, wise,
Would from a Paddocke, from a Bar, a Gibbe,
Such deere concernings hide, Who would do so,
No in despite of Sense and Secrecie,
Vnpegge the Basket on the houses top:
Let the Birds flye, and like the famous Ape
To try Conclusions in the Basket, creepe
And breake your owne necke downe.

Qu. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,
And breath of life: I haue no life to breath
What thou hast saide to me

Ham. I must to England, you know that?

Qu. Alacke I had forgot: 'Tis so concluded on.

Ham. This man shall set me packing:
Ile lugge the Guts into the Neighbor roome,
Mother goodnight. Indeede this Counsellor
Is now most still, most secret, and most graue,
Who was in life, a foolish prating Knaue.
Come sir, to draw toward an end with you.
Good night Mother.

Exit Hamlet tugging in Polonius

Enter King.

King. There's matters in these sighes.
These profound heaues
You must translate; 'Tis fit we vnderstand them.
Where is your Sonne?

Qu. Ah my good Lord, what haue I scene to night?

King. What Gertrude? How do's Hamlet?

Qu. Mad as the Seas, and winde, when both contend
Which is the Mightier, in his lawlesse fit
Behinde the Arras, hearing something stirre,
He whips his Rapier out, and cries a Rat, a Rat,
And in his brainish apprehension kills
The vnscene good old man.

King. Oh heauy deed:
It had bin so with vs had we beene there:
His Liberty is full of threats to all,
To you your selfe, to vs, to euery one.
Alas, how shall this bloody deede be answered?
It will be laide to vs, whose prouidence
Should haue kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunce,
This mad yong man. But so much was our loue,
We would not vnderstand what was most fit,
But like the Owner of a foule disease,
To keepe it from diuulging, let's it feede
Euen on the pith of life. Where is he gone?

Qu. To draw apart the body he hath kild,
O're whom his very madnesse like some Oare
Among a Minerall of Mettels base
Shewes it selfe pure. He weepes for what is done.

King. Oh Gertrude, come away:
The Sun no sooner shall the Mountaines touch,
But we will ship him hence, and this vilde deed,
We must with all our Maiesty and Skill
Both countenance, and excuse. Enter Ros & Guild.
Ho Guildenstern.

Friends both go hyne you with some further ayde:
Hamlet in madnesse hath Polonius slaine,
And from his Mother Clossets hath he drag'd him.
Go seeke him out, speake faire, and bring the body
Into the Chappell. I pray you hast in this. Exit Gent.
Come Gertrude, wee'll call vp our wisest friends,

To let them know both what we meane to do,
And what's vntimely done. Oh come away.
My soule is full of discord and dismay.

Exeunt.

Enter Hamlet.

Ham. Safely stowed.

Gentlemen within. Hamlet, Lord Hamlet.

Ham. What noyse? Who calls on Hamlet?

Oh heere they come Enter Ros and Guildenstern.

Ros. What haue you done my Lord with the dead body?

Ham. Compounded it with dust, where to 'tis Kinne.

Rosin. Tell vs where 'tis, that we may take it thence,
And beare it to the Chappell.

Ham. Do not beleeue it.

Rosin. Beleeue what?

Ham. That I can keepe your counsell, and not mine owne. Besides, to be demanded of a Spundge, what replication should be made by the Sonne of a King.

Rosin. Take you me for a Spundge, my Lord?

Ham. I sir, that sokes vp the Kings Countenance, his Rewards, his Authorities (but such Officers do the King best seruice in the end. He keepe them like an Ape in the corner of his iaw, first mou'd to be last swallowed, when he needes what you haue glean'd, it is but squeezing you, and Spundge you shall be dry againe.

Rosin. I vnderstand you not my Lord.

Ham. I am glad of it: a knauish speech sleeps in a foolish eare.

Rosin. My Lord, you must tell vs where the body is,
and go with vs to the King.

Ham. The body is with the King, but the King is not with the body. The King, is a thing —

Guild. A thing my Lord?

Ham. Of nothing bring me to him, hide Fox, and all after. Exeunt

Enter King.

King. I haue sent to seeke him, and to find the bodie:
How dangerous is it that this man goes loose:
Yet must not we put the strong Law on him.
Hee's loued of the distracted multitude,
Who like not in their iudgement, but their eyes:
And where 'tis so, th'Offenders scourge is weigh'd
But neuer the offence: to beare all smooth, and euen,
This sodaine sending him away, must seeme
Deliberate pause, diseases desperate growne,
By desperate apphance are releued,
Or not at all.

Enter Rosinocranell

How now? What hath befallne?

Rosin. Where the dead body is bestow'd my Lord,
We cannot get from him

King. But where is he?

Rosin. Without my Lord, guarded to know your pleasure.

King. Bring him before vs.

Rosin. Hoa, Guildenstern? Bring in my Lord.

Enter Hamlet and Guildenstern.

King. Now Hamlet, where's Polonius?

Ham. At Supper.

King. At Supper? Where?

Ham. Not where he eats, but where he is eaten, a certaine conuocation of wormes are e'ne at him. Your worm is your onely Emperor for diet. We eat all creatures else to fat vs, and we eat our selfe for Magots. Your fat King, and your leane Begger is but variable seruice to dishes,
but to one Table that's the end.

King. What dost thou meane by this?

Ham.

Ham. Nothing but to shew you how a King may go a Progresse through the guts of a Begger.

King. Where is Polonius.

Ham. In heauen, send thither to see. If your Messenger finde him not there, seeke him i'th other place your selfe but indeed, if you finde him not this moneth, you shall nose him as you go vp the staires into the Lobby.

King. Go seeke him there.

Ham. He will stay till ye come.

K. Hamlet, this deed of thine, for thine especial safety
Which we do tender, as we decreely greeue
For that which thou hast done, must send thee hence
With fierie Quicknesse. Therefore prepare thy selfe,
The Barke is readie, and the winde at helpe,
Th' Associates tend, and euery thing at bent
For England.

Ham. For England?

King. I Hamlet.

Ham. Good,

King. So is it, if thou knew'st our purposes.

Ham. I fea Cherube that see's him. but come, for England. Farewell deere Mother.

King. Thy louing Father Hamlet

Hamlet My Mother Father and Mother is man and wife man & wife is one flesh, and so my mother Come, for England. Exit

King. Follow him at foote,
Tempt him with speed aboard.
Delay it not, Ile haue him hence to night.
Away, for euery thing is Seal'd and done
That else leanes on th' Afaire, pray you make hast.
And England, if my loue thou holdst at ought,
As my great power thereof may giue thee sense,
Since yet thy Cicatrice lookes raw and red
After the Danish Sword, and thy free awe
Payes homage to vs, thou maist not coldly set
Our Soueraigne Proesse, which imports at full
By Letters coniuering to that effect
The present death of Hamlet. Do it England,
For like the Hesticke in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Till I know 'tis done,
How ere my happes, my ioyes were ne're begun. Exit

Enter Fortinbras with an Armie

For. Go Captaine, from me greet the Danish King, Tell him that by his license, Fortinbras
Claimes the conueyance of a promis'd March
Ouer his Kingdome. You know the Rendeuous:
If that his Maiesty would ought with vs,
We shall expresse our dutie in his eye,
And let him know so.

Cap. I will doo't, my Lord.

For. Go safely on. Exit.

Enter Quene and Horatio.

Qu. I will not speake with her.

Hor. She is importunate, indeed distract, her moode will needs be pittied

Qu. What would she haue?

Hor. She speakes much of her Father; saies she heares
There's trickes i'th' world, and hems, and beats her heart,
Spurnes enuiously at Strawes, speakes things in doabt,
That carry but halfe sense Her speech is nothing,
Yet the vnshaped vse of it doth moue
The hearers to Collection; they ayme at it,
And botch the words vp fit to their owne thoughts,
Which as her winks, and nods, and gestures yeeld them,

Indeed would make one thinke there would be thought,
Though nothing sure, yet much vnhappy.

Qu. 'Twere good she were spoken with,

For she may strew dangerous coniectures

In ill breeding minds. Let her come in.

To my sickle soule (as sinns true Nature is)

Each toy seemes Prologue, to some great amisse,

So full of Artlesse realousie is guilt,

It spill's it selfe, in fearing to be spilt.

Enter Ophelia distracted,

Ophe. Where is the beauteous Maiesty of Denmark.

Qu. How now Ophelia?

Ophe. How should I your true loue know from another one?
By his Cockle hat and staffe, and his Sandal shoone.

Qu. Alas sweet Lady what imports this Song?

Ophe. Say you? Nay pray you marke.

He is dead and gone Lady, he is dead and gone,
As his head a grasse-greene Turfe, at his heeles a stone.

Enter King.

Qu. Nay but Ophelia.

Ophe. Pray you marke

While his Shrow'd as the Mountaine Snow.

Qu. Alas, looke heere my Lord.

Ophe. Larded with sweet flowers:

Which bewept to the graue did not go,

With true-loue showres.

King. How do ye, pretty Lady?

Ophe. Well, God dil'd you. They say the Owle was a Bakers daughter. Lord, wee know what we are, but know not what we may be. God be at your Table.

King. Conceit vpon her Father.

Ophe. Pray you let's haue no words of this but when they aske you what it means, say you this:

To morrow is S. Valentines day, all in the morning betime,

And I a Maid at your Window, to be your Valentine

Then vp he rose, & don'd his clothes, & dnpt the chamber dore,
Let in the Maid, that out a Maid, neuer departed more.

King. Pretty Ophelia.

Ophe. Indeed I? without an oath Ile make an end on't.

Bye, and by S. Charity,

Alacks, and fie for shame:

Young men wil doo't, if they come too't,

By Cocke they are too blame.

Quoth she before you tumbled me,

You promis'd me to Wed.

So would I ha done by yonder Sonne,

And thou hadst not come to ry bid.

King. How long hath she bin thus?

Ophe. I hope all will be well. We must bee patient, but I cannot choose but weepe, to thinke they should lay him i'th' cold ground: My brother shall knowe of it, and so I thank you for your good counsell. Come, my Coach. Goodnight Ladies Goodnight sweet Ladies:
Goodnight, goodnight. Exit.

King. Follow her close,

Giue her good watch I pray you.

Oh this is the poyson of deepe greefe, it springs

All from her Fathers death Oh Gertrude, Gertrude,

When sorrowes comes, they come not single spies,

But in Battalies. First, her Father slaine,

Next your Sonne gone, and he most violent Author

Of his owne iust remoue. the people muddied,

Thicke and vnwholsome in their thoughts, and whispers

For good Polonius death; and we haue done but greently

In hugger mugger to interre him Poore Ophelia

Diuided from her selfe, and her faire Iudgement,

Without

Without the which we are Pictures, or meere Beasts.
 Last, and as much containing as all these,
 Her Brother is in secret come from France,
 Keeps on his wonder, keeps himselfe in clouds,
 And wants not Buzzers to infect his eare
 With pestilent Speeches of his Fathers death,
 Where in necessitie of matter Beggard,
 Will nothing sticke our persons to Arraigne
 In eare and eare. O my deere Gertrude, this,
 Like to a murdering Peece in many places,
 Gieues me superfluous death. A Noise within,

Enter a Messenger.

Qu. Alacke, what noyse is this?

King. Where are my Switzers?

Let them guard the doore. What is the matter?

Mes. Saue your selfe, my Lord.

The Ocean (ouer-peering of his List)
 Eates not the Flats with more impittious haste
 Then young Laertes, in a Riotous head,
 Ore-beares your Officers, the rabble call him Lord,
 And as the world were now but to begin,
 Antiquity forgot, Custome not knowne,
 The Ratifiers and props of euery word,
 They cry choose we? Laertes shall be King,
 Caps, hands, and tongues, applaud it to the clouds,
Laertes shall be King, Laertes King.

Qu. How cheerefully on the false Traile they cry,
 Oh this is Counter you false Danish Dogges.

Noise within. Enter Laertes.

King. The doores are broke.

Laer. Where is the King, sirs? Stand you all without.

All. No, let's come in.

Laer. I pray you giue me leaue.

All. We will, we will.

Laer. I thanke you. Keepe the doore.

Oh thou wilde King, giue me my Father.

Qu. Calmely good Laertes.

Laer. That drop of blood, that calmes Proclaimes me Bastard.

Cries Cuckold to my Father, brands the Harlot
 Euen heere betwene the chaste vnsmirched brow
 Of my true Mother.

King. What is the cause Laertes,
 That thy Rebellion lookes so Gyant-like?
 Let him go Gertrude. Do not feare our person:
 There's such Diuinity doth hedge a King,
 That Treason can but peepe to what it would,
 Acts little of his will. Tell me Laertes,
 Why thou art thus Incens'd? Let him go Gertrude.
 Speake man.

Laer. Where's my Father?

King. Dead.

Qu. But not by him.

King. Let him demand his fill.

Laer. How came he dead? Ile not be Iuggel'd with
 To hell Allegiance. Vowes, to the blackest diuell.
 Conscience and Grace, to the profoundest Pit.
 I dare Damnation to this point I stand,
 That both the worlds I giue to negligence,
 Let come what comes onely Ile be reueng'd
 Most thoroughly for my Father.

King. Who shall stay you?

Laer. My Will, not all the world,
 And for my meanes, Ile husband them so well,
 They shall go farre with little.

King. Good Laertes.

If you desire to know the certaintie
 Of your deere Fathers death, if writ in your reuenge,
 That Soop-stake you will draw both Friend and Foer,
 Winner and Loofer.

Laer. None but his Enemies.

King. Will you know them then.

La. To his good Friends, thus wide Ile open my Armes.
 And like the kinde Life-rend'ring Politician,
 Repast them with my blood.

King. Why now you speake
 Like a good Childe, and a true Gentleman.
 That I am guiltlesse of your Fathers death;
 And am most sensible in grieffe for it,
 It shall as leuell to your Iudgement pierce
 As day do's to your eye

A Noise within. Let her come in.

Enter Ophelia.

Laer. How now? what noyse is that?
 Oh heate drie vp my Braines, teares seuen times salt,
 Burne out the Sence and Vertue of mine eye.
 By Heauen, thy madnesse shall be payed by waight,
 Till our Scale turnes the beame. Oh Role of May,
 Deere Maid, kinde Sister, sweet Ophelia.
 Oh Heauens, is't possible, a yong Maids wits,
 Should be as mortall as an old mans life?
 Nature is fine in Loue, and where 'tis fine,
 It sends some precious instance of it selfe
 After the thing it loues.

Ophe. They bore him bare fac'd on the Beer,

Hey non nonny, nonny, hey nonny:

And on his graue raines many a teare,

Fare you well my Dove.

Laer. Had'st thou thy wits, and did'st perswade Reuenge, it could not moue thus.

Ophe. You must sing downe a-downe, and you call him a-downe-a. Oh, how the wheele becomes it? It is the false Steward that stole his masters daughter.

Laer. This nothings more then matter.

Ophe. There's the Rosemary, that's for Remembrance.
 Pray loue remember: and there is Paeonies, that's for Thoughts.

Laer. A document in madnesse, thoughts & remembrance fitted.

Ophe. There's Fennell for you, and Columbines: that's Rew for you, and heere's some for me. Wee may call it
 Herbe-Grace a Sundaies: Oh you must weare your Rew with a difference. There's a Daylie, I would giue you some Violets, but they wither'd all when my Father dyed. They say, he made a good end;

For bonny sweet Robin is all my ioy.

Laer. Thought, and Affliction, Passion, Hell it selfe.
 She turnes to Fauour, and to prettinesse

Ophe. And will be not come againe,

And will be not come againe.

No, no, he is dead, go to thy Death-bed,

He neuer wil come againe.

His Beard as white as Snow,

All Flaxen was his Pole.

He is gone, he is gone, and we cast away mone,

Gramercy on his Soule.

And of all Christian Soules, I pray God.
 God buye.

Laer. Do you see this, you Gods?

King. Laertes, I must cōmon with your griece,
 Or you deny me right: go but apart,

Exeunt Ophelia

Make

Make choice of whom your wisest Friends you will,
And they shall heare and iudge 'twixt you and me;
If by direct or by Colaterall hand
They finde vs touch'd, we will our Kingdome giue,
Our Crowne, our Life, and all that we call Ours
To you in satisfaction But if not,
Be you content to lend your patience to vs,
And we shall ioyntly labour with your soule
To giue it due content.

Laer. Let this be so.
His meanes of death, his obscure buriall;
No Trophie, Sword, nor Hatchment o're his bones,
No Noble rite, nor formall ostentation,
Cry to be heard, as 'twere from Heauen to Earth,
That I must call in question.

King. So you shall.
And where th'offence is, let the great Axe fall.
I pray you go with me.

Exeunt

Enter Horatio, with an Attendant.

Hora. What are they that would speake with me?

Ser. Saylor's sir, they say they haue Letters for you.

Hor. Let them come in,
I do not know from what part of the world
I should be greeted, if not from Lord Hamlet

Enter Saylor.

Say. God blesse you Sir.

Hor. Let him blesse thee too.

Say. Hee shall Sir, and't please him There's a Letter for you Sir: It comes from th'Ambassadors that was bound for England, if your name be Horatio, as I am let to know it is.

Reads the Letter.

HOratio, When thou shalt haue overlooked this, giue these Fellowes some meanes to the King. They haue Letters for him. Ere we were two dayes old at Sea, a Pyrate of very Warlike appointment gaue vs Chase Finding our selues too slow of Saile, we put on a compelled Valour In the Grapple, I boarded them On the instant they got cleare of our Shippe, so I alone became their Prisoner. They haue dealt with mee, like Theenes of Mercy, but they knew what they did I am to dee a good turne for them. Let the King haue the Letters I haue sent, and repaire thou to me with as much hast as thou wouldest flee death I haue words to speake in your eare, will make thee
dunbe, yet are they much too light for the bore of the Matter.
These good Fellowes will bring thee where I am Rosinrance and Guildensterne, hold their course for England Of them
I haue much to tell thee, Farewell

*He is it thou knowest thine,
Hamlet.*

Come, I will giue you way for these your Letters,
And do't the speedier, that you may direct me
To him from whom you brought them.

Exit

Enter King and Laertes.

King. Now must your conscience my acquittance seal,
And you must put me in your heart for Friend,
Stth you haue heard, and with a knowing eare,
That he which hath your Noble Father slaine,
Pursued my life.

Laer. It well appeares But tell me,
Why you proceeded not against these feates,
So crimefull, and so Capitall in Nature,
As by your Safety, Wisedome, all tnings else,

You mainly were stirr'd vp?

King. O for two speciall Reasons,
Which may to you (perhaps) seeme much vsinnowed,
And yet to me they are strong The Queen his Mother,
Lives almost by his looks and for my selfe,
My Vertue or my Plague, be it either which,
She's so coniuinctue to my life, and soule;
That as the Starre moues not but in his Sphere,
I could not but by her. The other Motiue,
Why to a publike count I might not go,
Is the great loue the generall gender beare him,
Who dipping all his Faults in their affection,
Would like the Spring that turneth Wood to Stone,
Conuert his Gyues to Graces. So that my Arrowes
Too lightly tumbled for so loud a Winde
Would haue reuerted to my Bow againe,
And not where I had arm'd them.

Laer. And so haue I a Noble Father lost,
A Sister drinen into desperate tearmes,
Who was (if praises may go backe againe)
Stood Challenger on mount of all the Age
For her perfections But my reuenge will come.

King. Breake not your sleepes for that,
You must not thinke
That we are made of stiffe, so flat, and dull,
That we can let our Beard be shooke with danger,
And thinke it pastime You shortly shall heare more,
I lou'd your Father, and we loue our selfe,
And that I hope will teach you to imagine——

Enter a Messenger.

How now? What News?

Mes. Letters my Lord from Hamlet. This to your Majesty this to the Queene.

King. From Hamlet? What brought them?

Mes. Saylor's my Lord they say, I saw them not:
They were giuen i're by Claudio, he receiued them.

King. Laertes you shall heare them
Leaue vs. Exit Messenger

High and Mighty, you shall know I am set naked on your Kingdome To morrow shall I begge leave to see your Kingly Eyes When I shall first asking your Pardon thereunto) recount th'Occasions of my sodaine, and more strange returne.

Hamlet

What should this meane? Are all the rest come backe?
Or is it some abuse? Or no such thing?

Laer. Know you the hand?

King. 'Tis Hamlets Character, naked and in a Postscript here he sayes alone Can you aduise me?

Laer. I'm lost in it my Lord, but let him come,
It warms the very sicknesse in my heart,
That I shall liue and tell him to his teeth:
Thus diddest thou.

King. If it be so Laertes, as how should it be so:
How otherwise will you be rul'd by me?

Laer. If so you'll not o'rerule me to a peace.

King. To thine owne peace. if he be now return'd,
As checking at his Voyage, and that he meanes
No more to undertake it, I will worke him
To an exploit now ripe in my Deuice,
Vnder the which he shall not choose but fall;
And for his death no winde of blame shall breath,
But even his Mother shall vncharge the practice,
And call it accident Some two Monthes hence
Here was a Gentleman of Normandy,
I'ue scene my selfe, and seru'd against the French,
And they ran well on Horsebacke; but this Gallant

Had

Had witchcraft in't; he grew into his Seat,
And to such wondrous doing brought his Horse,
As had he beene encorps't and demy-Natur'd
With the braue Beast, so farre he past my thought,
That I in forgery of shapes and trickes,
Come short of what he did.

Laer. A Norman was't?

Kim. A Norman.

Laer. Vpon my life Lamound.

Kim. The very same.

Laer. I know him well, he is the Brooch indeed,
And Iemme of all our Nation.

Kim. Hee mad confession of you,
And gaue you such a Masterly report,
For Art and exercise in your defence;
And for your Rapier most especially,
That he cryed out, 't would be a sight indeed,
If one could match you Sir. This report of his
Did Hamlet so envenom with his Enuy,
That he could nothing doe but wish and begge,
Your sodaine comming ore to play with him,
Now out of this.

Laer. Why out of this, my Lord?

Kim. Laertes was your Father deare to you?
Or are you like the painting of a sorrow,
A face without a heart?

Laer. Why aske you this?

Kim. Not that I thinke you did not loue your Father,
But that I know Loue is begun by Time.

And that I see in passages of prooffe,
Time qualifies the sparke and fire of it.

Hamlet comes backe: what would you vndertake,
To show your selfe your Fathers sonne indeed,
More then in words?

Laer. To cut his throat i'th' Church.

Kim. No place indeed should murder Sancturize;
Reuenge should haue no bounds: but good Laertes
Will you doe this, keepe close within your Chamber,
Hamlet return'd, shall know you are come home:
Wee'l put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the fame
The Frenchman gaue you, bring you in fine together,
And wager on your heads, he being remisse,
Most generous, and free from all contriuing,
Will not peruse the Foiles? So that with ease,
Or with a little shuffling, you may choofe
A Sword vnbaited, and in a passe of practice,
Requit him for your Father.

Laer. I will doo't,

And for that purpose Ile annoint my Sword:

I bought an Vnction of a Mountebanke

So mortall, I but dipt a knife in it,

Where it drawes blood, no Cataplasme so rare,

Collected from all Simples that haue Vertue

Vnder the Moone, can saue the thing from death,

That is but scratcht withall. Ile touch my point,

With this contagion, that if I gall him slightly,

It may be death.

Kim. Let's further thinke of this,

Weigh what conuenience both of time and meanes

May fit vs to our shape, if this should faile;

And that our drift looke through our bad performance,

'T were better not affraid, therefore this Proiect

Should haue a backe or second, that might hold,

If this should blast in prooffe: Soft, let me see

Wee'l make a solemne wager on your commings,

I ha't: when in your motion you are hot and dry,
As make your bowts more violent to the end,
And that he calls for drinke, Ile haue prepar'd him
A Chalice for the nonce; whereon but sipping,
If he by chance escape your venom'd stuck,
Our purpose may hold there; how sweet Queene.

Enter Queene.

Queen. One woe doth tread vpon anothers heele,
So fast they'l follow: your Sister's drown'd Laertes

Laer. Drown'd? O where?

Queen. There is a Willow growes aslant a Brooke,
That shewes his hore leaues in the glassie streame.
There with fantastick Garlands did she come,
Of Crow-flowers, Nettles, Dayies, and long Purples,
That liberall Shepherds giue a grosser name;
But our cold Maids doe Dead Mens Fingers call them.
There on the pendant boughes, her Coronet weeds
Clambring to hang; an enuous slauer broke,
When downe the weedy Trophies, and her selfe,
Fell in the weeping Brooke, her cloathes spred wide,
And Mermaid-like, a while they bore her vp,
Which time she chaunted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her owne distresse,
Or like a creature Natue, and indued
Vnto that Element but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heauy with her drinke,
Pul'd the poore wretch from her melodious buy,
To muddy death.

Laer. Alas then, is she drown'd?

Queen. Drown'd, drown'd

Laer. Too much of water hast thou poore Ophelia,
And therefore I forbid my teares: but yet
It is our trick, Nature her custome holds,
Let shame lay what it will; when these are gone
The woman will be out. Adue my Lord,
I haue a speech of fire, that fame would blaze,
But that this folly doubts it. Exit.

Kim. Let's follow, Gertrude.

How much I had to doe to calme his rage?
Now feare I this will giue it start againe;
Therefore let's follow. Exeunt.

Enter two Clownes.

Clown. Is she to bee buried in Christian buriall, that wilfully seekes her owne saluation?

Other. I tell thee she is, and therefore make her Graue straight, the Crowner hath sate on her, and finds it Christian buriall.

Clo. How can that be, vnlesse she drowned her selfe in her owne defence?

Other. Why 'tis found so.

Clo. It must be Se offendendo, it cannot bee else: for heere lies the point; If I drowne my selfe wittingly, it argues an Act: and an Act hath three branches. It is an Act to doe and to performe; argall she drown'd her selfe wittingly.

Other. Nay but heare you Goodman Deluer.

Clown. Giue me leaue; heere lies the water good.
heere stands the man; good: If the man goe to this water and drowne himsele, it is will he will he, he goes, marke you that? But if the water come to him & drowne him; hee drownes not himsele. Argall, hee that is not guilty of his owne death, shortens not his owne life.

Other. But is this law?

Clo. I marry is't, Crowners Quest Law.

Other.

Other. Will you ha the truth on't: if this had not beene a Gentlewoman, shee should haue beene buried out of Christian Buriall:

Clo. Why therethou say'st And the more pittie that great folke should haue countenance in this world to drown or hang themselves, more then their euen Christian. Come, my Spade; there is no arcent Gentlemen, but Gardiners, Ditchers and Graue-makers; they hold vp Adams Profession.

Other. Was he a Gentleman?

Clo. He was the first that euer bore Armes.

Other. Why he had none.

Clo. What, art a Heathen? how dost thou vnderstand the Scripture? the Scripture sayes Adam dig'd, could hee digge without Armes? He put another question to thee; if thou answerst me not to the purpose, con fesse thy selfe—

Other. Go too.

Clo. What is he that builds stronger then either the Mason, the Shipwright, or the Carpenter?

Other. The Gallowes maker, for that Frame outliues a thousand Tenants.

Clo. I like thy wit well in good faith, the Gallowes does well; but how does it well? it does well to those that doe ill: now, thou dost ill to say the Gallowes is built stronger then the Church Argall, the Gallowes may doe well to thee. Too't againe, Come.

Other. Who builds stronger then a Mason, a Shipwright, or a Carpenter?

Clo. I, tell me that, and vnyoake.

Other. Marry, now I can tell.

Clo. Too't

Other. Masse, I cannot tell.

Enter Hamlet and Horatio a farr off

Clo. Cudgell thy braines no more about it; for your dull Ass will not mend his pace with beating; and when you are ask't this question next, say a Graue-maker: the Houses that he makes, lasts till Doomesday go, get thee to Tauxhan, fetch me a stoupe of Liquor.

Sings

In youth when I did loue, did lone, me thought it was very sweete.

*To contrait O the time for a my bebove,
O me thought there was nothing meete.*

Ham. Ha's this fellow no feeling of his businesse, that he sings at Graue-making?

Hor. Custome hath made it in him a property of easinesse.

Ham. 'Tis ee'n so; the hand of little Employment hath the daintier sence.

Clowne sings

*But Age with his stealing steps hath caught me in his clutch:
And hath shipped me in ill the Land,
as if I had neuer bene such.*

Ham. That Scull ha I a tongue in it, and could sing once: how the knaue iowles it to th' grownd, as if it were Caines Law-bone, that did the first murder. It might be the Pace of a Politician which this Ass o're Offices, one that could circumuent God, might it not?

Hor. It might, my Lord.

Ham. Or of a Courtier, which could say, Good Morrow sweet Lord: how dost thou, good Lord? this might be my Lord such a one, that prais'd my Lord such a ones Horse, when he meant to begge it; might it not?

Hor. I, my Lord.

Ham. Why ee'n so: and now my Lady Wormes, Chaplesse, and knockt about the Mazard with a Sextrons Spade; heere's fine Revolution, if wee had the strike to see't. Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at Loggets with 'em? mine ake to thinke on't.

Clowne sings.

*A Pickhaxe and a Spade, a Spade,
for and a shrowding-Sheete
O a Pit of Clay for to be made,
for such a Guest is meete.*

Ham. There's another why might not that bee the Scull of of a Lawyer? where be his Quiddits now? his Quillets? his Cases? his Tenures, and his Tricks? why doe's he suffer this rude knaue now to knocke him about the Sconce with a dirty Shouell, and will not tell him of his Action of Battery? hum. This fellow might be in's time a great buyer of Land, with his Statutes, his Recognizances, his Fines, his double Vouchers, his Recoveries Is this the fine of his Fines, and the recovery of his Recoveries, to haue his fine Pate full of fine Dirt? will his Vouchers vouch him no more of his Purchases, and double ones too, then the length and breadth of a paire of Indentures? the very Conueyances of his Lands will hardly lye in this Boxe, and must the Inheritor himselfe haue no more? ha?

Hor. Not a tot more, my Lord.

Ham. Is not Parchment made of Sheep-skinnes?

Hor. I my Lord, and of Calue-skinnes too.

Ham. They are Sheepe and Calues that seek out assurance in that. I will speake to this fellow, whose Graue's this Sir?

Clo. Mine Sir.

*O a Pit of Clay for to be made,
for such a Guest is meete.*

Ham. I thinke it be thine indeed for thou liest in't.

Clo. You lye out on't Sir, and therefore it is not yours. for my part, I doe not lye in't, and yet it is mine.

Ham. Thou dost lye in't, to be in't and say 'tis thine: 'tis for the dead, not for the quicke, therefore thou lye'st.

Clo. 'Tis a quicke lye Sir, 'twill away againe from me to you.

Ham. What man dost thou digge it for?

Clo. For no man Sir.

Ham. What woman then?

Clo. For none neither.

Ham. Who is to be buried in't?

Clo. One that was a woman Sir; but rest her Soule, shee's dead

Ham. How absolute the knaue is? wee must speake by the Carde, or equiupcation will vndoe vs: by the Lord Horatio, these three yeares I haue taken note of it, the Age is growne so pick'd, that the toe of the Pefant comes so neere the heeles of our Courtier, hee galls his Kibe. How long hath thou been a Graue-maker?

Clo. Of all the dayes i'th' yeare, I came roo e that day that our last King Hamlet o'recame Fortimbras.

Ham. How long is that since?

Clo. Cannot you tell that? euery foole can tell that: It was the very day, that young Hamlet was borne, hee that was mad and sent into England

Ham. I marry, why was he sent into England?

Clo. Why, because he was mad; hee shall recover his wits there; or if he do not, it's no great matter there.

Ham.

Ham Why?

Clo. 'Twill not be seene in him, there the men are as mad as he.

Ham. How came he mad?

Clo. Very strangely they say.

Ham. How strangely?

Clo. Faith e'ene with loosing his wits.

Ham. Vpon what ground?

Clo. Why heere in Denmarke: I haue bin sixteene heere, man and Boy thirty yeares.

Ham. How long will a man lie 'ith' earth ere he rot?

Clo. Ifaith, if he be not rotten before he die (as we haue many pocky Coarces now adaies, that will scarce hold the laying in) he will last you some eight yeare, or nine yeare. A Tanner will last you nine yeare.

Ham. Why he, more then another?

Clo. Why sir, his hide is so tan'd with his Trade, that he will keepe out water a great while. And your water, is a sore Decayer of your horse dead body. Heres a Scull now: this Scull, has laine in the earth three & twenty yeares.

Ham. Whose was it?

Clo. A whoreson mad Fellowes it was; Whose doe you thinke it was?

Ham. Nay, I know not.

Clo. A pestilence on him for a mad Rogue, a pou'd a Flaggon of Renish on my head once. This same Scull Sir, this same Scull sir, was Torick's Scull, the Kings Iester.

Ham. This?

Clo. E'ene that.

Ham. Let me see. Alas poore Torick, I knew him Horatio, a fellow of infinite Jest; of most excellent fancy, he hath borne me on his backe a thousand times And how abhorred my Imagination is, my gorge rises at it. Heere hung those lipps, that I haue kist I know not how oft, VVhere be your Iibes now? Your Gambals? Your Songs? Your flashes of Merriment that were wont to set the Table on a Rore? No one now to mock your own Ieering? Quite chopfalne? Now get you to my Ladies Chamber, and tell her, let her paint an inch thicke, to this fauour she must come. Make her laugh at that. pry-thee Horatio tell me one thing.

Hor. What's that my Lord?

Ham. Dost thou thinke Alexander lookt o'this fashion i'th' earth?

Hor. E'ene so.

Ham. And smelt so? Puh.

Hor. E'ene so, my Lord.

Ham. To what base vses we may returne Horatio. Why may not Imagination trace the Noble dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole.

Hor. 'Twere to consider to curiously to consider so.

Ham. No faith, not a iot. But to follow him thither with modestie enough, & likelihood to lead it; as thus.

Alexander died. Alexander was buried: Alexander returneth into dust; the dust is earth; of earth we make Lome, and why of that Lome (whereto he was conuered) might they not stopp a Beere-barrell?

Imperiall Cesar, dead and turn'd to clay,
Might stop a hole to keepe the winde away.
Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a Wall, & expell the winters flaw.
But soft, but soft, aside, heere comes the King.

Enter King, Queene, Laertes, and a Coffin, with Lords attendant.

The Queene, the Courtiers. Whos that they follow,

And with such maimed rites? This doth betoken,
The Coarse they follow, did wuth disperate hand,
Fore do it owne life, 'twas some Estate.
Couch we a while, and mark.

Laer. What Cerimony else?

Ham. That is Laertes, a very Noble youth: Marke.

Laer. What Cerimony else?

Priest. Her Obsequies haue bin as farre enlarg'd,
As we haue warrantes, her death was doubtfull,
And but that great Command, o're-swaies the order,
She should in ground vnsanctified haue lodg'd,
Till the last Trumper. For charitable praier,
Shardes Flints, and Peebles, should be thro wne on her.
Yet heere she is allowed her Virgin Rites,
Her Maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of Bell and Buriall.

Laer. Must there no more be done?

Priest. No more be done.

We should prophane the seruice of the dead,
To sing sage Requiem, and such rest to her
As to peace-parted Soules.

Laer. Lay her i'th' earth,
And from her faire and vnpolluted flesh,
May Violets spring. I tell thee (churlish Priest)
A Ministring Angell shall my Sister be,
When thou liest howling?

Ham. What, the faire Ophelia?

Laer. S A eets, to the sweet faretwell.
I hop'd thou should'st haue bin my Hamlet's wife:
I thought thy Br'de-bed to haue deckt (sweet Maid)
And not t'haue strew'd thy Graue.

Laer. Oh terrible woer,
Fall ten times trebble on that cursed head
Whose wicked deed, thy most Ingenious sence
Depru'd thee of. Hold off the earth a while,
Till I haue caught her once more in mine armes:

Leaps in the grave.

Now pile your dust, vpon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a Mountainaine you haue made,
To o'retop old Pelios, or the skyish head
Of blew Olympus.

Ham. What is he, whose griefes
Beares such an Emphasis? whose phrase of Sorrow
Coniure the wandring Starres, and makes them stand
Like wonder-wounded hearers? This is I,
Hamlet the Dane.

Laer. The deuil take thy soule.

Ham. Thou prais't not well,

I prythee take thy fingers from my throat;
Sir though I am not Spleenatiue, and rash,
Yet haue I something in me dangerous,
Which let thy wisnesse feare Away thy hand.

King. Pluck them asunder.

Qu. Hamlet, Horatio.

Gen. Good my Lord be quiet.

Ham. Why I will fight with him vppon this Theme.
Vntill my eiels do no longer wag.

Qu. Oh my Sonne, what Theame?

Ham. I lou'd Ophelia, fortie thousand Brothers
Could not (with all there quantitie of Loue)
Make vp my summe. What wilt thou do for her?

King. Oh he is mad Laertes,

Qu. For loue of God forbear him.

Ham. Come show me what thou'lt doe.
Woo't weepe? Woo't fight? Woo't teare thy selfe?
Woo't drinke vp Epile, eate a Crocodile?

ile

Hee doo't, Dost thou come heere to whine;
To outface me with leaping in her Graue?
Be buried quicke with her, and so will I.
And if thou prate of Mountaines, let them throw
Millions of Akers on vs; till our ground
Sindging his pate against the burning Zone,
Make Offa like a wast. Nay, and thoult mouth,
He rant as well as thou.

Kim. This is meeré Madnesse:
And thus awhile the fit will worke on him.
Anon as patient as the female Doue,
When that her golden Cuplet are disclos'd;
His silence will sit drooping.

Ham. Heare you Sit?
What is the reason that you vse me thus?
I loud' you euer, but it is no matter
Let Heracles himselfe doe what he may,
The Cat will Mew, and Dogge will haue his day Exit.

Kim. I pray you good Horatio wait vpon him,
Strengthen your patience in our last nights speech,
Wee'l put the matter to the present push
Good Gertrude set some watch over your Sonne,
This Graue shall haue a lasting Monument
An houre of quiet shortly shall we see,
Till then, in patience our proceeding be Exeunt

Enter Hamlet and Horatio

Ham. So much for this Sir, now let me see the other,
You doe remember all the Circumstance.

Hor. Remember it my Lord?

Ham. Sir, in my heart there was a kinde of fighting,
That would not let me sleepe; me thought I lay
Worse then the mutines in the Bilboes, rashly,
(And praise be rashnesse for it) let vs know,
Our indiscretion sometimes serues vs well,
When our deare plots do paule, and that should teach vs,
There's a Diuinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

Hor. That is most certaine.

Ham. Vp from my Cabin
My sea-gowne scarft about me in the darke,
Grop'd I to finde out them; had my desire,
Finger'd their Packet, and in fine, withdrew
To mine owne roome againe, making fo hold,
(My feares forgetting manners) to vnseale
Their grand Commission, where I found Horatio,
Oh royall knauery. An exact command,
Larded with many seuerall sorts of reason,
Importing Denmarks health, and Englands too,
With hoo, such Bugges and Goblins in my life,
That on the superuize no leasure bated,
No not to stay the grinding of the Axe,
My head shoud be struck off.

Hor. Ist possible?

Ham. Here's the Commission, read it at more leysure.
But wilt thou heare me how I did proceed?

Hor. I beseech you.

Ham. Being thus benetted round with Villaines,
Ere I could make a Prologue to my braines,
They had begun the Play. I fate me downe,
Deuis'd a new Commission, wrote it faire,
I once did hold it as our Statists doe,
A basenesse to write faire, and laboured much
How to forget that learning. but Sir now,
It did me Yeomans seruice. wilt thou know
The effects of what I wrote?

Hor. I, good my Lord.

Ham. An earnest Coniuration from the King,
As England was his faithfull Tributary,
As loue betweene them, as the Palme should flourish,
As Peace should still her wheaten Garland weare,
And stand a Comma'tweene their amities,
And many such like Assis of great charge,
That on the view and know of these Contents,
Without debatement further, more or lesse,
He should the bearers put to todaine death,
Not shuning time allow'd

Hor. How was this seal'd?

Ham. Why, euen in that was Heauen ordinate;
I had my fathers Signet in my Purse,
Which was the Modell of that Danish Scale.
Folded the Writ vp in forme of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gau't it impression, plac't it safely,
The changeling neuer knowne. Now, the next day
Was our Sea Fight, and what to this was sement,
Thou know'st already.

Hor. So Guldensterne and Rosinrance, go too't.

Ham. Why man, they did misse loue to this employment
They are not neere my Conscience, their debate
Doth by their owne insinuation grow.
'Tis dangerous, when the baser nature comes Betweene the paffe, and fell incensed points
Of mighty opposites

Hor. Why, what a King is this?

Ham. Does it not, thinkst thee, stand me now vpon
He that hath kil'd my King, and whor'd my Mother,
Popt in betweene th' election and my hopes,
Throwne out his Angle for my proper life,
And with such coozenage; is't not perfect conscience,
To quit him with this arme? And is't not to be damn'd
To let this Canker of our nature come
In further euill.

Hor. It must be shortly knowne to him from England
What is the issue of the businesse there.

Ham. It will be short,
The interim's mine, and a mans life's no more
Then to say one. but I am very sorry good Horatio,
That to Laertes I forgot my selfe,
For by the image of my Cause, I see
The Portraiture of his; He count his fauours;
But sure the brauery of his griefe did put me
Into a Towing passion.

Hor. Peace, who comes heere?

Enter young Ofsrcke (marke.

Ofs. Your Lordship is right welcome back to Den-
Ham. I humbly thank you Sir, dost know this waterflie?

Hor. No my good Lord,

Ham. Thy state is the more gracious, for 'tis a vice to know him. He hath much Land, and fertile; let a Beast be Lord of Beasts, and his Crib shall stand at the Kings Messe; 'tis a Chowgh, but as I saw spacious in the possession of dirt

Ofs. Sweet Lord, if your friendship were at leysure,
I should impart a thing to you from his Maiesty.

Ham. I will receiue it with all diligence of spirit; put your Bonet to his right vse, 'tis for the head.

Ofs. I thanke your Lordship, 'tis very hot

Ham. No, beleeue mee 'tis very cold, the winde is Northerly.

Ofs. It is indifferent cold my Lord indeed.

Ham. Mee thinkes it is very soultry, and hot for my Complexion.

Ofsrcke.

Ofr. Exceedingly, my Lord, it is very foultry, as 'twere I cannot tell how: but my Lord, his Maiesty bad me signifie to you, that he ha's laid a great wager on your head: Sir, this is the matter.

Ham. I beseech you remember.

Ofr. Nay, in good faith, for mine ease in good faith: Sir, you are not ignorant of what excellence Laertes is at his weapon.

Ham. What's his weapon?

Ofr. Rapier and dagger.

Ham. That's two of his weapons; but well.

Ofr. The sir King ha's wag'd with him six Barbary Horses, against the which he impon'd as I take it, sixe French Rapiers and Poniards, with their assignes, as Girdle, Hangers or so: three of the Carriages in faith are very deare to fancy, very responsiue to the hilt, most delicate carriages, and of very liberall conceit.

Ham. What call you the Carriages?

Ofr. The Carriages Sir, are the hangers.

Ham. The phrase would bee more Germane to the matter: If we could carry Cannon by our sides; I would it might be Hangers till then; but on sixe Barbary Horses against sixe French Swords: their Assignes, and three liberall conceited Carriages, that's the French but against the Danish; why is this impon'd as you call it?

Ofr. The King Sir, hath laid that in a dozen passes betweene you and him, hee shall not exceed you three hits; He hath one twelue for mine, and that would come to immediate tryall, if your Lordship would vouchsafe the Answer.

Ham. How if I answer no?

Ofr. I mean my Lord, the opposition of your person in tryall.

Ham. Sir, I will walke heere in the Hall; if it please his Maiestie, 'tis the breathing time of day with me; let the Foyles bee brought, the Gentleman willing, and the King hold his purpose; I will win for him if I can: if not, Ile gaine nothing but my shame, and the odde hits.

Ofr. Shall I deliuer you ce'n so?

Ham. To this effect Sir, after what flourish your nature will.

Ofr. I commend my duty to your Lordship.

Ham. Yours, yours; hee does well to commend it himselfe, there are no tongues else for's tongue.

Hor. This Lapwing runs away with the shell on his head.

Ham. He did Complie with his Dugge before hee suck't it: thus had he and mine more of the same Beauty that I know the drossie age dotes on, only got the tune of the time, and outward habite of encounter, a kinde of yesty collection, which carries them through & through the most fond and winnowed opinions; and doe but blow them to their tryalls: the Bubbles are out.

Hor. You will lose this wager, my Lord.

Ham. I doe not thinke so, since he went into France, I haue bene in continuall practice; I shall winne at the oddes: but thou wouldest not thinke how all heereabout my heart: but it is no matter.

Hor. Nay, good my Lord.

Ham. It is but foolery; but it is such a kinde of gain-giving as would perhaps trouble a woman.

Hor. If your minde dislike any thing, obey. I will forestall their repaire hither, and say you are not fit.

Ham. Not a whit, we desire Augury; there's a speciall Providence in the fall of a sparrow. If it be now, 'tis not to come. If it be not to come, it will bee now: if it be not now; yet it will come; the readinesse is all, since no man ha's ought of what he leaues. What is't to leaue betimes?

Enter King, Queene, Laertes and Lords, with other Attendants with Foyles, and Gambrells, A Table and Flagons of Wine on it.

King. Come Hamlet, come, and take this hand from me.

Ham. Giue me your pardon Sir, I'ue done you wrong, But pardon't as you are a Gentleman.

This presence knowes,

And you must needs haue heard how I am punisht

With fore distraction? What I haue done

That might your nature honour, and exception

Roughly awake, I heere proclaim'e was madnesse:

Was Hamlet wrong'd Laertes? Neuer Hamlet.

If Hamlet from himselfe be tane away:

And when he's not himselfe, do's wrong Laertes,

Then Hamlet does it not, Hamlet denies it.

Who does it then? His Madnesse? If't be so,

Hamlet is of the Faction that is wrong'd,

His madnesse is poore Hamlets Enemy,

Sir, in this Audience,

Let my disclaiming from a purpos'd euill,

Free me so farre in your most generous thoughts,

That I haue shot mine Arrow o're the house,

And hurt my Mother.

Laer. I am satisfied in Nature,

Whose motiue in this case should stirre me most

To my Reuenge. But in my termes of Honor

I stand aloofe, and will no reconcilement,

Till by some elder Masters of knowne Honor,

I haue a voyce, and president of peace

To keepe my name vngorg'd. But till that time,

I do receiue your offer'd loue like loue,

And wil not wrong it.

Ham. I do embrace it freely,

And will this Brothers wager frankly play.

Giue vs the Foyles. Come on.

Laer. Come one for me.

Ham. Ile be your foile Laertes, in mine ignorance,

Your Skill shall like a Starre i'th' darkest night,

Sticke fiery off indeede.

Laer. You mocke me Sir.

Ham. No by this hand.

King. Giue them the Foyles yong Ofricke,

Cousen Hamlet, you know the wager.

Ham. Verie well my Lord,

Your Grace hath laide the oddes a'th' weaker side.

King. I do not feare it,

I haue leene you both:

But since he is better'd, we haue therefore oddes.

Laer. This is too heauy,

Let me see another.

Ham. This likes me well,

These Foyles haue all a length.

Prepares to play.

Ofricke. I my good Lord.

King. Ser me the Stopes of wine vpon that Table:

If Hamlet giue the first, or second hit,

Or quit in answer of the third exchange,

Let all the Battlements their Ordinance fire,

The King shal drinke to Hamlets better breath,

And in the Cup an vnion shal he throw

Richer then that, which foure successe Kings

In Denmarks Crowne haue worne.

Giue

Give me the Cups,
And let the Kettle to the Trumpets speake.
The Trumpet to the Cannoneer without,
The Cannons to the Heavens, the Heaven to Earth,
Now the King drinke to Hamlet. Come, begin,
And you the Iudges beare a wary eye

Ham. Come on sir.

Laer. Come on sir.

Ham. One.

Laer. No.

Ham. Iudgement.

Ofr. A hit, a very palpable hit.

Laer. Well: againe.

King. Stay, giue me drinke.

Hamlet, this Pearle is thine,

Here's to thy health. Giue him the cup,

Trumpets sound, and shot goes off

Ham. Ile play this bout first, set by a-while.

Come. Another hit; what say you?

Laer. A touch, a touch, I do confesse.

King. Our Sonne shall win.

Qu. He's fat, and scant of breath.

Heere's a Napkin, rub thy browes,

The Queene Carowises to thy fortune, Hamlet.

Ham. Good Madam.

King. Gertrude, do not drinke.

Qu. I will my Lord;

I pray you pardon me

King. It is the poyson'd Cup, it is too late.

Ham. I dare not drinke yet Madam,

By and by.

Qu. Come, let me wipe thy face.

Laer. My Lord, Ile hit him now.

King. I do not thinke't.

Laer. And yet 'tis almost 'gainst my conscience.

Ham. Come for the third.

Laertes, you but dally,

I pray you passe with your best violence,

I am assear'd you make a wanton of me.

Laer. Say you so? Come on.

Ofr. Nothing neither way.

Laer. Haue at you now.

In scuffling they change Rapiers.

King. Part them, they are incens'd.

Ham. Nay come, againe

Ofr. Look to the Queene there hoa.

Hor. They bleed on both sides. How is't my Lord?

Ofr. How is't Laertes?

Laer. Why as a Woodcocke

To mine Spridge, Ofricke,

I am iustly kill'd with mine owne Treacherie

Ham. How does the Queene?

King. She sounds to see them bleede.

Qu. No, no, the drinke, the drinke

Oh my deere Hamlet, the drinke, the drinke,

I am poyson'd.

Ham. Oh Villany! How? Let the doore be lock'd.

Treacherie, seeke it out.

Laer. It is heere Hamlet.

Hamlet, thou art slaine,

No Medicine in the world can do thee good.

In thee, there is not halfe an houre of life;

The Treacherous Instrument is in thy hand,

Vnbated and envenom'd. the foule practise:

Hath turn'd it selfe on me. Lo, heere I lye,

Neuer to rise againe. Thy Mothers poyson'd:

Thy play.

I can no more, the King, the King's too blame.

Ham. The point envenom'd too,
Then venome to thy worke,

Hurts the King.

All. Treason, Treason.

King. O yet defend me Friends, I am but hurt.

Ham. Heere thou incestuous, murdrous,

Damned Dane,

Drinke off this Potion: Is thy Vnion heere?

Follow my Mother.

King Dyes.

Laer. He is iustly seru'd.

It is a poyson temp'red by himselfe:

Exchange forgiveness with me, Noble Hamlet;

Mine and my Fathers death come not vpon thee,

Nor thine on me.

Dyes:

Ham. Heaven make thee free of it, I follow thee.

I am dead Horatio, wretched Queene adiew,

You that looke pale, and tremble at this chance,

That are but Mutes or audience to this acte:

Had I but time (as this fell Sergeant death

Is strick'd in his Arrest) oh I could tell you.

But let it be: Horatio, I am dead,

Thou liu'st, report me and my causes right

To the vn-satisfied.

Hor. Neuer beleeeue it.

I am more an Antike Roman then a Dane:

Ham. As th'art a man, giue me the Cup.

Let go, by Heaven Ile haue't.

Oh good Horatio, what a wounded name,

(Things standing thus vnknowne) shall liue behind me.

If thou did'st euer hold me in thy heart,

Absent thee from felicitie awhile,

And in this harsh world draw thy breath in paine,

To tell my Storie.

March afarre off, and shout within

What warlike noyse is this?

Enter Ofr eke.

Ofr. Yong Fortinbras, with conquest come fro Poland
To th' Ambassadors of England giues this warlike vally.

Ham. O I dye Horatio.

The potent poyson quite ore-crowes my spirit,

I cannot lue to heare the Newes from England,

But I do prophesie th' election lights

On Fortinbras, he ha's my dying voyce,

So tell him with the occurres more and lesse,

Which haue solicited. The rest is silence. O, o, o, o. Dyes

Hor. Now cracke a Noble heart:

Goodnight sweet Prince,

And flights of Angels sing thee to thy rest,

Why do's the Drumme come hither?

Enter Fortinbras and English Ambassador with Drumme, Colours, and Attendants.

Fortin. Where is this sight?

Hor. What is it ye would see?

If ought of woe, or wonder, cease your search.

For. His quarry cries on hauocke Oh proud death,

What feast is toward in thine eternall Cell

That thou so many Princes, at a shoote,

So bloodily hast strooke

Amb. The sight is dismall,

And our affaires from England come too late,

The eares are senselesse that should giue vs hearing,

To tell him his comma ndment is fulfill'd,

q q

That

That Rosincrance and Guildesterne are dead :
Where should we haue our thanks ?

Hor. Not from his mouth,
Had it th'abilitie of life to thanke you :
He neuer gaue command'ment for their death.
But since to iumpe vpon this bloodie question,
You from the Polake warres, and you from England
Are heere arriued. Giue order that these bodies
High on a stage be placed to the view,
And let me speake to th'yet vnknowing world,
How these things came about: So shall you heare
Of carnall, bloudie, and vnnaturall acts,
Of accidentall iudgements, casuall slaughters
Of death's put on by cunning, and forc'd cause,
And in this vpshot, purposes mistooke,
Falne on the Inuentors heads. All this can I Truly deliuer.

For. Let vs hast to heare it,
And call the Noblest to the Audience.
For rue, with sorrow, I embrace my Fortune,
I haue some Rites of memory in this Kingdome,

Which are to claime, my vantage doth
Inuite me,

Hor. Of that I shall haue alwayes cause to speake,
And from his mouth
Whose voyce will draw on more.
But let this same be presently perform'd,
Euen whiles mens mindes are wilde,
Lest more mischance
On plots, and errors happen.

For. Let foure Captaines
Beare Hamlet like a Soldier to the Stage,
For he was likely, had he beene put on
To haue prou'd most royally :
And for his passage,
The Souldiours Musicke, and the rites of Warre
Speake lowdly for him,
Take vp the body ; Such a sight as this
Becomes the Field, but heere shewes much amis.
Go, bid the Souldiers shoote.

Exeunt Marching : after the which, a Peale of Ordenance are shot off.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF KING LEAR.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

*Enter Kent, Gloucester, and Edmond
Kent*

K Thought the King had more affected the Duke of Albany, then Cornwall.

Glou. It did alwayes seeme so to vs But now in the diuision of the Kingdome, it appeares not which of the Dukes hee valewes most, for qualities are so weigh'd, that curiosity in neither, can make choise of either's mott.

Kent. Is not this your Son, my Lord?

Glou. His breeding Sir, hath bin at my charge I haue so often blush'd to acknowledge him, that now I am braz'd too't

Kent. I cannot conseeue you.

Glou. Sir, th's yong Fellowes mother could; where-vpon she grew round womb'd, and had indeede (Sir) a Sonne for her Cradie, ere she had husband for her bed Do you smell a fault?

Kent. I cannot with the fault vndone, the issue of it, being so proper.

Glou. But I haue a Sonne, Sir, by order of Law, some yeere elder then this; who, yet is no deerer in my account, though this Knaue came something fauily to the world before he was sent for yet was his Mother fayre, there was good sport at his making, and the horson must be acknowledged. Doe you know this Noble Gentleman, Edmond?

Edm. No, my Lord.

Glou. My Lord of Kent

Remember him heereafter, as my Honourable Friend

Edm. My seruices to your Lordship.

Kent. I must loue you, and sue to know you better.

Edm. Sir, I shall study deseruing.

Glou. He hath bin our nine yeares, and away he shall againe. The King is comming

Sennet. Enter King Lear, Cornwall, Albany, Gonerill, Regan, Cordelia, and attendants

Lear. Attend the Lords of France & Burgundy Gloster,

Glou. I shall, my Lord Exit

Lear. Meane time we shal expresse our darker purpose Giue me the Map there. Know, that we haue diuided In three our Kingdome and 'tis our fast intent, To shake all Cares and Businesse from our Age, Conferring them on yonger strenghts, while we Vnburthen'd crawl toward death Our son of Cornwall, And you our no lesse louing Sonne of Albany,

We haue this houre a constant will to publish Our daughters seuerall Dowers, that future strife May be prevented now The Princes France & Burgundy Great Riuall in our yongest daughters loue, Long in our Court, haue made their amorous sojourn, And heere are to be answer'd Tell me my daughters (Since now we will diuest vs both of Rule, Interest of Territory, Cares of State) Which of you shall we say doth loue vs most, That we, our largest bountie may extend Where Nature doth with merit challenge. Gonerill, Our eldest borne, speake first.

Gou. Sir, I loue you more then word can wield & matter, Deerer then eye-sight, space, and libertie, Beyond what can be valewed, rich or rare, No lesse then life, with grace, health, beauty, honor: As much as Childe ere lou'd, or Father found. A loue that makes brea bpoore, and speech vnable, Beyond all manner of so much I loue you.

Cor. What shall Cordelia speake? Leue, and be silent.

Lear. Of all these bounds euen from this Line, to this, With shadowie Forrests, and with Champains rich'd With plenteous Riuers, and wide-skirted Meades We make thee Lady To thine and Albanyes flugs Be this perpetuall What sayes our second Daughter? Our deere't Regen, wife of Cornwall?

Reg. I am made of that selfe-mettle as my Sister, And prize me at her worth. In my true heart, I finde she names my very deede of loue: Onely she comes too short, that I professe My selfe an enemy to all other ioyes, Which the most precious square of sense professes, And finde I am alone felicitate In your deere Highnesse loue

Cor. Then poore Cordelia, And yet not so, since I am sure my loue's More ponderous then my tongue.

Lear. To thee, and thine hereditarie euer, Remaine this ample third of our faire Kingdome, No lesse in space, valdute, and pleasure Then that confer'd on Gonerill Now our Ioy, Although our last and least; to whose yong loue, The Vines of France, and Milke of Burgundie, Striue to be interest. What can you say, to draw A third, more opulent then your Sisters? speake.

Cor. Nothing my Lord.

Lear. Nothing?

Cor. Nothing.

Lear. Nothing will come of nothing, speake againe.

Cor. Vnhappie that I am, I cannot heaue
My heart into my mouth I loue your Maiesty
According to my bond, no more nor lesse.

Lear. How, how Cordelia? Mend your speech a little,
Least you may marre your Fortunes.

Cor. Good my Lord,
You haue begot me, bred me, lou'd me.
I returne those duties backe as are right fit,
Obey you, Loue you, and most Honour you.
Why haue my Sisters Husbands, if they say
They loue you all? Happily when I shall wed,
That Lord, whose hand must take my plight, shall carry
Halfe my loue with him, halfe my Care, and Dutie,
Sure I shall neuer marry like my Sisters.

Lear. But goes thy heart with this?

Cor. I my good Lord.

Lear. So young, and so vntender?

Cor. So young my Lord, and true.

Lear. Let it be so, thy truth then be thy dowre:
For by the sacred radience of the Sunne,
The miseries of Heccat and the night:
By all the operation of the Orbes,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be,
Heere I disclaime all my Paternall care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me,
Hold thee from this for euer. The barbarous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosome
Be as well neighbour'd, pittied, and releu'd,
As thou my sometime Daughter.

Kent. Good my Liege.

Lear. Peace Kent,
Come not betweene the Dragon and his wrath,
I lou'd her most, and thought to let my rest
On her kind nursery. Hence and avoid my sight:
So be my graue my peace, as here I giue
Her Fathers heart from her; call France, who stirs?
Call Burgundy, Cornwall, and Albanie,
With my two Daughters Dowres, digest the third,
Let pride, which she calls plainnesse, marry her:
I doe louest you ioyntly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troope with Maiesty Our selfe by Monthly course,
With reseruation of an hundred Knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turne, onely we shall retaine
The name, and all th'addition to a King. the Sway,
Reuennew, Execution of the rest,
Beloued Sonnes be yours, which to confirme,
This Coronet part betweene you.

Kent. Royall Lear,

Whom I haue euer honor'd as my King,
Lou'd as my Father, as my Master follow'd,
As my great Patron thought on in my prayers.

Le. The bow is bent & drawne, make from the shaft.

Kent. Let it fall rather, though the forke inuade
The region of my heart, be Kent vnmanly,
When Lear is mad, what wouldst thou do old man?
Thinkst thou that dutie shall haue dread to speake;
When poweres flattery bowes?
To plainnesse honour's bound,
When Maiesty falls to folly, rescue thy state,
And in thy best consideration checke

This hideous rashnesse, answer me my life, my iudgement.
Thy yongest Daughter do's not loue thee least,
Nor are those empty hearted, whose low sounds
Reuerbe no hollownesse.

Lear. Kent, on thy life no more.

Kent. My life I neuer held but as pawne
To wage against thine enemies, nere feare to loose it,
Thy safety being mortue.

Lear. Out of my sight.

Kent. See better Lear, and let me still remaine
The true blanke of thine eye.

Kear. Now by Apollo,

Lent. Now by Apollo, King
Thou swearst thy Gods in vaine.

Lear. O Vassall! Miscreant.

Alb. Cor. Deare Sir forbeare.

Kent. Kill thy Physitian, and thy fee bestow
Vpon the soule disease, reuoke thy gift,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throate,
Ile tell thee thou dost euill.

Lea. Heare me recreant, on thine allegiance heare me;
That thou hast sought to make vs breake our vower,
Which we durst neuer yet, and with itraind pride,
To come betwixt our senses, and our power,
Which, nor our nature, nor our place can beare;
Our potencie made good, take thy reward.
Fine dayes we do allot thee for provision,
To shield thee from disasters of the world,
And on the sixth to turne thy hated backe
Vpon our kingdom: if on the tenth day following,
Thy banisht trunk be found in our Dominions,
The moment is thy death, away. By Jupiter,
This shall not be reuok'd.

Kent. Fare thee well King, sith thus thou wilt appeare, Freedomes liues hence, and banishment is here,
The Gods to their deere shelter take thee Maid,
That iustly thinkst it, and hast must rightly said:
And your large speeches, may your deeds approve,
That good effects may spring from words of loue:
Thus Kent, O Princes, bids you all adew, Hee'l shape his old course, in a Country new. Exit.

Flourish. Enter Gloster with France, and Bur- gundy, Attendants.

Cor. Heere's France and Burgundy, my Noble Lord.

Lear. My Lord of Burgundie,
We first addresse to ward you, who with this King
Hath riuald for our Daughter; what in the least
Will you require in preient Dower with her,
Or cease your quest of Loue?

Bur. Most Royall Maiesty,
I craue no more then hath your Highnesse offer'd,
Nor will you tender lesse?

Lear. Right Noble Burgundy,
When she was deare to vs, we did hold her so,
But now her price is fallen: Sir, there she stands,
If ought within that little seeming substance,
Or all of it with our displeasure piec'd,
And nothing more may sely like your Grace,
Shee's there, and she is yours.

Bur. I know no answer.

Lear. Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Vnsfriended, new adopted to our hate,
Dow'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her or, leaue her.

Bur. Par-

Bur. Pardon me Royall Sir,
Election makes not vp in such conditions.
Le. Then leaue her sir, for by the powre that made me,
I tell you all her wealth For you great King,
I would not from your loue make such a fray,
To match you where I hate, therefore beseech you
T'auert your liking a more worthier way,
Then on a wretch whom Nature is asham'd
Almost t'acknowledge hers.

Fra. This is most strange,
That she whom euen but now, was your object,
The argument of your praise, balme of your age,
The best, the dearest, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle
So many folds of fauour sure her offence
Must be of such vnaturall degree,
That monsters it. Or your fore-voucht affection
Fall into taint, which to beleue of her
Must be a faith that reason without miracle
Should neuer plant in me.

Cor. I yet beseech your Maiesty.
If for I want that glib and oylie Art,
To speake and purpose not, since what I will intend,
He do't before I speake, that you make knowne
It is no vicious blot, murther, or foulness,
No vnchaste action or dishonoured step
That hath depriv'd me of your Grace and fauour,
But euen for want of that, for which I am richer,
A still solliciting eye, and such a tongue,
That I am glad I haue not, though not to haue it,
Hath lost me in your liking.

Lear. Better thou had'st
Not bene borne, then not to haue pleas'd me better.

Fra. Is it but this? A tardinesse in nature,
Which often leaues the history vnspoke
That it intends to do. my Lord of Burgundy,
What say you to the Lady? Loue's not loue
When it is mingled with regards, that stands
Aloofe from th'intire point, will you haue her?
She is herselfe a Dowrie.

Bur. Royall King,
Guee but that portion which your selfe propos'd,
And here I take Cordelia by the hand,
Duchesse of Burgundie.

Lear. Nothing, I haue sworne, I am firme.

Bur. I am sorry then you haue so lost a Father,
That you must loose a husband.

Cor. Peace be with Burgundie,
Since that respect and Fortunes are his loue,
I shall not be his wife.

Fra. Fairest Cordelia, that art most rich being poore,
Most choise forsaken, and most lou'd despis'd,
Thee and thy vertues here I seize vpon,
Be it lawfull I take vp what's cast away.
Gods, Gods! 'Tis strange, that from their cold'st neglect
My Loue should kindle to enflam'd respect.
Thy downerselfe Daughter King, throwne to my chance,
Is Queene of vs, of ours, and our faire France.
Not all the Dukes of watrish Burgundy,
Can buy this vnpriz'd precious Maid of me.
Bid them farewell Cordelia, though vnkinde,
Thou loofest here a better where to finde.

Lear. Thou hast her France, lecher be thine, for we Haue no such Daughter, nor shall euer see
That face of hers againe, therfote be gone,
Without our Grace, our Loue, our Benizon:

Come Noble Burgundie, Flourish. Exeunt.

Fra. Bid farewell to your Sisters.

Cor. The Iewels of our Father, with wash'd eie s
Cordelia leaues you, I know you what you are,
And like a Sister am most loth to call
Your faults as they are nam'd. Loue well our Father:
To your professed bosomes I commit him,
But yet alas, stood I within his Grace,
I would prefer him to a better place,
So farewell to you both

Regn. Prescribe not vs our dute.

Gon. Let your study
Be to content your Lord, who hath receiu'd you
At Fortunes almes, you haue obedience scant'd,
And well are worth the want that you haue wanted.

Cor. Time shall vnfold what plighted cunning hides,
Who couers faults, at last with shame derides.
Well may you prosper.

Fra. Come my faire Cordelia Exit France and Cor.

Gon. Sister, it is not little I haue to say,
Of what most neerely appertaines to vs both,
I thinke our Father will hence to night. (with vs

Reg. That's most certaine, and with you next moneth

Gon. You see how full of changes his age is, the ob-scurtion we haue made of it hath benee little, he alwaies lou'd our Sister most, and with what poore iudgement he hath now cast her off, appeares too grossely.

Reg. 'Tis the infirmity of his age, yet he hath euer but slenderly knowne himselfe.

Gon. The best and soundest of his time hath bin burrath, then must we looke from his age, to receiue not alone the imperfections of long ingrafted condition, but therewithall the vtuly way-wardnesse, that infirme and cholericke yeares bring with them.

Reg. Such vnconstant starts are we like to haue from him, as this of Kerts banishment.

Gon. There is further complement of leaue-taking be-twene France and him, pray you let vs sit together, if our Father carry authority with such disposition as he beares, this last surrender of his will but offend vs.

Reg. We shall further thinke of it.

Gon. We must do something, and i'th' heate. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Bastard.

Bast. Thou Nature art my Goddesse, to thy Law
My seruices are bound, wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custome, and permit
The curiositie of Nations, to deprime me?
For that I am some twelue, or fourteene Moonshines
Lag of a Brother? Why Bastard? Wherefore base?
When my Dimensions are as well compact,
My minde as generous, and my shape as true
As honest Madams issue? Why brand they vs
With Base? With basenes Bastardie? Base, Base?
Who in the lustie stealth of Nature, take
More composition, and fierce qualitie,
Then doth within a dull stale tyred bed
Goe to th'creating a whole tribe of Fops
Gor'tweene a sleepe, and wake? Well then,
Legitimate Edgar, I must haue your land,
Our Fathers loue, is to the Bastard Edmond,
As to th'legitimate: fine word. Legitimate.

q q 3

Well

Well, my Legitimate, if this Letter speed,
And my inuention thrue, Edmond the bafe
Shall to'th' Legitimate: I grow, I prosper:
Now Gods, stand vp for Bastards.

Enter Gloucester

Glo Kent banish'd thus? and France in choller parted?
And the King gone to night? Prescrib'd his powre, Confin'd to exhibition? All this done

Vpon the gad? Edmond, how now? What newes?

Bast. So please your Lordship, none.

Glo. Why so earnestly seeke you to put vp y<sup>e</sup> Letter?

Bast. I know no newes, my Lord.

Glo. What Paper were you reading?

Bast. Nothing my Lord.

Glo. No? what needed then that terrible dispatch of it into your Pocket? The quality of nothing, hath not such neede to hide it selfe. Let's see. come, if it bee nothing, I shall not neede Spectacles

Bast. I beseech you Sir, pardon mee; it is a Letter from my Brother, that I haue not all ore-read; and for so much as I haue perus'd, I finde it not fit for your ore-looking.

Glo. Giue me the Letter, Sir.

Bast. I shall offend, either to detaine, or giue it:
The Contents, as in part I vnderstand them,
Are too blame.

Glo. Let's see, let's see.

Bast. I hope for my Brothers iustification, hee wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my Vertue.

Glo. reads. This policie, and reuerence of Age, makes the world bitter to the best of our times. keeps our Fortunes from us, till our oldnesse cannot relish them. I begin to finde an idle and fond bondage, in the oppression of aged tyranny, who swaies not as it hath power, but as it is suffer'd. Come to me, that of this I may speake more. If our Father would sleepe till I wak'd him, you should enioy halfe his Reuennue for ever, and line the beloued of your Brother. Edgar.

Hum? Conspiracy? Sleepe till I wake him, you should enioy halfe his Reuennue. my Sonne Edgar, had hee a hand to write this? A heart and braine to breede it in?
When came you to this? Who brought it?

Bast. It was not brought mee, my Lord; there's the cunning of it. I found it throwne in at the Casement of my Closset.

Glo. You know the character to be your Brothers?

Bast. If the matter were good my Lord, I durst sweare it were his: but in respect of that, I would faine thinke it were not.

Glo. It is his.

Bast. It is his hand, my Lord: but I hope his heart is not in the Contents.

Glo. Has he neuer before founded you in this busines?

Bast. Neuer my Lord. But I haue heard him oft maintaine it to be fit, that Sonnes at perfect age, and Fathers declin'd, the Father should bee as Ward to the Son, and the Sonne manage his Reuennue.

Glo. O Villain, villain. his very opinion in the Letter. Abhorred Villaine, vnnaturall, detested, brutish Villaine; worse then brutish. Go sirrah, seeke him. Ile apprehend him. Abhominable Villaine, where is he?

Bast. I do not well know my L. If it shall please you to suspend your indignation against my Brother, till you can deriue from him better testimony of his intent, you should run a certaine course: where, if you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your owne Honor, and shake in peeces, the heart of his obedience. I dare pawne downe my life for him, that he hath writ this to feele my affection to your Honor, & to no other pience of danger.

Glo. Thinke you so?

Bast. If your Honor iudge it meete, I will place you where you shall heare vs conferre of this, and by an Auditural assurance haue your satisfaction, and that without any further delay, then this very Euening.

Glo. He cannot bee such a Monster. Edmond seeke him out. windeme into him, I pray you frame the Businesse after your owne wisdom, I would vnstate my selfe, to be in a due resolution.

Bast. I will seeke him Sir, presently: conuey the businesse as I shall finde meanes, and acquaint you withall.

Glo. These late Eclipses in the Sun and Moone portend no good to vs. though the wisdom of Nature can reason it thus, and thus, yet Nature findes it selfe seour'd by the sequent effects. Loue cooles, friendship falls off, Brothers diuide. In Cities, mutinies; in Countries, discord; in Pallaces, Treason; and the Bond crack'd, 'twixt Sonne and Father. This villaine of mine comes vnder the prediction; there's Son against Father, the King falls from byas of Nature, there's Father against Childe. We haue scene the best of our time. Machinations, hollownesse, treacherie, and all ruinous disorders follow vs disquietly to our Graves. Find out this Villain Edmond, it shall lose thee nothing, do it carefully: and the Noble & true-harted Kent banish'd; his offence, honesty. 'Tis strange. Exit

Bast. This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sicke in fortune, often the sufferers of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our disasters, the Sun, the Moone, and Starres, as if we were villaines on necessity, Fooles by heauenly compulsion, Knaues, Theeues, and Treachers by Sphericall predominance. Drunkards, Ly-ars, and Adulterers by an infore'd obedience of Planetary influence; and all that we are euill in, by a diuine thrusting on. An admirable euasion of. Whore-matter-man, to lay his Goatish disposition on the charge of a Starre,
My father compounded with my mother vnder the Dragons taile, and my Natiuitie was vnder Vrsa Maior, so that it followes, I am rough and Leacherous. I should haue bin that I am, had the maidenliest Starre in the Fir-mament twinkled on my bastardizing

Enter Edgar.

Pat. he comes like the Catastrophe of the old Comedie my Cue is villanous Melancholly, with a sigh like Tom o'Bedlam — O these Eclipses do portend these diuisions Fa, Sol, La, Me.

Edg. How now Brother Edmond, what serious contemplation are you in?

Bast. I am thinking Brother of a prediction I read this other day, what should follow these Eclipses.

Edg. Do you busie your selfe with that?

Bast. I promise you, the effects he writes of, succcede vnhappily.

When saw you my Father last?

Edg. The night gone by.

Bast. Spake you with him?

Edg. I, two houres together.

Bast. Parted you in good termes? Found you no displeasure in him, by word, nor countenance?

Edg. None at all,

Bast. Bethinke your selfe wherein you may haue offended him: and at my entreaty forbear his preience, vntill
some little time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure, which at this instant so rageth in him, that with the mischief

chiefe of your person, it would scarcely alay.

Edg. Some Villaine hath done me wrong.

Edm. That's my feare, I pray you haue a continent forbearance till the speed of his rage goes slower: and as I say, retire with me to my lodging, from whence I will fildy bring you to heare my Lord speake: pray ye goe, there's my key: if you do stirre abroad, goe arm'd.

Edg. Arm'd, Brother?

Edm. Brother, I aduise you to the best, I am no honest man, if ther be any good meaning toward you I haue told you what I haue seene, and heard But faintly. Nothing like the image, and horror of it, pray you away.

Edg. Shall I heare from you anon? Exit.

Edm. I do serue you in this businesse:
A Credulous Father, and a Brother Noble,
Whose nature is so farre from doing harmes,
That he suspects none: on whose foolish honesty
My practises ride easie I see the businesse.
Let me, if not by birth, haue lands by wit,
All with me's meere, that I can fashion fit Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gonerill, and Steward.

Gon. Did my Father strike my Gentleman for chiding of his Foole?

Ste. I Madam.

Gon. By day and night, he wrongs me, euery howre He flashes into one grosse crime, or other, That sets vs all at odds. Ile not endure it; His Knights grow riotous, and himselfe vpbraides vs On euery trifle. When he retournes from hunting, I will not speake with him, say I am sicke, If you come slacke of former seruices, You shall do well, the fault of it Ile answer.

Ste. He's comming Madam, I heare him

Gon. Put on what weary negligence you please, You and your Fellowes I'de haue it come to question; If he distaste it, let him to my Sister, Whose mind and mine I know in that are one, Remember what I haue said.

Ste. Well Madam.

Gon. And let his Knights haue colder looks among you: what growes of it no matter, aduise your fellowes so, Ile write straight to my Sister to hold my course; prepare for dinner. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Kent.

Kent. If but as will I other accents borrow,
That can my speech defuse, my good intent
May carry through itselfe to that full issue
For which I raiz'd my likeness. Now banish't Kent,
If thou canst serue where thou dost stand condemn'd,
So may it come, thy Master whom thou lou'st,
Shall find thee full of labours.

Hornes within. Enter Lear and Attendants.

Lear. Let me not stay a rot for dinner, go get it ready: how now, what art thou?

Kent. A man Sir.

Lear. What dost thou professe? What would'st thou with vs?

Kent. I do professe to be no lesse then I seeme; to serue him truly that will put me in trust, to loue him that is honest, to conuerse with him that is wise and saies little, to feare iudgement, to fight when I cannot chooise, and to eate no fish.

Lear. What art thou?

Kent. A very honest hearted Fellow, and as poore as the King.

Lear. If thou be'st as poore for a subiect, as hee's for a King, thou art poore enough. What wouldst thou?

Kent. Seruice.

Lear. Who wouldst thou serue?

Kent. You.

Lear. Do'st thou know me fellow?

Kent. No Sir, but you haue that in your countenance, which I would faine call Master.

Lear. What's that?

Kent. Authority

Lear. What seruices canst thou do?

Kent. I can keepe honest counsaile, ride, run, marre a curious tale in telling it, and deliuer a plaine message bluntly: that which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in, and the best of me, is Diligence.

Lear. How old art thou?

Kent. Not so young Sir to loue a woman for singing, nor so old to dote on her for any thing. I haue yeares on my backe forty eight.

Lear. Follow me, thou shalt serue me, if I like thee no worfe after dinner, I will not part from thee yet. Dinner ho, dinre: where's my knaue? my Foole? Go you and call my Foole hither You you Sirrah, where's my Daughter?

Enter Steward

Ste. So please you Exit.

Lear. What saies the Fellow there? Call the Clotpole backe. where's my Foole? Ho, I thinke the world's asleepe, how now? Where's that Mungrell?

Knigh. He saies my Lord, your Daughters is not well.

Lear. Why came not the slaue backe to me when I call'd him?

Knigh. Sir, he answered me in the roundest manner, he would not

Lear. He would not?

Knigh. My Lord, I know not what the matter is, but to my iudgement your Highnesse is not entertain'd with that Ceremonious affection as you were wont, theres a great abatement of kindnesse appears as well in the generall dependants, as in the Duke himselfe also, and your Daughter.

Lear. Ha? Saist thou so?

Knigh. I beseech you pardon me my Lord, if I bee mistaken, for my duty cannot be silent, when I thinke your Highnesse wrong'd.

Lear. Thou but remembrest me of mine owne Conception, I haue receiued a most faint neglect of late, which I haue rather blamed as mine owne iealous curiostie, then as a very pretence and purpose of vnkindnesse, I will looke further intoo't: but where's my Foole? I haue not seene him this two daies

Knigh. Since my young Ladies going into France Sir,

Sir, the Foole hath much pined away.

Lear. No more of that, I haue noted it well, goe you and tell my Daughter, I would speake with her. Goe you call hither my Foole, Oh you Sir, you, come you hither Sir, who am I Sir?

Enter Steward.

Ste. My Ladies Father.

Lear. My Ladies Father? my Lords knaue, you whorson dog, you slaue, you curre.

Ste. I am none of these my Lord, I beleeue your pardon.

Lear. Do you bandy lookes with me, you Rascall?

Ste. Ile not be stricken my Lord,

Kent. Nor tript neither, you bate Foot-ball plaier.

Lear. I thanke thee fellow

Thou seru'st me, and Ile loue thee.

Kent. Come sir, arise, away, Ile teach you differences: away, away, if you will measure your lubbers length againe, tarry, but away, goe too, haue you wisdome, so

Lear. Now my friendly knaue I thanke thee, there's earnest of thy seruice.

Enter Foole.

Foole. Let me hire him too, here's my Coxcombe.

Lear. How now my pretty knaue, how dost thou?

Foole. Sirrah, you were best take my Coxcombe.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. Why? for taking ones part that's out of fauour, nay, & thou canst not smile as the wind sits, thou'lt catch colde shortly, there take my Coxcombes; why this fellow ha's banish'd two on's Daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will, if thou follow him, thou must needs weare my Coxcombe. How now Nunckle? would I had two Coxcombes and two Daughters.

Lear. Why my Boy?

Foole. If I gaue them all my liuing, I'd keepe my Coxcombes my selfe, there's mine, beg another of thy Daughters.

Lear. Take heed Sirrah, the whip.

Foole. Truth's a dog must to kennell, hee must bee whipt out, when the Lady Brach may stand by th' fire and stinke.

Lear. A pestilent gall to me

Foole. Sirra, Ile teach thee a speache.

Lear. Do.

Foole. Marke it Nuncle;

Haue more then thou shouest,
Speake lesse then thou knowest,
Lend lesse then thou owest,
Ride more then thou goest,
Learne more then thou trowest,
Set lesse then thou throwest;
Leaue thy drinke and thy whore,
And keepe in a dore,
And thou shalt haue more,
Then two tens to a score.

Kent. This is nothing Foole.

Foole. Then 'tis like the breath of an vnfeed Lawyer, you gaue me nothing for't, can you make no vse of nothing Nuncle?

Lear. Why no Boy,

Nothing can be made out of nothing.

Foole. Prythee tell him, so much the rent of his land comes to, he will not beleeue a Foole.

Lear. A hister Foole.

Foole. Do'st thou know the difference my Boy, betweene a bitter Foole, and a sweet one.

Lear. No Lad, teach me.

Foole. Nunckle, giue me an egge, and Ile giue thee two Crownes.

Lear. What two Crownes shall they be?

Foole. Why after I haue cut the egge i'th' middle and eate vp the meate, the two Crownes of the egge: when thou clouest thy Crownes i'th' middle, and gau'st away both parts, thou boar'st thine Affe on thy backe o're the durt, thou had'st little wit in thy bald crowne, when thou gau'st thy golden one away; if I speake like my selfe in this, let him be whipt that first findes it so. Fooles had nere lesse grace in a yeere, For wisemen are growne foppish, And know not how their wits to weare, Their manners are so apish.

Le. When were you wont to be so full of Songs sirrah?

Foole. I haue vsed it Nunckle, ere since thou mad'st thy Daughters thy Mothers for when thou gau'st them the rod, and put'st downe thine owne breeches, then they For sodaine ioy did weepe,

And I for sorrow sung,

That such a King shoul'd play bo-peepe,

And got the Foole among.

Pry'thy Nunckle keepe a Schoolemaster that can teach thy Foole to lie, I would faine learne to lie.

Lear. And you lie sirrah, we'll haue you whipt.

Foole. I maruell what kin thou and thy daughters are, they haue me whipt for speaking true: thou'lt haue me whipt for lying, and sometimes I am whipt for holding my peace. I had rather be any kind o'thing then a foole, and yet I would not be thee Nunckle, thou hast pared thy wit o'both sides, and left nothing i'th' middle; heere comes one o'the parings.

Enter Generall.

Lear. How now Daughter? what makes that Frontlet on? You are too much of late i'th' frowne.

Foole. Thou wast a pretty fellow when thou had'st no need to care for her frowning, now thou art an Owl without a figure, I am better then thou art now, I am a Foole, thou art nothing. Yes forsooth I will hold my tongue, so your face bids me, though you say nothing. Mum, mum, he that keepees nor crust, nor crum, Weary of all, shall want some. That's a sheal'd Pefcod.

Gen. Not only Sir this, your all-lycenc'd Foole, But other of your insolent retinue Do hourlye Carpe and Quarrell, breaking forth In ranke, and (not to be endur'd) riots Sir. I had thought by making this well knowne vnto you, To haue found a safe redresse, but now grow fearefull By what your selfe too late haue spoke and done, That you protest this course, and put it on By your allowance, which if you should, the fault Would not scape censure, nor the redresses sleepe, Which in the tender of a wholesome weale, Might in their working do you that offence, Which else were shame, that then necessitie Will call discret proceeding.

Foole. For you know Nunckle, the Hedge-Sparrow fed the Cuckoo so long, that it had it head bit off by it young, so out went the Candle, and we were left darkling.

Lear. Are you our Daughter?

Gen. I would you would make vse of your good wife. (Whereof I know you are fraught) and put away These dispositions, which of late transport you From what you rightly are.

Foole. M y

Foole. May not an Ass know, when the Cart drawes the Horse?

Whoop Iugge I loue thee.

Lear. Do's any heere know me?

This is not Lear.

Do's Lear walke thus? Speake thus? Where are his eyes?

Either his Nonion weakens, his Discernings Are Lethargied. Ha! Waking? 'Tis not so?

Who is it that can tell me who I am?

Foole. *Lear*s shadow.

Lear. Your name, faire Gentlewoman?

Gen. This admiration Sir, is much o'th' fauour Of other your new pranks. I do beseech you

To vnderstand my purposes aright:

As you are Old, and Reuerend, should be Wise.

Heere do you keepe a hundred Knights and Squires,

Men so disorder'd, so debosh'd, and bold,

That this our Court infected with their manners,

Shewes like a riotous Inne; Epicurisme and Lust

Makes it more like a Tauerne, or a Brothell,

Then a grac'd Pallace. The shame it selfe doth speake For instant remedy. Be then desir'd

By her, that else will take the thing she begger,

A little to disquantity your Traine,

And the remaunders that shall still depend,

To be such men as may befor your Age, Which know themselves, and you.

Lear. Darknesse, and Diuels,

Saddle my horses: call my Traine together.

Degenerate Bastard, Ile not trouble thee;

Yet haue I left a daughter.

Gen. You strike my people, and your disorder'd rable, make Seruants of their Betters.

Enter Albany.

Lear. Woe, that too late repents:

Is it your will, speake Sir? Prepare my Horses.

Ingratitude! thou Marble-hearted Friend,

More hideous when thou shew'st thee in a Child,

Then the Sea-monster.

Alb. Pray Sir be patient

Lear. Detested Kite, thou lyest

My Traine are men of choice, and rarest parts,

That all particulars of dutie know,

And in the most exact regard, support

The worship of their name. O most small fault,

How vgly did'st thou in Cordelia shew?

Which like an Engine, wrencht my frame of Nature

From the fixt place drew from my heart all loue,

And added to the gall. O Lear, Lear, Lear!

Beate at this gate that let thy Folly in,

And thy deere Iudgement out. Go, go, my people.

Alb. My Lord, I am guiltlesse, as I am ignorant Of what hath moued you.

Lear. It may be so, my Lord

Heare Nature, heare deere Goddesse, heare:

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend

To make this Creature fruitfull.

Into her Wombe conuey sterility,

Drie vp in her the Organs of increase,

And from her derogate body, neuer spring

A Babe to honor her. If she must reeme,

Create her childe of Spleene, that it may liue

And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.

Let it stampe wrinkles in her brow of youth,

With cadent Teares fret Channels in her cheekes,

Turne all her Mothers paines, and benefits To laughter, and contempt: That she may feele, How sharper then a Serpents tooth it is, To haue a thanklesse Child. Away, away.

Exit.

Alb. Now Gods that we adore,

Whereof comes this?

Gen. Neuer afflic't your selfe to know more of it:

But let his disposition haue that scope

As dotage giues it.

Enter Lear.

Lear. What tittle of my Followers at a clap? Within a fortnight?

Alb. What's the matter, Sir?

Lear. Ile tell thee:

Life and death, I am asham'd

That thou hast power to shake my manhood thus,

That these hot teares, which breake from me perforce Should make thee worth them.

Blastes and Fogges vpon thee:

Th'vntented woundings of a Fathers curse

Pierce euerie sense about thee. Old fond eyes,

Beweepe this cause againe, Ile plucke ye out,

And cast you with the waters that you loose

To temper Clay. Ha? Let it be so.

I haue another daughter,

Who I am sure is kinde and comfortable:

When she shall heare this of thee, with her nailes

Shee'll scratch thy Wolu sh visage. Thou shalt finde,

That Ile resume the shape which thou dost thinke I haue cast off for euer.

Exit.

Gen. Do you marke that?

Alb. I cannot be so partiall Generall,

To the great loue I beare you

Gen. Pray you content. What Oswald, ha?

You Sir, more Knaue then Foole, after your Master.

Foole. Nunkle Lear, Nunkle Lear,

Tarry, take the Foole with thee:

A Fox, when one has caught her,

And such a Daughter,

Should sure to the Slaughter,

If my Cap would buy a Halter,

So the Foole followes after

Exit.

Gen. This man hath had good Counsell,

A hundred Knights?

'Tis politike, and safe to let him keepe

Arpoint a hundred Knights. yes, that on euerie dreame,

Each buz, each fancie, each complaint, dislike,

He may enguard his dotage with their powres,

And ho'd our hues in mercy. Oswald, I say.

Alb. Well you may feare too farre.

Gen. Safer then trust too farre;

Let me still take away the harmes I feare,

Not feare still to be taken. I know his heart,

What he hath vtter'd I haue writ my Sister:

If she sustaine him, and his hundred Knights

When I haue shew'd th'vnfaylesse.

Enter Steward.

How now Oswald?

What haue you writ that Letter to my Sister?

Stew. I Madam,

Gen. Take you some company, and away to horse,

Informe her full of my particular feare,

And thereto adde such reasons of your owne,

As may compact it more. Get you gone,

And

And hasten your returne; no, no, my Lord,
This milky gentlenesse, and course of yours
Though I condemne not, yet vnder pardon
Your are much more at task for want of wisdome,
Then prais'd for harmefull mildnesse.

Alb. How farre your cyes may pierce I cannot tell;
Striving to better, oft we marre what's well.

Gen. Nay then ———

Alb. Well, well, the'uent.

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Lear, Kent, Gentleman, and Foole.

Lear. Go you before to Gloster with these Letters;
acquaint my Daughter no further with any thing you know, then comes from her demand out of the Letter, if your Diligence be not speedy, I shall be there afore
you.

Kent. I will not sleepe my Lord, till I haue deliuered your Letter. Exit.

Foole. If a mans braines were in's heeles, wert not in danger of kybes?

Lear. I Boy.

Foole. Then I prythee be merry, thy wit shall not go slip-shod.

Lear. Ha, ha, ha.

Foole. Shalt see thy other Daughter will vse thee kindly, for though she's as like this, as a Crabbe's like an Apple, yet I can tell what I can tell.

Lear. What can't tell Boy?

Foole. She will taste as like this as, a Crabbe do's to a Crab; thou canst tell why ones nose stands i'th' middle on's face?

Lear. No.

Foole. Why to keepe ones eyes of either side's nose that what a man cannot smell out, he may spy into.

Lear. I did her wrong.

Foole. Can't tell how an Oyster makes his shell?

Lear. No.

Foole. Nor I neither; but I can tell why a Snail ha's a house.

Lear. Why?

Foole. Why to put's head in, not to giue it away to his daughters, and leaue his hornes without a case.

Lear. I will forget my Nature, so kind a Father? Be my Horses ready?

Foole. Thy Asses are gone about 'em; the reason why the seuen Starres are no mo then seuen, is a pretty reason.

Lear. Because they are not eight.

Foole. Yes indeed, thou would'st make a good Foole.

Lear. To tak't againe perforce; Monster Ingratitude!

Foole. If thou wert my Foole Nuncle, I'd haue thee beaten for being old before thy time.

Lear. How's that?

Foole. Thou shouldst not haue bin old, till thou hadst bin wife.

Lear. O let me not be mad, not mad sweet Heauen; keepe me in temper, I would not be mad. How now are the Horses ready?

Gen. Ready my Lord.

Lear. Come Boy.

Fool. She that's a Maid now, & laughs at my departure,
Shall not be a Maid long, vnlesse things be cut shorter.

Exeunt.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Bastard, and Curan, generally.

Bast. Saue thee Curan.

Cur. And your Sir, I haue bin
With your Father, and giuen him notice
That the Duke of Cornwall, and Regan his Duchesse
Will be here with him this night.

Bast. How comes that?

Cur. Nay I know not, you haue heard of the newes abroad, I meane the whisper'd ones, for they are yet but e'r kissing arguments.

Bast. Not; pray you what are they?

Cur. Haue you heard of no likely Warres toward,
'Twixt the Dukes of Cornwall, and Albany?

Bast. Not a word.

Cur. You may do then in time,

Fare you well Sir.

Exit.

Bast. The Duke be here to night? The better best,
This weaues it selfe perforce into my businesse,
My Father hath ser guard to take my Brother,
And I haue one thing of a queazie question
Which I must ask, Briefenesse, and Fortune worke.

Enter Edgar

Brother, a word, discend; Brother I say,
My Father watches O Sir, fly this place,
Intelligence is giuen where you are hid,
You haue now the good advantage of the night,
Haue you not spoken 'gainst the Duke of Cornwall?
Hee's comming hither, now i'th' night, i'th' haste,
And Regan with him, haue you nothing said
Vpon his partie 'gainst the Duke of Albany?
Adiure your selfe.

Edg. I am ture on't, not a word.

Bast. I heare my Father comming, pardon me;
In cunnring, I must draw my Sword vpon you.
Draw, secme so defend your selfe,
Now quit you well.

Yeeld, come before my Father, light hoo, here,
Fly Brother, Torches, Torches, so farewell.

Exit Edgar.

Some blood drawne on me, would beget opinion
Of my more fierce enneaouour. I haue scene drunkards
Do more then this in sport; Father, Father,
Stop, stop, no helpe?

Enter Gloster, and Seruants with Torches.

Glo. Now Edmund, where's the villaine?

Bast. Here stood he in the dark, his sharpe Sword out,
Mumbling of wicked charmes, coniuring the Moone
To stand auspicious Mistis.

Glo. But where is he?

Bast. Looke Sir, I bleed.

Glo. Where is the villaine, Edmund?

Bast. Fled this way Sir, when by no meanes he could.

Glo. Pursue him, ho go after. By no meanes, what?

Bast. Perswade me to the murder of your Lordship,

But

But that I told him the reuenging Gods,
Gainst Parricides did all the thunder bend,
Spoke with how manifold, and strong a Bond
The Child was bound to th' Father; Sir in fine,
Seeing how lothly opposite I stood
To his vnnaturall purpose, in fell motion
With his prepared Sword, he charges home
My vnprovidd body, latch'd mine armes;
And when he saw my best alarm'd spirits
Bold in the quarrels right, rous'd to th' encounter,
Or whether gasted by the noyse I made,
Full sodainely he fled.

Glo. Let him fly farre.

Nor in this Land shall he remaine vncought
And found; dispatch, the Noble Duke my Master,
My worthy Arch and Patron comes to night,
By his authoritie I will proclaim it,
That he which finds him shall deserue our thanks,
Bringing the murderous Coward to the stake:
He that conceales him death.

Bas. When I dissuaded him from his intent,
And found him pight to doe it, with curst speech
I threaten'd to discouer him, he replied,
Thou vnpossessing Bastard, dost thou thinke,
If I would stand against thee, would the repofall
Of any trust, vertue, or worth in thee
Make thy words faith'd? No, what should I denie,
(As this I would, though thou didst produce
My very Character) I'd turne it all
To thy suggestion, plot, and damned practise:
And thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potentiall spirits
To make thee seeke it.

Tucket within.

Glo. O strange and fastned Villaine,
Would he deny his Letter, said he?
Harke, the Dukes Trumpets, I know not wher he comes,
All Ports Ile barre, the villaine shall not scape,
The Duke must grant me that. besides, his picture
I will send farre and neere, that all the kingdome
May haue due note of him, and of my land,
(Loyall and naturall Boy) Ile worke the meanes
To make thee capable.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, and Attendants.

Corn. How now my Noble friend, since I came hither
(Which I can call but now,) I haue heard strangenesse.

Reg. If it be true, all vengeance comes too short
Which can pursue th' offender, how dost my Lord?

Glo. O Madam, my old heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.

Reg. What, did my Fathers Godsonne seeke your life?
He whom my Father nam'd, your Edgar?

Glo. O Lady, shame would haue it hid.

Reg. Was he not companion with the riotous Knights
That tended vpon my Father?

Glo. I know not Madam, 'tis too bad, too bad.

Bas. Yes Madam, he was of that comfort.

Reg. No maruaile then, though he were ill affected,
'Tis they haue put him on the old mans death,
To haue th' expence and wast of his Reuenues.
I haue this present euening from my Sister
Beene well inform'd of them, and with such cautions,
That if they come to sojourn at my house,
Ile not be there.

Cor. Nor I, assure thee Regan;

Edmund, I heare that you haue shewne your Father
A Child-like Office.

Bas. It was my duty Sir.

Glo. He did bewray his practise, and receiu'd
Th's hurt you see, struing to apprehend him.

Cor. Is he pursued?

Glo. I my good Lord.

Cor. If he be taken, he shall neuer more
Be fear'd of doing harme, make your owne purpose,
How in my strength you please for you Edmund,
Whose vertue and obedience doth this instant
So much commend it selfe, you shall be ours,
Nature's of such deepe trust, we shall much need:
You we first seize on.

Bas. I shall serue you Sir truly, how euer else.

Glo. For him I thanke your Grace.

Cor. You know not why we came to visit you?

Reg. Thus out of season, thredding darke ey'd night,
Occasions Noble Gloster of some prize,
Wherein we must haue vse of your aduse.
Our Father he hath writ, so hath our Sister,
Of differences, which I best though it fit
To answere from our home - the severall Messengers
From hence attend dispatch, our good old Friend,
Lay comforts to your bosome, and bestow
Your needfull counsaile to our businesses,
Which craves the instant vse.

Glo. I serue you Madam,
Your Graces are right welcome.

Exeunt. Flourish.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Kent, and Steward severally.

Stew. Good dawning to thee Friend, art of this house?

Kent. I.

Stew. Where may we set our horses?

Kent. I'th myre

Stew. Prythee if thou lou'st me, tell me,

Kent. I loue thee not

Ste. Why then I care not for thee.

Kent. If I had thee in Lapdibury Pinfold, I would make thee care for me.

Ste. Why do'st thou vse me thus? I know thee not.

Kent. Fellow I know thee.

Ste. Wha. do'st thou know me for?

Kent. A Knaue, a Rascall, an eater of broken meates, a base, proud, shallow, beggerly, three-suited-hundred pound, filthy whoosted-stocking knaue, a Lilly-liuered, action-taking, whoreson glasse-gazing super-seruiceable finicall Rogue, one Trunke-inheriting slave, one that would'st be a Baud in way of good seruice, and art nothing but the composition of a Knaue, Begger, Coward, Pandar, and the Sonne and Heire of a Mungrell Bitch,
one whom I will beate into clamours whining, if thou deny'st the least fil'able of thy addition.

Stew. Why, what a monstrous Fellow art thou, thus to raile on one, that is neither knowne of thee, nor knowes thee?

Kent. What a brazen-fac'd Varlet art thou, to deny thou knowest me? Is it two dayes since I tript vp thy heelles, and beate thee before the King? Draw you rogue,
for

for though it be night, yet the Moone shines, Ile make a sop oth' Moonshine of you, you whoreson Cullyeny
Barber-monger, draw.

Stew. Away, I haue nothing to do with thee.

Kent. Draw you Rascall, you come with Letters against the King, and take Vanitie the puppets parr, against the Royaltie of her Father: draw you Rogue, or Ile so carbonado your shanks, draw you Rascall, come your waies.

Ste. Helpe, ho, murther, helpe.

Kent. Strike you slaue. stand rogue, stand you neat slaue, strike.

Stew. Helpe ho, murther, murther.

Enter Bastard, Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Sernars.

Bast. How now, what's the matter? Part.

Kent. With you Goodman Boy, if you please, come,
Ile flesh ye, come on yong Master.

Glo. Weapons? Armes? what's the matter here?

Cor. Keepe peace vpon your lues, he dies that strikes again, what is the matter?

Reg. The Messengers from our Sister, and the King?

Cor. What is your difference, speake?

Stew. I am scarce in breath my Lord.

Kent. No Maruell, you haue so bestir'd your valour, you cowardly Rascall, nature disclaimes in thee a Taylor made thee.

Cor. Thou art a strange fellow, a Taylor make a man?

Kent. A Taylor Sir, a Stone-cutter, or a Painter, could not haue made him so ill, though they had bin but two yeares oth' trade.

Cor. Speake yet, how grew your quarrell?

Ste. This ancient Ruffian Sir, whose life I haue spar'd at sure of his gray-beard.

Kent. Thou whoreson Zed, thou vnecessary letter, my Lord, if you will giue me leaue, I will tread this vnboulded villaine into mortar, and daube the wall of a Iakes with him. Spare my gray-beard, you wagtaile?

Cor. Peace sirrah,
You beasly knaue, know you no reuerence?

Kent. Yes Sir, but anger hath a priuiledge.

Cor. Why art thou angrie?

Kent. That such a slaue as this should weare a Sword,
Who weares no honesty such smiling rogues as these,
Like Rats oft bite the holy cords a twaine,
Which are t' intrince, t' vnloose: smooth euery passion
That in the natures of their Lords rebell,
Being oile to fire, snow to the colder moodes,
Reuenge, affirme, and turne their Ha'cion beakes
With euery gall, and vary of their Masters,
Knowing naught (like dogges) but following:
A plague vpon your Epilepticke visage,
Smoile you my speeches, as I were a Foole?
Goose, if I had you vpon Iarm Plaine,
I'd driue ye cackling home to Camelot.

Cor. What art thou mad old Fellow?

Glo. How fell you out, say that?

Kent. No contraries hold more antipathy,
Then I, and such a knaue.

Cor. Why do'st thou call him Knaue?
What is his fault?

Kent. His countenance likes me not.

Cor. No more perchance do's mine, nor his, nor hers.

Kent. Sir, 'tis my occupation to be plaine,
I haue seene better faces in my time,

Then stands on any shoulder that I see
Before me, at this instant.

Cor. This is some Fellow,

Who hauing beene prais'd for bluntnesse, doth affect
A saucy roughnes, and constraines the garb
Quite from his Nature. He cannot flatter he,
An honest mind and plaine, he must speake truth,
And they will take it so, if not, hee's plaine.
These kind of Knaues I know, which in this plainnesse
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Then twenty silly-ducking obseruants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Kent. Sir, in good faith, in sincere verity,
Vnder th' allowance of your great aspect,
Whose influence like the wreath of radiant fire
On flicking Phabus front.

Cor. What mean'st by this?

Kent. To go out of my dialect, which you discom-mend so much; I know Sir, I am no flatterer, he that be-gild you in a plaine accent, was a plaine Knaue, which for my part I will not be, though I should win your displeasure to entreat me too't.

Cor. What was th' offence you gaue him?

Ste. I neuer gaue him any:

It pleas'd the King his Master very late
To strike at me vpon his misconstruction,
When he compact, and flattering his displeasure
Tript me behind being downe, insulted, rail'd,
And put vpon him such a deale of Man,
That worthied him, got praises of the King,
For him attempting, who was selfe-subdued,
And in the sleight of this dead exploit,
Drew on me here againe.

Kent. None of these Rogues, and Cowards
But Alas is there Foole.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stocks?

You stubboine ancient Knaue, you reuerent Bragart,
Wee'l teach you.

Kent. Sir, I am too old to learne:

Call not your Stocks for me, I serue the King.
On whose imployment I was sent to you,
You shall doe small respects, show too bold malice
Against the Grace, and Person of my Master,
Stocking his Messenger.

Cor. Fetch forth the Stock;

As I haue life and Honour, there shall he sit till Noone.

Reg. Till noone? till night my Lord, and all night too.

Kent. Why Madam, if I were your Fathers dog,
You should not vse me so.

Reg. Sir, being his Knaue, I will. Stocks brought out.

Cor. This is a Fellow of the selfe same colour,
Our Sister speakes of. Come, bring away the Stocks.

Glo. Let me beseech your Grace, not to do so,
The King his Master, needs must take it ill
That he so slightly valued in his Messenger,
Should haue him thus restrained.

Cor. Ile answere that

Reg. My Sister may recieue it much more worse,
To haue her Gentleman abus'd, assaulted.

Cor. Come my Lord, away. Exit.

Glo. I am sorry for thee friend, 'tis the Duke pleasure,
Whose disposition all the world well knowes
Will not be rub'd nor stopp'd, Ile entreat for thee.

Kent. Pray do not Sir, I haue watch'd and trauail'd hard,
Some time I shall sleepe out, the rest Ile whistle.

A good mans fortune may grow out at heels

Giue

Give you good morrow.

Glo. The Duke's too blame in this,
'Twill be ill taken.

Kent. Good King, that must approve the common law,
Thou out of Heavens benediction com'st
To the warme Sun.

Approach thou Beacon to this vnder Globe,
That by thy comfortable Beames I may Peruse this Letter. Nothing almost sees miracles
But miserie. I know 'tis from Cordelia,
Who hath most fortunately beene inform'd
Of my obscured course. And shall finde time
From this enormous State, seeking to give Lofset their remedies. All weary and o're-watch'd,
Take vantage heauie eyes, not to behold
This shamefull lodging. Fortune goodnight,
Smile once more, turne thy wheele.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. I heard my selfe proclaim'd,
And by the happy hollow of a Tree,
Escap'd the hunt. No Port is free, no place
That guard, and most vnusall vigilance
Do's not attend my taking. Whiles I may scape
I will preferue my selfe and am berthought
To take the basest, and most poorest shape
That euer penury in contempt of man,
Brought nere to beast; my face Ile grime with filth
Blanket my loines, else all my haire in knots,
And with presented nakednesse out-face
The Windes, and persecutions of the skie;
The Country giues me prooffe, and president
Of Bedlam beggers, who with roaring voices,
Strike in their num'd and mortified Armes.
Pins, Wodden-primmes, Nayles, Sprigs of Rosemarie:
And with this horrible object, from low Farmes,
Poore pelting Villages, Sheeps-Coates, and Milles,
Sometimes with Lunaticke bans, sometime with Prayers
Inforce their charitie: poore Thrysgod poore Tom,
That's something yet: Edgar I nothing am. Exit.

Enter Lear, Foole, and Gentleman.

Lear. 'Tis strange that they should so depart from home,
And not send backe my Messengers.

Gent. As I learn'd,
The night before, there was no purpose in them
Of this remoue.

Kent. Haile to thee Noble Master.

Lear. Ha? Mak'st thou this shame ahy pastime?

Kent. No my Lord,

Foole. Hah, ha, he weares Cruell Garters Horfes are ride by the heads, Dogges and Beares, by th' necke, Monkies by th' loynes, and Men by th' legs: when a man
ouerluste at legs, then he weares wodden nether-stocks.

Lear. What's he,
That hath so much thy place mistooke
To set thee heere?

Kent. It is both he and she,
Your Son and Daughter.

Lear. No.

Kent. Yes.

Lear. No I say.

Kent. I say yea.

Lear. By Impiter I sweare no.

Kent. By Iuno, I sweare I.

Lear. They durst not do't:

They could not, would not do't: 'tis worse then murder,
To do vpon respect such violent outrage:
Resolue me with all modest haste, which way
Thou might'st deserue, or they impose this vsage,
Comming from vs.

Kent. My Lord, when at their home
I did commend your Highnesse Letters to them,
Ere I was risen from the place, that shewed
My dutie kneeling, came there a zeeking Post,
Stew'd in his haste, halfe breathlesse, painting forth
From Goneril this Mistresse, salutations;
Deliu'd Letters spight of intermission,
Which presently they read; on those contents
They summon'd vp their meiney, straight tooke Hoste,
Commanded me to follow, and attend
The leisure of their answer, gaue me cold lookes,
And meeting heere the other Messenger,
Whose welcome I perceiu'd had poison'd mine,
Being the very fellow which of late
Displeid to sawcily against your Highnesse,
Hauing more man then wit about me, drew;
He rais'd the house, with loud and coward cries,
Your Sonne and Daughter found this trespass worth
The shame which heere it suffers. (way)

Foole. Winters not gon yet, if the wil'd Geese fly that Fathers that weare rage, do make their Children blind,
But Fathers that beare bags, shall see their children kind.
Fortune that arrant whore, nere turns the key to the poore.
But for all this thou shalt haue as many Dolours for thy Daughters, as thou canst tell in a yeare.

Lear. Oh how this Mother swels vp toward my heart!
Historica passio, downe thou climbing sorrow,
Thy Elements below where is this Daughter?

Kent. With the Earle Sir, here within.

Lear. Follow me not, stay here. Exit.

Gent. Made you no more offence,

But what you speake of?

Kent. None:

How chance the the King comes with so small a number?

Foole. And thou hadst beene set i'th' Stockes for that question, thou'd'st well deseru'd it.

Kent. Why Foole?

Foole. Wee'l set thee to schoole to an Ant, to teach thee ther's no labouring i'th' winter. All that follow their noses, are led by their eyes, but blinde men, and there's not a nose among twenty, but can smell him that's sinking;
let go thy hold, when a great wheele runs downe a hill, leaſt it breake thy necke with following. But the great one that goes vpward, let him draw thee after:
when a wiseman giues thee better counsell giue me mine
againe, I would haue none but knaues follow it, fince a Foole giues it.

That Sir, which serues and seekes for gaine,
And follo wes but for forme;
Will packe, when it begins to raine;
And leaue thee in the storme.
But I will tarry, the Foole will stay,
And let the wiseman flie:
The knaue turnes Foole that runnes away,
The Foole no knaue perdie.

Enter Lear, and Gloucester.

Kent. Where learn'd you this Foole?

Foole. Not i'th' Stockes Foole!

EE

Lear.

Lear. Deny to speake with me?
They are sicke, they are weary,
They haue traual'd all the night? meere fetches,
The images of reuolt and flying off.
Fetch me a better answer.

Glo. My deere Lord,
You know the fiery quality of the Duke,
How vnremoueable and fixt he is
In his owne course.

Lear. Vengeance, Plague, Death, Confusion :
Fiery? What quality? Why Gloster Gloster,
I'd speake with the Duke of Cornwall, and his wife.

Glo. Well my good Lord, I haue inform'd them so.

Lear. Inform'd them? Do'st thou vnderstand me man.

Glo. I my good Lord.

Lear. The King would speake with Cornwall,
The deere Father
Would with his Daughter speake, commands, tends, ser-
Are they inform'd of this? My breath and blood. (uice, Fiery? The fiery Duke, tell the hot Duke that ———
No, but not yet, may be he is not well,
Infirmity doth still neglect all office,
Whereto our health is bound, we are not our selues,
When Nature being oppress'd, commands the mind
To suffer with the body; Ile forbear,
And am fallen out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit,
For the sound man. Death on my state : wherefore
Should he sit heere? This act perswades me,
That this remotion of the Duke and her
Is practise only. Give me my Seruant forth;
Goe tell the Duke, and's wife, I'd speake with them :
Now, presently : bid them come forth and heare me,
Or at their Chamber doore Ile beate the Drum,
Till it crye sleepe to death.

Glo. I would haue all well berwixt you. Exit.

Lear. Oh me my heart! My rising heart! But downe.

Foole. Cry to it Nunckle, as the Cockney did to the Heles; when she put 'em i'th' Passe aloue, she knapt 'em
o'th' coxcombs with a stick, and cryed downe wantons, downe; 'twas her Brother, that in pure kindnesse to his Horse buttered his Hay.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gloster, Seruants.

Lear. Good morrow to you both.

Corn. Haile to your Grace. Kent here set at liberty.

Reg. I am glad to see your Highnesse.

Lear. Regan, I thinke you are. I know what reason
I haue to thinke so, if thou should'st not be glad,
I would diuorce me from thy Mother Tombe,
Sepulchring an Adulteresse. O are you free?
Some other time for that. Beloued Regan,
Thy Sisters naught : oh Regan, she hath tied
Sharpe-tooth'd vnkindnesse, like a vulture heere,
I can scarce speake to thee, thou'lt not belecue
With how depraud a quality. Oh Regan.

Reg. I pray you Sir, take patience, I haue hope
You lesse know how to value her desert,
Then she to scant her dutie.

Lear. Say? How is that?

Reg. I cannot thinke my Sister in the least
Would faile her Obligation. If Sir perchance
She haue restrained the Riots of your Followres,
'Tis on such ground, and to such wholesome end,
As cleeres her from all blame.

Lear. My curses on her.

Reg. O Sir, you are old,
Nature in you stands on the very Verge
Of his confine : you should be rul'd, and led
By some discretion, that discernes your state
Better then you your selfe : therefore I pray you,
That to our Sister, you do make returne,
Say you haue wrong'd her.

Lear. Aske her forguennesse?

Do you but marke how this becomes the house?
Deere daughter, I confesse that I am old;
Age is vnecessary : on my knees I begge,
That you'l vouchsafe me Rayment, Bed, and Food.

Reg. Good Sir, no more : these are vnshightly trickes : Returne you to my Sister.

Lear. Neuer Regan :

She hath abated me of halfe my Traine;
Look'd blacke vpon me, strooke me with her Tongue
Most Serpent-like, vpon the very Heart.
All, the stor'd Vengeances of Heauen, fall
On her ingratefull top : strike her yong bones
You t' king Ayres, with Lamenesse.

Corn. Fye sir, fie.

Le. You nimble Lightnings, dart your blinding flames
Into her scornfull eyes : Infect her Beauty,
You Fen-suck'd Foggies, drawne by the powfull Sunne,
To fall, and blister.

Reg. O the blest Gods!

So will you wish on me, when the rash moode is on.

Lear. No Regan, thou shalt neuer haue my curse :
Thy tender-hearted Nature shall not giue
Thee o're to harshnesse : Her eyes are fierce, but thine
Do comfort, and not burne. 'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my Traine,
To bandy hasty words, to scant my sizes,
And in conclusion, to oppose the bolt
Against my coming in. Thou better know'st
The Offices of Nature, bond of Childhood,
Effects of Curtesie, dues of Gratitude:
Thy halfe o'th' Kingdome hast thou not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd.

Reg. Good Sir, to'th' purpose. Tucket within.

Lear. Who put my man i'th' Stockes?

Enter Steward!

Corn. What Trumpet's that?

Reg. I know't, my Sisters : this approues her Letter,
That she would soone be heere. Is your Lady come?

Lear. This is a Slaue, whose easie borrowed pride
Dwells in the fickly grace of her he followes.
Out Varlet, from my sight.

Corn. What meanes your Grace?

Enter Gonerill.

Lear. Who stockt my Seruant? Regan, I haue good hope
Thou did'st not know on't.

Who comes here? O Heauens!
If you do loue old men, if your sweet sway
Allow Obedience : if you your selues are old,
Make it your cause. Send downe, and take my part.
Art not asham'd to looke vpon this Beard?

O Regan, will you take her by the hand?

Gon. Why not by'th' hand Sir? How haue I offend'd?
All's not offence that indiscretion findes,
And dotage termes so.

Lear. O sides, you are too tough!
Will you yet hold?

How came my man i'th' Stockes?

Corn. I set him there, Sir : but his owne Disorders
Deseru'd it

Defer'd much leſſe advantage.

Lear. You? Did you?

Reg. I pray you Father being weak, ſeeme ſo.
If till the expiration of your Moneth
You will returne, and ſourne with my Siſter,
Diſmiſſing halfe your traine, come then to me,
I am now from home, and out of that prouiſion
Which ſhall be needfull for your entertainment.

Lear. Returne to her? and fifty men diſmiſs'd?
No, rather I abjure all roofes, and chuſe
To wage againſt the enmy oth'ayre,
To be a Comrade with the Wolfe, and Owle,
Neceſſities ſharpe pinch Returne with her?
Why the hot-blooded France, that downe riſſe tooke
Our yongſt borne, I could as well be brought To knee his Throne, and Squire like penſion beg,
To keepe baſe life a foote, returne with her?
Perſwade me rather to be ſlave and ſun' p'ier
To this deteſted groome.

Gen. At your choice Sir.

Lear. I prythee Daughter do not make me mad,
I will not trouble thee my Child; farewell:
Wee'l no more meeete, no more ſee one another.
But yet thou art my fleſh, my blood, my Daughters,
Or rather a diſeaſe that's in my fleſh,
Which I muſt needs call mine. Thou art a Byle,
A plague ſore, or imboſſed Carbuncle
In my corrupted blood. But Ile not chide thee,
Let ſhame come when it will, I do not call it,
I do not bid the Thunder-bearer ſhoote,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Ione.
Mend when thou can'ſt, be better at thy leiſure,
I can be patient, I can ſtay with Regan,
I and my hundred Knights.

Reg. Not altogether ſo,
I look'd not for you yet, nor am prouided
For your ſit welcome, give care Sir to my Siſter,
For thoſe that mingle reaſon with your paſſion,
Muſt be content to thinke you old, and ſo,
But ſhe knowes what ſhe doe's.

Lear. Is this well ſpoken?

Reg. I dare avouch it Sir, what fifty Followers?
Is it not well? What ſhould you need of more?
Yes, or ſo many? Sith that both charge and danger,
Speake 'gainſt ſo great a number? How in one houſe
Should many people, ynder two commands
Hold amity? 'Tis hard, almoſt impoſſible.

Gen. Why might not you my Lord, receive attendance
From thoſe that ſhe calls Servants, or from mine?

Reg. Why not my Lord?
If then they chanc'd to ſlacke ye,
We could comp'troll them; if you will come to me,
(For now I ſpie a danger) I entreate you
To bring but five and twenty, to no more
Will I give place or notice.

Lear. I gave you all.

Reg. And in good time you gave it.

Lear. Made you my Guardians, my Depositories,
But kept a reſervation to be followed
With ſuch a number? What muſt I come to you
With five and twenty? Regan, ſaid you ſo?

Reg. And ſpeak't againe my Lord, no more with me

Lear. Thoſe wicked Creatures yet do look wel favour'd
When others are more wicked, not being the worſt
Stand in ſome ranke of praiſe, Ile go with thee,
Thy fifty yet doth double five and twenty,

And thou art twice her Loner

Gen. Heare ſhem my Lord;
What need you five and twenty? Ten? Or five?
To follow in a houſe, where twice ſo many
Have a command to tend you?

Reg. What need one?

Lear. O reaſon not the need: our baſeſt Beggers
Are in the pooreſt thing ſuperfluous,
Allow not Nature, more then Nature needs:
Man's life is cheape as Braſſes. Thou art a Lady;
If onely to go warme were gorgeouſe,
Why Nature needs not what thou gorgeouſe wear'ſt,
Which ſcarceſe keepes thee warme, but for true need;
You Heavens, give me that patience, patience I need,
You ſeeme heere (you Gods) a poore old man,
As full of griefe as age, wretched in both,
If it be you that ſtirres theſe Daughters hearts
Againſt their Father, ſoole me not ſo much,
To beare it tamely. touch me with Noble anger,
And let not womens weapons, water drops,
Staine my mans cheekes. No you vnnaturall Hags,
I will have ſuch revenges on you both,
That all the world ſhall — I will do ſuch things,
What they are yet, I know not, but they ſhalbe
The terrors of the earth? you thinke Ile weepe,
No, Ile not weepe, I have full cauſe of weeping.

Storme and Tempeſt.

But this heart ſhal break into a hundred thouſand ſhewes,
O ere Ile weepe, O Foole, I ſhall go mad. Exit.

Corn. Let vs withdraw, 'twill be a Storme.

Reg. This houſe is little, the old man an' d's people,
Cannot be well beſtow'd.

Gen. 'Tis his owne blame hath put himſelfe ſoorth, and
And muſt needs taſte his folly.

Reg. For his particular, Ile receive him gladly,
But not one follower.

Gen. So am I purpoſ'd

Where is my Lord of Gloſter?

Enter Gloſter

Corn. Followed the old man forth, he is return'd.

Glo. The King is in high rage.

Corn. Whether is he going?

Glo. He calls to Horſe, but will I know not whether.

Corn. 'Tis beſt to gueſſe him way, he leads himſelfe.

Gen. My Lord, entreate him by no meanes to ſtay.

Glo. Alacke the night comes on, and the high windes
Do ſorely ruffe, for many Miles about
There's ſcarce a Buſh.

Reg. O Sir, to wilfull men,
The injuries that they themſelves procure,
Muſt be their Schoole. Maſters: ſhut vp your doores,
He is attended with a deſperate traine,
And what they may incenſe him too, being apt,
To haue his eare abus'd, wiſedome bids feare.

Corn. Shut vp your doores my Lord, 'tis a wil'd night,
My Regan counſels welly come out oth' forme. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Storme Still. Enter Kent, and a Gentleman, ſeverally.

Kent. Who's there beſides foule weather?

Gen. One miſtred like the weather, moſt vnquietly.

Kent.

Kent. I know you: Where's the King?

Gent. Contending with the fretfull Elements;
Bids the wuinde blow the Earth into the Sea;
Or swell the curled Waters 'bout the Maine,
That things might change, or cease.

Kent. But who is with him?

Gent. Nottie but the Foole, who labours to our iust
His heart-srooke injuries.

Kent. Sir, I do know you,
And dare vpon the warrant of my note
Commend a deere thing to you. There is diuision
(Although as yet the face of it is couer'd
With mutual tunning) 'twixt Albany, and Cornwall:
Who haue, as who haue not, that their great Starres
Thron'd and set high; Seruants, who seeme no lesse,
Which are to France the Spies and Speculations
Intelligent of our State. What hath bin seene,
Either in snuffes, and packings of the Dukes,
Or the hard Reine which both of them hath borne
Against the old kinde King; or something deeper,
Whereof (perchance) these are but furnishings.

Gent. I will talke further with you.

Kent. No, do not:

For confirmation that I am much more
Then my out-wall; open this Purse, and take
What it contains. If you shall see Cordelia,
(As feare not but you shall) shew her this Ring,
And she will tell you who that Fellow is
That yet you do not know. Fye on this Storme,
I will go seeke the King.

Gent. Giue me your hand,
Haue you no more to say?

Kent. Few words, but to effect more then all yet;
That when we haue found the King, in which your pain
That way, Ile this. He that first lights on him,
Holla the other.

Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Storme still. Enter Lear, and Foole.

Lear. Blow windes, & crack your cheeks; Rage, blow
You Cataracts, and Hyrricano's spout,
Till you haue drench'd our Steeples; drown the Cackes.
You Sulph'rous and Thought-executing Fires,
Vaunt-curriers of Oake-cleauing Thunder-bolts,
Sindge my white head. And thou all-shaking Thunder,
Strike flat the thicke Rotundity o'th'world,
Cracke Natures moulds, all germanes spill at once
That makes ingratefull Man.

Foole. O Nunkle, Court holy-water in a dry house, is better then this Rain-water out o'doore. Good Nunkle, in, aske thy Daughters blessing, heere's a night pitties
neither Wisemen, nor Fooles

Lear. Rumble thy belly full: spit Fire, spowt Raine:
Nor Raine, Winde, Thunder, Fire are my Daughters;
I take not you, you Elements with vnkindnesse.
I neuer gaue you Kingdome; call'd you Children;
You owe me no subscription. Then let fall
Your horrible pleasure. Heere I stand your Slaue,
A poore, infirme, weake, and dispis'd old man:
But yet I call you Seruile Ministers,
That will with two pernicious Daughters ioyne
Your high-engender'd Battails, 'gainst a head

So old, and white as this. O, ho! 'tis foule.

Foole. He that has a house to put's head in, has a good Head-peece.

The Codpiece that will house, before the head has any;
The Head, and he shall Lowse: so Beggers marry many.
The man y makes his Toe, what he his Hart thold make,
Shall of a Corne cry woe, and turne his sleepe to wake,

For there was neuer yet faire woman, but shee made mouthes in a glasse.

Enter Kent.

Lear. No, I will be the patterne of a patience,
I will say nothing.

Kent. Who's there?

Foole. Marry here's Grace, and a Codpiece, that's a Wifeman, and a Foole.

Kent. Alas Sir are you here? Things that loue night,
Loue not such nights as these: The wrathfull Skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the darke
And make them keepe their Causes: Since I was man,
Such sheets of Fire, such bursts of horrid Thunder,
Such groanes of roaring Winde, and Raine, I neuer
Remember to haue heard. Mans Nature cannot carry Th'affliction, nor the feare.

Lear. Let the great Goddes
That keepe this dreadfull pudder o're our heads,
Finde out their enemies now. Tremble thou Wretch,
That hast within thee vndiulged Crimes
Vnwhipt of Iustice. Hide thee, thou Bloody hand;
Thou Perjur'd, and thou Simular of Vertue
That art Incestuous. Caytiffe, to peeces shake
That vnder couert, and conuenient seeming
Ha's practis'd on mans life. Close pent-up guiltes,
Riue your concealing Continents, and cry
These dreadfull Summoners grace. I am a man,
More sinn'd against, then sinning.

Kent. Alacke, bare-headed?
Gracious my Lord, hard by heere is a Houell,
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the Tempest.
Repose you there, while I to this hard house,
(More harder then the stones whereof 'tis rais'd,
Which euer, but now, demanding after you,
Deny'd me to come in) returne, and force
Their scanted curtisie.

Lear. My wits begin to turne.
Come on my boy. How dost my boy? Art cold?
I am cold my selfe. Where is this straw, my Fellow?
The Art of our Necessities is strange,
And can make wilde things precious. Come, your Houel;
Poore Foole, and Knaue, I haue one part in my heart
That's sorry yet for thee.

Foole. He that has and a little-tyne wit,
With heigh-ho, the Winde and the Raine,
Must make content with his Fortunes fit,
Though the Raine it raineth every day.

Lear. True Boy Come bring vs to this Houell. Exit.

Foole. This is a braue night to coole a Curtizan:

Ile speake a Prophecie ere I go:
When Priests are more in word, then matter;
When Brewers marie their Malt with water;
When Nobles are their Taylors Tutors,
No Heretiques burn'd, but wenches Sutors;
When every Cafe in Law, is right;
No Squire in debt, nor no poore Knight;
When Slanders do not lue in Tongues;
Nor Cut-purses come not to throngs;
When Vsurers tell their Gold i'th Field,

And

And Baudes, and whores, do Churches build,
Then shal the Realme of Albion, come to great confusion:
Then comes the time, who lues to see't,
That going shalbe we'd with feet. (time.
This prophesie Merlin shall make, for I lue before his
Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Gloster, and Edmund

Glo. Alacke, alacke Edmund, I like not this vnnaturall dealing; when I desired their leaue that I might pay him, they tooke from me the vse of mine owne house, charg'd me on paine of perpetuall displeasure, neither to speake of him, entreat for him, or any way sustaine him.

Bast. Most sauage and vnnaturall.

Glo. Go too; say you nothing. There is diuision betweene the Dukes, and a worse matter then that I haue receiued a Letter this night, 'tis dangerous to be spoken,
I haue lock'd the Letter in my Closet, these iniuries the King now beares, will be reuenged home, ther is part of a Power already footed, we must incline to the King, I will looke him, and priuily relieue him; goe you and maintaine talke with the Duke, that my charity be not of him perceiued, If he aske for me, I am ill, and gone to bed, if I die for it, (as no lesse is threatned me) the King
my old Master must be relieued There is strange things toward Edmund, pray you be carefull Exit.

Bast. This Curtesie forbid thee, shall the Duke
Instantly know, and of that Letter too,
This seemes a faire deseruing, and must draw me
That which my Father looses no lesse then all,
The younger rises, when the old doth fall. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Lear, Kent, and Foole.

Kent. Here is the place my Lord, good my Lord enter,
The curraney of the open night's too rough
For Nature to endure. Storme still

Lear. Let me alone.

Kent. Good my Lord enter heere.

Lear. Wile breake my heart?

Kent. I had rather breake mine owne,
Good my Lord enter.

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much that this contentious
Inuades vs to the skinfo: 'tis to thee, (Storme
But where the greater malady is fixt,
The lesse is scarce felt Thou'dst shun a Beare,
But if they slight lay toward the roaring Sea,
Thou'dst meete the Beare with' mouth, when the mind's
The bodies delicate: the tempest in my mind, fire,
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Sae what beates there, Filliall ingratitude,
Is it not as this mouth should teare this hand
For lifting food too't? But I will punish home;
No, I will weepe no more, in such a night,

To shut me out? Pouse on, I will endure:
In such a night as this? O Regan, Generi,
Your old kind Father, whose franke heart gaue all,
O that way madnesse lies, let me shun that:
No more of that.

Kent. Good my Lord enter here.

Lear. Prythee go in thy selfe, seeke thine owne ease,
This tempest will not giue me leaue to ponder
On things would hurt me more, but Ile goe in,
In Boy, go first. You houselesse pouertie, Exit.
Nay get thee in; Ile pray, and then Ile sleepe.
Poore naked wretches, where so ere you are
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storme,
How shall your House-lesse heads, and vnfed sides,
Your lop'd, and window'd raggednesse defend you.
From seasons such as these? O I haue tane
Too little care of this. Take Physicke, Pompt,
Expose thy selfe to seele what wretches seele,
That thou maist shake the superflux to them,
And shew the Heaucns more iust.

Enter Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Fathom, and halfe, Fathom and halfe; poore Tom
Foole. Come not in heere Nuncle, here's a purty, helpe me, helpe me.

Kent. Giue me thy hand, who's there?

Foole. A spirit, a spirit, he sayes his name's poore
Tom.

Kent. What art thou that dost grumble there icht straw? Come forth.

Edg. Away, the foule Fiend spollowes me, through the sharp Hauthorne blow the windes. Hum, goe to thy bed and warme thee.

Lear. Did'st thou giue all to thy Daughters? And art thou come to this?

Edgar. Who giues any thing to poore Tom? Whom the foule fiend hath led though Fire, and through Flame, through Sword, and Whirle-Poole, o're Bog, and Quagmire, that hath hid Knives vnder his Pillow, and Halers in his Pus, set Rats-bane by his Porredge, made him
Proud of heart, to ride on a Bay trotting Horse, ouer foure
Incht Bridges, to course his owne shadow for a Traitor, Blisse thy hie Wits, Tom cold. O do, de, do, de, do de, blisse thee from Whirle-Windes, Starre-blasting, and taking, do poore Tom some charity, whom the foule Fiend vexes. There could I haue him now, and there, and there againe, and there Storme still.

Lear. Ha's his Daughters brought him to this passe?
Could'st thou saue nothing? Would'st thou giue 'em all?

Foole. Nay, he reseru'd a Blanket, else we had bin all sham'd.

Lear. Now all the plagues that in the pendulous ayre
Hang fatid o're mens faults, light on thy Daughters.

Kent. He hath no Daughters Sir.

Lear. Death Traitor, nothing could haue subdu'd
To such a lownesse, but his vnkind Daughters. (Nature
Is it the fashion, that discarded Fathers,
Should haue thus little mercy on their flesh?
Iudicious punishment, 'twas this flesh begot
Those Pellicane Daughters.

Edg. Pillicock sat on Pillicock hill, alow: alow, loo, loo.

Foole. This cold night will turne vs all to Fooles, and Madmen.

Edgar. Take heed o'th'foule Fiend, obey thy Parents, keepe thy words Iustice, sweare not, commit not, with mans sworne Spouse ; for nor thy Sweet-heart on proud array. Tom's a cold.

Lear. What hast thou bin?

Edg. A Servingman? Proud in heart, and minde; thy curl'd my haire, wore Gloues in my cap; seru'd the Lust of my Mistis heart, and did the acte of darkenesse with her. Swore as many Oathes, as I spake words, & broke them in the sweet face of Heauen One, that slept in the contriving of Lust, and wak'd it to doe it. Winslou'd I deetely, Dice deetely; and in Woman, out-Paramour'd the Turke. False of heart, light of eare, bloody of hand; Hog in sloth, Foxe in stealth, Wolfe in greedinesse, Dog in madnes, Lyon in prey. Let not the creaking of Shooes, Nor the rulling of Silkes, betray thy poore heart to woman. Keepe thy foote out of Brothelst, thy hand out of Plackets, thy pen from I enders Bookes, and desye the soule Fiend. Still through the Hawthorne blowes the cold winde; Sayes suum, mün, nonny, Dolphin my Boy, Boy Sesey let him trot by. Steeveslid.

Lear. Thou wert better in a Graue, then to ans'w're with thy vncover'd body, this extremitie of the Skies. Is man no more then this? Consider him well. Thou ow'st the Worme no Silke; the Beast, no Hide; the Sheepe, no Wooll; the Cat, no perfume. Ha? Here's three on's are sophisticated. Thou art the thing it selfe; vnaccommodated man, is no more but such a poore, bare, forked Animal as thou art. Off, off you Lendings: Come, subbuton heere.

Enter Gloucester, with a Torch.

Fool. Prythee Nuncle be contented, 'tis a naughtie night to swimme in. Now a little fire in a wilde Field, were like an old Letchers heart, a small spark, all the rest on's body, cold: Looke, heere comes a walking fire.

Edg. This is the foule Fibbertigibbet, hee begins at Cusfew, and walks at first Cocke: Hee giues the Web and the Pin, squints the eye, and makes the Hare-lip; Mildewes the white Wheate, and hurts the poore Cicature of earth.

Swithold I looted thrice the old,
He met the Night-Mare, and her nine-fold;
Bid her a-light, and her troth-plight,
And aroynt thee Witch, aroynt thee.

Kent. How fares your Grace?

Lear. What's he?

Kent. Who's there? What is't you seeke?

Glon. What are you there? Your Names?

Edg. Poore Tom, that eates the swimming Frog, the Toad, the Tod-pole, the wall Newt, and the water: that in the furie of his heart, when the foule Fiend rages, eats Cow-dung for Sallets; swallows the old Rat, and the ditch-Dogge; drinks the green Mantle of the starding Poole: who is whipt from Tything to Tything, and stockt, punish'd, and imprison'd: who hath three Suites to his backe, sixe shirts to his body:

Horse to ride, and weapon to weare:
But Mice, and Rats, and such small Deere,
Haue bin Toms food, for seuen long yeare:

Beware my Follower. Peace Smulkin, peace thou Fiend.

Glon. What, hath your Grace no better company?

Edg. The Prince of Darkenesse is a Gentleman. Medo he's call'd, and Mabiu.

Glon. Our flesh and blood, my Lord, is growne so vilde, that it doth hate what gets it.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold.

Glon. Go in with me; my duty cannot suffice

To obey in all your daughters hard commands: Though their iniunction be to barre my doores, And let this Tyrannous night take hold ypon you, Yet haue I ventured to come seeke you out, And bring you where both fire, and food is ready.

Lear. First let me talke with this Philosopher, What is the cause of Thunder?

Kent. Good my Lord take his offer, Go into th'house.

Lear. He talke a word with this same lerr'd Theban: What is your study?

Edg. How to prevent the Fiend, and to kill Vermine.

Lear. Let me aske you one word in private.

Kent. Importune him once more to go my Lord, His wits begin to unsettle.

Glon. Canst thou blame him? Steeveslid.

His Daughters seeke his death: Ah, that good Kent, He said it wou'd be thus: poore banish'd man: Thou sayest the King growes mad, He tell thee Friend I am almost mad my selfe. I had a Sonne, Now out-law'd from my blood, he sought my life But lately, very late: I lou'd him (Friend) No Father his Sonne deerer: true to tell thee, The greefe hath craz'd my wits. What a night's this? I do beseech your grace.

Lear. O cry you mercy, Sir: Noble Philosopher, your company.

Edg. Tom's a cold.

Glon. In fellow there, into th'House, keep thee warme

Lear. Come, let's in all.

Kent. This way, my Lord.

Lear. With him;

I will keepe still with my Philosopher.

Kent. Good my Lord, sooth him:

Let him take the Fellow.

Glon. Take him you on.

Kent. Sirra, come on: go along with vs.

Lear. Come, good Athenian.

Glon. No words, no words, hush.

Edg. Childe Rowland to the darke Tower came,

His word was still, fie, foh, and fumme,

I smell the blood of a Brittain man.

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cornwall and Edmund

Corn. I will haue my reuenge, ere I depart his house.

Edg. How my Lord, I may be censured, that Nature thus giues way to Loyaltie, something feares mee to thinke of.

Corn. I now perceiue, it was not altogether your Brothers euill disposition made him seeke his death: but a prouoking merit set a worke by a reprobable badnesse in himselfe.

Bast. How malicious is my fortune, that I must repent to be iust? This is the Letter which hee spoake of; which approoves him an intelligent partier to the aduantages of France. O Heauens! that this Treason were not, or not I the detector.

Corn. Go with me to the Dutchesse.

Bast. If the matter of this Paper be certain, you haue mighty businesse in hand.

Corn.

Corn. True or false, it hath made thee Earle of Gloucester: seeke out where thy Father is, that hee may bee ready for our apprehension.

Edg. If I finde him comforting the King, it will stufte his suspition more fully. I will perseuer in my course of Loyalty, though the conflict be fore betweene that, and my blood.

Corn. I will lay trust vpon thee: and thou shalt finde a deere Father in my loue. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Kent, and Gloucester.

Glow. Heere is better then the open ayre, take it thankfully: I will peece out the comfort with what addition I can. I will not belong from you. Exit

Kent. All the powre of his wits, have given way to his impatience: the Gods reward your kindnesse

Enter Lear, Edgar, and Foole.

Edg. Frateretto calls me, and tells me Nero is an Angler in the Lake of Darknesse. pray Innocent, and beware the foule Fiend.

Foole. Prythee Nunkle tell me, whether a madman be a Gentleman, or a Yeoman.

Lear. A King, a King.

Foole. No, he's a Yeoman, that ha's a Gentleman to his Sonne. for hee's a mad Yeoman that sees his Sonne a Gentleman before him.

Lear. To haue a thousand with red burning spits Come luzzing in vpon 'em.

Edg. Blesse thy fine wits.

Kent. O pittie. Sir, where is the patience now That you so oft haue boasted to retaine?

Edg. My teares begin to take his part so much, They matte my counterfetting.

Lear. The little dogges, and all; Trey, Blanch, and Sweet-heart: see, they bathe at me.

Edg. Tom, will throw his head at them. Auunt you Curses, bethy mouth or blacke or white:

Tooth that poysons if it bite:

Mastiffe, Grey-hound, Mongrill, Grim,

Hound or Spaniell, Brache, or Hym:

Or Bobtaile tight, or Trowle taile,

Tom will make him weepe and waile,

For with throwing thus my head;

Dogs leapt the hatch, and all are fled.

Do, de, de, de: sefe: Come, march to Wakes and Fayres, And Market Townes: poore Tom thy home is dry.

Lear. Then let them Anatomize Regan: See what breeds about her heart. Is there any caule in Nature that make these hard-hearts. You sir, I entertaine for one of my hundred; only, I do not like the fashion of your garments. You will say they are Persian, but let them bee chang'd.

Enter Gloucester.

Kent. Now good my Lord, lye heere, and rest awhile.

Lear. Make no noise, make no noise, draw the Curtaines: so, so, we'll go to Supper 'till morning.

Foole. And Ile go to bed at noone.

Glow. Come hither Friend:

Where is the King my Master?

Kent. Here Sir, but trouble him not, his wits are gon.

Glow. Good friend, I prythee take him in thy armes; I haue ore-heard a plot of death vpon him:

There is a Litter ready, lay him in't,

And driue toward Dover friend, where thou shalt meete

Both welcome, and protection. Take vpon thy Master,

If thou should'st dally halfe an houre, his life

With thine, and all that offer to defend him,

Stand in assured losse. Take vp, take vp,

And follow me, that will to some prouision

Giue thee quick conduct. Come, come, away. Exeunt

Scena Septima.

Enter Cornwall, Regan, Gouernill, Bastard, and Seruants.

Corn. Poste speedily to my Lord your husband, shew him this Letter, the Army of France is landed: seeke out the Traitor Gloucester.

Reg. Hang him instantly.

Gou. Plucke out his eyes.

Corn. Leave him to my displeasure. Edmond, keepe you our Sister company: the reuenges wee are bound to take vpon your Traitorous Father, are not fit for your beholding. Aduece the Duke where you are going, to a most festiuat preparation. we are bound to the like. Our Postes shall be swift, and intelligenc betwixt vs. Farewell deere Sister, farewell my Lord of Gloucester.

Enter Steward.

How now? Where's the King?

Stew. My Lord of Gloucester hath convey'd him hence Some five or six and thirtie of his Knights Hot Questuists after him, met him at gate, Who, with some other of the Lords, dependants, Are gone with him toward Dover, where they boast To haue well armed Friends.

Corn. Get horses for your Mistres.

Gou. Farewell sweet Lord and Sister. Exit

Corn. Edmond farewell: go seek the Traitor Gloucester, Pinnion him like a Theefe, bring him before vs: Though well we may not passe vpon his life Without the forme of Iustice: yet our power Shall do a cur'sie to our wrath, which men May blame, but not comptroll.

Enter Gloucester, and Seruants.

Who's there? the Traitor?

Reg. Ingratefull Fox, 'tis he.

Corn. Binde fast his early armes.

Glow. What meanes your Graces?

Good my Friends consider you are my Guests: Do me no trouble play, Friends.

Corn. Binde him I say.

Reg. Hard, hard: O filthy Traitor.

Glow. Vnmercifull Lady, as you are, I me none.

Corn. To it is Chaire binde him,

Villaine, thou shalt finde.

Glow. By the kinde Gods, 'tis most ignobly deere To plucke me by the Beard

Reg. So where, and such a Traitor?

Glow. Naughty Ladie,

These haies which thou dost rauish from my chieft Will quicker and accuse thee. I am your Host, With Robbers hard, my hospitab'le fauours

You should not ruffle thus. What will you do?

Corn. Come Sir.

What Letters had you late from France?

Reg. Be simple answer'd, for we know the truth.

Corn. And what confederacie haue you with the Traitors, late footed in the Kingdome?

Reg. To whose hands

You haue sent the Lunaticke King Speake.

Glon. I haue a Letter gueslingly set downe
Which came from one that's of a newtrall heart,
And not from one oppos'd.

Corn. Cunning.

Reg. And false.

Corn. Where hast thou sent the King?

Glon. To Douer.

Reg. Wherefore to Douer?

Was't thou not charg'd at perill.

Corn. Wherefore to Douer? Let him answer that.

Glon. I am tyed to th'Stake,
And I must stand the Course.

Reg. Wherefore to Douer?

Glon. Because I would not see thy cruell Nailes
Plucke out his poore old eyes: nor thy fierce Sister,
In his Anointed flesh, sticke boarish phangs.
The Sea, with such a storme as his bare head,
In Hell-blacke-night indur'd, would haue buoy'd vp
And quench'd the Stelled fires:
Yet poore old heart, he holpe the Heauens to raine.
If Wolues had at thy Gate howl'd that sterne time,
Thou should'st haue said, good Porter turne the Key:
All Cruels else subscribe: but I shall see
The winged Vengeance ouertake such Children.

Corn. See't shalt thou neuer. Fellowes hold y' Chaire, Vpon these eyes of thine, Ile set my foote.

Glon. He that will thinke to liue, till he be old,
Giue me some helpe. — O cruell! O you Gods.

Reg. One side will mocke another: Th'other too.

Corn. If you see vengeance.

Sern. Hold your hand, my Lord:

I haue seru'd you euer since I was a Childe:
But better seruice haue I neuer done you,
Then now to bid you hold.

Reg. How now, you dogge?

Ser. If you did weare a beard vpon your chin,
I'd shake it on this quarrell. What do you meane?

Corn. My Villaine?

Sern. Nay then come on, and take the chance of anger.

Reg. Giue me thy Sword. A pezzant stand vp thus?

Killes him.

Ser. Oh I am slaine: my Lord, you haue one eye left
To see some mischefe on him. Oh.

Corn. Left it see more, preuent it; Out vilde gelly:
Where is thy luster now?

Glon. All darke and comfortlesse?

Where's my Sonne Edmund?

Edmund, enkindle all the sparkes of Nature
To quit this horrid actes

Reg. Out treacherous Villaine,
Thou call'st on him, that hates thee. It was he
That made the ouerture of thy Treasons to vs:
Who is too good to pittie thee.

Glon. O my Folies! then Edgar was abus'd,
Kinde Gods, forgiue me that, and prosper him.

Reg. Go thrust him out at gates, and let him smell
His way to Douer. Exit with Glouster.
How is't my Lord? How looke you?

Corn. I haue receiu'd a hurt: Follow me Lady;
Turne out that eyelesse Villaine: throw this Slaue
Vpon the Dunghill: Regan, I bleed apace, Vntimely comes this hurt. Giue me your arme. Exit.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Edgar.

Edg. Yet better thus, and knowne to be contemn'd,
Then still contemn'd and flatter'd, to be worst.
The lowest, and most detested thing of Fortune,
Stands still in esperance, liues not in feare:
The lamentable change is from the best,
The worst returns to laughter. Welcome then,
Thou vnsubstantiall ayre that I embrace:
The Wretch that thou hast blowne vnto the worst,
Owes nothing to thy blasts.

Enter Glouster, and an Oldman

But who comes heere? My Father poorely led?
World, World, O world!
But that thy strange mutations make vs hate thee,
Life would not yeelde to age.

Oldm. O my good Lord, I haue bene your Tenant,
And your Fathers Tenant, these fourescore yeares.

Glon. Away, get thee away. good Friend be gone,
Thy comforts can do me no good at all,
Thee, they may hurt.

Oldm. You cannot see your way.

Glon. I haue no way, and therefore want no eyes:
I stumbled when I saw. Full oft 'tis seene,
Our meanes secure vs and our meere defects
Proue our Commodities. Oh deere Sonne Edgar,
The food of thy abused Fathers wrath.
Might I but liue to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes againe.

Oldm. How now? who's there?

Edg. O Gods! Who is't can say I am at the worst?
I am worse then ere I was.

Old. 'Tis poore mad Tom.

Edg. And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say this is the worst.

Oldm. Fellow, where goest?

Glon. Is it a Beggar-man?

Oldm. Madman, and beggar too.

Glon. He has some reason, else he could not beg.
I th'last nights storme, I such a fellow saw;
Which made me thinke a Man, a Worme. My Sonne
Came then into my minde, and yet my minde
Was then scarce Friends with him.
I haue heard more since:
As Flies to wanton Boyes, are we to th'Gods,
They kill vs for their sport.

Edg. How should this be?

Bad is the Trade that must play Foole to sorrow,
Ang'ring it selfe, and others. Blesse thee Master.

Glon. Is that the naked Fellow?

Oldm. I, my Lord.

Glon. Get thee away: If for my sake
Thou wilt ore-take vs hence a mile or twaine
I th'way toward Douer, do it for ancient loue,
And bring some couering for this naked Soule,
Which Ile intreate to leade me.

Old. Alacke sir, he is mad.

Glon.

Glow. 'Tis the times plague,
When Madmen leade the blinde:
Do as I bid thee, or rather do thy pleasure;
About the rest, be gone.

Oldm. Ile bring him the best Parrell that I haue
Come on't, what will. Exit

Glow Sirrah, naked fellow.

Edg. Poore Tom's a cold. I cannot daub it further.

Glow. Come hither fellow.

Edg. And yet I must:

Blesse thy sweet eyes, they bleede

Glow. Know'st thou the way to Douer?

Edg. Both stile, and gate; Horseway, and foot-path:
poore Tom hath bin scarr'd out of his good wits. Blesse thee good mans sonne, from the foule Fiend.

Glow. Here take this purse, by whom the heau'ns plagues
Haue humbled to all strokes: that I am wretched
Makes thee the happier: Heavens deale so still:

Let the superfluous, and Lust-dieted man,
That slaues your ordinance, that will not see
Because he does not feelee, feelee your powre quickly:
So distribution should vndoo excessse,

And each man haue enough: Dost thou know Douer?

Edg. I Maister.

Glow. There is a Cliffe, whose high and bending head
Lookes fearfully in the confined Deepe:

Bring me but to the very brimme of it,
And Ile repayre the misery thou do'st beare
With something rich about me. from that place,
I shall no leading neede.

Edg. Give me thy arme,
Poore Tom shall leade thee. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Generall, Bastard, and Steward.

Gon. Welcome my Lord. I met well our mild husband
Not met vs on the way. Now, where's your Maister?

Stew. Madam within, but neuer man so chang'd.

I told him of the Army that was Landed:

He smil'd at it: I told him you were coming,
His answer was, the worse. Of Glosters Treachery,

And of the loyall Seruice of his Sonne

When I inform'd him, then he call'd me Sot,

And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out:

What most he should dislike, seemes pleasant to him;
What like, offense.

Gon. Then shall you go no further.

It is the Coward terror of his spirit

That dares not vnder take: Hee'l not feelee wrongs

Which tye him to an answer: our wishes on the way

May proue effects. Backe Edmond to my Brother,

Hasten his Musters, and conduct his powres.

I must change names at home, and giue the Distaffe

Into my Husbards hands. This trustie Seruant

Shall passe betweene vs: ere long you are like to heare

(If you dare venture in your owne behalfe)

A Mistresses command. Weare this; spare speech,

Decline your head. This kisse, if it durst speake

Would stretch thy Spirits vp into the ayre:

Conceiue, and fare thee well.

Bast. Yours in the rankes of death. Exit.

Gon. My most deere Gloster.

Oh, the difference of man, and man,
To thee a Womans seruices are due,
My Foole vsurpes my body.

Stew. Madam, here come's my Lord.

Enter Albany.

Gon. I haue beene worth the whistle.

Alb. Oh Generall,

You are not worth the dust which the rude winde
Blowes in your face.

Gon. Milke-Liver'd man,
That bear'st a cheeke for blowes, a head for wrongs,
Who hast not in thy browes an eye-discerning
Thine Honor, from thy suffering.

Alb. See thy selfe diuell:

Proper deformitie seemes not in the Fiend
So horrid as in woman.

Gon. Oh vaine Foole.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Oh my good Lord, the Duke of Cornwall dead,
Slaine by his Seruant, going to put out
The other eye of Gloucester.

Alb. Gloucesters eyes.

Mes. A Seruant that he bred, thrill'd with remorse,
Oppos'd against the act: bending his Sword
To his great Maister, who, threat-enrag'd
Flew on him, and among'st them fell d him dead,
But not without that harmefull stroke, which since
Hath pluckt him after.

Alb. This shewes you are about
You Iustices, that these our neather crimes
So speedily can venge. But (O poore Gloucester)
Lost he his other eye?

Mes. Both, both, my Lord.

This Letter Madam, craues a speedy answer:
'Tis from your Sister.

Gon. One way I like this well,
But being widdow, and my Gloucester with her,
May all the building in my fancie plucke
Vpon my hatefull life. Another way
The Newes is not so tart. Ile read, and answer.

Alb. Where was his Sonne,

When they did take his eyes?

Mes. Come with my Lady hither.

Alb. He is not heere.

Mes. No my good Lord, I met him backe againe.

Alb. Knowes he the wickednesse?

Mes. I my good Lord. 'twas he inform'd against him
And quit the house on purpose, that their punishment
Might haue the freer course.

Alb. Gloucester, I lue

To thanke thee for the loue thou shew'd'st the King,
And to reuenge thine eyes. Come hither Friend,

Tell me what more thou know'st. Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter with Drums and Colours, Cordelia, Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Cor. Alacke, 'tis he: why he was met euen now
As mad as the vext Sea, singing aloud,
Crown'd with ranke Fenitar, and furrow weeds,
With Hardokes, Hemlocke, Nettles, Cuckoo flowers,
Darnell

Darnell, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining Corne. A Centery lend forth:
Search every Acre in the high-growne field,
And bring him to our eye: What can mans wisdom
In the restoring his bereaued Sense; he that helpes him,
Take all my outward worth.

Genl. There is meanes Madam:
Our foster Nurse of Nature, is repose,
The which he lackes that to prouoke in him
Are many Simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of Anguish.

Cord. All blest Secrecs,
All you vnpublich'd Vertues of the earth
Spring with my teares; be aydant, and remediate
In the Goodmans desires: seeke, seeke for him,
Least his vngouern'd rage, dissolue the life
That wants the meanes to leade it.

Enter Messenger.

Mes. Newes Madam,
The Brittish Powres are marching hitherward.

Cor. 'Tis knowne before. Our preparation stands
In expectation of them. O deere Father,
It is thy businesse that I go about: Therefore great France
My mourning, and importun'd teares hath pittied:
No blowne Ambition doth our Armes incite,
But loue, deere loue, and our ag'd Fathers Rite:
Soone may I heare, and see him. Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Regan, and Steward.

Reg. But are my Brothers Powres set forth?

Stew. I Madam,

Reg. Himselfe in person there?

Stew. Madam with much ado:
Your Sister is the better Souldier.

Reg. Lord Edmund spake not with your Lord at home?

Stew. No Madam.

Reg. What might import my Sisters Letter to him?

Stew. I know not, Lady.

Reg. Faith he is poasted hence on serious matter:
It was great ignorance, Gloucesters eyes being out
To let him liue. Where he arriues, he moues
All hearts against vs. Edmund, I thinke is gone
In pittie of his misery, to dispatch
His nighted life. Moreouer to desery
The strength o'th Enemy.

Stew. I must needs after him, Madam, with my Letter.

Reg. Our troopes set forth to morrow, stay with vs:
The wayes are dangerous.

Stew. I may not Madam:

My Lady charg'd my duety in this busines.

Reg. Why should she write to Edmund?

Might not you transport her purposes by word? Belike,
Some things, I know not what. He loue thee much
Let me vncale the Letter.

Stew. Madam, I had rather——

Reg. I know your Lady do's not loue her Husband,
I am sure of that: and at her late being heere,
She gaue strange Eliahs, and most speaking lookes
To Noble Edmund. I know you are of her bosome.

Stew. I, Madam?

Reg. I speake in vnderstanding: Yare: I know's,
Therefore I do aduise you take this note:
My Lord is dead. Edmund, and I haue talk'd,
And more conuenient is he for my hand
Then for your Ladies. You may gather more:
If you do finde him, pray you giue him this;
And when your Mistres heares thus much from you,
I pray desire her call her wisdom to her.
So fare you well:

If you do chance to heare of that blinde Traitor,
Preferment falls on him, that cuts him off.

Stew. Would I could meet Madam, I should shew
What party I do follow.

Reg. Fare thee well.

Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Gloucester, and Edgar.

Glow. When shall I come to th'top of that same hill?

Edg. You do climbe vp it now. Look how we labor.

Glow. Me thinkes the ground is euen.

Edg. Horrible sleepe.

Hearke, do you heare the Sea?

Glow. No truly.

Edg. Why then your other Senses grow imperfect
By your eyes anguish.

Glow. So may it be indeed
Me thinkes thy voyce is alter'd, and thou speak'st
In better phrase, and matter then thou did'st.

Edg. Yare much decei'd: In nothing am I chang'd
But in my Garments.

Glow. Me thinkes yare better spoken.

Edg. Come on Sir,

Heere's the place stand still how fearefull
And dize' tis, to cast ones eyes so low,
The Crookes and Choughes, that wing the midway ayre
Shew scarce so grosse as Beetles. Halfe way downe
Hangs one that gathers Sampire: dreadfull Trade.
Me thinkes 'e seemes no bigger then his head.
The Fishermen, that walk'd vpon the beach
Appeare like Mice: and yond tall Anchoring Barke,
Diminish'd to her Cocke: her Cocke, a Buoy
Almost too small for sight. The murmuring Surge,
That on th'vnumbred idle Pebble chafes
Cannot be heard so high. He looke no more,
Least my braine turne, and the deficient sight
Topple downe headlong.

Glow. Set me where you stand.

Edg. Giue me your hand:

You are now within a foote of th'extreme Verge:
For all beneath the Moone would I not leape vp: right.

Glow. Let go my hand:

Heere Friend's another purse: in it, a Jewell
Well worth a poore mans taking. Faynes, and Gods
Prosper it with thee. Go thou further off,
Bid me farewell, and let me heare thee going.

Edg. Now fare ye well, good Sir.

Glow. With all my heart.

Edg. Why I do trifle thus with his dispaire,
Is done to cure it.

Glow. O you mighty Gods!
This world I do renounce, and in your sights

Shake

Shake patiently my great affliction off :

If I could beare it longer, and not fall

To quarrell with your great opposselesse willes,

My inuise, and loathed part of Nature should

Burne it selfe out. If Edgar liue, O blesse him.

Now Fellow, fare thee well.

Edg. Gone Sir, farewell :

And yet I know not how conceit may rob

The Treasury of life, when life it selfe

Yeelds to the Theft. Had he bin where he thought,

By this had thought bin past. Aloue, or dead?

Hoe, you Sir : Friend, heare you Sir, speake :

Thus might he passe indeed : yet he reuiues.

What are you Sir ?

Glon. Away, and let me dye

Edg. Had'st thou beene ought

But Gozemore, Feathers, Ayre,

(So many fathome downe precipitating)

Thou'dst shuer'd like an Egge : but thou do'st breath :

Hast heavy substance, bleed st not, speak st, art sound,

Ten Malts at each, make not the altitude

Which thou hast perpendicularly fell,

Thy life's a Myracle. Speake yet againe.

Glon. But haue I salne, or no ?

Edg. From the dread Sommet of this Chalkie Bourne

Looke vp a height, the shrill-gorg'd Larke so farre

Cannot be seene, or heard. Do but looke vp.

Glon. Alacke, I haue no eyes

Is wretchednesse depriv'd that benefit

To end it selfe by death ? 'Twas yet some comfort,

When misery could beguile the Tyrants rage,

And frustrate his proud will.

Edg. Giue me your arme.

Vp, so. How is't ? Feele you your Legges ? You stand.

Glon. Too well, too well

Edg. This is about all strangenesse,

Vpon the crowne o'th' Cliffe. What thing was that

Which parted from you ?

Glon. A poore vnfortunate Beggar.

Edg. As I stood heere below, me thought his eyes

Were two full Moones he had a thousand Noses,

Hornes walk'd, and waued like the enraged Sea :

It was some Fiend : Therefore thou happy Father,

Thinke that the cleere'st Gods, who make them Honors

Of mens Impossibilities, haue preferred thee.

Glon. I do remember now. henceforth Ile beare

Affliction, till it do cry out it selfe

Enough, enough, and dye. That thing you speake of,

I tooke it for a man. often 'twould say

The Fiend, the Fiend, he led me to that place.

Edgar. Beare free and patient thoughts.

Enter Lear.

But who comes heere ?

The safer sense will ne're accomodate

His Master thus.

Lear. No, they cannot touch me for crying. I am the King himselfe.

Edg. O thou side-piercing sight !

Lear. Nature's aboute Art, in that respect. Ther's your Presse-money. That fellow handles his bow, like a Crow-keeper. draw mee a Cloathiers yard. Looke, looke, a

Mouse. peace, peace, this peece of roasted Cheefe will doe't. There's my Gaunter, Ile proue it on a Gyant.

Bring vp the browne Billes. O well slowne Bird. i'th' clout, i'th' clout. Hewgh. Giue the word.

Edg. Sweet Marlorum.

Lear. Passe.

Glon. I know that voice.

Lear. Ha ! Generall with a white beard ? They ha'ten'd me like a Dogge, and told mee I had the whire bayes in my Beard, ere the blacke ones were there. To say I, and no, to euery thing that I said : I, and no too, was no good Diuinity. When the raine came to wet me once, and the winde to make me chatter, when the Thunder would not peace at my bidding, there I found 'em, there I smelt 'em out. Go too, they are not men o'their words ; they told me, I was euery thing : 'Tis a Lye, I am not Agu-proofe.

Glon. The tricke of that voyce, I do well remember : Is't not the King ?

Lear. I, euery inch a King.

When I do stare, see how the Subiect quakes.

I pardon that mans life. What was thy cause ?

Adultery ? thou shalt not dye : dye for Adultery ?

No, the Wren goes too't, and the small gilded Fly

Do's letcher in my sight. Let Copulation thrice :

For Glousters bastard Son was kinder to his Father.

Then my Daughters got 'twene the lawfull sheets.

Toot Luxury pell-mell, for I lacke Souldiers.

Behold yond simpring Dame, whose face betwene her

Forkes presages Snow ; that minces Vertue, & do's shake the head to heare of pleasures name. The Fitchew ; nor the soyled Horse goes too't with a more riotous appetite. Downe from the waste they are Centautes, though

Women all aboute. but to the Girdle do the Gods inherit, beneath is all the Fiends. There's hell, there's darkenes, there is the sulphurous pit, burning, scalding, stench, consumption. Eye, fie, fie, pan, pah. Giue me an Ounce of Ciuet ; good Apothecary sweeten my imagination :

There's money for thee.

Glon. O let me kisse that hand.

Lear. Let me wipe it first,

It smells of Mortality.

Glon. O ruin'd peece of Nature, this great world

Shall so weare out to naught.

Do'st thou know me ?

Lear. I remember thine eyes well enough. dost thou squiny at me ? No, doe thy worst blinde Cupid, Ile not loue. Reade thou this challenge, marke but the penning of it.

Glon. Were all thy Letters Sunnes, I could not see.

Edg. I would not take this from report,

It is, and my heart breakes at it.

Lear. Read.

Glon. What with the Case of eyes ?

Lear. Oh ho, are you there with me ? No eies in your head, nor no money in your purse ? Your eyes are in a heauy case, your purse in a light, yet you see how this world goes.

Glon. I see it feelingly.

Lear. What, art mad ? A man may see how this world goes, with no eyes. Looke with thine eares : See how yond Iustice railes vpon yond simple theefe. Hearke in thine eare. Change places, and handy-dandy, which is the Iustice, which is the theefe : Thou hast seene a Farmers dogge barke at a Beggar ?

Glon. I Sir.

Lear. And the Creature run from the Cur : there thou might'st behold the great image of Authoritie, a Dogg's obey'd in Office. Tappu, Rascall Beadle, hold thy bloody hand. why dost thou lash that Whore ? Strip thy owne backe, thou horly lusts to vse her in that kind, for which thou whipp'st her. The Vicer hangs the Cozeners. Thorough rough tatter'd cloathes great Vices do appeare: Robbes, and Rur'd gownes hide all. Place sinnes with Gold, and the strong Lance of Iustice, hurtlesse breakes: Arme it in ragget, a Pigmies straw do's pierce it. None do's offend, noho, I say none, Ile able 'em; take that of me my Friend, who haue the power to seale th' accusers lips. Get thee glasses-eyes, and like a scurvy Politician, seeme to see the things thou dost not. Now, now, now, now. Pull off my Bootes: harder, harder, so.

Edg. O matter, and impertinency mixt,
Reason in Madnesse.

Lear. If thou wilt weepe my Fortunes, take my eyes.
I know thee well enough, thy name is Gloucester:
Thou must be patient; we came crying hither:
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the Ayre
We wauile, and cry. I will preach to thee: Marke.

Glow. Alacke, alacke the day.

Lear. When we are borne, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of Fooles. This a good blocke:
It were a delicate stratagem, to shoo
A Troope of Horse with Felt. Ile put 'in proofe,
And when I haue stolne vpon these Son in Lawes,
Then kill, kill, kill, kill, kill, kill.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Oh heere he is: lay hand vpon him, Sir,
Your most deere Daughter——

Lear. No rescue? What, a Prisoner? I am euen
The Naturall Foole of Fortune Vse me well,
You shall haue ranfome. Let me haue Surgeons,
I am cut to th' Braines.

Gent. You shall haue any thing.

Lear. No Seconds? All my selfe?
Why, this would make a man, a man of Salt
To vse his eyes for Garden water-pots. I wil die brauely,
Like a smugge Bridegroome. What? I will be Iouall:
Come, come, I am a King. Masters, know you that?

Gent. You are a Royall one, and we obey you.

Lear. Then there's life in't. Come, and you geeit,
You shall get it by running. Sa, sa, sa, sa. Exit.

Gent. A fight most pittifull in the meaneft wretch,
Past speaking of in a King. Thou hast a Daughter
Who redeemes Nature from the generall curse
Which twaine haue brought her to.

Edg. Haile gentle Sir.

Gent. Sir, speed you: what's your will?

Edg. Do you heare ought (Sir) of a Battell toward.

Gent. Most sure, and vulgar:

Euery one heares that, which can distinguish sound.

Edg. But by your fauour:

How neere's the other Army?

Gent. Neere, and on speedy foot: the maine desery
Stands on the hourelly thought.

Edg. I thanke you Sir, that's all.

Gent. Though that the Queen on special cause is here
Her Army is mou'd on. Exit.

Edg. I thanke you Sir

Glow. You euer gentle Gods, take my breath from me,
Let not my worser Spirit tempt me againe
To dye before you please.

Edg. Well pray you Father.

Glow. Now good sir, what are you?

Edg. A most poore man, made came to Fortunes blows
Who, by the Art of knowne, and feeling sorrowes,
Am pregnant to good pity. Giue me your hand,
Ile leade you to some biding.

Glow. Heartie thanks:

The bountie, and the benizon of Heauen
To boot, and boot.

Enter Steward.

Stew. A proclaim'd prize: most happie
That eyelesse head of thine, was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Thou old, vnhappy Traitor, Briefely thy selfe remember: the Sword is out
That must destroy thee.

Glow. Now let thy friendly hand
Put strength enough too't.

Stew. Wherefore, bold Pezant,
Dar'st thou support a publish'd Traitor? Hence,
Least that th' infection of his fortune take
Like hold on thee. Let go his arme.

Edg. Chill not let go Zir,
Without further 'casion.

Stew. Let go Slaue, or thou dy'st.

Edg. Good Gentleman goe your gate, and let poore volke passe: and 'chud ha' bin zwaggerd out of my life,
'twould not ha' bin so long as 'tis, by a fortnight. Nay, come not neere th' old man: keepe out che vor ye, or ice
try whither your Costard, or my Ballow be the harder;
chill be plaine with you.

Stew. Out Dunghill.

Edg. Chill picke your teeth Zir: come, no matter for your toynes.

Stew. Slaue thou hast slaine me: Villain, take my purse;
If euer thou wilt thrue, bury my bodie,
And giue the Letters which thou find'st about me,
To Edmund Earle of Gloucester: seeke him out
Vpon the English party. Oh vntimely death, death.

Edg. I know thee well. A seruiceable Villaine,
As duteous to the vices of thy Mistis,
As badnesse would desire.

Glow. What, is he dead?

Edg. Sit you downe Father: rest you.
Let's see these Pockets, the Letters that he speakes of
May be my Friends: hee's dead; I am onely sorry
He had no other Deathsmen. Let vs see:
Leaue gentle waxe, and manners: blame vs not
To know our enemies mindes, we rip their hearts,
Their Papers is more lawfull.

Reads the Letters.

*L*et our reciprocall vowes be remembered. Ten haue manie opportunities to cut him off: if your will wait not, some and place will be fruitfully offer'd. There is nothing done. If hee returne the Conqueror, then am I the Prisoner, and hee freed, my Gaole, from the loathed warmth whereof, deliver me, and supply the place for your Labors.

Your (wise, so I would say) affectionate Seruant. Gonerill.

Oh indistinguish'd space of Womans will,
A plot vpon her vertuous Husbands life,
And the exchange my Brother: heere, in the sands
Thee Ile rake vp, the poste vnsubsid
Of murderous Letchers: and in the mature time,
With this vngracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd Duke: for him 'tis well,
That of thy death, and businesse, I can tell.

Glow. The King is mad:
How fisse is my wilde sense
That I stand vp, and haue ingenious feeling
Of my huge Sorrowes? Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be fewer from my greefes,
Drum afarre off.

And woes, by wrong imaginations loole

The

The knowledge of themselves.

Edg. Give me your hand -
Farre off methinks I heare the beaten Drumme.
Come Father, Ile bestow you with a Friend. Exeunt.

Scena Septima.

Enter Cordelia, Kent, and Gentleman.

Cor. O thou good Kent,
How shall I live and worke
To match thy goodnesse?
My life will be too short,
And every measure faile me.

Kent. To be acknowledg'd Madam is ore paid,
All my reports go with the modest truth,
Nor more, nor clip't, but so.

Cor. Be better suited,
These weeds are memories of those worser houres:
I prythee put them off.

Kent. Pardon deere Madam,
Yet to be knowne shortens my made intent,
My boone I make it, that you know me not,
Till time and I, thinke meet.

Cor. Then be't so my good Lord:
How de's the King?

Gent. Madam sleeps still.

Cor. O you kind Gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused Nature,
Th'vntun'd and iarring senses, O winde vp,
Of this childe, changed Father.

Gent. So please your Maestty,
That we may wake the King, he hath slept long?

Cor. Be govern'd by your knowledge, and proceede
I'th'way of your owne will: is he array'd?

Enter Lear in a chaire carried by Servants

Gent. I Madam in the heavynesse of sleepe,
We put fresh garments on him.
Be by good Madam when we do awake him,
I doubt of his Temperance.

Cor. O my deere Father, restauration hang Thy medicine on my lippes, and let this kisse
Repaire those violent narmes, that my two Sisters
Hauē in thy Reuerence made.

Kent. Kind and deere Princess.

Cor. Had you not bin their Father, these white flakes
Did challenge pittie of them. Was this a face
To be oppos'd against the iarring winde?
Mine Enemies dogge, though he had bit me,
Should haue stood that night against my fire,
And was't thou faine (poore Father)
To houell thee with Swine and Rogues forlorne,
In short, and musty straw? Alacke, alacke,
Tis wonder that thy life and wits, at once
Had not concluded all. He wakes, speake to him.

Gent. Madam do you, 'tis fittest.

Cor. How does my Royall Lord?
How fares your Maestty?

Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o'th'grace,
Thou art a Soule in blisse, but I am bound

Vpon a wheele of fire, that mine owne teares
Do scald, like molten Lead.

Cor. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit I know, where did you dye?

Cor. Still, still, farre wide.

Gent. He's scarce awake,

Let him alone a while.

Lear. Where haue I bin?

Where am I? Faire day light?

I am mightily abus'd, I should eu'n dye with pittie
To see another thus. I know not what to say.
I will not sweare these are my hands: let's see,
I feele this pin pricke, would I were assur'd
Of my condition.

Cor. O looke vpon me Sir,
And hold your hand in benediction o're me,
You must not kneele.

Lear. Pray do not mocke me.
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourescore and vppward,
Not an houre more, nor lesse:
And to deale plainly,
I feare I am not in my perfect mind.
Me thinke I should know you, and know this man,
Yet I am doubtfull. For I am mainly ignorant
What place this is: and all the skill I haue
Remembers not these garments: nor I know not Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at me,
For (as I am a man) I thinke this Lady
To be my childe Cordelia.

Cor. And so I am.

Lear. Be your teares wet?

Yes faith: I pray weep not,
If you haue poyson for me, I will drinke it:
I know you do not loue me, for your Sisters
Hauē (as I do remember) done me wrong.
You haue some cause, they haue not.

Cor. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your owne kingdom sit.

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Gent. Be comforted good Madam, the great rage
You see is kill'd in him: desire him to go in,
Trouble him no more till further feeling.

Cor. Wilt please your Highnesse walke?

Lear. You must beare with me:

Pray you now forget, and forgiue,
I am old and foolish.

Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter with Drumme and Colours, Edmund, Regan, Gentlemen, and Soldiers.

Bass. Know of the Duke if his last purpose hold,
Or whether since he is aduiz'd by ought
To change the course, he's full of alteration,
And selfereprouing, bring his constant pleasure.

Reg. Our Sisters man is certainly mis-carried.

Bass. 'Tis to be doabted Madam.

Reg. Now sweet Lord,

ff

Yoo

You know the goodnesse I intend vpon you:
Tell me but truly, but then speake the truth,
Do you not loue my Sister?

Bast. In honour'd Loue.

Reg. But haue you neuer found my Brothers way,
To the fore-fended place?

Bast. No by mine honour, Madam.

Reg. I neuer shall endure her, deere my Lord
Be not familiar with her.

Bast. Feare not, she and the Duke her husband

Enter with Drum and Colours, Albany, Gouernall, Soldiers.

Alb. Our very louing Sister, well be-met.
Sir, this I heard, the King is come to his Daughter
With others, whom the rigour of our State
Forc'd to cry out.

Regan. Why is this reasond?

Gone. Combine together 'gainst the Enemie:
For the domesticke and particular broiles,
Are not the question heere.

Alb. Let's then determine with th'ancient of warre
On our proceeding.

Reg. Sister you'll go with vs?

Gon. No.

Reg. 'Tis most conuenient, pray go with vs.

Gon. Oh ho, I know the Riddle, I will goe.

Exeunt both the Armies.

Enter Edgar

Edg. If ere your Grace had speech with man so poore, Heare me one word.

Alb. Ile ouertake you, speake.

Edg. Before you fight the Battaille, ope this Letter.
If you haue victory, let the Trumpet sound
For him that brought in, wretched though I seeme,
I can produce a Champion, that will proue
What is auouched there. If you miscarry,
Your businesse of the world hath so an end,
And machination ceases. Fortune loues you.

Alb. Stay till I haue read the Letter.

Edg. I was forbid it:

When time shall serue, let but the Herald cry,
And Ile appeare againe.

Exit.

Alb. Why farethee well, I will o're-looke thy paper.

Enter Edmund,

Bast. The Enemy's in view, draw vp your powers,
Heere is the guesse of their true strength and Forces,
By diligent discouerie, but your hast
Is now vrg'd on you

Alb. We will greet the time.

Exit.

Bast. To both these Sisters haue I sworne my loue:
Each ielous of the other, as the stung
Are of the Adder. Which of them shall I take?
Both? One? Or neither? Neither can be enioy'd
If both remaine aliu. To take the Widdow, Exasperates, makes mad her Sister Gonerill,
And hardly shall I carry out my side,
Her husband being aliu. Now then, wee'l vse
His countenance for the Battaille, which being done,
Let her who would be rid of him, deuise
His speedy taking off As for the mercie
Which he intends to Lear and to Cordelia,
The Battaille done, and they within our power,

Shall neuer see his pardon. for my state,
Stands on me to defend, not to debate.

Exit

Scena Secunda.

Alarm within Enter with Drumme and Colours, Lear, Cordelia, and Souldiers, ouer the Stage, and Exeunt.

Enter Edgar, and Gloster.

Edg. Heere Father, take the shadow of this Tree
For your good hoast pray that the right may thrive:
If euer I returne to you againe,
Ile bring you comfort.

Glo. Grace go with you Sir.

Exit.

Alarm and Retreat within.

Enter Edgar.

Eggar. Away old man, giue me thy hand, away
King Lear hath lost he and his Daughter rane, Giue me thy hand - Come on.

Glo. No further Sir, a man may rot euen heere.

Edg. What in ill thoughts againe?

Men must endure

Their going hence, euen as their comming hither,
Ripenesse is all come on.

Glo. And that's true too.

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter in conquest with Drums and Colours, Edmund Lear, and Cordelia, as prisoners, Souldiers, Captaine

Bast. Some Officers take them away good guard,
Vnill their greater pleasures first be knowne
That are to censure them.

Cor. We are not the first,
Who with best meaning haue incur'd the worst
For thee oppressed King I am cast downe,
My selfe could eise out-frowne false Fortunes frowne.
Shall we not see these Daughters, and these Sisters?

Lear. No, no, no, no - come let's away to priton,
We two alone will sing like Birds i'th' Cage:
When thou dost aske me blessing, Ile kneele downe
And aske of thee forgiuenesse So wee'l liue,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh
At gilded Butterflies and heere (poore Rogues)
Talk of Court newes, and wee'l talke with them too,
Who looses, and who wins; who's in, who's out,
And take vpon's the mystery of things,
As if we were Gods spies. And wee'l weare out
In a wall'd priton, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebbe and flow by t'n' Moone.

Bast. Take them away.

Lear. Vpon such sacrifices my Cordelia,
The Gods themselves throw Incense.
Haue I caught thee?

He that parts vs, shall bring a Brand from Heauen,
And fire vs hence, like Foxes, wipe thine eyes,
The good yeares shall deuoure them, flesh and fell,

Exe

Ere they shall make vs weepe?

Werle see e'm start'd first : come.

Exit.

Bast. Come hither Capitaine, hearke.

Take thou this note, go follow them to prison,
One step I haue aduanc'd thee, if thou do'st
As this instructs thee, thou dost make thy way
To Noble Fortunes : Know thou this, that men
Are as the time is; to be tender minded
Do's not become a Sword, thy great employment
Will not beare question : either say thou'lt do't,
Or thoue by other meanes

Capt. Ile do't my Lord

Bast. About it and write happy, when th'ha'st done,
Marke I say instantly, and carry it so
As I haue set it downe

Exit Capitaine.

Flourish. Enter Albany, Gonorill, Regan, Soldiers

Alb. Sir, you haue shew'd to dry your valiant straine
And Fortune led you well : you haue the Captiues
Who were the opposites of this dayes strife
I do require them of you so to vse them,
As we shall find their merites, and our safety
May equally determine

Bast. Sir, I thought it fit,
To send the old and miserable King to some retention,
Whose age had Charmes in it, whose Title more,
To plucke the common bosome on his side,
And turne our impress Launces in our eyes
Which do command them, With him I sent the Queen
My reason all the same, and they are ready
To morrow, or at further space, to appeare
Where you shall hold your Session.

Alb. Sir, by your patience,
I hold you but a subiect of this Warre,
Not as a Brother.

Reg. That's as we list to grace him.
Methinks our pleasure might haue bin demanded
Ere you had spoke so farre. He led our Powers,
Bore the Commission of my place and person,
The which immediacie may well stand vp,
And call it selfe your Brother

Gon. Not so hot
In his owne grace he doth exalt himselfe,
More then in your addition.

Reg. In my rights,
By me inuested, he compeeres the best.

Alb. That were the most, if he should husband you.

Reg. Iesters do oft proue Prophets.

Gon. Hola, hola,
That eye that told you so, look'd but a squint.

Rega. Lady I am not well, else I should answere
From a full flowing stomack. Generall,
Take thou my Souldiers, prisoners, parrimony,
Dispose of them, of me, the walls is thine
Winnesse the world, that I create thee heere
My Lord, and Master.

Gon. Meane you to enjoy him?

Alb. The let alone lies not in your good will.

Bast. Nor in thine Lord.

Alb. Halfe-blooded fellow, yes.

Reg. Let the Drum strike, and proue my title thine.

Alb. Stay yet, heare reason : Edmund, I arrest thee
On capitall Treason, and in thy arrest,
This gilded Serpent : for your claime faire Sisters,
I bare it in the interest of my wife,

'Tis she is sub-contracted to this Lord,
And I her husband contradiet your Baner.
If you will marry, make your loues to me,
My Lady is beshpoke

Gon. An enterlude.

Alb. Thou art armed Glester,
Let the Trmptet sound
If none appeare to proue vpon thy person,
Thy heynous, manifest, and many Treasons,
There is my pledge. Ile make it on thy heart
Ere I taste bread, thou art in nothing lesse
Then I haue heere proclaim'd thee.

Reg. Sicke, O sicke

Gon. If not, Ile neuer trust medicine

Bast. There's my exchange, what in the world lies
That names me Traitor, villain-like he lies,
Call by the Trumpet he that dares approach,
Or him, on you, who not, I will maintaine
My truth and honor firmly

Enter a Herald.

Alb. A Herald, ho
Trust to thy single vertue, for thy Souldiers
All leuied in my name, haue in my name
Tooke their discharge.

Regan. My sicknesse growes vpon mee.

Alb. She's not well, conuey her to my Tent.
Come hither Herald, let the Trumper sound,
And read out this. A Trumpet sounds

Herald reads.

*I*f any man of qualitie or degree, within the lists of the Army, will maintaine vpon Edmund, supposed Earle of Gloster, that he is a manifold Traitor, let him appeare by the third sound of the Trumpet be bold in his defence. 1 Trumpet

Her. Againe.

2 Trumpet.

Her. Againe

3 Trumpet.

Trumpet answers within

Enter Edgar armed.

Alb. Aske him his purposes, why he appeares
Vpon this Call o'th Trumpet.

Her. What are you?
Your name, your quality, and why you answer
This present Simmonds?

Edg. Know my name is lost
By Treasons tooth Lare-gnawne, and Canker-bit,
Yet am I Noble as the Aduersary
I come to cope

Alb. Which is that Aduersary?

Edg. What's he that speakes for Edmund Earle of Glo-

Bast. Himselfe, what taist thou to him? (Her?)

Edg. Draw thy Sword,
That if my speech offerd a Noble heart,
Thy arme may do thee Iustice, heere is mine :
Behold it is my priuledge,

The priuledge of mine Honours,
My oath, and my profession. I protest,
Maugre thy strength, place, youth, and eminence,
Despise thy victor-Sword, and fire new Fortune,
Thy valor, and thy heart, thou art a Traitor :
False to thy Gods, thy Brother, and thy Father,
Conspirant 'gainst this high illustrious Prince,
And from the extremest vpward of thy head,
To the discent and dust below thy foote,

ffz

A most Toad-spotted Traitor. Say thou no,
This Sword, this arme, and my best spirits are bent
To proue vpon thy heart, whereto I speake,
Thou lyest.

Bast. In wisdome I should aske thy name,
But since thy out-side lookes so faire and Warlike,
And that thy tongue (some say) of breeding breathes,
What safe, and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of Knight-hood, I disdaind and spurne
Backe do I tosse these Treasons to thy head,
With the hell-hated Lye, ore-whelme thy heart,
Which for they yet glance by, and scarcely bruise,
This Sword of mine shall giue them instant way,
Where they shall rest for euer. Trumpets speake.

Alb. Saue him, saue him. Alarums. Fights.

Gen. This is practise Gloster,
By th'law of Warre, thou wast not bound to answer
An vnknowne opposit thou art not vanquish'd,
But cozend, and beguild.

Alb. Shut your mouth Dame,
Or with this papet shall I stop it. hold Sir,
Thou worse then any name, reade thine owne euill :
No tearing Lady, I perceiue you know it.

Gen. Say if I do, the Lawes are mine not thine,
Who can asigne me for't? Exit.

Alb. Most monstrous! O, know'st thou this paper?

Bast. Aske me not what I know.

Alb. Go after her, she's desperate, gouerne her.

Bast. What you haue charg'd me with,
That haue I done,
And more, much more, the time will bring it out.
'Tis past, and so am I. But what art thou
That hast this Fortune on me? If thou'rt Noble,
I do forgive thee

Edg. Let's exchange charity:
I am no lesse in blood then thou art Edmond,
If more, the more th' hast wrong'd me.
My name is Edgar and thy Father's Sonne,
The Gods are iust, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to plague vs :
The darke and vicious place where thee he got,
Cost him his eyes.

Bast. Th' hast spoken right, 'tis true,
The Wheele is come full circle, I am heere.

Alb. Me thought thy very gate did prophesie
A Royall Noblenesse : I must embrace thee,
Let sorrow split my heart, if euer I
Did hate thee, or thy Father.

Edg. Worthy Prince I know't.

Alb. Where haue you hid your selfe?
How haue you knowne the miseries of your Father?

Edg. By nursing them my Lord. List a breefe tale,
And when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst.
The bloody proclamation to escape
That follow'd me so neere, (O our liues sweetnesse,
That we the paine of death would hourly dye,
Rather then die at once) taught me to shift
Into a mad-mans rags, to assume a semblance
That very Dogges disdain'd and in this habit
Met I my Father with his bleeding Rings,
Their precious Stones new lost became his guide,
Led him, begg'd for him, sau'd him from dispaire.
Neuer (O fault) reueal'd my selfe vnto him,
Vntill some halfe houre past when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping of this good successe,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last

Told him our pilgrimage. But his flaw'd heart
(Alacke too weake the conflict to support)
Twixt two extremes of passion, ioy and greefe,
Burst smilingly.

Bast. This speech of yours hath mou'd me,
And shall perchance do good, but speake you on,
You looke as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more wofull, hold it in,
For I am almost ready to dissolue,
Hearing of this.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gen. Helpe, helpe: O helpe.

Edg. What kinde of helpe?

Alb. Speake man.

Edg. What meanes this bloody Knife?

Gen. 'Tis hot, it smoakes, it came euen from the heart of — O she's dead

Alb. Who dead? Speake man.

Gen. Your Lady Sir, your Lady; and her Sister
By her is poyson'd: she confesses it.

Bast. I was contractd to them both, all three
Now marry in an instant.

Edg. Here comes Kent.

Enter Kent.

Alb. Produce the bodies, be they alieue or dead;

Gonerill and Regans bodies brought out
This iudgement of the Heauens that makes vs tremble,
Touches vs not with pittie O, is this he?
The time will not allow the complement
Which very manners vrges.

Kent. I am come
To bid my King and Master aye good night.
Is he not here?

Alb. Great thing of vs forgot,
Speake Edmund, where's the King? and where's Cordelia?
Secst thou this obiekt Kent?

Kent. Alacke, why thus?

Bast. Yet Edmund was belou'd:
The one the other poyson'd for my sake,
And after slew her selfe

Alb. Euen so couer their faces.

Bast. I pnt for life some good I meane to do Despight of mine owne Nature. Quickly send,
(Be brieue in it) to th' Castle, for my Writ
Is on the life of Lear, and on Cordelia:
Nay, send in time.

Alb. Run, run, O run.

Edg. To who my Lord? Who ha's the Office?
Send thy token of repreece.

Bast. Well thought on, take my Sword,
Giue it the Capitaine.

Edg. Hast thee for thy life.

Bast. He hath Commission from thy Wife and me,
To hang Cordelia in the prison, and
To lay the blame vpon her owne dispaire,
That she for-did her selfe.

Alb. The Gods defend her, beare him hence awhile.

Enter Lear with Cordelia in his armes.

Lear. Howle, howle, howle. O you are men of stones,
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd vse them so,
That Heauens vault should crack she's gone for euer.
I know when one is dead, and when one liues,
She's dead as earth: Lend me a Looking-glasse,

If

If that her breach will mist or staine the stone,
Why then she liues.

Kent. Is this the promis'd end?

Edg. Or image of that horror.

Alb. Fall and cease.

Lear. This feather stirs, shee lues if it be so,
It is a chance which do's redeeme all sorrowes
That euer I haue felt

Kent. O my good Master.

Lear. Prythee away.

Edg. 'Tis Noble Kent your friend.

Lear. A plague vpon you Murderers, Traitors all,
I might haue sau'd her, now she's gone for euer.

Cordelia, Cordelia, stay a little. Ha
What is't thou saist? Her voice was euer soft,
Gentle, and low, an excellent thing in woman.
I kill'd the Slaue that was a hanging thee

Gent. 'Tis true (my Lords) he did

Lear. Did I not fellow?

I haue seene the day, with my good biting Faulchion
I would haue made him skip - I am old now,
And these same crosses spoile me. Who are you?
Mine eyes are not o'th best, Ile tell you straight.

Kent. If Fortune brag of two, she lou'd and hated,
One of them we behold.

Lear. This is a dull sight, are you not Kent?

Kent. The same your Seruant Kent,
Where is your Seruant Cassius?

Lear. He's a good fellow, I can tell you that,
He'll strike and quickly too, he's dead and rotten.

Kent. No my good Lord, I am the very man.

Lear. Ile see that straight.

Kent. That from your first of difference and decay,
Haue follow'd your sad steps.

Lear. Your are welcome hither.

Kent. Nor no man else.

All's cheerlesse, darke, and deadly,
Your eldest Daughters haue fore-done themselves,
And desperately are dead

Lear. I so I thinke.

Alb. He knowes not what he saies, and vaine is it

That we present vs to him.

Enter a Messenger.

Edg. Very bootlesse.

Mess. Edmund is dead my Lord.

Alb. That's but a trifle heere:

You Lords and Noble Friends, know our intent,
What comfort to this great decay may come,
Shall be appl'd. For vs we will resigne,
During the life of this old Maiesty
To him our absolute power, you to your rights,
With boote, and such addition as your Honours
Haue more then merited. All Friends shall Taste the wages of their vertue, and all foes
The cup of their deseruings. O see, see.

Lear. And my poore Foole is hang'd. no, no, no life?
Why should a Dog, a Horse, a Rat haue life,
And thou no breath at all? Thou'lt come no more,
Neuer, neuer, neuer, neuer, neuer.

Pray you vndo this Button. Thanke you Sir,
Do you see this? Looke on her? Looke her lips,
Looke there, looke there. He dies.

Edg. He faints, my Lord, my Lord.

Kent. Breake heart, I prythee breake.

Edg. Looke vp my Lord

Kent. Vex not his ghost, O let him passe, he hates him,
That would vpon the wracke of this rough world
Stretch him out longer.

Edg. He is gon indeed.

Kent. The wonder is, he hath endur'd so long,
He but vsurp'd his life.

Alb. Beare them from hence, our present businesse
Is generall woe. Friends of my soule, you twaine, Rule in this Realme, and the god's state sustaine.

Kent. I haue a iourney Sir, shortly to go,
My Master calls me, I must not say no.

Edg. The waight of this sad time we must obeye,
Speake what we feele, not what we ought to say.
The oldest hath borne most, we that are yong,
Shall neuer see so much, nor lue so long.

Exeunt with a dead March.

FINIS.

THE TRAGEDIE OF

Othello, the Moore of Venice.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Rodrigo, and Iago.

Roderigo.

Never tell me, I take it much unkindly
That thou (Iago) who hast had my purse,
As if thy strings were thine, should'st know of this.
Ia But you'll not heare me. If ever I did dream
Of such a matter, abhorre me.

Rodo Thou told'st me,
Thou did'st hold him in thy hate.

Iago Despise me
If I do not. Three Great-ones of the Cittie,
(In personall suite to make me his Lieutenant)
Off-capt to him and by the faith of man
I know my price, I am worth no worse a place.
But he (as louing his owne pride, and purposes)
Euades them, with a bumbast Circumstance,
Horribly stufft with Epithures of warre,
Non-suites my Mediators For certes, saies he,
I haue already chose my Officer. And what was he?
For-sooth, a great Arithmatician,
One Mich:ill Cassio, a Florentine,
(A Fellow almost damn'd in a faire Wife)
That neuer set a Squadron in the Field,
Nor the deuision of a Battaille knowes
More then a Spinster. Vnlesse the Bookish Theoricke.
Wherein the Tongued Confuls can propose
As Masterly as he Meere prattle (without practise)
Is all his Souldier ship. But he (Sir) had th' elections
And I (of whom his eyes had seene the prooffe
At Rhodes, at Cyprus, and on others grounds
Christen'd, and Hethen) must be be-leed, and calmd
By Debitor, and Creditor This Counter-caster,
He (in good time) must his Lieutenant be,
And I (bless'd the marke) his Mooreships Auntient.

Rod. By heauen, I rather would haue bin his hangman.
Iago Why, there's no remedie.

'Tis the curse of Seruice;
Preferment goes by Letter, and affection,
And not by old gradation, where each second
Stood Heire to th' first. Now Sir, be iudge your selfe, Whether I in any iust terme am Assin'd
To loue the Moore?

Rod. I would not follow him then.

Iago O Sir content you.
I follow him, to serue my turne vpon him.
We cannot all be Masters, nor all Masters

Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall marke
Many a ducious and knee-crooking knaue;
That (doting on his owne obsequious bondage)
Wetres our his time, much like his Masters / Se,
For naught but Prouender, & w't en he's old Caskeer'd.
Whip me such honest knaues. Others there are
Who trym'd in Formes, and visages of Dutie,
Keepe yet their hearts attending on themselves,
And throw'ing but shewes of Seruice on their Lords
Doe well thriue by them.

And when they haue lind their Coates
Doe themselves Homage.
These Fellowes haue some soule,
And such a one do I professe my selfe. For (Sir)
It is as sure as you are Roderigo,
Were I the Moore, I would not be Iago.
In following him, I follow but my selfe.
Heauen is my Iudge, not I for loue and dutie,
But seeming so, for my peculiar end
For when my outward Action doth demonstrate
The native act, and figure of my heart
In Complement exterie, 'tis not long after
But I will weare my heart vpon my sleeue
For Dawes to pecke at; I am not what I am.

Red. What a fall Fortune do'st the Thicks-lips owe
If he can carry't thus?

Iago Call vp her Father:
Rowle him, make after him, poyson his delight,
Proclaime him in the Streets. Incense her kinsmen,
And though he in a fertile Clymate dwell,
Plague him with Fliess; though that his Ioy be Ioy,
Yet throw such chances of vexation on't,
As it may loose some colour.

Rodo Heere is her Fathers house, Ile call aloud.
Iago Doe, with like timorous accent, and dire yell,
As when (by Night and Negligence) the Fire
Is spied in populous Citties.

Rodo What hoa? Brabantio, Signior Brabantio, hoa.
Iago Awake; what hoa, Brabantio Theeues, Theeues.
Looke to your house, your daughter, and your Bags,
Theeues, Theeues.

Bra. Aboue. What is the reason of this terrible Summons? What is the matter there?

Rodo Signior is all your Familie within?

Iago Are your Doores lock'd?

Bra. Why? Wherefore ask you this?

Iago Sir, y'are rob'd, for shame put on your Coat.

Your

Your heart is burst, you haue lost halfe your soule
Euen now, now, very now, an old blacke Ram
Is tuppung your white Ewe. Arise, arise,
Awake the snorring Cittizens with the Bell,
Or else the deuill will make a Grand-fire of you.
Arise I say.

Bra. What haue you lost your wits?

Rod. Most reuerend Signior, do you know my voice?

Bra. Not I what are you?

Rod. My name is Rodorigo.

Bra. The worse for welcome.

I haue charg'd thee not to haunt about my doores.
In honest plainnesse thou hast heard me say,
My Daughter is not for thee. And now in madnesse
(Being full of Supper, and distempring draughtes)
Vpon malicious knaueserie, dost thou come
To start my quiet.

Rod. Sir, Sir, Sir.

Bra. But thou must needs be sure,
My spirits and my place haue in their power
To make this bitter to thee.

Rod. Patience good Sir.

Bra. What tell'st thou me of Robbing?

This is Venice: my house is not a Garage

Rod. Most graue Brabantio,
In simple and pure soule, I come to you

Ja. Sir, you are one of those that will not serue God, if the deuill bid you. Because we come to do you seruice, and you thinke we are Ruffians, you'll haue your Daughter couer'd with a Barbary horle, you'll haue your Nephewes neigh to you, you'll haue Coursers for Cozens and Genners for Germanes.

Bra. What prophane wretch art thou?

Ja. I am one Sir, that comes to tell you, your Daughter and the Moore, are making the Beast with two backs.

Bra. Thou art a Villaine.

Iago. You are a Senator.

Bra. This thou shalt answer. I know thee Rodorigo

Rod. Sir, I will answer any thing. But I beseech you
If t'be your pleasure, and most wise consent,
(Aspartly I find it is) that your faire Daughter,
At this odde Euen and dull watch o'th'night
Transported with no worse nor better guard,
But with a knave of common hire, a Gundelier,
To the grosse claspes of a Lasciuious Moore.
If this be knowne to you, and your Allowance,
We then haue done you bold, and saucie wrongs.
But if you know not this, my Manners tell me,
We haue your wrong rebuke. Do not belceue
That from the fence of all Ciuitie,
I thus would play and trifle with your Reuerence.
Your Daughter (if you haue not giuen her leaue)
I say againe, hath made a grosse revolt,
Tying her Dutie, Beautie, Wit, and Fortunes
In an extrauagant, and wheeling Stranger,
Of here, and euery where straight satisfie your selfe.
If she be in her Chamber, or your house,
Let loose on me the Iustice of the State
For thus deluding you

Bra. Strike on the Funder, ho!
Giue me a Taper: call vp all my people,
This Accident is not vnlike my dreame,
Beleeve of it oppresses me already.
Light, I say, light.

Exit.

Iag. Farewell for I must leaue you
I comes not meeete, nor wholesome to my place

To be producd, (as if I stay, I shall,)
Against the Moore. For I do know the State,
(How euer this may gall him with some checke)
Cannot with safetie cast him For he's embark'd
With such loud reason to the Cyprus Warres,
(Which euen now stands in Act) that for their soules
Another of his Fadome, they haue none,
To lead their Businesse In which regard,
Though I do hate him as I do hell apines,
Yet, for necessitie of present life,
I must show out a Flag, and signe of Loue,
(Which is indeed but signe) that you shal surely find him
Lead to the Sagitary the raised Search
And there will I be with him. So farewell, Exit.

Enter Brabantio, with Serrants and Torches.

Bra. It is too true an euill. Gone she is,
And what's to come of my despised time,
Is naught but bitterness. Now Rodorigo,
Where didst thou see her? (Oh vnhappy Girl)
With the Moore fast thou? (Who would be a Father?)
How didst thou know 'twas she? (Oh she deceaues me Past thought) what said she to you? Get mee Tapers
Raise all my Kindred. Are they married thinke you?

Rod. Truly I thinke they are.

Bra. Oh Heauen how got she out?
Oh treason of the blood.
Fathers, from hence trust not your Daughters minds
By what you see them act. Is there not Charmes,
By which the proprietie of Youth, and Maidhood
May be abus'd? Haue you not read Rodorigo,
Of some such thing?

Rod. Yes Sir I haue indeed.

Bra. Call vp my Brother oh would you had had her.
Some one way, some another Doe you know
Where we may apprehend her, and the Moore?

Rod. I thinke I can discover him, if you please
To get good Guard, and go along with me.

Bra. Pray you lead on At euery house Ile call,
(I may command at most) get Weapons (ho!)
And raise some speciall Officers of might:
Or good Rodorigo, I will deferue your paines. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, Attendants, with Torches.

Ja. Though in the trade of Warre I haue slaine men,
Yet do I hold it very stiffe o'th' conscience
To do no contriu'd Murder I lacke Inquie
Sometime to do me seruice. Nine, or ten times
I had thought 'thau'e yer'd him here vader the Ribbes.

Othello. 'Tis better as it is.

Iago. Nay but he prated,
And ipoke such scuruy, and prouoking termes
Against your Honor, that with the little godlinesse I haue
I did full hard forbeare him. But I pray you Sir,
Are you fast married? Be assur'd of this,
That the Magnifico is much belou'd,
And hath in his esteem a voice potentiall
As double as the Dukes. He will diuorce you,
Or put vpon you, what restraint or grecuance,

The

The Law (with all his might, to enforce it on)
Will giue him Cable.

Othel. Let him do his spight;
My Seruices, which I haue done the Signorie
Shall out-tongue his Complains. 'Tis yet to know,
Which when I know, that boasting is an Honour,
I shall promulgate. I fetch my life and being,
From Men of Royall Selge. And my demerits
May speake (vnbonnetted) to as proud a Fortune
As this that I haue reach'd. For know Iago,
But that I loue the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my vnhouse'd free condition
Put into Circumscription, and Confine,
For the Seas worth. But looke, what Lights come yond?

Enter Cassio, with Torches.

Iago. Those are the rais'd Father, and his Friends:
You were best go in.

Othel. No! I must be found.
My Parts, my Title, and my perfect Soule
Shall manifest me rightly. Is it they?

Iago. By Ianus, I thinke no.

Othel. The Seruants of the Dukes?
And my Lieutenant?
The goodnesse of the Night vpon you (Friends)
What is the Newes?

Cassio. The Duke do's greet you (Generall)
And he requires your haste, Post-haste appearance,
Enen on the instant.

Othello. What is the matter, thinke you?

Cassio. Something from Cyprus, as I may diuine:
It is a businesse of some heate. The Gallies
Haue sent a dozen sequent Messengers
This very night, at one anothers heeles:
And many of the Consuls, rais'd and met,
Are at the Dukes already. You haue bin hotly call'd for,
When being not at your Lodging to be found,
The Senate hath sent about three leuerall Quests,
To search you out.

Othel. 'Tis well I am found by you:
I will but spend a word here in the house,
And goe with you.

Cassio. Aunciant, what makes he heere?

Iago. Faith, he to night hath boarded a Land Carrafft
If it proue lawfull prize, he' made for euer.

Cassio. I do not vnderstand.

Iago. He's married.

Cassio. To who?

Iago. Marry to — Come Captaine, will you go?

Othel. Haue with you.

Cassio. Here comes another Troope to seeke for you.

Enter Brabantio, Rodorigo, with Officers, and Torches.

Iago. It is Brabantio; Generall be adu's'd,
He comes to bad intent.

Othello. Holla, stand there.

Rodo. Signior, it is the Moore.

Bra. Downe with him, Theefe.

Iago. You, Rodorigo? Cme Sir, I am for you.

Othel. Keepe vp your bright Swords, for the dew will rust them. Good Signior, you shall more command with yeares, then with your Weapons.

Bra. Oh thou foule Theefe,
Where hast thou stow'd my Daughter?
Damn'd as thou art, thou hast enchanted her

For Ile referre me to all things of sense,
(If she in Chaines of Magick were not bound)
Whether a Maid, so tender, Faire, and Happie,
So opposite to Marriage, that she shun'd
The wealthy curled Deareling of our Nation,
Would euer haue (t'encurre a generall mocke)
Run from her Guardagero the sootie bosome,
Of such a thing as thou: to feare, not to delight?
Iudge me the world, if 'tis not grosse in sense,
That thou hast practis'd on her with soule Charmer,
Abus'd her delicate Youth, with Drugs or Minerals,
That weakens Motion. He haue't disputed on,
'Tis probable, and palpable to thinking;
I therefore apprehend and do attach thee,
For an abuser of the World, a practiser
Of Arts inhibited, and out of warrant;
Lay hold vpon him, if he do resist
Subdue him, at his perill.

Othel. Hold your hands
Both you of my inclining, and the rest.
Were it my Cue to fight, I should haue knowne it
Without a Prompter. Whether will you that I goe
To answer this your charge?

Bra. To Prison, till fit time
Of Law, and course of direct Session
Call thee to answer.

Othel. What if do obey?
How may the Duke be therewith satisf'd,
Whose Messengers are heere about my side,
Vpon some present businesse of the State,
To bring me to him.

Officer. 'Tis true most worthy Signior,
The Dukes in Counsell, and your Noble selfe,
I am sure is sent for.

Bra. How? The Duke in Counsell?
In this time of the night? Bring him away;
Mine's not an idle Cause. The Duke himselfe,
Or any of my Brothers of the State,
Cannot but feele this wrong, as 'twere their owne:
For if such Actions may haue passage free,
Bond-slaves, and Pagans shall our State-men be. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Duke, Senators, and Officers.

Duke. There's no composition in this Newer,
That giues them Credite.

1. Sen. Indeed, they are disproportioned;
My Letters say, a Hundred and seuen Gallies.

Duke. And mine a Hundred forte.

2. Sen. And mine two Hundred:
But though they iumpe not on a iust account,
(As in these Cases where the ayme reports,
'Tis oft with difference) yet do they all confirme
A Turkish Fleete, and bearing vp to Cyprus.

Duke. Nay, it is possible enough to iudgement.
I do not so secure me in the Error,
But the maine Article I do approue
In fearefull sense.

Saylor waken. What hos, what hos, what hos.

Enter Saylor.

Officer.

Officer. A Messenger from the Gallies.

Duke. Now? What's the businessse?

Sailor. The Turkish Preparation makes for Rhodes,
So was I bid report here to the State,
By Signior Angelo.

Duke. How say you by this change?

1. Sen. This cannot be
By no assay of reason. 'Tis a Pageant
To keepe vs in false gaze, when we consider
Th'importancie of Cyprus to the Turke;
And let our selues againe but vnderstand,
That as it more concernes the Turke then Rhodes,
So may he with more facile question beare it,
For that it stands not in such Warrelike brace,
But altogether lackes th'abilities
That Rhodes is drest'd in. If we make thought of this,
We must not thinke the Turke is so vnskillfull,
To leaue that latest, which concernes him first,
Neglecting an attempt of ease, and gaine
To wake, and wage a danger profitlesse.

Duke. Nay, in all confidence he's not for Rhodes.

Officer. Here is more Newes.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. The Ottomans, Reueren'd, and Gracious,
Steering with due course toward the Ile of Rhodes,
Haue there inioyned them with an after Fleete,

1. Sen. I, so I thought how many, as you guesse?

Mess. Of thirtie Saile: and now they do re steem
Their backward course, bearing v ith frank appearance
Their purposes toward Cyprus. Signior Montano,
Your trustie and most Valiant Seruitour,
With his free dutie, recommends you thus,
And prays you to belecue him

Duke. 'Tis certaine then for Cyprus:

Marcus Luccicos is not he in Towne?

1. Sen. He's now in Florence

Duke. Write from vs,
To him, Post, Post-haste, dispatch.

1. Sen. Here comes Brabantio, and the Valiant Moore.

Enter Brabantio, Othello, Cassio, Iago, Rodorigo, and Officers.

Duke. Valiant Othello, we must straight employ you,
Against the generall Enemy Ottoman.

I did not see you: welcome gentle Signior,
We lack't your Counsaile, and your helpe to night

Bra. So did I yours: Good your Grace pardon me.
Neither my place, nor ought I heard of businessse
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the generall care
Take hold on me. For my particular griefe
Is of so flood-gate, and ore-bearing Nature,
That it engulps, and swallows other sorrowes,
And it is still it selfe

Duke. Why? What's the matter?

Bra. My Daughter. oh my Daughter!

Sen. Dead?

Bra. I, to me.

She is abus'd, stolne from me, and corrupted
By Spels, and Medicines, bought of Mountebanks:
For Nature, so preposterously to erre,
(Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense),
Sans witch-craft could not.

Duke. Who ere he be, that in this foule proceeding
Hath thus beguil'd your Daughter of her selfe,

And you of her; the bloodie Booke of Law,
You shall your selfe read, in the bitter letter,
After your owne sense: yea, though our proper Son Stood in your Action.

Bra. Humbly I thanke your Grace,
Here is the man, this Moore, whom now it seemes
Your speciall Mandate, for the State affaires
Hath hither brought.

All. We are veriesorry for't.

Duke. What in your owne part, can you say to this?

Bra. Nothing, but this is so.

Othe. Most Potent, Graue, and Reueren'd Signiors,
My very Noble, and approu'd good Masters;
That I haue tane away this old mans Daughter,
It is most true: true I haue married her;
The verie head, and front of my offending,
Hath this extent; no more. Rude am I, in my speech,
And little blest'd with the soft phrase of Peace;
For since these Armes of mine, had seuen yeares pith,
Till now, some nine Moones wasted, they haue vs'd
Their deereft action, in the Tented Field.
And little of this great world can I speake,
More then pertaines to Feats of Broiles, and Battaile,
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for my selfe. Yet, (by your gracious patience)
I will a round v n- varnish'd u Tale deliuer,
Of my whole course of Loue
What Drugget, what Charmes,
What Coniuration, and what mighty Magicke,
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withall)
I won his Daughter.

Bra. A Maiden, neuer bold:

Of Spirit so still, and quiet, that her Motion
Blush'd at her selfe, and she, in spite of Nature,
Of Yeates, of Country, Crédite, every thing
To fall in Loue, with what she fear'd to looke on;
It is a iudgement main'd, and most imperfect.
That will confesse Perfection so could erre
Against all rules of Nature, and must be driuen
To find out practises of cunning hell
Why this should be. I therefore vouch againe,
That with some Mixtures, powrefull o re the blood,
Or with some Dram, (coniu'd to this effect)
He wrought vp on her.

To vouch this, is no prooffe,
Without more wider, and more ouer Test
Then these thin habits, and poore likely-hoods
Of moderne seeming, do prefer against him.

Sen. But Othello, speake,

Did you, by indirect, and forced courses
Subdue, and poyson this yong Maides affections?
Or came it by request, and such faire question
As soule, to soule affordeth?

Othel. I do beseech you,
Send for the Lady to the Sagitary.
And let her speake of me before her Father;
If you do finde me foule, in her report,
The Trust, the Office, I do hold of you,
Not onely take away, but let your Sentence
Euen fall vpon my life.

Duke. Fetch Desdemona hither.

Othe. Aunciant, conduct them:

You best know the place.
And tell she come, as truly as to heauen,
I do confesse the vices of my blood,
So iustly to your Graue eares, Ile present

How

How I did thrive in this faire Ladies loue,
And she in mine.

Duke. Say it Othello.

Othello. Her Father lou'd me, oft intited me:
Still question'd me the storie of my life,
From yeare to yeare: the Battaille, Sieges, Fortune,
That I haue past.
I ran it through, even from my boyish daies,
Toth' very moment that he bad me tell it.
Wherein I spoke of most disastrous chances.
Of moving Accidents by Flood and Field,
Of haire-breadth escapes i'th' imminent deadly breach,
Of being taken by the Insolent Foe,
And sold to slavery. Of my redemption thence,
And portance in my Trauellers hist'rie.
Wherein of Antars vast, and Deserts idle,
Rough Quarries, Rocks, Hills, whole head touch heaven,
It was my hint to speake. Such was my Proesse,
And of the Cannibals that each others eate,
The Antrophagae, and men whose heads
Grew beneath their shoulders. These things to heare,
Would Desdemona seriously incline:
But still the house Affaires wou'd draw her hence:
Which euer as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come againe, and with a greedie eare
Deuoure vp my discourse. Which I obseruing,
Tooke once a plaine houre, and found good meanes
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my Pilgrimage dilecte,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not instinctuely I did consent,
And often did beguile her of her teares,
When I did speake of some distressfull stroke
That my youth suffer'd. My storie being done,
She gaue me for my paines a world of kisses.
She swore in faith 'twas strange 'twas passing strange,
'Twas pittifull 'twas wondrous pittifull.
She wish'd she had not heard it, yet she wish'd
That Heaven had made her such a man. She thank'd me,
And bad me, if I had a Friend that lou'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my Story,
And that would wone her. Vpon this hint I spake,
She lou'd me for the dangers I had past,
And I lou'd her, that she did pittie them.
This onely is the witch-craft I haue vs'd.
Here comes the Ladie Let her witness it.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Attendants.

Duke. I thinke this tale would win my Daughter too,
Good Brabantio, take vp this mangled matter at the best.
Men do their broken Weapons rather vse,
Then their bare hands

Bra. I pray you heare her speake?
If she confesse that she was halfe the wooer,
Disstruck on my head, if my bad blame
Lye on the man. Come hither gentle Mistis,
Do you perceiue in all this Noble Companie,
Where most you owe obedience?

Des. My Noble Father,
I do perceiue heere a diuided dutie.
To you I am bound for life, and education.
My life and education both do learne me,
How to respect you, You are the Lord of duty,
I am hitherto your Daughter. But heere's my Husband;
And so much dutie, as my Mother shew'd

To you, preferring you before her Father:
So much I challenge, that I may professe
Due to the Moore my Lord.

Bra. God be with you: I haue done.
Please it your Grace, on to the State Affaires;
I had rather to adopt a Child, then get it.
Come hither Moore;
I here do giue thee that with all my heart,
Which but thou hast already, with all my heart
I would keepe from thee. For your sake (Iewell)
I am glad at soule, I haue no other Child,
For thy escape would teach me Tyrannie
To hang clogges on them. I haue done my Lord.

Duke. Let me speake like your selfe.
And lay a Sentence,
Which as a gife, or step may helpe these Louers.
When remedies are past, the griefes are ended
By seeing the worst, which late on hopes depended.
To moune a Mischiefe that is past and gon,
Is the next way to draw new mischiefe on.
What cannot be preseru'd, when Fortune takes.
Patience, her Inuoy a nock'ry makes
The rob'd that smiles, steales something from the Thiefe,
He robs himselfe, that spends a bootlesse griefe.
Bra. So let the Turke of Cyprus vs beguile,
We loose it not so long as we can smile.
He beares the Sentence well, that nothing beares,
But the free comfort which from thence he beares.
But he beares both the Sentence, and the sorrow,
That to pay griefe, must of poore Patience borrow.
These Sentences, no Sugar, or to Gall,
Being strong on both sides, are Equiuocall,
But words are words, I neuer yet did heare
That the bruiz'd heart was pierc'd through the eares.
I humbly beseech you proceed to th' Affaires of State.

Duke. The Turke with a most righty Preparation makes for Cyprus. Othello, the Fortitude of the place is best knowne to you. And though we haue there a Substitute of most allowed afficiency, yet opinion, a more soveraigne Mistis of Effects, throwes a more safer voice on you. you must therefore be content to slobber
the glosse of your new Fortunes, with this more sub-borne, and boytrous expedition.

Othello. The Tyrant Custome, most Graue Senators,
Hath made the flinty and Steele Coach of Warre
My thrice diuven bed of Downe. I do agnize
A Naturall and prompt Alacrity,
I finde in hardnesse, and do undertake
This present Warres against the Ottomites.
Most humbly therefore bending to your State,
I craue fit disposition for my Wife,
Due reference of Place, and Exhibition,
With such Accomodation and besort
As leuels with her breeding.

Duke. Why at her Fathers?

Bra. I will not haue it so,

Othello. Nor I.

Des. Nor would I there recide,
To put my Father in impatient thoughts
By being in his eye. Most Gracious Duke,
To my vnfoling, lend your prosperous eare,
And let me finde a Charter in your voice
To assist my simplenesse.

Duke. What would you Desdemona?

Des. That I loue the Moore, to liue with him,
My downe-right violence, and storme of Fortunes,

May trumpet to the world. My heart's subdu'd
Euen to the very quality of my Lord;
I saw Othello's visage in his mind,

And to his Honours and his valiant parts,
Did I my soule and Fortunes consecrate
So that (deere Lords) if I be left behind
A Moth of Peace, and he go to the Warre,
The Rites for why I loue him, are bereft me:
And I a heauie intermission shall support
By his deere absence Let me go with him
Othe Let her haue your voice.

Vouch with me Heauen, I therefore beg it not:
To please the pallate of my Appetite:
Nor to comply with heat the yong affects
In my defect, and proper satisfaction.
But to be free, and bounteous to her minde
And Heauen defend your good soules, that you thinke
I will your serious and great businesse scant
When she is with me. No, when light wing'd Toys
Of feather'd Cupid, feeble with wanton dulnesse
My speculative, and offic'd Instrument

That my Disports corrupt, and taint my businesse:
Let House-wiues make a Skillet of my Helme,
And all indigne, and base aduersities,
Make head against my Estimation.

Duke Be it as you shall privately determine,
Either for her stay, or going th' Affaires cries haste
And speed must answere it.

Sen. You must away to right.

Othe With all my heart.

Duke At nine i'th morning, here we'll meete againe.

Othello, leave some Officer behind
And he shall our Commission bring to you.
And such things else of qualitie and respect
As doth import you.

Othe. So please your Grace, my Ancient,
A man he is of honesty and trust.
To his conueyance I assigne my wife.
With what else needfull, your good Grace shall thinke
To be sent after me.

Duke Let it be so:
Good night to euery one. And Noble Signior,
If Vertue no delighted Beaurie lacke,
Your Son-in-law is farre more Faire then Blacke.

Sen. Adieu braue Moore, v'se Desdemona well.

Bra: Look to her (Moore) if thou hast eyes to see.
She ha's deceiu'd her Father, and may thee. Exit

Othe. My life vpon her faith. Honest Iago,
My Desdemona must I leaue to thee.
I prythee let thy wife attend on her,
And bring them after in the best advantage.
Come Desdemona, I haue but an houre
Of Loue, of wordly matter, and direction
To spend with thee. We must obey the time. Exit.

Rod. Iago

Iago What saist thou Noble heart?

Rod. What will I do, thinke'st thou?

Iago. Why go to bed and sleepe

Rod. I will incontinently drowne my selfe.

Iago If thou do'st I shall neuer loue thee after. Why thou silly Gentleman?

Rod. It is sillynesse to liue, when to liue is torment and then haue we a prescription to dye, when death is our Physition,

Iago. Oh villanous. I haue look'd vpon the world for foure times seuen yeares, and since I could distinguish betwixt a Benefit, and an Iniurie. I neuer found man that knew how to loue himselfe. Ere I would say, I would drowne my selfe for the loue of a Gynney Hen, I would change my Humanity with a Baboone.

Rod. What should I do? I confesse it is my shame to be so fond, but it is not in my vertue to amend it.

Iago Vertue? A figge, 'tis in our selues that we are thus, or thus. Our Bodies are our Gardens, to the which, our Wills are Gardiners. So that if we will plant Net-tels, or sowe Lettice Set Hisope, and weede vp Time:
Supplie it with one gender of Hearbes, or distract it with many: either to haue it sterill with idlenesse, or manured with Industry, v by the power, and Corrigeable au-thoritie of this lies in our Wills. If the braine of our liues had not one Scale of Reason, to poize another of Sensualitie, the blood, and basenesse of our Natures would conduct vs to most prepostrous Conclusions. But we haue Reason to coole our raging Motions, our carnall Strings, or vnbitted Lusts: whereof I take this, that you call Loue, to be a Sect, or Seyen

Rod It cannot be

Iago It is meely a Lust of the blood, and a permission of the will. Come, be a man: drowne thy selfe? Drown Cats, and blind Puppies. I haue profest me thy Friend, and I confesse me knit to thy deferring, with Cables of perdurable roughnesse. I could neuer better steed thee then now. Put Money in thy purse follow thou the Warres, defeat thy fauour, with an vsurp'd Beard. I say put Money in thy purse. It cannot be long 'hat Desdemona should continue her loue to the Moore. Put Money in thy purse nor he his to her. It was a violent Commencement in her, and thou shalt see an answerable Sequestration, put but Money in thy purse. These Moores are changeable in their wils fill thy purse with Money.
The Food that to him now it as luscious as Locusts, shalbe to him shortly, as bitter as Coloquintida. She must change for youth when she is sated with his body she will find the errors of her choice. Therefore, put Money in thy purse. If thou wilt needs damne thy selfe, do it a more delicate way then drowning. Make all the Money thou canst. If Sanctimonie, and a fraile vow, betwixt an erring Barbarian, and super-subtile Venetian be not too hard for my wits, and all the Tribe of hell, thou shalt enioy her: therefore make Money: a pox of drowning thy selfe, it is cleane out of the way. Seeke thou rather to be hang'd in Compassing thy ioy, then to be drown'd, and go without her.

Rodo Wilt thou be fast to my hopes, if I depend on the issue?

Iago Thou art sure of me. Go make Money: I haue told thee often, and I re-tell thee againe, and againe, I haue the Moore. My cause is hearted, thine hath no lesse reason. Let vs be coniuinctiue in our reuenge, against him. If thou canst Cuckold him, thou dost thy selfe a pleasure, me a sport. There are many Euent in the Wombe of Time, which wilbe deliuered. Trauerse, go, prouide thy Money. We will haue more of this to morrow. Ad eu.

Rod Where shall we meete i'th'morning?

Iago. At my Lodging.

Rod. Ile be with thee betimes.

Iago. Go too, farewell. Do you heare Rodo go?

Rod. Ile sell all my Land. Exit.

Iago. Thus do I euer make my Foole, my purse:
For I mine owne gain'd knowledge should prophane
I I would time expend with such Snpe,

But

But for my Sport, and Profit: I hate the Moore,
And it is thought abroad, that 'twixt my sheets
She ha's done my Office. I know not if 't be true,
But I, for meere Suspition in that kinde,
Will do, as if for Surety. He holds me well,
The better shall my purpose worke on him:
Cassio's a proper man: Let me see now,
To get his Place, and to plumie vp my will
In double Knauery. How? How? Let's see.
After some time, to abuse Othello's eares,
That he is too familiar with his wife:
He hath a person, and a smooth dispose
To be suspected: fram'd to make women false.
The Moore is of a free, and open Nature,
That thinks men honest, that but seeme to be so,
And will as tenderly be lead by th' Nose
As Asses are:
I haue't: it is engendred · Hell, and Night,
Must bring this monstrous Birth, to the worlds light.

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Montano, and two Gentlemen.

Mon. What from the Cape, can you discerne at Sea?
1. Gent. Nothing at all, it is a high wrought Flood:
I cannot 'twixt the Heauen, and the Mainie,
Descry a Saile.

Mon. Me thinks, the wind hath spoke aloud at Land,
A fuller blast ne're shooke our Battlements:
If it hath ruffian'd so vpon the Sea,
What ribbes of Oake, when Mountaines melt on them,
Can hold the Morties. What shall we heare of this?

2 A Segregation of the Turkish Fleet:
For do but stand vpon the Foaming Shore,
The chidden Billow seemes to pelt the Clowds,
The winde-shak'd-Surge, with high & monstrous Mainie
Seemes to cast water on the burning Beare,
And quench the Guards of th'euer-fixed Poles:
I neuer did like mollestation view
On the enchafted Flood.

Mon. If that the Turkish Fleete
Be not enshelter'd, and embay'd, they are down'd,
It is impossible to beare it out.

Enter a Gentleman.

3 Newes Laddes: our warres are done:
The desperate Tempest hath so bang'd the Turkes,
That their designment halts. A Noble ship of Venice,
Hath seene a greuous wracke and sufferance
On most part of their Fleet.

Mon. How? Is this true?

3 The Ship is heere put in: A Veneressa, Michael Cassio
Lieutenant to the warlike Moore, Othello,
Is come on Shore. the Moore himselfe at Sea,
And is in full Commission heere for Cyprus.

Mon. I am glad on't:
'Tis a worthy Gouvernour

3 But this same Cassio, though he speake of comfort,
Touching the Turkish losse, yet he lookes sadly,
And praye the Moore be safe; for they were parted
With fowle and violent Tempest.

Mon. Pray Heauens he be:

For I haue seru'd him, and the man commands
Like a full Soldier. Let's to the Sea-side (ho)
As well to see the Vessell that's come in,
As to throw-out our eyes for braue Othello,
Euen till we make the Mainie, and th'Eriall blew,
An indistinct regard.

Gent. Come, let's do so;
For euery Minute is expectancie
Of more Arriuance.

Enter Cassio.

Cassio. Thankes you, the valiant of the warlike Isle,
That to approoue the Moore. Oh let the Heauens
Giue him defence against the Elements,
For I haue lost him on a dangerous Sea.

Mon. Is he well ship'd?

Cassio. His Barke is stoutly Timber'd, and his Pilot
Of verie expert, and approu'd Allowance;
Therefore my hope's (not surfett'd to death)
Stand in bold Cure.

Withm. A Saile, a Saile, a Saile.

Cassio. What noise?

Gent. The Towne is empty; on the brow o'th' Sea
Stand rankes of People, and they cry, a Saile.

Cassio. My hopes do shape him for the Gouverneur.

Gent. They do discharge their Shot of Courtisie,
Our Friends, at least.

Cassio. I pray you Sir, go forth,
And giue's truth who 'tis that is arriv'd

Gent. I shall.

Exit

Mon. But good Lieutenant, is your Generall wu'd?

Cassio. Most fortunately. he hath achieu'd a Maid
That paragons description, and wilde Fame:
One that excels the quirkes of Blazoning pens,
And in th'essentiaall Vesture of Creation,
Do's tyre the Ingeniuer.

Enter Gentlemen.

How now? Who ha's put in?

Gent. 'Tis one Iago, Auncient to the Generall.

Cassio. He's had most fauourable, and happie speed:
Tempests th'inselues, high Seas, and howling wundes,
The guster'd-Rockes, and Congregated Sands,
Traitors ensteep'd, to enclogge the guiltlesse Keele,
As hauing sence of Beautie, do omit
Their mortall Natures, letting go safely by The Diuine Desdemona.

Mon. What is she?

Cassio. She that I spake of:
Our great Captains Captaine,
Left in the conduct of the bold Iago,
Whose footing heere anticipates our thoughts,
A Senights speed. Great Ioue, Othello guard,
And swell his Saile with thine owne powrefull breath,
That he may blesse this Bay with his tall Ship,
Make loues quicke pants in Desdemona's Armes,
Giue renew'd fire to our extincted Spirits.

Enter Desdemona, Iago, Rodrigo, and Emilia

Oh behold,
The Riches of the Ship is come on shore:
You men of Cyprus, let her haue your knees.
Haile to thee Ladie: and the grace of Heauen,
Before, behinde thee, and on euery hand
Enwheele thee round

Des. I thanke you, Valiant Cassio,
What tydings can you tell of my Lord?

Cassio

Caf. He is not yet arriv'd, nor know I ought
But that he's well, and will be shortly heere.

Def. Oh, but I feare.

How lost you company?

Cassio. The great Contention of Sea, and Skies
Parted our fellowship But hearke, a Saile.

Within. A Saile, a Saile.

Gent. They give this greeting to the Cittadell
This likewise is a Friend.

Cassio. See for the Newes:
Good Ancient, you are welcome. Welcome Mistris:
Let it not gaulc your patience (good Iago)
That I extend my Manners 'Tis my breeding,
That gives me this bold shew of Curtesie

Iago. Sir, would she give you so much of her lippes,
As of her tongue she oft bestowes on me,
You would have enough

Def. Alas she ha's no speech.

Iago. In faith too much
I finde it still, when I have leave to sleepe.
Marry before your Ladyship, I grant,
She puts her tongue a little in her heart,
And chides with thinking.

Emil. You have little cause to say so.

Iago. Come on, come on, you are Pictures out of doores: Bells in your Parlours: Wilde-Cats in your Kitchens: Saints in your Injuries: Duels being offended.
Players in your Huswifery, and Huswivres in your Beds.

Def. Oh, fie vpon thee, Slanderer.

Iago. Nay, it is true: or else I am a Turke,
You rise to play, and go to bed to worke.

Emil. You shall not write my praise.

Iago. No, let me not.

Desde. What would 't write of me, if thou should 't praise me?

Iago. Oh, gentle Lady, do not put me too, t,
For I am nothing, if not Criticall.

Def. Come on, assay.

There's one gone to the Harbour?

Iago. I Madam.

Def. I am not merry. but I do beguile
The thing I am, by seeming otherwise.
Come, how would 't thou praise me?

Iago. I am about it, but indeed my Invention comes from my pate, as Birdlyme do's from Freeze, it pluckes out Braines and all. But my Muse labours, and thus she is deliv'rd.

*If she be faire, and wise: fairenesse, and wit,
The ones for use, the other vseth it.*

Def. Well prais'd:

How if she be Blacke and Witty?

Iago. If she be blacke, and thereto have a wit,
She le find a white, that shall her blacknesse fire.

Def. Worse, and worse.

Emil. How if Faire, and Foolish?

Iago. She neuer yet was foolish that was faire,
For when her folly helps her to an heere.

Desde. These are old fond Paradoxes, to make Fooles laugh i'th' Alehouse. What miserable praise hast thou for her that's Foule, and Foolish?

Iago. There's none so faule and foolish thereunto,
But do's foule pranks which faire, and wise-ones do.

Desde. Oh heauy ignorance: thou praisest the worst best But what praise equid 't thou bestow on a deseruing woman indeed? One, that in the authorithy of her merit, did iustly put on the vouch of very malice selfe

Iago. She that was ever faire, and neuer proud,
Had Tongue as will, and yet was neuer loud.
Neuer lackt Gold, and yet went neuer gay,
Fled from her wish, and yet said now I may.
She that being angred, her renenge being mlie,
Pard her wrong stay, and her displeasure sue,
She that in wisdom neuer was so fraile,
To change the Gods-head for the Salmons tale:
She that could thinke, and neuer disclose her mind,
See Switors following, and not looke behind.
She was a wight, (if euer such wights were)

Def. To do what?

Iago. To suckle Fooles, and chronicle small Beere.

Desde. Oh most lame and impotent conclusion. Do not learne of him Emilia, though he be thy husband.
How say you (Cassio) is he not a most prophane, and liberall Counsaillor?

Cassio. He speakes home (Madam) you may sellish him more in the Souldier, then in the Scholler.

Iago. He takes her by the palme 1, well said, whisper. With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a Fly as Cassio. I smile vpon her, do. I will giue thee in thine owne Courtship. You say true, 'tis so indeed.
If such tricks as these strip you out of your Lieutenantrie, it had bene better you had not kiss'd your three fingers so oft, which now againe you are most apt to play the Sir, in. Very good well kiss'd, and excellent Curt-sie: 'tis so indeed. Yet againe, your fingers to your lippes? Would they were Cluster-pipes for your fate.

The Moore I know his Trumpet.

Cassio. 'Tis truly so

Def. Let's meete him, and recieue him

Cassio. Loe, where he comes.

Enter Othello, and Attendants

Oth. O, my faire Warriour.

Def. My deere Othello.

Othe. It giues me wonder great, as my content
To see you heere before me.

Oh my Soules Ioy

If after euerie Tempest, come such Calmes,
May the windes blow, till they haue waken'd death:
And let the labouring Barke climbe hills of Seas
Olympus high - and duck againe as low,
As hell's from Heauen If it were now to dye,
'Twere now to be most happy. For I feare,
My Soule hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this,
Succedes in vnknowne Fate.

Def. The Heauens forbid

But that our Loues

And Comforts should encrease

Euen as our dayes do grow.

Othe. Amen to that (sweet Powers)

I cannot speake enough of this content,
It stoppes me heere. it is too much of ioy.
And this, and this the greatest discords be
That ere our hearts shall make.

Iago. Oh you are well run'd now But Ile set downe
the peggs that make this Musicke, as honest as I am.

Oth. Come: let vs to the Castle.

Newes (Friends) our Warres are done :

The Turkes are drown'd.

How do's my old Acquaintance of this Isle?

(Hony) you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus,

I haue found great loue among't them. Oh my Sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I doate

In mine owne comforts. I prythee, good Iago,

Go to the Bay, and disimbarke my Coffers:

Bring thou the Master to the Cittadell,

He is a good one, and his worthynesse

Do's challenge much respect. Come Desdemona,

Once more well met at Cyprus.

Exit Othello and Desdemona.

Iago. Do thou meet me presently at the Harbour. Come thither, if thou be'st Valiant, (as they say base men being in Loue, haue then a Nobilitie in their Natures, more then is native to them) list-me; the Lieutenant to night watches on the Court of Guard. First, I must tell thee this: Desdemona, is directly in loue with him.

Rod. With him? Why, 'tis not possible.

Iago. Lay thy finger thus: and let thy soule be instructed. Marke me with what violence she first lou'd the Moore, but for bragging, and telling her fantastickall lies. To loue him still for prating, let not thy discreet heart thinke it. Her eye must be fed. And what delight shall she haue to looke on the diuell? When the Blood is made dull with the Act of Sport, there should be a game to enflame it, and to giue Satietie a fresh appetite. Loueliness in fauour, simpthy in yeares, Manners, and Beauties: all which the Moore is defectiue in. Now for want of these requir'd Conueniences, her delicate tenderneesse wil finde it selfe abus'd, begin to heaue the, gorge, disrellish and abhorre the Moore, very Nature wil instruct her in it, and compell her to some second choice. Now Sir, this granted (as it is a most pregnant and vnforc'd position) who stands so eminent in the degree of this Fortune, as Cassio do's. a knaue very voluble. no further conscionable, then in putting on the meere forme of Ciuill, and Humaine seeming, for the better compassse of his salt, and most hidden loose Affection? Why none, why none. A slipper, and subtle knaue, a finder of occasion: that he's an eye can stampe, and counterfeite Advantages, though true Advantage neuer present it selfe. A diuells knaue besides, the knaue is handsome, young, and hath all those requisites in him, that folly and greene mindes looke after. A pestilent compleat knaue, and the woman hath found him already.

Rodo. I cannot beleuee that in her, she's full of most blest'd condition.

Iago. Blest'd figges-end. The Wine she drinkes is made of grapes. If shee had beene blest'd, shee would neuer haue lou'd the Moore Blest'd pudding. Didst thou not see her paddle with the palme of his hand? Didst not marke that?

Rod. Yes, that I did: but that was but curtesie.

Iago. Leacherie by this hand: an Index, and obscure prologue to the History of Lust and foule Thoughts. They met so neere with their lippes, that their breathes embrac'd together. Villanous thoughts Roderigo, when these mutabilitie so marshall the way, hard at hand comes the Master, and maine exercise, th'incorporate conclusion: Pish. But Sir, be you rul'd by me. I haue brought you from Venice. Watch you to night. for the Command, Ile lay't vpon you. Cassio knowes you not; Ile not be farre from you. Do you finde some occasion to anger Cassio, either by speaking too loud, or tainting his discipline, or from what other course you please, which the time shall more fauorably minister.

Rod. Well.

Iago. Sir, he's rash, and very sodaine in Choller: and happely may strike at you, prouoke him that he may. for euen out of that will I cause theie of Cyprus to Mutiny. Whose qualification shall come into no true taste againe, but by the displanting of Cassio. So shall you haue a shorter iourney to your desires, by the meanes I shall then haue to preferre them. And the impediment most profitably remoued, without the which there were no expectation of our prosperitie.

Rodo. I will do this, if you can bring it to any opportunity.

Iago. I warrant thee. Meete me by and by at the Cittadell. I must fetch his Necessaries a Shore. Farewell.

Rodo. Adieu.

Exit.

Iago. That Cassio loues her, I do well beleue't:

That she loues him, 'tis apt, and of great Credite.

The Moore (howbeit that I endure him not)

Is of a constant, louing, Noble Nature,

And I dare thinke, he's proue to Desdemona

A most decre husband. Now I do loue her too,

Not out of absolute Lust, (though peradventure

I stand accomprant for as great a sin)

But partly led to dyet my Reuenge,

For that I do suspect the lustie Moore

Hath leap'd into my Seate. The thought whereof,

Doth (like a poysonous Minerall) gnaw my inwardes:

And nothing can, or shall content my Soule

Till I am ceuen'd with him, wife, for wift.

Or sayling so, yet that I put the Moore,

At least into a Ielsonie so strong

That iudgement cannot cure. Which thing to do,

If this poore Trash of Venice, whom I trace

For his quicke hunting, stand the putting on,

Ile haue our Michael Cassio on the hip,

Abuse him to the Moore, in the right garbe

(For I feare Cassio with my Night-Cape too)

Make the Moore thanke me, loue me, and reward me,

For making him egregiously an Ass,

And practising vpon his peace, and quiet,

Euen to madnesse. 'Tis heere: but yet confus'd,

Knaueries plaine face, is neuer scene, till vs'd.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello's, Herald with a Proclamation.

Herald. It is Othello's pleasure, our Noble and Valiant Generall. That vpon certaine tydings now arriv'd, importing the meere perdition of the Turkish Fleete: every man put himselfe into Triumph. Some to daunce, some to make Bonfires, each man, to what Sport and Reuels his addition leads him. For besides these beneficiall Newes, it is the Celebration of his Nuptiall. So much was his pleasure should be proclaimed. All offices are open, & there is full libertie of Feasting from this pre-

present houre of five, till the Bell haue told eleuen
Blesse the Isle of Cyprus, and our Noble Generall Othello.
Exit.

Enter Othello, Desdemona Cassio, and Attendants.
Oth. Good Michael, looke you to the guard to night.
Let's teach our felúes that Honourable stop,
Not to out-sport discretion.

Cas. Iago, hath direction what to do
But notwithstanding with my personall eye
Will I looke to't.

Oth. Iago, is most honest:
Michael, goodnight To morrow with your earliest,
Let me haue speech with you. Come my deere Loue,
The purchase made, the frutes are to enioy,
That profit's yet to come 'twene me and you.
Goodnight.

Exit.

Enter Iago.

Cas. Welcome Iago: we must to the Watch.
Iago. Not this houre Lieutenant: 'tis not yet ten o'th'clocke. Our Generall cast vs thus early for the loue of his Desdemona Who, let vs not therefore blame, he hath not yet made wanton the night with her. and she is sport for Ioue

Cas. She's a most exquisite Lady.

Iago. And Ile warrant her, full of Game.

Cas. Indeed she's a most fresh and delicate creature.

Iago. What an eye she ha's
Methinks it founds a parley to prouocation.

Cas. An inticing eye
And yet me thinks right modest.

Iago. And when she speaks,
Is it not an Alarum to Loue?

Cas. She is indeed perfection.

Iago. Well happinesse to their Sneeetes Come Lieutenant, I haue a slope of Wine, and heere without are a brace of Cyprus Gallants, that would faine haue a measure to the health of blacke Othello.

Cas. Not to night, good Iago, I haue very poore, and vnhappie Braines for drinking. I could well wish Curtesie would inuent some other Custome of entertainment.

Iago. Oh, they are our Friends but one Cup, Ile drinke for you.

Cassio I haue drunke but one Cup to night, and that was craftily qualified too and behold what inouation it makes heere. I am infortunate in the infirmity, and dare not taske my weakenesse with any more

Iago. What man? 'Tis a night of Reuels, the Gallants desire it.

Cas. Where are they?

Iago. Heere, at the doore I pray you call them in.

Cas. Ile do't, but it dislikes me. Exit.

Iago If I can fasten but one Cup vpon him
With that which he hath drunke to night already,
He'll be as full of Quarrell, and offence

As my yong Mistris dogge.

Now my sicke Foole Roderigo,
Whom Loue hath turn'd almost the wrong side out,
To Desdemona hath to night Carrows d.

Potations, pottle-deepe; and he's to watch.

Three else of Cyprus, Noble swelling Spirites,
(That hold their Honours in a wary distance,

The very Elements of this Warlike Isle):

Haue I to night fluster'd with flowing Cups,
And they Watch too.

Now 'mongst this Flocke of drunkards
Am I put to our Cassio in some Action
That may offend the Isle. But here they come.

Enter Cassio, Montano, and Gentlemen.

If Consequence do but approue my dreame,
My Boate sailes freely, both with winde and Streame.

Cas. Fore heauen, they haue giuen me a rowse already.

Mon. Good-faith a litle one: not past a pint, as I am a Souldier.

Iago Some Wine hoa

And let me the Cannakin drinke, clinke:

And let me the Cannakin drinke.

A Souldiers a man Oh, mans life's but a span,
Why then let a Souldier drinke.

Some Wine Boyes

Cas. Fore Heauen: an excellent Song.

Iago. I learn'd it in England where indeed they are most potent in Potting. Your Dane, your Germane, and your swag-belly d Hollander, (drinke hoa) are nothing to your English.

Cassio. Is your Englishmen so exquisite in his drinking?

Iago. Why, he drinkes you with facilitie, your Dane dead drunke. He sweates not to ouerthrow your Al-maine. He giues your Hollander a vomit, ere the next Pottle can be fill'd.

Cas. To the health of our Generall

Mon. I am for it Lieutenant and Ile do you Iustice.

Iago. Oh sweet England

King Stephen. was a worthy Peere,

His Breeches cost him but a Crowne,

He held them Six pence all to deere,

With that he call'd the Tailor Lowne:

He was a wight of high Renowe,

And thou art but of low degree

'Tis Pride that pulls the Country downe,

And take thy awl a Cloake about thee.

Some Wine hoa.

Cassio. Why this is a more exquisite Song then the other.

Iago. Will you heare't againe?

Cas. No for I hold him to be vnworthy of his Place, that do's those things. Well, heau'ns aboue all: and there be soules must be saued, and there be soules must not be saued.

Iago. It's true, good Lieutenant.

Cas. For mine owne part, no offence to the Generall, nor any man of qualitie I hope to be saued

Iago. And so do I too Lieutenant.

Cassio I (but by your leaue) not before me. The Lieutenant is to be saued before the Ancient Let's haue no more of this. let's to our Affaires. Forgiue vs our sinnes Gentlemen let's looke to our businesse Do not thinke Gentlemen, I am drunke, this is my Ancient, this is my right hand, and this is my left. I am not drunke now: I can stand well enough, and I speake well enough.

Gent. Excellent well

Cas. Why very well then you must not thinke then,
that I am drunke. Exit.

Monta. To th' Platforme (Masters) come, let's set the Watch.

Iago. You see this Fellow, that is gone before,

He's a Souldier, fit to stand by Cas,

And giue direction. And do but see his vice;

'Tis to his vertue, a iust Equinox,

113

The

The one as long as th'other. 'Tis pittie of him:
I feare the trust Othello puts him in,
O some odde time of his infirmitie
Will shake this Island.

Mont. But is he often thus?

Iago. 'Tis euermore his prologue to his sleepe,
He'll watch the Horologe a double Set,
It Drinke rocke not his Cradle.

Mont. It were well
The Generall were put in mind of it:
Perhaps he sees it not, or his good nature
Prizes the vertue that appears in Cassio,
And looks not on his euils: is not this true?

Enter Rodrigo.

Iago. How now Rodrigo?

I pray you after the Lieutenant, go.

Mont. And 'tis great pittie, that the Noble Moore
Should hazard such a Place, as his owne Second
With one of an ingraft Infirmities,
It were an honest Aflap, to say so
To the Moore.

Iago. Not I, for this faire Island,
I do loue Cassio well: and would do much
To cure him of this euill, But hearken, what noise?

Enter Cassio pursuing Rodrigo.

Cas. You Rogue: you Rascall.

Mont. What's the matter Lieutenant?

Cas. A Knave teach me my dutie? He beate the Knave into a Twigggen-Bottle.

Rod. Beate me?

Cas. Dost thou prate, Rogue?

Mont. Nay, good Lieutenant:

I pray you Sir, hold your hand.

Cassio. Let me go (Sir)

Or Ile knoeke you o're the Mazard.

Mont. Come, come, you're drunke.

Cassio. Drunke?

Iago. Away I say: go out and cry a Mutinie.
Nay good Lieutenant. Alas Gentlemen.

Helpe ho. Lieutenant. Sir Montano:
Helpe Masters. Heere's a goodly Watch indeed.
Who's that which rings the Bell: Diablo, ho:
The Towne will rise. Fie, fie Lieutenant,
You'll be ashamed for euer.

Enter Othello, and Attendants.

Oth. What is the matter heere?

Mont. I bleed still, I am hurt to th'death. He dies.

Oth. Hold for your liues.

Iago. Hold ho: Liewenant, Sir Montano, Gentlemen:
Haue you forgot all place of sense and dutie?

Hold. The Generall speaks to you: hold for shame.

Oth. Why how now ho? From whence ariseth this?
Are we turn'd Turkes? and to our selues do that
Which Heauen hath forbid the Ottomites.

For Christian shame, put by this barbarous Brawle:
He that stirs next, to earue for his owne rage,
Holds his soule light: He dies vpon his Motion.
Silence that dreadfull Bell, it frights the Isle,
From her propriety. What is the matter, Masters?
Honest Iago, that looks dead with greewing,
Speake. who began this? On thy loue I charge thee?

Iago. I do not know: Friends all, but now, euen now.
In Quarter, and in termes like Bride, and Groome
Deuesting them for Bed: and then, but now:
(As if some Planet had vnwitted men)

Swords out, and tilting one at others breastes,
In opposition bloody. I cannot speake
Any begining to this peeuish oddes,
And would, in Action glorious, I had lost
Those legges, that brought me to a part of it.

Oth. How comes it (Micheal) you are thus forgot?

Cas. I pray you pardon me, I cannot speake.

Oth. Worthy Montano, you were wont to be ciuill.
The grauities, and sillnesse of your youth
The world hath noted. And your name is great
In mouthes of wisest Censure. What's the matter
That you vnlace your reputation thus,
And spend your rich opinion, for the name
Of a night-brawler? Giue me answer to it.

Mont. Worthy Othello, I am hurt to danger,
Your Officer Iago, can informe you,
While I spare speech which something now offends me.
Of all that I do know, nor know I ought
By me, that's said, or done amisse this night,
Vnlesse selfe-charitie be sometimes a vice,
And to defend our selues, it be a fine
When violence assailes vs.

Oth. Now by Heauen,
My blood begins my safer Guides to rule,
And passion (hauing my best iudgement collied)
Assaies to leade the way. If I once stir,
Or do but lift this Arme, the best of you
Shall sinke in my rebuke. Giue me to know
How this foule Rout began: Who set it on,
And he that is approu'd in this offence,
Though he had e'ern d' with me, both as a birth,
Shall loose me. What in a Towne of warre,
Yet wilde, the peoples hearts brim-full of feare,
To Manage private, and domestike Quarrell?
In night, and on the Court and Guard of safetie?
'Tis monstrous: Iago, who began't?

Mont. It partially Affaid, or league in office,
Thou dost d' liuer more, or lesse then Truth,
Thou art no Souldier.

Iago. Touch me not so neere,
I had rather haue this tongue cut from my mouth,
Then it should do offence to Micheal Cassio
Yet I perswade my selfe, to speake the truth
Shall nothing wrong him. This it is Generall:
Montano and my selfe being in speech,
There comes a Fellow crying out for helpe,
And Cassio following him with determin'd Sword
To execute vpon him. Sir, this Gentleman,
Steppes in to Cassio, and entreats his pause:
My selfe, the crying Fellow did pursue,
Least by his clamour (as it so fell out)
The Towne might fall in fright. He, (swift off foote)
Out-ran my purpose. and I return'd then rather
For that I heard the clinke, and fall of Swords,
And Cassio high in oath: Which till to night
I nere might say before. When I came backe
(For this was briefe) I found them close together
At blow, and thrust, euen as againe they were
When you your selfe did part them.
More of this matter cannot I report;
But Men are Men: The best sometimes forget,
Though Cassio did some little wrong to him,
As men in rage strike those that with them best,
Yet surely Cassio I helpe receiue'd
From him that fled some strange Inignitie,
Which patience could not passe.

Oth.

Othe. I know Iago
Thy honestie, and loue doth mince this matter,
Making it light to Cassio Cassio, I loue thee,
But neuer more be Officer of mine.

Enter Desdemona attended

Looke if my gentle Loue be not rais'd vp:
He make thee an example.

Des. What is the matter (Deere?)

Othe. All's well, Sweeting.

Come away to bed. Sir for your hurts,
My selfe will be your Surgeon. Lead him off.

Iago, looke with care about the Towne,
And silence those whom this wil'd brawle distracted.

Come Desdemona, 'tis the Soldiers life,
To haue their Balmy slumbers wak'd wth noise. Exit.

Iago What are you hurt Lieutenant?

Cas. I, past all Surgery.

Iago. Marry Heauen forbid.

Cas. Reputation, Reputation, Reputation Oh I haue lost my Reputation I haue lost the immortall part of my selfe, and what remaines is bestiall. My Reputation,
Iago, my Reputation.

Iago. As I am an honest man I had thought you had received some bodily wound, there is more sence in that then in Reputation. Reputation is an idle, and most false imposition, oft got without merit, and lost without deserving. You haue lost no Reputation at all, vnlesse you repute your selfe such a looser. What man, there are more wayes to recouer the Generall againe. You are but now cast in his moode, (a punishment more in policie, then in malice) euen so as one would beate his offencelesse dogge, to affright an Imperious Lyon Sue to him againe, and he's yours.

Cas. I will rather sue to be despis'd, then to deceiue so good a Commander, with so slight, so drunken, and so indiscreet an Officer. Drunke? And speake Parrat? And squabble? Swagger? Swear? And discourse Fustian with ones owne shadow? Oh thou invisible spirit of Wine, if thou hast no name to be knowne by, let vs call thee Diuell.

Iago. What was he that you follow'd with your Sword? What had he done to you?

Cas. I know not.

Iago. Is't possible?

Cas. I remember a masse of things, but nothing distinctly: a Quarrell, but nothing wherefore. Oh, that men should put an Enemie in their mouthes, to steale away their Braines? that we should with ioy, pleasure, reuell and applause, transforme our selues into Beasts

Iago. Why? But you are now well enough. how came you thus requerred?

Cas. It hath pleas'd the diuell drunkennesse, to giue place to the diuell wrath, one vnperfectnesse, shewes me another to make me frankly despise my selfe

Iago. Come, you are too seuer a Moraller. As the Time, the Place, & the Condition of this Country stands
I could hardly wish this had not befallne: but since it is, as it is, mend it for your owne good.

Cas. I will aske him for my Place againe, he shall tell me, I am a drunkard; had I as many mouthes as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a Foole, and presently a Beast. Oh strange! Every inordinate cup is nobles'd, and the Ingredient is a diuell.

Iago. Come, come: good wine, is a good familiar Creature, if it be well vs'd. exclaime no more against it.
And good Lieutenant, I thinke, you thinke I loue
you.

Cassio I haue well approued it, Sir. I drunke?

Iago. You, or any man liuing, may be drunke at a time man. I tell you what you shall do: Our Generall's Wife, is now the Generall. I may say so, in this respect, for that he hath deuoted, and giuen vp himselfe to the Contemplation, marke and deuotion of, her parts and Graces. Confesse your selfe freely to her: Importune her helpe to put you in your place againe. She is of so free, so kinde, so apt, so blessed a disposition, she holds it a vice in her goodnessse, not to do more then she is requested. This broken ioynt betwene you, and her husband, entreat her to splinter. And my Fortunes against any lay worth naming, this cracke of your Loue, shall grow stronger, then it was before.

Cassio. You aduise me well.

Iago I protest in the sinceritie of Loue, and honest kindnesse.

Cassio. I thinke it freely: and berimes in the morning, I will beseech the vertuous Desdemona to vndertake for me: I am desperate of my Fortunes if they check me

Iago. You are in the right: good night Lieutenant, I must to the Watch.

Cassio. Good night, honest Iago.

Exit Cassio.

Iago. And what's he then,
That saies I play the Villaine?
When this aduise is free I giue, and honest,
Probable to thinking, and indeed the course
To win the Moore againe.
For 'tis most easie

Th'inclining Desdemona to subdue
In any honest Suite. She's fran'd as fruitfull
As the free Elements. And then for her
To win the Moore, were to renounce his Baptisme,
All Seales, and Symbols of redeemed sin:
His Soule is so enfetted to her Loue,
That she may make, vnmake, do what she list,
Euen as her Appetite shall play the God,
With his weak Function. How am I then a Villaine,
To Counsell Cassio to this paralell course,
Directly to his good? Dimittie of bell,
When duels will the blackest sinnes put on,
They do suggest at first with heavenly shewes,
As I do now. For whiles this honest Foole
Plies Desdemona, to repaire his Fortune,
And she for him, pleades strongly to the Moore,
He powre this pestilence into his eare:
That she repeales him, for her bodies Lust:
And by how much she strues to do him good,
She shall vndo her Credite with the Moore.
So will I turne her vertue into pitch,
And out of her owne goodnessse make the Net,
That shall en-mash them all.
How now Roderigo?

Enter Roderigo.

Roderigo. I do follow heere in the Chace, not like a Hound that hunts, but one that fills vp the Crie. My Money is almost spent: I haue bin to night exceedingly well Cudgell'd: And I thinke the issue

will

will bee, I shall haue so much experience for my paines,
And so, with no money at all, and a little mote Wit, re-
turne againe to Venice.

Iago. How poore are they that haue not Patience?
What wound did euer heale but by degrees?
Thou know'st we worke by Wit, and not by Witchcraft
And Wit depends on dilatory time.

Dost not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that shall hurt hath cashier'd Cassio
Though other things grow faire against the Sun,
Yet Fruits that blossom first, will first be ripe.
Content thy selfe, a while. Introth 'tis Morning;
Pleasure, and Action, make the houres seeme short.
Retire thee, go where thou art Billited.
Away, I say, thou shalt know more heereafter.
Nay get thee gone

Exit Rodorigo.

Two things are to be done:
My Wife must moue for Cassio to her Mistis:
He set her on my selfe, a while, to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him iunipe, when he may Cassio finde
Soliciting his wife: I, that's the way
Dull not Deuice, by coldnesse, and delay.

Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter Cassio, Musicians, and Clowns.

Cassio. Masters, play heere, I wil content your paines,
Something that's briefe and bid, goodmorrow General
Clo. Why Masters, haue your Instruments bin in Naples, that they speake i'th' Nose thus?

Mus. How Sir? how?

Clo. Are these I pray you, winde Instruments?

Mus. I marry are they sir.

Clo. Oh, thereby hangs a tale.

Mus. Whereby hangs a tale, sir?

Clo. Marry sir, by many a winde Instrument that I know. But Masters, heere's money for you and the Generall so likes your Musick, that he desires you for loues sake to make no more noise with it.

Mus. Well Sir, we will not.

Clo. If you haue any Musicke that may not be heard, too't againe. But (as they say) to heare Musicke, the Generall do's not greatly care.

Mus. We haue noses such, sir

Clo. Then put vp your Pipes in your bagge, for Ile away. Go, vanish into ayre, away.

Exit Mus.

Cassio. Dost thou heare me, mine honest Friend?

Clo. No, I heare not your honest Friend
I heare you

Cassio. Prythee keepe vp thy Quillets, ther's a poore peece of Gold for thee. if the Gentiewoman that attends the Generall be stirring, tell her, there's one Cassio en-treats her a little saueur of Speech. Wilt thou do this?

Clo. She is stirring sir: if she will stirre hither, I shall seeme to notifie vnto her

Exit Clo.

Enter Iago.

In happy time, Iago.

Iago. You haue not bin a-bed then?

Cassio. Why no. the day had broke before we parted.
I haue made bold (Iago) to send in to your wife.
My suite to her is, that she will to vertuous Desdemona

Procure me some access.

Iago. Ile send her to you presently:
And Ile deuise a meane to draw the Moore
Out of the way, that your conuerse and businessse
May be more free

Exit

Cassio. I humbly thanke you for t. I neuer knew
A Florentine more kinde, and honest;

Enter Emilia.

Emil. Goodmorrow (good Lieutenant) I am sorry
For your displeasure: but all will sure be well.
The Generall and his wife are talking of it;
And she speakes for you stoutly. The Moore resists,
That he you hurt is of great Fame in Cyprus,
And great Affinitie: and that in wholsome Wisedome
He might not but refuse you. But he protests he loues you
And needs no other Suitor, but his likings
To bring you in againe.

Cassio. Yet I beseech you,
If you thinke fit, or that it may be done,
Giue me aduantage of some breefe Discourse
With Desdemona alone.

Emil. Pray you come in.
I will bestow you where you shall haue time
To speake your bosome freely.

Cassio. I am much bound to you.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, Iago, and Gentlemen.

Oth. These Letters giue (Iago) to the Pylot,
And by him do my duties to the Senate
That done, I will be walking on the Workes,
Repaire there to mee

Iago. Well, my good Lord, Ile doo't

Oth. Thus Fortification (Gentlemen) shall we see't?

Gent. Well waite vpon your Lordship.

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Desdemona, Cassio, and Emilia

Des. Be thou assur'd (good Cassio) I will do
All my abilities in thy behalfe

Emil. Good Madam do
I warrant it grieues my Husband,
As if the cause were his

Des. Oh that's an honest Fellow, Do not doubt Cassio
But I will haue my Lord, and you againe
As friendly as you were

Cassio. Bounteous Madam,
What euer shall become of Michael Cassio,
He's neuer any thing but your true Seruant

Des. I know't I thanke you you do loue my Lord.
You haue knowne him long, and be you well assur'd
He shall in strangenesse stand no farther off,
Then in a politique distance.

Cassio. I, but Lady,
That policie may euer last so long,
Or feede vpon such nice and waterish diet,
Or breede it selfe so out of Circumstances,
That I being absent, and my place supply'd,
My Generall will forget my Loue, and Seruice.
Des. Do not doubt that. before Emilia here,

I give thee warrant of thy place. Assure thee,
If I do vow a friendship, I'll performe it
To the last Artticle. My Lord shall neuer rest,
He watch him tame, and talke him out of patience;
His Bed shall seeme a Schoole, his Boord a Shrift,
He intermingle every thing he do's
With Cassio's suite: Therefore be merry Cassio,
For thy Solicitor shall rather dye,
Then giue thy cause away.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Emil. Madam, heere comes my Lord.

Cassio Madam, I'll take my leaue.

Des. Why stay, and heare the speake.

Cassio. Madam, not now: I am very ill at ease,
Vnfit for mine owne purposes

Des. Well, do your discretion. Exit Cassio.

Iago. Hah? I like not that.

Othel. What dost thou say?

Iago. Nothing my Lord, quif—I know not what

Othel. Was not that Cassio parted from my wife?

Iago. Cassio's my Lord? No sure, I cannot thinke it
That he would steale away so guilty-like,
Seeing your comming

Oth. I do beleue 'twas he.

Des. How now my Lord?

I haue bin talking with a Suitor heere,
A man that languishes in your displeasure.

Oth. Who is it you meane?

Des. Why your Lieutenant Cassio? Good my Lord,
If I haue any grace, or power to moue you,
His present reconciliation take.
For if he be not one, that truly loues you,
That erres in Ignorance, and not in Cunning,
I haue no iudgement in an honest face.
I pry thee call him backe

Oth. Went he hence now?

Des. I tooke him so humbled,
That he hath left part of his greefe with mee
To suffer with him. Good Lord, call him backe.

Othel. Not now (Sweet Desdemona) some other time.

Des. But shall't be shortly?

Oth. The sooner (Sweet) for you.

Des. Shall't be to night, at Supper?

Oth. No, not to night

Des. To morrow Dinner then?

Oth. I shall not dine at home.

I meete the Capitaines at the Cittadell
Des. Why then to morrow night, on Tuesday morne,

On Tuesday noone, or night, on Wensday Morne.

I pry thee name the time, but let it not Exceed three dayes. In faith hee's penitent:

And yet his Trespasse, in our common reason
(Saue that they say the warres must make example)

Out of her best, is not almost a fault

T'encurre a priuate checke: When shall he come?

Tell me Othello I wonder in my Soule

What you would aske me, that I should deny.

Or stand so many ring on? What? Michael Cassio,

That came a wooing with you? and so many a time

(When I haue spoke of you disparagingly)

Hath tane your part, to haue so much to do

To bring him in? Trust me, I could do much

Oth. Prythee no more. Let him come when he will
I will deny thee nothing.

Des. Why, this is not a Doone:

'Tis as I should entreate you weare your Gloues,
Or feede on nourishing dishes, or keepe you warme,
Or sue to you, to do a peculiar profit
To your owne person: Nay, when I haue a suite
Wherein I meane to touch your Loue indeed,
It shall be full of porze, and difficult waight,
And scarsefull to be granted.

Oth. I will deny thee nothing.

Wherein, I do beseech thee, grant me this,
To leaue me but a little to my selfe

Des. Shall I deny you? No farewell my Lord.

Oth. Farewell my Desdemona, I'll come to thee straight

Des. Emil come, be as your Fancies teach you.

What ere you be, I am obedient Exit

Oth. Excellent wretch: Perdition catch my Soule

But I do loue thee: and when I loue thee not,

Chaos is come againe.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. What dost thou say, Iago?

Iago. Did Michael Cassio

When he woo'd my Lady, know of your loue?

Oth. He did, from first to last

Why dost thou aske?

Iago. But for a satisfaction of my Thought,
No further harme.

Oth. Why of thy thought, Iago?

Iago. I did not thinke he had bin acquainted with his.

Oth. O yes, and went betweene vs very oft.

Iago. Indeed?

Oth. Indeed? I indeed Discern'd thou ought in that?
Is he not honest?

Iago. Honest, my Lord?

Oth. Honest? I, Honest

Iago. My Lord for ought I know.

Oth. What dost thou thinke?

Iago. Thinke, my Lord.

Oth. Thinke, my Lord? Alas, thou ecchos't me;

As if there were some Monster in thy thought
Too hideous to be shewne. Thou dost mean something:
I heard thee say euen now, thou lik'st not that,
When Cassio left my wife. What didst thou not like?
And when I told thee, he was of my Counsaile,
Of my whole course of wooing, thou cried'st, Indeede?
And didst't contract, and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut vp in thy Braine
Some horrible Conceite: If thou dost loue me,
Shew me thy thoughte.

Iago. My Lord, you know I loue you

Oth. I thinke thou dost

And for I know thou'rt full of Loue, and Honestie,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giu'st them breath,
Therefore these fops of thine, fight me the more
For such things in a false disloyall Knaue
Are trickes of Custome: but in a man that's iust,
They're close dilations, working from the heart,
That Passion cannot rule.

Iago. For Michael Cassio,

I dare be sworn, I thinke that he is honest.

Oth. I thinke so too.

Iago. Men should be what they seeme,
Or those that be not, would they might seeme none.

Oth. Certaine, men should be what they seeme.

Iago. Why then I thinke Cassio's an honest man.

Oth. Nay, yet there's more in this?

I pry thee speake to me, as to thy thinkings,
As thou dost ruminate, and giue thy worst of thoughts

The

The worst of words.

Iago Good my Lord pardon me,
Though I am bound to every Act of dutie,
I am not bound to that. All Slaues are free-
Vnder my Thoughts? Why say, they are vild, and false?
As where's that Palace, whereinto foule things
Sometimes intrude not? Who ha's that breack so pure,
Wherein vncleanly Apprehensions
Keepe Lectes, and Law-dayes, and in Sessions sit
With meditations lawfull?

Oth. Thou do'st conspire against thy Friend (Iago)
If thou but think'st him wrong'd, and mak'st his care
A stranger to thy Thoughts.

Iago. I do beseech you,
Though I perchance am vicious in my guesse
(As I confesse it is my Natures plague
To spy into Abuses, and of my ieaousie
Shapes faults that are not) that your wisdom
From one, that so imperfectly conceits,
Would take no notice, nor build your selfe a trouble
Out of his scattering, and vntrue obseruance.
It were not for your quiet, nor your good,
Nor for my Manhood, Honesty, and Wisdom,
To let you know my thoughts.

Oth. What dost thou meane?

Iago. Good name in Man, & woman (deere my Lord)
Is the immediate Iewell of their Soules;
Who steales my purse, steales trash:
'Tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has bin slaue to thousands:
But he that filches from me my good Name,
Robs me of that, which not enriches him,
And makes me poore indeed.

Oth. He know thy Thoughts.

Iago. You cannot, if my heart were in your hand,
Nor shall not, whilst 'tis in my custodie.

Oth. Ha?

Iago. Oh, beware my Lord, of ieaousie,
It is the Greene-ey'd Monster, which doth mocke
The meate it feeds on. That Cuckold liues in blisse,
Who certaine of his Fate, loues not his wronger:
But oh, what damned minutes iels he ore,
Who dotes, yet doubts: Suspects, yet soundly loues?

Oth. O miserie.

Iago. Poore, and Content, is rich, and rich enough,
But Riches finelesse, is as poore as Winter,
To him that euer feares he shall be poore:
Good Heauen, the Soules of all my Tribe defend
From Ieaousie.

Oth. Why? why is this?

Think'st thou, I'd make a Life of Ieaousie;
To follow still the changes of the Moone
With fresh suspitions? No: to be once in doubt,
Is to be resolu'd. Exchange me for a Goat,
When I shall turne the businesse of my Soule
To such exultate, and blow'd Surmises,
Matching thy inference. 'Tis not to make me Iealous,
To say my wife is faire, feeds well, lones company,
Is free of Speech, Sings, Playes, and Dances:
Where Vertue is, these are more vertuous.
Nor from mine owne weak merites, will I draw
The smallest feare, or doubt of her reuolt,
For she had eyes, and chose me. No Iago,
He see before I doubt; when I doubt, proue;
And on the prooue, there is no more but this,
Away at once with Loue, or Ieaousie.

Ia. I am glad of this: For now I shall haue reason
To shew the Loue and Duty that I beare you
With franker spirit. Therefore (as I am bound)
Receiue it from me. I speake not yet of prooue:
Looke to your wife, obserue her well with Cassio,
Weare your eyes, thus: not Iealous, nor Secure:
I would not haue your free, and Noble Nature,
Out of selfe-Bounty, be abus'd: Looke too't:
I know our Country disposition well:
In Venice, they do let Heauen see the pranks
They dare not shew their Husbands,
Their best Conscience,

Is not to leaue't vndone, but kept vnknowne.

Oth. Dost thou say so?

Iago. She did deceiue her Father, marrying you,
And when she seem'd to shake, and feare your lookes,
She lou'd them most.

Oth. And so she did.

Iago. Why go too then:
Shee that so young could giue out such a Seeming
To seele her Fathers eyes vp, close as Oake,
He thought 'twas Witchcraft,
But I am much too blame:
I humbly do beseech you of your pardon
For too much lounding you.

Oth. I am bound to thee for euer.

Iago. I see this hath a little dash'd your Spirits:

Oth. Not a tot, not a tot.

Iago. Trust me, I feare it has:
I hope you will consider what is spoke
Comes from your Loue.
But I do see y'are mou'd:
I am to pray you, not to straine my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Then to Suspition.

Oth. I will not.

Iago. Should you do so (my Lord)
My speech should fall into such wilde successe,
Which my Thoughts aym'd not.
Cassio's my worthy Friend:
My Lord I see y'are mou'd.

Oth. No, not much mou'd:
I do not thinke but Desdemona's honest.

Iago. Long liue she so;
And long liue you to thinke so.

Oth. And yet how Nature erring from it selfe

Iago. I, there's the point:
As (to be bold with you)
Not to affect many propos'd Matches
Of her owne Cline, Complexion, and Degree,
Whereto we see in all things, Nature tends:
Foh, one may smel in such, a will most ranke,
Foule dilproportions, Thoughts vnnatural.
But (pardon me) I do not in position
Distinctly speake of her, though I may feare
Her will, recoyling to her better iudgement,
May fall to match you with her Country formes,
And happily repent.

Oth. Farewell, farewell:
If more thou dost perceiue, let me know more:
See on thy wife to obserue.

Leaue me Iago.

Iago. My Lord, I take my leave.

Othel. Why did I marry?
This honest Creature (doubtlesse)
Sees, and knowes more, much more then he vnfoldes.

Iago

Iago. My Lord, I would I might intreat your Honor
To scan this thing no farther. Leave it to time,
Although tis fit that Cassio haue his Place;
For sure he fills it vp with great Ability;
Yet if you please, to him off a-while:
You shall by that perceiue him, and his meanes:
Note if your Lady straine his Entertainment
With any strong, or vehement importunitie,
Much will be seene in that. In the meane time,
Let me be thought too busie in my feares,
(As worthy cause I haue to feare I am)
And hold her free, I do beseech your Honor.

Oth. Feare not my government.

Iago. I once more take my leave.

Exit.

Oth. This Fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knowes all Quantities with a learn'd Spirit
Of humane dealings. If I do proue her Haggard,
Though that her Iesses were my deere heart-strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her downe the winde
To prey at Fortune. Haply, for I am blacke,
And haue not those soft parts of Conuersation
That Chamberers haue. Or for I am declin'd
Into the vale of yeares (yet that's not much)
Shee's gone. I am abus'd, and my releefe
Must be to loath her. Oh Curse of Marriage!
That we can call these delicate Creatures ours,
And not their Appetites? I had rather be a Toad,
And liue vpon the vapour of a Dungeon,
Then keepe a corner in the thing I loue
For others vses. Yet 'tis the plague to Great-ones, Prerogatiu'd as they lesse then the Base,
'Tis destiny vnshunnable, like death:
Euen then, this forked plague is Fated to vs,
When we do quicken. Looke where she comes:

Enter Desdemona and Emilia.

If she be false, Heauen mock'd it selfe.
Ile not beleue't.

Des. How now, my deere Othello?
Your dinner, and the generous Islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence.

Oth. I am too blame.

Des. Why do you speake so faintly?
Are you not well?

Oth. I haue a paine vpon my Forehead, heere.

Des. Why that's with watching. 'twill away againe.
Let me but binde it hard, within this houre
It will be well.

Oth. Your Napkin is too little:

Let it alone. Come, Ile go in with you

Exit.

Des. I am very sorry that you are not well.

Emil. I am glad I haue found this Napkin:
This was her first remembrance from the Moore,
My wayward Husband hath a hundred times
Wood'd me to steale it. But she so loues the Token,
(For he coniur'd her, she should euer keepe it)
That she reserves it euermore about her,
To kisse, and talke too. Ile haue the worke tane out,
And giue Iago what he will do with it
Heauen knowes, nor I.
In nothing, but to please his Fantasie.

Enter Iago.

Iago. How now? What do you heere alone?

Emil. Do not you chide: I haue a thing for you.

Iago. You haue a thing for me?
It is a common thing —

Emil. Hah?

Iago. To haue a foolish wite.

Emil. Oh, is that all? What will you giue me now
For that same Handkerchiefe.

Iago. What Handkerchiefe?

Emil. What Handkerchiefe?

Why that the Moore first gaue to Desdemona,
That which so often you did bid me steale.

Iago. Haft stolne it from her?

Emil. No: but she let it drop by negligence,
And to th'aduantage, I being heere, took't vp.
Looke, heere 'tis.

Iago. A good wench, giue it me.

Emil. What will you do with't, that you haue bene
so earnest to haue me filch it?

Iago. Why, what is that to you?

Emil. If it be not for some purpose of import,
Giue't me againe. Poore Lady, shee'l run mad
When she shall lacke it.

Iago. Be not acknowne on't:

I haue vse for it. Go, leaue me.

Exit Emil.

I will in Cassio's Lodging loose this Napkin,
And let him finde it. Trifles light as ayre,
Are to the jealous, confirmations strong,
As proofes of holy Writ. This may do something.
The Moore already changes with my poyson:
Dangerous conceites, are in their Natures poysons,
Which at the first are scarce found to distaste:
But with a little acte vpon the blood,
Burne like the Mines of Sulphure. I did say so.

Enter Othello.

Looke where he comes. Not Poppy, nor Mandragora,
Nor all the drowisie Syrrups of the world
Shall euer medicine thee to that sweete sleepe
Which thou owd'st yesterday.

Oth. Ha, ha, false to mee?

Iago. Why how now Generall? No more of that.

Oth. Auant, be gone: Thou hast set me on the Racke:
I sweare 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Then but to knowe a little.

Iago. How now, my Lord?

Oth. What sence had I, in her stolne houres of Lust?
I saw, & not, thought it not: it harm'd not me:
I slept the next night well, fed well, was free, and merrie,
I found not Cassio's kisses on her Lippes:
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolne,
Let him not know't, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to heare this?

Oth. I had bene happy, if the generall Campe,
Pyoners and all, had tasted her sweet Body,
So I had nothing knowne. Oh now, for euer
Farewell the Tranquill minde; farewell Content;
Farewell the plumed Troopes, and the bigge Wartes,
That makes Ambition, Vertue! Oh farewell,
Farewell the neighing Steed, and the shrill Trumpe,
The Spirit-stirring Drum, th'Eare-piercing Fife,
The Royall Banner, and all Qualitie,
Pride, Pompe, and Circumstance of glorious Warte:
And O you mortall Engines, whose rude throates
Th'immortall Ioues dread Clamours, counterfet,
Farewell. Othello's Occupation's gone.

Iago. Is't possible my Lord?

Oth. Villaine, be sure thou proue my Loue a Whore;
Be sure of it. Giue me the Occular prooffe,

Or

Or by the worth of mine eternall Soule,
Thou had'st bin better haue bin borne a Dog
Then answer my wək'd wrath.

Iago. Is't come to this?

Oth. Make me to see'te or (at the least) so proue it,
That the probatibn beate no Hindge, nor-Looper
To hang a doubt on: Or woe vpon thy life.

Iago. My Noble Lord.

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture me,
Neuer pray more. Abandon all remorse
On Horrors head, Horrors accumulate:
Do deeds to make Heauen weepe, all Earth amaz'd:
For nothing canst thou to damnation adde,
Greater then that.

Iago. O Grace! O Heauen forgieue me!

Are you a Man? Haue you a Soule? or Sense?
God buy you: take mine Office. Oh wretched Foole,
That lou'd to make thine Honesty, a Vice!
Oh monstrous world! Take note, take note (O World)
To be direct and honest, is not safe.

I thanke you for this profit, and from hence
He loue no Friend, sith Loue breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay stay. thou should'st be honest.

Iago. I should be wisest for Honesty's sake,
And looses thair workes for.

Oth. By the World,

I thinke my Wife be honest, and thinke she is not:
I thinke that thou art iust, and thinke thou art not:
He haue some prooffe. My name that was as fresh
As Dians Visage, is now begrim'd and blacke
As mine owne face. If there be Cords, or Knives,
Poyson, or Fire, or suffocating streames,
He not indure it. Would I were satisfied.

Iago. I see you are eaten vp with Passion:
I do repent me; that I put it to you.
You would be satisfied?

Oth. Would? Nay, and I will.

Iago. And may: but how? How satisfied, my Lord?
Would you the super-vision grossely gape on?
Behold heereop'd?

Oth. Death, and damnation. Oh!

Iago. It were a tedious difficultie, I thinke,
To bring them to that Prospect: Dammne them then,
If euer mortall eyes do see them boulder
More then their owne. What then? How then?
What shall I say? Where's Satisfaction?

It is impossible you should see this,
Were they as prime as Goates, as hot as Monkeyes,
As salt as Wolues in pride, and Fooles as grosse
As Ignorance, made drunke. But yet, I say,
If imputation, and strong circumstances,
Which leade directly to the doore of Truth,
Will giue you satisfaction, you might haue't.

Oth. Giue me a liuing reason she's disloyall.

Iago. I do not like the Office.

But sith I am err'd in this cause so farre
(Prick'd too by foolish Honesty, and Loue)
I will go on. I say with Cassio lately,
And being troubled with a raging tooth,
I could not sleepe. There are a kinde of men,
So loose of Soule, that in their sleepes will mutter
Their Affayres: one of this kinde is Cassio.
In sleepe I heard him say, sweet Desdemona,
Let vs be wary, let vs hide our Loues,
And then (Sir) would he grape, and wring my hand:
Cry, oh sweet Creature: then kisse me hard,

As if he pluckt vp kisses by the rootes,
That grew vpon my lippe; laid his Leg ore my Thigh,
And sigh, and kisse, and then cry curst Fate,
That gaue thee to the Moore.

Oth. O monstrous! monstrous!

Iago. Nay, this was but his Dreame.

Oth. But this denoted a fore-gone conclusion,
'Tis a shrew'd doubt, though it be but a Dreame.

Iago. And this may helpe to thicken other proofes,
That do demonstrate thinly.

Oth. He reare her all to peeces,

Iago. Nay yet be wise; yet we see nothing done,
She may be honest yet: Tell me but this,
Haue you not sometimes seene a Handkerchiefe
Spotted with Strawberries, in your wifes hand?

Oth. I gaue her such a one: 'twas my first gift.

Iago. I know not that: but such a Handkerchiefe
(I am sure it was your wifes) did I to day
See Cassio wipe his Beard with.

Oth. If it be that,

Iago. If it be that, or any, it was hers.
It speaks against her with the other proofes.

Oth. O that the Slave had forty thousand Hues.
One is too poore, too weake for my reuenge.

Now do I see 'tis true. Looke heere Iago,
All my fond loue thus do I blow to Heauen. 'Tis gone.
Arise blacke vengeance, from the hollow hell,
Yeeld vp (O Loue) thy Crowne, and hearted Throne
To tyrannous Hate. Swell bosome with thy fraught,
For 'tis of Aspics tongues.

Iago. Yet be content.

Oth. Oh blood, blood, blood.

Iago. Patience I say: your minde may change.

Oth. Neuer Iago. Like to the Ponticke Sea,
Whose Icie Current, and compulsiue course,
Neu'r keepe retyring ebbe, but keepe due on
To the Proponticke, and the Hellespont:
Euen so my bloody thoughts, with violent pace
Shall neu'r looke backe, neu'r ebbe to humble Loue,
Till that a capeable, and wide Reuenge
Swallow them vp. Now by yond Marble Heauen,
In the due reuerence of a Sacred vow,
I heere engage my words.

Iago. Do not rise yet.

Witnesse you euer-burning Lights aboue,
You Elements, that clip vs round about,
Witnesse that heere Iago doth giue vp
The execution of his wit, hands, heart,
To wrong'd Othello's Seruice. Let him command,
And to obey shall be in me remorse,
What bloody businesse euer.

Oth. I greet thy loue,
Not with vaine thanks, but with acceptance bounteous,
And will vpon the instant put thee too't.
Within these three dayes let me heare thee say,
That Cassio is not aliuē.

Iago. My Friend is dead:

'Tis done at your Request.

But let her liue.

Oth. Dammne her lewde Minx:

O damne her, damne her.
Come go with me a-part, I will withdraw
To furnish me with some swift means of death
For the faire Diuell.

Now art thou my Lieutenant.

Iago. I am your owne for euer.

Exeunt.
Scena

Scena Quarta.

Enter Desdemona, Emilia, and Clown.

Def. Do you know Sirrah, where Lieutenant Cassio lyes?

Clow. I dare not say he lies any where.

Def. Why man?

Clow. He's a Soldier, and for me to say a Souldier lyes, 'tis flabbing.

Def. Gb too. where lodges he?

Clow. To tell you where he lodges, is to tel you where I lye

Def. Can any thing be made of this?

Clow. I know not where he lodges, and for mee to de-use a lodging, and say he lies heere, or he lies there, were to lye in mine owne throat

Def. Can you enquire him out? and be edified by report?

Clow. I will Catechize the world for him, that is, make Questions, and by them answer.

Def. Seeke him, bidde him come hither tell him, I haue moou'd my Lord on his behalfe, and hope all will be well.

Clow. To do this, is within the compasse of mans Wit, and therefore I will attempt the doing it. Exit Clow

Def. Where should I loose the Handkerchiefe, Emilia?

Emil. I know not Madam.

Def. Beleeue me, I had rather haue lost my purse Full of Cruzadoes. And but my Noble Moore Is true of minde, and made of no such basenesse, As iealous Creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill-thinking.

Emil. Is he not iealous?

Def. Who, he? I thinke the Sun where he was borne, Drew all such humors from him.

Emil. Looke where he comes.

Enter Othello.

Def. I will not leaue him now, till Cassio be Call'd to him. How is't with you, my Lord?

Oth. Well my good Lady. Oh hardnes to dissemble! How do you, Desdemona?

Def. Well, my good Lord.

Oth. Giue me your hand This hand is moist my Lady.

Def. It hath felt no age, nor knowne no sorrow.

Oth. This argues fruitfullnesse, and liberall heart. Hot, hot, and moist. This hand of yours requires A sequester from Liberty: Fasting, and Prayer, Much Castigation, Exercise deuout, For heere's a yong and swearing Diuell heere That commonly rebels 'Tis a good hand, A franke one.

Def. You may (indeed) say so: For 'twas that hand that gaue away my heart.

Oth. A liberall hand. The hearts of old, gaue hands. But our new Heraldry is hands, not hearts.

Def. I cannot speake of this: Come, now your promise.

Oth. What promise, Chirke?

Def. I haue sent to bid Cassio come speake with you.

Oth. I haue a salt and fussy Rheume offend me: Lend me thy Handkerchiefe.

Def. Heere my Lord,

Oth. That which I gaue you

Def. I haue it not about me.

Oth. Not?

Def. No indeed, my Lord.

Oth. That's a fault: That Handkerchiefe

Did an Egyptian to my Mother giue.

She was a Charmer, and could almost read

The thoughts of people. She told her, while she kept it,

'T would make her Amiable, and subdue my Father

Intirely to her loue. But if she lost it,

Or made a Guift of it, my Fathers eye

Should hold her loathed, and his Spirits should hunt

After new Fancies. She dying, gaue it me,

And bid me (when my Fate would haue me W u'd)

To giue it her. I did so, and take heede on't,

Make it a Darling, like your precious eye.

To loose't, or giue't away, were such perdition,

As nothing else could match.

Def. Is't possible?

Oth. 'Tis true. There's Magicke in the web of it:

A Sybil that had numbred in the world

The Sun to course, two hundred compasses,

In her Prophetick furie sow'd the Worke:

The Wormes were hallowed, that did breede the Silke,

And it was dyde in Mummy, which the Skilfull

Conseru'd of Maidens hearts

Def. Indeed? Is't true?

Oth. Most veritable, therefore looke too't well.

Def. Then would to Heauen, that I had neuer scene't?

Oth. Ha? wherefore?

Def. Why do you speake so startlingly, and rash?

Oth. Is't lost? Is't gon? Speake, is't out o'th' way?

Def. Bisse vs.

Oth. Say you?

Def. It is not lost but what and if it were?

Oth. How?

Def. I say it is not lost.

Oth. Fetcht, let me see't.

Def. Why so I can: but I will not now:

This is a trick to put me from my suite,

Pray you let Cassio be receiu'd againe.

Oth. Fetch me the Handkerchiefe,

My minde mis-giues.

Def. Come, come: you'l neuer meete a more sufficient man

Oth. The Handkerchiefe.

Def. A man that all his time

Hath founded his good Fortunes on your loue:

Shar'd dangers with you.

Oth. The Handkerchiefe

Def. Insooth, you are too blame.

Oth. Away.

Exit Othello.

Emil. Is not this man iealous?

Def. I neu'r saw this before.

Sure, there's some wonder in this Handkerchikfe,

I am most vnhappy in the losse of it.

Emil. 'Tis not a yeare or two shewes vs a man.

They are all but Stomackes, and we all but Food,

They eate vs hungerly, and when they are full

They belch vs.

Enter Iago, and Cassio.

Looke you, Cassio and my Husband.

Iago. There is no other way 'tis the must doot:

And loe the happinesse: go, and importune her.

Def.

Des. How now (good Cassio) what's the newes with you?

Cassio. Madam, my former suite. I do beseech you, That by your vertuous meanes, I may againe Exist, and be a member of his loue, Whom I, with all the Office of my heart Intirely honour, I would not be delay'd. If my offence, be of such mortall kinde, That nor my Service past, nor present Sorrowes, Nor purpos'd merit in futurity, Can ranfome me into his loue againe, But to know so, must be my benefit: So shall I cloath me in a forc'd content, And shut my selfe vp in some other course To Fortunes Almes.

Des. Alas (thrice-gentle Cassio) My Aduocation is not now in Tune; My Lord, is not my Lord; nor should I know him, Were he in Favour, as in Humour alter'd. So helpe me every spirit sanctified, As I haue spoken for you all my best, And stood within the blanke of his dispicaure For my free speech. You must awhile be patient: What I can do, I will and more I will Then for my selfe, I dare. Let that suffice you.

Iago. Is my Lord angry?

Emil. He went hence but now. And certainly in strange vnquietnesse.

Iago. Can he be angry? I haue scene the Cannon When it hath blowne his Rankes into the Ayre, And like the Diuell from his very Arme Pufft his owne Brother: And is he angry? Something of moment then: I will go meet him, There's matter in't indeed, if he be angry.

Exit

Des. I prythee do so. Something sure of State, Either from Venice, or some vnatch'd practise Made demonstrable heere in Cyprus, to him, Hath puddled his cleare Spirit: and in such cases, Mens Natures wrangle with inferiour things, Though great ones are their object. 'Tis euen so. For let our finger ake, and it endues Our other healthfull members, euen to a sense Of paine. Nay, we must thinke men are not Gods, Nor of them looke for such obseruancie As fit the Bridail Beshrew me much, Emilia, I was (vnhandsome Warrior, as I am) Arraigning his vnkindnesse with my soule: But now I finde, I had suborn'd the Witnesse, And he's Indited falsely.

Emil. Pray heauen it bee State matters, as you thinke, and no Conception, Nor no lealous Toy concerning you.

Des. Alas the day, I neuer gaue him cause.

Emil. But Iealous soules will not be answer'd so; They are not euer lealous for the cause, But lealous, for they're lealous. It is a Monster Begot vpon it selfe, borne on it selfe.

Des. Heauen keepe the Monster from Othello's mind:

Emil. Lady, Amen.

Des. I will go seeke him. Cassio, walke heere about: If I doe finde him fit, Ile move your suite, And seeke to effect it to my vttermost.

Exit

Cas. I humbly thanke your Ladyship.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. Saue you (Friend Cassio.)

Cassio. What make you from home?

How is't with you, my most faire Bianca? Indeed (sweet Loue) I was coming to your house.

Bian. And I was going to your Lodging, Cassio. What keepe a weeke away? Seuen dayes, and Nights? Eight score eight houres? And Louers absent howres More tedious then the Diall, eight score times? Oh weary teek ning.

Cassio. Pardon me, Bianca.

I haue this while with leaden thoughts bene prest, But I shall in a more continuat time Strike off this score of absence. Sweet Bianca Take me this worke out

Bianca. Oh Cassio whence came this? This is some Token from a newer Friend, To the felt-Absence: now I feele a Cause: Is't come to this? Well, well.

Cassio. Go too, woman:

Throw your vild gesses in the Diuels teeth, From whence you haue them. You are lealous now, That this is from some Mistris, some remembrance; No, in good troth Bianca.

Bian. Why, who's it?

Cassio. I know not neither: I found it in my Chamber, I like the worke well; Ere it be demanded (As like enough it will) I would haue it coppied: Take it, and doo't, and leaue me for this time.

Bian. Leaue you? Wherefore?

Cassio. I do attend heere on the Generall, And thinke it no addition nor my wish To haue him see me woman'd.

Bian. Why, I pray you?

Cassio. Not that I loue you not.

Bian. But that you do not loue me.

I pray you bring me on the way a little, And say, if I shall see you soone at night?

Cassio. 'Tis but a little way that I can bring you, For I attend heere: But Ile see you soone.

Bian. 'Tis very good. I must be circumstance'd.

Exeunt omnes.

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Othello, and Iago.

Iago. Will you thinke so?

Oth. Thinke so, Iago?

Iago. What, to kisse in priuate?

Oth. An vnauthoriz'd kisse?

Iago. Or to be naked with her Friend in bed, An houre, or more, not meaning any harme?

Oth. Naked in bed (Iago) and not meane harme? It is hypocrisie against the Diuell.

They chat meane vertuously, and yet do so, The Diuell their vertue tempts, and they tempt Heauen.

Iago. If they do nothing, 'tis a Veniall slip: But if I giue my wife a Handkerchiefe.

Oth. What then?

Iago. Why then 'tis hers (my Lord) and being hers, She may (I thinke) bestow it on any man.

Oth. She is Protectresse of her honor too: May she giue that?

Iago.

Iago Her honor is an Essence that's not scene,
They haue it very oft, that haue it not.
But for the Handkerchiefe.

Oth. By heauen, I would most gladly haue forgot it:
Thou saidst (oh, it comes ore my memorie,
As doth the Raven ore the infectious house:
Booing to all) he had my Handkerchiefe.

Iago. I - what of that?

Oth. That's not so good now.

Iago. What if I had said, I had scene him do you wrong?
Or heard him say (as Knaues be such abroad,
Who haue by their owne impo-rtunate suit,
Or voluntary dotage of some Mistis,
Conuenced or supply'd them cannot chuse
But they must blab)

Oth. Hath he said any thing?

Iago. He hath (my Lord) but be you well assu'd,
No more then he leu-sweare.

Oth. What hath he said?

Iago. Why, that he did. I know not what he did.

Oth. What? What?

Iago. Lye.

Oth. With her?

Iago. With her? On her - what you will.

Oth. Lye with her? lye on her? We say lye on her,
when they be lye-her Lye with her that's tullsome.
Handkerchiefe Confessions - Handkerchiefe. To con-fesse, and be hang'd for his labour First, to be hang'd, and then to confesse I tremble at it Nature would not inuest her selfe in such shadowing passion, without some Instruction. It is not words that shakes me thus, (pish) Noses, Eares, and Lippes: is't possible. Confesse? Hand-kerchiefe? O diuell.

Falls into a Trance.

Iago. Worke on,

My Medicine workes Thus credulous Fooles are caught,
And many worthy, and chaste Dames euen thus,
(All guiltlesse) meete reproach; what hoa? My Lord?
My Lord, I say. Othello

Enter Cassio

How now Cassio?

Cas. What's the matter?

Iago. My Lord is faine into an Epileptic,
This is his second Fit - he had one yesterday.

Cas. Rub him about the Temples

Iago. The Lethargie must haue his quyet course
If not, he foames at mouth and by and by Breakes out to sauge madnesse. I ool e, he stirres
Do you withdraw your selfe a little while,
He will recouer straight when he is gone,
I would on great occasion, speake with you
How is it Generall? Haue you not hurt your head?

Oth. Dost thou mocke me?

Iago. I mocke you not, by Heauen
Would you would beare your Fortune like a Man.

Oth. A Horred man's a Monster, and a Beast

Iago. Ther's many a Beast then in a populous City,
And many a ciuill Monster.

Oth. Did he confesse it?

Iago. Good Sir, be a man:
Thinke euery bearded fellow that's but yoa'k'd
May draw with you There's Millions now alue,
That nightly lye in those vnproper beds,
Which they dare sweare perituar. Your case is better.
Oh, 'tis the spight of hell, the Fiends Atch-mock
To lip a wanton in a secure Cowch;

And so suppose her chaste. No, let me know,
And knowing what I am, I know what she shall be.

Oth. Oh, thou art wise - 'tis certaine,

Iago. Stand you a while apart,
Confine your selfe but in a patient List,
Whil'st you were heere, o're-whelmed with your griefe
(A passion most resulting such a man)
Cassio came hither I shifted him away,
And layd good scufes vpon your Extracie,
Bad him anon returne and heere speake with me,
The which he promis'd. Do but encaue your selfe,
And marke the Fleeres, the Gybes, and notable Scoornes
That dwell in euery Region of his face,
For I will make him tell the Tale anew,
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when
He hath, and is againe to cope your wife
I say, but marke his gesture marry Patience,
Or I shall say y'are all in all in Splicene,
And nothing of a man.

Oth. Dost thou heare, Iago,
I will be found most cunning in my Patience
But (dost thou heare) most bloody

Iago. That's nor amisse,
But yet keepe time in all will you withdraw?
Now will I question Cassio of Bianca,
A Huswife that by selling her desires
Buyes her selfe Bread, and Cloath. It is a Creature
That dotes on Cassio, (as 'tis the drumpets plague
To be-guile many, and be be-guil'd by one)
He, when he heares of her, cannot restraime
From the excelsse of Laughter. Heere he comes.

Enter Cassio,

As he shall smile, Othello shall go mad
And his vnbookish Ielousie must conserue
Poore Cassio s smiles, gestures, and light behauiours
Quite in the wrong How do you Lieutenant?

Cas. The worse, that you giue me the addition,
Who'e want euen kills me.

Iago. Ply Desdemona well, and you are sure on't:
Now, if this Suit lay in Bianca's dowre,
How quickly should you speed?

Cas. Alas poore Cantiffe

Oth. I ooke how he laughs already.

Iago. I neuer knew woman loue man so.

Cas. Alas poore Rogue, I thinke indeed she loues me

Oth. Now he denies it fruntly. and laughs it out.

Iago. Do you heare Cassio?

Oth. No: he importunes him

To tell it o're go too, well said, well said.

Iago. She giues it out, that you shall marry her.
Do you intend it?

Cas. Ha, ha, ha

Oth. Doye triumph, Romaine? do you triumph?

Cas. I marry. What? A customer spythee beare
Some Charitie to my wit, do not thinke it
So vnwholesome Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. So, so, so, so. they laugh, that winnes.

Iago. Why the cry goes, that you marry her.

Cas. Prythee say true.

Iago. I am a very Villaine else.

Oth. Haue you scoar'd me? Well

Cas. This is the Monkey's owne giuing out:
She is perfwaded I will marry her
Out of her owne loue & flattery, not out of my promise.

Othello

Oth. Iago becomes me: now he begins the story.

Cassio. She was heere euen now. she haunts me in euery place. I was the other day talking on the Seabanke with certaine Venetians, and thither comes the Bauble, and falls me thus about my neck.

Oth. Crying oh deere Cassio, as it were, his iesture imports it.

Cassio. So hangs, and lolls, and weepes vpon me: So shakes, and pulls me. Ha, ha, ha.

Oth. Now he tells how she pluckt him to my Chamber - oh, I see that nose of yours, but not that dogge, I shall throw it to.

Cassio. Well, I must leaue her companie.

Iago. Before me. looke where she comes.

Enter Bianca.

Cas. 'Tis such another litchew marry a perfum'd one? What do you meane by this haunting of me?

Bian. Let the diuell, and his dam haunt you. what did you meane by that same Handkerchiefe, you gaue me euen now? I was a fine Foole to take it. I must take out the worke? A likely piece of worke, that you should finde it in your Chamber, and know not who left it there. This is some Minxes token, & I must take out the worke? There, giue it your Hobbey-horse, wherefocuer you had it, 'le take out no worke on't.

Cassio. How now, my sweete Bianca?

How now? How now?

Oth. By Heauen, that should be my Handkerchiefe.

Bian. If you'le come to supper to night you may, if you will not, come when you are next prepar'd for. Exit

Iago. After her: after her.

Cas. I must, shee'l rayle in the streets else.

Iago. Will you sup there?

Cassio. Yes, I intend so.

Iago. Well, I may chance to see you. for I would ver-ry faine speake with you.

Cas. Prythee come - will you?

Iago. Go too - say no more.

Oth. How shall I murder him, Iago.

Iago. Did you perceiue how he laugh'd at his vice?

Oth. O, Iago.

Iago. And did you see the Handkerchiefe?

Oth. Was that mine?

Iago. Yours by this hand - and to see how he prizes the foolish woman your wife. she gaue it him, and he hath giu'n it his whore.

Oth. I would haue him nine yceeres a killing: A fine woman, a faire woman, a sweete woman?

Iago. Nay, you must forget that.

Othello. I, let her rot and perish, and be damn'd to night, for she shall not liue. No, my heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Oh, the world hath not a sweeter Creature she might lye by an Emperours side, and comand him Taskes.

Iago. Nay, that's not your way.

Oth. Hang her, I do but say what she is. so delicate with her Needle - an admirable Musitian. Oh she will sing the Sauvagenesse out of a Beare. of so high and plenteous wit, and inuention?

Iago. She's the worse for all this.

Oth. Oh, a thousand, a thousand times: And then of so gentle a condition?

Iago. I too gentle.

Oth. Nay that's certaine:

But yet the pittie of it, Iago: oh Iago, the pittie of it

Iago.

Iago. If you are so fond ouer her iniquitie: giue her patient to offend, for if it touch not you, it comes neere nobody.

Oth. I will chop her into Messes - Cuckold me?

Iago. Oh, 'tis foule in her.

Oth. With mine Officer?

Iago. That's fouler.

Oth. Get me some poyson, Iago, this night. Ile not expostulate with her: least her body and beautie vnpro-uide my mind againe: this night Iago.

Iago. Do it not with poyson, strangle her in her bed, Even the bed she hath contaminated.

Oth. Good, good:

The Iustice of it pleases very good,

Iago. And for Cassio, let me be his vndertaker:

You shall heare more by midnight.

Enter Lodouico, Desdemona, and Attendants.

Oth. Excellent good: What Trumpet is that same?

Iago. I warrant something from Venice,

'Tis Lodouico this, comes from the Duke.

See, your wife's with him.

Lod. Saue you worthy Generall.

Oth. With all my heart Sir.

Lod. The Duke, and the Senators of Venice greet you.

Oth. I kisse the Instrument of their pleasures.

Des. And what's the newes, good cozen Lodouico?

Iago. I am very glad to see you Signior

Welcome to Cyprus.

Lod. I thanke you. how do's Lieutenant Cassio?

Iago. Lue's Sir,

Des. Cozen, there's false betweene him, & my Lord, A vnkind breach: but you shall make all well.

Oth. Are you sure of that?

Des. My Lord?

Oth. This faile you not to do, as you will

Lod. He did not call he's busie in the paper, Is there deuision 'twixt my Lord, and Cassio?

Des. A most vnhappy one: I would do much T'attonel; them, for the loue I beare to Cassio.

Oth. Fire, and brimstone.

Des. My Lord.

Oth. Are you wise?

Des. What is he angrie?

Lod. May beth Letter mou'd him.

For as I thinke, they do command him home.

Deputing Cassio in his Government.

Des. Trust me, I am glad on't.

Oth. Indeed?

Des. My Lord?

Oth. I am glad to see you mad.

Des. Why, sweete Othello?

Oth. Diuell.

Des. I haue not deseru'd this.

Lod. My Lord, this would not be belieu'd in Venice, Though I should sweare I saw't. 'Tis very much, Make her amends: she weepes

Oth. Oh diuell, diuell:

If that the Earth could teeme with womans teares, Each drop she falls, would proue a Crocodile: Out of my sight.

Des. I will not stay to offend you.

Lod. Truly obedient Lady.

I do beseech your Lordship call her backe.

Oth.

Oth. Mistress.

Def. My Lord.

Oth. What would you with her, Sir?

Lod. Who I, my Lord.

Oth. I, you did wish, that I would make her turne:

Sir, she can turne, and turne - and yet go on

And turne againe. And she can weepe, Sir, weepe.

And she's obedient - as you say obedient

Very obedient: proceed you in your reates.

Concerning this Sir, (oh well-painted passion)

I am commended home - get you away.

He send for you anon Sir I obey the Mandate,

And will returne to Venice. Hence, auant:

Cassio shall haue my Place. And Sir, to night

I do entreat, that we may sup together.

You are welcome Sir to Cyprus.

Goates, and Monkeys,

Exit.

Lod. 'Tis this the Noble Moore, whom our full Senate

Call all in all sufficient? Is this the Nature

Whom Passion could not shake? Whose solid vertue

The shot of Accident, nor dart of Chance

Could neither graze, nor pierce?

Iago. He is much chang'd.

Lod. Are his wits safe? Is he not light of Braine?

Iago. He's that he is. I may not breath my censure.

What he might be if what he might, he is not,

I would to heauen he were.

Lod. What? Strike his wife?

Iago. Faith that was not so well: yet would I knew

That stroke would proue the worst.

Lod. Is it his wife?

Or did the Letters, worke vpon his blood,

And new create his fault?

Iago. Alas, alas.

It is not honestie in me to speake

What I haue seene, and knowne. You shall obserue him,

And his owne courtes will deonte him so,

That I may saue my speech: do but go after

And marke how he continues,

Lod. I am sorry that I am decei'd in him. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello and Emilia.

Oth. You haue seene nothing then?

Emil. Not euer heard - nor euer did suspect

Oth. Yes, you haue seene Cassio, and she together.

Emil. But then I saw no harme and then I heard,

Each syllable that breath made vp betweene them.

Oth. What? Did they neuer whisper?

Emil. Neuer my Lord.

Oth. Nor send you out o'th' way?

Emil. Neuer.

Oth. To fetch her Fan, her Gloues, her Mask, nor no-

Emil. Neuer my Lord. (thing?)

Oth. That's strange.

Emil. I durst (my Lord) to wager, she is honest:

Lay downe my Soule at stake If you thinke other,

Remove your thought It doth abuse your bosome:

If any wretch haue put this in your head,

Let Heauen requit it with the Serpents curse,

For if she be not honest, chaste, and true,
There's no man happy. The purest of their Wiues
Is foule as Slander.

Oth. Bid her come hither go. Exit Emilia.

She saies enough: yet she's a simple Baud

That cannot say as much. This is a subtle Whore

A Closset Lock and Key of Villanous Secrets,

And yet she'll kneele, and pray - I haue seene her do so.

Enter Desdemona, and Emilia.

Def. My Lord, what is your will?

Oth. Pray you Chucke come hither.

Def. What is your pleasure?

Oth. Let me see your eyes: looke in my face.

Def. What horrible Fancie's this?

Oth. Some of your Function Mistress;

Leave Procreants alone, and shut the doore:

Cough, or cry hem; if any body come:

Your Mystery, your Mystery May dispatch. Exit Em.

Def. Vpon my knee, what doth your speech import
I vnderstand a Fury in your words.

Oth. Why? What art thou?

Def. Your wisemy Lord your true and loyall wife.

Othello Come swear it damne thy selfe, least being like one of Heuen, the diuels themselbes should feare to ceaze thee. Therefore be double damn'd: swear thou art honest

Def. Heauen doth truly know it.

Oth. Heauen truly knowes, that thou art false as hell.

Def. To whom my Lord?

With whom? How am I false?

Oth. Ah Desdemona, away, away, away.

Def. Alas the heavy day why do you weepe?

Am I the motiue of these teares my Lord?

If happily you my Father do suspect

An Instrument of this your calling backe,

Lay not your blame on me. If you haue lost him,

I haue lost him too.

Oth. Had I pleas'd Heauen,

To try me with Affliction, had they rain'd

All kind of Sores, and Shames on my bare-heads

Steep'd me in pouertie to the very kippes,

Giuen to Captiuitie, me, and my vnmoff shopes,

I should haue found in some place of my Soule

A drop of patience But alas, to make me

The fixed Figure for the time of Scorne,

To point his slow, and mouing finger at.

Yet could I beare that too, well, very well:

But there where I haue garner'd vp my heart,

Where either I must liue, or beare no life,

The Fountaine from the which my currant runnes,

Or else dries vp to be discarded thence,

Or keepe it as a Cestern, for foule Toades

To knot and gender in. Turne thy complexion there:

Patience, thou young and Rose-lip'd Cherubin,

I here looke grim as hell.

Def. I hope my Noble Lord esteemes me honest.

Oth. Oh I, as Sommer Flies are in the Shambles,

That quicken euen with blowing. Oh thou weed:

Who art so louely faire, and smell'st so sweete,

That the Sense akes at thee,

Would thou had'st neuer bin borne.

Def. Alas, what ignorant sin haue I committed?

Oth. Was this faire Paper? This most goodly Booke

Made to write Whore vpon? What committed,

V V 2

Com.

Committed? Oh, thou publicke Commoner,
I should make very Forges of my cheekes,
That would to Cynders burne vp Modestie.
Did I but speake thy deedes, What committed?
Heauen stoppes the Nose at it, and the Moone winks:
The bawdy winde that kisses all it meeter,
Is hush'd within the hollow Myne of Earth
And will not hear't. What committed

Def. By Heauen you do me wrong.

Othe. Are not you a Strumpet?

Def. No, as I am a Christian.

If to preferue this vessell for my Lord,
From any other foule vnlawfull touch
Be not to be a Strumpet, I am none.

Othe. What, not a Whore?

Def. No, as I shall be sau'd.

Othe. Is't possible?

Def. Oh Heauen forgiue vs.

Othe. I cry you mercy then.

Iooke you for that cunning Whore of Venice,
That married with Othello. You Mistis,

Enter Emilia.

That haue the office opposite to Saint Peter,
And keepes the gate of hell. You, you: I you.
We haue done our course: there's money for your paines:
I pray you turne the key, and keepe our counsaile. Exit.

Emil. Alas, what do's this Gentleman conceiue?

How do you Madam? how do you my good Lady?

Def. Faith, halfe a sleepe.

Emil. Good Madam,

What's the matter with my Lord?

Def. With who?

Emil. Why, with my Lord, Madam?

Def. Who is thy Lord?

Emil. He that is yours, sweet Lady.

Def. I haue none. do not talke to me, Emilia,

I cannot weepe: nor answeres haue I none,
But what should go by water. Prythee to night,
Lay on my bed my wedding sheetes, remember,
And call thy husband hither.

Emil. Heere's a change indeed.

Exit.

Def. 'Tis meete I should be vs'd so: very meete.
How haue I bin behau'd, that he might sticke
The small'st opion on my least misse?

Enter Iago, and Emilia.

Iago. What is your pleasure Madam?
How is't with you?

Def. I cannot tell: those that do teach yong Babes
Do it with gentle meanes, and easie taskes:
He might haue chid me so for in good faith
I am a Child to chiding.

Iago. What is the matter Lady?

Emil. Alas (Iago) my Lord hath so bewhor'd her,
Throwne such dispiight, and heauy termes vpon her
That true hearts cannot beare it.

Def. Am I that name, Iago?

Iago. What name (saie Lady?)

Def. Such as she said my Lord did say I was.

Emil. He call'd her whore: a Begger in his drinke;
Could not haue laid such termes vpon his Caller.

Iago. Why did he so?

Def. I do not know: I am sure I am none such.

Iago. Do not weepe, do not weepe: alas the day.

Emil. Hath she forsooke so many Noble Matches?
Her Father? And her Country? And her Friends?

To be call'd Whore? Would it not make one weepe?

Def. It is my wretched Fortune.

Iago. Beshrew him for't:

How comes this Tricke vpon him?

Def. Nay, Heauen doth know.

Emil. I will be hang'd, if some eternall Villaine,
Some busie and insinuating Rogue,
Some cogging, cozening Slaue, to get some Office,
Haue not deuiz'd this Slander: I will be hang'd else.

Iago. Fie, there is no such man: it is impossible.

Def. If any such there be, Heauen pardon him.

Emil. A halter pardon him:

And hell gnaw his bones.

Why should he call her Whore?

Who keepes her companie?

What Place? What Time?

What Forme? What liklyhood?

The Moore's abus'd by some most villanous Knaue,

Some base notorious Knaue, some scurvy Fellow.

Oh Heauens, that such companions shou'd st vnfold,

And put in euery honest hand a whip

To lash the Rascalls naked through the world,

Even from the East to th' West.

Iago. Speake within doore

Emil. Oh fie vpon them: some such Squire he was

That turn'd your wit, the seamy-side without,

And made you to suspect me with the Moore.

Iago. You are a Foole: go too.

Def. Alas Iago,

What shall I do to win my Lord againe?

Good Friend, go to him: for by this light of Heauen,

I know not how I lost him. Heere I kneele:

If ere my will did trespasse 'gainst his Loue,

Either in discourse of thought, or a stull deed,

Or that mine Eyes, mine Eares, or any Sence

Delighted them: or any other Forme.

Or that I do not yet, and euer did,

And euer will, (though he do shake me off

To beggerly diuorcement) Loue him deere,

Comfort forswear me. Vnkindnesse may do much,

And his vnkindnesse may defeat my life,

But neuer taynt my Loue: I cannot say Whore,

It do's abhorre me now I speake the word,

To do the Act, that might the addition earne,

Not the worlds Masse of vanitie could make me.

Iago. I pray you be content: 'tis but his humour

The businesse of the State do's him offence.

Def. If'twere no other.

Iago. It is but so, I warrant,

Hearke how these Instruments summon to supper:

The Messengers of Venice stales the meate,

Go in, and weepe not: all things shall be well.

Exeunt Desdemona and Emilia.

Enter Rodorigo.

How now Rodorigo?

Red. I do not finde

That thou deal'st iustly with me.

Iago. What in the contrarie?

Rodori. Euery day thou darts me with some deuise
Iago, and rather, as it seemes to me now, keep'st from me all conueniencie, then suppliest me with the least aduantage of hope: I will indeed no longer endure it. Nor am I yet perswaded to put vp in peace, what already I haue foolishly suffred.

Iago. Will you heare me Rodorigo?

Rodori. I

Roder. I haue heard too much: and your words and Performances are no kin together.

Iago You charge me most vnjustly.

Rodo. With naught but truth: I haue wasted my selfe out of my meanes. The Jewels you haue had from me to deliuer Desdemona, would halfe haue corrupted a Votarist. You haue told me she hath receiv'd them, and return'd me expectations and comforts of sodaine respect, and acquaintance, but I finde none.

Iago. Well, go too very well

Rod Very well, go too I cannot go too, (man) nor tis not very well. Nay I thinke it is scurvy and begin to finde my selfe sopt in it.

Iago Very well.

Roder. I tell you, 'tis not very well I will make my selfe knowne to Desdemona. If she will returne me my Jewels, I will giue ouer my Suit, and repent my vnlawfull solicitation. If not, assure your selfe, I will seeke satisfaction of you

Iago You haue said now.

Rodo I-and sa d nothing but what I protest intendment of doing.

Iago Why, now I see there's mettle in thee and euen from this instant do build on thee a better opinion then ever before giue me thy hand Roderigo Thou hast taken against me a most iust exception. but yet I protest I haue dealt most directly in thy Affaire.

Rod It hath not appeer'd.

Iago I grant indeed it hath not appeer'd and your suspicion is not without wit and iudgement. But Roderigo, if thou hast 'hat in thee indeed, which I haue greater reason to beleuee now then euer (I meane purpose, Courage, and Valour) this night shew it. If thou the next night following enioy not Desdemona, take me from this world with Treacherie, and deuise Engines for my life.

Rod Well what is it? Is it within, reason and compasse?

Iago. Sir, there's especiall Commission come from Venice to depute Cassio in Othello's place.

Rod. Is that true? Why then Othello and Desdemona returne againe to Venice

Iago Oh no he goes into Mauritania and taketh away with him the faire Desdemona, vnlesse his abode be lingred heere by some accident. Wherein none can be so determinate, as the removing of Cassio.

Rod. How do you meane removing him?

Iago. Why, by making him vncapable of Othello's place knocking out his braines.

Rod And that you would haue me to do.

Iago. I if you dare do your selfe a profit, and a night He sups to night with a Harlotry and thither will I go to him. He knowes not yet of his Honourable Fortune, if you will watch his going thence (which I will fashion to fall out betweene twelue and one) you may take him at your pleasure. I will be neere to second your Attempt, and he shall fall betweene vs. Come, stand not amaz'd at it, but go along with me I will shew you such a necessitie in his deatn, that you shall thinke your selfe bound to put it on him. It is now high suppertime and the night growes to wofl. About it

Rod. I will heare further reason for this.

Iago And you shalbe satisfid.

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Othello, Lodouico, Desdemona, Emilia, and Attendants.

Lod I do beseech you Sir, trouble your selfe no further.

Oth. Oh pardon me: 'twill do me good to walke.

Lodouic. Madam, good night. I humbly thanke your Ladyship

Des. Your Honour is most welcome

Oth. Will you walke Sir? Oh Desdemona.

Des. My Lord

Othello. Get you to bed on th' instant, I will be return'd forthwith. dismissee your Attendant there: look't be done Exit.

Des. I will my Lord

Am How goes it now? He lookes gentler then he did.

Des. He saies he will retorne incontinent,

And hath commanded me to go to bed,

And bid me to dismissee you.

Am Dismissee me?

Des. It was his bidding therefore good Emilia, Giue me my mighty wearing, and adieu.

We must not now dispute him

Emil I, would you had neuer seene him.

Des. So would not I my love doth so approue him, That euen his stubbornesse, his check, his frownes, (Prythee vn-pin it) haue grace and fauour.

Am I haue laid thate Sheetes you bid me on the bed

Des. All's one good Father, how fowlish are our minds?

If I do die before, prythee strow'd me

In one of these same Sheetes.

Emil Come, come you talke.

Des. My Mother had a Maid call'd Barbarie,

She was in loue and he she lou'd prou'd mad,

And did forsake her She had a Song of Willough.

An old thing 'twas: but it express'd her Fortune,

And she dy'd singing it. That Song to night,

Will not go from my mind I haue much to do,

But to go hang my head all at one side

And sing it like poore Barbarie prythee dispatch.

Am Shall I go fetch your Night-gowne?

Des. No vn-pin me here,

This Lodouico is a proper man.

Emil A very handsome man.

Des. He speakes well.

Emil I know a Lady in Venice would haue walk'd barefoot to Palestine for a touch of his nether lip.

Des. The pore Soule sat singing, by a Sicamour tree.

Sing a'l a greene Willough

Her hand on her bosome her head on her knee,

Sing Willough Willough, Willough.

The fresh Streames ran by her, and murmur'd her moanes

Sing Willough, &c

Her fait teares fell from her, and softned the stores,

Sing Willough, &c

(Lay by these)

Willough, Willough (Prythee high thee: he'll come anon)

Sing all a greene Willough must be my Garland.

Let no body blame him, his scorne I apprene.

(Nay that's not next Harke, who is't that knocks?)

Emil. It's the wind.

Des. I call'd my Love false Love: but what said he then?

Sing Willough, &c.

If I corrt me women you'll couch with me men.

So get thee gone, good night : mine eyes do itch :
Doth that boade weeping ?

Emil. 'Tis neyther heere, nor there :

Des. I haue heard it said so. O these Men, these men !
Do'st thou in conference thinke (tell me Emilia)
That there be women do abuse their husbands
In such grosse kinde ?

Emil. There be some such, no question.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world ?

Emil. Why, would not you ?

Des. No, by this Heauenly light.

Emil. Nor I neither, by this Heauenly light :

I might doe't as well i'th' darke.

Des. Would'st thou do such a deed for all the world ?

Emil. The world's a huge thing.

It is a great price, for a small vice

Des. Introth, I thinke thou would'st not.

Emil. Introth I thinke I should, and vndoo't when I had done. Marry, I would not doe such a thing for a ioynt Ring, nor for measures of Lawne, nor for Gownes, Petticoats, nor Caps, nor any petty exhibition. But for all the whole world : why, who would not make her husbands Cuckold, to make him a Monarch ? I should venture Purgatory for't.

Des. Bestrew me, if I would do such a wrong
For the whole world.

Emil. Why, the wrong is but a wrong i'th' world ;
and hauing the world for your labour, 'tis a wrong in your owne world, and you might quickly make it right.

Des. I do not thinke there is any such woman.

Emil. Yes, a dozen . and as many to'th' vantage, as would store the world they plaid for.

But I do thinke it is their Husbands faults
If Wiues do fall : (Say, that they slacke their duties,
And powre our Treasures into forraigne laps ;
Or else breake out in pecuniish Icalousies,
Throwing restraint vpon vs. Or say they strike vs,
Or scant our former hauing in despite)
Why we haue galls : and though we haue some Grace,
Yet haue we some Reuenge. Let Husbands know,
Their wiues haue sense like them : They see, and smell,
And haue their Palats both for sweet, and sowre,
As Husbands haue. What is it that they do,
When they change vs for others ? Is it Sport ?
I thinke it is : and doth Affection breed it ?
I thinke it doth. Is't Frailty that thus erres ?
It is so too. And haue not we Affections ?
Desires for Sport ? and Frailty, as men haue ?
Then let them vse vs well . else let them know,
The illes we do, their illes instruct vs so.

Des. Good night, good night :
Heauen me such vses send,
Not to picke bad, from bad ; but by bad, mend. Exeunt

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Iago, and Rodorigo.

Iago. Heere, stand behinde this Barke,
Straight will he come :
Weare thy good Rapier bare, and put it home :
Quick, quick, feare nothing ; Ile be at thy Elbow,
It makes vs, or it marres vs, thinke on that,
And fixe most firme thy Resolution.

Rod. Be neere at hand, I may miscarry in't.

Iago. Heere, at thy hand : Be bold, & take thy stand.

Rod. I haue no great deuotion to the deed,
And yet he hath giuen me satisfying Reasons.
'Tis but a man gone. Forth my Sword : he dies.

Iago. I haue rub'd this yong Quat almost to the sense,
And he growes angry. Now, whether he kill Cassio,
Or Cassio him, or each do kill the other,
Euery way makes my gaine. Liue Roderigo,
He calles me to a restitution large
Of Gold, and Jewels, that I bob'd from him,
As Guists to Desdemona.

It must not be : If Cassio do remaine,
He hath a daily beauty in his life,
That makes me vgly . and besides, the Moore
May vnfold me to him : there stand I in much perill :
No, he must dye. But so, I heard him comming.

Enter Cassio

Rod. I know his gate, 'tis he . Villaine thou dyest.

Cas. That thrust had bene mine enemy indeed,
But that my Coate is better then thou know'st :
I will make prooffe of thine.

Rod. Oh, I am slaine.

Cassio. I am mayn'd for euer :
Helpe ho : Murther, murther.

Enter Othello.

Oth. The voyce of Cassio, Iago keepes his word

Rod. O Villaine that I am.

Oth. It is euen so

Cas. Oh helpe ho : Light, a Surgeon.

Oth. 'Tis he : O braue Iago, honest, and iust,
That hast such Noble sense of thy Friends wrong,
Thou teachest me. Mimon, your deere lyes dead,
And your vnbleit Fate highes : Strumpet I come :
For of my heart, those Charms thine Eyes, are blotted.
Thy Bed lust-stain'd, shall with Lusts blood be spotted.

Exit Othello.

Enter Lodouico and Gratiano.

Cas. What hoa ? no Watch ? No passage ?
Murther, Murther.

Gra. 'Tis some mischance, the voyce is very direfull.

Cas. Oh helpe.

Lodo. Hearke.

Rod. Oh, wretched Villaine.

Lod. Two or three groane. 'Tis heauy night ;
There may be counterfeits . Let's thinke vnfalse
To come into the cry, without more helpe

Rod. Nobody come : then shall I bleed to death.

Enter Iago.

Lod. Hearke.

Gra. Here's one comes in his shirt, with Light, and Weapons.

Iago. Who's there ?

Who's noyse is this that cries on murther ?

Lodo. We do not know.

Iago. Do not you heare a cry ?

Cas. Heere, heere . for heauen sake helpe me.

Iago. What's the matter ?

Gra. This is Othello's Ancient, as I take it.

Lodo. The same indeede, a very valiant Fellow.

Iago. What are you heere, that cry so greuously ?

Cas. Iago ? Oh I am spoyl'd, vndone by Villaines :
Giue me some helpe.

Iago. O mee, Lieutenant !

What Villaines haue done this ?

Cas. I thinke that one of them is heere about.

And

And cannot make away.

Iago. Oh treacherous Villaines ·
What are you there? Come in, and giue some helpe.

Red. Oh helpe me there.
Cassio. That's one of them.

Iago. Oh murd'rous Slaue! O Villaine!

Red. O damn'd Iago! O inhumane Dogge!

Iago. Kill men i'th darke?

Where be these bloody Theeues?

How silent is this Towne? Ho, murder, murder.

What may you be? Are you of good, or euill?

Red. As you shall proue vs, praise vs.

Iago. Signior Lodouico?

Red. He Sir.

Iago. I cry you mercy: here's Cassio hurt by Villaines.

Gra. Cassio?

Iago. How is't Brother?

Cas. My Legge is cut in two.

Iago. Marry heauen forbid:

Light Gentlemen, Ile binde it with my shirt.

Enter Bianca.

Bian. What is the matter ho? Who is't that cry'd?

Iago. Who is't that cry'd?

Bian. Oh my deere Cassio,

My sweet Cassio: Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio.

Iago. O notable Strumpet. Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that haue thus mangled you?

Cas. No

Gra. I am sorry to finde you thus,
I haue beene to seeke you.

Iago. Lend me a Garter. So. — Oh for a Chaire
To beare him easily hence.

Bian. Alas he faints. Oh Cassio, Cassio, Cassio!

Iago. Gentlemen all, I do suspect this Trash
To be a party in this Inurie

Patience awhile, good Cassio. Come, come;
Lend me a Light: know we this face, or no?

Alas my Friend, and my deere Countryman

Roderigo? No. Yes sure: Yes, 'tis Roderigo.

Gra. What, of Venice?

Iago. Euen he Sir. Did you know him?

Gra. Know him? I.

Iago. Signior Gratiano? I cry your gentle pardon.
These bloody accidents must excuse my Manners,
That so neglected you.

Gra. I am glad to see you.

Iago. How do you Cassio? Oh, a Chaire, a Chaire

Gra. Roderigo?

Iago. He, he, 'tis he:

Oh that's well said, the Chaire

Some good man beare him carefully from hence,

Ile fetch the Generall's Surgeon. For you M<sup>r</sup>s, Sau
Sauce you your labour. He that lies slaue heere (Cassio)

Was my deere friend. What malice was between you?

Cas. None in the world nor do I know the man?

Iago. What? looke you pale? Oh beare him o'th' Ayre.
Stay you good Gentlemen. Looke you pale, Mistris?

Do you perceiue the gasnesse of her eye?

Nay, if you stare, we shall heare more anon.

Behold her well: I pray you looke vpon her:

Do you see Gentlemen? Nay, guiltinesse will speake

Though tongues were out of vs.

Emil. Alas, what is the matter?

What is the matter, Husband?

Iago. Cassio hath heere bin seuen on in the darke
By Roderigo, and Fellowes that are scap'd:

He's almost slaine, and Roderigo quite dead.

Emil. Alas good Gentleman. alas good Cassio.

Iago. This is the fruits of whoring. Prythe Emilia,
Go know of Cassio where he sup't to night.

What, do you shake at that?

Bian. He sup't at my house, but I therefore shake not.

Iago. O did he so? I charge you go with me.

Emil. Oh fie vpon thee Strumpet.

Bian. I am no Strumpet, but of life as honest,
As you that thus abuse me

Emil. As I? Fie vpon thee.

Iago. Kinde Gentlemen.

Let's go see poore Cassio dreft.

Come M<sup>r</sup>s, you must tel's another Tale.

Emilia, run you to the Cittadell,

And tell my Lord and Lady, what hath happ'd:

Will you go on afore? This is the night

That either makes me, or foredoes me quight. Exeunt

Scena Secunda.

Enter Othello, and Desdemona in her bed.

Oth. It is the Cause, it is the Cause (my Soule)

Let me not name it to you you chaste Starres,

It is the Cause Yet she not shed her blood,

Nor scarre that whiter skin of hers, then Snow,

And smooth as Monumentall Alabaster

Yet she must dye, else shee'l betray more mer:

Put out the Light, and then put out the Light:

If I quench thee, thou flaming Minister,

I can againe thy former light restore,

Should I repent me. But once put out thy Light,

Thou cunning'st Patience of excellling Nature,

I know not where is that Promethean heate

That can thy Light re-Lume.

When I haue pluck'd thy Ro'e,

I cannot giue it vitall growth againe,

It needs must wither. Ile smell thee on the Tree.

Oh Balmy breath, that dost almost perswade

Iustice to breake her Sword. One more, one more:

Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,

And loue thee after One more, and that's the last.

So sweet, was ne're so farall I must weepe,

But they are cruell Teares. This sorrow's heauenly,

It strikes, where it doth loue. She wakes.

Des. Who's there? Othello?

Othel. I Desdemona.

Des. Will you come to bed, my Lord?

Oth. Haue you pray'd to night, Desdemona?

Des. I my Lord.

Oth. If you be thinke your selfe of any Crime
Vnreconcil'd as yet to Heauen, and Grace,
Solcite for it straight.

Des. Alacke, my Lord,

What may you meane by that?

Oth. Well, do it, and be breefe, I will walke by:

I would not kill thy vnprepared Spirit,
No, Heauens fore-send / I would not kill thy Soule.

Des. Talke you of killing?

Oth. I, I do.

Des. Then Heauen haue mercy on mee.

Oth.

Oth. Amen, with all my heart.

Des. If you say, I hope you will not kill me.

Oth. Hush.

Des. And yet I feare you: for you're fast'ld on
When your eyes are aile to

Why I should feare, I know not.

Since guiltinesse I know not: But yet I feele I feare.

Oth. Thinke on thy sinnes.

Des. They are Loues I beare to you

Oth. I, and for that thou dy'st

Des. That death's vnnaturall, that kills for louing.

Alas, why gnaw you a layner rather, than?

Some bloody passion shakes your very frame.

These are portents but yet I hope, I hope,

They do not point on me.

Oth. Peace, and be still.

Des. I will so: What's the matter?

Oth. That Handkerchiefe

Which I should, and part thee, thou giv'st to Cassio.

Des. No by my Life, and soule: send it to him, and
And take him.

Oth. Sweet Soule, take heed, take heed of Pray.
Thou art on thy death-bed.

Des. I, but not yet to dye.

Oth. Presently.

Therefore confesse thee freely of thy sinne.

For to deny each Article with Oath,

Cannot remoue, nor shake the strong Conception

That I do growe withall. Thou art to dye.

Des. O Heauen haue mercy on me.

Oth. I say, Amen.

Des. And haue you mercy too. I am to die

O'end you in my life: neuer lou'd Cassio,

But with such generall warrant of Heauen,

As I might loue: I neuer gave him Token.

Oth. By Heauen I saw my Handkerchiefe in't and.

O perjur'd woman, thou do'st flie my iust,

And makes me call, what I intend to do,

A Murder, which I thought a Sacrifice.

I saw the Handkerchiefe.

Des. He found it then.

I neuer gave it him: Send, for him hither:

Let him confesse a truth

Oth. He hath confest.

Des. What, my Lord?

Oth. That he hath vs'd thee.

Des. How? vnlawfully?

Oth. I.

Des. He will not say so.

Oth. No: his mouth is stopp'd:

Honest Iago hath'ane order for't.

Des. Oh, my feare interprets. What is he dead?

Oth. Had all his haire bin liues, my great Reuenge
Had stomacke for them all.

Des. Alas, he is betray'd, and I vndone.

Oth. Out Strumpet: weep'st thou for him to my face?

Des. O barbaric, my Lord, but kill me not.

Oth. Downe Strumpet.

Des. Kill me to morrow, let me liue to night.

Oth. Nay, if you sturue.

Des. But halfe an houre.

Oth. Being done, there is no pause.

Des. But while I say one prayer.

Oth. It is too late. Smother her.

Emilia at the doore.

Emil. My Lord, my Lord? What hoa?

Mr Lord, my Lord.

Oth. What's the matter? Is he dead? or yet quite dead?
I that amer ell, am yet mercies full,
I would not haue a cellinger in thy paine
So, so.

Emilia. What hoa? my Lord, my Lord?

Oth. Who's there?

Emil. Oh good my Lord, I would speake a word with you.

Oth. Yes: 'Tis Emilia by and by. She's dead.

'Tis to the common suspition of Cassio's death:

Therofe wastight. Hath she receiv'd her death?

She's dead: Griefe. Shall she come? What's good?

I thinke she thurt her. No, what's best to do?

If she come in, free I will take to my wife:

My wife, my wife, what wife? I have none.

O my wife, my wife, my wife! I have none.

My wife, my wife, my wife! I have none.

My wife, my wife, my wife! I have none.

My wife, my wife, my wife! I have none.

Emil. My Husband?

Oth. Thy Husband.

Emil. That she wa false to Wedlocke?

Oth. I, with Cassio had she bin true,
If Heauen would make me such another world,
Of one entyre and perfect Chidy solire,
I'd not haue sold her for it

Emil. My Husband?

Oth. I, 'twas he that told me on het first,
An honest man he is, and hates the slime
That stickes on filthy deeds.

Emil. My Husband?

Oth. What need, this utterance, Woman?
I say, thy Husband

Emil. Oh Mistis,
Villany hath made mockes with loue
My Husband say she was false?

Oth. He, Woman;
I say thy Husband: Do'st vnderstand the word?
My Friend, thy Husband, honest, honest Iago.

Emil. If he say so, may his pernicious Soule
Rot halfe a graine a day. he lyes to'th' heart,
She was too fond of her most filthy Bargaine.

Oth. Hah?

Emil. Do thy worst.
This c'eede of thine is no more worthy Heauen,
Then thou' wast worthy her

Oth. Peace, you were best.

Emil. Thou hast not halfe that powre to do me harm,
As I haue to be hurt. Oh Gull, oh dolt,
As ignorant as durt; thou hast done a deed
(I care not for thy Sword) Ile make thee known,
Though I lost twenty liues Helpe, helpe, ho, helpe.
The Moore hath kill'd my Mistis Murther, murther.

Enter Montano, Gratiano, and Iago

Mon. What is the matter? How now Generall?

Emil. Oh, are you come, Iago you haue done well,
That men must lay their Murthers on your necke.

Gra. What is the matter?

Emil. Disproue this Villaine, if thou bee'st a man
He sayes, thou told'st him that his wife was false.
I know thou did'st nor thou'rt not such a Villain
Speake, for my heart is full.

Iago. I told him what I thought,
And told no more
Then what he found himselfe was apt, and true.

Emil. But did you euer tell him,
She was false?

Iago. I did.

Emil. You told a Lye an odious damned Lye
Vpon my Soule, a Lye; a wicked Lye.
Shee false with Cassio?

Did you say with Cassio?

Iago. With Cassio, Mistis?

Go too, charme your tongue.

Emil. I will not charme my Tongue;
I am bound to speake,
My Mistis heere lyes murdered in her bed.

All. Oh Heauens, forsend

Emil. And your reports haue set the Murder on.

Othello. Nay stare not Masters,
It is true indeede.

Gra. 'Tis a strange Truth.

Mon. O monstrous Acte.

Emil. Villany, villany, villany:

I thinke vpon't, I thinke I haue't. O Villany:
I thought so then: Ile kill my selfe for greefe.

O villany! villany!

Iago. What, are you mad?

I charge you get you home.

Emil. Good Gentlemen, let me haue leauo to speake:

'Tis proper I obey him; but not now:

Perchance Iago, I will ne're go home

Oth. Oh, oh, oh

Emil. Nay, lay thee downe, and roare:

For thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,

That ere did lift vp eye.

Oth. Oh she was fowle!

I scarce did know you Vnkle, there lies your Neece.

Whose breath (indeed) these hands haue newly stopp'd:

I know this acte shewes horrible and grim.

Gra. Poore Desdemona:

I am glad thy Father's dead,

Thy Match was mortall to him: and pure greefe

Shore his old thred in twaine Did he lue now,

This sight would make him do a desperate turne:

Yea, curse his better Angell from his side,

And fall to Reprobance.

Oth. 'Tis pittifull but yet Iago knowes

That she with Cassio, hath the Act of shame,

A thousand times committed Cassio confest it,

And she did gratifie his amorous workes

With that Recognizance and pledge of Loue

Which I first gaue her: I saw it in his hand:

It was a Handkerchiefe, an Antique Token

My Father gaue my Mother.

Emil. Oh Heauen! oh heavenly Powres!

Iago. Come, hold your peace.

Emil. 'Twill out, 'twill out. I peace?

No, I will speake as liberall as the North;

Let Heauen, and Men, and Duels, let them all,

All, all, crie shame against me, yet Ile speake.

Iago. Be wise, and get you home.

Emil. I will not.

Gra. Fye, your Sword vpon a Woman.

Emil. Oh thou dull Moore,

That Handkerchiefe thou speak'st of

I found by Fortune, and did giue my Husband:

For often, with a solemne earnestnesse,

(More then indeed belong'd to such a Trifle)

He begg'd of me, to steale't.

Iago. Villanous Whore.

Emil. She giue it Cassio? No, alas I found it,

And I did giue't my Husband.

Iago. Filth, thou lyes.

Emil. By Heauen I do not, I do not Gentlemen:

Oh murderous Coxcombe, what should such a Foole

Do with so good a wife?

Oth. Are there no stones in Heauen,

But what serues for the Thunder?

Precious Villaine.

Gra. The woman falles.

Sure he hath kill'd his Wife.

Emil. I, I. oh lay me by my Mistis side.

Gra. Hee's gone, but his wife's kill'd.

Mon. 'Tis a notorious Villain: take you this weapon

Which I haue recouer'd from the Moore:

Come guard the doore without, let him not passe,

But kill him rather. Ile after that same villaine,

For 'tis a damned Slaue.

Exit.

Oth.

Oth. I am not valiant neither:
But euery Punie whipster gets my Sword,
But why should Honor out-lie Honesty?
Let it go all.

Amil. What did thy Song boad Lady?
Heake, canst thou heare me? I will play the Swan,
And dye in Musicke - Willough, Willough, Willough.
Moore, she was chaste: She lou'd thee, erus! Moore,
So come my Soule to blisse, as I speake true.
So speaking as I thinke, alas, I dye

Oth. I haue another weapon in this Chamber,
It was a Sword of Spaine, the Ice brookes'temper:
Oh heere it is Vnkle I must come forth.

Gra. If thou attempt it, it will cost thee deere;
Thou hast no weapon, and perforce must suffer.

Oth. Look in vpon me then, and speake with me,
Or naked as I am I will assault thee.

Gra. What is the matter?

Othel. Behold, I haue a weapon:
A better neuer did it selfe sustaine
Vpon a Soldiers Thigh. I haue seene the day,
That with this little Arme, and this good Sword,
I haue made my way through more impediments
Then twenty times your stop. But (oh vaine boast)
Who can controll his Fate? 'Tis not so now.
Be not affraid, though you do see me weapon'd:
Heere is my Iournies end, heere is my butt
And verie Sea-marke of my utmost Saile.
Do you go backe dismaid? 'Tis a lost feare.
Man but a Rush against Othello's brest,
And he retires. Where should Othello go?
Now: how dost thou looke now? Oh ill-Starr'd wench,
Pale as thy Smocke: when we shall meete at compt,
This looke of thine will burle my Soule from Heauen,
And Friends will snatch at it Cold, cold, my Girl?
Euen like thy Chastity. O cursed, cursed Slave!
Whip me ye Diuels,
From the possession of this Heauenly sight:
Blow me about in windes, roast me in Sulphure,
Wash me in sleepe-downe gulfs of Liquid fire.
Oh Desdemona! dead Desdemona: dead. Oh, oh!

Enter Lodouico, Cassio, Montano, and Iago,
with Officers

Lod. Where is this rash, and most vnfortunate man?

Oth. That's he that was Othello heere I am.

Lod. Where is that Viper?

Bring the Villaine forth

Oth. I look down towards his feet; but that's a Fable,
If that thou bee'st a Diuell, I cannot kill thee.

Lod. Wrench his Sword from him.

Iago. I bleed Sir, but not kill'd.

Othel. I am not sorry neither, I'd haue thee liue:
For in my sense, 'tis happinesse to die.

Lod. Oh thou Othello, that was once so good,
False in the practise of a cursed Slave,
What shall be said to thee.

Oth. Why any thing:

An honourable Murderer, if you will:

For nought I did in hate, but all in Honour.

Lod. This wretch hath part confest his Villany:
Did you and he consent in Cassio's death.

Oth. I.

Cas. Deere Generall, I neuer gaue you cause.

Oth. I do beleue it, and I aske your pardon:
Will you, I pray, demand that demy-Diuell,

Why he hath thus ensnar'd my Soule and Body.

Iag. Demand me nothing: what you know, you know:
From this time forth, I neuer will speake word.

Lod. What? not to pray?

Gra. Torments will ope your lips.

Oth. Well, thou dost best.

Lod. Sir,

You shall vnderstand what hath befallne,
(Which, as I thinke, you know not) heere is a Letter
Found in the pocket of the slaine Roderigo,
And heere another, the one of them imports
The death of Cassio, to be vnderooke
By Roderigo.

Oth. O Villaine!

Cassio. Most Heathenish, and most grosse.

Lod. Now, heere's another discontented paper
Found in his pocket too: and this it seemes
Roderigo meant t'haue sent this damned villaine:
But that (belike) Iago in the interim
Came in, and satisfi'd him.

Oth. Oh thou pernicious Carriffe;
How came you (Cassio) by that Handkerchiefe
That was my wiues?

Cassio. I found it in my Chamber:
And he himselfe confest it but euen now,
That there he dropt it for a speciall purpose,
Which wrought to his desire.

Othel. O Foole, foole, foole!

Cassio. There is besides, in Roderigo's Letter,
How he vpbraides Iago, that he made him
Braue me vpon the Watch: whereon it came
That I was cast: and euen but now he spake
(After long seeming dead) Iago hurt him,
Iago set him on.

Lod. You must forsake this roome, and go with vs:
Your Power, and your Cammand is taken off,
And Cassio rules in Cyprus. For this Slave,
If there be any cunning Crueltie,
That can torment him much, and hold him long,
It shall be his. You shall close Prisoner rest,
Till that the Nature of your fault be knowne
To the Venetian State. Come, bring away.

Oth. Soft you; a word or two before you goe:
I haue done the State some seruice, and they know't.
No more of that. I pray you in your Letters,
When you shall these vnluckie deeds relate,
Speake of me, as I am. Nothing extenuate,
Nor set downe ought in malice.

Then must you speake,
Of one that lou'd not wisely, but too well:
Of one, not easily Icalous, but being wrought,
Perplexed in the extreame. Of one, whose hand
(Like the base Iudean) threw a Pearle away
Richer then all his Tribe: Of one, whose subdu'd Eyes,
Albeit vn-ysed to the melting moode,
Drops teares as fast as the Arabian Trees
Their Medicinable gumme. Set you downe this.
And say besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant, and a Turbond-Turke
Beate a Venetian, and traduc'd the State,
Iooke by th' throat the circumcised Dogge,
And smote him, thus.

Lod. Oh bloody period.

Gra. All that is spoke, is marr'd.

Oth. I kist thee, ere I kill'd thee: No way but this,
Killing my selfe, to dye vpon a kisse.

Dyes
Cassio

Cas This did I feare, but thought he had no weapon :
For he was great of heart.

Lod Oh Sparrow Dogge :
More fell then Anguiss, Hunger, or the Sea :
Looke on the Tragicke Loadmg of this bed :
This is thy worke :
The Obiect poysons Sight.

Let it be hid. Gratiano, keepe the house,
And seize vpon the Fortunes of the Moore,
For they succcede on you. To you, Lord Gouvernor,
Remaines the Censure of this hellish villaine :
The Time, the Place, the Torture, oh inforce it :
My selfe will straight aboard, and to the State,
Thus heaue A&, with heaue heart relate, Exunt.

THE TRAGEDIE OF Anthonie, and Cleopatra.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter Demetrius and Philo.

Philo

Nay, but this dotage of our Generals
Ore-flows the measure: those his goodly eyes
That ore the Files and Musters of the Warre,
Haue glow'd like plated Mars:

Now bend, now turne

The Office and Deuotion of their view
Vpon a Tawny Front. His Captaines heart,
Which in the scuffles of great Fights hath burst
The Buckles on his brest, reneages all temper,
And is become the Bellows and the Fan
To coole a Gypfies Lust.

Flourish. Enter Anthonie, Cleopatra, her Ladies, the Traine, with Eunuchs fanning her.

Looke where they come.

Take but good note, and you shall see in him
(The triple Pillar of the world) transform'd
Into a Strumpets Foole. Behold and see.

Cleo. If it be Loue indeed, tell me how much.

Ant. There's beggery in the loue that can be reckon'd

Cleo. He set a bourne how farre to be belou'd.

Ant. Then must thou needs finde out new Heauen,
new Earth,

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Newes (my good Lord) from Rome.

Ant. Grates me, the summe.

Cleo. Nay heare them Anthonie

Fulvia perchance is angry. Or who knowes,
If the scarfe-bearded Cesar haue not sent
His powrefull Mandate to you. Do this, or this;
Take in that Kingdome, and Infranchise that:
Perform't, or else we damne thee.

Ant. How, my Loue?

Cleo. Perchance? Nay, and most like.

You must not stay heere longer, your dismissal
Is come from Cesar, therefore heare it Anthonie.
Where's Fulvia Procelle? (Casars I would say) both
Call in the Messengers. As I am Egypts Queene,
Thou bluthest Anthonie, and that blood of thine
Is Casars homager: else so thy cheeke payes shame,
When thrill-tongu'd Fulvia scolds. The Messengers.

Ant. Let Rome in Tyber melt, and the wide Arch
Of the raing'd Empire fall: Heere is my space,
Kingdomes are clay: Our dungie earth alike

Feeds Beast as Man; the Noblenesse of life
Is to do thus: when such a mutuall paire,
And such a twaine can doo't, in which I binde
One paine of punishment the world to weete
We stand vp Peerelesse.

Cleo. Excellent falshood.

Why did he marry Fulvia, and not loue her?
He seeme the Foole I am not. Anthonie will be himselfe.

Ant. But stir'd by Cleopatra.

Now for the loue of Loue, and her soft houres,
Let's not confound the time with Conference harsh;
There's not a minute of our liues should stretch
Without some pleasure now. What sport to night?

Cleo. Heare the Ambassadors

Ant. Fye wrangling Queene

Whom euery thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weepe: who euery passion fully striues
To make it selfe (in Thee) faire, and admir'd.
No Messenger but thine, and all alone, to night
Wee'l wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Come my Queene,
Last night you did desire it. Speake not to vs.

Exeunt with the Traine.

Dem. Is Cesar with Anthonie priz'd so slight?

Philo. Sir sometimes when he is not Anthonie,
He comes too short of that great Property
Which still should go with Anthonie.

Dem. I am full sorry, that hee approoues the common Liar, who thus speakes of him at Rome; but I will hope of better deeds to morrow. Reit you happy. Exeunt

Enter Enobarbus, Lampricus, a Soothsayer, Rannius, Lucillius, Charman, Iras, Mardian the Eunuch, and Alexas.

Char. L. Alexas, sweet Alexas, most any thing Alexas, almost most absolute Alexas, where's the Soothsayer that you prais'd so to'th' Queene? Oh that I knewe this Husband, which you say, must change his Hornes with Garlands.

Alex. Soothsayer.

Sooth. Your will?

Char. Is this the Man? Is't you sir that know things?
Sooth. In Natures infinite booke of Secrecie, a little I can read.

Alex. Shew him your hand.

Enob. Bring in the Banket quickly: Wine enough,
Cleop.

Cleopatra's health to drinke.

Char. Good sir, giue me good Fortune.

Sooth. I make not, but foresee.

Char. Pray then, foresee me one.

Sooth. You shall be yet farre fairer then you are.

Char. He meanes in flesh.

Irax. No, you shall paint when you are old.

Char. Wrinkles forbid.

Alex. Vex not his prescience, be attentue.

Char. Hush.

Sooth. You shall be more beloung, then beloued.

Char. I had rather heate my Luer with drinking.

Alex. Nay, heare him.

Char. Good now some excellent Fortune: Let mee be married to three Kings in a forenoone, and Widdow them all. Let me haue a Childe at fifty, to whom Herode of Iewry may do Homage. Finde me to marrie me with Othanius Caesar, and companion me with my Mistis.

Sooth. You shall out-lie the Lady whom you serue.

Char. Oh excellent, I loue long life better then Figs.

Sooth. You haue scene and proued a fairer former fortune, then that which is to approach.

Char. Then belike my Children shall haue no names: Prythee how many Boyes and Wenches must I haue.

Sooth. Ifeuey of your wishes had a wombe, & foretell euery wish, a Million.

Char. Out Foole, I forgive thee for a Witch.

Alex. You thinke none but your sheets are priue to your wishes.

Char. Nay come, tell Irax hers

Alex. Wee'll know all our Fortunes.

Enob. Mine, and most of our Fortunes to night, shall be drunke to bed.

Irax. There's a Palme presages Chastity, if nothing els.

Char. Ene as the o're-flowing Nylus presageth Famine.

Irax. Go you wilde Bedfellow, you cannot Soothsay.

Char. Nay, if an oyle Palme bee not a fruitfull Prognostication, I cannot scratch mine eare. Prythee tel her but a worky day Fortune,

Sooth. Your Fortunes are alike.

Irax. But how, but how, giue me particulars.

Sooth. I haue said.

Irax. Am I not an inch of Fortune better then she?

Char. Well, if you were but an inch of fortune better then I: where would you choose it.

Irax. Not in my Husbands nose.

Char. Our worse thoughts Heauens mend.

Alexas. Come, his Fortune, his Fortune. Oh let him marry a woman that cannot go, sweet Isis, I beseech thee, and let her dye too, and giue him a worse, and let worse follow worse, till the worst of all follow him laughing to his graue, fifty-fold a Cuckold. Good Isis heare me this Prayer, though thou denie me a matter of more waight good Isis I beseech thee

Irax. Amen, deere Goddesse, heare that prayer of the people. For, as it is a heart-breaking to see a handsome man loose. Wou'd, so it is a deadly sorrow, to beholde a foule Knaue vncuckolded: Therefore decree Isis keep decorum, and Fortune him accordingly.

Char. Amen

Alex. Lo now, if it lay in their hands to make mee a Cuckold, they would make themselves Whores, but they'd doo't.

Enter Cleopatra

Enob. Hush, heere comes Anthony.

Char. Not he, the Queene.

Cleo. Saue you, my Lord.

Enob. No Lady.

Cleo. Was he not heere?

Char. No Madam.

Cleo. He was dispos'd to mirth, but on the sodaine A Romane thought hath strooke him.

Enobarbus?

Enob. Madam,

Cleo. Seeke him, and bring him hicher wher's Alexias?

Alex. Heere at your seruice.

My Lord approaches.

Enter Anthony, with a Messenger

Cleo. We will not looke vpon him.

Go with vs.

Exeunt.

Messen. Fulvia thy Wife,

First came into the Field

Ant. Against my Brother Lucius?

Messen. I: but soone that Warre had end,

And the times state

Made friends of them, ioyning their force 'gainst Caesar,

Whose better issue in the warre from Italy,

Vpon the first encounter draue them.

Ant. Well, what worst.

Mess. The Nature of bad newes infects the Teller.

Ant. When it concerns the Foole or Coward, On.

Things that are past, are done, with me. 'Tis thus,

Who tels me true, though in his Tale lye death,

I heare him as he flatter'd.

Mess. Labiennus (this is suffice-newes)

Hath with his Parthian Force

Extended Asia from Euphrates his conquering

Banner shooke, from Syria to Lydia,

And to Ionia, whil'st —

Ant. Anthony thou would'st say.

Mess. Oh my Lord

Ant. Speake to me home,

Mince not the generall tongue, name

Cleopatra as she is call'd in Rome.

Raile thou in Fulvia's phrase, and taunt my faults

With such full License, as both Truth and Malice

Haue power to vtter. Oh then we bring forth weeds,

When our quicke windes lye still, and our illes told vs

Is as our eating: faire thee well awhile.

Mess. At your Noble pleasure.

Exit Messenger.

Enter another Messenger.

Ant. From Scicion how the newes? Speake there.

1. Mess. The man from Scicion,

Is there such an one?

2. Mess. He stayes vpon your will.

Ant. Let him appeare:

These strong Egyptian Fetters I must breake,

Or loose my selfe in dotage.

Enter another Messenger with a Letter.

What are you?

3. Mess. Fulvia thy wife is dead.

Ant. Where dyed she

Mess. In Scicion, her length of sicknesse,

With what else more senous,

Improrteth thee to know, this beares.

Antho. Forbear me

There's a great Spirit gone, thus did I desire it:

What our contempts doth often hurle from vs,

x

w

We with it ours againe. The present pleasure,
By resolution lowring, does become
The opposite of it selfe. she's good being gon,
The hand could plucke her backe, that shou'd her on.
I must from this enchanting Queene breake off,
Ten thousand harmes, more then the illes I know
My idlenesse doth hatch.

Enter Enobarbus.

How now Enobarbus.

Eno. What's your pleasure, Sir?

Ant. I must with haste from hence.

Eno. Why then we kill all our Women. We see how mortall an vkindnesse is to them, if they suffer our departure death's the word.

Ant. I must be gone.

Eno. Vnder a compelling an occasion, let women die.
It were pity to cast them away for nothing, though be-twene them and a great cause, they should be esteemed nothing. Cleopatra catching but the least noyse of this, dies instantly. I haue seene her dye twenty times vpon farre poorer moment. I do think there is mettle in death, which commits some louing acte vpon her, she hath such a celerity in dying.

Ant. She is cunning past mans thought.

Eno. Alacke Sir no, her passions are made of nothing but the finest part of pure Loue. We cannot cal her winds and waters, sighes and teares: They are greater stormes and Tempests then Almanackes can report. This cannot be cunning in her; if it be, she makes a showre of Raine
as well as loue.

Ant. Would I had neuer seene her.

Eno. Oh sir, you had then left vnseene a wonderfull peece of worke, which not to haue beene blest withall, would haue discredited your Trauaile.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Sir.

Ant. Fulvia is dead.

Eno. Fulvia?

Ant. Dead.

Eno. Why sir, giue the Gods a thankfull Sacrifice:
when it pleaseth their Desties to take the wife of a man from him, it shewes to man the Tailors of the earth, comforting therein, that when olde Robes are iworne out, there are members to make new. If there were no more Women but Fulvia, then had you indeede a cur, and the case to be lamented; This greefe is crown'd with Consolation, your old Smoeke brings forth a new Petticoate, and indeed the reares liue in an Onion, that should water
this sorrow.

Ant. The businesse she hath broached in the State,
Cannot endure my absence.

Eno. And the businesse you haue broach'd heere cannot be without you, especially that of Cleopatra's, which wholly depends on your abode.

Ant. No more light Answers:

Let our Officers

Haue notice what we purpose. I shall breake
The cause of our Expedience to the Queene,
And get her loue to part. For not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more vrgent touches
Do strongly speake to vs: but the Letters too
Of many our contriuing Friends in Rome,
Petition vs at home. Sextus Pompeius
Haue giuen the dare to Cesar, and commands
The Empire of the Sez. Our slippery people,
Whose Loue is neuer link'd to the deseruer,

Till his deserts are past, begin to throw
Pompey the great, and all his Dignities
Vpon his Sonne, who high in Name and Power,
Higher then both in Blood and Life, stands vp
For the maine Souldier. Whose quality going on,
The sides o'th' world may danger. Much is breeding,
Which like the Coursers heire, hath yet but life,
And not a Serpents payson. Say our pleasure,
To such whole places vnder vs, require
Our quicke remoue from hence.

Enob. I shall doo't.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Alexas, and Iras.

Cleo. Where is he?

Char. I did not see him since.

Cleo. See where he is,

Whose with him, what he does:

I did not send you. If you finde him sad,

Say I am dauncing. if in Myrth, report

That I am sodaine sicke. Quicke, and returne.

Char. Madam, me thinkes if you did loue him dearly,
You do not hold the method, to enforce

The like from him.

Cleo. What should I do, I do not?

Ch. In each thing giue him way, crosse him in nothing.

Cleo. Thou teachest like a foole the way to lose him.

Char. Tempt him not so too farre. I wish forbear,
In time we hate that which we often feare.

Enter Anthony.

But heere comes Anthony.

Cleo. I am sicke, and fullen.

An. I am sorry to giue breathing to my purpose.

Cleo. Helpe me away deere Charmian, I shall fall,
It cannot be thus long, the sides of Nature
Will not sustaine it.

Ant. Now my deere'st Queene.

Cleo. Pray you stand farther from mee.

Ant. What's the matter?

Cleo. I know by that same eye ther's some good news.

What sayes the married woman you may goe?

Would she had neuer giuen you leaue to come.

Let her not say 'tis I that keepe you heere,

I haue no power vpon you. Hers you are.

Ant. The Gods best know

Cleo. Oh neuer was there Queene

So mightily betrayed yet at the first

I saw the Treasons planted

Ant. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Why should I thinke you can be mine, & true,

(Though you in swearing shake the Throaned Gods)

Who haue beene false to Fulvia?

Riotous madnesse,

To be entangled with those mouth-made vowes,

Which breake themselves in swearing.

Ant. Most sweet Queene,

Cleo. Nay pray you seeke no colour for your going,

But bid farewell, and goe:

When you sud stay,

Then was the time for words: No going then,

Eternity was in our Lippes, and Eyes,

Blisse in our browes bent: none our parts so poore,

But was a race of Heauen. They are so still,

Or thou the greatest Soulaier of the world,

Art turn'd the greatest Liar.

Ant. How now Lady?

Cleo.

Cleo. I would I had thy inches, thou should'st know
There were a heart in Egypt.

Ant. Heare me Qutene:
The strong necessity of Time, commands
Our Seruicets a-while. but my full heart
Remaines in vs with you. Our Italy,
Shines o're with ciuill Swords; Sextus Pompeius
Makes his approaches to the Port of Rome,
Equality of two Domestick powers,
Breed scrupulous faction: The hated growne to strength
Are newly growne to Loue: The condemn'd Pompey,
Rich in his Fathers Honor, creepes apace
Into the hearts of such, as haue not thrived
Vpon the present state, whose Numbers threaten,
And quietnesse growne sicke of rest, would purge
By any desperate change. My more particular,
And that which most with you should safe my going,
Is Fulvia death.

Cleo. Though age from folly could not giue me freedom
It does from childishnesse. Can Fulvia dye?

Ant. She's dead my Queene.
Looke heere, and at thy Soueraigne leysure read
The Garboyles she awak'd at the last, best,
See when, and where shee died

Cleo. O most fallie Loue!
Where be the Sacred Violes thou should'st fill
With sorrowfull water? Now I see, I see,
In Fulvia death, how mine receiu'd shall be.

Ant. Quarrell no more, but bee prepar'd to know
The purposes I beare: which are, or cease,
As you shall giue th'advice. By the fire
That quickens Nylus flume, I go from hence
Thy Souldier, Seruant, making Peace or Warre,
As thou affects.

Cleo. Cut my Lace, Charman come,
But let it be, I am quickly ill, and well
So Anthony loues

Ant. My precious Queene forbear,
And giue true euidence to his Loue, which stands
An honourable Triall.

Cleo. So Fulvia told me.
I prythee turne aside, and weepe for her,
Then bid adiew to me, and say the teares
Belong to Egypt. Good now, play one Scene
Of excellent dissembling, and let it looke
Like perfect Honor.

Ant. You'll heat my blood no more?

Cleo. You can do better yet. but this is meetly

Ant. Now by Sword

Cleo. And Targer. Still he mends.
But this is not the best. Looke prythee Charman,
How this Herculean Roman do's become
The carriage of his chafe.

Ant. Ile leave you Lady.

Cleo. Courteous Lord, one word.
Sir, you and I must part, but that's not it:
Sir, you and I haue lou'd, but there's not it:
That you know well, something it is I would:
Oh, my Obluion is a very Anthony,
And I am all forgotten.

Ant. But that your Royalty
Holds Idlenesse your subiect, I should take you
For Idlenesse it selfe

Cleo. 'Tis sweating Labour.
To beare such Idlenesse so neere the heart
As Cleopatra this. But Sir, forgiue me,

Since my becommings kill me, when they do not
Eye well to you. Your Honor calles you hence,
Therefore be deafe to my vnpyttied Folly,
And all the Gods go with you. Vpon your Sword
Sit Lawrell victory, and smooth successe
Be strew'd before your feete.

Ant. Let vs go.

Come: Our separation sq abides and flies,
That thou reciding heere, goes yet with mee;
And I hence fleeing, heere remaine with thee.
Away.

Exeunt.

Enter Octavius reading a Letter, Lepidus, and their Traine.

Cas. You may see Lepidus, and henceforth know,
It is not Casars Naturall vice, to hate
One great Competitor. From Alexandria
This is the newes: He fishes, drinckes, and wastes
The Lampes of night in reuell: Is not more manlike
Then Cleopatra: nor the Queene of Ptolomy
More Womanly then he. Hardly gaue audience
Or vouchsafeto thinke he had Partners. You
Shall finde there a man, who is th'abstracts of all faults,
That all men follow.

Lep. I must not thinke
There are, euils enow to darken all his goodnesse:
His faults in him, seeme as the Spots of Heauen,
More fierie by nights Blacknesse; Hereditarie,
Rather then purchase. what he cannot change,
Then what he chooseth.

Cas. You are too indulgent. Let's graunt it is not Amisse to tumble on the bed of Ptolomy,
To giue a Kingdome for a Mirth, to sit
And keepe the turne of Tipling with a Slaue,
To reele the streets at noone, and stand the Buffet
With knaues that smels of sweate. Say this becoms him
(As his compofure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish) yet must Anthony
No way excuse his foyles, when we do beare
So great waight in his lightnesse. If he fill'd
His vacancie with his Voluptuousnesse,
Full surfeits, and the drinnesse of his bones,
Call on him for't. But to confound such time,
That drummes him from his sport, and speakes as lowd
As his owne State, and ours, 'tis to be chid:
As we rate Boyes, who being mature in knowledge,
Pawne their experience to their present pleasure,
And so rebell to iudgement.

Enter a Messenger.

Lep. Heere's more newes.

Mes. Thy biddings haue bene done, & euerie houre
Most Noble Cesar, shalt thou haue report
How 'tis abroad. Pompey is strong at Sea,
And it appeares, he is belou'd of those
That only haue feard Cesar: to the Ports
The discontented repaire, and mens reports
Giue him much wrong'd.

Cas. I should haue knowne no lesse,
It hath bin taught vs from the primall state
That he which is was wisht, untill he were
And the ebb'd man,
Ne're lou'd, till ne're worth loue,
Comes fear'd, by being lack'd. This common bodie,
Like to a Vagabond Flaggie upon the Streame,
Goes too, and backe, lacking the varrying tyde

x 2

To

To rot it selfe with motion.

Mef. Caesar I bring thee word,
Menacrates and Menas famous Pyrates
 Makes the Sea serue them, which they care and wound
 With keeles of euery kinde. Many hot inrodes
 They make in Italy, the Borders Maritime
 Lacke blood to thinke on't, and flush youth reuolt,
 No Vessell can peepe forth but 'tis as soone
 Taken as scene for Pompeyes name strikes more
 Then could his Warre resisted.

Caesar. Anthony,
 Leauē thy lasciuious Vasailes. When thou once
 Was beaten from Medena, where thou slew'st
Hirsiu, and Paula Consuls, at thy heele
 Did Famine follow, whom thou fought'st against,
 (Though daintily brought vp) with patience more
 Then Sauages could suffer. Thou did'st drinke
 The stale of Horses, and the gilded Puddle
 Which Beasts would cough at. Thy pallat the did daine
 The roughest Berry, on the rudest Hedge.
 Yea, like the Stagge, when Snow the Pasture sheets,
 The barks of Trees thou brows'd. On the Alpes,
 It is reported thou did'st eate strange flesh,
 Which some did dye to looke on: And all this
 (It wounds thine Honor that I speake it now)
 Was borne so like a Soldiour, that thy cheek
 So much as lank'd not.

Lep. 'Tis pittie of him.

Ces. Let his shames quickly
 Drive him to Rome, 'tis time we twaine
 Did shew our selues i'th' Field, and to that end
 Assemble me immediate counsell, Pompey
 Thrives in our Idleness.

Lep. To morrow Caesar,
 I shall be furnisht to informe you rightly
 Both what by Sea and Land I can be able
 To front this present time.

Ces. Til which encounter, it is my busines too. Farwell.

Lep. Farwell my Lord, what you shall know mean time
 Offires abroad, I shall beseech you Sir
 To let me be partaker.

Caesar. Doubt not sir, I knew it for my Bond. Exeunt

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, & Mardian.

Cleo. Charmian,

Char. Madam.

Cleo. Ha, ha, giue me to drinke Mandragora.

Char. Why Madam?

Cleo. That I might sleepe out this great gap of time:
 My Anthony is away.

Char. You thinke of him too much.

Cleo. O'tis Treason.

Char. Madam, I trust not so.

Cleo. Thou, Eunuch Mardian?

Mar. What's your Highnesse pleasure?

Cleo. Not now to heare thee sing. I take no pleasure
 In ought an Eunuch ha's. 'Tis well for thee,
 That being vnseminar'd, thy freer thoughts
 May not flye forth of Egypt. Hast thou Affections?

Mar. Yes gracious Madam.

Cleo. Indeed?

Mar. Not in deed Madam, for I can do nothing
 But what in deede is honest to be done:
 Yet haue I fierce Affections, and thinke
 What Venus did with Mars.

Cleo. Oh Charmion.

Where thinke'st thou he is now? Stands he, or sits he?

Or does he walke? Or is he on his Horse?
 Oh happy horse to beare the weight of Anthony!
 Do brauely Horse, for wor'st thou whom thou mou'st,
 The demy Atlas of this Earth, the Arme
 And Burganet of men. Hee's speaking now,
 Or murmuring, where's my Serpent of old Nyle,
 (For so he calls me) Now I feede my selfe
 With most delicious poyson. Thinke on me
 That am with Phoebeus amorous pinches blacke,
 And wrinkled deepe in time. Broad-fronted Caesar,
 When thou wast't heere about the ground, I was
 A morsell for a Monarke: and great Pompey
 Would stand and make his eyes grow in my brow,
 There would he anchor his Aspect, and dye
 With looking on his life.

Enter Alexas from Caesar.

Alex. Soueraigne of Egypt, haile.

Cleo. How much vnlike art thou Marke Anthony?
 Yet comming from him, that great Med'cine hath
 With his Tinct gilded thee.

How goes it with my braue Marke Anthony?

Alex. Last thing he did (deere Quene)
 He kist the last of many doubled kisses
 This Orient Pearle. His speech stickes in my heart.

Cleo. Mine eare must plucke it thence.

Alex. Good Friend, quoth he:

Say the firme Roman to great Egypt sends
 This treasure of an Oyster: at whose foote
 To mend the petty present, I will peece
 Her opulent Throne, with Kingdomes. All the East, (Say thou) shall call her Mistress. So he nodded,
 And soberly did mount an Arme-gaunt Steede,
 Who neigh'd so hye, that what I would haue spoke,
 Was beaustly dumbe by him.

Cleo. What was he sad, or merry?

Alex. Like to the time o'th' yeare, between extremes
 Of hot and cold, he was nor sad nor merrie.

Cleo. Oh well diuided disposition: Note him,
 Note him good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him.
 He was not sad, for he would shine on those
 That make their lookes by his. He was not merrie,
 Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
 In Egypt with his toy, but betweene both.
 Oh heauenly mingle! Bee'st thou sad, or merrie,
 The violence of either thee becomes,
 So do's it no mans else. Met'st thou my Posts?

Alex. I Madam, twenty seuerall Messengers.
 Why do you send so thicke?

Cleo. Who's borne that day, when I forget to send to Anthony, shall dye a Begger. Inke and paper Char- mian Welcome my good Alexas. Did I Charmian, e-uer loue Caesar so?

Char. Oh that braue Caesar!

Cleo. Be choak'd with such another Emphasis,
 Say the braue Anthony.

Char. The valiant Caesar.

Cleo. By Isis, I will giue thee bloody teeth,
 If thou with Caesar Parago nagaime.
 My man of men.

Char. By your most gracious pardon,
 I sing but after you.

Cleo. My Sallad dayes,
 When I was greene in iudgement, cold in blood,
 To say, as I saide then. But come, away,
 Get me Inke and Paper,

Hee

he shall haue euery day a feuerall greeting, or Ile vnpeople Egypt.

Exeunt

Enter Pompey, Menecrates, and Menas, in warlike manner.

Pom. If the great Gods be iust, they shall assist The deeds of iustest men.

Mene. Know worthy Pompey, that what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are sutors to their Throne, decayes the thing we sue for.

Mene We ignorant of our selues, Begge often our owne harmes, which the wise Powres Deny vs for our good so finde we profit By loosing of our Prayers.

Pom I shall do well

The people loue me, and the Sea is trine; My powers are Crescent, and my Auguring hope Sayes it will come to th'full. Marke Anthony In Egypt sits at dinner, and will make No warres without doores Caesar gets money where He looses hearts: Lepidus flatters both, Of both is flatter'd but he neither loues, Nor either cares for him.

Mene. Caesar and Lepidus are in the field, A mighty strength they carry

Pom. Where haue you this? 'Tis false

Mene. From Silurus, Sir

Pom He dreames I know they are in Rome together Looking for Anthony but all the charmes of Loue, Salt Cleopatra soften thy wand lip, Let Witchcraft toyne with Beauty, Lust with both Tye vp the Libertine in a field of Feasts, Keepe his Braine fuming Epicurean Cookes, Sharpen with cloylesse sawce his Appetite, That sleepe and feeding may protogue his Honour, Euen till a Lechid dulleesse

Enter Varrus.

How now Varrus?

Var This is most certaine, that I shall deliuer:

Marke Anthony is euery houre in Rome Expected. Since he went from Egypt, 'tis Aspace for farther Trauaile

Pom. I could haue giuen lesse matter A better care. Menas, I did not thinke This amorous Surfetier would haue donn'd his Helme For such a petty Warre His Souldier ship Is vice the other twaine: But let vs reare The higher our Opinion, that our stirring Can from the lap of Egypts Widow, plucke The neere Lust-weari'd Anthony

Mene. I cannot hope, Caesar and Anthony shall well greet together; His Wife that's dead, did trespasses to Caesar, His Brother wan'd vpon him, although I thinke Not moud'd by Anthony

Pom. I know not Menas, How lesser Enmites may giue way to greater, Were't not that we stand vp against them all: Twere pregnant they should square between themselves, For they haue entertained cause enough To draw their swords: but how the feare of vs May Cement their diuisions, and binde vp The petty difference, we yet not know: Bee't as our Gods will haue't; it onely stands Our liues vpon, to vie our strongest hands Come Menas,

Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus and Lepidus

Lep Good Enobarbus, tis a wo. thy deed, And shall become you well, to intreat your Captaine To soft and gentle speech.

Enob. I shall intreat him To answer like himselfe. if Caesar moue him, Let Anthony looke ouer Caesars head, And speake as lowd as Mars. By Iupiter, Were I the wearer of Antonius Beard, I would not shauet to day.

Lep 'Tis not a time for priuate stomacking.

Eno Euery time serues for the matter that is then borne in't.

Lep. But small to greater matters must giue way.

Eno Nor if the small come first.

Lep Your speech is passion but pray you stirre No Embers vp Heere comes the Noble Anthony.

Enter Anthony and Ventidius.

Eno. And yonder Caesar.

Enter Caesar, Meccenas, and Agrippa

Ant. If we compose well heere, to Parthia: Hearke Ventidius

Caesar I do not know Meccenas, aske Agrippa.

Lep Noble Friends

That which combin'd vs was most great, and let not A leaner action rend vs. What's amisse, May it be gently heard. When we debate Our triuall difference loud, we do commit Murder in healing wounds Then Nob'le Partners, The rather for I earnestly beseech, Touch you the softest points with sweetest tearmes, Nor curstnesse grow co'th'matter.

Ant. 'Tis spoken well.

Were we before our Armies, and to fight, I should do thus.

Flourish.

Caef Welcome to Rome.

Ant. Thanke you.

Caef Sit.

Ant. Sit sir.

Caef Nay then.

Ant I hearene, you take things ill, which are not so: Or being, concerne you not Caef. I must be laught at, if or for nothing, or a little, I Should say my selfe offended, and with you Chiefely i'th'world More laught at, that I should Once name you derogately: when to found your name It not concern'd me.

Ant. My being in Egypt Caesar, what was't o' you?

Caef No more then my reciding heere at Rome Might be to you in Egypt yet if you there Did practise on my State, your being in Egypt Might be my question.

Ant. How intend you, practise'd?

Caef You may be pleas'd to catch at mine intent, By what did heere befall me. Your Wife and Brother Made warres vpon me, and their contestation Was Theame for you, you were the word of warre.

Ant You do mistake your busines, my Brother neuer Did vrge me in his Aet I did inquire it, And haue my Learning from some true reports That drew their swords with you, did he not rather Discredit my authority with yours, And make the warres alike against my stomacke, Hauing alike your cause Of this, my Lette Before did satisfie you. If you'l patch a quarrell, As matter whole you haue to make it with,

x 3

It

It must not be with this.

Cas. You praise your selfe, by laying defects of iudgement to me: but you patcht vp your excoits.

Anth. Not so, not so.

I know you could not lacke, I am certaine on't,
Very necessity of this thought, that I
Your Partner in the cause 'gainst which he fought,
Could not with gracefull eyes attend those Warres
Which fronted mine owne peace. As for my wife,
I would you had her spirit, in such another,
The third o.h' world is yours, which with a Snaffle,
You may pace easie, but not such a wife

Enobar. Would we had all such wiues, that the men might go to Warres with the women.

Anth. So much vncurable, her Garboiles (Cesar)
Made out of her impatience. which not wanted
Shrodenesse of policie to. I greewing grant,
Did you too much disquiet, for that you must,
But say I could not helpe it.

Cesar. I wrote to you, when rioting in Alexandria you Did pocker vp my Letters: and with taunts
Did gibe my Misue out of audience.

Ant. Sir, he fell vpon me, ere admitted, then:
Three Kings I had newly feasted, and did want
Of what I was i'th'morning but next day
I told him of my selfe, which was as much
As to haue askt him pardon. Let this Fellow
Be nothing of our strife. if we contend
Out of our question wipe him,

Cesar. You haue broken the Article of your oath, which you shall neuer haue tongue to charge me with.

Lep. Soft Cesar.

Ant. No Lepidus, let him speake,
The Honour is Sacred which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lacke it. but on Cesar,
The Article of my oath.

Cesar. To lend me Armes, and aide when I requir'd them, the which you both denied.

Anth. Neglected rather:

And then when poisoned houres had bound me vp
From mine owne knowledge, as neerely as I may,
Ile play the penitent to you. But mine honesty,
Shall not make poore my greatnesse, nor my power
Worke without it, Truth is, that Julius,
To haue me out of Egypt, made Warres heere,
For which my selfe, the ignorant mortue, do
So farre aske pardon, as befits mine Honour
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis Noble spoken.

Meca. If it might please you, to enforce no further
The griefes betweene ye to forget them quite,
Were to remember. that the present neede,
Speakes to atone you.

Lep. Worthily spoken Mecenas.

Enobar. Or if you borrow one anothers Loue for the instant, you may when you heare no more words of Pompey returne it againe: you shall haue time to wrangle in, when you haue nothing else to do

Anth. Thou art a Souldier, onely speake no more.

Enob. That truth should be silent, I had almost forgot.

Anth. You wrong this preience, therefore speake no
more.

Enob. Go too then: your Considerate stone.

Cesar. I do not much dislike the matter, but
The manner of his speech. for't cannot be,

We shall remaine in friendship, our conditions
So diffing in their acts. Yet if I knew,
What Hoop should hold vs staunch from edge to edge
Ar'h' world I would persue it.

Agri. Giue me leaue Cesar.

Cesar. Speake Agrippa.

Agri. Thou hast a Sister by the Mothers side, admir'd
Octavia: Great Mark Anthony is now a widdower.

Cesar. Say not, say Agrippa, if Cleopater heard you, your proofe were well deserued of rashnesse.

Anth. I am not married Cesar. let me heere Agrippa
further speake.

Agri. To hold you in perpetuall am tie,
To make you Brothers, and to knit your hearts
With an vn-slipping knot, take Anthony,
Octavia to his wife. whose beauty claimes
No worse a husband then the best of men. whose Vertue, and whose generall graces, speake
That which none else can utter. By this marriage,
All little Ielousies which now seeme great,
And all great feares, which now import their dangers,
Would then be nothing. Truth's would be tales,
Where now halfe tales be truth's: her loue to both,
Would each to other, and all loues to both
Draw after her. Pardon what I haue spoke,
For 'tis a studied not a present thought,
By duty ruminated.

Anth. Will Cesar speake?

Cesar. Not till he heares how Anthony is toucht,
With what is spoke already.

Anth. What power is in Agrippa,
If I would say Agrippa, be it so,
To make this good?

Cesar. The power of Cesar,
And his power, vnto Octavia.

Anth. May I neuer
(To this good purpose, that so fairely shewes)
Dreame of impediment let me haue thy hand
Further this act of Grace: and from this houre,
The heart of Brothers gouerne in our Loues,
And sway our great Designes.

Cesar. There's my hand:
A Sister I bequeath you, whom no Brother
Did euer loue so deere. Let her lue
To ioyne our kingdomes, and our hearts, and neuer
Ile eise our Loues againe.

Lep. Happily, Amen.

Ant. I did not think to draw my Sword 'gainst Pompey,
For he hath laid strange courtesies, and great
Of late vpon me. I must thanke him onely,
Least my remembrance, suffer ill report:
At heele of that, desie him.

Lep. Time calls vpon's,
Of vs most Pompey presently be sought,
Or else he seekes out vs.

Anth. Where lies he?

Cesar. About the Mount-Mesena

Anth. What is his strength by land?

Cesar. Great, and encreasing:
But by Sea he is an absolute Master.

Anth. So is the Fame,
Would we had spoke together. Hast we for it,
Yet ere we put our selues in Armes, dispatch we
The businesse we haue talkt of.

Cesar. With most gladnesse,
And do inuite you to my Sisters view,

Whe-

Whether straight Ile lead you.

Anth. Let vs Lepidus not lacke your compaign.

Lep. Noble Anthony, not sickenesse should detain me.

Flourish. Exit omnes.

Manet Enobarbus, Agrippa, Mecenas.

Mec. Welcome from Egypt Sir.

End. Halfe the heart of Cesar, worthy Mecenas My honourable Friend Agrippa.

Agri. Good Enobarbus.

Mec. We haue cause to be glad, that matters are so well digested, you staid well by't in Egypt.

Enob. I Sir, we did sleepe day out of countenance : and made the night light with drinking

Mec. Eight Wilde-Boares rosted whole at a breakfast - and but twelue persons there Is this true?

Eno This was but as a Flye by an Eagle we had much more monstrous matter of Feast, which worthily deserued noting.

Mecenas. She's a most triumphant Lady, if report be square to her.

Enob. When she first met Marke Anthony, she purst vp his heart vpon the River of Sidris.

Agri. There she appear'd indeed : or my reporter deuis'd well for her.

Eno. I will tell you,
The Barge she sat in, like a burnisht Throne
Burnt on the water : the Poop was beaten Gold,
Purple the Sailes - and so perfumed that
The Windes were Loue-sicke.
With them the Owers were Siluer,
Which to the tune of Flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beate, to follow faster;
As amorous of their strokes. For her owne person,
It beggerd all discription, she did lye
In her Paultion, cloth of Gold, of Tissue,
O're-picturing that Venns, where we see
The fancie out-worke Nature On each side her,
Stood pretty Dimpled Boyes, like smiling Cupids,
With diuers colour'd Fannes whose winde did seeme,
To gloue the delicate cheekes which they did coole,
And what they vndid did.

Agrip. Oh rare for Anthony.
Eno. Her Gentlewoman, like the Nereides,
So many Mer-maides tended her i'th'eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the Helme
A seeming Mer-maide steeres The Silken Tackle,
Swell with the touches of those Flower-soft hands,
That yarely frame the office. From the Barge
A strange inuisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adiacent Wharfes. The City cast
Her people out vpon her and Anthony
Enthron'd i'th' Market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to'th'ayre : which but for vacancie,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopater too,
And made a gap in Nature.

Agri. Rare Egyptian.
Eno. Vpon her landing, Anthony sent to her,
Invited her to Supper : she replied,
It should be better, he became her guest.
Which she entreated, our Courteous Anthony,
Whom nare the word of no woman hard spake,
Being barber'd ten times o're, goes to the Feast,
And for his ordinary, paies his heart,
For what his eyes eate onely.

Agri. Royall Wench :

She made great Cesar lay his Sword to bed;
He ploughed her, and she crupt.

Eno I saw her once
Hop forty Paces through the publicke steele.
And hauing lost her breath, she spokt, and panted,
That she did make defect, perfection,
And breathlesse powre breath forth.

Mec. Now Anthony, must leaue her vnderly.

Eno. Neuer he will not -
Age cannot wither her, nor custome state
Her infinite variety - other women tloy
The appetites they feede, but she makes hungry
Where most she satisfies. For vildest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy Priests
Blesse h r, when she is Riggit.

Mec. If Beauty, Wisdome, Modesty, can fere
The heart of Anthony Octauia is
A blessed lottery to him.

Agrip. Let vs go. Good Enobarbus, make your selfe my guest, whilst you abide heere.

Eno. Humbly Sir I thanke you. Exeunt

Enter Anthony, Cesar, Octauia betweene them.

Anth. The world, and my great office, will Sometimes deuide me from your bosome.

Octa. All which time, before the Gods my knees shall bowe my prayers to them for you.

Anth. Goodnight Sir My Octauia
Read not my blemishes in the worlds report :
I haue not kept my square, but that to come
Shall all be done byth' Rule : good night deere Lady :
Good night Sir.

Cesar. Goodnight. Exit.

Enter Soothsayer.
Anth. Now sirrah you do wish your selfe in Egypt ?
Sooth. Would I had neuer come from thence, nor you thither

Ant. If you can, your reason ?
Sooth. I see it in my motion .haue it not in my tongue;
But yet hie you to Egypt againe

Antho. Say to me, whose Fortunes shall rise higher
Cesars or mine?

Soot. Cesars. Therefore (oh Anthony) stay not by his side Thy Demon that thy spirit which keeps thee, is Noble, Courageous, high vnmatchable,
Where Cesar is not. But neere him, thy Angell Becomes a seare as being o're-power'd, therefore
Make space enough betweene you.

Anth. Speake this no more.
Sooth. To none but thee no more but : when to thee,

If thou dost play with him at any game,
Thou art sure to loose. And of that Natrall lucke,
He beates thee 'gainst the oddes. Thy Luster thickens,
When he shines by : I say againe, thy spirit
Is all afraid to gouerne thee neere him :
But he alway 'tis Noble.

Anth. Get thee gone :
Say to Ventigius I would speake with him. Exit.

He shall to Parthia, be it Art or hap,
He hath spoken true The very Dice obey him,
And in our sports my better cunning faints,
Vnder his chance, if we draw lots he speede,
His Cocks do winne the Barreile, full of mine,
When it is all to naught. and his Quailles euer
Beate mine (in hoop) at odd's. I will to Egypt

And

And though I make this marriage for my peace,
I'th East my pleasure lies. Oh come Ventigius.

Enter Ventigius.

You must to Parthia, your Commissions ready:
Follow me, and rescue it.

Exeunt

Enter Lepidus, Meccenas and Agrippa.

Lepidus Trouble your selues no further. pray you hasten your Generals after

Agg. Sir, Marke Anthony. will e'ne but kisse Octavia, and wee'll follow.

Lepi. Till I shall see you in your Sou'diers dresse,
Which will become you both. Farewell.

Mecc. We shall: as I conceiue the iourney, be at Mount before you Lepidus

Lepi. Your way is shorter, my purposes do draw me much about, you le win two dayes vpon me.

Both. Sir good successe.

Lepi. Farewell.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopater, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Giue me some Munitke. Musicke, moody foode of vs that trade in Loue.

Omnes. The Musicke, ho

Enter Mardian the Eunuch

Cleo. Let it alone, let's to Billards. come Charmian

Char. My arme is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleopa. As well a woman with an Eunuch plaide, as with a woman. Come you'll play with me Sir?

Marda. As well as I can Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is shewed,
Though't come to short

The Actor may pleade pardon. He none now,
Giue me mine Angle, wee'll to'th River there
My Musicke playing farre off. I will betray
Tawny fine fishes, my bended hooke shall pierce
Their slimy iawes. and as I draw them vp,
He thinke them euery one an Anthony,
And say, ah ha; y'are caught.

Char. 'Twas merry when you wager'd on your Angling, when your diuer did hang a salt fish on his hooke which he with seruencie drew vp.

Cleo. That time? Oh times.

I laught him out of patience: and that night
I laught him into patience, and next morne,
Ere the ninth houre, I drunke him to his bed:
Then put my Tires and Mantles on him, whilst
I wore his Sword Phillipian. Oh from Italic,

Enter a Messenger.

Ramme shou thy fruitfull tidings in mine eares,
That long time haue bin barren.

Mes. Madam, Madam.

Cleo. Anthony's dead,

If thou say so Villaine, thou kil'st thy Mistress.
But well and free, if thou so yeild him.

There is Gold, and heere

My blewest vaines to kisse a hand that Kings
Haue lipt, and trembled kissing.

Mes. First Madam he is well.

Cleo. Why there's more Gold.

But sirrah marke we vs

To say, the dead are well: bring it to that,
The Gold giue thee, will I melt and powr
Downe thy ill vntiring throte.

Mes. Good Madam heare me.

Cleo. Well, go too I will.

But there's no goodnesse in thy face if Anthony
Be free and healthfull; so tart a fauour
To trumpet such good tidings, I fnot well,
Thou shouldst come like a Furie crown'd with Snakes,
Not like a formall man.

Mes. Wilt please you heare me?

Cleo. I haue a mind to strike thee ere thou speak'st.
Yet if thou say Anthony liues, 'tis well,
Or friends with Cesar, or not Captiue to him,
He set thee in a shower of Gold, and haile
Rich Pearles vpon thee.

Mes. Madam, he's well.

Cleo. Well said.

Mes. And Friends with Cesar.

Cleo. Th'art an honest man.

Mes. Cesar, and he, are greater Friends then euer.

Cleo. Make thee a Fortune from me.

Mes. But yet Madam.

Cleo. I do not like but yet, it does alay
The good precedence, sie vpon but yet,
But yet is as a laylor to bring forth
Some monstrous Malefactor. Prythee Friend,
Powre out the packe of matter to mine eare,
The good and bad together. he's friends with Cesar,
In state of health thou sayst, and thou sayst, free.

Mes. Free Madam, no. I made no such report,
He's bound vnto Octavia.

Cleo. For what good turne?

Mes. For the best turne i'th bed.

Ch. I am pale Charmian.

Mes. Madam, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. The worst infectious Pestilence vpon thee.

Strikes him downe.

Mes. Good Madam patience.

Cleo. What say you?

Strikes him.

Hence horrible Villaine, or ile spurne thine eyes
Like balls before me: ile vnhat e thy head,

She hailes him vp and downe.

Thou shalt be whipt with Wyer, and strew'd in baine,
Smartering in lingring pickle.

Mes. Gracious Madam,

I that do bring the newes, made not the match.

Cleo. Say 'tis not so, a Prouince I will giue thee,
And make thy Fortune proud the blow thou had'st
Shall make thy peace for mouing me to rage,
And I will boot thee with what guift beside Thy modestie can begge.

Mes. He's married Madam.

Cleo. Rogue, thou hast liu'd too long. Draw a knife.

Mes. Nay then Ile runne.

What meane you Madam, I haue made no fault. Exit.

Char. Good Madam keepe your selfe within your selfe,
The man is innocent.

Cleo. Some Innocents scape not the thunderbolt.
Melt Egypt into Nyle and kindly creatures
Turne all to Serpents Call the flauie againe,
Though I am mad, I will nor byte him Call?

Char. He is afeard to come.

Cleo. I will not hurt him,
These hands do lacke Nobility, that they strike
A meaner then my selfe: since I my selfe
Haue giuen my selfe the cause. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger againe.

Though it be honest, it is neuer good
To bring bad newes: giue to a gracious Message

An

An host of tongues, but let all tydings tell
Themselves, when they be felt.

Mef. I haue done my duty.

Cleo. Is he married?

I cannot hate thee worser then I do,

If thou againe say yes

Mef. He's married Madam.

Cleo. The Gods confound thee,

Dost thou hold there still?

Mef. Should I lye Madame?

Cleo. Oh, I would thou didst.

So halfe my Egypt were submerg'd and made

A Cesterne for scald Snakes. Go get thee hence,

Had'st thou Narcissus in thy face to me,

Thou would'st appeere most vgly He is married?

Mef. I craue your Highnesse pardon.

Cleo. He is married?

Mef. Take no offence, that I would not offend you,

To punish me for what you make me do

Seemes much vnequall, he's married to Octavia.

Cleo. Oh that his fault should make a knaue of thee,

That art not what thou'rt sure of. Get thee hence,

The Marchandize which thou hast brought from Rome
Are all too deere for me.

Lye they vpon thy hand, and be vndone by em.

Char. Good your Highnesse patience

Cleo. In praying Anthony, I haue disprais'd Cesar.

Char. Many times Madam

Cleo. I am paid for't now. lead me from hence,

I faint, oh Iras, Charman. 'tis no matter.

Go to the Fellow, good Alexas bid him

Report the feature of Octavia: her yeares,

Her inclination, let him not leaue out

The colour of her haire. Bring me word quickly,

Let him for euer go, let him not Charman,

Though he be painted one way like a Gorgon,

The other wayes a Mars. Bid you Alexas

Bring me word, how tall she is. pitty me Charman,

But do not speake to me. Lead me to my Chamber

Exeunt.

Flourish. Enter Pompey, at one doore with Drum and Trumpet at another Cesar, Lepidus, Anthony, Enobarbus, Mecenas,
Agrippa, Menas with Souldiers Marching

Pom. Your Hostages I haue, 'o haue you mine:

And we shall talke before we fight

Cesar. Most meete that first we come to words,

And therefore haue we

Our written purposes before vs sent,

Which if thou hast considered, let vs know,

If'twill tye vp thy discontented Sword,

And carry backe to Cicilie much tall youth,

That else must perish heere.

Pom. To you all three,

The Senators alone of this great world,

Chiefe Factors for the Gods. I do not know,

Wherefore my Father should reuengers warr,

Having a Sonne and Friends, since Julius Cesar,

Who at Phillippi the good Brutus ghosted,

There saw you labouring for him. What was't

That moud' pale Cassius to conspire? And what

Made all-honor'd, honest, Romane Brutus,

With the arm'd rest, Courtiers of beaustious freedome,

To drench the Capitoll, but that they would

Haue one man but a man, and that his it

Hath made me rigge my Name. At whose burthen,

The anger'd Ocean fomes, with which I meant

To scourge th'ingratitude, that despightfull Rome
Cast on my Noble Father.

Cesar. Take your time.

Ant. Thou can'st not feare vs Pompey with thy sailes.

Weele speake with thee at Sea. At land thou know'st

How much we do o're-court thee.

Pom. At Land indeed

Thou dost orecount me of my Fatherrs house:

But since the Cuckoo buildes not for himselfe,

Remaine in't as thou maist.

Lep. Be pleas'd to tell vs,

(For this is from the present how you take)

The offers we haue sent you.

Cesar. There's the point.

Ant. Which do not be entreated too,

But waigh what it is worth imbrac'd

Cesar. And what may follow to try a larger Fortune.

Pom. You haue made me offer

Of Cicilie, Sardinia. and I must

Rid all the Sea of Pirats. Then, to send

Measures of Wheate to Rome. this greed vpon,

To part with vnhackt edges, and beare backe

Our Targes vndinted.

Omnes. That's our offer.

Pom. Know then I came before you heere,

A man prepar'd

To take this offer. But Marke Anthony,

Put me to some impatience though I loose

The praise of it by telling. You must know

When Cesar and your Brother were at blowes,

Your Mother came to Cicilie, and did finde

Her welcome Friendly

Ant. I haue heard it Pompey,

And am well studied for a liberall thanks,

Which I do owe you.

Pom. Let me haue your hand:

I did not thinke Sir, to haue met you heere,

Ant. The beds i'th East are soft, and thanks to you,

That cal'd me timelier then my purpose hither:

For I haue gain'd by't.

Cesar. Since I saw you last, there's a change vpon you

Pom. Well, I know not,

What counts harsh Fortune cast's vpon my face,

But in my bosome shall the neuer come,

To make my heart her vassaile.

Lep. Well met heere.

Pom. I hope so Lepidus, thus we are agreed:

I craue our composition may be written

And seal'd betweene vs,

Cesar. That's the next to do

Pom. Weele feast each other, ere we part, and lett's

Draw lots who shall begin.

Ant. That will I Pompey.

Pompey. No Anthony take the lot: but first or last,

your fine Egyptian cookerie shall haue the same, I haue heard that Julius Cesar, grew fat with feasting there.

Anth. You haue heard much.

Pom. I haue faire meaning Sir.

Ant. And faire words to them.

Pom. Then so much haue I heard,

And I haue heard Appolodorus carried

Ero. No more that: he did so.

Pom. What I pray you?

Ero. A certaine Queene to Cesar in a Matris.

Pom. I know thee now, how far'st thou Souldier?

Ero. Well, and well am like to do, for I perceiue

For e

Four Feasts are toward.

Pom. Let me shake thy hand,
I neuer hated thee. I haue seene thee fight,
When I haue enuied thy behauiour.

Enob. Sir, I neuer lou'd you much, but I ha' prais'd ye,
When you haue well deseru'd ten times as much,
As I haue said you did.

Pom. Inioy thy plainnesse,
It nothing ill becomes thee:
Aboord my Gally, I inuite you all.
Will you leade Lords?

All. Shew's the way, sir.

Pom. Come. Exeunt. Manet Enob. & Menus

Men. Thy Father Pompey would ne're haue made this Treaty. You, and I haue knowne sir.

Enob. At Sea, I thinke.

Men. We haue Sir.

Enob. You haue done well by water.

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. I will praise any man that will praise me, though it cannot be denied what I haue done by Land.

Men. Nor what I haue done by water.

Enob. Yes some-thing you can deny for your owne safely: you haue bin a great Theefe by Sea.

Men. And you by Land.

Enob. There I deny my Land seruice: but giue mee your hand Menus, if our eyes had authority, heere they might take two Theeues kissing.

Men. All mens faces are true, what'somere their hands are.

Enob. But there is neuer a fayre Woman, ha's a true
Face.

Men. No slander, they steale hearts.

Enob. We came hither to fight with you.

Men. For my part, I am sorry it is turn'd to a Drinking. Pompey doth this day laugh away his Fortune.

Enob. If he do, sure he cannot weep't backe againe.

Men. Y'haue said Sir, we look'd not for Marke Anthony heere, pray you, is he married to Cleopatra?

Enob. Caesar's Sister is call'd Octavia.

Men. True Sir, she was the wife of Caius Marcellus.

Enob. But she is now the wife of Marcus Antonius.

Men. Pray ye sir.

Enob. 'Tis true.

Men. Then is Caesar and he, for euer knit together.

Enob. If I were bound to Diuine of this vniy, I wold not Prophecie so.

Men. I thinke the policy of that purpose, made more in the Marriage then the loue of the parties.

Enob. I thinke so too. But you shall finde the band that seemes to tye their friendship together, will bee the very strangler of their Amity. Octavia is of a holy, cold, and still conuersation.

Men. Who would not haue his wife so?

Eno. Not he that himselfe is not so: which is Marke Anthony: he will to his Egyptian dish againe: then shall the sighes of Octavia blow the fire vp in Caesar, and (as I said before) that which is the strength of their Amity, shall proue the immediate Author of their variance. Anthony will vse his affection where it is. Hee married but his occasion heere.

Men. And thus it may be. Come Sir, will you aboard?
I haue a health for you.

Enob. I shall take it sir: we haue vs'd our Throats in Egypt.

Men. Come, let's away.

Exeunt.

Musicke plays.

Enter two or three Seruants with a Banquet.

1 Heere they'l be man: some o'th' their Plants are ill rooted already, the least winde i'th' world wil blow them downe.

2 Lepidus is high Conlord.

1 They haue made him drinke Almes drinke.

2 As they pinch one another by the disposition, hee cries out, no more; reconciles them to his entreatie, and himselfe to'th' drinke.

1 But it raises the greater warre betweene him & his discretion.

2 Why this it is to haue a name in great mens Fellowship: I had as liue haue a Reede that will doe me no
seruice, as a Partizan I could not heaue.

1 To be call'd into a huge Sphere, and not to be seene to moue in't, are the holes where eyes should bee, which pittisfully disaister the cheekes.

A Sennet sounded.

Enter Caesar, Anthony, Pompey, Lepidus, Agrippa, Decimus, Enobarbus, Menes, with other Captaines.

Ant. Thus do they Sir: they take the flow o'th' Nyle
By certaine scales i'th' Pyramid: they know
By'th' height, the lownesse, or the meane: If dearth
Or Foizon follow. The higher Nilus swells,
The more it promises: as it ebbs, the Seedsmen
Vpon the slime and Ooze scatters his graine,
And shortly comes to Harvest.

Lep. Y'haue strange Serpents there?

Anth. I Lepidus

Lep. Your Serpent of Egypt, is bred now of your mud
by the operation of your Sun: so is your Crocodile.

Ant. They are so.

Pom. Sir, and some Wine: A health to Lepidus.

Lep. I am not so well as I should be.
But Illene're our.

Enob. Not till you haue slept: I feare me you'l be in till then.

Lep. Nay certainly, I haue heard the Ptolomes Pyramids are very goodly things: without contradiction I haue heard that.

Menas. Pompey, a word.

Pomp. Say in mine eare, what is't.

Men. Forsake thy seate I do beseech thee Captaine,
And heare me speake a word.

Pom. Forbeare me till anon. Whispers in's eare.
This Wine for Lepidus.

Lep. What manner o'thing is your Crocodile?

Ant. It is shap'd fir like it selfe, and it is as broad as it hath bredth: It is iust so high as it is, and mooues with it owne organs. It liues by that which nourisheth it, and the Elements once out of it, it Transmigrates.

Lep. What colour is it of?

Ant. Of it owne colour too.

Lep. 'Tis a strange Serpent.

Ant. 'Tis so, and the teares of it are wet.

Cas. Will this description satisfie him?

Ant. With the Health that Pompey giues him, else he is a very Epicure.

Pomp. Go hang sir, hang: tell me of that? Away:
Do as I bid you. Where's this Cup I call'd for?

Men. If for the sake of Merit thou wilt heare mee,

Rise

Rise from thy stoole.

Pom. I thinke th'art mad - the matter ?

Men. I haue euer held my cap off to thy Fortunes.

Pom. Thou hast seru'd me with much faith . what's else to say ? Be iolly Lords.

Anth. These Quicke-sands Lepidus,
Keepe off, them for you sinke.

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of all the world ?

Pom. What saist thou ?

Men. Wilt thou be Lord of the whole world ?
That's twice.

Pom. How should that be ?

Men. But entertaine it, and though thou thinke me poore, I am the man will giue thee all the world.

Pom. Hast thou drunke well.

Men. No Pompey, I haue kept me from the cup,
Thou art if thou dar'st be, the earthly loue :
What ere the Ocean pales, or skie inclippes,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't

Pom. Shew me which way ?

Men. These three World-sharers, these Competitors
Are in thy vessell. Let me cut the Cable,
And when we are put off, fall to their throates :
All there is thine.

Pom. Ah, this thou shouldst haue done,
And not haue spoke on't. In me 'tis villanie,
In thee, 't had bin good seruice thou must know,
'Tis not my profit that does lead mine Honour .
Mine Honour it, Repent that ere thy tongue,
Hath so betraide thine acte Being done vnkowne,
I should haue found it afterwards well done,
But must condemne it now . desist, and drinke.

Men. For this, Ile neuer follow
Thy paul'd Fortunes more,
Who seekes and will not take, when once 'tis offer'd,
Shall neuer finde it more.

Pom. This health to Lepidus

Ant. Beare him ashore,
Ile pledge it for him Pompey

Eno. Heere's to thee Menas.

Men. Enobarbus, welcome.

Pom. Fill till the cup be hid.

Eno. There's a strong Fellow Menas.

Men. Why ?

Eno. A beares the third part of the world man - seest not ?

Men. The third part, then he is drunk . would it were all, that it might go on wheels.

Eno. Drinke thou encrease the Reeles.

Men. Come.

Pom. This is not yet an Alexandrian Feast.

Ant. It ripens towards it . strike the Vessells ho.

Heere's to Caesar.

Caesar. I could well forbear't, it's monstrous labour
when I wash my braine, and it grow fouler

Ant. Be a Child o'th'time.

Caesar. Possesse it, Ile make answer but I had rather fast from all, foure dayes, then drinke to much in one

Enob. Ha my braue Emperour, shall we daunce now the Egyptian Backenals, and celebrate our drinke ?

Pom. Let's ha't good Souldier.

Ant. Come, let's all take hands,
Till that the conquering Wine hath steep't our sense,
In soft and delicate Lethe.

Eno. All take hands -

Make battery to our eares with the loud Musicke,

The while, Ile place you, then the Boy shall sing.
The holding every man shall beate as loud,
As his strong sides can volly.

Musicke Playes Enobarbus places them hand in hand.
The Song.

Come show Monarch of the Prime,
Plumpie Bacchus, with pmke eyes :
In thy Fattes our Cares be drown'd,
With thy Grapes our haire be Crown'd.
Cup vs till the world go round,
Cup vs till the world go round.

Caesar. What would you more ?

Pompey goodnight Good Brother
Let me request you of our grauer businesse
Frownes at this leuitie. Gentle Lords let's part,
You see we haue burnt our cheekes Strong Enobarbe
Is weaker then the Wine, and mine owne tongue
Spleet's what it speakes the wilde disguise hath almost Antickt vs all. What needs more words ? goodnight,
Good Anthony your hand.

Pom. Ile try you on the shore.

Anth. And shall Sir, giues your hand

Pom. Oh Anthony, you haue my Father house.
But what, we are Friends ?

Come downe into the Boate

Eno. Take heed you fall not Meidi Ile not on shore,
No to my Cabin these Drummes,
These Trumpets, Flutes . whist
Le Neptune heare, we bid aloud farewell
To these great fellowes. Sound and be hang'd, sound out.

Sound a Flourish with Drummes.

Enor. Hoo saies a thees's my Cap.

Men. Ho, Noble Captaine, come.

Exit Ant.

Enter Ventidius as it were in triumph, the dead body of Pacorus borne before him.

Ven. Now darting Parthya art thou stroke, and now
Pleas'd Fortune does of Marcus Crassus death
Make me reuenger Beare the Kings Sonnes body,
Before our Army thy Pacorus Orades,
Pases this for Marcus Crassus.

Romaine. Noble Ventidius,
Whil'st yer with Parthian blood thy Sword is warme,
The Fugitiue Parthians follow. Spurre through Media,
Mesopotamia, and the shelters, whether
The routed flie So thy grand Captaine Anthony
Shall set thee on triumphane Chariots, and Put Garlands on thy head.

Ven. Oh Silius, Silius,
I haue done enough. A lower place note well
May make too great an act. For learne this Silius,
Better to leaue yndone, then by our deed
Acquire too high a Fame, when him we serues away.
Caesar and Anthony, haue euer wonne
More in their officer, then person. Sossius
One of my place in Syria, his Lieutenant,
For quicke accumulation of renowne,
Which he archiu'd by 'th' minute, lost his fauour.
Who does 'th' Warres more then his Captaine can,
Becomes his Capitaine Captaine . and Ambition
(The Souldiers vertue) rather makes choise of losse
Then gaine, which darkens him
I could do more to do Anthony good,
But 'twould offend him. And in his offence,

Should

Should my performance perish.

Rom. Thou hast Ventidius that, without the which a Souldier and his Sword graunts scarce distinction : thou wilt write to Anthony.

Ven. He humbly signifie what in his name, That magicall word of Warre we haue effected, How with his Banners, and his well paid ranks, The nere-yet beaten Horse of Parthia, We haue iaded out o'th Field.

Rom. Where is he now?

Ven. He purposeth to Athens, whither with what hast The waight we must conuay with's, will permit. We shall appeare before him. On there, passe along.

Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa at one doore, Enobarbus at another.

Agri. What are the Brothers parted?

Eno. They haue dispatcht with Pompey, he is gone, The other three are Sealing. Ottavia weepes To part from Rome: Cesar is sad, and Lepidus Since Pompey's feast, as Menas saies, is troubled With the Greene-Sicknesse.

Agri. 'Tis a Noble Lepidus.

Eno. A very fine one: oh, how he loues Cesar.

Agri. Nay but how deereley he adores Mark Anthony.

Eno. Cesar? why he's the Iupiter of men.

Ant. What's Anthony, the God of Iupiter?

Eno. Spake you of Cesar? How, the non-pareill?

Agri. Oh Anthony, oh thou Arabian Bird!

Eno. Would you praise Cesar, say Casango no further.

Agri. Indeed he plied them both with excellent praises.

Eno. But he loues Cesar best, yet he loues Anthony:

Hoo, Hearts, Tongues, Figure, Scribes, Bards, Poets, cannot Thinke speake, cast, write, sing, number: hoo, His loue to Anthony. But as for Cesar, Kneele downe, kneele downe, and wonder.

Agri. Both he loues.

Eno. They are his Shards, and he their Beetle, so: This is to horse: Adieu, Noble Agrippa.

Agri. Good Fortune worthy Souldier, and farewell.

Enter Cesar, Anthony, Lepidus, and Ottavia.

Antho. No further Sir.

Cesar. You take from me a great part of my selfe: Vse me well in't. Sister, proue such a wife As my thoughts make thee, and as my farthest Band Shall passe on thy approue. most Noble Anthony, Let not the peece of Vertue which is set Betwixt vs, as the Cyment of our Ioue To keepe it builded, be the Ramme to batter The Fortresse of it: for better might we Haue lou'd without this meane, if on both parts This be not cherisht.

Ant. Make me not offended, in your distrust.

Cesar. I haue said.

Ant. You shall not finde,

Though you be therein curious, the left cause For what you seeme to feare, so the Gods keepe you, And make the hearts of Romaines serue your ends: We will heere part

Cesar. Farewell my deereft Sister, fare thee well, The Elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort: fare thee well.

Ott. My Noble Brother.

Anth. The Aprill's in her eyes, it is Loues spring, And these the showers to bring it on: be cheerfull.

Ott. Sir, looke well to my Husbands house: and—
Cesar. What Ott. is?

Ott. He tell you in your eare.

Ant. Her tongue will not obey her heart, nor can Her heart informe her tougue.

The Swannes downe feather

That stands vpon the Swell at the full of Tide:

And neither way inclines.

Eno. Will Cesar weepe?

Agri. He ha's a cloud in's face.

Eno. He were the worse for that were he a Horse, so is he being a man.

Agri. Why Enobarbus:

When Anthony found Julius Cesar dead, He cried almost to roaring: And he wept, When at Phillippi he found Brutus slaine.

Eno. That year indeed, he was troubled with a rheume, What willingly he did confound, he wail'd, Beleeu't till I weepe too.

Cesar. No sweet Ottavia, You shall heare from me still: the time shall not Out-go my thinking on you.

Ant. Come Sir, come,

He wrastle with you in my strength of loue, Looke heere I haue you, thus I let you go, And giue you to the Gods.

Cesar. Adieu, be happy.

Lep. Let all the number of the Starres giue light To thy faire way.

Cesar. Farewell, farewell.

Ant. Farewell.

Kisses Ott.

Trumpets sound.

Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Where is the Fellow?

Alex. Halfe asleerd to come.

Cleo. Go too, go too. Come hither Sir.

Enter the Messenger as before.

Alex. Good Maiestie Herod of Iury dare not looke vpon vs, but when you are well pleas'd.

Cleo. That Herod's head, He haue. but how? When Anthony is gone, through whom I might commaund it: Co ne thou neere.

Mes. Most gracious Maiestie.

Cleo. Did'st thou behold Ottavia?

Mes. I dread Queene.

Cleo. Where?

Mes. Madam in Rome, I lookt her in the face, and saw her led betwene her Brother, and Mark Anthony.

Cleo. Is she as tall as me?

Mes. She is not Madam.

Cleo. Didst heare her speake?

Is she shrill tongu'd or low?

Mes. Madam, I heard her speake, she is low voic'd.

Cleo. That's not so good: he cannot like her long.

Char. Like her? Oh Isis. 'tis impossible

Cleo. I thinke to Charmian, dull of tongue, & dwarfish What Maiestie is in her gate, remember If ere thou look'st on Maiestie.

Mes. She creepes her motion, & her station are as one. She shewes a body, rather then a life, A Statue, then a Breather.

Cleo. Is this certaine?

Mes. Or I haue no obseruance.

Cha. Three in Egypt cannot make better note.

Cleo. He's very knowing, I do perceiue, There's nothing in her yet.

The

The Fellow ha's good iudgement.

Char. Excellent.

Cleo. Guesse at her yeares, I prythee.

Mess. Madam, she was a widdow.

Cleo. Widdow? Charmian, heateke.

Mess. And I do thinke she's thirtie.

Cle. Bear'st thou her face in mind? is't long or round?

Mess. Round, euen to faultinesse.

Cleo. For the most part too, they are foolish that are so. Her haire what colour?

Mess. Browne Madam, and her forehead As low as the would with it.

Cleo. There's Gold for thee, Thou must not take my former sharpenesse ill, I will employ thee backe againe. I finde thee Most fit for businesse. Go, make thee ready, Our Letters are prepar'd.

Char. A proper man.

Cleo. Indeed he is so. I repent me much That so I harmed him. Why me think's by him, This Creature's no such thing.

Char. Nothing Madam

Cleo. The man hath seene some Maiesty, and should know.

Char. Hath he seene Maiestie? Ifs else defend. and serving you so long.

Cleo. I haue one thing more to aske him yet good Charmian. but 'tis no matter, thou shalt bring him to me where I will write; all may be well enough.

Char. I warrant you Madam.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony and Octavia.

Ant. Nay, nay Octavia, not onely that, That were excusable, that and thousands more Of semblable import, but he hath wag'd New Warres 'gainst Pompey. Made his will, and read it, To publicke eare, spoke scantily of me, When perforce he could not But pay me tearmes of Honour: cold and sickly He vented then most narrow measure, When the best hint was given him: he not look't, Or did it from his teeth

Octavi. Oh my good Lord, Beleeue not all, or if you must beleeue, Stomacke not all. A more vnhappie Lady, If this deuision chance, ne're stood betweene Praying for both parts:

The good Gods wil mocke me presently, When I shall pray: Oh blesse my Lord, and Husband, Vndo that prayer, by crying out as loud, Oh blesse my Brother. Husband winne, winne Brother, Prayes, and distroyes the prayer, no midway 'Twixt these extremes at all.

Ant. Gentle Octavia, Let your best loue draw to that point wh. ch seeks Best to preferue it: if I loose mine Honour I loose my selfe better I were not yours Then your so branchlesse But as you requested, Your selfe shall go betweene's, the meane time Lady, He raise the preparation of a Warre Shall staine your Brother, make your soonest hast, So your desires are yours.

Oct. Thanks to my Lord, The Ioue of power make me most weake, most weake, You reconciler: Warres 'twixt you twaine would be, As if the world should cleaue, and that same men Should soader vp the Rift.

Ant. When it apperes to you where this begins, Turne your displeasure that way, for our faults Can neuer be so equal, that your loue Can equally moue with them. Prouide your going, Choose your owne company, and command what cost Your heart he's mind too.

Exeunt.

Enter Enobarbus, and Eros.

Eno. How now Friend Eros?

Eros. Ther's strange Newes come Sir.

Eno. What man?

Eros. Caesar & Lepidus haue made warres vpon Pompey.

Eno. This is old, what is the successe?

Eros. Caesar hauing made vse of him in the warres 'gainst Pompey presently denied him ruality, would not let him partake in the glory of the action, and not resting here, accuses him of Letters he had formerly wrote to Pompey. Vpon his owne appeale seizes him so the poore thurd is vp till death enlarge his Confiner.

Eno. Then would thou hadst a paire of chapsns o more, and throw betweene them all the food thou hast, they'd grinde the other. Where's Anthony?

Eros. He's walking in the garden thus, and spurnes The rush that lies before him. Cries Foole Lepidus, And threats the throat of that his Officer, That murdred Pompey

Eno. Our great Nauies rig'd.

Eros. For Italy and Caesar, more Domitius, My Lord desires you presently: my Newes I might haue told hereafter.

Eno. It will be naught, but let it be. bring me to Anthony.

Eros. Come Sir,

Exeunt.

Enter Agrippa, Mecenas, and Caesar.

Cas. Contemning Rome he ha's done all this, & more In Alexandria here's the manner of't: I'th' Market-place on a Tribunal siluer'd, Cleopatra and himselfe in Chaires of Gold Were publickly enthron'd. at the feet, sat Caesarion whom they call my Fathers Sonne, And all the vnlawfull issue, that their Lust Since then hath made betweene them. Vnto her, He gaue the stablishment of Egypt, made her Of lower Syria, Cyprus, Lydia, absolute Queene.

Meca. This in the publicke eye?

Cas. I'th' common shew place, where they exercise, His Sonnes hither proclaimed the King of Kings, Great Media, Parthia, and Armenia He gaue to Alexander To Ptolemy he assign'd, Syria, Sicilia, and Phoenicia: she In th'abiliments of the Goddesse Isis That day appeer'd, and oft before gaue audience, As 'tis reported so.

Meca. Let Rome be thus inform'd.

Agri. Who queazie with his insolence already, Will their good thoughts call from him,

Cas. The people knowes it, And haue now receiv'd his accusation.

Agri. Who does he accuse?

Cas. Caesar, and that hauing in Sicilie Sextus Pompeius spoil'd, we had not rated him His part o'th' Issue. Then does he say, he lent me Some shipping vnto restor'd. Lastly, he frets That Lepidus of the Triumpherate, should be depos'd, And being that, we detain all his Reuenue.

Agri. Sir, this should be answer'd.

Cas. 'Tis done already, and the Messenger gone: I haue told him Lepidus was growne too cruell, y y

That

That he his high Authority abus'd,
And did deserue his change: for what I haue conquer'd,
I grant him part: but then in his Armenia,
And other of his conquer'd Kingdoms, I demand the like
Me. Hee'l neuer yeeld to that.

Ces. Nor must not then be yeelded to in this.

Enter Octavia with her Traine.

Octa. Haile Cesar, and my L. haile most deere Cesar.

Ces. That euer I should call thee Cast-away.

Octa. You haue not call'd me so, nor haue you cause.

Ces. Why haue you stoln vpon vs thus? you come not Like Cesar's Sister, The wife of Anthony

Should haue an Army for an Vsher, and
The neighes of Horse to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appeare. The trees by th' way
Should haue borne men, and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not. Nay, the dust
Should haue ascended to the Roofe of Heauen, Rais'd by your populous Troopes. But you are come
A Market-maid to Rome, and haue prevented
The ostentation of our loue; which left vnshewne,
Is often left vnclou'd. we should haue met you
By Sea, and Land, supplying euery Stage
With an augmented greeting.

Octa. Good my Lord,
To come thus was I not constrain'd, but did it
On my free-will. My Lord Mark Anthony,
Hearing that you prepar'd for Warre, acquainted
My greued eare withall: whereon I begg'd
His pardon for returne.

Ces. Which soone he granted,
Being an abstract' twene his Lust, and him.

Octa. Do not say so, my Lord.

Ces. I haue eyes vpon him,
And his affaires come to me on the wind: wher is he now?

Octa. My Lord, in Athens.

Cesar. No my most wronged Sister, Cleopatra
Hath nodded him to her. He hath giuen his Empire
Vp to a Whore, who now are leuying
The Kings o'th' earth for Warre. He hath assembled,
Bochus the King of Lybia, Archilaus
Of Cappadocia, Philadelphos King
Of Paphlagonia the Thracian King Adullas,
King Manchus of Arabia, King of Pont,
Herod of Iewry, Mitribidates King
Of Comagene, Polemon and Ammias,
The Kings of Mede, and Licoania,
With a more larger List of Scepters.

Octa. Aye me most wretched,
That haue my heart parted betwixt two Friends,
That does afflict each other. (breaking forth)

Ces. Welcom hither: your Letters did with-holde our Till we perceiu'd both how you were wrong led,
And we in negligent danger: cheere your heart,
Be you not troubled with the time, which drues
O're your content, these strong necessities,
But let determin'd things to destinie
Hold vnbeuayl'd their way. Welcome to Rome,
Nothing more deere to me. You are abus'd
Beyond the marke of thought: and the high Gods
To do you Iustice, make us Ministers
Of vs, and those that loue you. Best of comfort,
And euer welcom to vs, Agrip. Welcome Lady.

Me. Welcome deere Madam,
Each heart in Rome does loue and pity you,
Onely th' adulterous Anthony, most large

In his abominations, turnes you off,
And giues his potent Regiment to a Trull
That noyses it against vs,

Octa. Is it so sir?

Ces. Most certaine: Sister welcome: pray you
Be euer knowne to patience. My deere'st Sister. Exit

Enter Cleopatra, and Enobarbus.

Cleo. I will be euen with thee, doubt it not.

Eno. But why, why, why?

Cleo. Thou hast forespoke my being in these warres,
And say'st it it not fit.

Eno. Well. Is it, is it.

Cleo. If not, denounce'd against vs, why should not we be there in person.

Eno. Well, I could reply. if wee should serue with Horse and Mares together, the Horse were meerly lost:
the Mares would beare a Soldiour and his Horse.

Cleo. What is't you say?

Eno. Your presence needs must puzzle Anthony,
Take from his heart, take from his Braine, from's time,
What should not then be spar'd. He is already Tradue'd for Leury, and 'tis said in Rome,
That Photinus an Eunuch, and your Maides
Mannage this warre.

Cleo. Sinke Rome, and their tongues rot
That speake against vs. A Charge we beare: th' Warre,
And as the president of my Kingdome will Appeare there for a man. Speake not against it,
I will not stay behinde.

Enter Anthony and Camidius.

Eno. Nay I haue done, here comes the Emperor.

Ant. Is it not strange Camidius,
That from Tarracum, and Brundisium,
He could so quickly cut the Ionian Sea,
And take in Troine. You haue heard on't (Sweet?)

Cleo. Celenty is neuer more admir'd,
Then by the negligent.

Ant. A good rebuke,
Which might haue well becom'd the best of men
To raunt at slacknesse. Camidius, wee
Will fight with him by Sea.

Cleo. By Sea, what else?

Cam. Why will my Lord, do so?

Ant. For that he dares vs too't.

Eno. So hath my Lord, dar'd him to single fight.

Cam. I, and to wage this Battell at Pharsalia,
Where Cesar fought with Pompey. But these offers
Which serue not for his vantage, he shakes off,
And so should you.

Eno. Your Shippes are not well mann'd,
Your Mariners are Milners, Reapers, people
Ingroft by swift Impresse. In Cesar's Fleet,
Are those, that often haue 'gainst Pompey fought,
Their Shippes are yare, yours heavy: do disgrace
Shall fall you for refusing him at Sea,
Being prepar'd for Land.

Ant. By Sea, by Sea.

Eno. Most worthy Sir, you therein throw away
The absolute Soldiership you haue by Land,
Distract your Armie, which doth most consist
Of Warre-marks footmen, leaue vnexecuted
Your owne renowned knowledge, quire for goe
The way which promises assurance, and Giue vp your selfe meerly to chance and hazard,
From firme Securitie.

Ant. Ile fight at Sea.

Cleo

Cleo. I haue sixty Sailes, Cesar none better.

Ant. Our ouer-plus of shipping will we burne,
And with the rest full mann'd, from th'head of Aetion
Beate th'approaching Cesar. But if we faile,
We then can doo't at Land. Enter a Messenger.

Thy Businesse?
Mes. The Newes is true, my Lord, he is delcrid,
Cesar ha's taken Torvne.

Ant. Can he be there in person? 'Tis impossible
Strange, that his power should be. Camidius,
Our nineteene Legions thou shalt hold by Land,
And our twelue thousand Horse. Wee'l to our Ship,
Away my Thetis.

Enter a Soldier;
How now worthy Souldier?

Soul. Oh Noble Emperor, do not fight by Sea,
Trust not to rotten plankes. Do you misdoubt
This Sword, and these my Wounds; let th'Egyptians
And the Phoenicians go a ducking - wee
Haue vs'd to conquer standing on the earth,
And fighting foot to foot.

Ant. Well, well, away. exit Art, Cleo, & Enob.

Soul. By Hercules I thinke I am i'th' ght.
Cam Souldier thou art but his whole action growes
Not in the power on't: so our Leaders leade,
And we are Womens men.

Soul. You keepe by Land the Legions and the Horse whole, do you not?

Ven. Marcus Octavius, Marcius Inftrus,
Publola, and Celsus, are for Sea -
But we keepe whole by Land. This speede of Cesars
Carries beyond beleefe.

Soul. While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions,
As beguilde all Spies.

Cam. Who's his Lieutenant, heare you?

Soul. They say, one Torvius.

Cam. Well, I know the man.

Enter a Messenger.
Mes. The Emperor calls Camidius.

Cam. With Newes the times with Labour,
And throwes forth each minute, some. exit

Enter Cesar with his Army, marching.

Ces. Torvius?
Torv. My Lord.
Ces. Strike not by Land,
Keepe whole, prouoke not Battaille
Till we haue done at Sea. Do not excede
The Prescript of this Scroule: Our fortune lyes Vpon this iumpe exit.

Enter Anthony and Enobarbus.
Ant. Set we our Squadrons on yond side o'th'Hill,
In eye of Cesars battaille, from which place
We may the number of the Ships behold,
And so proceed accordingly. exit.

*Camidius Marcheth with his Land Army one way ouer the stage, and Torvius the Lieutenant of Cesar the other way -
After their going in, is heard the noise of a Sea fight.*
Alarm Enter Enobarbus and Scarm.

Eno. Naught, naught, al naught, I can behold no longer:
Thantoniad, the Egyptian Admirall,
With all their sixty flye, and turne the Rudder.

To see't, mine eyes are blasted.

Enter Scarm.
Scar. Gods, & Goddesses, all the whol synod of them!

Eno. What's thy passion.
Scar. The greater Cantle of the world, is lost
With very ignorance, we haue kist away
Kingdomes, and Prouinces

Eno. How appears the Fight?
Scar. On our side, like the Token'd Pestilence,
Where death is sure. Yon ribaudred Nagge of Egypt,
(Whom Leprosie o're-take) i'th'midst o'th' fight,
When vanrage like a payre of Twinnes appear'd
Both as the same, or rather ouis the elder;
(The Breeze vpon her) like a Cow in Inne,
Hoists Sailes, and flies.

Eno. That I beheld:
Mine eyes did sicken at the sight, and could not Indure a further view.

Scar. She once being loost,
The Noble ruine of her Magicke, Anthony,
Claps on his Sea-wing, and (like a doting Mallard)
Leauing the Fight in heighth, flies after her:
I neuer saw an Action of such shame;
Experience, Man-hood. Honor, ne're before,
Did violate so it selfe.

Enob. Alacke, alacke.

Enter Camidius.
Cam. Our Fortune on the Sea is out of breath,
And sinks most lamentably. Had our Generall
Bin what he knew himselfe, it had gone well:
Oh his ha's guen example for our flight,
Most grossly by his owne.

Enob. I, are you thereabouts? Why then goodnight indeede.

Cam. Toward Peloponnesus are they fled

Scar. 'Tis easie toot,
And there I will attend what furth'r comes.

Camid. To Cesar will I render
My Legions and my Horse, fixe Kings alreadye
Shew me the way of yeelding.

Eno. Ile yet follow
The wounded chance of Anthony, though my reason
Sits in the winde against me.

Enter Anthony with Attendants
Ant. Hearke, the Land bids me tread no more vpon't,
It is asham'd to beare me. Friends, come hither,
I am so lated in the world, that I
Haue lost my way for euer, I haue a shippe,
Laden with Gold, take that, diuide it: flye,
And make your peate with Cesar.

Omnes. Fly? Not wee.
Ant. I haue fled my selfe, and haue instructed cowards
To runne, and shew their shoulders. Friends be gone,
I haue my selfe resolu'd vpon a course,
Which has no neede of you. Be gone,
My Treasure's in the Harbour. Take it: Oh,
I follow'd that I blush to looke vpon,
My very haies do mutiny: for the white
Reproue the browne for rashnesse, and they them
For feare, and doting. Friends be gone, you shall Haue Letters from me to some Friends, that will Sweepe your way for you. Pray you looke not sad,
Nor make replyes of loathnesse, take the hint
Which my dispare proclaimes. Let them be left
Which leaues it selfe, to the Sea-side straight way;
I will possesse you of that ship and Treasure.

Leaue me, I pray a little: pray you now,
Nay do so for indeede I haue lost command,
Therefore I pray you, Ile see you by and by. Sits downe

Enter Cleopatra led by Charmian and Eros.

Eros. Nay gentle Madam, to him, comfort him.

Iras. Do most deere Queene.

Char. Do, why, what else?

Cleo. Let me sit downe: Oh Iuno.

Ant. No, no, no, no, no.

Eros. See you heere, Sir?

Ant. Oh fie, fie, fie.

Char. Madam.

Iras. Madam, oh good Empresse.

Eros. Sir, sir.

Ant. Yes my Lord, yes; he at Philippi kept
His sword e're like a dancer, while I strooke
The leane and wrinkled Cassius, and 'twas I
That the mad Brutus ended. he alone
Dealt on Lieutenantry, and no practise had
In the braue squares of Warre: yet now: no matter.

Cleo. Ah stand by.

Eros. The Queene my Lord, the Queene.

Iras. Go to him, Madam, speake to him,
Hee's vnqualited with very shame.

Cleo. Well then, sustaine me: Oh.

Eros. Most Noble Sir arise, the Queene approaches,
Her head's declin'd, and death will cease her, but
Your comfort makes the rescue.

Ant. I haue offended Reputation,
A most vnnoble swearing.

Eros. Sir, the Queene.

Ant. Oh whether hast thou lead me Egypt, see
How I conuey my shame, out of thine eyes,
By looking backe what I haue left behind
Scroy'd in dishonor.

Cleo. Oh my Lord, my Lord,
Forgiue my fearfull sayles, I little thought
You would haue followed.

Ant. Egypt, thou knew'st too well,
My heart was to thy Rudder tyed by th' strings,
And thou should'st stowe me after. O're my spirit
The full supremacie thou knew'st, and that Thy becke, might from the bidding of the Gods Command mee.

Cleo. Oh my pardon,

Ant. Now I must
To the young man send humble Treaties, dodge
And palter in the shifts of lownes, who
With halfe the bulke o'th' world plaid as I pleas'd,
Making, and marring Fortunes. You did know
How much you were my Conqueror, and that My Sword, made weake by my affection, would Obey it on all cause.

Cleo. Pardon, pardon.

Ant. Fall not a teare I say, one of them rates
All that is wonne and lost. Giue me a kisse,
Euen this repayes me.
We sent our Schoolemaster, is a come backe?
Loue I am full of Lead. some Wine
Within there, and our Viands. Fortune knowes,
We scorne her most, when most she offers blowes. Exeunt

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, and Dolabella, with others.

Ces. Let him appeare that's come from Anthony.
Know you him.

Dolla. Cesar, 'tis his Schoolemaster,
An argument that he is pluckt, when hither
He sends so poore a Pinnion of his Wing,
Which had superfluous Kings for Messengers,
Not many Moones gone by.

Enter Ambassador from Anthony.

Cesar. Approach, and speake.

Amb. Such as I am, I come from Anthony:
I was of late as petty to his ends,
As is the Morn -dew on the Mertle leafe
To his grand Sea.

Ces. Bee't so, declare thine office.

Amb. Lord of his Fortunes he salutes thee, and Requies to lue in Egypt, which not granted
The Lessons his Requests, and to thee sues
To let him breath betweene the Heauens and Earth
A private man. In Athens: this for him.
Next, Cleopatra does confesse thy Greatnesse,
Submits her to thy might, and of thee craues
The Circle of the Ptolemies for her heyres,
Now hazarded to thy Grace.

Ces. For Anthony,

I haue no eares to his request. The Queene,
Of Audience, nor Desire shall faile, so thee
From Egypt driue her all-disgraced Friend,
Or take his life there. This if thee performe,
She shall not sue vnheard. So to them both.

Amb. Fortune pursue thee.

Ces. Bring him through the Bands:
To try thy Eloquence, now 'tis time, dispatch,
From Anthony winne Cleopatra, promise
And in our Name, what she requires, adde more
From thine inuention, offers. Women are not
In their best Fortunes strong; but want will periure
The ne're touch'd Vestall. Try thy cunning Thidias, Make thine owne Edict for thy paines, which we Will answer as a Law.

Thid. Cesar, I go.

Cesar. Obserue how Anthony becomes his slau,
And what thou think'st his very Aion speakes
In euery power that mooues.

Thid. Cesar, I shall. exeat.

Enter Cleopatra, Enobarbus, Charmian, & Iras.

Cleo. What shall we do, Enobarbus?

Eno. Thinke, and dye.

Cleo. Is Anthony, or we in fault for this?

Eno. Anthony orely, that would make his will Lord of his Reason. What though you fled,
From that great face of Warre, whose seuerall ranges
Frighted each other? Why should he follow?
The itch of his Affection should not then
Haue nickt his Caprain-ship, at such a point,
When halfe to halfe the world oppos'd, he being
The meered question? 'Twas a shame no lesse
Then was his lesse, to course your flying Flagges,
And leaue his Nauy gazing.

Cleo. Prythee peace.

Enter the Ambassador with Anthony.

Ant. Is that his answer?

Amb. I my Lord,

Ant. The Queene shall then haue courtesie,
So she will yeeld vs vp.

Am. He sayes so.

Antho. Let her know't To the Boy Cesar send this grizled head, and he will fill thy wishes to the brimme,
With Principalities.

Cleo. That head my Lord?

Ant.

Ant. To him againe, tell him he weares the Rose
Of youth vpon him: from which, the world should note
Something particular: His Come, Ships, Legions,
May be a Cowards, whose Ministers would preuail
Vnder the seruice of a Childe, as soone
As i'th Command of Cesar. I dare him therefore
To lay his gay Comparisons a-patt,
And answer me declin'd, Sword against Sword,
Our selues alone. He write it; Follow me.

Eno Yes like enough: hie battl'd Cesar will Vrstate his happinesse, and be Stag'd to th'shew Against a Sword. I see mens Judgements are
A parcell of their Fortunes, and things ourward
Do draw the inward quality after them
To suffer all alike, that he should dreame,
Knowing all measures, the full Cesar will Answer his emptinesse. Cesar thou hast subdu'de
His judgement too.

Enter a Seruant,

Ser. A Messenger from Cesar.

Cleo. What no more Ceremony? See my Women,
Against the blowne Rose may they stop their nose,
That kneel'd vnto the Buds. Admit him sir.

Eno Mine honesty, and I, beginne to square,
The Loyalty well held to Fooles, does make
Our Faith meere folly: yet he that can endure
To follow with Allegiance a false I ord,
Does conquer him that did his Master conquer,
And earns a place i'th Story.

Enter Thidias.

Cleo Cesars will.

Thid. Heare it apart.

Cleo. None but Friends say boldly

Thid. So haply are they Friends to Anthony.

Enob. He needs as many (Sir) as Cesar ha's,
Or needs not vs. If Cesar please, our Master
Will leape to be his Friend. For vs you know,
Whose he is, we are, and that is Cesars.

Thid So. Thus then thou most renown'd, Cesar intrea's,
Not to consider in what case thou stand'st
Further then he is Cesars.

Cleo. Go on right Royall

Thid. He knowes that you embrace not Anthony
As you did loue, but as you feared him.

Cleo Oh,

Thid. The scarre's vpon your Honor, therefore he Does pittie, as constrained blemishes,
Not as deserued,

Cleo. He is a God,
And knowes what is most right. Mine Honour
Was not yeilded, but conquer'd meereley.

Eno. To be sure of that, I will aske Anthony.
Sir, sir, thou art so leakie
That we must leaue thee to thy sinking, for Thy decreet quit thee. Exit Enob.

Thid. Shall I say to Cesar,
What you require of him for he partly begges
To be desir'd to giue. I much would please him,
That of his Fortunes you should make a staffe
To leane vpon. But it would warre his spirits
To heare from me you had left Anthony,
And put your selfe vnder his throwd, the vniuersal Land(lord.

Cleo What's your name?

Thid. My name is Thidias,

Cleo. Most kinde Messenger,
Say to great Cesar this in disputation,

I kisse his conquering hand: Tell him, I am prompt
To lay my Crowne at's feete, and there to kneele.
Tell him, from his all-beyeing breath, I heare
The doome of Egypt.

Thid. 'Tis your Noblest course:
Wisdom and Fortune combatting together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Giue me grace to lay
My dust on your hand

Cleo Your Cesars Father oft,
(When he hath mus'd of taking kingdomes in)
Bestow'd his lips on that vnworthy place,
As it rain'd kisses.

Enter Anthony and Enobabius.

Ant. Favours? By Ioue that thunders, What art thou

Thid. One that but performs (Fellow?)
The bidding of the fullest man, and worthiest
To haue command & be'y'd.

Eno. You will be whipt.

Ant. Approach there: ah you Kite. Now Gods & diuels Au horry melts from me of late. When I cryed ho,
Like Boyes vnto a messe, Kings would start forth,
And cry, your will. Haue you no cares?
I am Anthony yet. Take hence this lack, and whip him:

Enter a Seruant

Eno. 'Tis better playing with a Lions whelp,
Then with an old one dying

Ant. Moone and Starres,
Whip him we't twenty of the greatest Tributaries
That do acknowledge Cesar, should I finde them
So fawcy with the hand of the heere, what's her name
Since she was Cleopatra? Whip him Fellowes,
Till like a Boy you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Take him hence.

Thid. Marke Anthony.

Ant. Tugge him away being whipt
Bring him againe, the lacke of Cesars shall Beare vs an arrant to him Exit with Thidias.

You were halfe blasted ere I knew you. Ha?
Haue I my pillow left vnpresst in Rome,
Forborne the getting of a lawfull Race,
And by a Iem of women, to be abus'd
By one that lookes on Feeders?

Cleo. Good my Lord.

Ant You haue becne a boggler euer,
But when we in our viciousnesse grow hard
(Oh misery on't) the wise Gods feele our eyes
In our owne filth, drop our cleare iudgements, make vs
Adore our errors, laugh at's while we strut
To our confusion.

Cleo. Oh, is't come to this?

Ant. I found you as a Morrell, cold vpon
Dead Cesars Trencher. Nay, you were a Fragment
Of Gneius Pompey, besides what hotter houres
Vnregistred in vulgar Fame, you haue
Luxuriously pickt out. For I am sure,
Though you can guesse what Temperance should be,
You know not what it is.

Cleo. Wherefore is this?

Ant. To let a Fellow that will take rewards,
And say, God quit you, be familiar with
My play-fellow, your hand; this Kingly Seale,
And plighter of high hearts. O that I were Vpon the hill of Basan to out-roare
The horned Heerd, for I haue savage cause,
And to proclaime it cunilly, were like

A halter'd necke, which do's the Hangman thanke,
For being yare about him. Is he whipt?

Enter a Seruant with Thidias.

Ser. Soundly, my Lord.

Ant. Cried he? and begg'd a Pardon?

Ser. He did aske fauour.

Ant. If that thy Father liue, let him repent
Thou was't not made his daughter, and be thou sorrie
To follow Cesar in his Triumph, since
Thou hast bin whipt. For following him, henceforth
The white hand of a Lady Feauer thee,
Shake thou to looke on't. Get thee backe to Cesar,
Tell him thy entertainment looke thou say
He makes me angry with him. For he seemes
Proud and disdainfull, harping on what I am,
Not what he knew I was. He makes me angry,
And at this time most easie 'tis to doo't:
When my good Starres, that were my former guides
Haue empty left their Orbes, and thot their Fires
Into th'Abisme of hell. If he mislike,
My speech, and what is done, tell him he has Hiparchus, my enfranchised Bondman, whom
He may at pleasure whipe, or hang, or torture,
As he shall like to quit me. Vrge it thou:
Hence with thy stripes, be gone. Exit Thid.

Cleo. Haue you done yet?

Ant. Alacke our Terrene Moone is now Eclipse,
And it portends alone the fall of Anthony.

Cleo. I must stay his time?

Ant. To flatter Cesar, would you mingle eyes
With one that tyes his points,

Cleo. Not know me yet?

Ant. Cold-hearted toward me?

Cleo. Ah (Deere) if I be so,
From my cold heart let Heauen ingender haile,
And poyson it in the source, and the first stone
Drop in my necke: as it determines so
Dissolue my life, the next Cæsarian smile,
Till by degrees the memory of my wombe,
Together with my braue Egyptians all,
By the discandring of this pellered storme,
Lye graueleffe, till the Flies and Gnats of Nyle
Haue buried them for prey.

Ant. I am satisfied.

Cesar sets downe in Alexandria, where
I will oppose his Fate. Our force by Land,
Hath Nobly held, our feuer'd Naue too
Haue knit againe, and Fleete, threatening most Sea-like.
Where hast thou bin my heart? Dost thou heare Lady?
If from the Field I shall returne once more
To kisse these Lips, I will appeare in Blood,
I, and my Sword, will earne our Chronicle,
There's hope in't yet.

Cleo. That's my braue Lord.

Ant. I will be trebble-sinewed, hearted, breath'd,
And fight maliciously: for when mine houres
Were nice and lucky, men did ransom liues
Of me for iests. But now, I'le set my't eeth,
And send to darkenesse all that stop me. Come,
Let's haue one other gaydy night: Call to me
All my sad Captaines, fill our Bowles once more:
Let's mocke the midnight Bell.

Cleo. It is my Birth-day,

I had thought t'haue held it poore. But since my Lord
Is Anthony againe, I will be Cleopatra.

Ant. We will yet do well.

Cleo. Call all his Noble Captaines to my Lord.

Ant. Do so, wee'l speake to them,

And to night Ile force

The Wine peepe through their scarres,

Come on (my Queene)

There's sap in't yet. The next time I do fight

Ile make death loue me for I will contend

Euen with his pestilent Syble. Exeunt.

Eno. Now hee'l out-stare the Lightning, to be furious

Is to be frighted out of feare, and in that moode

The Doue will pecke the Estridge; and I see still

A diminution in our Captaines braine,

Restores his heart; when valour prayes in reason,

It eates the Sword it fights with. I will seeke

Some way to leaue him. Exeunt.

*Enter Cesar, Agrippa, & Mecenas with his Army,
Cesar reading a Letter.*

Ces. He calles me Boy, and chides as he had power
To beate me out of Egypt. My Messenger
He hath whipt with Rods, dares me to personal Combat.
Cesar to Anthony let the old Russian know,
I haue many other wayes to dye: meane time ]
Laugh at his Challenge.

Mec. Cesar must thinke,

When one so great begins to rage, hee's hunted

Euen to falling. Giue him no breath, but now

Make boote of his distraction: Neuer anger

Made good guard for it selfe

Ces. Let our best heads know,

That to morrow, the last of many Battailes

We meane to fight. Within our Files there are,

Of those that seru'd Marke Anthony but late,

Enough to fetch him in See it done,

And Feast the Army, we haue store to doo't,

And they haue earn'd the waste, Poore Anthony. Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, Cleopatra, Enochius, Charmian, Iras, Alexas, with others.

Ant. He will not fight with me, Domitian?

Eno. No?

Ant. Why should he not?

Eno. He thinks, being twenty times of better fortune,
He is twenty men to one.

Ant. To morrow Soldier,

By Sea and Land Ile fight: or I will liue,

Or bathe my dying Honor in the blood

Shall make it liue againe. Woo't thou fight well.

Eno. Ile strike, and cry, Take all.

Ant. Well said, come on.

Call forth my Household Seruants, lets to night

Enter 3 or 4 Seruitors.

Be bounteous at our Meale. Giue me thy hand,

Thou hast bin rightly honest, so hast thou,

Thou, and thou, and thou: you haue seru'd me well,

And Kings haue beene your fellowes.

Cleo. What meanes this?

Eno. 'Tis one of those odde tricks which sorow shoots
Out of the minde.

Ant. And thou art honest too:

I wish I could be made so many men,

And all of you clapt vp together, in

An Anthony: that I might do you seruice,

So good as you haue done. Omnes.

Omnes. The Gods forbid.

Ant. Well, my good Fellowes, wait on me to night:
Scant not my Cups, and make as much of me;
As when mine Empire was your Fellow too,
And suffer'd my command.

Cleo. What does he meane?

Eno. To make his Followers weepe.

Ant. Tend me to night;

May be, it is the period of your duty,
Haply you shall not see me more, or if,
A mangled shadow. Perchance to morrow,
You'll serue another Master. I looke on you,
As one that takes his leaue. Mine honest Friends,
I turne you not away, but like a Master
Married to your good seruice, stay till death.
Tend me to night two houres, I aske no more,
And the Gods yeeld you for't.

Eno. What meane you (Sir)

To giue them this discomfort? Looke they weepe,
And I an Ass, am Onyon-cy'd; for shame,
Transforme vs not to women.

Ant. Ho, ho, ho.

Now the Witch take me, if I meant it thus
Grace grow where those drops fall (my hearty Friends)
You take me in too dolorous a sence,
For I spake to you for your comfort, did desire you
To burne this night with Torches. Know (my hearts)
I hope well of to morrow, and will leade you,
Where rather Ile expect victor.ous life,
Then death, and Honor. Let's to Supper, come,
And drowne consideration.

Exeunt.

Enter a Company of Soldiers.

1. Sol. Brother, goodnight. to morrow is the day.

2. Sol. It will determine one way. Fare you well.

The Honour'd gashes whole.

Enter Cleopatra.

Giue me thy hand,
To this great Fury, Ile commend thy acts,

Through proofe of Harnesse to my heart, and there
Ride on the pants triumphing.

Cleo. Lo d of Lords,
Oh infinite Vertue, coman't thou smiling from
The worlds great snare vnaught.

Ant. Mine Nighungale,
We haue beate them to their Beds,
What Gyrle, though gray
Do something mingle with our yonger brown, yet ha we
A Braine that nourishes our Nerves, and can Get gale for gale of youth. Behold this man,
Commend vnto his Lippes thy fauouring hand,
Kisse it my Warriour: He hath fought to day,
As if a God in hate of Mankinde, had Destroyed in such a shape.

Cleo. Ile giue thee Friend
An Armour all of Gold it was a Kings.

Ant. He has deseru'd it, were it Carbunkled
Like holy Phœbus Carre. Giue me thy hand,
Through Alexandria make a iolly March,
Beare our hackt Targets, like the men that owe them.
Had our great Pallace the capacity
To Campe this hoast, we all would sup together,
And drinke Carowfes to the next dayes Fate

Which

Which promises Royall perill, Trumpeters

When men reuolted shall vpon Record
Beare hatefull memory. poore Enobarbus did
Before thy face repent.

Cent. Enobarbus?

2. Peace. Hearke further

Enob. Oh Soueraigne Mistresse of true Melancholly,
The poisonous dampe of night dispunge vpon me,
That Life, a very Rebelle to my will,
May hang no longer on me. Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardnesse of my fault,
Which being dried with greese, will breake to powder,
And finish all foule thoughts. Oh Anthony,
Nobler then my reuolt is Infamous,
Forgiue me in thine owne particular,
But let the world ranke me in Register
A Master leauer, and a fugitiue.

Oh Anthony! Oh Anthony!

1. Let's speake to him.

Cent. Let's heare him, for the things he speakes
May concerne Cesar.

2. Let's do so, but he sleepes.

Cent. Swoonds rather, for so bad a Prayer as his
Was neuer yet for sleepe.

1. Go we to him.

2. Awake sir, awake, speake to vs.

We please them not by Land.

Scar. Foi bosh, my Lord

Ant. I would they'd fight i'th' Fire, or i'th' Ayre, We'd fight there too. But this it is, our Foote
Vpon the hilles adioyning to the City
Shall stay with vs. Order for Sea is giuen,
They haue put forth the Hauon
Where their appointment we may best discover,
And looke on their endeour. Exeunt

Enter Cesar, and his Army.

Is forth to Man his Gallies. To the Vales,

And hold our best aduantage.

Alarm as farre off, as at a Sea-fight.

In Cleopatra's Sailes their nests, The Auguries
Say, they know not, they cannot tell, looke grimly,
And dare not speake their knowledge. Anthony,
Is valiant, and delected, and by starts
His fretted Fortunes giue him hope and feare
Of what he has, and has not.

Enter Anthony.

Ant. All is lost.

This fowle Egyptian hath betrayed me;
My Fleete hath yeelded to the Foe, and yonder
They cast their Caps vp, and Carowse together
Like Friends long lost Triple-turn'd Whore, tis thou
Hast sold me to this Nouice, and my heart
Makes onely Warres on thee. Bid them all flye:
For when I am reueng'd vpon my Charme,
I haue done all. Bid them all flye, be gone.
Oh Sunne, thy vprise shall I see no more,
Fortune, and Anthony part heere, euen heere
Do we shake hands? All come to this? The hearts
That pannelled me at heeles, to whom I gaue
Their wishes, do dis-Candie, melt their sweets
On blossoming Cesar. And this Pine is barkt,
That ouer-top'd them all. Betray'd I am.
Oh this false Soule of Egypt! this graue Charme,
Whose eye beck'd forth my Wars, & cal'd them home:
Whose Bosome was my Crowne, my chiefe end,
Like a right Gypsie, hath at last and loose
Beguil'd me, to the very heart of losse.
What Eros, Eros?

Enter Cleopatra.

Ah, thou Spell! Auauunt.

Cleo. Why is my Lord en. ag'd against his Loue?

Ant. Van sh, or I shall giue thee thy deseruing,
And biemith Cesar's Triump. Let him take thee,
And hoist thee vp to the shouting Plebe. and,
Follow his Chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy Sex. Most Monster-like be shewne
For poor't Diminutives, for Dolts, and let Patient Octavia, plough thy visage vp
With her prepared nailes.

Exit Cleopatra.

'Tis well th art gone,
If it be well to liue But better 'twere
Thou fell'st into my furie, for one death
Might haue prevented many Eros, hoa?
The shirt of Nessus is vpon me, teach me
Alcides, thou mine Ancestor, thy rage.
Let me lodge Lycus on the hornes o'th' Moone,
And with those hands that grasp the heauiest Club,
Subdue my worthiest selfe. The Witch shall die,
To the young Roman Boy she hath sold me, and I fall
Vnder this plot. She dyes for't, Eros hoa? Exit.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, Mardian.

Cleo. Helpe me my women. Oh hee's more mad
Then Telamon for his Shield, the Boare of Tessaly
Was neuer so imboist.

Char. To'th' Monument, there locke your selfe,
And send him word you are dead.

The

The Soule and Body riue not more in parting,
Then greatnesse going off.

Cleo. To'th Monument:

Mardian, go tell him I haue slaine my selfe.

Say, that the last I spoke was Anthony,
And word it (pythee) pittiously. Hence Mardian,
And bring me how he takes my dea h to'th Monument.

Exeunt.

Enter Anthony, and Eros.

Ant. Eros, thou yet behold'st me?

Eros. I Noble Lord.

Ant. Sometime we see a clowd that's Dragonish,
A vapour sometime, like a Beare, or Lyon,
A toward Cittadell, a pendant Rocke,
A forked Mountaine, or blew Promontorie
With Trees vpon't; that nodde vnto the world,
And mocke our eyes with Ayre.
Thou hast seene these Signes,
They are blacke Vespers Pageants.

Eros. I my Lord.

Ant. That which is now a Horse, euen with a thought the Racke dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water.

Eros. It does my Lord.

Ant. My good Knaue Eros, now thy Captaine is Euen such a body: Heere I am Anthony,
Yet cannot hold this visible shape (my Knaue)
I made these warres for Egypt, and the Queene,
Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine:
Which whil'st it was mine, had annex vntoo't
A Million moe, (now lost) thee Eros has Packt Cards with Cesars, and false plaid my Glory
Vnto an Enemies triumph.
Nay, weepe not gentle Eros, there is left vs
Our selues to end our selues.

Enter Mardian.

Oh thy vilde Lady, she has rob'd me of my Sword.

Mar. No Anthony,
My Mistis lou'd thee, and her Fortunes mingled
With thine intirely.

Ant. Hence sawy Eunuch peace, she hath betraid me,
And shall dye the death.

Mar. Death of one parson, can be paide but once,
And that she ha's discharg'd. What thou would'st do
Is done vnto thy hand: the last she spake
Was Anthony, most Noble Anthony.
Then in the midd'lt a tearing grone did breake
The name of Anthony: it was diuided
Betweene her heart, and lips: she rendred life
Thy name so buried in her.

Ant. Dead then

Mar. Dead.

Ant. Vnarme Eros, the long dayes taske is done,
And we must sleepe: That thou depart'st hence safe
Does pay thy labour richly: Go. exit Mardian.
Off, plucke off,

The seuen-fold shield of Ajax cannot keepe
The battery from my heart. Oh cleaue my sides,
Heart, once be stronger then thy Continent,
Cracke thy fraile Case. Apace Eros, apace;
No more a Soldier: bruised peeces go,
You haue bin Nobly borne. From me awhile. exit Eros
I will o're-take thee Cleopatra, and Weepe for my pardon. So it must be, for now
All length is Torture: since the Torch is out,
Lye downe and stray no farther. Now all labour

Marres what it does: yea, very force entangles
It selfe with strength: Seale then, and all is done.
Eros? I come my Queene. Eros? Stay for me,
Where Soules do couch on Flowers, wee l hand in hand,
And with our sprightly Port make the Gholes gaze:
Dido, and her Aeneas shall want Troopes,
And all the haunt be ours. Come Eros, Eros

Enter Eros.

Eros. What would my Lord?

Ant. Since Cleopatra dyed,
I haue liu'd in such dishonour, that the Gods
Detest my basenesse. I, that with my Sword,
Quarter'd the World, and o're Greene Neptunes backe
With Ships, made Cities; condemne my selfe, to lacke
The Courage of a Woman, lesse Noble minde
Then she which by her death, our Cesar telles
I am Conqueror of my selfe. Thou art sworne Eros,
That when the exigent should come, which now
Is come indeed: When I should see behinde me
Th'incurable prosecution of disgrace and horror,
That on my command, thou then would'st kill me.
Doo't, the time is come: Thou strik'st not me,
'Tis Cesar thou defeat'st. Put colour in thy Cheeke.

Eros. The Gods with-hold me,
Shall I do that which all the Parthian Darts,
(Though Enemy) lost ayme, and could not.

Ant. Eros,

Would'st thou be window'd in great Rome, and see
Thy Master thus with pleache Armes, bending downe
His corrigible necke, his face subdu'de
To penetratue Shame; whil'st the wheel'd seate
Of Fortunate Cesar drawne before him, branded
His Basenesse that ensued.

Eros. I would not see't.

Ant. Come then: for with a wound I must be cur'd.
Draw that thy honest Sword, which thou hast worn
Most vsfull for thy Country.

Eros. Oh sir, pardon me.

Ant. When I did make thee free, swor'st y not then
To do this when I bad thee? Do it at once,
Or thy precedent Seruices are all
But accidents vnpurpos'd. Draw, and come.

Eros. Turne from me then that Noble countenance,
Wherein the worship of the whole world lyes.

Ant. Loe thee.

Eros. My sword is drawne.

Ant. Then let it do at once
The thing why thou hast drawne it.

Eros. My deere Master,
My Captaine, and my Emperor. Let me say
Before I strike this bloody stroke, Farewell.

Ant. 'Tis said man, and farewell.

Eros. Farewell great Chiefe. Shall I strike now?

Ant. Now Eros.

Killes him selfe.

Eros. Why there then:

Thus I do escape the sorrow of Antonies death.

Ant. Thrice-Nobler then my selfe,
Thou teachest me: Oh valiant Eros, what
I should, and thou could'st not, my Queene and Eros
Haue by their braue instruction got vpon me
A Noblenesse in Record. But I will bee
A Bride-groome in my death, and run into't
As to a Louers bed. Come then, and Eros,
Thy Master dies thy Scholler; to do thus
I leant of thee How, not dead? Not dead?
The Guard, how? Oh dispatch me.

Enter

Suffising strokes for death.

Diom. Most absolute Lord.

My Mistress Cleopatra sent me to thee.

Ant. When did shee send thee?

Diom. Now my Lord.

Ant. Where is she?

(fear)

Diom. Lockt in her Monument she had a Prophesying
Of what hath come to passe. for when she saw
(Which neuer shall be found) you did suspect
She had dispos'd with Caesar, and that your rage
Would not be purg'd, she sent you word she was dead:
But fearing since how it might worke, hath sent
Me to proclaim the truth, and I am come

But comforts we dispise; our size of sorrow
Proportion'd to our cause, must be as great
As that which makes it.

Enter Diomed

How now? is he dead?

Diom. His death syvan him, but not dead.
Looke out o'th other side your Monument,
His Guard haue brought him thither

Below, let's draw him hither.

Ant. Peace,

Not Caesars Valour hath o'rethrowne Anthony,
But Antonius's hath Triumpht on it selfe.

Cleo. So it should be,

That none but Anthony should conquer Anthony,
But woe 'tis so.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying; onely
I heere importune death a while, vntill
Of many thousand kisses, the poore last

And still Conclusion, shall acquire no Honour
Demuring vpon me: but come, come Anthony,
Helpe me my women, we must draw thee vp.
Assist good Friends.

Ant. Oh quicke, or I am gone.

Cleo. Heere's sport indeede:

How heavy weighs my Lord?
Our strength is all gone into heaviness,
That makes the waight. Had I great Juno's power,
The strong wing'd Mercury should fetch thee vp,
And set thee by Ioues side. Yet come a little,
Withers were euer Fooles. Oh come, come, come,

They beare Anthony aloft to Cleopatra.

And welcome, welcome. Dye when thou hast liu'd,
Quicken with kissing: had my lippes that power,
Thus would I weare them out.

All. A heavy sight.

Ant. I am dying Egypt, dying.

Give me some Wine, and let me speake a little.

Cleo. No, let me speake, and let me saye so hye,
That the false Huswife Fortune, breake her Wheele,
Prouok'd by my offence.

Ant. One word (sweet Queene)

Of Caesar seeke your Honour, with your safety. Oh.

Cleo. They do not go together.

Ant. Gentle heare me,

None about Caesar trust, but Proculeius.

Cleo. My Resolution, and my hands. Hee trus,
None about Caesar.

Ant. The miserable change now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at. but please you & thoughts
In feeding them with those my former Fortunes
Wherein I liued. The greatest Prince o' th' world,
The Noblest and do now not basely dye,
Not Cowardly put off my Helmet to My Countreyman. A Roman, by a Roman Valiantly vanquish'd. Now my Spirit is going,
I can no more.

Cleo. Noblest of men, wooe dye?
Hast thou no care of me, hall I bide
In this dull world, which in thy absence is No better then a Strye? Oh see my women:
The Crowne o' th' earth doth melt. My Lord?
Oh wither'd is the Garland of the Warre,

The

The Souldiers pole is false : young Boyes and Gyrls
Are leuell now with men : The oddes is gone,
And there is nothing left remarkeable
Beneath the visiting Moone.

Char. Oh quietnesse, Lady.

Iras. She's dead too, our Soueraigne.

Char. Lady.

Iras. Madam.

Char. Oh Madam, Madam, Madam.

Iras. Royall Egypt : Empresse.

Char. Peace, peace, Iras.

Cleo. No more but in a Woman, and commanded
By such poore passion, as the Maid that Milkes,
And doe's the meanest chares. It were for me,
To throw my Scepter at the inurious Gods,
To tell them that this World did equall theirs,
Till they had stolne our Iewell All's burnaught :
Patience is sortish, and impatience does
Become a Dogge that madd. Then is it sinne,
To rush into the secret house of death,
Ere death dare come to vs. How do you Women?
What, what good cheere? Why how now Charman?
My Noble Gyrls? Ah Women, women! Looke
Our Lampe is spent, it's out. Good firs, take heart,
Wee'l bury him : And then, what's braue, what's Noble,
Let's doo't after the high Roman fashion,
And make death proud to take vs. Come, away,
This case of that huge Spirit now is cold,
Ah Women, Women! Come, we haue no Friend
But Resolution, and the breekest end.

Exeunt, bearing of Antonies body.

Enter Caesar, Agrippa, Dolabella, Messias, with his Counsell of Warre.

Caesar. Go to him Dolabella, bid him yeeld,
Being so frustrate, tell him,
He mockes the pawles that he makes.

Dol. Caesar, I shall

Enter Decretas with the sword of Anthony.

Caes. Wherefore is that? And what art thou that dar'st
Appare thus to vs?

Dec. I am call'd Decretas,
Marke Anthony I seru'd, who best was worthe
Best to be seru'd. whilst he stood vp, and spoke
He was my Master, and I wore my life
To spend vpon his haters. If thou please
To take me to thee, as I was to him,
Ile be to Caesar if y pleasest not, I yeild thee vp my life.

Caesar. What is't thou say'st?

Dec. I say (Oh Caesar) Anthony is dead

Caesar. The breking of so great a thing, should make
A greater cracke The round World
Should haue shooke Lyons into ciuill streets,
And Citizens to their dennes The death of Anthony
Is not a single doome, in the name lay
A moity of the world

Dec. He is dead Caesar,
Nor by a publike minister of Iustice,
Nor by a hyred Knife, but that selfe-hand
Which writ his Honor in the Acts it did,
Hath with the Courage which the heart did lend it,
Splitted the heart. This is his Sword,
I robb'd his wound of it behold it stain'd
With his most Noble blood.

Caes. Looke you sad Friends,

The Gods rebuke me, but it is Tydings
To wash the eyes of Kings.

Dol. And strange it is,
That Nature must compell vs to lament
Our most persisted deeds.

Mec. His raints and Honours, wag'd equal with him.

Dola. A Rarer spirit neuer
Did steere humanity : but you Gods will giue vs
Some faults to make vs men. Caesar is touch'd,

Mec. When such a spacious Mirror's set before him,
He needes must see himselfe.

Caesar. Oh Anthony,
I haue followed thee to this, but we do launch
Diseases in our Bodies. I must perforce
Haue shewne to thee such a declining day,
Or looke on thine : we could not stail together,
In the whole world, But yet let me lament
With teares as Soueraigne as the blood of hearts,
That thou my Brother, my Competitor,
In top of all designe ; my Mate in Empire,
Friend and Companion in the front of Warre,
The Arme of mine owne Body, and the Heart
Where mine his thoughts did kindle; that our Starres
Vnreconcilable, should diuide our equalnesse to this.
Heare me good Friends,
But I will tell you at some meetter Season,
The businesse of this man lookes out of him,
Wee'l heare him what he sayes

Enter an Egyptian.

Whence are you?

Egypt. A poore Egyptian yet, the Queen my mistress
Confin'd in all, she has her Monument
Of thy intents, desires, instruction,
That she preparedly may frame her selfe
To'th' way shee's forc'd too

Caesar. Bid her haue good heart,
She soone shall know of vs, by some of ours,
How honourable, and how kindly Wee
Determine for her For Caesar cannot leaue to be vngentle
Egypt. So the Gods preferue thee. Exit.

Caes. Come hither Procneius. Go and say
We purpose her no shame. giue her what comforte
The quality of her passion shall require ;
Least in her greatnesse, by some mortall stroke
She do defeat vs For her life in Rome,
Would be eternall in our Triumph Go,
And with your speediest bring vs what she sayes,
And how you finde of her.

Pro. Caesar I shall.

Exit Procneius.

Caes. Gallus, go you along : where's Dolabella, to second Procneius?

All. Dolabella.

Caes. Let him alone : for I remember now
How hee's employd : he shall in time be ready.
Go with me to my Tent, where you shall see
How hardly I was drawne into this Warre,
How calme and gentle I proceeded still
In all my Writings. Go with me, and see
What I can shew in this. Exeunt.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Mardian.

Cleo. My desolation does begin to make
A better life : 'Tis paltry to be Caesar :
Not being Fortune, hee's but Fortunes knaue,
A minister of her will. and it is great

To

To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts vp change;
Which sleepes, and neuer palates more the dung,
The beggers Nurse, and Cæsars.

Enter Proculeius.

Pro. Cæsar sends greeting to the Queene of Egypt,
And bids thee studey on what faire demands
Thou mean'st to haue him grant thee.

Cleo. What's thy name?

Pro. My name is Proculeius.

Cleo. Anthony

Did tell me of you, bad me trust you, but I do not greatly care to be deceiu'd
That haue no vse for trusting. If your Master
Would haue a Queene his begger, you must tell him,
That Majesty to keepe decorum, must
No lesse begge then a Kingdome: If he please
To giue me conquer'd Egypt for my Sonne,
He giues me so much of mine owne, as I
Will kneele to him with thankses.

Pro. Be of good cheere.

'Y're false into a Princely hand, feare nothing,
Make your full reference freely to my Lord,
Who is so full of Grace, that it flowes ouer
On all that neede. Let me report to him
Your sweet dependencie, and you shall finde
A Conqueror that will pray in ayde for kindnesse,
Where he for grace is kneel'd too.

Cleo. Pray you tell him,
I am his Fortunes Vassall, and I send him
The Greatnesse he has got. I hourly learne
A Doctrine of Obedience, and would gladly Looke him in'th Face.

Pro. This Ile report (deere Lady)
Haue comfort, for I know your plight is pittied
Of him that caus'd it.

Pro. You see how easily she may be surpriz'd.
Giue her till Cæsar come.

Irac. Royall Queene.

Char. Oh Cleopatra, thou art taken Queene.

Cleo. Quicke, quicke, good hands,

Pro. Hold worthy Lady, hold:

Do not your selfe such wrong, who are in this
Relieu'd, but not betraid.

Cleo. What of death too that rids our dogs of languish

Pro. Cleopatra, do not abuse my Masters bounty, by Th'vndoing of your selfe. Let the World see
His Noblesse well sated, which your death
Will neuer let come forth.

Cleo. Where art thou Death?

Come hither come; Come, come, and take a Queene
Worth many Babes and Beggars.

Pro. Oh temperance Lady,

Cleo. Sir, I will eate no meate, Ile not drinke sir,
If idle talke will once be necessary
Ile not sleepe neither. This mortall house Ile ruine,
Do Cæsar what he can. Know sir, that I
Will not waite pinnion'd at your Masters Court,
Nor once be chastic'd with the sober eye
Of dull Octavia. Shall they hoyst me vp,
And shew me to the shewing Varlotarie
Of censuring Rome? Rather a ditch in Egypt.
Be gentle graue vnto me, rather on Nylus mudde
Lay me starke-pak'd, and let the water-Flies
Blow me into abhorring, rather make
My Countries high pyramides my Gibbet,

And hang me vp in Chaines.

Pro. You do extend These thoughts of horror further then you shall Finde cause in Cæsar.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Proculeius,
What thou hast done, thy Master Cæsar knowes,
And he hath sent for thee. for the Queene,
Ile take her to my Guard,

Pro. So Dolabella,
It shall content me best: Be gentle to her,
To Cæsar I will speake, what you shall please,
If you'll employ me to him.

Exit Proculeius

Cleo. Say, I would dye.

Dol. Most Noble Empresse, you haue heard of me.

Cleo. I cannot tell.

Dol. Assuredly you know me

Cleo. No matter sir, what I haue heard or knowne:
You laugh when Boyes or Women tell their Dreames,
Is't not your trick?

Dol. I vnderstand not, Madam.

Cleo. I dreamt there was an Emperour Anthony,
Oh such another sleepe, that I might see
But such another man.

Dol. If it might please ye.

Cleo. His face was as the Heavens, and therout shooke
A Sunne and Moone, which kept their course, & lighted
The little o'th'earth.

Dol. Most Soueraigne Creature.

Cleo. His legges belrid the Ocean his rear'd arme
Crested the world His voyce was propertied
As all the tuned Spheres, and that to Friends:
But when he meant to quail, and shake the Orbe,
How as rattling Thunder. For his Bounty,
There was no winter in't. An Anthony it was,
That grew the more by reaping His delights
Were Dolphin-like, they shew'd his backe aboue
The Element they liu'd in. In his Luery
Walk'd Crownes and Crowners Realms & Islands were
As plates dropt from his pocket.

Dol. Cleopatra.

Cleo. Thinke you there was, or might be such a man
As this I dreamt of?

Dol. Gentle Madam, no.

Cleo. You Lye vp to the hearing of the Gods:
But if there be, nor euer were one such
It's past the size of dreaming: Nature wants stuffe
To vie strange formes with fancie, yett' imagine
An Anthony were Natures peece, 'gainst Fancie, Condemning shadows quite

Dol. Heare me, good Madam:

Your losse is as your selfe, great; and you beare it
As answering to the waight, would I might neuer
Ore-take purf'de successe: But I do feele
By the rebound of yours, a griece that suites
My very heart at roore

Cleo. I thanke you sir:

Know you what Cæsar meates to do with me?

Dol. I am loath to tell you what, I would you knew.

Cleo. Nay pray you sir,

Dol. Though he be Honourable,

Cleo. Hee'l leide me then in Triumph.

Dol. Madam he will, I know't

Flourish.

Enter Proculeius, Cæsar, Gallus, Adronius,
and others of his Train.

All. Make way there Cæsar.

z z

Cæsa

Cas. Which is the Queene of Egypt.

Dol. It is the Emperour Madam.

Cleo. kneels.

Cesar. Arise, you shall not kneele :

I pray you rise, rise Egypt.

Cleo. Sir, the Gods will haue it thus,

My Master and my Lord I must obey,

Cesar. Take to you no hard thoughts,

The Record of what injuries you did vs,

Though written in our flesh, we shall remember

As things but done by chance

Cleo. Sole Sir o'th' World,

I cannot proect mine owne cause to well

To make it cleare, but do confesse I haue

Bene laden with like frailties, which before

Haue often shain'd our Sex.

Cesar. Cleopatra know,

We will extenuate rather then inforce :

If you apply your selfe to our intents,

Which towards you are most gentle, you shall finde

A benefit in this change : but if you seeke

To lay on me a Cruelty, by taking

Antonie's course, you shall bereave your selfe

Of my good purposes, and put your children

To that destruction which Ile guard them from,

If thereon you relye. Ile take my leave.

Cleo. And may through all the world : tis yours, & we your Scutcheons, and your signes of Conquest shall

Hang in what place you please. Here my good Lord.

Cesar. You shall aduise me in all for Cleopatra

Cleo. This is the breefe : of Money, Plate, & Jewels

I am posselt of, 'tis exactly valedged ;

Not petty things admitted. Where's Seleucus ?

Seleu. Heere Madam,

Cleo. This is my Treasurer, let him speake (my Lord)

Vpon his perill, that I haue reseru'd

To my selfe nothing: Speake the truth Seleucus,

Seleu. Madam, I had rather feele my lippes,

Then to my perill speake that which is not

Cleo. What haue I kept backe.

Sel. Enough to purchase what you haue made known

Cesar. Nay blush not Cleopatra, I approue

Your Wisdome in the deede.

Cleo. See Cesar. Oh behold,

How pompe is followed Mine will now be yours,

And inou'd we shift estates, yours would be mine.

The ingratitude of this Seleucus, does

Euen make me wilde. Oh Slaue, of no more trust

Then loue that's hyrd? What goest thou backe, & shalt

Go backe I warrant thee: but Ile catch thine eyes

Though they had wings. Slaue, Soule-lesse, Villain, Dog.

O rarely base!

Cesar. Good Queene, let vs intreat you.

Cleo. O Cesar, what a woundmg shame is this,

That thou vouchsafing heere to visit me,

Doing the Honour of thy Lordlinesse

To one so meeke, that mine owne Seruant should

Parcell the summe of my disgraces, by

Addition of his Envy Say (good Cesar)

That I some Lady trifles haue reseru'd,

Immoment toyes, things of such Dignitie

As we greet moderne friends withall, and say

Some Nobler token I haue kept apart

For Livia and Octavia, to induce

Their mediation, must I be vnfolded

Wth one that I haue bred - The Gods! it smites me

Beneath the fall I haue. Prythee go hence,

Or I shall shew the Cynders of my spirits

Through th' Ashes of my chance: Wer'thou a man,

Thou would'st haue mercy on me.

Cesar. Forbeare Seleucus.

Cleo. Be it known, that we the greatest are mis-thoght

For things that others do : and when we fall,

We answer others merits, in our name

Are therefore to be pittied.

Cesar. Cleopatra,

Not what you haue reseru'd, nor what acknowledg'd

Put we'th' Roll of Conquest : still bee't yours,

Bestow it at your pleasure, and beleuee

Cesar's no Merchant, to make prize with you

Of things that Merchants sold. Therefore be cheer'd,

Make not your thoughts your prisons: No deere Queen,

For we intend so to dispose you, as

Your selfe shall giue vs counsell: Feede, and sleepe :

Our care and pity is so much vpon you,

That we remaine your Friend, and so adieu.

Cleo. My Master, and my Lord.

Cesar. Not so. Adieu.

Flourish,

Exeunt Cesar, and his Train.

Cleo. He words me Gyrls, he words me,

That I should not be Noble to my selfe.

But hearke thee Charmian.

Iras. Finish good Lady, the bright day is done,

And we are for the darke.

Cleo. Hye th e againe,

I haue spoke already, and it is provided,

Go put it to the haste.

Char. Madam, I will.

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. Where's the Queene?

Char. Behold sir.

Cleo. Dolabella.

Dol. Madam, as thereto sworne, by your command
(Which my loue makes Religion to obey)

I tell you this : Cesar through Syrtis

Intends his iourney, and within three dayes,

You with your Children will be send before,

Make your best vse of this. I haue perform'd

Your pleasure, and my promise.

Cleo. Dolabella, I shall remaine your debter.

Dol. I your Seruant :

Adieu good Queene, I must attend on Cesar.

Exit

Cleo. Farewell, and thanks.

Now Iras, what think'st thou?

Thou, an Egyptian Puppet shall be shewne

In Rome aswell as I : Mechanicke Slaues

With greazie Aprons, Rules, and Hammers shall

Vplift vs to the view. In their thicke breathes,

Ranke of grosse dyet shall we be enclowded,

And forc'd to drinke their vapour.

Iras. The Gods forbid.

Cleo. Nay, 'tis most certaine Iras : sawcie Listers

Will catch at vs like Strumpets, and scald Rumers

Ballads vs out a Tune. The quicke Comedians

Extemporally will itage vs, and present

Our Alexandrian Reuels: Anthony

Shall be brought drunken forth, and I shall see

Some squeaking Cleopatra Boy my greatnesse

I'th' posture of a Whore.

Iras. O the good Gods!

Cleo. Nay that's certaine.

Iras. Ile neuer see't? for I am sure mine Nails

Are stronger then mine eyes.

Cleo.

Cleo. Why that's the way to foole their preparation,
And to conquer their most absurd intents

Enter Charmian.

Now Charmian,

Shew me my Women like a Queene: Go fetch
My best Attayres. I am againe for Cidrus,
To meete Marke Anthony. Sitra Iras, go
(Now Noble Charmian, wee'l dispatch indeede,)
And when thou hast done this chare, Ile giue thee leaue
To play till Doomesday bring our Crowne, and all,
A noise within.

Wherefore's this noise?

Enter a Guardsman.

Guard. Heere is a rurall Fellow,
That will not be deny de your Highnesse presence,
He brings you Figges.

Cleo. Let him come in. Exit Guardsman.
What poore an Instrument
May do a Noble deede: he brings me liberry.
My Resolution's plac'd, and I haue nothing
Of woman in me: Now from head to foote
I am Marble constant: now the fleeting Moone
No Planet is of mine.

Enter Guardsman, and Clowne.

Guard. This is the man.

Cleo. Auid, and leaue him. Exit Guardsman.
Hast thou the pretty worrne of Nylus there,
That killes and paines not?

Clow. Truly I haue him but I would not be the par-tie that should desire you to touch him, for his byeing is immortall. those that doe dye of it, doe seldome or neuer recover.

Cleo. Remember'st thou any that haue dyed on't?

Clow. Very many, men and women too. I heard of one of them no longer then yesterday, a very honest woman, but something giuen to lye, as a woman should not do, but in the way of honesty, how she dyed of the bytyng of it, what paine she felt. Truly, she makes a verie good report o' th' worrne: but he that wil beleuee all that they say, shall neuer be saued by halfe that they do. but this is most falliable, the Worme's an odde Worme.

Cleo. Get thee hence, farewell.

Clow. I wish you all ioy of the Worme.

Cleo. Farewell.

Clow. You must thinke this (looke you,) that the Worme will do his kinde.

Cleo. I, I, farewell

Clow. Looke you, the Worme is not to be trusted, but in the keeping of wise people. for indeede, there is no goodnesse in the Worme.

Cleo. Take thou no care, it shall be heeded.

Clow. Very good: giue it nothing I pray you, for it is not worth the feeding.

Cleo. Will it eate me?

Clow. You must not think I am so simple, but I know the diuell himselfe will not eate a woman. I know, that a woman is a dish for the Gods, if the diuell dresse her not. But truly, these same whorson diuels doe the Gods great harme in their women: for in euery tenne that they make, the diuels marre five.

Cleo. Well, get thee gone, farewell.

Clow. Yes forsooth: I wish you ioy o' th' worm. Exit

Cleo. Giue me my Robe, put on my Crowne, I haue Immortall longings in me. Now no more
The iuyce of Egypts Grape shall moist this lip.
Yare, yare, good Iras; quicke. Me thinkes I heare

Anthony call I see him rowse himselfe
To praise my Noble Act. I heare him mock
The lucke of Cesar, which the Gods giue men
To excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come.
Now to that name, my Courage proue my Title.
I am Fire, and Ayre; my other Elements
I giue to baser life. So, haue you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my Lippes
Farewell kinde Charmian, Iras, long farewell.
Haue I the Aspicke in my lippes? Dost fall?
If thou, and Nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a Louers pinch,
Which hurts, and is desir'd. Dost thou lye still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world,
It is not worth leaue-taking.

Char. Dissolue thicke cloud, & Rainé, that I may say
The Gods themselves do weepe.

Cleo. This proues me base:

If she first meete the Curled Anthony,
Hee'l make demand of her, and spend that kisse
Which is my heaven to haue. Come thou mortal wretch,
With thy sharpe teeth this knot intrinsicate,
Of life at once vntye. Poore venomous Foole,
Be angry, and dispatch. Oh could'st thou speake,
That I might heare thee call great Cesar Asse, vnpoliciéd.

Char. Oh Easterne Sarré.

Cleo. Peace, peace:

Dost thou not see my Baby at my breast,
That suckes the Nurse asleepe.

Char. O breake! O breake!

Cleo. A sweet as Balme, as soft as Ayre, as gentle.

Anthony! Nay I will eate thee too.

What should I stay—

Char. In this wilde World? So fare thee well:
Now boast thee Death, in thy possession lyes
A Lasse vnparell'd. Downie Windows cloze,
And golden Phœbus, neuer be beheld
Of eyes againe so Royall: your Crownes away,
He mend it, and then play—

Enter the Guard rustling in, and Dolabella.

1 Guard. Where's the Queene?

Char. Speake softly, wake her not.

1 Cesar hath sent

Char. Too slow a Messenger.

Oh come apace, dispatch, I partly feele thee.

1 Approach ho,

All's not well: Cesar's beguild.

2 There's Dolabella sent from Cesar: call him.

1 What worke is heere Charmian?

Is this well done?

Char. It is well done, and fitting for a Princess Descended of so many Royall KINGS.

Ah Souldier.

Charmian dyes

Enter Dolabella.

Dol. How goes it heere?

2 Guard. All dead.

Dol. Cesar, thy thoughts

Touch their effects in this: Thy selfe art coming
To see perform'd the dreaded Act which thou
So sought'st to hinder.

Enter Cesar and all his Train, marching.

All. A way there, a way for Cesar.

Dol.

Dol. Oh sir, you are too sure an Augurer:
That you did feare, is done.

Cesar. Brauest at the last,
She leuell'd at our purposes, and being Royall
Tooke her owne way: the manner of their deaths,
I do not see them bleed

Dol. Who was last with them?

1 Guard. A simple Countryman, that broght hit Figs.
This was his Basket.

Cesar. Poyson'd then.

1 Guard. Oh Cesar

This Charmian liu'd but now, she stood and spake:
I found her trimming vp the Diadem;
On her dead Mistis tremblingly she stood,
And on the sodaine dropt.

Cesar. Oh Noble weakenesse.

If they had swallow'd poyson, 'twould appeare
By externall swelling but she lookes like sleepe,
As she would catch another Anthony
In her strong toyle of Grace

Dol. Heere on her brest,
There is a vent of Bloud, and something blowne,
The like is on her Arme.

1 Guard. This is an Aspickes traile,
And these Figge-leaues haue slime vpon them, such
As th' Aspicke leaues vpon the Cauces of Nyle.

Cesar. Most probable

THE TRAGEDIE OF CYMBELINE.

Actus Primus. Scœna Prima.

Enter two Gentlemen.

1. Gent.

YOU do not meet a man but Frownes
Our bloods no more obey the Heavens
Then our Courtiers
Still seeme, as do's the Kings.

2. Gent. But what's the matter?

1. His daughter, and the heire of's kingdome (whom
He purpos'd to his wives so'e Sonne, a Widdow
That late he married) hath refer'd her selfe
Vnto a poore, but worthy Gentleman. She's wedded,
Her Husband banish'd, she imprison'd, all
Is outward sorrow, though I thinke the King
Be touch'd at very heart.

2. None but the King?

1. He that hath lost her too so is the Queene,
That most desir'd the Match. But not a Courtier,
Although they weate their faces to the bent
Of the Kings lookes, hath a heart that is not Glad at the thing they scowle at.

2. And why so?

1. He that hath mis'd the Princeesse, is a thing
Too bad, for bad report. and he that hath her,
(I meane, that married her, alacke-good man,
And therefore banish'd) is a Creature, such,
As to seeke through the Regions of the Earth
For one, his like; there would be something failing
In him, that should compare. I do not thinke,
So faire an Outward, and such stuffe Within Endowes a man, but hee

2. You speake him farre.

1. I do extend him (Sir) within him'selfe,
Crush him together, rather then vnfold
His measure duly.

2. What's his name, and Birth?

1. I cannot delue him to the roote. His Father
Was call'd Sicilius, who did ioyn his Honor
Against the Romanes, with Cassibulan,
But had his Titles by Tenantis, whom
He seru'd with Glory, and admir'd Success. .
So gain'd the Sur-addition, Leonatus
And had (besides this Gentleman in question)
Two other Sonnes, who in the Warres o'th' time
Dy'de with their Swords in hand. For which, their Father
Then old, and fond of yssue, tooke such sorrow
That he quit Being, and his gentle Lady

Bigge of this Gentleman (our Theame) decest
As he was borne. The King he takes the Babe
To his protection, calls him Posthumus Leonatus,
Breedes him, and makes him of his Bed-chamber,
Puts to him all the Learnings that his time
Could make him the receiuer of, which he tooke
As we do ayre, fast as 'twas ministred,
And in's Spring, became a Haruest. Liu'd in Court
(Which rare it is to do) most prais'd, most lou'd,
A sample to the yongest. to th'n ore Mature,
A glasse that seated them and to the graver,
A Childe that guided Dotards. To his Mistis,
(For whom he now is banish'd) her owne price
Proclaimes how she esteem'd him, and his Vertue
By her electio may be truly read, what kind of man he is.

2. I honor him, euen out of your report
But pray you tell me, is the sole childe to th' King?

1. His onely childe.

He had two Sonnes (if this be worth your hearing, Marke it) the eldest of them, at three yeares old
I th' washing cloathes, the other from their Nursery
Were stolne, and to this houre, no ghesse in knowledge
Which way they went.

2. How long is this ago?

1. Some twenty yeares.

2. That a Kings Children should be so conuey'd,
So slackely guarded, and the search so slow
That could not trace them.

1. Howsoere, 'tis strange,
Or that the negligence may well be laugh'd at:
Yet is it true Sir

2. I do well beleue you.

1. We must forbear. Heere comes the Gentleman,
The Queene, and Princeesse. Exeunt

Scœna Secunda.

Enter the Queene, Posthumus, and Imogen.

Qn. No, be assur'd you shall not finde me (Daughter)
After the slander of most Step-Mothers,
Enuill-ey'd vnto you. You're my Prisoner, but Your Gaoler shall deliuer you the keyes

z z 3

Tha

That locke vp your restraint. For you Posthumus,
So soone as I can win th'offended King.

I will be knowne your Aduocate · marry yet
The fire of Rage is in him, and 'twere good
You lean'd vnto his Sentence, with what patience
Your wisdom may informe you.

Post. Please your Highnesse,
I will from hence to day.

Qu. You know the penill:
He fetch a turne about the Garden, pitying
The pangs of barr'd Affections, though the King
Hath charg'd you should not speake together. Exit

Imo. O dissembling Curtesie! How fine this Tyrant
Can tickle where she wounds? My dearest Husband,
I something feare my Fathers wrath, but nothing (Alwayes refer'd my holy duty) what
His rage can do on me. You must be gone,
And I shall heere abide the hourelly shot
Of angry eyes. not comforted to liue,
But that there is this Jewell in the world,
That I may see againe.

Post. My Queene, my Mistis ·
O Lady, weepe no more, least I giue cause
To be suspected of more tendernesse
Then dorth become a man. I will remaine
The loyall'st husband, that did ere plight troth.
My residence in Rome, at one Filario's,
Who, to my Father was a Friend, to me
Knowne but by Letter, thither write (my Queene)
And with mine eyes, He drinke the words you send,
Though Inke be made of Gall.

Enter Queene.

Qu. Be briefe, I pray you:
If the King come, I shall incurre, I know not
How much of his displeasure yet He moue him
To walke this way · I neuer do him wrong,
But he do's buy my Injuries, to be Friends:
Payes deere for my offences.

Post. Should we betaking leaue
As long a terme as yet we haue to liue,
The loathnesse to depart, would grow Adieu.

Imo. Nay, stay a little
Were you but riding forth to ayre your selfe,
Such parting were too petty. Looke heere (Loue)
This Diamond was my Mothers; take it (Heart)
But keepe it till you woo another Wife,
When Imogen is dead.

Post. How, how? Another?
You gentle Gods, giue me but this I haue,
And feare vp my embracements from a next,
With bonds of death. Remaine, remaine thou heere,
While sense can keepe it on: And sweetest, fairest,
As I (my poore selfe) did exchange for you
To your so infinite losse; so in our trifles
I still winne of you. For my sake weare this,
It is a Manacle of Loue, He place it
Vpon this fayrest Prisoner.

Imo. O the Gods!
When shall we see againe?

Enter Cymbeline, and Lords.

Post. Alacke, the King.

Cym. Thou basest thing, auoyd hence, from my sight:
If after this command thou fraught the Court
With thy vnworthinesse, thou dyest. Away,
Thou'rt poyson to my blood.

Post. The Gods protect you,

And blesse the good Remainders of the Court:
I am gone.

Exit

Imo. There cannot be a pinch in death
More sharpe then this is.

Cym. O disloyall thing,
That should'st repayre my youth, thou heap'st
A yeares age on mee.

Imo. I beseech you Sir,
Harme not your selfe with your vexation,
I am senselesse of your Wrath; a Touch more rare
Subdues all pangs, all feares.

Cym. Past Grace? Obedience?

Imo. Past hope, and in dispaire, that way past Grace.

Cym. That might'st haue had
The sole Sonne of my Queene

Imo. O blessed, that I might not: I chose an Eagle,
And d'auoyd a Puttocke.

Cym. Thou took'st a Begger, would'st haue made my Throne, a Seate for basenesse

Imo. No, I rather added a lustre to it.

Cym. O thou vilde one!

Imo. Sir,

It is your fault that I haue lou'd Posthumus:
You bred him as my Play-fellow, and he is
A man, worth any woman · Out-buyes mee
Almost the summe he payes.

Cym. What? art thou mad?

Imo. Almost Sir. Heauen restore me: would I were A Neat-heards Daughter, and my Leonatus
Our Neighbour-Shepherds Sonne.

Enter Queene.

Cym. Thou foolish thing;
They were againe together: you haue done
Not after our command. Away with her,
And pen her vp.

Qu. Beseech your patience · Peace
Deere Lady daughter, peace. Sweet Soueraigne,
Leaue vs to our selues, and make your self some comfort
Out of your best aduice

Cym. Nay let her languish
A drop of blood a day, and being aged
Dye of this Folly Exit,

Enter Pisano

Qu. Fye, you must giue way:
Heere is your Seruant. How now Sir? What newes?

Pisa. My Lord your Sonne, drew on my Master.

Qu. Hah?

No harme I trust is done?

Pisa. There might haue beene,
But that my Master rather plaid, then fought,
And had no helpe of Anger: they were parted
By Gentlemen, at hand.

Qu. I am very glad on't.

Imo. Your Son's my Fathers friend, he takes his part
To drw vpon an Exile. O braue Sir,
I would they were in Affricke both together,
My selfe by with a Needle, that I might pricke
The goer backe. Why came you from your Master?

Pisa. On his command · he would not suffer mee
To bring him to the Hauens: lest these Notes
Of what commands I should be subiect too,
When't pleas'd you to employ me.

Qu. This hath beene
Your faithfull Seruant: I dare lay mine Honour
He will remaine so.

Pisa. I humbly thanke your Highnesse.

Qu.

Qu. Pray walke a-while.
Imo. About some halfe houre hence,
 Pray you speake with me;
 You shall (at least) go see my Lord aboard.
 For this time leaue me.

Exeunt.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and two Lords.

1. Sir, I would aduise you to shift a Shirt; the Violence of Action hath made you reek as a Sacrifice where ayre comes out, ayre comes in: There's none abroad so wholesome as that you vent

Clot. If my Shirt were bloody, then to shift it.
 Haue I hurt him?

2 No faith not so much as his patience.

1 Hurt him? His bodie's a passable Carkasse if he bee not hurt. It is a through-fare for Steele if it be not hurt.

2 His Steele was in debt, it went o'th' Backe-side the Towne.

Clot. The Villaine would not stand me

2 No, but he fled forward still, toward your face.

1 Stand you? you haue Land enough of your owne But he added to your hauing, gaue you some ground.

2 As many Inches, as you haue Oceans (Puppies)

Clot. I would they had not come betweene vs

2 So would I, till you had measur'd how long a Foole you were vpon the ground.

Clot. And that thee should loue this Fellow, and refuse mee.

2 If it be a sin to make a true election, 'she is damn'd.

1 Sir, as I told you alwayes her Beauty & her Braine go not together. Shee's a good signe, but I haue seene small reflection of her wit.

2 She shines not vpon Fooles, least the reflection Should hurt her.

Clot. Come, Ile to my Chamber. would there had beene some hurt done.

2 I wish not so, vnlesse it had bin the, fall of an Ass, which is no great hurt

Clot. You'l go with vs?

1 Ile attend your Lordship.

Clot. Nay come, let's go together.

2 Well my Lord.

Exeunt

Scena Quarta.

Enter Imogen and Pisano.

Imo. I would thou grew it vnto the shores o'th' Hauer And question'd'st every Saile if he should write, And I not haue it, 'twere a Paper lost As offer'd mercy is What was the last That he spake to thee?

Pisa. It was his Queene, his Queene

Imo. Then wau'd his Handkerchiefe?

Pisa. And kiss'd it, Madam.

Imo. Senselesse Lintie; happier therein then I.

And that was all?

Pisa. No Madam. for so long

As he could make me with his eye, or eare, Distinguish him from others, he did keepe The Decke, with Gloue, or Hat, or Handkerchiefe, Still wauiing, as the fits and sturres of's mind Could best expresse how slow his Soule say'd on, How swift his Ship.

Imo. Thou should'st haue made him, As little as a Crow, or lesse, ere left To after-eye him

Pisa. Madam, so I did

Imo. I would haue broke mine eye-strings; Crack'd them, but to looke vpon him, till the diminution Of space, had pointed him sharpe as my Needle: Nay, followed him, till he had melted from The smalnesse of a Gnat, to ayre and then Haue turn'd mine eye, and wept. But good Pisano, When shall we heare from him.

Pisa. Be assur'd Madam, With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leaue of him, but had Most pretty things to say: Ere I could tell him How I would thinke on him at certaine houres, Such thoughts, and such - Or I could make him sweare, The Shees of Italy should not betray Mine Interest, and his Honour or haue charg'd him At the sixt houre of Morne, at Noone, at Midnight, T'encounter me with Orisons, for then I am in Heauen for him - Or ere I could, Giue him that parting kisse, which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my Father, And like the Tyrannous breathing of the North, Shakes all our buddes from growing.

Enter a Lady.

La. The Queene (Madam) Desires your Highnesse Company.

Imo. Those things I bid you do, get them dispatch'd, I will attend the Queene.

Pisa. Madam, I shall.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Philario, Iachimo a Frenchman, a Dutchman, and a Spaniard

Iach. Beleeue it Sir, I haue seene him in Britaine, hee was then of a Cressent note, expected to proue so woorthy, as since he hath beene allowed the name of. But I could then haue look'd on him, without the help of Admiration, though the Catalogue of his endowments had bin tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by Items.

Phil. You speake of him when he was lesse furnish'd; then now hee is, with that which makes him both without, and within.

French. I haue seene him in France wee had very many there, could behold the Sunne, with as firme eyes as hee

Iach. This matter of marrying his Kings Daughter, wherein he must be weighed rather by her valew, then his owne, words him (I doubt not) a great deale from the matter.

French. And then his banishment.

Iach. I, and the approbation of those that weepe this lamentable diuorce vnder her colours, are wonderfully

to

to extend him, be it but to fortifie her iudgement, which else an easie battery might lay flat, for taking a Begger without lesse quality. But how comes it, he is to sojourne with you? How creeps acquaintance?

Phil. His Father and I were Souldiers together, to whom I haue bin often bound for no lesse then my life.

Enter Posthumus.

Heere comes the Britaine Let him be so entertained amongst you, as suites with Gentlemen of your knowing, to a Stranger of his quality. I beseech you all be better knowne to this Gentleman, whom I commend to you, as a Noble Friend of mine How Worthy he is, I will leaue to appeare hereafter, rather then story him in his owne hearing.

French. Sir, we haue knowne together in Orleans.

Post. Since when, I haue bin debtor to you for courtesies, which I will be euer to pay, and yet pay still

French. Sir, you o're-rate my poore kindnesse, I was glad I did atone my Countryman and you. it had beene pittie you should haue beene put together, with so mortall a purpose, as then each bore, vpon importance of so slight and triuall a nature.

Post. By your pardon Sir, I was then a young Traveler, rather shun'd to goeuen with what I heard, then in my euery action to be guided by others experiences but vpon my mended iudgement (if I offend to say it is mended) my Quarrell was not altogether slight.

French. Faith yes, to be put to the arbitrement of Swords, and by such two, that would by all likelihood haue confounded one the other, or haue false both.

Iach. Can we with manners, aske what was the difference?

French. Safely, I thinke, 'twas a contention in publicke, which may (without contradiction) suffer the report. It was much like an argument that tell our last night, where each of vs fell in praise of our Country-Mistresse This Gentleman, at that time vouching (and vpon warrant of bloody affirmation) his to be more Faire, Vertuous, Wise, Chaste, Conitant, Qualified, and lesse attemptable then any, the rarest of our Ladies in Fraunce.

Iach. That Lady is not now liuing; or this Gentleman's opinion by this, worne out.

Post. She holds her Vertue still, and I my mind

Iach. You must not so farre preferre her, 'fore ours of Italy.

Post. Being so farre prouok'd as I was in France I would abate her nothing, though I professe my selfe her Adorer, not her Friend.

Iach. As faire, and as good: a kind of hand in hand comparison, had beene something too faire, and too good for any Lady in Britanie, if she went before others. I haue seene as that Diamond of yours out-lusters many I haue beheld, I could not beleue she excelled many: but I haue not seene the most pretious Diamond that is, nor you the Lady.

Post. I prais'd her, as I rated her: so do I my Stone.

Iach. What do you esteeme it at?

Post. More then the world enioyes

Iach. Either your vnparagon'd Mistress is dead, or she's out-priz'd by a trifle

Post. You are mistaken. the one may be solde or giuen, or if there were wealth enough for the purchases, or merite for the gift. The other is not a thing for sale, and onely the gift of the Gods.

Iach. Which the Gods haue giuen you?

Post. Which by their Graces I will keepe.

Iach. You may weare her in title yours: but you know strange Fowle light vpon neighbouring Ponds. Your Ring may be stolne too, to your brace of vnprizeable Estimations, the one is but fraile, and the other Casuall; A cunning Thiefe, or a (that way) accomplish'd Courtier, would hazzard the winning both of first and last

Post. Your Italy, contains none so accomplish'd a Courtier to conuince the Honour of my Mistress: if in the holding or losse of that, you terme her fraile, I do nothing doubt you haue store of Theeues, notwithstanding I feare not my Ring.

Phil. Let vs leaue heere, Gentlemen?

Post. Sir, with all my heart. This worthy Signior I thanke him, makes no stranger of me, we are familiar at first.

Iach. With fife times so much conuersation, I should get ground of your faire Mistress; make her go backe, euen to the yeilding, had I admittance, and opportunitie to friend.

Post. No, no.

Iach. I dare thereupon pawne the moytie of my Estate, to your Ring, which in my opinion o're values it something: but I make my wager rather against your Confidence, then her Reputation. And to baire your offence here in to, I durst attempt it against any Lady in the world.

Post. You are a great deale abus'd in too bold a persuasion, and I doubt not you sustaine what y'are worthy of, by your Attempt.

Iach. What's that?

Post. A Repulse though your Attempt (as you call it) deserue more; a punishment too.

Phil. Gentlemen enough of this, it came in too suddenly, let it dye as it was borne, and I pray you be better acquainted.

Iach. Would I had put my Estate, and my Neighbors on the approbation of what I haue spoke,

Post. What Lady would you chuse to assaile?

Iach. Yours, whom in constancie you thinke stands so safe. I will lay you ten thousands Duckets to your Ring, that commend me to the Court where your Lady is, with no more aduantage then the opportunitie of a second conference, and I will bring from thence, that Honor of hers, which you imagine so refer'd.

Posthumus. I will wage against your Gold, Gold to it. My Ring I holde deere as my finger, 'tis part of it.

Iach. You are a Friend, and there in the wiser if you buy Ladies flesh at a Million a Dram, you cannot pre-seure it from tainting; but I see you haue some Religion in you, that you feare.

Posthu. This is but a custome in your tongue you beare a grauer purpose I hope.

Iach. I am the Master of my speeches, and would vnder-go what's spoken, I sweare

Posthu. Will you? I shall but lend my Diamond till your returne: let there be Couenants drawne between's My Mistress exceeds in goodnesse, the hugeness of your vnworthy thinking, I dare you to this match: heere's my Ring.

Phil. I will haue it no lay.

Iach. By the Gods it is one: if I bring you no sufficient testimony that I haue enioy'd the dearest bodily part of your Mistress my ten thousand Duckets are yours, so is your Diamond too, if I come off, and leave her in such honour as you have trust in, Shee your Jewell, this your Jewell, and my Gold are yours prouided, I haue your commendation, for my more free entertainment

Post. I embrace these Conditions, let vs haue Articles betwixt vs: onely thus farre you shall answer, if you make your voyage vpon her, and giue me directly to vnderstand, you haue preuayl'd, I am no further your Enemy, shee is not worth our debate. If shee remaine vn-educ'd, you not making it appeare otherwise. for your ill opinion, and th'a fault you haue made to her chastity, you shall answer me with your Sword

Iach. Your hand, a Couenant wee will haue these things set downe by lawfull Counsell, and straight away for Britaine, least the Bargaine should catch colde, and sterue. I will fetch my Gold, and haue our two Wagers recorded

Post. Agreed.

French. Will this ho'd, thinke you

Phil. Signior Iach. mo will not from it
Pray let vs follow 'em.

Exeunt

Scena Sexta

Enter Queene, Ladies, and Cornelius.

Qu. Whiles yet the dewe's on ground,
Gather those Flowers,
Make haste. Who ha's the note of them?

Lady. I Madam

Qu. en. Dispatch. Exit Ladies.
Now Master Doctor, haue you brought those drugges?

Cor. Pleaseth your Highnes, I: here they are, Madam
But I beseech your Grace, without offence
(My Conscience bids me aske) wherefore you haue
Commanded of me these most poysonous Compounds,
Which are the moouers of a languishing death.
But though slow, deadly.

Qu. I wonder, Doctor,
Thou ask'st me such a Question: Haue I not bene
Thy Pupill long? Hast thou not learn'd me how To make Perfumes? Distill? Preferue? Yea so,
That our great King himselte doth woo me oft
For my Confections? Hauing thus farre proceeded,
(Vnlesse thou thinkest me diuellish) is't not meete
That I did amplifie my iudgement in Other Conclusions? I will try the forces
Of these thy Compounds, on such Creatures as
We count not worth the hanging (but none humane)
To try the vigour of them, and apply
Allayments to their Act, and by them gather
Their seuerall vertues, and effects

Cor. Your Highnesse
Shall from this practise, but make hard your heart:
Besides, the seeing these effects will be
Both noysome, and infectious.

Qu. O content thee

Enter Pisanio.

Heere comes a flattering Rascal, vpon him
Will I first worke. Hee's for his Master,
And enemy to my Sonne. How now Pisanio?
Doctor, your seruice for this time is ended,
Take your owne way

Cor. I do suspect you, Madam,
But you shall do no harme.

Qu. Hearke thee, a word.

Cor. I do not like her. Shee doth thinke she ha's Strange ling'ring poysons. I do know her spirit,
And will not trust one of her malice, with
A drugg of such damnd Nature. Those she ha's,
Will stupifie and dull the Sense a-while,
Which first (perchance) shee'l proue on Cats and Dogs,
Then afterward vp higher. but there is
No danger in what shew of death it makes,
More then the locking vp the Spirits a time,
To be more fresh, reuiuing. Shee is fool'd
With a most false effect: and I, the truer,
So to be false with her

Qu. No further seruice, Doctor,
Vntill I send for thee.

Cor. I humbly take my leaue.

Exit

Qu. Weepes she still (saist thou)?
Dost thou thinke in time

Shee will not quench, and let instructions enter
Where Folly now possesies? Do thou worke:
When thou shalt bring me word she loues my Sonne,
He tell thee on the instant, thou art then
As great as is thy Master. Greater, for His Fortunes all lye speechlesse, and his name
Is at last gaspe. Returne he cannot, nor Continue where he is. To shife his being,
Is to exchange one misery with another,
And euery day that comes, comes to decay
A dayes worke in him. What shalt thou expect
To be depender on a thing that leans?
Who cannot be new built, nor ha's no Friends
So much, as but to prop him? Thou tak'st vp Thou know'st not what. But take it for thy labour,
It is a thing I made, which hath the King
Five times redeem'd from death. I do not know
What is more Cordiall. Nay, I prythee take it,
It is an earnest of a farther good
That I meane to thee. Tell thy Mistress how
The case stands with her doore, as from thy selfe;
Thinke what a chance thou changest on, but thinke
Thou hast thy Mistress still, to boore, my Sonne,
Who shall take notice of thee. He moue the King
To any shape of thy Preferment, such
As thou'lt desire. and then my selfe, I cheefely,
That set thee on to this desert, am bound
To loade thy merit richly. Call my women. Exit Pisanio
Thinke on my words. A lye, and constant lye,
Not to be shak'd. the Agent for his Master,
And the Remembrancer of her, to hold
I he hand-fast to her Lord. I haue giuen him that,
Which if he take, shall quite vnpoeple her
Of Leiders for her Sweete. and which, shee asyrr
Except she bend her humor, shall be assur'd
To taste of too

Enter Pisanio, and Ladies.

So, so Well done, well done:
The Violets, Cowslippes, and the Prime-Roses
Beare to my Closet. Fare thee well Pisanio.
Thinke on my words.

Exit Qu., and Ladies

Pisa. And shall do

But when to my good Lord, I proue vntrue,
He choake my selfe: there's all Ie do for you.

*Exit,
Scene*

Scena Septima.

Enter Imogen alone

Imo. A Father cruell, and a Stepdame false,
A Foolish Sutor to a Wedded-Lady,
That hath her Husband banish'd. O, that Husband,
My supream Crowne of griefe, and those repeated
Vexations of it. Had I bin Theefe-stolne,
As my two Brothers, happy but most miserable
Is the desires that's glorious. Blessed be those
How meane so ere, that haue their honest wills,
Which seasons comfort. Who may this be? Fye.

Enter Pisanio, and Iachimo.

Pisa. Madam, a Noble Gentleman of Rome,
Comes from my Lord with Letters.

Iach. Change you, Madam.
The Worthy Leonatus is in safety,
And greates your Highnesse decerely.

Imo. Thanks good Sir,
You're kindly welcome.

Iach. All other, that is out of doore, most rich:
If she be furnish'd with a mind so rare
She is alone th' Arabian-Bird; and I
Haue lost the wager. Boldnesse be my Friend:
Arme me Audacitie from head to foote,
Or like the Parthian I shall flying fight,
Rather directly fly.

Imogen reads.

Here is one of the Noblest note, to whose kindnesse I am most infinitely tied. Reflect upon him accordingly, as you value your trust.

Leonatus.

So farre I reade aloud.
But euen the very middle of my heart
Is warm'd by th'rest, and take it thankfully.
You are as welcome (worthy Sir) as I
Haue words to bid you, and shall finde it so
In all, that I can do.

Iach. Thankes farrest Lady.
What are men mad? Hath Nature giuen them eyes
To see this vaulted Arch, and the rich Crop
Of Sea and Land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fire Orbes above, and the twinn'd Stones
Vpon the number'd Beach, and can we not Partition make with Spectacles so pretious
Twixt faire, and foule?

Imo. What makes your admiration?

Iach. It cannot be th'eye: for Apes, and Monkeys
Twixt two such She's, would chatter this way, and Contemne with mowes the other. Nor th' iudgment:
For Idiots in this case of fauour, would
Be wisely deinit. Nor th' Appetite.
Sluttery to such neate Excellence, oppos'd
Should make desire vomit emptinesse,
Nor so allur'd to feed.

Imo. What is the matter trow?

Iach. The Cloyed will:
That satiate yet vn-satisf'd desire; that Tub
Both fill'd and running. Rauening first the Lambe, Longs after for the Garbage.

Imo. What, deere Sir,
Thus rap's you? Are you well?

Iach. Thanks Madam well. Beseech you Sir,
Desire my Man's abode, where I did leaue him:
He's strange and peeuish.

Pisa. I was going Sir,
To giue him welcome.

Imo. Continues well my Lord?
His health beseech you?

Iach. Well, Madam.

Imo. Is he dispos'd to mirth? I hope he is,

Iach. Exceeding pleasant: none a stranger there,
So merry, and so gamesome: he is call'd
The Britaine Redeller.

Imo. When he was heere
He did incline to sadnesse, and oft times
Not knowing why.

Iach. I neuer saw him sad.
There is a Frenchman his Companion, one
An eminent Monsieur, that it seemes much loues
A Gallian-Girle at home. He furnaces
The thicke sighes from him, whiles the iolly Britaine,
(Your Lord I meane) laughs from's free lungs xies oh,
Can my sides hold, to think that man who knowes
By History, Report, or his owne prooffe
What woman is, yea what she cannot choose
But must be: will's free houres languish:
For assured bondage?

Imo. Will my Lord say so?

Iach. I Madam, with his eyes in flood: with laughter,
It is a Recreation to be by
And heare him mocke the Frenchman:
But Heauen's know some men are much too blame.

Imo. Not he I hope.

Iach. Not he:
But yet Heauen's bounty towards him, might
Be vs'd more thankfully In himselfe 'tis much;
In you, which I account his beyond all Talents.
Whil'st I am bound to wonder, I am bound
To pittie too.

Imo. What do you pittie Sir?

Iach. Two Creatures heartily.

Imo. Am I one Sir?

You looke on me. what wrack discerne you in me
Defeues your pittie?

Iach. Lamentable: what
To hide me from the radiant Sun, and solace
I th' Dungeon by a Snuffe.

Imo. I pray you Sir,
Deluer with more opennesse your answers
To my demands. Why do you pittie me?

Iach. That others do,
(I was about to say) enioy your—but
It is an office of the Gods to venge it,
Not mine to speake on't.

Imo. You do seeme to know
Something of rue, or what concernes me; pray you
Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Then to be sure they do. For Certainities
Either are past remedies; or timely knowing,
The remedy then borne. Discouer to me
What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek
To bathe my lips vpon: this hand, whose touch,
(Whose euery touch) would force the Feelers soule
To th'oath of loyalty. This obiect, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fiering it onely heere, should I (damn'd then)

Exit.

Slauet

Slaauer with lippes as common as the stayres
That mount the Capitoll Ioyne gripes, with hands
Made hard with hourly falshood (falshood as
With labour ) then by peeping in an eye
Base and illustrious as the smoake light
That's fed with stinking Tallow it were fit
That all the plagues of Hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imo. My Lord, I feare
Has forgot Brittain

Iach. And himselfe, nor I
Inclin'd to this intelligence, pronource
The Beggery of his change, but 'tis your Graces
That from my muteest Conscience, to my tongue,
Charmes this report out.

Imo. Let me heare no more.

Iach. O deereft Soule, your Cause doth strike my hart
With pittie, that doth make me sicke. A Lady
So faire, and fasten'd to an Emperie
Would make the great'st King double, to be partner'd
With Tomboyes hyr'd, with that selfe exhibition
Which your owne Coffers yeeld with diseas'd ventures
That play with all infirmities for Gold,
Which rottenesse can lend Nature. Such boyld stuffe
As well might poyson Poyson Be reueng'd,
Or she that bore you, was no Queene, and you
Recoyle from your great Stocke

Imo. Reueng'd.

How should I be reueng'd? If this be true,
(As I haue such a Heart, that both mine eares Must not in haste abuse) if it be true,
How should I be reueng'd?

Iach. Should he make me
Liue like Diana's Priest, betwixt cold sheets,
Whiles he is vaulting variable Ramps
In your despight, vpon your purse reuenge it.
I dedicate my selfe to your sweet pleasure,
More Noble then that runnagate to your bed,
And will continue fast to your Affection,
Still close, as sure.

Imo. What hoa, Pisanio?

Iach. Let me my seruice tender on your lippes.

Imo. Away, I do condemne mine eares, that haue
So long attended thee. If thou wert Honourable Thou would'st haue told this tale for Vertue, not
For such an end thou serk'st, as base, as strange:
Thou wrong'st a Gentleman, who is as farre
From thy report, as thou from Honor and Solicites heere a Lady, that disdaines
Thee, and the Diuell alike. What hoa, Pisanio?
The King my Father shall be made acquainted
Of thy Assault: if he shall thinke it fit,
A sawcy Stranger in his Court, to Mart
As in a Romish Stew, and to expound
His beastly minde to vs, he hath a Court
He little cares for, and a Daughter, who
He not respects at all. What hoa, Pisanio?

Iach. O happy Leonatus I may say,
The credit that thy Lady hath of thee
Deserues thy trust, and thy most perfect goodnesse
Her assur'd credit. Blessed liue you long,
A Lady to the worthiest Sir, that euer
Country call'd his, and you his Mistress, onely
For the most worthiest fit. Giue me your pardon,
I haue spoke this to know if your Affiance
Were deeply rooted, and shall make your Lord,

That which he is, new o're: And he is one
The truest manner'd. Such a holy Witch,
That he enchants Societies into him:
Halse all men hearts are his.

Imo. You make amends.

Iach. He sits amongst men, like a defended God;
He hath a kinde of Honor sets him off,
More then a mortall seeming. Be not angrie
(Most mighty Princeesse) that I haue aduentur'd
To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great Iudgement,
In the election of a Sir, so rare,
Which you know, cannot erre. The loue I beare him,
Made me to fan you this, but the Gods made you (Vnlike all others) chafelisse. Pray your pardon.

Imo. All's well Sir.

Take my powre'st Court for yours.

Iach. My humble thanks. I had almost forgot
T'intreat your Grace, but in a small request,
And yet of moment too, for it concernes
Your Lord, my selfe, and other Noble Friends
Are partners in the businesse.

Imo. Pray what's't?

Iach. So ne dozen Romanes of vs, and your Lord
(The best Feather of our wing) haue mingled summes
To buy a Present for the Emperour.
Which I (the Factor for the sell) haue done
In France 'tis Place of rare deice, and Jewels
Of rich, and exquisite forme, their valwes great,
And I am something curious, being strange
To haue them in safe stowage: May it please you
To take them in protection.

Imo. Willingly

And pawne mine Honor for their safety, since
My Lord hath interest in them, I will keepe them
In my Bed-chamber.

Iach. They are in a Trunke
Attended by my men. I will make bold
To send them to you, onely for this night:
I must aboard to morrow.

Imo. O no, no.

Iach. Yes beseech or I shall short my word
By lengthning my returne. From Gallia,
I crost the Seas on purpose, and on promise
To see your Grace.

Imo. I thanke you for your paines:
But not away to morrow.

Iach. O I must Madam.
Therefore I shall beseech you, if you please
To greet your Lord with writings, doo't to night,
I haue out-stood my time, which is materiall
To th'tender of our Present.

Imo. I will write.

Send your Trunke to me, it shall safe be kept,
And truly yeelded you: you're very welcome, Exeunt

Actus Secundus. Scena Prima.

Enter Cloten, and the two Lords.

Clot. Was there euer man had such lucke when I list the Iacke vpon an vp-cast, to be hit away? I had a hundred pound on't: and then a whorion Iacke-an-Apes,
must

must take me vp for swearing, as if I borrowed mine oathes of him, and might not spend them at my pleasure.

1. What got he by that? you haue broke his pate with your Bowle.

2. If his wit had bin like him that broke it: it would haue run all out.

Clot. When a Gentleman is dispos'd to swear: it is not for any standers by to curtall his oathes. Ha?

2. No my Lord; nor crop the eares of them.

Clot. Whorson dog - I gaue him satisfaction? would he had bin one of my Ranke.

2. To haue smell'd like a Foole.

Clot. I am not vext more at any thing in th'earth. a pox on't, I had rather not be so Noble as I am: they dare not fight with me, because of the Queene my Mother. euery Iacke-Slaue hath his belly full of fighting, and I must go vp and downe like a Cock, that no body can match.

2. You are Cocke and Capon too, and you crow Cock, with your combe on.

Clot. Sayest thou?

2. It is not fit you Lordship should vndertake euery Companion, that you giue offence too.

Clot. No, I know that. but it is [fit I should commit offence to my inferiors.

2. It is fit for your Lordship onely.

Clot. Why so I say.

1. Did you heere of a Stranger that's come to Court night?

Clot. A Stranger, and I not know on't?

2. He's a strange Fellow himselfe, and knowes it not.

1. There's an Italian come, and 'tis thought one of Leonatus Friends

Clot. Leonatus? A banisht Rascall; and he's another, whatsoeuer he be. Who told you of this Stranger?

1. One of your Lordships Pages.

Clot. Is it fit I went to looke vpon him? Is there no deogation in't?

2. You cannot derogate my Lord.

Clot. Not easily I thinke.

2. You are a Foole graunted, therefore your Issues being foolish do not derogate.

Clot. Come, Ile go see this Italian: what I haue lost to day at Bowles, Ile winne to night of him. Come. go.

2. Ile attend your Lordship.

Exit.

That such a craftie Duell as is his Mother Should yeild the world this Assie: A woman, that Beares all downe with her Braine, and this her Sonne, Cannot take two from twenty for his heart, And leaue eighteene. Alas poore Princeesse, Thou diuine Imogen, what thou endur'st, Betwixt a Father by thy Step-dame gouern'd, A Mother hourly coyning plots: A Wooer, More hatefull then the foule expulsion is Of thy deere Husband. Then that horrid Act Of the diuorce; hee'd make the Heauens hold firme The walls of thy deere Honour. Keepe vnshak'd That Temple thy faire mind, that thou maist stand T'envoy thy banish'd Lord; and this great Land. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Imogen, in her Bed, and a Lady.

Imo. Who's there? My woman: Helme?

La. Please you Madam.

Imo. What houre is it?

Lady. Almost midnight, Madam.

Imo. I haue read three houres then.

Mine eyes are weake,

Fold downe the leaues where I haue left: to bed.

Take not away the Taper, leaue it burning

And if thou canst awake by foure o'th'clock,

I prythee call me: Sleepe hath seiz'd me wholly.

To your protection I commend me, Gods,

From Faines, and the Tempters of the night,

Guard me beseech yee.

Sleeper.

Iach. mo from the Trunke.

Iach. The Crickets sing, and mans ore-labor'd sentie

Repaires it selfe by rest. Our Tarquine thus

Did softly presse the Rushes, ere he waken'd

The Chastitie he wounded. Cytherea,

How brauely thou becom'st thy Bed; fresh Lilly,

And whiter then the Sheetes. that I might touch,

But kisse, one kisse. Rubies vnparagon'd,

How deere they doo't. 'Tis her breathing that

Perfumes the Chamber thus: the Flame o'th Taper

Bowes toward her, and would vnder-peepe her lids.

To see th'inclosed Lighes, now Canopied

Vnder these windowes, White and Azure lac'd

With Blew of Heauens owne tinct. But my designe.

To note the Chamber, I will write all downe,

Such, and such pictures. There the window, such

Th'adornement of her Bed, the Arras, Figures,

Why such, and such. and the Contents o'th Story.

Ah, but some naturall notes about her Body,

Above ten thousand meaner Moueables

Would testifie, t'enrich mine Inuentorie.

O sleepe, thou Ape of death, lye dull vpon her,

And be her Sense but as a Monument,

Thus in a Chappell lying. Come off, come off;

As slippery as the Gordian-knot was hard.

'Tis mine, and this will witness outwardly,

As strongly as the Conscience do's within.

To'th madding of her Lord. On her left brest

A mole Cinque-spotted: Like the Crimson drops

I'th bottome of a Cowslippe. Heere's a Voucher,

Stronger then euer Law could make, this Secret

Will force him thinke I haue pick'd the lock, and tane

The treasure of her Honour. No more: to what end?

Why should I write this downe, that's iudged,

Screw'd to my memorie. She hath bin reading late,

The Tale of Tereus, heere the kaffe's turn'd downe

Where Philomels gane vp. I haue enough,

To'th Truncke againe, and shut the spring of it.

Swift, swift, you Dragons of the night, that dawning

May beare the Rauens eye. I lodge in feare,

Though this a heauenly Angell. hell is heere

Clacke strikes

Exit.

One, two, three: time, time.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clotten, and Lords.

1. Your Lordship is the most patient man in losse, the most coldest that euer turn'd vp Ace.

Clot. It would make any man cold to loose.

1. But not euery man patient after the noble temper of your Lordship; You are most hot, and furious when you winne.

Clot

Winning will put any man into courage. if I could get this foolish Imogen, I should haue Gold enough: it's almost morning, is't not?

1 Day, my Lord

Clot I would this Musicke would come. I am aduised to giue her Musicke a mornings, they say it will penetrate

Enter Musicians.

Come on, tune. If you can penetrate her with your fingering, so we'll try with tongue too: if none will do, let her remune. but she neuer giue o're. First, a very excellent good conceited thing, after a wonderful sweet aire, with admirable rich words to it, and then let her consider.

SONG

*Hearle, hearle, the Larks at Heauens gate singe, and Phoebus gins arise,
His Steeds to water at those Springs on chalic'd Flowers that lyes
And winking Alary-birds begin to ope their Golden eyes
With euery thing that pretty is, my Lady sweet arise
Arise, arise*

So, get you gone if this pen trate, I will consider your Musicke the better: if it do not, it is a voyce in her eares which Horse-haires, and Calues-guts, nor the voyce of vnpaired Eunuch to boot, can neuer amed.

Enter Cymbeline, and Queene.

2 Heere comes the King

Clot I am glad I was vp'olate, for that's the reason I was vp' to earely: he cannot choose but take this Seruice I haue done, fatherly Good morrow to your Majesty, and to my gracious Mother

Cym Attend you here the doore of our stern daughter Will she not forth?

Clot I haue assaied her with Musickes, but she vouchsafes no notice

Cym The Exile of her Minion is too new, She hath not yet forgot him, some more time Must weare the print of his remembrance on't, And then she's yours.

Qu. You are most bound to th'King, Who let's go by no vantages, that may Preferre you to his daughter. Frame your selfe To orderly solicity, and be friended With apiness of the season: make denials Encrease your Seruices: so seeme, as if You were inspir'd to do those duties which You tender to her: that you in all obey her, Saue when command to your dismission tends, And therein you are senselesse.

Clot Senselesse? Not so.

Mes So like you (Sir) Ambassadors from Rome, The one is Caius Lucius

Cym A worthy Fellow, Albeit he comes on angry purpose now, But there's no fault of his: we must receyue him According to the Honor of his Sender, And towards himselfe, his goodnesse fore-spent on vs We must extend our notice: Our deere Sonne, When you haue giuen good morning to your Mistris, Attend the Queene, and vs, we shall haue neede To employ you towards this Romane.

Come our Queene

Exeunt.

Clot If she be vp, Ile speake with her: if not Let her lye still, and dreame by your leaue hoa, I know her women are about her: what

If I do line one of their hands, 'tis Gold Which buyes admittance (oft it doth) yea, and makes Diana's Rangers false themselves, yeld vp Their Deere to th'fild and o'th' Stealer: and 'tis Gold Which makes the True-man kill'd, and saues the Theefe: Nay, sometime hangs both Theefe, and True-man: what Can it not do, and vndoo? I will make One of her women I awayer to me, for I yet not vnderstand the case my selfe By your leaue

Knockes.

Enter a Lady.

La Who's there that knockes?

Clot A Gentleman.

La No more

Clot. Yes, and a Gentlewomans Sonne.

La That's more

Then some whose Taylors ere as deere as yours, Can nully boast of: what's your Lordships pleasure?

Clot Your Ladies person, is she ready?

La. I, to keepe her Chamber

Clot. There is Gold for you, Sell me your good report

La How my good name? or to report of you What I shall thinke is good. The Princeesse.

Enter Imogen

Clot. Good morrow fairest, Sister your sweet hand,

Imo. Good morrow Sir, you lay out too much paines, I or purchasing but trouble: the thanks I giue, Is telling you that I am poore of thanks, And scarce can spare them.

Clot. Still I sweare I loue you.

Imo. If you but said so, 'twere as deepe with me: If you sweare still, your recompence is still That I regard it not

Clot This is no answer.

Imo. But that you shall not say, I yeeld being silent, I would not speake. I pray you spare me, 'faith I shall vtold equall discourtesie To your best kindeesse: one of your great knowing Shuld learne (being taught) forbearance

Clot. To leaue you in your madnesse, 'twere my sin, I will not

Imo Fooles are not mad folkes

Clot Do you call me Foole?

Imo. As I am mad I do

If you'll be patient, Ile no more be mad, That cures vs both: I am much sorry (Sir) You put me to forget a Ladies manners By being so verball: and learne now, for all, That I which know my heart, do heer pronounce By th'very truth of it, I care not for you, And am so neere the lacke of Chantie To accuse my selfe, I hate you: which I had rather You felt, then make't my boast.

Clot. You sinne against Obedience, which you owe your Father, for The Contract you pretend with that base Wretch, One, bred of Almes, and foster'd with cold dishes, With scraps o'th' Court: It is no Contract, none, And though it be allowed in meaner parties (Yet who then he more meane) to knit their soules (On whom there is no more dependance But Brats and Beggery) in selfe-figur'd knot, Yet you are curb'd from that enlargement, by 222

The

The consequence o'th' Crowne, and must not soyle
The precious note of it; with a base Slave,
A Hilding for a Luorie, a Squires Cloth,
A Pantler; not so eminent.

Imo. Prophane Fellow:

Wert thou the Sonne of Jupiter, and no more,
But what thou art besides: thou wert too base,
To be his Groom: thou wert dignified enough
Euen to the point of Iurie. If'twere made
Comparative for your Vertues, to be fill'd
The vnder Hangman of his kingdom; and hated
For being prefer'd so well.

Clot. The South-Flag for him.

Imo. He neuer can meete more mischance, then come
To be but nam'd of thee. His mean't Carr ent
That euer hath but clapt his body; is deater
In my respect, then all the Heires about it ee,
Were they all made such men: How no a Pisano?

Enter Pisano.

Clot. His Garments? Now the duell.

Imo. To Druby my woman hee thee presently.

Clot. His Garment?

Imo. I am sprighted with a Foole,
Frighted, and angryd worse: Go bid my woman
Search for a Jewell, that too casuall
Hath left mine Arme: It was thy Masters. Shew me
If I would loofe it for a Renew,
Of any Kings in Europe. I do think,
If saw't this morning: Confident I am,
Last night 'twas on mine Arme: I kiss'd it,
I hope it be not gone, to tell my Lord
That I kisse aught but he.

Pis. 'Twill not be lost.

Imo. I hope so: go and search.

Clot. You haue abus'd me.

His meanest Garment?

Imo. I, I said so Sir,
If you will make't an Action, call witness to't.

Clot. I will enforme your Father.

Imo. Your Mother too:

She's my good Lady; and will conueue, I hope
But the worst of me. So I leave you Sir,
To th' worst of discontent.

Exit.

Clot. He bereueng'd:

His meanest Garment? Well,

Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Philario.

Post. Feare it not Sir: I would I were so sure
To winne the King, as I am bold, her Honour
Will remaine her's.

Phil. What meanes do you make to him?

Post. Not any: but abide the change of Time
Quake in the present winters state, and wish
That warmer dayes would come: In these fear'd hope
I barely gratifie your loue; they sayling
I must die much your debtor.

Phil. Your very goodnesse, and your company,
Ore-payes all I can do. By this your King,
Hath heard of Great Augustus: Calus Lucius,
Will do's Commission throughly. And I think

Hee le grant the Tribute: send th' Arraiges,
Or looke vpon our Remaies, whose remembrance
Is yet fresh in their gilese.

Post. I do beleue

(Statist though I am none, nor like to be)
That this will prove a Warre; and you shall see
The Legion now in Gallia, sooner landed
In our not-fearing-Britaine, then haue tydings
Of any penny Tribute paid. Our Countrymen
Are men more order'd, then when Julius Caesar
Smild at their lacke of skill, but found their courage
Worthy his frowning at. Their discipline,
(Now wing-led with their courages) will make knowne
To their Approuers, if they are People, such
That mend vpon the world.

Enter Iachimo.

Phil. See Iachimo.

Post. The swiftest Harts, haue passed you by land;
And Winters of all the Corners kiss'd your Salet,
To make your vessell rumbie.

Phil. We'l come Sir.

Post. I hope the briefenesse of your answer, made
The speedinesse of your returne.

Iach. Your Lady,

Is one of the fairest that I haue look'd vpon

Post. And 'tween with the best, or rather beauty
Iooke thorough a Casement to assure false heurs,
And be false with them.

Iach. Here are Letters for you.

Post. Their ten're good I trust.

Iach. Tis very like.

Post. Was Cornelius in the Britaine Court,
When you were there?

Iach. He was expelled thence,

But not approach'd.

Post. All is well yet,

Sparkes this Stone as it was wont, or is not Too dull for your good wearing?

Iach. If I haue lost it,

I shoud haue bid the worth of it in Gold,
I'e make a journey vnto as farre, to buy
A second night of such a vertuousnesse, which
Was mine in Betrice, for the Ring is woone.

Post. The Stones too hard to come by,

Iach. Not a whit,

Your Lady being so easy.

Post. Mkenote Sir

Your losse, your Spote: I hope you know that we Must not continue Friends.

Iach. Good Sir, we must

If you keepe Couenants: had I not brought
The knowledge of your Mistris home, I grant
We were to question farther; but I now
Professe my selfe the winner of her Honor,
Together with your Rings; and not the wronger
Of her, or you having proceeded but
By both your willes.

Post. If you can mak't apparant
That you haue tasted her in Bed; my hand,
And Ring is yours. If not, the foule opinion
You had of her pure Honour gaires, or looses,
Your Sword, or mine, or Masterlesse leave both
To who shall finde them.

Iach. Sir, my Circumstances
Being sonere the Truth, as I will make them,
Must first induce you to beleue; whose strength
I will confirme with oath, which I doubt not

Yor'l

You'l giue me leaue to spare, when you shall finde
You neede it not.

Post. Proceed.

Iach. First, her Bed-chamber (Where I confesse I slept not, but professe
Had that was well worth watching) it was hang'd
With Tapistrie of Silke, and Silver, the Story
Proud Cleopatra, when she met her Roman,
And Sidnus swell'd aboue the Bankes, or for
The presse of Boates, or Priece A peece of Worke
So brauely done, so rich, that it did strue
In Workmanship, and Value, which I wonder'd
Could be so rarely, and exactly wrought
Since the true life on't was——

Post. This is true.
And this you might haue heard of heere, by me,
Or by some other.

Iach. More particulars
Must iustifie my knowledge.

Post. So they must,
Or doe your Honour injury.

Iach. The Chimney
Is South the Chamber, and the Chimney-peece
Chaste Dian, bathing neuer saw I figures
So likely to report themselves; the Cutter
Was as another Nature dumbe, out-went her,
Motion, and Breath left out.

Post. This is a thing
Which you might from Relation likewise reape,
Being, as it is, much spoke of

Iach. The Roofe o'th Chamber,
With golden Cherubins is fretted. Her Andirons
(I had forgot them) were two winking Cupids
Of Silver, each on one foote standing, nicely
Depending on their Branda.

Post. This is her Honor.
Let it be granted you haue scene all this (and praise
Be giuen to your remembrance) the description
Of what is in her Chamber, nothing saues
The wager you haue laid.

Iach. Then if you can
Be pale, I begge but leaue to ayre this Jewell See,
And now 'tis vp againe it must be married
To that your Diamond, Ile keepe them

Post. Ioue——
Once more let me behold it: Is it that
Which I left with her?

Iach. Sir (I thanke her) that
She stript it from her Arme. I see her yet:
Her pretty Action, did out-sell her guift,
And yet enrich'd it too she gaue it me,
And said, she priz'd it once.

Post. May be, she pluck'd it off
To send it me.

Iach. She writes so to you? doth shee?

Post. O no, no, no, 'tis true. Heere, take this too,
It is a Basiliske vnto mine eye,
Killes me to looke on't. Let there be no Honor,
Where there is Beauty. Truth, where semblance: Loue,
Where there's another man. The Vowes of Women,
Of no more bondage be, to where they are made,
Then they are to their Vertues, which is nothing:
O, about measure false.

Phil. Haue patience Sir,
And take your Ring againe, 'tis not yet wonne:
It may be probable she lost it: or

Who knows if one her women, being corrupted
Hath stolne it from her.

Post. Very true,
And so I hope he came by't. backe my Ring,
Render to me some corporall signe about her,
More euidet then this. for this was stolne.

Iach. By Iupiter, I had it from her Arme.

Post. Hearte you, he sweares by Iupiter he sweares.
'Tis true, may keepe the Ring; 'tis true. I am sure
She would not loose it her Attendants are
All sworne, and honourable: they induc'd to steale it?
And by a Stranger? No, he hath enioy'd her,
The Cognisance of her incontinencie
Is this: she hath bought the name of Whore, thus deerly
There, take thy hyre, and all the Friends of Hell
Diuide themselves betweene you.

Phil. Sir, be patient.
This is not strong enough to be beleeu'd
Of one perswaded well of.

Post. Neuer talke on't:
She hath bin colted by him.

Iach. If you seeke
For further satisfying, vnder her Breast
(Worthy her pressing) lyes a Mole, right proud
Of that most delicate Lodging. By my life
I kist it, and it gaue me present hunger
To feede againe, though full. You do remember
This stain'd vpon her?

Post. I, and it doth confirme
Another staine, as bigge as Hell can hold,
Were there no more but it.

Iach. Will you heare more?

Post. Spare your Arithmaticke,
Neuer count the Turnes. Once, and a Million.

Iach. Ile be sworne.

Post. No swearing:
If you will sweare you haue not done't, you lye,
And I will kill thee, if thou do'st deny
Thou hast made me Cuckold.

Iach. Ile deny nothing.

Post. O that I had her heere, to teare her Limb-meale.
I will go there and doo't, i'th Court, before
Her Father Ile do something. Exit.

Phil. Quite besides
The gouernment of Patience. You haue wonne:
Let's follow him, and peruert the present wrath
He hath against himselfe.

Iach. With all my heart. Exeunt.

Enter Posthumus.

Post. Is there no way for Men to be, but Women
Must be halfe-workers? We are all Bastards,
And that most venerable man, which I Did call my Father, was, I know not where
When I was stamp't Some Coyner with his Toolles
Made me a counterfeit: yet my Mother seem'd
The Dian of that time: so doth my Wife
The Nonpareill of this. Oh Vengeance, Vengeance!
Me of my lawfull pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance: did it with
A pudencie so Rosie, the sweet view on't
Might well haue watm'd olde Saturne;
That I thought her
As Chaste, as vn-Sum'd Snow. Oh, all the Diuels!
This yellow Iachimo in an houre, was't not?

Or lesse; at first? Perchance he spoke not, but Like a full Acorn'd Boare, & Yarmen on,
 Cry'de oh, and mounted, found no opposition
 But what he look'd for, should oppose, and she Should from encounter guard. Could I finde out
 The Womans part in me, for there's no motion
 That tends to vice in man, but I affirme
 It is the Womans part: be it Lying, note it,
 The womans Flattering, Iers, Deceiving, hers -
 Lust, and ranke thoughts, hers, her. : Reuenges hers:
 Ambitions, Couetings, change of Prides, Disdaine,
 Nice-longing, Slanders, Mutability;
 All Faults that name, nay, that I Hell knowes,
 Why hers, in part, or all. but rather all For euen to Vice
 They are not constant, but are changing still,
 One Vice. but of a minute old, for one
 Not halfe so old as that. I'le write against them,
 Detest them, curse them. yet 'tis greater Skill
 In a true Hate, to pray they haue the euill
 The very Duels cannot plague them better. Exit.

Actus Tertius. Scena Prima.

Enter in State, Cymbeline, Queene, Cloten, & Lords at one doore, and at another, Cym, Lucius, and Attendants

Cym. Now say, what would Augustus Caesar with vs?

Luc. When Iulius Caesar (whose remembrance yet
 Lives in mens eyes, and will to Eares and Tongues
 Be Theame, and hearing euer) was in this Brittain,
 And Conquer'd it, Cassibulan thine Vnkle
 (Famous in Caesars prayles, no whit lesse
 Then in his Feats deserving it) for him,
 And his Succession, gran'd Rome a Tribute,
 Yeerely three thousand pounds; which (by thee) lately
 Is left vntender'd.

Qu. And to kill the meruaile,
 Shall be so euer.

Clot. There be many Caesars,
 Ere such another Iulius Britaine's a world
 By it selfe, and we will nothing pay
 For wearing our owne Noses

Qu. That opportunity
 Which then they had to take from's, to resume
 We haue againe. Remember Sir, my Liege,
 The Kings your Ancestors, together with
 The naturall bravery of your Isle, which stands
 As Neptunes Parke, ribb'd, and pal'd in
 With Oakes vnscaleable, and roaring Waters,
 With Sands that will not beare your Enemies Boates,
 But sucke them vp to th' Top mast. A kinde of Conquest
 Caesar made heere, but made not heere his bragge
 Of Came, and Saw, andouer-came: with shame
 (The first that euer touch'd him) he was carried
 From off our Coast, twice beaten: and his Shipping
 (Poore ignorant Baubles) on our terrible Seas
 Like Egge-shells mou'd vpon their Surges, crack'd
 As easily gainst our Rockes For ioy whereof,
 The fam'd Cassibulan, who was once at point
 (Oh giglet Fortune) to master Caesars Sword,
 Made Luds-Towne with reioycing-Fires bright,

And Brittaines stur with Courage

Clot. Come, there's no more Tribute to be paid: our Kingdome is stronger then it was at that time: and (as I said) there is no mo such Caesars, other of them may haue crook'd Noses, but to owe such strait Armes, none.

Cym. Son, let your Mother end.

Clot. We haue yet many among vs, can gripe as hard as Cassibulan, I doe not say I am one: but I haue a hand.
 Why Tribute? Why should we pay Tribute? If Caesar can hide the Sun from vs with a Blankeet, or put the Moon in his pocket, we will pay him Tribute for light. else Sir, no more Tribute, pray you no n.

Cym. You must know,
 Till the inuious Romans, did extort
 This Tribute from vs, we were free. Caesars Ambition,
 Which swell'd so much, that it did almost stretch
 The sides o' th' World, against all colour heere,
 Did put the yoke vpon s; which to shake off
 Becomes a warlike people, whom we reckon
 Our selues to be, we do. Say then to Caesar,
 Our Ancestor was that Antimius, which Ordin'd our Lawes, whose vie the Sword of Caesar
 Hath too much mangled; whose repaire, and franchise,
 Shall (by the power we hold) be our good deed,
 Tho Rome be therfore angry. Antimius made our lawes
 Who was the first of Brittain, which did put His browes with a golden Crowne, and call'd Himselfe a King.

Luc. I am sorry Cymbeline,
 That I am to pronounce Augustus Caesar
 (Caesar, that hath more Kings his Seruants, then Thy selfe Do. m. sticke Officers) thine Enemy:
 Receyue it from me then. Waite, and Confusion
 In Caesars name pronounce I'gainst thee: Look
 For fury, not to be refild. Thus decide,
 I thanke thee for my selfe.

Cym. Thou art welcome Caesar,
 Thy Caesar Kingdred me; my youth I spent
 Much vnder him: of him, I gather'd Honour,
 Which I e, to seeke of me againe, perforce,
 Behooues me keepe at vnderance. I am perfect,
 That the Pannonians and Dalmatians, for
 Their Liberties are no n in Armes: a President
 Which not to reade, would frow the Brittaines cold
 So Caesar shall not finde them.

Luc. Let proofe speake.

Clot. His Maiesty biddes you welcome. Make pastime with vs, a day, or two or longer. if you seek vs afterwards in other tearmes, you shall finde vs in our Saltwater Girdle: if you beate vs out of it, it is yours: if you fall in the aduenture, our Crowes shall fare the better for you. and there's an end.

Luc. So sir.

Cym. I know your Masters pleasure, and he mine.
 All the Remaine, is welcome. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Pisanio reading of a Letter.

Pis. How? of Adultery? Wherefore write you not What Monst'ers her accuse? Leonatus:
 Oh Master, what a strange infection

Is false into thy care? What false Italian,
(As poisonous tongu'd, as handed) hath prevail'd
On thy too ready hearing? Disloyall? No.
She's punish'd for her Truth, and vndergoes
More Goddesse-like, then Wife-like; such Assaults
As would take in some Vertue. Oh my Master,
Thy mind to her, is now as lowe, as were Thy Fortunes. How? That I should murder her,
Vpon the Loue, and Truth, and Vowes, which I
Haue made to thy command? I her blood?
If it be so, to do good seruice, neuer
Let me be counted seruiceable. How looke I,
That I should see no lacke humanity,
So much as this Fact comes to? Doo it, The Letter.
That I haue sent her, by her owne command,
Shall grow thee opportunitie. Oh damn'd paper,
Blacker as the Inke that's on thee senselesse bauble,
Art thou a Feeder for this Act, and look'st
So Virgin-like without? Lo here she comes.

Enter Imogen

I am ignorant in what I am commanded

Imo. How now Pisanio?

Pis. Ma lam, heere is a Letter from my Lord.

Imo. Who, thy Lord? That is my Lord Leonatus?

Oh, learn'd indeed were that Astronomer
That knew the Starres, as I his Characters,
Heel a lay the Future open. You good Gods,
Let what is neere contain'd, relish of Loue,
Of my Lords health, of his content. yet not
That we two are asunder, let that grieve him,
Some griefes are meaneable, that is one of them,
For it doth physicke Loue, of his content,
All but in that Good Wax, thy leaue blest be
You Bees that make these Lockes of counsaile. Louers,
And men in dangerous Bondes pray not alike,
Through Forfeytours you cast in prison, yet
You claspe yong Cypres Tables good Newes Gods.

If I see, and your Father's wish (should he take me in his Dominion) could not be so cruell to me, as you (oh the deere-rest of Creatures) would then renew me with your eyes. Take not so that I am in Cambria at Milford-Hauen what you owne Loue, will out of this aduise you, follow. So he will see you all happinesse, then returns loyalty to his Pow, and your creature sing in Loue
Leonatus Posthumus.

Oh for a Horse with wings. Hearst thou Pisanio?
He is at Milford-Hauen. Read, and tell me
How farre 'tis thither. If one of meane affaires
May plod it in a weeke, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then true Pisanio,
Who looke'st like me, to see thy Lord, who long'st
(Oh let me bare) but not like me yet long'st
But in a fainter kinde. Oh not like me
For mine's beyond, beyond say, and speake thicke (Loues Counsaile should fill the bores of hearing,
To th' smothering of the Sense) how farre it is
To this same blessed Milford. And by the way
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as I
T'inherit such a Hauen. But first of all,
How we may steale from hence and for the gap
That we shall make in Time, from our hence-going,
And our returne, to excuse but first, how get hence.
Why should excuse be borne ere begot?
Weele talke of that heereafter. Prythee speake,
How many store of Miles may we well rid

Twixt houre, and houre?

Pis. One score 'twixt Sun, and Sun,
Madam's enough for you and too much too

Imo. Why, one that rode to's Execution Man,
Could neuer go so slow. I haue heard of Riding wagers,
Where Horses haue bin number then the Sands
That run i'th' Clocks behalfe. But this is Foolerie,
Go, bid my Woman faine a Sicknesse, say
She'll home to her Father, and prouide me presently
A Riding Suit. No coslier then would fit
A Franklin's Hufwife

Tisa. Madam, you're best consider

Imo. I see before me (Man) nor heere, not heere;
Nor what ensues but haue a Fog in them
That I cannot looke through. Away, I prythee,
Do as I bid thee. There's no more to say
Accessible is none but Milford way.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus

Bel. A good y day not to keepe house with such,
Whole Rookes as leaue as ours. Sleepe Boyes, this gate
Instructs you how to adore the Heauens, and bowes you
To a mornings holy office. The Gates of Monarches
Are Arch'd so high, that Giants may set through
And keepe their impious Turbonds on, without Good merrow to the Sun. Haile thou faire Heauen,
We haue i'th' Rocke, yet vsc it not so hardly
As prouder liues do

Guid. Haile Heauen.

Arvir. Haile Heauen.

Bela. Now for our Mountaine sport, yep to yond hill
Your legges are yong. He tread these Flats. Consider,
When you aboue perceiue me like a Crow,
That it is Place, which lessen's, and sets off,
And you may then reuolue what Tales, I haue told you,
Of Courts, of Princes, of the Tricks in Warre.
This Seruice is not Seruice, so being done,
But being so allowed. To apprehend thus,
Drawes vs a profit from all things we see.
And often to our comfort, shall we finde
The shadow'd Beetle, in a safer hold
Then is the full-wing'd Eagle. Oh this life,
Is Nobler, then attending for a checke
Richer, then doing nothing for a Babe.
Prouder, then rustling in vnpayd-for Silke:
Such gaine the Cap of him, that makes him fine,
Yet keepes his Booke vnscrod. no life to ours.

Guid. Out of your prooue you speak we poore vnstedg'd
Haue neuer wing'd from view o'th' nest, nor knowes not
What Ayre's from home. Hap'ly this life is best,
(If quiet life be best) sweeter to you
That haue a sharper knowne. Well corresponding With your stiffe Age, but vnto vs, it is
A Cell of Ignorance trauiailing a bed,
A Prison, or a Debtor, that not dares
To stride a limit

Arvir. What should we speake of
When we are old as you? When we shall heare
The Rane and vnde beate darke December? How
In this our pinching Cae, shall we discourse

The freezing houres away? We haue seene nothing
We are beastly; subtle as the Fox for prey,
Like warlike as the Wolfe, for what we eate:
Our Valour is to chace what flies. Our Cage
We make a Quire, as doth the prison'd Bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speake;

Did you but know the Citties Vsuries,
And felt them knowingly: the Art o'th' Court,
As hard to leaue, as keepe, whole top to climbe
Is certaine falling or to slippy ry, that
The feare's as bad as falling. The toyle o'th' Warre,
A paine that onely seemes to seeke out danger
I'th' name of Fame, and Honor, which dyes i'th' search,
And hath as oft a stand'rous Epitaph,
As Record of faire Act. Nay, many times
Doth ill deserue, by doing well: what's worse
Must cutt'sie at the Censure. Oh Boyes, this Storie
The World may rederme me: My bodie's mark'd
With Roman Swords; and my report, was once
Fit, with the best of Note. Cymbeline lou'd me,
And when a Souldier was the Theame, my name
Was not farre off: then was I as a Tree
Whose boughes did bend with fruit. But in one night,
A Scorme, or Robbery (call it what you will)
Shooke downe my ruslow hangings: nay my Leaues,
And left me bare to weather.

Gwi. Vncertaine saour.

Bel. My fault being nothing (as I haue told you oft)
But that two Villaines, whole false Oathes preuayl'd
Before my perfect Honor, swore to Cymbeline,
I was Confederate with the Romanes: so
Followed my Banishment, and this twenty yeres,
This Rocks, and these Demesnes, haue bene my World;
Where I haue liu'd at honest freedome, payed
More pious debts to Heauen, then in all
The fure-end of my time. But, vp to th' Mountaines,
This is not Hunters Language; he that strikes
The Venison first, shall be the Lord o'th' east,
To him the other two shall minister,
And we will feare no poyson, which attend's
In place of greater State

Exeunt.

He meete you in the Valleys.
How hard it is to hide the sparkes of Nature?
These Boyes know little they are Sonnes to th' King,
Nor Cymbeline dreames that they are alue.
They thinke they are mine,
And though train'd vp thus meanelly
I'th' Caue, whereon the Bowe their thoughts do hit,
The Roofes of Palaces and Nature prompts them
In simple and lowe things, to Princes it, much
Beyond the trickes of others. This Palador,
The heyre of Cymbeline and Britaine, who
The King his Father call'd Gunderius. Ioue,
When on my threescore: stoole I sit, and tell
The warlike feats, I haue done, his spirits flye out
Into my Story. Iy thus mine Enemy fell,
And thus I set my fonge on's necke, euen then
The Princely blood flowes in his Cheeke, he sweats,
Straines his yong Nerve, and puts himselfe in posture
That acts my words. The yonger Brother Cadwal,
Once Aruragus, in as like a figure
Strikes life into my speech, and shewes much more
His owne conquering. Hearke, the Game is row's'd,
Oh Cymbeline, Heauen and my Conference knowes
Thou didd'st vnjustly banish mee: whereon

At three, and two yeres old, I stole these Babes, Thinking to barre thee of Succession, as
Thou rests me of my Lands. Enurphile,
Thou was't their Nurse, they took thee for their mother,
And euery day do honor to her graue:
My selfe Belarius, that am Morgan call'd Thy take for Naturall Father. The Game is vp. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Pisano and Imogen.

Imo. Thou told'st me when we can e fro horse, yplace
Was neere at hand: Ne're long'd my Mother to
To see me first, as I haue now. Pisano, Man.
Where is Posthumus? What is in thy mind
That makes thee stare thus? Wherefore breaks that sigh
From th'inward of thee? One, but painted thus
Would be interpreted a thing perplex'd
Beyond selfe explanation. Put thy selfe
Into ahaunour of lesse feare, ere wildresse
Vanquish my dayes: Senseles. What's the matter?
Why tenderst thou that Paper to me, with A looke vntender? Is't be Summer Newes
Smile too't before: if Winterly, thou need'st
But keepe that count'nance still. My Hu. bands hand?
That Drug-damn'd Italy, hath ur crazed him,
And hee's at some hard point. Speake man, thy Tongue
May take off some extremitie, which to reade
Would be euen mortall to me.

Pis. Please you reade,
And you shall finde me (wretched man) a thing
The most disdain'd of Fortune

Imogen reades

Thy Mistress (Pisano) hath plaide the Strumpet in my Bed. the Testimonies whereof, lyes bleeding in me I speak not out of weake Surmiser, but from prooue as strong as my griefe, and as certaine as I expect my Reuenge. That part, thou (Pisano) must alke for me, if thy Faith be not tainted with the breach of hers; let thine owne hands take away her life. I shall giue thee opportunity at Mistford Hauen. She hath my Letter for the purpose; where, if thou feare to strike, and to make mee certaine it is done, thou art the Pander to her dishonour, and equally to me dishonour.

Pis. What shall I need to draw my Sword, the Paper
Hath cut her throat already? No, 'tis Slander,
Whose edge is sharper then the Sword, whose tongue
Out-venomes all the Wornes of Nyle, whose breath
Rides on the posting windes, and doth belye
All corners of the World. Kings, Queenes, and States,
Maides, Matrons, nay the Secrets of the Graue
This viperous slander enters. What cheere, Madam?

Imo. False to his Bed? What is it to be false?
To lye in watch there, and to thinke on him?
To weepe 'twixt clock and clock? If sleep charge Nature,
To breake it with a fearfull dreame of him,
And cry my selfe awake? That's false to's bed? Is it?

Pis. Alas good Lady.

Imo. I false? Thy Conscience witnesseth Iachimo,
Thou didd'st accuse him of Incontinencie,
Thou then look'd'st like a Villaine: now, me thinkes

Exit.

Thy fauours good enough. Some say of Italy
(Whose mother was her painting) hath betraid him:
Poore I am stale, a Garment out of fashion,
And for I am richer then to hang by th' wallles.

I must be true: To peeces with me. Oh!
Mens Vowes are womens Traitors. All good seeming
By thy reuolt (oh Husband) shall be thought
Put on for Villainy, not borne where't growes,
But worne a Baite for Ladies.

Pisa. Good Madam, heare me.

Imo. True honest men being heard, like false Aeneas,
Were in his time thought false and Synons weeping
Did scandall many a holy teare: tooke pittie
From most true wretchednesse. So thou, Posthumus
Wilt lay the Leauen on all proper men;
Goodly, and gallant, shall be false and perur'd
From thy great faile. Come Fellow, be thou honest,
Do thou thy Masters bidding. When thou seest him,
A little witness my obedience. Look
I draw the Sword my selfe, take it, and hit
The innocent Mansion of my Loue (my Heart-)
Feare not, 'tis empty of all things, but Greefe:
Thy Master is not there, who was indeede
The riches of it. Do his bidding, strike;
Thou mayst be valiant in a better cause;
But now thou seem'st a Coward.

Pis. Hence vile Instrument,
Thou shalt not darne my hand.

Imo. Why, I must dye.
And if I do not by thy hand, thou art
No Servant of thy Masters. Against selfe-slaughter,
There is a prohibition so Diuine,
That cravens my weak hand. Come, heere's my heart:
Something's a-foot. Soft, soft, wee'l no defence,
Obedient as the Scabbard. What is heere,
The Scriptures of the Loyall Leonatus,
All turn'd to Heresie? Away, away
Corrupters of my Faith, you shall no more
Be Stomachers to my heart: thus may poore Fooles
Believe false Teachers. Though those that are betraid
Do feele the Treason sharply, yet the Traitor
Stands in worse case of woe. And thou Posthumus,
That didd'st set vp my disobedience 'gainst the King
My Father, and makes me put into contempt the suites
Of Princely fellowes, shall heereafter finde
It is no acte of common passage, but
A straine of Rarenesse and I greue my selfe,
To thinke, when thou shalt be disedg'd by her,
That now thou tyrest on, how thy memory
Will then be pang'd by me. Prythee dispatch,
The Lambe entreates the Butcher. Wher's thy knife?
Thou art too slow to do thy Masters bidding
When I desire it too.

Pis. Oh gracious Lady,
Since I receiv'd command to do this businesse,
I have not slept one winke.

Imo. Doo't, and to bed then

Pis. He wake mine eye-balles first.

Imo. Wherefore then

Didd'st undertake it? Why hast thou abus'd
So many Miles, with a pretence? This place?
Mine Action? and thine owne? Our Horses labour?
The Time inviting thee? The perturb'd Court
For my being absent? whereunto I neuer
Purpose returne. Why hast thou gone so farre
To be vn-bent? when thou hast taene thy stand,

Th' electest Deere before thee?

Pis. But to win time
To loose so bad employment, in the which
I haue consider'd of a course: good Ladie
Heare me with patience.

Imo. Take thy tongue weary, speake.
I haue heard I am a Strumpet, and mine eare
Therein false strooke, can take no greater wound,
Nor tent, to bottom that. But speake.

Pis. Then Madam,
I thought you would not backe againe.

Imo. Most like,
Bringing me heere to kill me.

Pis. Not so neither.
But if I were as wise, as honest, then
My purpose would proue well: it cannot be,
But that my Master is abus'd. Some Villaine,
I, and singular in his Art, hath done you both
This curied iniurie

Imo. Some Roman Curtezan?

Pis. No, on my life:
He giue but notice you are dead, and send him
Some bloody signe of it. For 'tis commanded
I should do so: you shall be mist at Court,
And that will well confirme it.

Imo. Why good Fellow,
What shall I do the while? Where bide? How liue?
Or in my life, what comfort, when I am
Dead to my Husband?

Pis. If you'll backe to th' Court.

Imo. No Court, no Father, nor no more adoe
With that harsh, noble, simple nothing:
That Cloten, whose Loue-suite hath bene to me
As fearefull as a Siege

Pis. If not at Court,
Then not in Britaine must you bide.

Imo. Wherethen?
Hath Britaine all the Sunne that shines? Day? Night?
Are they not but in Britaine? I th' worlds Volume
Our Britaine seemes as of it, but not in it.
In a great Poole, a Swannes-nest, prythee thinke
There's liuers out of Britaine.

Pis. I am most glad
You thinke of other place. Th' Ambassador,
Lucius the Romane comes to Milford-Hauen
To morrow. Now, if you could weare a minde
Darke, as your Fortune is, and but disguise
That which t'appare it selfe, must not yet be,
But by selfe-danger, you should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view: yea, happily, neere
The residence of Posthumus, so nee (at least)
That though his Actions were not visible, yet
Report should render him hourly to your eare,
As truly as he moues.

Imo. Oh for such means,
Though perill to my modestie, not death on't
I would adventure.

Pis. Well then, heere's the point:
You must forget to be a Woman: change
Command, into obedience. Feare, and Nicenesse
(The Handmaides of all Women, or more truly Woman it pretty selfe) into a waggish courage,
Ready in gybes, quick-answer'd, lawle, and
As quarrellous as the Weazel. Nay, you must Forget that rarest Treasure of your Cheeke, Expoling it (but oh the harder heart,

Atacke no remedy) to the greedily touch
Of common-kissing Them and forget
Your labourfome and dainty Trimmes, wherein
You made great Iuno angry.

Imo. Nay be breefe?
I see into thy end, and am almost
A man already.

Pis. First, make your selfe but like one,
Fore-thinking this. I have already fit
(Tis in my Cloake-bagge) Doublet, Hat, Hose, all
That answer to them. Would you in their serving,
(And with what imitation you can borrow
From youth of such a season) fore Noble Lucius
Present your selfe, desire his service. tell him
Wherein you're happy; which will make him know,
If that his head have eare in Musicke, doubtlesse
With ioy he will embrace you for heres Honourable,
And doubling that, most holy. Your meanes abroad
You haue me rich, and I will neuer faile
Beginning, nor supplyment.

Imo. Thou art all the comfort
The Gods will diet me with. Prythee away,
There's more to be consider'd - but wee leuen
All that good time vntill que vs This attempt,
I am Souldier too, and will abide it with A Princes Courage. Away, I prythee.

Pis. Well Madam, we must take a short farewell, Least being mist, I be suspected of
Your carriage from the Court. My Noble Mistress,
Heere is a bove, I had it from the Queene,
What's in't is precious. If you are sicke at Sea,
Or Stomacke-qualm'd at Land, a Dramme of this
Will drive away distemper. To some shade,
And sit you to your Manhood, may the Gods
Direct you to the best.

Imo. Amen - I thanke thee.

Exeunt.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Queene, Cloten, Lucius, and Lords.

Cym. Thus fare and so farewell.

Luc. Thankes, Royall Sir

My Emperor hath wrote, I must from hence,
And am right sorry, that I must report ye
My Masters Enemy

Cym. Our Subjects (Sir)
Will not endure his yoke, and for our selfe
To shew lesse Souerignty then they, must needs
Appeare vn-Kinglike.

Luc. So Sir I desire of you
A Conduct ouer Land, to Milford-Hauen.
Madam, all ioy befall your Grace, and you.

Cym. My Lords, you are appointed for that Office:
The due of Honor, in no point omit.
So farewell Noble Lucius.

Luc. Your hand, my Lord

Clot. Receiue it friendly - but from this time forth
I weare it as your Enemy.

Luc. Sir, the Euent

Is yet to name the winner. Fare you well.

Cym. Leave not the worthy Lucius, good my Lords Till he haue crost the Seuern. Happines. Exit Lucius, &c

On. He goes hence frowning: but it honours vs
That we haue giuen him cause

Clot. 'Tis all the better,
Your vallant Brittaines haue their wishes in it.

Cym. Lucius hath wrote already to the Emperor
How it goes heere. It fits vs therefore ripely
Our Chariots, and our Horsemen be in readinesse.
The Powres that he already hath in Gallia
Will soone be drawne to head, from whence he moues
His warre for Brittain.

Qu. Tis not sleepey businesse,
But must be look'd too speedily, and strongly.

Cym. Our expectation that it would be thus Hath made vs forwar'd. But my gentle Queene,
Where is our Daughter? She hath not appear'd
Before the Roman, nor to vs hath tender'd
The duty of the day. She looke vs like
A thing more made of malice, then of duty,
We haue noted it. Call her before vs, for
We haue bene too slight in sufferance

Qu. Royall Sir,
Since the exile of Posthumus, most retyr'd
Hath her life bin. the Cure whereof, my Lord,
'Tis time must do. Beseech your Maiesty,
Forbeare sharpe speeches to her. Shee's a Lady
So tender of rebukes, that words are stroke,,
And strokes death to her.

Enter a Messenger.

Cym. Where is the Sir? How
Can her contempt be answer'd?

Mes. Please you Sir,
Her Chambers are all lock'd, and there's no answer
That will be giuen to th'lowd of noise, we make.

Qu. My Lord, when last I went to visit her,
She pray'd me to excuse her keeping close,
Whereto constrain'd by her infirmities,
She should that dutie leaue vnpaid to you
Which dayly she was bound to proffer: this
She with'd me to make knowne, but our great Court
Made me too blame in memory.

Cym. Her doores lock'd?
Not leene of late? Grant Heauens, that which I
Feare, prove false.

Qu. Sonne I say, follow the King

Clot. That man of hers, Pisanius, her old Seruant
I haue not seene these two dayes. Exit.

Qu. Go, looke after.

Pisanius, thou that stand'st so for Posthumus,
He hath a Drugge of mine I pray, his absence
Proceed by swallowing that. For he beleeueth
It is a thing most precious. But for her,
Where is she gone? Haply dispaire hath seiz'd her:
Or wing'd with seruour of her loue, she's flowne
To her desir'd Posthumus: gone she is,
To death, or to dishonor, and my end
Can make good vse of either. Shee being downe,
I haue the placing of the Brittain Crowne.

Enter Cloten.

How now, my Sonne?

Clot. 'Tis certaine she is fled:
Go in and cheere the King, he rages, none
Dare come about him.

Qu. All the better: may

This night fore-stall him of the coming day. Exit Qu

Clot. I loue, and hate her: for she's Faire and Royall,
And that she hath all courtly parts more exquisite Then

Then Lady, Ladies, Woman, from euery one
The best she hath, and she of all compounded
Out-selles them all. I loue her therefore, but Disdaining my paine throwing Fauours on
The low Posthumus, slanders to her iudgement,
That what's else rate, as choak'd and in that point
I will conclude to hate her, nay indecar,
To be reueng'd vpon her. For, when Fooles shall—

Enter Pisanio.

Who is heere? What, are you packing sirrah?
Come hither. Ah you precious Pandar, Villaine,
Where's thy Lady? In a wood, or else
Thou art straightway with the Fiends

Pis. Oh, good my Lord.

Clo. Where's thy Lady? O, hy Iupiter,
I will not aske againe. Clothe Villaine,
He haue this Secret from thy heart, or tip
Thy heart to finde it. Is she with Posthumus?
From whose so many waights of basenesse, cannot
A dram of worth be drawne.

Pis. Alas, my Lord,
How can she be with him? When was she mis'd?
He is in Rome

Clo. Where is she Sir? Come neerer.
No farther halting. satisfie me home,
What is become of her?

Pis. Oh, my all-worthy Lord.

Clo. All-worthy Villaine,
Disceuer where thy Mistis is, at once,
At the next word no more of worthy Lord.
Speake, or thy silence on the instant, is Thy condemnation, and thy death.

Pis. Then Sir.

This Paper is the historie of my knowledge
Touching her flight.

Clo. Let's see't. I will pursue her Euen to Augustus Throne

Pis. Or this, or perish,
She's farre enough, and what he learns by this,
May proue his trauell, not her danger.

Clo. Humh

Pis. He write to my Lord she's dead. Oh Imogen, Safe mayst thou wander, safe returne agen

Clo. Sirra, is this Letter true?

Pis. Sir, as I thinke.

Clo. It is Posthumus hand, I know't. Sirrah, if thou would'st not be a Villain, but do me true seruice vnder-go those Employments wherein I should haue cause to vse thee with a serious industry, that is, what villany soere I bid thee do to performe it, directly and truly, I would thinke thee an honest man. thou should'st neither want my meanes for thy releefe, nor my voyce for thy preferment.

Pis. Well, my good Lord.

Clo. Wilt thou serue mee? For since patiently and constantly thou hast stucke to the bare Fortune of that Begger Posthumus, thou canst not in the course of grate-tude, but be a diligent follower of mine. Wilt thou serue
mee?

Pis. Sir, I will.

Clo. Give mee thy hand, heere's my purse. Hast any of thy late Masters Garments in thy possession?

Pisan. I haue (my Lord) at my Lodging, the same Suite he wore, when he tooke leaue of my Ladie & Mis-tresse.

Clo. The first seruice thou dost mee, fetch that Suite hither, let it be thy first seruice, go.

Pis. I shall my Lord.

Exit.

Clo. Meet thee at Milford Hauens: (I forgot to aske him one thing, He remember't anon) euen there, thou villaine Posthumus will I kill thee. I would these Garments were come. She saide vpon a time (the bitteresse of it, I now belch from my heart) that shee held the very Garment of Posthumus, in more respect, then my Noble and naturall person; together with the adornement of my Qualities. With that Suite vpon my backe wil I ra-uish her: first kill him, and in her eyes; there shall she see my valour, which wil then be a torment to hir contempt.
He on the ground, my speech of insultment ended on his dead bodie, and when my Lust hath dined (which, as I say, to vex her, I will execute in the Cloathes that she prais'd) to the Court He knock her backe, foot her home again. She hath despis'd mee reioycingly, and He bee merry in my Reuenge

Enter Pisanio.

Bethowe the Garments?

Pis. I, my Noble Lord.

Clo. How long is't since she went to Milford-Hauen?

Pis. She can scarce be there yet

Clo. Bring this Apparell to my Chamber, that is the second thing that I haue commanded thee. The third is, that thou wilt be a voluntarie Mute to my designe. Be but dutious, and true preferment shall tender it selfe to thee. My Reuenge is now at Milford, would I had wings to follow it. Come, and be true.

Exit.

Pis. Thou bid'st me to my losse for true to thee,
Were to proue false, which I will neuer be
To him that is most true. To Milford go,
And finde not her, whom thou pursuest. Flow, flow
You Heavenly blessings on her. This Fooles speede
Be crost with slownesse, Labour be his mercede.

Exit.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Imogen alone.

Imo. I see a mans life is a tedious one,
I haue ty'd my selfe and for two nights together
Haue made the ground my bed. I should be sicke,
But that my resolution helps me. Milford,
When from the Mountaine top, Pisanio shew'd thee,
Thou wast within a Kenne. Oh Ioue, I thinke
Foundations flye the wretched such I meane,
Where they should be releu'd. Two Beggars told me,
I could not misse my way. Will poore Folkes lye
That haue Afflictions on them, knowing 'tis
A punishment, or Triall? Yes; no wonder,
When Rich-ones scarce tell true. To lapse in Fulsnesse
Is sorer, then to lye for Neede and Falshood
Is worse in Kings, then Beggars. My deere Lord,
Thou art one o' th' false Ones. Now I thinke on thee,
My hunger's gone; but euen before, I was
At point to sinke, for Food. But what is this?
Heere is a path too't: 'tis some sauge hold:
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet Famine
Ere cleane it o'te-throw Nature, makes it valiant.
Plentie, and Peace breeds Cowards: Hardnesse euer
Of Hardnesse is Mother. Hoo? who's heere?
If any thing that's cunill, speake. I sauge,

Take,

that made the Taylor, not be fit too? The rather (saying reuerence of the Word) for 'tis saide a Womans fittesse comes by fits: therein I must play the Workman, I date speake it to my selfe, for it is not Vainglorie for a man, and his Glasse, to confer in his owne Chamber; I meane, the Lines of my body are as well drawne as his; no lesse young, more strong, not beneath him in Fortunes, beyond him in the aduantage of the time, aboue him in Birth, alike conuersant in generall seruices, and more remarkeable in single oppositions; yet this imperseuerant
Thing loues him in my despight. What Mortalitie is?
Posthumus, thy head (which now is growing vpon thy shoulders) shall within this houre be off, thy Mistis inforced, thy Garments cut to peeces before thy face. and all this done, spurne her home to her Father, who may (happily) be a little angry for my so rough vsage: but my Mother hauing power of his restinesse, shall turne all into ray commendations. My Horse is tyed vp safe, out Sword, and to a fore purpose Fortune put them into my hand: This is the very description of their meeting place and the Fellow dares not deceiue me. Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, and Imogen from the Cae.

Bel. You are not well. Remaine heere in the Cae, Wee'l come to you after Hunting.

Arvi. Brother, stay heere.
Are we not Brothers?

Imo. So man and man should be,
But Clay and Clay, differs in dignitie,
Whose dust is both alike. I am very sicke,

Gwi. Go you to Hunting, Ile abide with him.

Imo. So sicke I am not, yet I am not well:
But not so Citizen a wanton, as
To seeme to dye, ere sicke. So please you, leaue me,
Stricke to your Iournall course: the breach of Custome,
Is breach of all. I am ill, but your being by me
Cannot amend me. Society, is no comfort
To one not sociable. I am not very sicke,
Since I can reason of it: pray you trust me heere,
Ile rob none but my selfe, and let me dye
Stealing so poorly.

Gwi. I loue thee. I haue spoke it,
How much the quantity, the waight as much,
As I do loue my Father.

Bel. What? How? how?

Arvi. If it be sinne to say so (Sir) I yoake mee
In my good Brothers fault. I know not why
I loue this youth, and I haue heard you say,
Loue's reason's, without reason. The Beere at doore,
And a demand who is't shall dye, I'd say]
My Father, not this youth.

Bel. Oh noble straine!
O worthinesse of Nature, breed of Greatnesse!
"Cowards father Cowards, & Base things Syre Base;
"Nature hath Meale, and Bran; Contempt, and Grace.
I'me not their Father, yet who this should bee,
Deeth myracle it selfe, Iou'd before mee.
'Tis the ninth houre o'th' Morne.

Arvi. Brother, farewell.

Imo. I wish ye sport.

Arvi. You health. ——— So please you Sir.

Imo. These are kinde Creatures.

Gods, what lyes I haue heard:
Our Courtiers say, all's sauage, but at Court;
Experience, oh thou disprou'it Report.
Th'empierous Seas breeds Monsters; for the Dish,
Poore Tributary Riuer, as sweet Fish.
I am sicke full, heart-sicke; Pisano,
Ile now taste of thy Drugges.

Gwi. I could not stirre him:

He said he was gentle, but vnfortunate;
Dishonestly afflicted, but yet honest

Arvi. Thus did he answer me: yet said heereafter,
I might know more.

Bel. To'th' Field, to'th' Field.

Wee'l leaue you for this time, go in, and rest.

Arvi. Wee'l not be long away.

Bel. Pray be not sicke,
For you must be our Huswife

Imo. Well, or ill,

I am bound to you.

Exit.

Bel. And shal't be euer,

This youth, how ere distressed, appeares he hath had Good Ancestors.

Arvi. How Angell-like he sings?

Gwi. But his neate Cookerie?

Arvi. He cut our Rootes in Characters,
And sawc't our Brothers, as Imo had bin sicke,
And he her Dieter.

Arvi. Nobly he yoakes

A smiling, with a sigh; as if the sigh
Was that it was, for not being such a Smile:
The Smile, mocking the Sigh, that it would flye
From so diuine a Temple, to commix
With windes, that Saylor's raile at.

Gwi. I do note,

That greefe and patience rooted in them both,
Mingle their spures together.

Arvi. Grow patient,

And let the stinking-Elder (Greefe) vntwine
His perishing roote, with the encreasing Vine.

Bel. It is great morning. Come away: Who's there?

Enter Cloten.

Clo. I cannot finde those Runnagates, that Villaine
Hath mock'd me. I am faint.

Bel. Those Runnagates?

Meanes he not vs? I partly know him, 'tis
Cloten, the Sonne o'th' Queene. I feare some Ambush
I saw him not these many yeares, and yet
I know 'tis he. We are held as Out-Lawes: Hence.

Gwi. He is but one. you, and my Brother search
What Companies are neere: pray you away,
Let me alone with him.

Clo. Soft, what are you

That flye me thus? Some villaine-Mountainers?
I haue heard of such. What Slaue art thou?

Gwi. A thing!

More slavish did I ne're, then answering
A Slaue without a knocke.

Clo. Thou art a Robber,

A Law-breaker, a Villaine: yeeld thee Theefe?

Gwi. To who? to thee? What art thou? Haue not I
An arme as bigge as thine? A heart, as bigge:
Thy words I grant are bigger: for I weare not
My Dagger in my mouth. Say what thou art:

Why

Why I should yeeld to thee?

Clot. Thou Villaine base,
Know'st me not by my Cloathes?

Gus. No, nor thy Taylor, Rascall.
Who is thy Grandfather? He made those cloathes,
Which (as it seemes) make thee

Clot. Thou precious Varlet,
My Taylor made them not

Gus. Hence then, and thanke
The man that gaue them thee. Thou art some Foole,
I am loath to beate thee.

Clot. Th' uniuersus Theefe,
Heare but my name, and tremble.

Gus. What's thy name?

Clot. Cloten, thou Villaine

Gus. Cloten, thou double Villaine be thy name,
I cannot tremble at it, were it Toad, or Adder, Spider,
'Twould moue me sooner

Clot. To thy further feare,
Nay, to thy meere Confusion, thou shalt know
I am Sonne to th' Queene.

Gus. I am sorry for't: not seeming
So worthy as thy Birth.

Clot. Art not afraid?

Gus. Those that I reuerence, those I feare: the Wise
At Fooles I laugh: not feare them.

Clot. Dye the death:
When I haue slaine thee with my proper hand,
Ile follow those that euen now fled hence:
And on the Gates of Luds-Towne set your heads
Yeeld Rusticke Mountaineer. Fight and Exeunt.

Enter Belarius and Arviragus.

Bel. No Companie's abroad?

Arus. None in the world: you did mistake him sure.

Bel. I cannot tell: Long is it since I saw him,
But Time hath nothing blurr'd those lines of Favour
Which then he wore: the snatches in his voice,
And burst of speaking were as his: I am absolute
'Twas very Cloten

Arus. In this place we left them;
I wish my Brother make good time with him,
You say he is so fell.

Bel. Being scarse made vp,
I meane to man; he had nor apprehension
Of roaring terrors: For defect of iudgement
Is oft the cause of Feare.

Enter Guiderius.

But see thy Brother

Gus. This Cloten was a Foole, in empty purse,
There was no money in't: Not Hercules
Could haue knock'd out his Braines, for he had none:
Yet I not doing this, the Foole had borne
My head, as I do this

Bel. What hast thou done?

Gus. I am perfect whar: cut off one Clotens head,
Sonne to the Queene (after his owne report)
Who call'd me rascall, Mountaineer, and swore
With his owne single hand hee'd take vs in,
Displace our heads: where (thanks the Gods) they grow
And set them on Luds Towne.

Bel. We are all vndone.

Gus. Why, worthy Father, what haue we to loose,
But that he swore to take, our Liues? the Law
Protects not vs, then why should we be tender
To let an arrogant peece of flesh threat vs?
Play Iudge, and Executioner, all himselfe?

For we do feare the Law. What company
Discouer you abroad?

Bel. No single soule

Can we set eye on: but in all safe reason
He must haue some Attendants. Though his Honor
Was nothing but mutation, I, and that
From one bad thing to worse: Not Frenzie,
Not absolute madnesse could so farre haue rau'd
To bring him here alone: although perhaps
It may be heard at Court, that such as wee
Caue heere, hunt heere, are Out-lawes, and in time
May make some stronger head, the which he hearing,
(As it is like him) might breake out, and sweare
Hee'd fetch vs in, yet is't not probable
To come alone, either he so vndertaking,
Or they so suffering: then on good ground we feare.
If we do feare this Body hath a taile
More perillous then the head.

Arus. Let Ord'nance

Come as the Gods fore-say it: howsoere,
My Brother hath done well.

Bel. I had no minde

To hunt this day: The Boy Fidels sickenesse
Did make my way long forth.

Gus. With his owne Sword,
Which he did waue against my throat, I haue tane
His head from him: Ile throw't into the Creeke
Behinde our Rocke, and let it to the Sea,
And tell the Fishes, hee's the Queenes Sonne, Cloten, That's all I reake. Exit.

Bel. I feare 'twill be reueng'd.

Would (Polidore) thou had'st not done't: though valour
Becomes thee well enough.

Arus. Would I had done't:

So the Reuenge alone pursu'd me: Polidore
I loue thee brotherly, but enuy much
Thou hast robb'd me of this deed: I would Reuenges
That possible strength might meet, wold seek vs through
And put vs to our answer.

Bel. Well, tis done:

Wee'l hunt no more to day, nor seeke for danger
Where there's no profit. I prythee to our Rocke,
You and Fidels play the Cookes: Ile stay
Till hafty Polidore returne, and bring him
To dinner presently.

Arus. Poore sicke Fidels.

Ile willingly to him, to gaine his colour,
I'd let a parish of such Clotens blood,
And praise my selfe for charity. Exit.

Bel. Oh thou Goddesse,

Thou diuine Nature; thou thy selfe thou blazon't
In these two Princely Boyes: they are as gentle
As Zephires blowing below the Violet;
Not wagging his sweet head; and yet, as rough
(Their Royall blood enchas'd) as the rud'st winde,
That by the top doth take the Mountaine Pine,
And make him stoop to th' Vale. 'Tis wonder
That an insensible instinct should frame them
To Royalty vnlearn'd, Honor vntaught,
Ciuility not scene from other: valour
That wildely growes in them, but yeelds a crop
As if it had beene sow'd: yet still it's strange
What Clotens being heere to vs portends,
Or what his death will bring vs.

Enter Guiderius.

Gus. Where's my Brother?

I have sent Cloten Clot-pole downe the streame,
In Embassage to his Mother; his Bodie's hostage
For his returne

Solemn Musick

Bel. My ingenuous Instrument,
(Hearke Polidore) it sounds: but what occasion
Hath Cadwall now to give it motion? Hearke.

Gwi. Is he at home?

Bel. He went hence even now.

Gwi. What does he mean?

Since death of my dear'st Mother
It did not speake before. All solemn things
Should answer solemn Accidents. The matter?
Triumphes for nothing, an lamenting Soyes,
Isollity for Apes, and greefe for Boyes.
Is Cadwall mad?

Enter Arviragus, with Imogen dead, bearing her in his Armes

Bel. Looke, heere he comes,
And brings the dire occasion in his Armes,
Of what we blame him for.

Arvi. The Bird is dead
That we have made so much on. I had rather
Have it slip from sixteen yeares of Age, to sixty.
To have turn'd my leaping time into a Crutch,
Then have scene this.

Gwi. Oh fairest, sayrest Lilly.
My Brother weares thee not the one halfe so well,
As when thou grewst thy selfe.

Bel. Oh Melancholly,
Who euer yet could sound thy bottomie? Finde
The Ooze, to shew what Coast thy sluggish care
Might'st easiest harbour in. Thou bledd thing,
Ioue knowes what man thou might'st have made. But I,
Thou dyedst a most rare Boy, of Melancholly
I now found you him.

Arvi. Starte, as you see.
Thus smiling, as some lily had tumbled slumber,
Not as death's dart being laugh'd at. his right Cheeke
Reposing on a Cushion.

Gwi. Where?

Arvi. Oh'still
His armes thus leagu'd, I thought he slept, and put
My clowd'd Brogiue from off my feete, whose rudenesse
Answer'd my steps too lowd

Gwi. Why, he but sleeps
If he be gone, hee I make his Graue, a Bed
With semel ayries will his Tombe be haunted,
And Wormes will not come to thee.

Arvi. With sayrest Flower,
What'st Sommer harts, and I live heere, I dele,
He sweeten thy sad graue. thou shalt not lacke
The Flower that's like thy face. Pale-Primrose, nor
The azur'd Hare-bell, like thy Veines no, nor
The leafe of Eglantine, whom nor to slander,
Out-sweetened not thy breath. The Raddocke would
With Chantable bill (Oh bill fore shaming)
Those rich-left heyres, that let their Father's lyce
Without a Monument bring thee all this,
Yea, and furr'd Mosse besides. When Flowers are none
To winter-ground thy Coarse

Gwi. Prythee haue done,
And do not play in Wench-like words with that
Which is so sericue. Let vs bury him,
And not protract with admiration, what
Is now due debt To'th grave.

Arvi. Say, where shall'st lay him?

Gwi. By good Eurphile, our Mother.

Arvi. Bee't so:

And let vs (Polidore) though now our voyces
Haue got the mannish cracke, sing him to th'ground
As once to our Mother. I scilke note, and words,
Saue that Eurphile, must be Fidelle.

Gwi. Cadwall,

I cannot sing. He weepe, and word it with thee;
For Notes of sorrow, out of tune, are worse
Then Priests, and Phaines that lye.

Arvi. We'll speake it then.

Bel. Great greifes I see medicine the lesse: For Cloten
Is quite forgot. He was a Queenes Sonne, Boyes,
And though he came our Enemy remember
He was paid for that though meane, and mighty rotting
Together haue one dust, yet Reuerence
(That Angell of the world) doth make distinction
Of place twene high and low. Our Foe was Princely,
And though you took his life, as being our Foe,
Yet bury him, as a Prince.

Gwi. Pray you fetch him hither,
Ther's his body is as good as Arvi,
When neyther are alieue

Arvi. If you'll go fetch him,
We'll say our Song the while: Brother begin.

Gwi. Nay Cadwall, we must lye his head to th' East,
My fatter hath a reason for't.

Arvi. 'Tis true.

Gwi. Come on then, and remoue him.

Arvi. So, begin.

SONG

Guid. Feare no more the heate o'th Sun,
Nor the fierous flinders rages,
Thou thy worldly task hast done,
Howe art gone, and tane thy wages
Golder Lads, and Girles all must,
As Chimney-Sweepers come to dust.

Arvi. Feare no more the frowne o'th Great,
Thou art past the Terrors stroke,
Care is no more to clouth and eate,
To thee the Rinde is as the Oake.

The Scepter, Learning, Physicke must,
All follow this as I come to dust.

Guid. Feare no more the Lights ire flash.

Arvi. Nor th' all-dreaded Thunder-fine.

Gwi. Feare no Slander, Censure rash.

Arvi. Thou hast finish'd loy and rone

Both. All Loers young all Louers must,

Lo signe to thee and come to dust.

Guid. No Exercise I arme thee,

Arvi. Nor narrow, crasse charme thee.

Guid. Ghest'st thou for care thee.

Arvi. Nothing sicome care thee

Both. Quiet censure thou take,

As I come to dust thee grave.

Enter Belarius with the body of Cloten.

Gwi. We haue done our obsequies:

Come lay him downe.

Bel. Heere's a few Flowers, but 'bout midnight more:
The hearbes that haue on them cold dew o'th night
Are strewings fit for Graues vpon their Faces.
You were as Flowers, now vnder their dewen so
These Herbelets shall, which we vpon you strew.
Come on, away, apart vpon our needs:
The ground that gave them first, ha's them againe:
Their pleasures here are past, so are their paine.

Imogen awakes.

Yes Sir, to Milford-Hauen, which is the way?
 I thanke you, by yond bush pray how farre thether?
 Ods putt i'kin's: can it be fixe mile yet?
 I haue gone all night: Faith, Ile lye downe, and sleepe.
 But soft; no Bedfellow? Oh Gods, and Goddesses!
 These Flowres are like the pleasures of the World;
 This bloody man the care on't. I hope I dreame:
 For so I thought I was a Caue-keeper,
 And Cooke to honest Creatures. But 'tis nor so:
 'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,
 Which the Brame makes of Fumes. Our very eyes,
 Are sometimes like our Iudgements, blinde. Good faith
 I tremble still with feare: but if there be
 Yet left in Heauen, as small a drop of pittie
 As a Wrens eye; fear'd Gods, a part of it.
 The Dreame's heere still. euen when I wake it is Without me, as within me. not imagin'd, felt.
 A headlesse man? The Garments of Posthumus?
 I know the shape of's Legge: this is his Hand:
 His Foote Mercuriall. his martiall Thigh
 The brawnes of Hercules but his louall face——
 Murther in heauen? How? 'tis gone. Pisano,
 All Curses madded Hecuba gaue the Greekes,
 And mine to boot, be dartsed on thee: thou
 Conspir'd with that Irregulous diuell Cloten,
 Hath heere cut off my Lord. To write, and read,
 Be henceforth treacherous. Damn'd Pisano,
 Hath with his forged Letters (damn'd Pisano)
 From this most brauest vessell of the world
 Strooke the maine top! Oh Posthumus, alas,
 Where is thy head? where's that? Aye me! where's that?
Pisano might haue kill'd thee at the heart,
 And left this head on. How should this be, Pisano?
 'Tis he, and Cloten: Malice, and Lucre in them
 Haue laid this Woe heere. Oh 'tis pregnant, pregnant!
 The Drugg he gaue me, which hee said was precious
 And Cordiall to me, haue I not found it
 Murd'rous to th' Senses? That confirms it home:
 This is Pisano's deede, and Cloten: Oh!
 Giue colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
 That we the horridr may seeme to thole
 Which chance to finde vs. Oh, my Lord! my Lord!

Enter Lucius, Capitaines, and a Soothsayer.

Cap. To them, the Legions garrison'd in Gallia
 After your will, haue crost the Sea, attending
 You heere at Milford-Hauen, with your Shippes:
 They are heere in readinesse.

Luc. But what from Rome?

Cap. The Senate hath stirr'd vp the Consiuers,
 And Gentlemen of Italy, most willing Spirits,
 That promise Noble Service: and they come
 Vnder the Conduct of bold Iachimo,
Syennas Brother.

Luc. When expect you them?

Cap. With the next benefit o'th'winde.

Luc. This forwardnesse

Makes dur hopes faire. Command our present numbers
 Be muster'd: bid the Capitaines looke too't. Now Sir,
 What haue you dream'd of late of this warres purpose.

Sooths. Last night, the very Gods shew'd me a vision
 (I fast, and pray'd for their Intelligence) thus:
 I saw Iques Bird, the Roman Eagle wing'd
 From the spungy South, to this part of the West,
 There vanish'd in the Sun beames, which portends
 (Vnlesse my sinnes abuse my Diuination)

Success to th' Roman host.

Luc. Dreame often so,
 And neuer false. Soft ho, what truncke is heere?
 Without his top? The ruine speakes, that sometime
 It was a wort hy building. How? a Page?
 Or dead, or sleeping on him? But dead rather:
 For Nature doth abhorre to make his bed
 With the defunct, or sleepe vpon the dead.
 Let's see the Boyes face.

Cap. Hee's aloue my Lord.

Luc. Hee'l then instruct vs of this body: Young one,
 Informe vs of thy Fortunes, for it seemes
 They craue to be demanded. who is this Thou mak'st thy bloody Pillow? Or who was he
 That (otherwise then noble Nature did)
 Hath alter'd that good Picture? What's thy interest
 In this sad wracke? How came't? Who is't?
 What art thou?

Imo. I am nothing; or if not,
 Nothing to be were better: This was my Master,
 A very valiant Britaine, and a good,
 That heere by Mountaineers eyes slaine. Alas,
 There is no more such Masters: I may wander
 From East to Occident, cry out for Service,
 Try many, all good: serue truly. neuer
 Finde such another Master.

Luc. 'Lacke, good youth:
 Thou mou'st no lesse with thy complaining, then
 Thy Maister in bleeding: say his name, good Friend.

Imo. Richard du Champ: if I do lye, and do
 No harme by it, though the Gods heere, I hope
 They'l pardon it. Say you Sir?

Luc. Thy name?

Imo. Fidele Sir.

Luc. Thou doo'st approue thy selfe the very same:
 Thy Name well fits thy Faith; thy Faith, thy Name:
 Wilt take thy chance with me? I will not say
 Thou shalt be so well master'd, but be sure
 No lesse belou'd. The Romane Emperors Letters
 Sent by a Consull to me, should not sooner
 Then thine owne worth preferre thee. Go with me.

Imo. Ile follow Sir. But first, and't please the Gods,
 Ile hide my Master from the Flies, as deepe
 As these poore Pickaxes can digge and when
 With wild wood-leaues & weeds, I ha' strew'd his graue
 And on it said a Century of prayers
 (Such as I can) twice o're, Ile weepe, and sigh,
 And leaving so his seruice, follow you,
 So please you entertaine mee.

Luc. I good youth,
 And rather Father thee, then Master thee: My Friends,
 The Boy hath taught vs manly duties: Let vs
 Finde out the prettiest Dazied-Plot we can,
 And make him with our Pikes and Partizans
 A Graue: Come, Arrie him: Boy hee's preferr'd
 By thee, to vs, and he shall be interr'd
 As Souldiers can. Be cheerefull; wipe thine eyes,
 Some Falles are meanes the happier to arise. Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Cymbelino, Lords, and Pisano.

Cym. Again: and bring me word how 'tis with her,
 A Feauour with the absence of her Sonne;

A madnesse, of which her life's in danger. Heavens,
How deeply you at once do touch me. Imogen,
The great part of my comfort, gone: My Queene
Vpon a despera e bed, and in a time
When fearefull Warres point at me Her Sonne gone,
So needfull for this present? It strikes me, past
The hope of comfort But for thee, Fellow,
Who needs must know of her departure, and Dost seeme to ignorant, wee'l enforce it from thee
By a sharpe Torture.

Pis. Sir, my life is yours,
I humbly set it at your will But for my Mistis,
I nothing know where she remaines. why gone,
Nor when she purposes returne. Beseech your Highnes,
Hold me your loyall Seruant.

Lord. Good my Liege,
The day that she was missing, he was heere;
I dare be bound hee's true, and shall performe
All parts of his subiection loyally For Cloten,
There wants no diligence in seeking him,
And will no doubt be found;

Cym. The time is troublesome
Wee'l slip you for a season, but our iealousie
Do's yet depend,

Lord. So please your Majesty,
The Romaine Legions, all from Gallia drawne,
Are landed on your Coast, with a supply
Of Romaine Gentlemen, by the Senare sent.

Cym. Now for the Counsaile of my Son and Queene,
I am amaz'd with matter.

Lord. Good my Liege,
Your preparation can affront no lesse (ready
Then what you heare of. Come more, for more you're
The want is, but to put those Powres in motion,
That long to moue.

Cym. I thanke you. let's withdraw
And meete the Time, as it seeks vs. We feare not What can from Italy annoy vs, but
We greeue at chanches heere Away. Exeunt

Pisa. I heard no Letter from my Master, since
I wrote him Imogen was slaine. 'Tis strange.
Nor heare I from my Mistis, who did promise
To yeeld me often tydings Neither know I
What is betide to Cloten, but remaine
Perplex in all. The Heavens still must worke
Wherein I am false, I am honest not true, to be true.
These present warres shall finde I loue my Country,
Euen to the note e'th' King, or Ile fall in them:
All other doubts, by time let them be cleer'd,
Fortune brings in some Boats, that are not steer'd. Exit.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, & Arviragus

Gui. The noy se is round about vs.

Bel. Let vs from it.

Arui. What pleasure Sir, we finde in life, to locke it
From Action, and Adventure.

Gui. Nay, what hope
Haue we in hiding vs? This way the Romaines
Must, or for Britaines slay vs or receiue vs
For barbarous and vnnatural Reuolts
During their vs, and slay vs after.

Bel. Sonnes,
Wee'l higher to the Mountaines, there secure v..
To the Kings party there's no going: newnesse
Of Cloten's death (we being not knowne, nor must'r'd Among the Bands) may drue vs to a render
Where we haue liu'd; and so extort from's that
Which we haue done, whose answer would be death
Drawne on with Torture.

Gui. This is (Sir) a doubt
In such a time, nothing becomming you,
Nor satisfying vs.

Arui. It is not likely,
That when they heare their Roman horses neigh,
Behold their quarter'd Fires; haue both their eyes
And eares so cloyd importantly as now,
That they will waste their time vpon our note,
To know from whence we are.

Bel. Oh, I am knowne
Of many in the Army Many yeeres
(Though Cloten then but young) you see, not wore him
From my remembrance. And besides, the King
Hath not deseru'd my Seruice, nor your Loues,
Who finde in my Exile, the want of Breeding;
The certainty of this heard life, aye hopelesse
To haue the courtesie your Cradle promis'd,
But to be still hot Summers Tanlings, and
The shrinking Slaues of Winter.

Gui. Then beso,
Better to cease to be. Pray Sir, to th' Army:
I, and my Brother are not knowne; your selfe
So out of thought, and thereto so ore-growne,
Cannot be question'd.

Arui. By this Sunne that shines
He thither What thing is't, that I neuer
Did see man dye, scarce euer look'd on blood,
But that of Coward Hares, hot Goats, and Venison?
Neuer bestrid a Horse saue one, that had
A Rider like my selfe, who ne're wore Rowell,
Nor Iron on his heele? I am asham'd
To looke vpon the holy Sunne, to haue
The benefite of his blest Beames, remaining
So long a poore vnknowne.

Gui. By heauens Ile go,
If you will blesse me Sir, and giue me leaue,
Ile take the better care - but if you will not,
The hazard therefore due fall on me, by
The hands of Romaines.

Arui. So say I, Amen.

Bel. No reason I (since of your liues you set
So slight a ualeuation) should referue
My crack'd one to more care. Haue with you Boyes
If in your Country warres you chance to dye,
That is my Bed too (Lads) and there Ile lye.
Lead, lead, the time seems long, their blood thinks scorn
Till it flye out, and shew them Princes borne. Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Posthumus alone.

Post. Yea bloody cloth, Ile keep thee: for I am with Thou shouldst be colour'd thus. You married ones,
If each of you should take this course, how many Must murder Wiues much better then themselves

bbb 2

For

For wrying but a little? Oh Pisano,
 Eucry good Seruant do's not all Commands:
 No Bond, but to do iust ones. Gods, if you
 Should haue 'rane vengeance on my faults, I neuer
 Had liu'd to put on this. so had you faued
 The noble Imogen, to repent, and strooke
 Me (wretch) more worth your Vengeance. But alacke,
 You snatch some hence for little faults; thar's loue
 To haue them fall no more. you some permit
 To second illes with illes, each elder worse,
 And make them dread it, to the dooers thrife.
 But Imogen is your owne, do your best willes,
 And make me blest to obey. I am brought hither
 Among th'Italian Gentry, and to fight Against my Ladies Kingdome. 'Tis enough
 That (Britaine) I haue kill'd thy Mistress. Peace,
 Ile giue no wound to thee therefore good Heauens,
 Heare patiently my purpose. Ile disrobe me
 Of these Italian weedes, and sune my selfe
 As do's a Britaine Pezant. so Ile fight
 Against the part I come with. so Ile dye
 For thee (O Imogen) euer for whom my life
 Is eury breath, a death? and thus, vnknowne,
 Pictied, nor hated, to the face of perill -
 My selfe Ile dedicate. Let me make men know
 More valour in me, then my habits show
 Gods, put the strength o'th' Leonats in me.
 To shame the guize o'th' world, I will begin,
 The fashion lesse without, and more within.

Exit.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and the Romane Army at one doore - and the Britaine Army at another Leonatus Posthumus following like a poore Scildier. They march ouer, and goe out. Then enter againe in Skyrnish Iachimo and Posthu- mus he vanquisheth and disarmeth Iachimo, and then leaues him.

Iac The heauennesse and guilt within my bosome,
 Takes off my manhood I haue belyed a Lady,
 The Princessse of this Country; and the ayre on't
 Reuengingly enfeebles me, or could this Carle,
 A very drudge of Natures, haue subdu'de me
 In my profession? Knighthoods, and Honors borne
 As I weare mine) are titles but of scorne.
 If that thy Gentry (Britaine) go before
 This Lowt, as he exceeds our Lords, the oddes
 Is, that we scarfe are men, and you are Goddes. Exit

The Battaille continues, the Britaines fly, Cymbeline is taken. Then enter to his rescue, Belarius, Guiderius, and Ariragus.

Bel Stand, stand, we haue th'advantage of the ground,
 The Lane is guarded. Nothing rowts vs, but
 The villany of our feares.

Gm. Aris. Stand, stand, and fight.

Enter Posthumus, and seconds the Britaines. They Rescue
Cymbeline, and Exeunt.

Then enter Lucius, Iachimo, and Imogen

Luc. Away boy from the Troopes, and saue thy selfe:
 For friends kil friends, and the disorder's such

As warre were hood-wink'd.

Iac. 'Tis their fresh supplies.

Luc. It is a day turn'd strangely: or betimes
 Let's re-inforce, or fly.

Exeunt

Scena Tertia.

Enter Posthumus, and a Britaine Lord.

Lor. Cam'st thou from where they made the stand?

Post. I did,

Though you it seemes come from the Fliers?

Lor. I did,

Post. No blame be to you Sir, for all was lost,
 But that the Heauens fought: the King himselfe
 Of his wings destitute, the Army broken,
 And but the backs of Britaines seene; all flying
 Through a strait Lane, the Enemy full-hearted,
 Lolling the Tongue with slaught'ring: hauing worke
 More pientifull, then Tooles to doo't: strooke downe
 Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling
 Meerely through feare, that the strait passe was damm'd
 With deadmen, hurt behinds, and Cowards liuing
 To dye with length'n'd shame.

Lor. Where was this Lane?

Post. Close by the battell, ditch'd, & wall'd with turph,
 Which gaue aduantage to an ancient Soldiour
 (An honest one I warrant) who deseru'd
 So long a breeding, as his white beard came to,
 In doing this for's Country. Athwart the Lane,
 He, with two striplings (Lads more like to run
 The Country base, then to commit such slaughter,
 With faces fit for Maskes, or rather fayrer
 Then those for preferuation eas'd, or shame)
 Made good the passage. cryed to those that fled.
 Our Britaines hearts dye flying, not our men,
 To darknesse flecte soules that flye backwards, stand,
 Or we are Romanes, and will giue you that
 Like beasts, which you shun beastly, and may saue
 But to looke backe in frowne. Stand, stand. These three,
 Three thousand confident, in acte as many:
 For three performers are the File, when all
 The rest do nothing With this word stand, stand,
 Accomodated by the Place; more Charming
 With their owne Nobleneffe, which could haue turn'd
 A Distaffe, to a Lance, guided pale lookes,
 Part shame, part spirit renew'd, that some turn'd coward
 But by example (Oh a sinne in Warre, Damnd in the first beginners) gan to looke
 The way that they did, and to grin like Lyons
 Vpon the Pikes o'th' Hunters. Then beganne
 A stop i'th' Chafer, a Retyre Anon
 A Rowt, confusion thicke forthwith they fve
 Chickens, the way which they fopt Eagles: Slaues
 The strides the Victors made. and now our Cowards
 Like Fragments in hard Voyages became
 The life o'th' need hauing found the backe doore open
 Of the vnguarded hearts heauens, how they wound,
 Some flaine before some dying; some their Friends
 Ore-borne i'th' former waue, ten chac'd by one,
 Are now each one the slaughter-man of twenty.
 Those that would dye, or ere resist, are growne
 The mortall bugs o'th' Field.

Lor

Lord This was strange chance:

A narrow Lane, an old man, and two Boyes

Post. Nay, do not wonder at it. you are made

Rather to wonder at the things you heare,

Then to worke any. Will you Rime vpon't,

And vent it for a Mock'rie? Heere is one

"Two Boyes, an Oldman (twice a Boy) a Lane,

"Preser'd the Britaimes, was the Romanes bane.

Lord. Nay, be not angry Sir.

Post. Lacke, to what end?

Who dares not stand his Foe, Ile be his Friend.

For if hee'l do, as he is made to doo,

I know hee'l quickly flye my friendship too

You haue put me into Rime.

Lord. Farewell, you're angry. East.

Post. Still going? This is a Lord. Oh Noble misery

To be in th'Field, and aske what newes of me:

To day, how many would haue giuen their Honour

To haue sau'd their Carkasses? Iooke I seele to doo't,

And yet dyed too. In mine owne woe churmd

Could not finde death, where I did heare him groane,

Nor feele him where he strooke. Being an wgly Monster,

'Tis strange he hides him in fresh Cups, soft Beds,

Sweet words; or hath more ministers then we

That draw his knives i'th'War. Well I will finde him.

For being now a Fauourer to the Britaine,

No more a Britaine, I haue resum'd againe

The part I came in. Fight I will no more,

But yeeld me to the veriest Hinde, that shall Once touch my shoulder. Great the slaughter is Heere made by th'Romane, great the Answer be

Britaines must take. For me, my Ransome's death,

On eyther side I come to spend my breath;

Which neyther heere Ile keepe, nor beate agen,

But end it by some meanes for Imogen.

Enter two Captaines, and Soldiers

1 Great Iupiter be prais'd, Lucius is taken,

'Tis thought the old man, and his sonnes, were Angels.

2 There was a fourth man, in a silly habit,

That gaue th'Affront with them.

1 So 'tis reported:

But none of 'em can be found. Stand, who's there?

Post. A Roman,

Who had not now bene drooping heere, if Seconds

Had answer'd him.

2 Lay hands on him. a Dogge,

A legge of Rome shall not returne to tell

What Crows haue peck't them here. he brags his seruice

As if he were of note. bring him to th'King

Enter Cymbeline, Belarius, Guiderius, Arviragus, Pisanio and

Romane Captiues. The Captiues present Posthumus to Cymbeline, who deliuereth him ouer to a Gaoler.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Posthumus, and Gaoler

Gao. You shall not now be solde,

You haue lockes vpon you.

So graze, as you finde Pasture.

2. Gao. I, or a stomacke

Post. Most welcome bondage; for thou art a way

(I thinke) to liberty. yet am I better

Then one that's sicke of th'Gowr, since he had rather

Groane so in perpetuity, then be cur'd

By th'sure Physician, Death, who is the key

To vnbarre these Lockes, My Conscience, thou art fetter'd

More then my shanks, & wrists: you good Gods giue me

The penitent Instrument to picke that Bolt,

Then free for euer. Is't enough I am sorry?

So Children temporall Fathers do appeale;

Gods are more full of mercy. Must I repute,

I cannot do it better then in Gyues,

Desir'd, more then constrain'd, to satisfie

If of my Freedome 'tis the maine part, take

No steeper render of me, then my All.

I know you are more clement then wilde men,

Who of their broken Debtors take a third,

A sixth, a tenth, letting them thrise againe

On their abatement; that's not my desire.

For Imogen deere life, take mine, and though

'Tis not so deere, yet 'tis a life, you coyn'd it,

Twene man, and man, they waigh not eury stampe:

Though light, take Peeeces for the figures sake,

(You rather) mine being yours. and so great Powres,

If you will take this Audit, take this life,

And cancell these cold Bonds. Oh Imogen,

Ile speake to thee in silence

Solemne Musicke. Enter (as in an Apparition) Sicilius Leonatus, Father to Posthumus, an old man, attyred like a warrior, leading in his hand an ancient Matron (his wife, & Mother to Posthumus) with Musicke before them. Then after other Musicke follows the two young Leprius (Brothers to Posthumus) with wounds as they ded in the warre. They circle Posthumus round as he lies sleeping.

Sicil. No more thou Thunder-Master

Shew thy spight, on Mortall Flies:

With Mars. fall on: with Iuno chide, that thy Adulteries

Rates, and Reuenges.

Hath my poore Boy done ought but well,

whose face I neuer saw:

I dy'de whil't in the Wombe he staide, attending Natures Law.

Whose Father then (as men report, thou Orphanes Father art)

Thou should'st haue bin, and preelded him,

from this earth-vexing smart

Moth. Lucina lent not me her ayde,

but tooke me in my Throwes,

That from me was Posthumus ript, came crying 'mong't his Goes.

A thing of pitty

Sicil. Great Nature like his Ancestrie, moulded the stuffe so faire.

That he d. seru'd the praise o'th'World,

as great Sicilius heyre.

1 Bro. When once he was mature for man,

in Britaine where was hee

That could stand vp his paralell?

Or fruitfull object bee?

In eye of Imogen, that best could deeme

his dignitie

Mo. With Marriage wherefore was he mockt

to be exil'd, and throwne

From Leonat's Seate, and cast from her,

his dearest one:

Sweete Imogen?

Sic. Why did you suffer Iachimo, slight thing of Italy, bbb g

To

To taint his Nobler harts & braine, with needlesse clowdy,
And to become the peeke and scoone o'th'others vilany?

2 Bro. For this, from Miller Seats we came,
our Parents, and vs swaine,

That striking in our Countreys cause,
felt brauely, and were slaine,

Our Fealty, & Ten years right, with Honor to maintaine.

1 Bro. Like hardiment Pesthumus hath to Cymbeline perform'd.

Then Iupiter, King of Clouds, why hast thou thus adiourn'd
The Graces for his Merits due, being all to dolours turn'd?

Sicil. Thy Christ'ill window open; looke, looke out, no longer exercise

Vpon a valiant Race, thy harsh, and potent iniuries.

Aseth. Since (Iupiter) our Son is good,
take off his miseries.

Sicil. Peepethrough thy Marble Mansion, helpe, or we poore Ghosts will cry

To'th' shining Synod of the rest, against thy Deity.

Brothers. Helpe (Iupiter) or we appeale,
and from thy iustice flye.

Iupiter descends in Thunder and Lightning, sitting upon an Eagle, heethrores a Thunder bolt. The Ghosts sit on their knees.

Iupiter. No more you petty Spirits of Region low

Offend our hearing, hush. How dare you Ghosts

Accuse the Thunderer, whose Bolt (you know)

Sky-planted, batters all rebelling Coasts.

Poore shadows of Elizium, hence, and rest

Vpon your neuer-withering bankes of Flowers,

Be not with mortall accidents oppress,

No care of yours it is, you know 'tis ours.

Whom best I loue, I crosse; to make my gulf

The more delay'd, delighted. Be content,

Your low-laide Sonne, our Godhead will vplift:

His Comforts thrive, his Trials well are spent.

Our fowall Searre reign'd at his Birth, and in

Our Temple was he married. Rise, and far'e,

He shall be Lord of Lady Imogen,

And happier much by his Affliction made

This Tablet lay vpon his Brest, wherem

Our pleasure, his full Fortune, doth confine,

And so away. no farther with your dinne

Expreffe Impatience, leaue you three vpon mine:

Mount Eagle, to my Palace Christ'illine. Ascent

Sicil. He came in Thunder, his Celestiall breath

Was sulphurous to smell: the holy Eagle

Stoop'd, as to foote vs: his Ascension is

More sweet then our blest Fields: his Royall Bird

Prunes the immortall wings, and cloyes his Beake,

As when his God is pleas'd.

All. Thanks Iupiter.

Sic. The Marble Pavement closes, he is enter'd

His radiant Roote Away, and to be blest

Let vs with care performe his great behest. Exeunt

Post. Sleepe, thou hast bin a Grandfire, and begot

A Father to me: and thou hast created

A Mother, and two Brothers. But (oh scoone)

Gone, they went hence so soone as they were borne:

And so I am awake. Poore Wretches, that depend

On Greatnesse, Favour; Dreame as I haue done,

Wake, and finde nothing. But (alas) I sweare -

Many Dreame not to finde, neither deserue,

And yet are steep'd in Favours; so am I

That haue this Golden chance, and know not why:

What Fayeries haue this ground? A Book? Oh rare one,

Be not, as is our fangled world, a Garment
Nobler then that is coners. Let thy effects
So follow, to be most vnlike our Courtiers,
As good, as promise.

Re-enter.

When a Lion whelpes st ill to himselfe and groweth, without seeking firds, and bee embrac'd by a peece of tender
Ayre. And when from a stately Cedar st ill be left branches, which being dead many years, shall after remine, being tied to the old Steele, and free to grow, then st ill Pesthumus st ill miseries, Britains be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Pleasure.

'Tis still a Dreame: or else such stuffe as Madmen
Tongue, and braine not: either both, or nothing.
Or senselesse speaking, or a speaking such
As sense cannot vntye. Be what it is,
The Action of my life is like it, which I keepe
It but for sympathy.

Enter Gaius.

Gai. Come Sir, are you ready for death?

Post. Over-toasted rather. ready long ago.

Gai. Hanging is the word, Sir, if you bee readie for that, you are well Cook'd.

Post. So if I proue a good repast to the Spectators, the dish payes the shoe.

Gai. A heavy reckoning for you Sir: But the comfort is you shall be called to no more payments, fear no more Tauerne Bills, which are often the sadnesse of parting, as the procuring of mirth. you come in faint for want of meate, depart reeling with too much drinke. some that you haue payed too much, and sorry that you are payed too much: Pulse and Braine, both empty: the Braine the heavier, for being too light; the Pulse too light, being drawne off euerie selfe. Oh, of this contradiction you shall now be quit. Oh the charity of a penny Co. d. it summes vp thousands in a trice: you haue no true Debitor, and Creditor but it: of what's past, is, and to come, the discharge. your necke (Sir), is Pen, Booke, and Counters, for the Acquittance follows.

Post. I am merrier to dye, then thou art to live.

Gai. Indeed Sir, he that sleepes, feels not the Tooth-
Ache. but a man that were to sleepe your sleepe, and a Hangman to helpe him to bed, I think he would change places with his Officer. for, look you Sir, you know not which way you shall go.

Post. Yes indeed do I, fellow.

Gai. Your death has eyes in's head then: I haue not seene him so pictur'd: you must either bee directed by some that take vpon them to know, or to take vpon your selfe that which I am sure you do not know. for Iump the after-enquiry on your owne perill: and how you shall speed in your iournies end, I thinke you'l neuer returne to tell one.

Post. I tell thee, Fellow, there are none want eyes, to direct them the way I am going, but such as winke, and will not vse them.

Gai. What an infinite mocke is this, that a man shold haue the best vse of eyes, to see the way of blindness: I am sure hanging is the way of winking.

Enter a Messenger.

Mes. Knocke off his Manacles, bring your Prisoner to the King.

Post. Thou bring'st good newes, I am call'd to bee manacfree.

Gai. He be hang'd then.

Post. Thou shalt be then free, when a Gaoler; no bolts
for

for the dead.

Gao. Vnlesse a man would marry a Gallowes, & beget yong Gibbets, I neuer saw one so prone yet on my Conscience, there are verier Knaues desire to liue, for all he be a Roman; and there be some of them too that dye against their willes; so should I, if I were one. I would we were all of one minde, and one minde good: O there were desolation of Gaoiers and Galowes. I speake against my present profit, but my wish hath a preferment in't. Exeunt

Scena Quinta.

Enter Cymbeline, Bellarius, Guiderius, Aru-ragus, Pisano, and Lords.

Cym. Stand by my side you, whom the Gods haue made
Preferuers of my Throne. woe is my heart,
That the poore Souldier that so richly fought,
Whose ragges, sham'd gilded Armes, whose naked brest
Stept before Targets of proofe, can not be found.
He shall be happy that can finde him, if Ore Grace can make him to.

Bel. I neuer saw
Such Noble fury in so poore a Thing;
Such precious deeds, in one that promist nought
But beggery, and poore lookes.

Cym. No rydings of him?

Pisa. He hath bin search'd among the dead & liuing;
But no trace of him.

Cym. To my greefe, I am
The heyre of his Reward, which I will adde
To you (the Liuer, Heart, and Braine of Britaine)
By whom (I grant) she liues 'Tis now the time
To aske of whence you are. Report it.

Bel. Sir,
In Cambria are we borre, and Gentlemen:
Further to boast, were neyther true, nor modest,
Vnlesse I adde, we are honest.

Cym. Bow your knees:
Arise my Knights o'th' Bartell, I create you
Companions to our person, and will fir you
With Dignities becomming your estates

Enter Cornelius and Ladies

There's businesse in these faces. why so sadly
Greet you our Victory? you looke like Romaines,
And not o'th' Court of Britaine

Corn. Haile great King,
To sowe your happinesse, I must report
The Queene is dead.

Cym. Who worse then a Physitian
Would this report become? But I consider
By Med'cine life may be prolong'd, yer death
Will seize the Doctor too. How ended she?

Corn. With horror, madly dying, like her life,
Which (being etuell to the world) concluded
Most cruell to her selfe. What she confest,
I will report, so please you. These her Women
Can trip me, if I erre, who with wet cheekes
Were present when she finish'd.

Cym. Prythee ray

Corn. First, she confest she neuer lou'd you: onely
Affected Greatnesse got by you; not you
Married your Royalty, was wife to your place.

Abhor'd your person

Cym. She alone knew this.

And but she spoke it dying, I would not Beleeue her lips in opening it. Proceed.

Corn. Your daughter, whom she bore in hand to loue
With such integrity, she did confesse
Was as a Scorpion to her sight, whose life
(But that her sight preuented it) she had Tane off by payson.

Cym. O most delicate Friend!

Who is't can reade a Woman? Is there more?

Corn. More Sir, and worse. She did confesse she had
For you a mortall Minerall, which being tooke,
Should by the minute feede on life, and ling'ring,
By inches waste you. In which time, she purpos'd
By watching, weeping, tendance, kissing, to Orecome you with her shew; and in time
(When she had fitted you with her craft, to worke
Her Sorne into th' adoption of the Crowne.
But sayling of her end by his strange absence,
Grew shamelesse desperate, open'd (in despight
Of Heaven and Men) her purposes repented
The euils she hatch'd, were not effected: so Dispayring dyed.

Cym. Heard you all this, her Women?

La. We did, so please your Highnesse.

Cym. Mine eyes

Were not in fault, for she was beautifull.

Mine eares that heare her flattery, nor my heart,
That thought her like her seeming. It had bene vicious
To haue mistrusted her. yet (Oh my Daughter)
That it was folly in me, thou mayst say,
And proue it in thy feeling. Heaven mend all.

*Enter Lucius, Iachimo, and other Roman prisoners,
Leonatus behind, and Imogen*

Thou comm'st not Caus now for Tribute, that
The Britaines haue rac'd out, though with the losse
Of many a bold one. whose Kinsmen haue made suite
That their good soules may be appeas'd, with slaughter,
Of you their Captiues, which our selfe haue granted,
So thinke of your estate.

Luc. Consider Sir, the chance of Warre, the day
Was yours by accident: had it gone with vs,
We should not when the blood was cool, haue threatend
Our Prisoners with the Sword. But since the Gods
Will haue it thus, that nothing but our liues
May be call'd ransome, let it come: Sufficeth,
A Roman, with a Romans heart can suffer:
Augustus liues to thinke on't. and so much
For my peculiar care. This one thing onely
I will entreate, my Boy (a Britaine borne)
Let him be ransom'd: Neuer Master had
A Page so kinde, so dutious, diligent,
So tender ouer his occasions, true,
So feate, so Nurse-like. let his vertue toyne
With my request, which Ile make bold your Highnesse
Cannot deny he hath done no Britaine harme,
Though he haue seru'd a Roman, Saue him (Sir)
And spare no blood beside.

Cym. I haue surely seene him:
His fauour is familiar to me. Boy,
Thou hast look'd thy selfe into my grace,
And art mine owne. I know not why, wherefore,
To say, lue boy: ne're thanke thy Master, lue;
And aske of Cymbeline what Boone thou wilt,
Fitting my bounty, and thy fate, Ile giue it:

Yet, though thou do demand a Piferer
The Noblest rane.

Imo. I humbly thank your Highnesse.

Luc. I do not bid thee begge my wite, good I ad,
And yet I know thou wilt.

Imo. No, no, a like,
There's other worke in hand: I see a man
Bitter to me, as death: your life, good Master,
Must shuffle for it selfe.

Luz. The Boy disdurns me,
He leaues me, comes me brackly: I've their loyes,
That place them on the troth of Cysler, and Boyes,
Why stands he so perplext?

Cym. What wouldst thou Boy?

I love thee more, and more I thank more, and more
What's best to aske. Knowst thou thou lookst on's speak
Wilt haue him hus? Is he thy kin? thy friend?

Imo. He is a Romane, no more kin to me,
Then I to your Highnesse, who being born your asside
Am something nearer.

Cym. Wherefore'st thou him so?

Imo. He tell you (Sir), private, if you please
To give me hearing.

Cym. I, with all my heart,
And lend my best attention. Was't his name?

Imo. I, Sir.

Cym. Thou'lt as good's touch my Page
He be thy Master, walke with me: speake freely.

Bel. Is not this boy reuolt from death?

Alm. One hand's another

Not more reuolt than that sweet Rose I ad
Who dyed, and was life: what's he you?

Gur. The same dead thing alive.

Bel. Peace, peace, for further he eyes: is not, forbeare
Creatures may be alike: were't a col's nature
He would haue spoke to us.

Gur. But see him dead.

Bel. Be silent: let's see further.

Pist. It is my Mistress

Since she is liuing, let the time run on,
To good, or bad.

Cym. Come, stand thou by our side,
Make thy demand also: Sir, step you forth,
Give answer to this Boy: and do it freely,
Or by our Greatnesse, and the grace of it
(Which is our Honor) bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from this hood. One speake to him.

Imo. My boone is that this Gentleman may reider
Of whom he had this Ring.

Pest. What's that to him?

Cym. That Diamond vpon your finger, say
How came it yours?

Imo. Thou'lt torture me to leaue vnspoken, that
Which to spoke, would torture thee.

Cym. How'st me?

Imo. I am glad to be constrain'd to utter that Which torments me to conceale. By Villany
I got this Ring: 'twas Leontius I well,
Whom thou didst banish: and which more may greeue
As it doth me: a Nobler Sir, he re-liv'd (thee,
Twixt sky and ground Wilt thou heare more my Lord?

Cym. All that belongs to this

Imo. That Paragon, thy daughter,
For whom my heart drops blood, and my false spirits
Quile to remember. Give me leaue, I haue.

Cym. My Daughter? what of her? Renew thy strength

I had rather thou shouldst live, while Nani re will,
Then dye ere I heare more: sturue man, and speake.

Imo. Vpon a time, unhappy was the clocke
That strooke the bell: out: it was in Rome, accurst
The Mansion where: 'twas as a Feast, oh would
Our Vizards had bin pay, shouldst or at least
Those which I heard to heare: the good Pessim u, (What should I say? he was too good to be
Wit: all men were, and was the best of all
Amongst the rest of good ones) sitting sadly,
Hearing vs praise our Louer of Italy
For Beauty, that made barren the well'd boast
Of him that best could speake for Feature, being
The Shine of Demus, or straight-pight Alm u,
Pastures, beyond Leontius Nati: for Condition,
A shop of all the qualities, that man
Loves: was a stor, best of that booke of Wing,
I assest, which shaketh the eye.

Cym. I thanke thee. Come to the matter.

Imo. All too soone I shall,
Vntill this I would sturue quickly. This Pessim u,
Not this a Noble Lord, in loue, and one
That had a Royall Louer, took his hilt,
And (not a man) began to speake, and began
He was as calm as virtue: he began
His Mistress to see, which, by his tongue, being made,
And then a mende present, either our braggies
Were crack'd of Imo: or Imo, or his detention
Prodd vs, as speaking for us.

Cym. Nay, say, to the purpose.

Imo. Ye shall see: Chastity, (if euen begins)
He spoke of her, as Demus had dreames,
And she's a, were cold: Whereas, I stretch
Maid's femp's or as pra'se, and I stretch'd with him
Prest of Gold, and I stretch'd with him
Vpon a honor'd finger to a ring
In the place of a bee, and were the Ring
By I stretch, and mine Adultery (true night)
No less of her Honour: consider
Then I did truly find her, takes this Ring,
And would I, had I been a Ca h. cle
Of Phoebeus Wheel: and might so freely, had it Bin all the woth of a Cane Away to Entire Poste I in this designe: Well may you (Sir)
Remember me at Court, where I was taught
Of your chaste Daughter, the wide difference
Twixt Amorous, and Villanous: Being thus quencht
Of hope, not longing; mine Italian brane,
Can in your duller Britaine operate
Most wildly: for my vantage excellent,
And to be briefe, my practise so preuail'd
That I return'd with simular proote enough,
To make the Noble Leontius mad,
By wounding his beteele in her Renowne,
With Tokens thus, and thus: suerring notes
Of Chamber-hanging, Pictures, this her Bracelet
(Oh cunning how I got) nay some markes
Of secret on her person, that he could not
But thinke her bond of Chastity quite crack'd,
I haue: 'tane the forfeit, Whereupon,
Me thinkes I see him now.

Pest. I so thou do'st,
Italian Fiend. Aye me, most credulous Foole,
Egregious murderer, Theefe, any thing
That's due to all the Villaines past, in being
To come. Oh giue me Cord, or knife, or poyson,

Some

Some vpright Iusticer. Thon King, send out
For Torturors ingenious - it is I
That all th'abhorred things o'ch'earth amend
By being worfe then they. I am Posthumus,
That kill'd thy Daughter Villa n-like, I lye,
That caus'd a lesser villaine then my selfe,
A facinorous Theefe to doo'r. The Temple
Of Vertue was she; yea, and she her selfe
Spit, and throw stones, cast myre vpon me, set
The dogges o'th'street to bay me i euery villaine
Be call'd Posthumus Leonatus, and
Be villany lesse then 'twas Oh Imogen!
My Queene, my life, my wife! oh Imogen,
Imogen, Imogen.

Imo. Peace my Lord, heare heare.

Post. Shall's haue a play of this?

Thou scornfull Page, there lye thy part.

Pis. Oh Gentlemen, helpe,
Mine and your Mistris. Oh my Lord Posthumus,
You ne're kill'd Imogen til now helpe, helpe,
Mine honour'd Lady

Cym. Does the world go round?

Posth. How comes these staggers on mee?

Pisa. Wake my Mistris

Cym. If this be so, the Gods do meane to strike me
To death, with mortall toy.

Pisa. How fares my Mistris?

Imo. Oh get thee from my sight,
Thou gau'st me poyson dangerous Fellow hence,
Breath not where Princes are.

Cym. The tune of Imogen.

Pisa. Lady, the Gods throw stones of sulphur on me, if
That box I gaue you, was not thought by mee
A precious thing, I had it from the Queene.

Cym. New matter still.

Imo. It poyson'd me.

Corn. Oh Gods!

I left our one thing which the Queene confest,
Which must approue thee honest. If Pisanio
Haue (said she) giuen his Mistris that Confection
Which I gaue him for Cordiall, she is seru'd,
As I would serue a Rat.

Cym. What's this, Cornelius?

Corn. The Queene (Sir) very oft importun'd me
To temper poysons for her, still pretending
The satisfaction of her knowledge, onely
In killing Creatures vilde, as Cats and Dogges
Of no esteeme. I dreading, that her purpose
Was of more danger, did compound for her
A certaine stuffe, which being tane, would cease
The present powre of life, but in short time,
All Offices of Nature, should againe
Do their due Functions Haue you tane of it?

Imo. Most like I did, for I was dead

Bel. My Boyes, there was our error.

Gm. This is sure Fidele

Imo. Why did you throw your wedded Lady fro you?
Thinke that you are vpon a Rocke, and now
Throw me againe.

Post. Hang there like fruite. my soule,
Till the Tree dye

Cym. How now, my Flesh? my Childe?
What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this Act?
Wilt thou not speake to me?

Imo. Your blessing, Sir.

Bel. Though you did loue this youth, I blame ye not,

You had a motiue for't.

Cym. My teares that fall
Proue holy-water on thee; Imogen,
Thy Mothers dead.

Imo. I am sorry for't, my Lord.

Cym. Oh, she was naught; and long of her it was
That we meet heere so strangely but her Sonne
Is gone, we know not how, nor where

Pisa. My Lord,

Now feare is from me, Ile speake troth. Lord Cloten
Vpon my Ladies missing, came to me
With his Sword drawne, foam'd at the mouth, and swore
If I discouer'd not which way the was gone,
It was my instant death By accident,
I had a feigned Letter of my Masters
Then in my pocket, which directed him
To seeke her on the Mountaines neere to Milford,
Where in a frenzie, in my Masters Garments
(Which he inforc'd from me) away he postes
With vnchaste purpose, and with oath to violate
My Ladies honor, what became of him,
I further know not

Gm. Let me end the Story. I slew him there.

Cym. Marry, the Gods forefend.

I would not thy good deeds, should from my lips
Plucke a hard sentence. Prythee valiant youth
Deny't againe.

Gm. I haue spoke it, and I did it

Cym. He was a Prince.

Gm. A most meauill one. The wrongs he did mee
Were nothing Prince-like; for he did prouoke me
With Language that would make me spume the Sea,
If it could so roare to me. I cut off's head,
And am right glad he is not standing heer -
To tell this tale of mine.

Cym. I am sorrow for thee

By thine owne tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our Law Thou'rt dead.

Imo. That headlesse man I thought had bin my Lord

Cym. Binde the Offender,

And take him from our presence,

Bel. Stay, Sir King,

This man is better then the man he slew,
As well descended as thy selfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a Band of Clotens
Had euer scarre for. Let his Armes alone,
They were not borne for bondage.

Cym. Why old Soldier

Wilt thou vndoo the worth thou art vnpayd for
By tasting of our wrath? How of descent
As good as we?

Arm. In that he spake too farre.

Cym. And thou shalt dye for't.

Bel. We will dye all three,

But I will proue that two one's are as good
As I haue giuen out him. My Sonnes, I must
For mine owne part, vnfold a dangerous speech.
Though haply well for you.

Arm. Your danger's ours.

Gm. And our good his,

Bel. Haue at it then, by leaue
Thou hadd'st (great King) a Subiect, who Was call'd Belarius.

Cym. What of him? He is a banish'd Traitor.

Bel. He it is, that hath Assum'd this age: indeed a banish'd man,

I know not how, a Traitor.

Cym. Take him hence,
The whole world shall not saue him.

Bel. Not too hot;
First pay me for the Nursing of thy Sonnes,
And let it be confiscate all, so soone
As I haue recey'd it.

Cym. Nursing of my Sonnes?
Bel. I am too blunt, and lawey: heere's my knee:
Ere I arise, I will preferre my Sonnes,
Then spare not the old Father. Mighty Sir,
These two young Gentlemen that call me Father,
And thinke they are my Sonnes, are none of mine,
They are the yssue of your Loyner, my Liege,
And blood of your begetting.

Cym. How? my Issue.

Bel. So sure as you, your Fathers: I (old Meryan)
Am that Belarius, whom you sometime banish'd.
Your pleasure was my neere offence, my punishment
To selfe, and all my Treason that I suffer'd,
Was all the harme I did. These gentle Princes
(For such, and so they were) these twenty yeeres
Haue I train'd vp; those Arts they haue, as I Could put into them. My breeding was (Sir)
As your Highnesse knowes. Their Nurse Lurghile
(Whom for the Theft I wedded) stole these Children
Vpon my Banishment. I mou'd her to't,
Hauing recey'd the punishment before
For that which I did then. Beaten for Loyaltie, Excited me to Treason. Their deere losse,
The more of you 'twas felt, the more it shap'd
Vnto my end of stealing them. But gracious Sir,
Heere are your Sonnes againe, and I must loose
Two of the sweetest Companions in the World.
The benediction of these couering Heauens
Fall on their heads like dew, for they are worthe
To in-lay Heauen with Starres.

Cym. Thou weep'st, and speak'st:
The seruice that you three haue done, is more
Vnlike, then this thou tell'st. I lost my Children,
If these be they, I know not how to wish
A payre of worthier Sonnes.

Bel. Be pleas'd awhile;
This Gentleman, whom I call Polixenes,
Most worthy Prince, is yours, is true Guiderius.
This Gentleman, my Cadwall, Armagus.
Your yonger Princely Son, he Sir, was lapt
In a most curious Mantle, wrought by th' hand
Of his Queene's Mother, which for more probation
I can with ease produce.

Cym. Guiderius had
Vpon his necke a Mole, a sanguine Starre,
It was a marke of wonder.

Bel. This is he,
Who hath vpon him still that naturall stampe:
It was wife Natures end, in the donation
To be his euidence now.

Cym. Oh, what am I
A Mother to the byrch of three? Nere Mother
Reioy'd deliurance more: Bless, pray you be,
That after this strange starting from your Orbes,
You may reigne in them now: Oh Imogen,
Thou hast lost by this a Kingdome.

Imo. No, my Lord:
I haue got two Worlds by't. Oh my gentle Brothers,
Haue we thus met? Oh neuer say heereafter

But I am truest speaker. You call'd me Brother
When I was but your Sister: I you Brothers,
When we were so indeed.

Cym. Did you ere meere?

Arvi. I my good Lord.

Gwl. And at first meeting Iou'd,
Continu'd so, vntill we thought he dyed.

Cern. By the Queenes Draine she swallow'd.

Cym. O rare instinct!

When shall I heare all through? This fierce abridgment, Hath to it Circumstantiall branches, which Distinction should be rich in. Where? how Iu'd you?
And when came you to serue our Roman Captiue?
How parted with your Brother? How first met them?
Why fled you from the Court? And whether these?
And your three motives to the Battail? with
I know not how much more should be demanded,
And all the other by-dependances
From chance to chance? But not the Time, nor Place
Will serue our long Interrogatories. See,
Posthumus Anchors vpon Imogen;
And she (like harmlesse Lightning) throwes her eye
On him: her Brothers, Me: her Master hitting
Each object with a Ioy: the Courtesie-change
Is generally in all. Let's quit this ground,
And smoake the Temple with our Sacrifices.
Thou art my Brother, so wee'll hold thee ever

Imo. You are my Father too, and did releese me:
To see this gracious season.

Cym. All ore-joy'd
Saue these in bonds, let them be ioyfull too,
For they shall taste our Comfort.

Imo. My good Master, I will yet do you seruice.

Luc. Happy be you.

Cym. The forlorne Soldier, that no Nobly fought
He would haue well becom'd this place, and grac'd
The thankings of a King.

Post. I am Sir

The Soldier that did company these three
In poore self-eming: 'twas a fitment for
The purpose I then follow'd. That I was he,
Speake Iachims, I had you downe, and might Haue made you finish.

Iach. I am downe againe:

But now my heauie Conference sinks my knee,
As then your force did. Take that life, beseech you
Which I so often owe. but your Ring first,
And heere the Bracelet of the truest Princeesse
That ever swore her Faith.

Post. Kneele not to me:

The powre that I haue on you, is to spare you:
The malice towards you, to forgiue you. Liue
And deale with others better.

Cym. Nobly doom'd.

Wee'll learne our Freeneffe of a Sonne-in-Law.
Pardon's the word to all.

Arvi. You holpe vs Sir,
As you did meane indeed to be our Brother,
Ioy'd are we, that you are.

Post. Your Seruant Princes. Good my Lord of Rome
Call forth your Sooth-sayer: As I slept, me thought
Great Iupiter vpon his Eagle back'd
Appear'd to me, with other sprightly shewes
Of mine owne Kindred. When I wak'd, I found
This Labell on my bosome; whose containing Is so from sense in hardnesse, that I can take

Make no Collection of it. Let him shew
His skill in the construction.

Luc. Philarmenus.

Sooth. Heere, my good Lord.

Luc. Read, and declare the meaning.

Reader

WHEN as a Lyons whelp, shall to himselfe unknown, without seeking finde, and bee embrac'd by a peece of tender Ayre. And when from a stately Cedar shall be lopt branches, which being dead many yeares, shall after reuine, bee ioyned to the old Stocke, and freshly grow, then shall Posthumus end his miserie, Britaine be fortunate, and flourish in Peace and Plen-tie.

Thou Leonatus art the Lyons Whelp, -
The fit and apt Construction of thy name
Being Leonatus, doth import so much
The peece of tender Ayre, thy vertuous Daughter,
Which we call Mollus Aer, and Mollus Aer
We terme it Mulier, which Mulier I diuine
Is this most constant Wife, who euen now
Answering the Letter of the Oracle,
Vnknowne to you vnough, were clipt about
With this most tender Aire.

Cym. This hath some seeming.

Sooth. The lofty Cedar, Royall Cymbeline
Personates thee: And thy lopt Branches, point
Thy two Sonnes forth who by Belarius stolne
For many yeares thought dead, are now reuiu'd
To the Maiesicke Cedar ioyn'd; whose Issue

Promises Britaine, Peace and Plenty.

Cym. Well,

My Peace we will begin: And Caius Lucius,
Although the Victor, we submit to Cesar,
And to the Romaine Empire, promising
To pay our wonted Tribute, from the which
We were dissuaded by our wicked Queene,
Whom heavens in iustice both on her, and hers,
Haue laid most heavy hand.

Sooth. The fingers of the Powres about, do tune
The harmony of this Peace. the Vision
Which I made knowne to Lucius ere the stroke
Of yet this scarce-cold-Battle, at this instant
Is full accomplish'd. For the Romaine Eagle
From South to West, on wing soaring aloft
Lessen'd her selfe, and in the Beames o' th' Sun
So vanish'd, which fore-shew'd our Princely Eagle
Th' Imperiall Cesar, should againe vnite
His Fauour, with the Radiant Cymbeline,
Which shines heere in the West.

Cym. Laud we the Gods,
And let our crooked Smokes climbe to their Nostrils
From our blest Altars. Publish we this Peace
To all our Subjects. Set we forward Let
A Roman, and a Brittain Ensigne waue
Friendly together so through Luds-Towne march,
And in the Temple of great Iupiter
Our Peace wee'l ratifie. Seale it with Feasts.
Set on there. Neuer was a Warre did cease
(Fre bloodie hands were wash'd) with such a Peace.

Exeunt.

FINIS.

Printed at the Charges of W. Jaggard, Ed. Blount, I. Smithweeke, and W. Aspley, 1623.

Luc. Sir, I know him, and I loue him.

Duke. Loue talks with better knowledge, & knowledge with deare loue.

Luc. Come Sir, I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly beleene that, since you know not what you speake. But if euer the Duke retorne (as our prayers are he may) let mee desire you to make your answer before him: if it bee honest you haue spoke, you haue courage to maintaine it; I am bound to call vpon you, and I pray you your name?

Luc. Sir my name is Lucio, well known to the Duke.

Duke. He shall know you better Sir, if I may lue to report you.

Luc. I feare you not.

Duke. O you hope the Duke will retorne no more: or you imagine me to vnhurtfull in opposite, but indeed I can doe you little harme: You'll for-sweare this againe?

Luc. He be hang'd first: Thou art dece'u'd in mee Friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to mortow, or no?

Duke. Why should he die Sir?

Luc. Why? For filling a bottle with a Tunner-dish I would the Duke wotke of were return'd againe this vngentur'd Agent will vn-people the Prouince with Continencie. Sparrowes must not build in his house-eeues, because they are lecherous. The Duke yet would haue darke deeds darkelie answered, hee would neuer bring them to light would hee were return'd. Marrie this Claudio is condemned for vntrusting Faruell good Friar, I prethee pray for me: The Duke (I say to thee againe) would eate Mutton on Fridays. He's now past it, yet (and I say to thee) hee would moue with a beggar, though the finest browne-bread and Garlike - say that I said so - Farewell. Exit.

Duke. No might, nor greatnesse in mortality Can censure scape Back-bounding calumnie The whitest vertue strikes. What King so strong, Can tie the gall vp in the slanderous tong? But who comes heere?

Enter Escalus, Transo, and Bawd.

Esc. Go, away with her to prison.

Bawd. Good my Lord be good to mee, your Honor is accounted a mercifull man - good my Lord

Esc. Double, and trebble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kinde? This would make mercy sweare and play the Tirant.

Pro. A Bawd of eleuen yeares continuance, may it please your Honor.

Bawd. My Lord, this is one Lucio's information against me, Mistris Kate Kepe-downe was with childe by him in the Dukes time, he promis'd her marriage - his Childe is a yeere and a quarter olde come Philip and Isabel I haue kept it my selfe, and see how hee goes about to abuse me.

Esc. That fellow is a fellow of much License: Let him be call'd before vs, Away with her to prison. Goe too, no more words. Prouost, my Brother Angelo will not be alter'd, Claudio must die to morrow. Let him be furnish'd with Diuines, and haue all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pittie, it should not be so with him.

Pro. So please you, this Friar hath beetle with him, and aduis'd him for th'entertainment of death.

Esc. Good euen, good Father.

Duke. Blisse, and goodnesse on you.

Esc. Of whence are you?

Duke. Not of this Countrie, though my chance is now To vse it for my time: I am a brother Of gracious Order, late come from the Sea, In speciall businesse from his Holinesse.

Esc. What newes abroad i'th World?

Duke. None, but that there is so great a Feauor on goodnesse, that the dissolution of it must cure it. No uelie is onely in request, and as it is as dangerous to be aged in any kinde of course, as it is vertuous to be constant in any vndertaking. There is scarce truth enough ahaue to make Societies secure, but Securitie enough to make Fellowships accusit: Much vpon this riddle runs the wisdom of the world. This newes is old enough, yet it is euerie daies newes. I pray you Sir, of what disposition was the Duke?

Esc. One, that about all other strifes, Contended especially to know himselfe.

Duke. What pleasure was he giuen to?

Esc. Rather reioycing to see another merry, then merite at anie thing which profess to make him reioice. A Gentleman of all temperance. But leaue wee him to his euents, with a prayer they may proue prosperous, & let me desire to know, how you finde Claudio prepar'd? I am made to vnderstand, that you haue lent him visitation

Duke. He professes to haue receiued no sinistier measure from his Iudge, but most willingly humbles himselfe to the determination of Iustice. yet had he framed to himselfe (by the instruction of his frailty) manie deceyuing promises of life, which I (by my good leisure) haue discredited to him, and now is he resolu'd to die.

Esc. You haue paid the heavens your Function, and the prisoner the vertie debt of your Calling. I haue labour'd for the poore Gentleman, to the extreme shore of my modestie, but my brother-Iustice haue I found so seuer, that he hath forc'd me to tell him, hee is indeede Iustice.

Duke. if his owne life, Answer the straitnesse of his proceeding, It shall become him well: wherein if he chance to faile he hath sentenc'd himselfe.

Esc. I am going to visite the prisoner, Fare you well.

Duke. Peace be with you.

He who the sword of Heaven will beare,

Should be as hoy, as seueare:

Patterne in him selfe to know,

Grace to stand, and Vertue go:

More, nor lesse to others paying,

Then by selfe-offences weighing.

Shame to him, whose cruell striking,

Kils for fautes of his owne liking:

Twice trebble shame on Angelo,

To vveede my vice, and let his grow.

Oh, what may Man within him hide,

Though Angel on the outward side?

How may likeness made in crimes,

Making practise on the Trues,

To draw with ydle Spiders stings

Most ponderous and substantiill things?

Craft against vice, I must applie

With Angelo to night shall lye

His old betroathed (but despised

So disguise shall by th'disguised

Pay with falshood, false exacting,

And performe an olde contracting.

Exit Angelo

Actus Quartus. Scena Prima.

Enter Mariana, and Boy singing.

Song. Take, oh take those lips away,
that so sweetly were forsworne,
And those eyes - the break of day
lights that doe mislead the Morn,
But my kisses bring againe, bring againe,
Seales of love, but seal'd in vaine, seal'd in vaine.

Enter Duke

Mar. Breake off thy long, and haste thee quick away,
Here comes a man of comfort, whose aduice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.
I cry you mercie, Sir, and well could wish
You had not found me here so musically
Let me excuse me, and beleue me so,
My mirth is much displeas'd, but pleas'd my woe.

Duk. 'Tis good; though Musick oft hath such a charme
To make bad, good, and good prouoke to harme.
I pray you tell me, hath any body enquir'd for mee here today; much vpon this time haue I promis'd here to meete.

Mar. You haue not bin enquir'd after. I haue sat here all day.

Enter Isabell.

Duk. I doe constantly beleue you. the time is come euen now. I shall craue your forbearance a little, may be
I will call vpon you anone for some aduantage to your selfe.

Mar. I am alwayes bound to you. Exit.

Duk. Very well met, and well come.
What is the newes from this good Deputie?

Isab. He hath a Garden circumur'd with Bricke,
Whose westerne side is with a Vineyard back't;
And to that Vineyard is a planched gate,
That makes his opening with this bigger Key.
This other doth command a little doore,
Which from the Vineyard to the Garden leades,
There haue I made my promise, vpon the Heauy midle of the night, to call vpon him

Duk. But shall you on your knowledge find this way?

Isab. I haue tane a due, and wary note vpon't,
With whispering, and most guiltie diligence,
In a season all of precept, he did show me
The way twice ore

Duk. Are there no other tokens
Betwene you 'greed, concerning her obseruance?

Isab. No - none but onely a repaire ith' darke,
And that I haue possesst him, my most stay
Can be but brieft for I haue made him know,
I haue a Seruant comes with me along
That stales vpon me, whose perswasion is,
I come about my Brother.

Duk. 'Tis well borne vp.
I haue not yet made knowne to Mariana

Enter Mariana.

A word of this - what hoa, within; come forth,
I pray you be acquainted with this Maid,
She comes to doe you good.

Isab. I doe desire the like.

Duk. Do you perswade your selfe that I respect you?

Mar. Good Frier, I know you do, and haue found it.

Duk. Take then this your companion by the hand
Who hath a storie readie for your eare -
I shall attend your leisure, but make haste
The vaporous night approaches.

Mar. Wilt please you walke asides

Exit

Duk. Oh Place, and greatnes: millions of false ties
Are sticke vpon thee: volumes of report
Run with these false, and most contrarious Quost
Vpon thy doings. thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreame,
And racke thee in their fancies. Welcome, how agreed?

Enter Mariana and Isabella

Isab. Shee'll take the enterprize vpon her father,
If you aduise it.

Duk. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.

Isa. Little haue you to say
When you depart from him, but soft and low,
Remember now my brother.

Mar. Feare me not.

Duk. Nor gentle daughter, feare you not at all:
He is your husband on a pre-contract -
To bring you thus together 'tis no sinne,
Sith that the Iustice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let vs goe,
Our Corne's to reape, for yet our Tithes to sow. Exeunt.

Scena Secunda.

Enter Provoost and Clowne.

Pro. Come hither sirha; can you cut off a mans head?

Clo. If the man be a Bachelor Sir, I can:
But if he be a married man, he's his wiues head,
And I can neuer cut off a womans head.

Pro. Come sir, leaue me your snatches, and yeeld mee
a direct answer. To morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine heere is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper, if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeme you from your Gyues if not, you shall haue your full time of imprisonment, and your deliuerance with an vnpartied whipping, for you haue beene a notorious bawd

Clo. Sir, I haue beene an vnlawfull bawd, time out of minde, but yet I will bee content to be a lawfull hangman I would bee glad to receiue some instruction from my fellow partner.

Pro. What hoa, Abhorson - where's Abhorson there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abh. Doe you call fir?

Pro. Sirha, here's a fellow will helpe you to morrow in your execution: if you thinke it meet, compound with him by the yeere, and let him abide here with you, if not, use him for the present, and dismisse him, hee can not plead his estimation with you: he hath beene a Bawd.

Abh. A Bawd Sir? sic vpon him, he will discredit our mysterie.

Pro. Goe too Sir, you waigh equallie: a feather will turne the Scale. Exit.

Clo. Pray sir, by your good fauor: for surely sir, a good fauor you haue, but that you haue a hanging look:
Doe you call sir, your occupation a Mysterie?

G 2

Abh. I,

Abb. I Sir, a Misterie.

Clo. Painting Sir, I haue heard say, is a Misterie; and your Whores sir, being members of my occupation, vsing painting, doe proue my Occupation, a Misterie. but what Misterie there should be in hanging, if I should be hang'd, I cannot imagine.

Abb. Sir, it is a Misterie.

Clo. Prooue.

Abb. Euerie true mans apparrell fits your Theefe.

Clo. If it be too little for your theefe, your true man thinkes it bigge enough. If it bee too bigge for your Theefe, your Theefe thinkes it little enough. So euerie true mans apparrell fits your Theefe.

Enter Prouost.

Pro. Are you agreed?

Clo. Sir, I will serue him: For I do finde your Hangman is a more penitent Trade then your Bawd he doth oftner aske forgiveness.

Pro. You sirrah, prouide your blocke and your Axe to morrow, foure a clocke.

Abb. Come on (Bawd) I will instruct thee in my Trade: follow.

Clo. I do desire to learne sir. and I hope, if you haue occasion to vse me for your owne turne, you shall finde me yare. For truly sir, for your kindnesse, I owe you a good turne Exit

Pro. Call hether Barnardine and Claudio: Th'one has my pitie, nor a iot the other, Being a Murtherer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio

Looke, here's the Warrant Claudio, for thy death, 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to morrow Thou must be made immortall. Where's Barnardine?

Cla. As fast lock'd vp in sleepe, as guiltlesse labour, When it lies starkely in the Trauellers bones, He will not wake.

Pro. Who can do good on him? Well, go, prepare your selfe. But harke, what noise? Heauen giue your spirits comfort: by, and by, I hope it is some pardon, or repreeue For the most gentle Claudio. Welcome Father.

Enter Duke.

Duke. The best, and wholsomst spirits of the night, Inuellow you, good Prouost who call'd heere of late?

Pro. None since the Curphew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Pro. No.

Duke. They will then er't be long

Pro. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Pro. It is a bitter Deputie.

Duke. Not so, nor so. his life is paralel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great Iustice: He doth with holie abstinence subdue

That in himselfe, which he spurres on his powre To qualifie in others were he meal'd with that

Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous, But this being so, he's iust. Now are they come.

This is a gentle Prouost, sildome when

The steeld Gaoler is the friend of men:

How now! what noise? That spirit's posselt with haste, That wounds th'vnslifing Posterne with these strokes.

Pro. There he must stay vntill the Officer Arise to let him in: he is call'd vp.

Duke. Haue you no countermand for Claudio yet?

But he must die to morrow?

Pro. None Sir, none.

Duke. As neere the dawning Prouost, as it is, You shall heere more ere Morning.

Pro. Happely

You something know: yet I belecue there comes No countermand. no such example haue we: Besides, vpon the verie siege of Iustice, Lord Angelo hath to the publike care Profest the contrarie.

Enter a Messenger.

Duke. This is his Lords man.

Pro. And heere comes Claudio's pardon.

Mess. My Lord hath sent you this note,

And by mee this further charge;

That you sweue not from the smallest Article of it, Neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow. for as I take it, it is almost day.

Pro. I shall obey him,

Duke. This is his Pardon purchas'd by such sin, For which the Pardoner himselfe is in: Hence hath offence his quicke celeritie, When it is borne in high Authority. When Vice makes Mercie; Mercie's so extended, That for the faults loue, is th'offender friended. Now Sir, what newes?

Pro. I told you:

Lord Angelo (be-like) thinking me remisse In mine Office, awakens mee With this vnwonted putting on, methinks strangely. For he hath not vs'd it before.

Duke. Pray you let's heare.

The Letter.

Wh'soeuer you may beare to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by foure of the clocke, and in the afternoone Barnardine. For my better satisfaction, let mee haue Claudios head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed with a thought that more depends on it, then we must yet deliuer. Thus saile not to doe your Office, as you will answer it at your perill.

What say you to this Sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine, who is to be executed in th'afternoone?

Pro. A Bohemian borne: But here nurst vp & bred, One that is a prisoner nine yceres old.

Duke. How came it, that the absent Duke had not either deliuer'd him to his libertie, or executed him? I haue heard it was euer his manner to do so

Pro. His friends till wrought Repreeues for him. And indeed his fact till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an vndoubtfull prooue.

Duke. It is now apparant?

Pro. Most manifest, and not denied by himselfe.

Duke. Hath he borne himselfe penitently in prison? How seemes he to be touch'd?

Pro. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully, but as a drunken sleepe, carelesse, wreakelesse, and fearelesse of what's past, present, or to come. insensible of mortality, and desperately mortall.

Duke. He wants aduice.

Pro. He wil heare none. he hath euermore had the liberty of the prison: giue him leaue to escape hence, hee would not. Drunke many times a day, if not many daies entirely drunke. We haue verie oft awak'd him, as if to carrie him to execution, and show'd him a setming warrant for it, it hath not moued him at all.

Duke.

Duke. More of him anon : There is written in your brow Prouest, honesty and constancie; if I reade it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me : but in the boldnes of my cunning, I will lay my selfe in hazard : Claudio, whom heere you haue warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the Law, then Angelo who hath sentenc'd him. To make you vnderstand this in a manifested effect, I craue but foure daies respite : for the which, you are to doe me both a present, and a dangerous courtesie.

Pro. Pray Sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Pro. Alacke, how may I do it : Having the houre limited, and an expresse command, vnder penaltie, to deliuer his head in the view of Angelo ? I may make my case as Claudius's, to crosse this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine Order, I warrant you, If my instructions may be your guide, Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, And his head borne to Angelo.

Pro. Angelo hath scene them both, And will discouer the fauour.

Duke. Oh, death's a great disguiser, and you may adde to it ; Shaue the head, and tie the beard, and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bar'd before his death : you know the course is common. If any thing fall to you vpon this, more then thanks and good fortune, by the Saint whom I professe, I will plead against it with my life

Pro. Pardon me, good Father, it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworne to the Duke, or to the Deputie ?

Pro. To him, and to his Substitutes.

Duke. You will thinke you haue made no offence, if the Duke auouch the iustice of your dealing ?

Pro. But what likelihood is in that ?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty ; yet since I see you fearfull, that neither my coate, integrity, nor perswasion, can with ease attempt you, I wil go further then I meant, to plucke all feares out of you . Looke you Sir, heere is the hand and Seale of the Duke : you know the Character I doubt not, and the Signet is not strange to you ?

Pro. I know them both

Duke. The Contents of this, is the returne of the Duke, you shall anon ouer-reade it at your pleasure : where you shall finde within these two daies, he wil be heere. This is a thing that Angelo knowes not, for hee this very day receiues letters of strange tenor, perchance of the Dukes death, perchance entering into some Monasterie, but by chance nothing of what is writ Looke, th'vnfolding Starre calles vp the Shepheard ; put not your selfe into amazement, how these things should be, all difficulties are but easie vwhen they are knowne Call your executioner, and off with Barnardines head I will giue him a present shrift, and aduise him for a better place. Yet you are amaz'd, but this shall absolutely resolve you : Come away, it is almost cleere dawne. Exit.

Scena Tertia.

Enter Clowne.

Clo. I am as well acquainted heere; as I was in our house of profession : one would thinke it were Mistis

Over-dons owne house, for heere be manie of her olde Customers. First, here's yong Mr Rash, hee's in for a commoditie of browne paper, and olde Ginger, nine score and seuteene pounds, of which hee made fise Markes readie money : marrie then, Ginger was not much in request, for the olde Women were all dead. Then is there heere one Mr Caper, at the suite of Master Three-Pile the Mercer, for some foure suites of Peach-colour'd Satten, which now peaches him a beggar. Then haue vve heere, yong Dixie, and yong Mr Deepe-vow, and Mr Copperpurre, and Mr Statue-Lackey the Rapiier and dagger man, and yong Drop-heere that kild lustie Pudding, and Mr Forthlight the Tilter, and braue Mr Shootie the great Traueller, and wilde Halfe-Canne that stabb'd Pots, and I thinke fortie more, all great doers in our Trade, and are now for the Lords sake.

Enter Abhorson

Abh. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hether.

Clo. Mr Barnardine, you must rise and be hang'd, Mr Barnardine

Abh. What hoa Barnardine.

Barnardine within

Bar. A pox o' your throats : who makes that noyse there ? What are you ?

Clo. Your friend Sir, the Hangman .

You must be so good Sir to rise, and be put to death.

Bar. Away you Rogue, away, I am sleepeie.

Abh. Tell him he must awake, And that quickly too.

Clo. Pray Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleepe afterwards.

Ab. Go in to him, and fetch him out.

Clo. He is comming Sir, he is comming . I heare his Straw ruffle

Enter Barnardine.

Abh. Is the Axe vpon the blocke, sirrah ?

Clo. Verie readie Sir.

Bar. How now Abhorson ?

What's the newes vwith you ?

Abh. Truly Sir, I would desire you to clap into your prayers for looke you, the Warrants come.

Bar. You Rogue, I haue bin drinking all night, I am not fitted for't.

Clo. Oh, the better Sir for he that drinks all night, and is hanged becomes in the morning, may sleepe the founde all the next day

Enter Duke.

Abh. Looke you Sir, heere comes your ghostly Father do weiest now thinke you ?

Duke. Sir, induced by my charitie, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to aduise you, Comfort you, and pray vwith you

Bar. Friar, not I I haue bin drinking hard all night, and I will haue more time to prepare mee, or they shall beat out my braines with billets . I will not consent to die this day, that's certaine.

Duke. Oh sir, you must and therefore I beseech you Looke forward on the iournie you shall go.

Bar. I sweare I will not die to day for anie mans perswasion.

Duke. But heare you :

Bar. Not a word - if you haue anie thing to say to me, come to my Ward . for thence will not I to day.

Exit

Enter Pronost.

Duke. Vnsit to liue, or die . oh grauell heart,

G 3

After

After him (Fellowes) bring him to the block.

Pro. Now Sir, how do you finde the prisoner?

Duke. A creature vopre-par'd vnmeet for death,
And to transport him in the munde he is,
Were damnable.

Pro. Heere in the prison, Father,
There died this morning of a cruell Fequor,
One Ragozine, a most notorious Pirate,
A man of Claudio's yeares: his beard, and head
Iust of his colour. What it we do omit
This Reprobate, til he were wel enclun'd,
And satisfie the Deputie with the visage
Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heauen prouides.
Dispatch it presently, the houre drawes on.
Prefixe by Angelo: See this be done,

And sent according to command, whiles I
Perfwade this rude wretch willingly to die.

Pro. This shall be done (good father) presently:
But Barnardine must die this afternoone,
And how shall we continue Claudio,
To saue me from the danger that might come,
If he were knowne ahuie?

Duke. Let this be done,
Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio,
Ere while the Sun hath made his iournall greeting
To yond generation, you shall finde
Your safetie manifested.

Pro. I am your free dependant.

Exit.

Duke. Quicke, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.
Now wil I write Letters to Angelo,
(The Prouost he shal beare them) whose contents
Shal witness to him I am neere at home.
And that by great Inunctions I am bound
To enter publicly: him Ile desire
To meet me at the consecrated Fount,
A League below the Citie. and from thence,
By cold gradation, and weale-ballanc'd forme,
We shal proceed with Angelo.

Enter Prouost.

Pro. Heere is the head, Ile carrie it my selfe.

Duke. Conuenient is it. Make a swift returne,
For I would commune with you of such things,
That want no care but yours.

Pro. Ile make all speede.

Exit.

Isabell within.

Isa. Peace hoa, be heere.

Duke. The tongue of Isabell. She's come to know,
If yet her brothers pardon be comethither:
But I will keepe her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of dispaire,
When it is least expected.

Enter Isabell.

Isa. Hoa, by your leaue.

Duke. Good morning to you, faire, and gracious daughter.

Isa. The better giuen me by so holy a man,
Hath yet the Deputie sent my brothers pardon?

Duke. He hath releas'd him, Isabell, from the world,
His head is oft, and sent to Angelo.

Isa. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other,
Shew your wisdome daughter in your close patience.

Isa. Oh, I wil to him, and plucke out his eyes.

Duke. You shal not be admitted to his sight.

Isa. Vnhappie Claudio, wretched Isabell,

Iniurious world, most damned Angelo.

Duke. This nor hurts him, nor profits you aloe,
Forbear it therefore, giue your cause to heauen,
Marke what I say, which you shal finde
By euery sillable a faithful veritie.
The Duke comes home to morrow: nay kin your eyes,
One of our Couent, and his Confessor
Giues me this instance: Already he hath carried
Notice to Esfalus and Angelo,
Who do prepare to meete him at the gates, (dome,
There to giue vp their powre: If you can pate your wif-
In that good path that I would wish it go,
And you shal haue your bosome on this wretch,
Grace of the Duke, reuenges to your heart,
And general Honour.

Isa. I am directed by you.

Duke. This Letter then to Friar Peter giue,
'Tis that he sent me of the Dukes returne:
Say, by this token, I desire his companie
At Mariana's house to night. Her cause, and yours
Ile perfect him withall, and he shal bring you
Before the Duke; and to the head of Angelo
Accuse him home and home. For my poore selfe,
I am combin'd by a sacred Vow,
And shall be absent. Wend you with this Letter:
Command these fretting waters from your eyes
With a light heart; trust not my holie Order
If I peruert your course: whose heere?

Enter Lucio.

Luc. Good 'euen;
Friar, where's the Prouost?

Duke. Not within Sir.

Luc. Oh prettie Isabella, I am pale as mine heart, to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient; I am faine to dine and sup with water and bran - I dare not for my head fill my belly. One fruitful Meale would set mee too't - but they say the Duke will be heere to Morrow.
By my troth Isabell I lou'd thy brother, if the olde fantastical Duke of darke corners had bene at home, he had liued.

Duke. Sir, the Duke is maruelous little beholding to your reports, but the best is, he liuest at in them.

Luc. Friar, thou knowest not the Duke so well as I do - he's a better woodman then thou tak't him for.

Duke. Well: you'll answer this one day, Fare ye well.

Luc. Nay tarrie, Ile go along with thee,
I can tel thee pretty tales of the Duke.

Duke. You haue told me too many of him already fir
if they be true: if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a Wench with childe.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Luc. Yes marrie did I; but I was faine to forswear it,
They would else haue married me to the rotten Medler.

Duke. Sir your company is fairer then honest, rest you
well.

Lucio. By my troth Ile go with thee to the lanes end:
if baudy talke offend you, we'el haue very litle of it: nay
Friar, I am a kind of Burre, I shal sticke.

Exeunt.

Scena Quarta.

Enter Angelo & Esfalus.

Esf. Euery Letter he hath writ, hath disuouch'd other,
Ang.

An. In most vneuen and distressed manner, his aſtought
ſhow much like to madneſſe, pray heaue his wiſedome bee not tainted: and why meet him at the gates and re-lieue ou rauthorities there?

Eſc. I gheſſe not.

Ang. And why ſhould wee proclaim in an howre before his entring, that if any craue redreſſe of iniuſtice, they ſhould exhibit their petitions in the ſtreet?

Eſc. He ſhowes his reaſon for that: to haue a diſpatch of Complaints, and to deliuer vs from deuices heereafter, which ſhall then haue no power to ſtand againſt
vs.

Ang. Well: I beſeech you let it bee proclaim'd betimes i'th' morne, Ile call you at your houſe, giue notice to ſuch men of fort and ſute as are to meete him

Eſc. I ſhall fir: ſay you well.

Exit.

Ang. Good night,

This deepe vnſhapes me quite, makes me vnpregnant
And dull to all proceedings. A deſlowed maid,
And by an eminent body, that enforce'd
The Law againſt it? But that her tender ſhame
Will not proclaim againſt her maiden loſſe,
How might ſhe tongue me? yet reaſon dares her no,
For my Authority beares of a credent bulke,
That no particular ſcandall once can touch
But it confounds the breather. He ſhould haue liu'd,
Sawe that his riotous youth with dangerous ſenſe
Might in the times to come haue ta'ne reuenge
By ſo receiuing a diſhonor'd life
With ranſome of ſuch ſhame: would yet he had liued,
Alack, when once our grace we haue forgot,
Nothing goes right, we would, and we would not. Exit.

Scena Quinta.

Enter Duke and Friar Peter.

Duke. Theſe Letters at fit time deliuer me.
The Prouoſt knowes our purpoſe and our plot,
The matter being a ſoote, keepe your inſtruction
And hold you euer to our ſpeciall drift,
Though ſometimes you doe blench from this to that
As cauſe doth miniſter: Goe call at Flauia's houſe,
And tell him where I ſtay: giue the like notice
To Valencius, Rowland, and to Craſſus,
And bid them bring the Trumpets to the gate:
But ſend me Flauius firſt.

Peter. It ſhall be ſpedeed well.

Enter Varrum.

Duke. I thank thee Varrum, thou haſt made good haſt,
Come, we will walke: There's other of our friends
Will greet vs heere anon: my gentle Varrum. Exeunt.

Scena Sexta.

Enter Iſabella and Mariana.

Iſab. To ſpeak ſo indireetly I am loath,
I would ſay the truth, but to accuſe him ſo
That is your part, yet I am aduiſ'd ſo doe it,
He ſaies, to waile full purpoſe.

Mar. Be rul'd by him.

Iſab. Beſides he tells me, that if peradventure
He ſpeake againſt me on the aduerſe ſide,
I ſhould not thinke it ſtrange, for tis a phyſicke
That's bitter, to ſweet end.

Enter Peter.

Mar. I would Friar Peter

Iſab. Oh peace, the Friar is come.

Peter. Come I haue found you out a ſtand moſt fit,
Where you may haue ſuch vantage on the Duke
He ſhall not paſſe you
Twice haue the Trumpets ſounded.
The generous, and graueſt Citizens
Haue hent the gates, and very neere vpon
The Duke is entring:
Therefore hence away.

Exeunt.

Actus Quintus. Scena Prima.

Enter Duke, Varrum, Lords, Angelo, Eſculius, Lucio,
Citizens at ſeverall doores.

Duk. My very worthy Coſen, fairely met,
Our old, and faithfull friend, we are glad to ſee you.

Ang. Eſc. Happy returne be to your royall grace.

Duk. Many and hartly thankings to you both.
We haue made enquiry of you, and we heare
Such goodneſſe of your Juſtice, that our ſoule
Cannot but yeeld you forth to publique thanks
Forerunning more requittall.

Ang. You make my bonds ſtill greater.

Duk. Oh your deſert ſpeaks loud, & I ſhould wrong it
To locke it in the wards of couert boſome
When it deſerues with characters of braſſe
A ſorted reſidence 'gainſt the tooth of time,
And razure of obliuion: Giue we your hand
And let the Subiect ſee, to make them know
That outward curteſies would ſaine proclaime
Fauours that keepe within: Come Eſculius,
You muſt walke by vs, on our other hand:
And good ſupporters are your

Enter Peter and Iſabella.

Peter. Now is your time
Speake loud, and kneele before him.

Iſab. Juſtice, O royall Duke, vaile your regard
Vpon a wrong'd (I would ſaine haue ſaid a Maid)
Oh worthy Prince, diſhonor not your eye
By throwing it on any other object,
Till you haue heard me, in my true complaint,
And giuen me Juſtice, Juſtice, Juſtice, Juſtice.

Duk. Relate your wrongs,
In what, by whom? be brieſe.
Here is Lord Angelo ſhall giue you Juſtice,
Reuale your ſelfe to him.

Iſab. Oh worthy Duke,
You bid me ſeek redemption of the diuell,
Heare me your ſelfe for that which I muſt ſpeake
Muſt either puniſh me, not being beleeu'd,
Or wring redreſſe from you:
Heare me: oh heare me, heere.

Ang. My Lord, her wits ſeare me are not ſtirme:
She hath bin a ſutor to me, for her Brother
Cut off by courſe of Juſtice.

Iſab. By courſe of Juſtice.

Ang. And ſhe will ſpeake moſt bitterly, and ſtrange.

Iſab. Moſt

Isab. Most strange: but yet most truly will I speake,
That Angelo's forsworne, is not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer, is not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thiefe,
An hypocrite, a virgin violator,
Is it not strange? and strange?

Duke. Nay it is ten times strange?

Isa. It is not truer he is Angelo,
Then this is all as true, as it is strange;
Nay, it is ten times true, for truth is truth
To th'end of reckning.

Duke. Away with her: poore soule
She speakes thus, in th' infirmity of sence.

Isa. Oh Prince, I censure thee, as thou beleue'st
There is another comfort, then this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madnesse. make not impossible
That which but seemes vnlike, 'tis not impossible
But one, the wickedst cause on the ground
May seeme as shie, as graue, as iust, as absolute.

As Angelo, euen so may Angelo
In all his dressings, caracts, titles, formes,
Be an arch-villaine. Beleue it, royall Prince
If he be lesse, he's nothing, but he's more,
Had I more name for badnesse.

Duke. By mine honesty
If she be mad, as I beleue no other,
Her madnesse hath the oddest frame of sence,
Such a dependancy of thing, on thing,
As ere I heard in madnesse.

Isab. Oh gracious Duke
Harpe not on that; nor do not banish reason
For inequality, but let your reason serue
To make the truth appeare, where it seemes hid,
And hide the false seemes true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Haue sure more lacke of reason:
What would you say?

Isab. I am the Sister of one Claudio,
Condemnd vpon the Act of Fornication
To loose his head, condemn'd by Angelo,
I, (in probation of a Sisterhood)
Was sent to by my Brother; one Lucio
As then the Messenger.

Luc. That's I, and't like your Grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desir'd her,
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo,
For her poore Brothers pardon

Isab. That's he indeede.

Duke. You were not bid to speake.

Luc. No, my good Lord,
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now then,
Pray you take note of it: and when you haue
A businesse for your selfe: pray heauen you then
Be perfect.

Luc. I warrant your honor.

Duke. The warrant's for your selfe: take heede to't.

Isab. This Gentleman told somewhat of my Tale.

Luc. Right.

Duke. It may be right, but you are i't the wrong

To speake before your time: proceed,

Isab. I went

To this pernicious Cause Deputie.

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it,

The phrase is to the matter.

Duke. Mended againe: the matter: proceed.

Isab. In brieft, to set the needlesse processe by:
How I perswaded, how I praid, and kneel'd,
How he refeld me, and how I replide
(For this was of much length) the vild conclusion
I now begin with griefe, and shame to vtter.
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his concupiscible intemperate lust
Release my brother; and after much debatement,
My sisterly remorse, confuter mine honour,
And I did yeeld to him. But then next morne beumes,
His purpose sursetting, he sends a warrant
For my poore brothers head.

Duke. This is most likely.

Isab. Oh that it were as like as it is true. (speak't,

Duke. By heauen (fond wretch) knowst not what thou
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honor
In hateful practise. first his Integrity
Stands without blemish: next it imports no reason,
That with such vehemency he should pursue
Faults proper to himselfe. if he had so offended
He would haue waigh'd thy brother by himselfe,
And not haue cut him off. Some one hath set you on:
Confesse the truth, and say by whose aduice
Thou cam'st hieere to complaine.

Isab. And is this all?

Then oh you blessed Ministers aboute
Keepe me in patience, and with ripened time
Vnfold the euill, which is heere wrapt vp
In countenance. heauen shield your Grace from woe,
As I thus wrong'd, hence vnbeleueed goe.

Duke. I know you'd faine be gone. An Officer:
To prison with her. Shall we thus permit
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall,
On him so neere vs? This needs must be a practise,
Who knew of your intent and comming hither?

Isa. One that I would were heere, Frier Lodowick,

Duke. A ghostly Father, belike.

Who knowes that Lodowicke?

Luc. My Lord, I know him, 'tis a meddling Fryer,
I doe not like the man: had he been Lay my Lord,
For certaine words he spake against your Grace
In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.

Duke. Words against mee? this a good Fryer belike
And to set on this wretched woman here
Against our Substitute: Let this Fryer be found.

Luc. But yesternight my Lord, she and that Fryer
I saw them at the prison: a sawcy Fryer,
A very scurvy fellow.

Peter. Blessed be your Royall Grace.
I haue stood by my Lord, and I haue heard
Your royall care abus'd: first hath this woman
Most wrongfully accus'd your Substitute,
Who is as free from touch, or soyle with her
As she from one vngot.

Duke. We did beleue no lesse.
Know you that Frier Lodowick that she speakes of?

Peter. I know him for a man diuine and holy,
Not scurvy, nor a temporary medler
As he's reported by this Gentleman:
And on my trust, a man that neuer yet
Did (as he vouches) mis-report your Grace.

Luc. My Lord, most villanously, beleue it.

Peter. Well he in time may come to cleere himselfe;
But at this instant he is sicke, my Lord:

Of

Of a strange Feaour : vpon his meere request
Being come to knowledge, that there was complaint
Intended gainst Lord Angelo, came I hether
To speake as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true, and false : And what he with his oath
And all probaion will make vp full cleare
Whensoeuer he's conuenced : First for this woman,
To iustifie this worthy Noble man;
So vilarly and personally accus'd,
Her shall you heare disproued to her eyes,
Till she her selfe confesse it.

Duke. Good Frier, let's heare it :
Doe you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
Oh heauen, the vanity of wretched fooles.
Gue vs some seates, Come cosen Angelo,
In this I'll be impartall. be you Iudge
Of your owne Cause. Is this the Witnes Frier?

Enter Mariana.

First, let her shew your face, and alter, speake.

Mar. Pardon my Lord, I will not shew my face
Vntill my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Mar. No my Lord.

Duke. Are you a Maid?

Mar. No my Lord.

Duke. A Widow then?

Mar. Neither, my Lord.

Duke. Why you are nothing then. neither Maid, Widow, nor Wife?

Luc. My Lord, she may be a Puncke : for many of them, are neither Maid, Widow, nor Wife.

Duke. Silence that fellow. I would he had some cause to prattle for himselfe.

Luc. Well my Lord.

Mar. My Lord, I doe confesse I nere was married,
And I confesse besides, I am no Maid,
I haue known my husband, yet my husband
Knowes not, that euer he knew me.

Luc. He was drunk then, my Lord, it can be no better.

Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert to to.

Luc. Well, my Lord.

Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Mar. Now I come to't, my Lord
Shee that accuses him of Fornication,
In selfe-same manner, doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my Lord, with such a time,
When I'll depose I had him in mine Armes
With all the effect of Loue.

Ang. Charges shee moe then me?

Mar. Not that I know.

Duke. No? you say your husband.

Mar. Why iust, my Lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinkes he knowes, that he nere knew my body,
But knowes, he thinkes, that he knowes Isabels.

Ang. This is a strange abuse : Let's see thy face.

Mar. My husband bids me, now I will vnmaske
This is that face, thou cruell Angelo
Which once thou sworst, was worth the looking on:
This is the hand, which with a vowe contrait
Was fast belockt in thine : This is the body
That tooke away the march from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house
In her Imagin'd person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Luc. Carnallie shee saies.

Duke. Sirha, no more.

Luc. Enoug my Lord.

Ang. My Lord, I must confesse, I know this woman,
And fve yeres since there was some speech of marriage
Betwixt my selfe, and her : which was broke off,
Partly for that her promis'd proportions
Came short of Composition : But in chiefe
For that her reputation was dis-valued
In leuitie : Since which time of fve yeres
I neuer spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her
Vpon my faith, and honor.

Mar. Noble Prince,

As there comes light from heauen, and words fro breath,
As there is sence in truth, and truth in vertue,
I am affianced this mans wife, as strongly
As words could make vp vowes. And my good Lord,
But Tuesday night last gon, in's garden house,
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in safety raise me from my knees,
Or else for euer be confixed here
A Marble Monument.

Ang. I did but smile till now,
Now, good my Lord, giue me the scope of Iustice;
My patience here is touch'd. I doe perceiue
These poore informall women, are no mote
But instruments of some more mightier member
That sets them on. Let me haue way, my Lord
To finde this practise out.

Duke. I, with my heart,
And punish them to your height of pleasure.
Thou foolish Frier, and thou pernicious woman
Compact with her that's gone : thinkst thou, thy oathes,
Though they would swear downe each particular Saint,
Were testimonies against his worth, and credit
That's seal'd in approbation? you, Lord Escalus
Sit with my Cozen, lend him your kinde paines
To finde out this abuse, whence 'tis deriu'd.
There is another Frier that set them on,
Let him be sent for.

Peter. Would he were here, my Lord, for he indeed
Hath set the women on to this Complaint;
Your Prouost knowes the place where he abides,
And he may fetch him.

Duke. Goe, doe it instantly.
And you, my noble and well-warranted Cosen
Whom it concernes to heare this matter forth,
Doe with your iniuries as seemes you best
In any chastisement, I for a while
Will leaue you; but stir not you till you haue
Well determin'd vpon these Slanderers. Exit.

Esc. My Lord, wee'll doe it thoroughly : Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Frier Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Luc. Cucullus non facit Monachum, honest in nothing but in his Clothes, and one that hath spoke most villanous speeches of the Duke.

Esc. We shall untreat you to abide heere till he come, and inforce them against him. we shall finde this Frier a notable fellow.

Luc. As any in Vienna, on my word.

Esc. Call that same Isabel here once againe, I would speake with her. pray you, my Lord, giue mee leaue to question, you shall see how Ile handle her.

Luc. Not better then he, by her owne report.

Esc. Say you?

Luc. Marry sir, I thinke, if you handled her priuately shee
